The church at Thessalonica was birthed in an atmosphere of persecution. The band of believers had to withstand not only the determined opposition of the Thessalonian Jews but also city officials who could be manipulated by the Jews. The small group who gathered around Paul was primarily made up of God-fearing Greeks and former pagans.

The Thessalonian church was a gathering of enthusiastic new believers. Within months, their courage, determination, eagerness, and devotion had become well known. They still had much to learn about the Christian faith, for Paul could only instruct them for a short while. Yet their courage in the face of persecution formed them into a church filled with extraordinary promise.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To strengthen the Thessalonian Christians in their faith and assure them of Christ's return.

First Thessalonians is primarily a letter of praise and thanksgiving. In this letter Paul rejoiced over the Thessalonians' progress in the Christian faith.

Timothy had given Paul an encouraging report on the Thessalonian believers. Their faith in Christ had remained strong. Although severely tested, they had withstood persecution. Having accepted Paul's message with great joy, they had been eagerly looking forward to Christ's return. Their eager response was a clear sign that the Holy Spirit had been working in their hearts. This letter celebrates this great news. Although Paul's ministry with them had been short, they had thrived. He wrote to congratulate them and to answer their questions about the faith.

The small and young Thessalonian church faced powerful and determined enemies. Paul wasn't concerned about the power of the enemies, however, as much as the strength of the Thessalonians' faith. Would they continue to seek God? Would they continue to love and encourage each other? Would they spurn the temptations of life in a cosmopolitan city? This letter explains exactly how the believers could endure persecution and opposition.

MESSAGE

Paul begins this letter with a note of affirmation, thanking God for the strong faith and good reputation of the Thessalonians (1:1-10). Then Paul reviews their relationship—how he and his companions brought the Good News to them (2:1-12), how they accepted the message (2:13-16), and how he longed to be with them again (2:17-20). Because of his concern, Paul sent Timothy to encourage them in their faith (3:1-13).

Paul then presents the core of his message—exhortation and comfort. He challenges them to please God in their daily living by avoiding sexual immorality (4:1-8), loving each other (4:9-10), and living as good citizens in a sinful world (4:11-12).

Paul comforts the Thessalonians by reminding them of the hope of the resurrection (4:13-18). Then he warns them to be prepared at all times, for Jesus Christ could return at any moment. When Christ returns, those Christians who are alive and those who have died will be raised to new life (5:1-11).

Paul then gives the Thessalonians a handful of reminders on how to prepare themselves for the second coming: Warn the lazy (5:14), encourage the timid (5:14), help the weak (5:14), be patient with everyone (5:14), do good to everyone (5:15), always be joyful (5:16), keep on praying (5:17), be thankful (5:18), examine everything that is taught (5:20-21), and keep away from evil (5:22). Paul concludes his letter with two benedictions and a request for prayer.

The main themes in the book of 1 Thessalonians include: Persecution, Paul's Ministry, Hope, and Preparation for the Second Coming.

Persecution (1:6; 2:1-2, 14-16; 3:3-8). Paul and his associates had been hounded and finally driven out of Thessalonica during their short visit to that city. The new Christians Paul left behind were being persecuted because of their faith in Christ.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Believers in any age can expect to be persecuted. They need to stand firm in their faith in the midst of trials, being strengthened by the Holy Spirit, who helps them remain strong. We may experience threats or overt slander and physical opposition, or the persecution and oppression may be more subtle. Whatever the case, we must remain strong in faith through the power of the Spirit, showing genuine love to others and maintaining our moral character.

Paul's Ministry (1:5-6; 2:1-20; 3:1-8). Some in Thessalonica were suggesting that Paul and his associates were preaching with selfish motives. Paul denied these charges by reminding the believers of his ministry among them and throughout the area. Paul was determined to share the gospel despite being slandered and facing other difficult circumstances.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Paul not only delivered his message, he also gave of himself. In addition, Paul didn't allow persecution or slander to deter him from obeying the Lord and fulfilling his calling. In our ministries, we must become like Paul—faithful and bold, yet sensitive and self-sacrificing.

Hope (1:3, 10; 2:19; 4:13-18). Paul encouraged the Thessalonian Christians by reminding them that one day all believers, both those who are alive and those who have died, will be united with Christ. Christians who die before Christ's return have hope—the hope of the resurrection of the body and life everlasting with the Lord.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. All who believe in Christ will live with him forever. All those who belong to Jesus Christ—throughout history—will be present with him at his Second Coming. No matter how bad the situation or bleak the outlook, we can take heart, knowing that our future is secure in Christ. We can be confident that at death or at the Second Coming, we will be with loved ones who also have trusted in Christ.

Preparation for the Second Coming (1:3, 9; 2:19-20; 3:13; 4:1-12; 5:1-28). No one knows the time of Christ's return—it will come suddenly, when people least expect it. Thus, believers should live moral and holy lives, ever watchful for his coming, not neglecting daily responsibilities, but always working and living to please the Lord.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The Good News is not only what we believe but also what we must live. The Holy Spirit helps us to be faithful to Christ, giving us strength to resist lust and fraud. Live as though you expect Christ's return at any time. Don't be caught unprepared.

OUTLINE OF 1 THESSALONIANS

I. Faithfulness to the Lord (1:1–3:13)

II. Watchfulness for the Lord (4:1–5:28)

Paul visited Thessalonica on his second and third missionary journeys. It was a seaport and trade center located on the Egnatian Way, a busy international highway. Paul probably wrote his two letters to the Thessalonians from Corinth.

1 THESSALONIANS 1

GREETINGS FROM PAUL / 1:1

Thessalonica was the capital and largest city (population: about two hundred thousand) of the Roman province of Macedonia. The most important Roman highway (the Egnatian Way)—extending from Rome all the way to the Orient—went through Thessalonica. This highway, along with the city’s thriving seaport, made Thessalonica one of the wealthiest and most flourishing trade centers in the Roman Empire. Recognized as a free city, Thessalonica was allowed self-rule and was exempted from most of the restrictions placed by Rome on other cities in the empire. With its international flavor, however, came many pagan religions and cultural influences that challenged the faith of the young Christians there.

1:1 Paul began this letter by introducing three men well known to the Thessalonian church. Paul was the head of this missionary team and key writer of this letter. Silas was a prophet (Acts 15:32) who was held in high esteem by the Jerusalem church. Silas accompanied Paul on his second missionary journey (Acts 15:36–17:15) and helped him establish the church in Thessalonica (Acts 17:1-9). The young Christian named Timothy joined Paul and Silas during Paul’s second missionary journey. The account in the book of Acts describes the preaching of Paul and Silas in Thessalonica (Acts 17:4). Envious and angry Jewish leaders watched many from their synagogue follow Jesus Christ. When a riot broke out, Paul and Silas had to leave under cover of darkness.

Paul wrote to the church in Thessalonica. The Greek word for church is ekklesia, meaning “assembly.” These people were part of the assembly in Thessalonica that belonged to God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. This set them apart from all the other “assemblies” that may have been meeting in Thessalonica.

Paul combined expressions from Jewish and Gentile customs. Jews wished each other peace (Greek eirene or Hebrew shalom); Gentiles wished each other grace (charis). When Christians used these words in greeting, the meaning was significant. Christ offers grace to handle life’s difficulties; he offers peace that gives inner calm—no matter what the outward circumstances.

THE FAITH OF THE THESSALONIAN BELIEVERS / 1:2-10

Paul and his companions probably arrived in Thessalonica in the early summer of A.D. 50. They planted the first Christian church in that city but had to leave in a hurry because their lives were threatened (Acts 17:1-10). At the first opportunity, probably when he stopped at Corinth, Paul sent Timothy back to Thessalonica to see how the new believers were doing. Timothy returned to Paul with good news: the Christians in Thessalonica were remaining firm in the faith and were unified. But the Thessalonians did have some questions about their new faith. Paul had not had time to answer all their questions during his brief visit; in the meantime, other questions had arisen. So Paul wrote this letter to answer their questions and to commend them on their faithfulness to Christ.

1:2 In many ancient letters, an introduction would be followed by a word of encouragement; Paul often followed this pattern. In most of his letters he would thank God for the believers. Paul told the Thessalonians, a young church facing persecution, that he and the other apostles always thanked God for all of them and prayed for them constantly. Paul was not depending on his great skills or his teaching to carry the young believers; instead, he was trusting in God to guide and protect them. Paul spent much time traveling and preaching, but apparently he spent much time on his knees praying for the believers.

1:3 The Thessalonian believers had stood firm when persecuted (1:6; 3:1-4, 7, 8). Paul commended these young Christians for their faithful work, loving deeds, and continual anticipation of Christ's return. Their work had been produced by faith. Paul made it clear that believers are saved by faith alone (Ephesians 2:9), but then faith should produce good works in the believers. The Thessalonians' good deeds had been prompted by love. The believers were willing to give of themselves (even if it meant hardship) in service to others. Only God's kind of love could prompt such willing labor. Their anticipation of the Lord's return helped them to be strong in the face of opposition and difficulty because they know that God sees all and one day will make everything right.

1:4 Paul, Silas, and Timothy could resolutely say to the believers in Thessalonica that God chose them. That God "chooses" his people forms the basis of the doctrine of election—defined as God's choice of an individual or group for a specific purpose or destiny. The doctrine of election teaches that believers are saved only because of God's grace and mercy, not because of their own merit. God does not save anyone because that person deserves to be saved; rather, he graciously and freely gives salvation to whomever he chooses.

1:5 Paul knew that these believers had been chosen by God because his presentation of the Good News brought great results. Paul and his companions had brought the message to Thessalonica. There were no believers when they arrived; when they left, a strong church had been planted. This was not a source of pride for the apostles, however. When Paul brought the message to people, he spoke with words, and God used those words to ignite the Thessalonians to understand and believe that message. God had used Paul's words by enveloping them in divine power (see also 1 Corinthians 2:1-5; Ephesians 6:17). Paul's words alone could not persuade anyone to believe or open a needy heart to hear the message. But his words—combined with the power of the Holy Spirit to convince, enlighten, and comfort the listeners—could help many to believe what Paul was saying and give their hearts and lives to Christ for salvation.

The last half of this verse points to chapter 2 where Paul discusses his ministry with them. The Thessalonians could see that what Paul, Silas, and Timothy were preaching was true because these men lived it. They demonstrated their willingness to face opposition, travel under adverse conditions, and work without being paid while dealing with severe frustrations.

1:6 The message of salvation, though welcomed with great joy, brought the Thessalonian believers severe suffering because it led to persecution from both Jews and Gentiles (3:2-4; Acts 17:5). By doing so, they imitated both the apostles (Acts 16:16-40; 2 Corinthians 11:16-33) and the Lord (John 15:18-19, 20, 21). The same Holy Spirit who empowered the gospel message also opened hearts to receive the message and then gave joy to the hearers. The Holy Spirit works in those presenting the message and those hearing and accepting it. He gives “joy” (see Galatians 5:22).

1:7-10 The Thessalonians had followed the example of the apostles and of the Lord himself (1:6), and they, in turn, had become an example to all the Christians in Greece. Paul praised this church (no other church received this particular type of praise) because not only were they model believers to an unbelieving world, but they were also examples to other believers. These Thessalonian believers had a worldwide reputation and were an example to all the other churches. The message of these believers' lives had an effect even beyond Greece, their faith was known everywhere. So well known was the Thessalonians' faith that Paul did not need to tell about it—believers in other places brought it up first! Any believer from any church might be found talking about what was going on in Thessalonica. The other churches knew how some people in Thessalonica had turned away from idols to serve the true and living God. In fact, they were suffering severely for this change of faith and life

(1:6). The impact of this may slip past modern ears. The idols, the Greek “gods,” were considered to be extremely powerful. For these Thessalonians, living barely 50 miles from Mount Olympus where the Greek gods were said to live, to “turn from” their many false idols to the one true God had caused significant change in all areas of their lives. No wonder they faced persecution.

In addition to turning and serving, the Thessalonians were waiting. The Christian life doesn’t end at death. All believers await God’s Son from heaven. All believers look forward to the Second Coming when Jesus Christ will take his followers to be with him, rescuing them from the terrors of the coming judgment. This refers to the time when God will display his anger toward a sinful world and destroy all evil (see 5:9; 2 Thessalonians 1:6-10). God’s wrath is a certainty, for he will not let sin continue unabated forever. Believers, however, can trust in their Savior who rescues them.

Paul emphasized Christ’s Second Coming throughout this book. Because the Thessalonian church was being persecuted, Paul encouraged them to look forward to the deliverance that Christ would bring. A believer’s hope is in the return of Jesus, the great God and Savior (Titus 2:13). Just as surely as Christ was raised from the dead and ascended into heaven, he will return (Acts 1:11).

1 THESSALONIANS 2:1-16

PAUL REMEMBERS HIS VISIT / 2:1-16

Paul and Silas had been driven out of Thessalonica by their enemies, who then slandered Paul to the young believers in the new church there. This letter answers the accusations of Paul's enemies by describing what the believers already knew—the truth of Paul and Silas's message, the sincerity of their motives, and the proof of both by their actions among them. Paul was totally committed to the growth of those who had come to faith through his preaching.

2:1 This refers to Paul's first visit to Thessalonica recorded in Acts 17:1-10. The ministry in Thessalonica had begun calmly enough, but it had ended with Paul and Silas leaving under cover of darkness because a riotous mob attempted to turn the city against them. And the Jews' slander did not end after Paul and Silas had left the city. Not only had the Jews followed them to Berea to stir up trouble there (Acts 17:13), but evidently they had continued to speak against the apostles to the Thessalonian believers. The Jews seemed to have taken the occasion of Paul and Silas's hasty departure to try to convince the believers that they had been defrauded. The following verses seem to reflect Paul's response to what the Jews had said against him and Silas.

Some may have thought that the visit to Thessalonica was a failure, but the believers there knew that it was not a failure (meaning ineffective or worthless). Paul and Silas had arrived in a city with no believers. They left a strong church that was alive, growing, standing up to persecution, and becoming an example to believers across the world. Lives had been changed.

2:2 The Thessalonians knew that Paul and Silas had indeed been treated badly in Philippi, for they ended up in prison. Despite severe suffering for sharing the Good News of Christ, Paul explained that God had given him courage to go on to Thessalonica and declare God's Good News. Only such supernatural courage could help the men boldly face persecution because the threat of opposition had not been left behind in Philippi. The apostles continued to be surrounded by many who opposed them. In Thessalonica, their enemies had started a riot against Paul and Silas and their teachings. The Jewish leaders had claimed that Paul and Silas were "guilty of treason against Caesar" because they were professing "allegiance to another king, Jesus" (Acts 17:7). In reality, their only "crime" was proclaiming the Good News of salvation in Jesus Christ. In addition, the Thessalonians had sent a delegation to Berea to follow Paul and Silas in order to stir up trouble against them (Acts 17:13).

2:3 The words so you can see seem to indicate that Paul was answering accusations. Perhaps some of the Jews who had caused the riot in Thessalonica had told the Thessalonian believers that Paul and Silas had been defrauding them (Acts 17:5). But Paul pointed out that he had just left severe persecution in Philippi before his arrival in Thessalonica. Then he had experienced persecution in Thessalonica, causing he and Silas to leave secretly. How then could they have been preaching with any other motive than to obey God? If they had wanted to make money and please the crowds with their preaching, they had certainly gone about it the wrong way! Instead, they had faced persecution and then, with courage (2:2), had continued to face more persecution. No preacher hoping for an easy buck and popularity would take such a path. People only willingly suffer for something they believe in. Such was the case for Paul.

Paul mentioned three ways in which he and his companions were not preaching. First, they did not preach with any deceit. They were not trying to lead the Thessalonians down the wrong path. They did not preach with impure purposes. The word “impure” may point to accusations of sexual sin or sensuality, a trait common among traveling preachers. The “impure purposes” could also refer to another trait such as greed or pride. Again, these were common among some traveling preachers. The believers knew that this accusation was not true, for they knew Paul and his companions. Also, they were not using trickery. They had not hidden any of the truth from those to whom they ministered.

2:4 Paul and his companions did not seek anything for themselves. Instead, they spoke only as messengers who have been approved by God to be entrusted with the Good News. This was their commission; this was why they presented the Good News in the face of persecution. These men had been approved because God had examined their motives and had seen what he needed in these willing servants. God knew that they wanted to please God, not people.

Gaining the approval of others will distract believers from pleasing God. As they do God’s will, they must resist the desire to please people. The clarifying question of the believer should always be, “Who am I really serving?” If the answer is “people,” then the believer will be tossed back and forth by conflicting demands and expectations. But if the answer is consistently “Christ,” the believer will only have one person to please and not have to worry about how much or how little he or she is pleasing others.

2:5-6 The accusers could say what they wished, but the believers in Thessalonica could attest to the fact that Paul and the others with him had never used flattery, referring to language in order to cajole someone. Paul had no such intentions when he preached the gospel. He sought only to bring people to salvation in Christ.

The Thessalonians also knew that Paul and his fellow apostles had not been preaching for money. Many false teachers traveled about the ancient world willingly saying whatever an audience would pay to hear. God himself was witness of Paul and Silas's motives and mission. They had not even desired praise from anyone. They didn't need people to compliment their hard work and eloquent speeches in order to feel that they had accomplished much. They didn't need anyone to praise them, for they sought approval from God alone.

2:7-8 The apostles included the eleven men Jesus called (without Judas Iscariot), plus others, including Paul himself. The qualifications for being an apostle were to have seen the risen Christ, to have been commissioned by Christ to preach the Good News, and to be working on behalf of the Kingdom. Paul also noted signs, wonders, and miracles as marks of a true apostle (2 Corinthians 12:12).

As apostles, Paul and Silas certainly had a right to make some demands of the believers—such as expecting a certain amount of monetary help. In fact, most traveling teachers depended entirely on donations from their listeners. Paul practiced a trade (tentmaking) so as not to be a burden to his listeners (see also 2 Thessalonians 3:7-10). He also did not want to appear to be preaching for money. While he had a “right” to expect compensation (1 Corinthians 9:7-14), he did not always exercise that right. It was far more important to him that the gospel reach unbelievers. Paul and Silas were as gentle among the Thessalonian believers as a mother feeding and caring for her own children. Some traveling teachers may have breezed into various towns with superior airs and high-minded attitudes. But this was not the case with God's apostles. They had come with the authority of the God of heaven, yet they had served among the people because they truly loved them. Far from being preachers who used their audiences for self-aggrandizement, Paul and Silas gave both God's Good News and their own lives. Such sharing showed Paul and Silas's deep commitment to the gospel message and to the people with whom they shared it.

2:9 Although Paul had the right to receive financial support from the people he taught, he supported himself as a tentmaker (Acts 18:3; 20:34; 1 Corinthians 4:12). Each Jewish boy would learn a trade and try to earn his living with it. As a tentmaker, Paul was able to go wherever God led him, carrying his livelihood with him. Paul modeled self-reliance, the opposite of those false teachers and opportunists who sold “religion” in the marketplace. Paul didn’t want to burden the young congregation by requiring financial support. The “double duty” of earning a living while trying to preach, teach, and build up a body of believers in Thessalonica called for them to toil night and day. But Paul and Silas gladly did it so that their expenses would not be a burden to the believers.

2:10 Again Paul appealed to what the Thessalonian believers knew about Paul and Silas. The believers themselves were witnesses of how these apostles had conducted themselves (see John 15:26-27; Acts 5:32). Paul could not make these claims before the Thessalonians and before God if the claims were not true. The accusing Jews could say what they liked, but everyone knew that Paul and Silas had conducted themselves in a pure and honest and faultless manner. This consistent example of right living surely affected the Thessalonians. If Paul and Silas had shared the gospel message but had lived carelessly, their message would have had little impact. But they preached through both their words and their lives.

2:11-12 Paul had already compared himself and Silas to a gentle and caring “mother” (2:7) in describing how they had brought the gospel message to the Thessalonians. The verses go on to describe their role among the Thessalonians as being like a father in matters of teaching and raising these “baby believers.” As a father treats his own children, so the apostles dealt with the new believers one by one—the phrase each of you is emphatic. Paul and Silas had a personal relationship with each believer in Thessalonica. With pleading, encouragement, and urging, they had taught the believers to conduct their daily activities in a way that God would consider worthy (see also Romans 16:2; Ephesians 4:1; Philippians 1:27; Colossians 1:10). To live worthy of God means to live consistent with his commands and character.

2:13 Paul thanked God for how the Thessalonians had received the message. When Paul and Silas had preached, the people had recognized the words as being more than human ideas, and they had accepted the gospel message as the very word of God (2:9). The gospel message reveals its divine origin and power as it transforms people’s lives. The Thessalonians were experiencing how this word continues to work in those who believe. Through his word, God works in believers’ lives, transforming them, guiding them, cleansing them.

2:14 One evidence of God's work had been the believers' fortitude when they had suffered persecution from their own countrymen—the Greeks in Thessalonica. But the believers in Thessalonica had good company, for in that persecution they had actually imitated the believers in God's churches in Judea. Not that they had planned on this imitation—but in the way they faced and withstood persecution, they were just like the churches in Judea who had also suffered because of their belief in Christ Jesus, and they had also suffered from their own people, the Jews. It had been persecution in Judea that had driven the believers out of that country to various places—and the gospel went with them. The book of Acts relates some of the early persecution that was going on in Jerusalem and Judea. This suffering is described in the following verses. When Paul referred to the "Jews" causing all kinds of persecution, he was speaking of specific Jews who were opposing his preaching of the gospel. He did not mean all Jews. Many of Paul's converts were Jewish, and Paul himself was a Jew (2 Corinthians 11:22).

2:15-16 Paul's most recent relationship with the Jews had been when he had been persecuted in Philippi (Acts 16:22-24) and had been driven out of Thessalonica (Acts 17:5-6, 10). Persecution did not surprise Paul, for Jesus himself had warned that his followers would face just such animosity (John 15:18). The churches had grown to expect persecution from both hostile Jews and Gentiles. Paul would later write to Timothy, "Everyone who wants to live a godly life in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution" (2 Timothy 3:12).

Why were the Jews so hostile to Christianity? The Jewish people had a history of killing their own prophets (Matthew 23:29, 31, 34-35, 37). Despite the Jews' constant watching for the arrival of their promised Messiah, they missed him when he came, and even killed him (see Matthew 27:25). The Jewish leaders thought Jesus was a false prophet; they didn't want his teachings to spread, so they opposed all who preached about him (Acts 4:18).

The Jewish opposition to Christianity continued after Jesus' death. Although the Jewish religion had been declared legal by the Roman government, it still had a tenuous relationship with the government. At this time, Christianity was viewed as a sect of Judaism. The Jews were afraid that reprisals leveled against the Christians might be expanded to include them. In addition, the Jewish leaders feared that if many Jews were drawn away into Christianity, their own political position might be weakened. The leaders were also very proud of their special status as God's chosen people, and they resented the fact that the Christians were preaching the Good News to the Gentiles and including Gentile believers as full members in the church. The Jews' natural animosity against Gentiles extended to fearing that some might be saved. As the people who should have recognized the Messiah and welcomed all who would come to the one true God, the Jewish leaders had failed miserably—they actually feared that others might find salvation. The inevitable consequence of this attitude would be the anger of God. The words, has caught up with them at last, has several views:

1. It could refer to a coming event. Writing this letter in A.D. 50, Paul may have been referring to the severe famine in Judea in A.D. 45-47 (Acts 11:27-28), the massacre of Jews in the Temple area in A.D. 49 (recorded by Josephus), or the expulsion of Jews from Rome by Emperor Claudius (Acts 18:2).
2. Paul may have been foreseeing disastrous coming events, such as the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. The Jews' continued rejection of the gospel message would spell destruction.
3. Most likely, Paul was using language conveying the “dramatic present.” He was talking about the future as though it had already happened. Because of their continual rejection of Jesus as the Messiah and persecution of his followers, the Jews were not only piling up their guilt, they were hardening their hearts to the point of no return.

These must have been difficult words for Paul, a Jew from birth, to write about his countrymen. In another letter Paul wrote, “The longing of my heart and my prayer to God is that the Jewish people might be saved” (Romans 10:1). Paul understood that the Jews were God's chosen people and that many of them would come to salvation in Christ. He also knew, however, that many would flatly reject the truth. This pained him greatly.

1 THESSALONIANS 2:17–3:13

TIMOTHY'S GOOD REPORT ABOUT THE CHURCH / 2:17–3:13

Paul had been explaining to the Thessalonian believers why he and Silas had been unable to return to them. It had not been, as their detractors had said, because of fear or because they had been lying. Instead, Paul and Silas had wanted to come back but had been prevented by evil spiritual forces (2:18). However, they did not leave the young believers in Thessalonica without help—as the following verses explain.

2:17-18 The accusers had attacked Paul and Silas's methods and message (Paul refuted the accusations in the previous verses). The accusers also had pointed out the sudden departure of the apostles and the fact that they had not soon returned, implying that Paul and Silas had lied and were too scared to return. So Paul explained that the separation had not been desired (they did not separate themselves but were separated from them). The word "separated" can also be translated "torn away." In addition, while physically separated, the apostles kept the believers in their hearts. They had tried hard to come back and had an intense longing to be back in Thessalonica with the believers. Far from being afraid to return, Paul and Silas wanted to go back to Thessalonica.

Yet they could not return because Satan prevented them. What exactly blocked Paul and Silas from returning to Thessalonica—opposition, illness, travel complications, or a direct attack by Satan—is unknown. But, somehow, Satan had been able to keep them away more than once.

Spiritual warfare is real. Satan and God are constantly at war. Satan actively works to keep people from accepting Christ. He also works to hinder God's people from advancing God's Kingdom. Some of the difficulties that prevent believers from accomplishing God's work can be attributed to Satan (see Ephesians 6:12). Satan will bring sexual temptation on those who lack self-control (1 Corinthians 7:5). He will attempt to cause division among believers (2 Corinthians 2:11). He will bring in false teaching to lead believers astray (2 Corinthians 11:3). Satan can even disguise himself as an angel of light (Galatians 1:8). Satan will also attempt to hurt the community of believers through persecution (1 Thessalonians 3:1-5). While God is more powerful than Satan and sometimes intervenes and overrides, he does not always do so. Therefore, Christians must be vigilant and faithful to Christ.

2:19-20 With overflowing love for this young church, Paul asked a question and then answered it himself. What was the hope, joy, or crown in which Paul and Silas would have much joy? It would be the Thessalonian believers! The word hope describes Paul's confidence in these believers. The word joy pictures his own inner feelings when he imagined them presented to the Lord and welcomed into the Kingdom. The crown pictures a victor's wreath—the believers were like a victory crown, giving Paul joy in having “run the race” for their sakes (1 Corinthians 9:25; Philippians 4:1). One day, all will stand together before the Lord Jesus when he comes back again.

3:1-3 Because Paul could not return to Thessalonica (2:18), he sent Timothy as his representative. According to Acts 17:10, Paul left Thessalonica and went to Berea. When trouble broke out in Berea, some Christians took Paul to Athens, while Silas and Timothy stayed behind (Acts 17:13-15). Then Paul directed Silas and Timothy to join him in Athens. Later, Paul sent Timothy to encourage the Thessalonian Christians to be strong in their faith in the face of persecution and other troubles.

Paul's inability to return to Thessalonica and to support the new church weighed heavily upon him. All three of the letter's senders—Paul, Silas, and Timothy (1:1)—could stand it no longer. The apostles had no idea what was happening to these young believers. The Jews had chased the apostles out of the city, so it was fair to assume that the new Christians were under attack, as well. Concern for the believers caused Paul and his companions to take action. Paul really wanted to go back himself; because he could not go, however, at least his coworker for God could go in his place.

Timothy had three main tasks for his return to Thessalonica—to strengthen the believers, encourage them, and keep them from becoming disturbed by . . . troubles. In addition, Paul wanted him to find out about their faith (3:5). Paul was concerned that the opposition had caused disruption in the church, so he wanted Timothy to find out how their faith was holding up against persecution. Though Paul had been convinced of the genuine conversion experience of these believers (1:5), he also knew the importance of follow-up and discipleship. He also wanted the believers to know that their troubles were not unusual.

3:4 Paul had never taught that Christ would make life easy; instead, he had constantly faced persecution for his faith, and he explained that any believer would do likewise. The Thessalonians could attest to this fact—for Paul and Silas had warned them that troubles would soon come. They saw it firsthand as the apostles had been run out of town for preaching the Good News (Acts 17:5-10).

3:5 Because persecution had occurred against the apostles—Paul sent Timothy to find out whether their faith was still strong and if they were persevering in the face of difficulty. The words I was afraid focus not so much on fear as on concern that the Tempter (Satan) had gotten the best of them. Paul was concerned that the new and struggling believers might turn away from their faith.

3:6 At the writing of this letter, Timothy had just returned with good news. Their faith was solid, their love strong, and they remembered Paul and Silas with affection. What relief Paul must have felt! Far from having been beaten by the opposition and turned against the faith, the believers had stayed strong; they even longed to see Paul and Silas as much as Paul and Silas longed to see them.

3:7-8 Paul's certain relief and joy at the good news from Thessalonica was matched by great comfort that they had remained strong in the faith. Paul and Silas had continued to experience crushing troubles and suffering, but this report from Timothy encouraged and inspired them with new life—renewed energy (see also 4:18; 5:11; Romans 1:12).

3:9-10 It brings great joy to a Christian to see another person come to faith in Christ and to mature in that faith. Paul experienced this joy countless times. He thanked God for those in Thessalonica who had come to know Christ and had held strong in the faith. Paul had been forced to leave while they were still infant Christians with incomplete knowledge. Yet they had held on to their faith despite opposition and persecution and had come through unscathed. No wonder Paul thanked God!

In the presence of God refers to the context of prayer. Paul also earnestly prayed, night and day, or constantly, for their continued growth. He also asked God to let them return to Thessalonica. Thus far, Satan had hindered them, but Satan's hindrances only happen with God's permission. So Paul asked God to allow them to go back to fill up anything that may still be missing in their faith. Paul wanted to give them further teaching, move on to deeper doctrines, and help these believers mature in Christ.

3:11 The first half of the letter closes with Paul praying that he might enjoy a reunion with the Christians in Thessalonica. Paul has made it clear in this letter that he really wanted to return to Thessalonica (2:17-18; 3:6, 10). He repeated his desire—breaking into prayer, calling upon God to make it possible for Paul and Silas to return to the Thessalonians. The double subject, God the Father and the Lord Jesus, is followed by a singular verb—clearly indicating Paul’s understanding of the oneness of God and Christ.

It is unclear whether Paul ever returned to Thessalonica, but he traveled through Asia on his third journey and was joined by Aristarchus and Secundus, who were from Thessalonica (Acts 20:4-5).

3:12 Whether Paul could return or not, he knew that the church needed to sustain itself. A key ingredient would be love among the believers—as opposed to disunity, factions, or disagreements. The church would need love to survive. Although Paul had received good news from Timothy of the Thessalonians’ love (3:6), he knew that love can always be strengthened and deepened with God’s help. So Paul prayed that the Lord would make the believers’ love overflow. The word for love, agape, describes the selfless love that comes from God. Such love looks out for the best interests of those loved—caring for fellow believers and reaching out to unbelievers.

3:13 That God would make their hearts strong refers to Paul’s desire for the Thessalonians to continue to have inner strength. In Scripture, the “heart” refers to the inner sphere of emotion, desire, and will—the personality. Such strength would be seen in one’s character—and so Paul prayed that they would be blameless and holy. Complete perfection is not attainable in this life, but the process of sanctification brings believers ever closer to perfection. One day, the process will be over, and all believers will be made perfect when we stand before God our Father. The phrase, when our Lord Jesus comes with all those who belong to him, refers to the Second Coming of Christ when he will establish his eternal Kingdom. There are two views about the identity of these “holy ones.” Some think it refers to believers; others say it refers to angels (see Matthew 25:31; Mark 8:38; 13:26-27; Luke 9:26; 2 Thessalonians 1:7). Most likely, both are true because the words “holy ones” are used in the Bible to describe angels (Deuteronomy 33:22), as well as believers. Note that Paul used the inclusive word “all” to describe this group. Therefore, it seems that Paul was saying that those who will come with Christ at his Second Coming will be the angels and those believers who will have already died by that time.

At that time, Christ will gather all believers, those who have died and those who are alive, into one united family under his rule. All believers from all times, including these Thessalonians, will be with Christ in his Kingdom.

1 THESSALONIANS 4:1-12

LIVE TO PLEASE GOD / 4:1-12

The first three chapters of this letter focus on looking back at Paul's visit with the Thessalonians and defending his ministry with them against his critics. The final two chapters look ahead to the future of the church—giving advice for certain areas of Christian conduct that he felt needed to be addressed. The end of chapter 3 is a prayer that Christ would make these believers strong, blameless, and holy before God (3:13). That is a process of walking in faith and learning to live to please God. Effective faith should show itself in every area of a believer's life.

4:1-2 The word finally signals a change in subject, as Paul moved on to practical application of faith. Apparently, Timothy's report (3:6) had brought Paul great joy regarding the believers' faith but also included a few noteworthy concerns, for Paul gave instructions for right living in some very specific situations.

The believers had been taught from Paul and his companions to live in a way that pleases God. The apostles had set an example for them of how Christ-like living looks. Evidently, they had learned, for Paul said that they were doing just that; but he wanted them to do so more and more. Living to please God is every Christian's priority. Knowing Jesus as Savior brings salvation and should prompt every believer to please God. Through obedient believers, God works in the world. Obedience pleases God. Believers cannot claim to know and love God if they do not seek to please him.

4:3-5 The phrase, God wants you to be holy, refers to a process called "sanctification." This process continues throughout every believer's lifetime on earth. God takes the old patterns and behaviors and transforms them to his standards and will. Those who are being sanctified have accepted Christ as Savior and are allowing the Holy Spirit to work in their lives, making them more and more like Christ.

Because God wants his people to become holy, believers need to uphold certain standards here on earth. Christianity is not a list of do's and don'ts but a relationship in which the believers desire to please their heavenly Father (2:4; 4:1). To please him requires obedience to his standards. Apparently the area of sexual sin was plaguing the church in Thessalonica, as it was plaguing the Roman Empire as a whole. The many idols worshiped in the regions across the empire often had an emphasis on sex—some temples even employed prostitutes for the pleasure of “worshippers.” In general, people regarded any kind of sexual activity as acceptable. It was quite common for a man not to limit his sexual relationship to his wife. Homosexuality was common. Incest was overlooked. Slaves were kept and used for sex.

God’s standards are the opposite. Paul taught abstinence from sexual immorality. This included any kind of illegitimate sexual intercourse or relationship outside of marriage. We live in a society similar to the one in which Paul lived and taught. Every kind of sexual activity, including violence and abuse of children, has become commonplace. Unbridled expression of all desires has become the norm. As Christians, we must uphold the sanctity of sexual expression within the loving commitment of the marriage relationship.

These believers were not being exhorted to keep clear of all sex but of all sexual sin. God created sex to be a beautiful and essential ingredient of marriage, but sex outside the marriage relationship is sin. These believers had to “keep clear” of all forms of sexual sin—stay away or even run away if need be (see also 1 Corinthians 6:13-20; 2 Corinthians 12:21). Therefore, Paul taught that believers must control their bodies and live in holiness and honor—not in lustful passion as the pagans do, in their ignorance of God and his ways. Sex should be kept in the context of marriage between a man and woman; honorable conduct is contrasted with an evil, lustful attitude that can contaminate even a marriage. People who live by “lustful passion” are ignorant of God because they have chosen to ignore the knowledge of him that they have been given (Romans 1:19-20, 24-27) and to ignore his messengers who had brought the Good News to them.

4:6 Paul focused here on the men among the believers. Not only does sexual sin ruin the holy and honorable living to which the Christian men should aspire, but it also is a sin against one’s fellow men—whether they be Christian or not. To have a sexual affair with another man’s wife or member of his household wrongs that other man. It takes advantage of a trusting relationship. God does not overlook these sins; instead, he avenges all such sins. So important was this that Paul and Silas had already solemnly warned the new Christians in Thessalonica. While Paul was focusing on the men because of the society he lived in, it is important to note that these principles are just as true for women.

4:7 The Greek word translated called means “to call forth” or “to summon.” Paul always made it clear that salvation was God’s initiative and that people are “called” to be his. “Calling” includes a commitment on the part of believers to be holy, not to live impure lives.

4:8 God laid down these rules—basically, one rule—sex is for married people (a man and a woman) only. Anyone who refuses to live by this simple rule, who treats sexual sin lightly, is not disobeying human rules because human rules change (witness the change in “sexual rules” in the American culture over the last 50 years). To go with the flow of the surrounding culture and to disregard God’s rules about sexuality are tantamount to rejecting God.

Paul would later write to the believers in Corinth (another sexually immoral city, and incidentally, the city where Paul was at the time he wrote the letter to the Thessalonians): “Run away from sexual sin! No other sin so clearly affects the body as this one does. For sexual immorality is a sin against your own body” (1 Corinthians 6:8). Sexual sin is a violation of one’s own body. Paul described it as a sin that affects the body like no other, a sin that is against one’s own body, affecting not just the flesh (promiscuous sex can lead to disease), but to the whole being and personality. Sexual sin has disastrous effects. What an enticement it can be for all people, and believers are not exempt. Clearly, other sins also affect the body, such as gluttony or drunkenness, but no other sin has the same effect on the memory, personality, or soul of a person as sexual sin. Paul argues that in intercourse, people are united (1 Corinthians 6:17). Their spirits are not involved in quite the same way in other sins. Also, Paul argues that believers’ bodies are the temple of God (1 Corinthians 6:19-20). People violate God’s purpose for their bodies when they commit sexual sins. Believers need to exercise alertness and awareness to stay away from places where temptation is strong, and they need to use strong, evasive action if they find themselves entrapped.

To reject God in such a way is to despise the wonderful gift of his Holy Spirit and to reject Christ’s ultimate sacrifice on sinners’ behalf. The Thessalonians had received that gift, and they ought to live in thankfulness and obedience. In Galatians 5:22-23, Paul describes the fruit of the Holy Spirit in believers’ lives. One of these fruits is self-control—referring to mastery over sinful human desires. When believers surrender to the Holy Spirit, he gives them the strength to follow God’s rules.

4:9 Paul switched gears here: from exhorting the Thessalonian believers about sexual purity to exhorting those who needed to work and not depend on others (4:11-12). In between, he commended them that he did not need to exhort them about Christian love, for it seemed that they had learned that lesson from God himself through the Holy Spirit. The Greek word used here for love, philadelphia, is the kind of love that binds people together (John 13:34-35; 1 John 2:7-8). Often used for blood relations in Greek literature, the New Testament writers used philadelphia for “faith relations” in the family of God. This is a “brotherly love” that should be shown among God’s people. Not only did sexual purity set the believers apart from the culture around them, but so did the love they showed for one another. Indeed, it was a trademark of the first church (Acts 2:43-47; 4:32-35).

4:10 The Thessalonian believers did not need instruction about showing God’s love, but Paul urged them forward. Although their love was already strong, not only among themselves but also toward all the Christians in all of Macedonia, Paul begged the believers to love them more and more. There is always more to learn about love, always more depth to be plumbed, always more ways to show it. Paul wanted them to understand that love was not an end in itself, but a continual process.

4:11-12 Another group of believers in the church needed some warning (see also 5:14). Believers are to be responsible in all areas of life. Some of the Thessalonian Christians had adopted a life of idleness, depending on others for handouts (see Ephesians 6:6-7). The reason for their idleness is unknown. However, because a discussion of the Second Coming follows this section, it can be inferred that these people may have decided to sit around and wait for Christ’s return. They may have genuinely thought they should spend all their time working to bring others into the Kingdom, but they were being a drain on their fellow believers.

It seems that these people were not quiet about this either, so Paul first exhorted them to focus their ambition on leading a quiet life and minding their own business, rather than meddling in others’ business (see also 5:14; 2 Thessalonians 3:11). The injunction to working with their hands may have been distasteful, for Greeks looked down on manual labor as fit only for slaves. Paul was a tentmaker, however, and used his hard, manual labor as an example to all believers (2:9-11).

The reason for Paul’s warning? He wanted the believers to be involved in honest labor so that people who are not Christians will respect the way the believers lived. He also did not want any believers to need to depend on others to meet their financial needs. Again, Paul had been working for these same reasons. Those who work hard to support themselves are a positive witness, both outside and inside the church. (See also Ephesians 4:28.)

1 THESSALONIANS 4:13–5:28

THE HOPE OF THE RESURRECTION / 4:13–5:11

Paul always taught people about the future—that salvation carried a promise of eternal life. He surely told his audiences that the same Jesus Christ who died, arose, and ascended would one day return. This would be his “Second Coming” (2:19). The believers knew that this could occur at any time and that it would be unannounced. The rest of chapter 4 and the first part of chapter 5 seem to be addressing several questions that had come from the church through Timothy regarding the resurrection of believers and the Second Coming.

4:13 A question to Paul from the Thessalonian believers regarded the Christians who have died. The believers had been taught that Christ would one day return and take his people to himself—every believer should be ready for that return at any moment. Apparently, in the interim as the believers awaited Christ’s return, some of them had died. The Thessalonians were wondering why this had happened before Christ’s return, and what would happen to those who had died before he came back. Some may have feared that believers who had died would miss the Kingdom. No doubt, the thought that their loved ones would not be with Christ caused them great sorrow.

This contrasts strongly with Paul’s view (1 Corinthians 15:53-55; Philippians 1:21-23). Paul wanted the Thessalonians to understand that death is not the end. When Christ returns, all believers—dead and alive—will be reunited, never to suffer or die again. Believers need not be full of sorrow like people who have no hope. Paul recognized that the death of loved ones naturally results in grieving; but when Christians grieve for Christians who have died, there is a difference. Their grief is not hopeless. While the pain is real, the fact is that these loved ones will be seen again as the following verses describe.

4:14 Believers can have hope in the resurrection because of what happened to Jesus. Because Jesus died and was raised to life again, believers can also trust that those who have died will also be resurrected (see also 1 Corinthians 15:12-20). Then, when Jesus comes, God will bring back with Jesus all the Christians who have died. Believers who have died are with the Lord already! They are presently with God and will come with Jesus. They haven’t missed out—in fact, they are enjoying God’s presence. Second Corinthians 5:8 and Philippians 1:21-22 teach that believers go to be with the Lord at death.

4:15-16 What did Paul mean when he wrote, I can tell you this directly from the Lord? Either this was something that the Lord had revealed directly to Paul, or it was a teaching of Jesus that had been passed along orally by the apostles and other Christians. Nevertheless, there was no disputing what Paul was about to say. He wanted these believers to understand that neither the dead nor the living would be at any disadvantage with regard to Christ's return. All believers will share the blessings of the resurrection. Those who have died are already with Christ and will be with him when he returns (4:14); those who are still living when Christ returns will not rise to meet him ahead of those who are in their graves. Instead, all the Christians who have died will rise from their graves first. Knowing exactly when the dead will be raised, in relation to the other events at the Second Coming, is not as important as knowing why Paul wrote these words. He wrote them to challenge and motivate believers to comfort and encourage one another when loved ones die. This passage can be a great comfort when any believer dies. The same love that unites believers in this life (4:9) will unite them when Christ returns and reigns for eternity.

The Second Coming will occur in God's timing. He alone brings it about. Christ, who is the Lord himself, will descend from heaven, for that is where he has been since after his resurrection (Acts 1:9-11). Christ's return will be unmistakable. No one will miss it, for he will descend with a shout, with the call of the archangel, and with the trumpet call of God. Whether these are three different ways of referring to one sound, whether they happen simultaneously, or happen in sequence is unknown. But these sounds will herald his return. Paul used distinctive imagery associated with the end times. An archangel is a high or holy angel appointed to a special task. Clearly, the angelic hosts will be taking part in this celebration of Christ's return to take his people home (Mark 8:38). A trumpet blast will usher in the new heaven and earth (Revelation 11:15). The Jews would understand the significance of this because trumpets were always blown to signal the start of great festivals and other extraordinary events (Numbers 10:10).

4:17 After the dead have risen from their graves, the believers who are still alive and remain on the earth will be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. A reference to "clouds" in the Bible often symbolizes the presence of God (Exodus 13:21; 14:19; 19:16; 24:15; 40:34-38; Mark 9:7; Acts 1:9). There are differing views about whether this taking of the believers and the Second Coming of Christ occur at the same time, as noted below.

Clearly, all believers—whether they are alive or have died at the time of Christ's return—will be together with one another and with the Lord forever.

This supernatural event will cause a great reunion among believers who are alive and those who have already died. Both groups will experience Christ's return together. This joyous reunion will go on forever.

This verse provides a clear picture of what is called the "rapture." But Paul does not say exactly when this will happen in relationship to the other great event of the end times: the tribulation. So there are three main views regarding the timing of the rapture with respect to the tribulation:

1. Pre-tribulationists point to the period of tribulation (described in Revelation) that occurs before the Second Coming of Christ and believe that the rapture of the believers will occur before this time of tribulation. They believe, therefore, that believers will be in heaven while the earth goes through a time of great tribulation. This view sees the believers meeting Christ in the clouds, but places his Second Coming as later.
2. Mid-tribulationists say that the rapture will occur at the mid-point of the time period of tribulation. The believers will be on earth for the first half of that time of tribulation but then will be raptured and will escape the last half, which will be a time of intense suffering. This view also sees Christ's Second Coming as a separate and later event.
3. Post-tribulationists believe that the believers will remain on the earth during the time of tribulation prior to Christ's Second Coming. Then, when Christ returns in the clouds, believers will be caught up to be with him.

While Christians may differ regarding the timing of this rapture, all believe that it will happen and that it will be a joyous reunion of all believers, living and dead. Paul's point was not to give his readers a timeline or a literal description of how all the end-time events would fit together. Instead, he wanted to reassure the Thessalonians that their fellow believers who had died would not miss out on Christ's return and eternal Kingdom.

4:18 The Thessalonians did not need to continue worrying about the spiritual state of those who had died. Paul explained to these believers that being dead or alive at the return of Christ would make no difference, for Christ would bring all his people together to be with him forever. Instead of worrying, they should comfort and encourage each other with these words. Even in the face of death, believers know that their Lord is ultimately triumphant.

5:1-2 The phrase day of the Lord refers to a future time when God will intervene directly and dramatically in world affairs. Predicted and discussed often in the Old Testament (Isaiah 13:6-12; Joel 2:28-32; Amos 5:18; Zephaniah 1:14-18), the day of the Lord will include both punishment and blessing. Christ will judge sin and set up his eternal Kingdom. Paul had already taught at length about this and explained that it will come unexpectedly, like a thief in the night (see also Matthew 24:36, 43-44; 2 Peter 3:10; Revelation 3:3; 16:15).

Some have attempted to pinpoint dates or prove how certain present events fulfill prophecy. Jesus made it clear and Paul reiterated, however, that no one knows when Christ will return. It will be unexpected and on God's timetable. Jesus predicted that, before his return, many believers would be misled by false teachers claiming to have revelations from God (Mark 13:5-6). According to Scripture, the one clear sign of Christ's return will be his unmistakable appearance in the clouds. This will be seen by all people (Mark 13:26; Revelation 1:7). In other words, believers do not have to wonder whether a certain person is the Messiah or whether the times in which they live are the "end times." When Jesus returns, everyone will know beyond a doubt because it will be evident. Beware of groups who claim special knowledge of the last days because no one knows when that time will be.

5:3 The comparison of Christ's coming to a thief (5:1-2) pictures it as sudden and unexpected; the comparison of it to a woman's birth pains pictures that it will be unavoidable (see also Mark 13:8). Some who will not be waiting for Christ will think that everything is safe—they will be lulled into a false sense that everything is peaceful and secure (see also Jeremiah 6:14; 8:11; Ezekiel 13:10; Micah 3:5). However, they will find themselves facing sudden disaster. The Greek word for "destruction" (olethros) is also used in 2 Thessalonians 1:9, where it denotes separation from God. When Christ returns, that will be the end—there will be no reprieves, no second chances, no escape.

5:4-5 The believers in Thessalonica were not in the dark; that is, they were not ignorant of what was to occur. God has chosen not to tell his people everything about Christ's return, but believers know all that they need to know. From the moment Christ ascended into heaven, the promise remains that someday, just as he went, he will return (Acts 1:11). For believers, that promise is not scary; instead, it is a promise of hope. Because believers are all children of light and of the day, that return will be a time of great joy.

The contrasts of "light" and "darkness," and "day" and "night," are often used in the Bible to describe the difference between good and evil, between God's people and the people of the world. Light represents what is good, pure, true, holy, and reliable. Darkness represents what is sinful and evil. "Children of the light,” God’s children, have nothing to fear regarding the Second Coming—although they are responsible to be ready.

5:6-7 Usually thieves break into homes at night when everyone is sleeping. Jesus’ Second Coming will happen, and it will happen with surprise like a thief breaking in, but God’s people should be on guard, not asleep. The way to be ready for Jesus’ return is not in knowing when he will return, for he won’t give that information. Instead, readiness lies in being alert and sober. The children of the light will be awake and ready when the Lord returns. Paul pictures those who constantly expect the Lord to return at any moment. They are not dallying in sin or falling into temptation, or being waylaid by their own doubts. We also must walk close to God in daily fellowship with him so that, at the Second Coming, we will be ready.

This contrasts with the rest of the world, the others of the “darkness” and of the “night” who are asleep at the Lord’s return. The word translated “asleep” is used for moral indifference (see Mark 13:36; Ephesians 5:14). These people aren’t waiting for the Lord, aren’t caring that he could return, and are even getting drunk—a metaphor for their moral indifference toward the holy God. Because unbelievers are people of the “darkness” and of the “night,” their lives are focused on their own pleasures and obsessions, and not on alertness and moral readiness for the coming of Christ.

5:8 People who live in the light have a whole different reason to be alive. Life is not all about personal pleasure but about loving and serving God and getting to know him better. The reward for being God’s children is that when he returns, he will take his people to eternal blessing. This means that in this sinful world, the world of “darkness” and “night,” believers have to be different. First of all, they must think clearly. Believers need to realize that they are in a battle. Spiritual warfare is very real, and Satan does not easily accept people leaving his kingdom for God’s Kingdom. So believers must be armed and ready, like a soldier, protected by the body armor of faith and love, and wearing a helmet of confidence in their salvation (see also Ephesians 6:11-13).

Believers face a powerful army whose goal is to defeat Christ’s church. Those who believe in Christ are assured of victory. They must engage in the struggle until Christ returns, however, because Satan is constantly battling against all who are on the Lord’s side. Christians need supernatural power to defeat Satan, and God has provided this by giving his Holy Spirit and his armor for protection. Believers have faith and love to protect their hearts, and confidence to keep their minds focused on the goal—God’s eternal Kingdom.

5:9-10 In order to wear “confidence” as a helmet (5:8), believers must know in what (or in whom) they have confidence. God saved his people, so he will not pour out his anger on them. God’s wrath is very real. Sin will be punished, and those who have refused his offer of forgiveness will indeed face punishment (Revelation 20:11-15). But believers will not face the condemnation that their sins deserve. Instead, they will live with God forever because they have put their faith in Jesus’ sacrifice on the cross for forgiveness of their sins. The confidence rests secure, whether believers are dead or alive at Christ’s return. Salvation is a certainty because the Christ who is coming is the same Christ who died for sinners.

5:11 Despite persecution and their sorrow over fellow believers who had died, the Christians needed to encourage each other about the certainty of their future reunion with all believers who had gone on before (4:13-18) and the promise of eternal life through Jesus Christ (5:9-10). They ought also to build each other up in the faith. Even as one believer receives encouragement, he or she at another time will be in a position to offer it. The mutual giving and receiving in the body of Christ keep the church strong against the forces that attack it. God’s people always need to stand together as they anticipate their Savior’s return.

PAUL’S FINAL ADVICE / 5:12-22

Paul wanted to leave some final instructions to all the believers so that they could continue to build up one another (5:11). This section focuses on three parts of life in a local church and how the relationships ought to work—from the pastors and leadership, through the fellowship and responsibilities of the believers, and finally to how they ought to worship. The instructions are as vital to churches today as they were in the first century.

5:12 The brothers and sisters in the church needed to show honor to those in leadership in order for everything to function smoothly. The word “honor” is also translated “respect.” These leaders in the Lord’s work probably were the elders who held positions of leadership and responsibility. Elders carried great responsibility, and they were expected to be good examples. Because these men work hard among the believers, they deserved to be honored. Paul expressed a similar thought in his letter to Timothy (1 Timothy 5:17).

The leadership structure in local churches began very early. As Paul planted a church and then moved on, he needed to leave behind an organized group of believers (Acts 11:30; 14:23; 1 Timothy 4:14; Titus 1:5; James 5:14; 1 Peter 5:1). Paul could not stay in each church, but he knew that these new churches needed strong spiritual leadership. Leaders were chosen to teach sound doctrine, to help believers mature spiritually, and to equip believers to live for Jesus Christ despite opposition. Acts 14:23 describes Paul and Barnabas' return to some of the churches that they had planted. Part of the reason that Paul and Barnabas risked their lives to return to these cities was to organize the churches' leadership.

Timothy may have also reported back to Paul some concern regarding a lack of respect by the Christians for their leaders. Perhaps the leaders had been warning against all that is wrong, and in so doing, had been the target of criticism. Paul explained that these men had been put in positions of responsibility for a reason. Therefore, believers should respect and heed their words.

5:13 Leaders are not to be ignored or argued with, they are to be thought of highly and given wholehearted love because of their work. When believers respect their leaders and join them in their work for God's Kingdom, the church will grow. Of course, it also helps if the leader does not have to spend all his time in dealing with internal conflicts—hence, Paul's reminder that believers should live peaceably with each other. All are to work together to build the Kingdom and to serve one another. The best way for this “peace” to occur is for all believers to serve with their God-given gifts, to let others use their gifts, and then to respect and love one another for what God is doing through them.

5:14 While the leaders have special responsibility to guide the church, believers are not exempt from their responsibilities to care for one another. Paul singled out three groups in this church and “urged” the believers to look after or deal with them—each in a different way.

First, they are to warn those who are lazy. The word “warn” is also in 5:12 and means to firmly admonish. They were to warn the lazy, idle believers. The word translated “lazy” is used only in the letters to the Thessalonians (see also 2 Thessalonians 3:6, 7, 11) and seems to have been a particular concern for this church. The Greek word translated “lazy” (ataktous) was used for soldiers who would not stay in the ranks. These people had set themselves outside the prescribed pattern for the church—everyone else was working and serving, but they would not. The problem with idle people is that, because they are not busy enough with valuable activities, they usually stir up trouble of one kind or another. These people need to be warned to get back in line and to use their God-given gifts in service for the Kingdom.

Second, they are to encourage those who are timid. The lazy need to be warned, but the timid need to be encouraged. The “timid” are the fearful people who lack confidence—perhaps in themselves or even in their faith. They have become discouraged or worried, possibly by persecution or by the deaths of their fellow believers (3:13). These people need loving instruction from their fellow believers to calm their fears and to build their confidence.

Third, they are to take tender care of those who are weak. The word for “take tender care” is antechesthe (also translated simply as “help”); it pictures the action of holding on to these people, wrapping arms around them, clinging to them. This is the kind of help suggested for the spiritually “weak,” those weak in faith, those in need (such as financial need) or those who might be struggling with the sins associated with paganism that Paul wrote about in 4:3-8. These might be struggling, needy, or immature Christians who need the arms of strong fellow believers to guide them, give them support, and let them know they are not alone. See also Romans 5:6; 14:1; 1 Corinthians 8:9.

Finally, being patient with everyone is the glue that holds the relationships together. In any group where a variety of people come together and are expected to be a loving family, godly patience will be required of everyone. The word for “patient” (makrothumia) is also translated “long-suffering.” This is an attribute of God (Exodus 34:6; Psalm 103:8), a fruit of the Holy Spirit (Galatians 5:22), and a characteristic of love (1 Corinthians 13:4). God is patient with people, and so Christians should be. In addition, God has given his Spirit to help his people be patient with one another.

5:15 To a church under persecution, the command against retaliation is especially poignant. See that no one pays back evil for evil. Personal revenge and retaliation are clearly forbidden to those who call themselves followers of Christ (Matthew 5:39, 44; Romans 12:17-21). There would be times where relationships between believers would be strained. They would also need to remember that they should never pay back evil for evil, but should always try to do good to each other and to everyone else—thus including those in the church and those outside, even their enemies. That believers should “always try” indicates a lifestyle of kindness that should permeate all their dealings with people.

5:16 Paul counseled this persecuted church to always be joyful. Paul had just commanded the believers to love one another, and then to rejoice. True joy transcends the rolling waves of circumstance. Joy comes from a consistent relationship with Jesus Christ. When believers’ lives are intertwined with Christ, he will help them to walk through adversity without sinking into debilitating lows and to manage prosperity without moving into deceptive highs. The joy of living with Jesus Christ daily will keep believers always joyful. They can rejoice because of their sure salvation and their future hope. Nothing that happens on this earth can compare with the glory that awaits God's people.

5:17 Paul did not expect believers to spend all their time on their knees or with their eyes closed when he said they should keep on praying. In fact, he was quite adamant that everyone had work to do (5:14; 2 Thessalonians 3:6-7, 11). It is possible, however, for believers to have a prayerful attitude at all times. This attitude is built upon acknowledging dependence on God, realizing his presence within, and determining to obey him fully. Then it will be natural to pray frequent, spontaneous, short prayers.

5:18 Evil will happen to believers. When it strikes, they can still be thankful for God's presence and for the good he will accomplish through the distress. Usually, God uses difficult times to build people's character and strengthen their faith. It is easy to give thanks for the blessings; it is more difficult to give thanks for the blessings in disguise. By far, the most difficult task is to give thanks no matter what happens—even the situations that make no sense or are extremely painful. Yet this difficult task has been assigned to all believers, for this is God's will for you who belong to Christ Jesus. Learning to give thanks in everything means learning to trust God completely. When a believer can give thanks so willingly, he or she has trusted that God is completely in control of all situations and is working out his will.

5:19 To "stifle" means to douse a fire, so to stifle the Holy Spirit would be forbidding or restraining his work. By warning the believers not to stifle the Holy Spirit, Paul may have meant that the believers in Thessalonica should not grieve the Spirit through any of the sins that have been mentioned in this letter—immorality and laziness, for example. But the context suggests (see next verse) that Paul was referring to a situation in the church in which some of the believers had been limiting or forbidding the exercise of certain spiritual gifts, such as prophecy or speaking in tongues. Paul warned that no one should ignore or toss aside the gifts the Holy Spirit gives. The following verses specifically mention prophecy (5:20). Sometimes, the immature use of spiritual gifts causes divisions in a church. Rather than trying to solve the problems, these believers may have been attempting to stifle those gifts. No one should stifle the Holy Spirit's work in anyone's life but encourage the full expression of these gifts to benefit the whole body of Christ.

5:20-21 God appointed certain people as prophets to the church (1 Corinthians 12:10, 28). These people had special gifts in ministering God’s messages to his people. At times they would foretell the future (Acts 11:28; 21:9, 11), but more often they would exhort, encourage, and strengthen God’s people (Acts 15:32; 1 Corinthians 14:29). God spoke through prophets—inspiring them with specific messages for particular times and places. This gift provided insight, warning, correction, and encouragement (see 14:3). The Thessalonians apparently were scoffing at prophecies. These prophecies would have been heard in the context of worship, although opinions differ on what these entailed. The Reformers (Calvin, Luther) believed that sermons are the exercise of the gift of prophecy. Other scholars say that prophecy refers to spontaneous, Spirit-inspired messages that are orally delivered in the congregation for the edification and encouragement of the body of Christ.

The gift of prophecy is highly regarded. It is second only to the highest rank of being an apostle (1 Corinthians 12:28; Ephesians 4:11) and is a gift to be aspired to, for it helps edify believers (1 Corinthians 14:5, 10-12). The words spoken, therefore, should not be treated contemptuously. Paul was not advocating blind acceptance of every word spoken by any self-styled prophet. Instead, believers were to test everything against God’s word in Scripture, discern what was true and what was false, and then hold on to what is good. The word translated “good” (kalos) was sometimes used to describe what was genuine—as a genuine coin is opposed to a counterfeit. All believers are responsible to listen, discern, and learn.

Christians should not believe everything they hear just because someone says it is a message inspired by God. There are many ways to test teachers to see if their message is truly from the Lord. One is to check to see if their words match what God says in the Bible. Other tests include their commitment to the body of believers (1 John 2:19), their lifestyle (1 John 3:23-24), and the fruit of their ministry (1 John 4:6). The most important test of all is what they believe about Christ.

5:22 The separation is real and important: believers must “hold on to what is good” (5:21) and at the same time keep away from every kind of evil. Paul did not mean that believers must literally withdraw from the world, for to do so would mean that they could not shed the light of Christ so that more might come to him. Believers can, however, make sure that they don’t give evil a foothold by avoiding tempting situations and concentrating on obeying God. (See also Romans 12:9.)

PAUL'S FINAL GREETINGS / 5:23-28

The conduct Paul has been prescribing is beyond human possibility. People will not naturally rejoice always, pray continually, and give thanks in every situation (5:16-18), nor can they keep away from all evil (5:22). Paul did not expect them to do this in their own strength; he prayed that God would help them.

5:23 Paul described God as the God of peace. Jesus had told his disciples that he would give them peace (John 14:27; 16:33). The end result of the Holy Spirit's work in believers' lives is deep and lasting peace. Unlike worldly peace, which is usually defined as the absence of conflict, this peace is confident assurance in any circumstance; with Christ's peace, no believer needs to fear the present or the future.

Paul prayed that God would work in the believers' lives to make them holy. As God takes up residence within a believer, he begins the process of "sanctification"—the change that he makes in each believer's life. Believers are sanctified (set apart) by the work of Christ. It is initiated by God's Spirit when they believe. It is a process whereby believers dedicate themselves to proper living. While "perfection" will not occur until believers are fully glorified, sanctification is the process of moving toward that goal, moving toward Christlikeness. In order to be made holy in every way, God will need to work in all areas of a person's life—the whole spirit and soul and body. This expression is Paul's way of saying that God must be involved in every aspect of a believer's life. As believers live in God's presence, he will keep them blameless for Christ's return. Perhaps the Thessalonian believers were wondering, when their fellow believers died before the Second Coming, if those dead believers would be able to receive this perfection from Christ. Paul explained that the supernatural process would occur for all believers.

5:24 The Thessalonians could count on these promises because God is faithful. God created the world, and he has faithfully ordered it and kept it since the creation. Because God is faithful, believers can count on him to fulfill his promises to them. If God can oversee the forces of nature, surely he can see his people through the trials they face. Trusting in God's faithfulness day by day gives confidence in his great promises for the future. What he has promised, he will do.

5:25 Paul spent a lot of time in prayer for the believers in the various churches. He mentioned several times his own prayers for the Thessalonians (1:2; 3:10, 12-13; 5:23; 2 Thessalonians 1:11; 3:1). But Paul also asked believers to pray for him and his coworkers, as well (see also Ephesians 6:19; Colossians 4:3; 2 Thessalonians 3:1). Every believer, even this gifted apostle, needs the prayers of fellow believers.

5:26 Paul asked that the believers greet each other in Christian love to help break down the divisions in this church. He wanted his readers to express their love and unity to one another.

5:27 Paul's wording here is very strong, I command you in the name of the Lord, means something like, "I put you on oath before the Lord." Paul did not write merely to the leaders; he had written to everyone, so all the Christians needed to hear every word of it. For every Christian to hear this letter, it had to be read in a public meeting. Paul wanted to make sure that everyone had the opportunity to hear his message because he was answering important questions and offering needed encouragement.

5:28 As Paul began this letter (1:1), so he ended it. Paul's final prayer was for the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ to be with them. Paul often ended his letters this way, asking his readers to continue to experience God's undeserved kindness and love every day of their lives, and then to pass along that grace to others.

2 THESSALONIANS

INTRODUCTION

Communication can be tricky. What is heard and repeated is not always what was said in the first place.

Evidently, that's what happened in Thessalonica. Paul had written his warm and personal first letter to teach, encourage, and strengthen the believers there. Perhaps the most powerful message of Paul's letter was his teaching about the Second Coming. Paul wanted to comfort those who had lost loved ones and to give all of them hope. Jesus would soon return, and they should be ready.

Many of the Thessalonians, however, had heard the wrong message. Or they may have received false information from outsiders who, because of ignorance or selfish motives, had twisted the truth. Thinking Paul was stating that Jesus would come at any minute, some of them may have stopped working and started watching. The increased persecution of the church made this interpretation of Paul's words more plausible. Surely this is the Day of the Lord, many must have thought.

Upon learning of this miscommunication and misunderstanding, Paul wrote quickly, instructing further about the Second Coming and the Day of the Lord.

As you read 2 Thessalonians, think of how the first-century believers in that Greek city must have received Paul's message and how they probably changed their behavior. And consider what you should do to be ready for Christ's return—it's closer now than ever before.

AUTHOR

Paul (Saul of Tarsus): apostle of Christ, missionary, gifted teacher, and founder of the church at Thessalonica.

Just like 1 Thessalonians, the first verse of 2 Thessalonians mentions Paul, Silas, and Timothy as those who were sending this letter. The contents, however, clearly reveal Paul to be the primary author, for he often uses the pronoun "I." Paul's authorship of 2 Thessalonians was widely accepted by the early church.

For more about Paul, see the Author section in the Introduction to the book of Romans. See also the Introduction to the book of 1 Thessalonians.

DATE AND SETTING

Written from Corinth around A.D. 51, a few months after 1 Thessalonians.

Shortly after writing his first letter to the church at Thessalonica, Paul wrote

2 Thessalonians. He wrote this letter from Corinth also. The content of 2 Thessalonians verifies Corinth as the location.

- Paul, Timothy, and Silas were still together (1:1), and Corinth is the only place the three were known to have gathered after the initial evangelism of Thessalonica (see Acts 18:5).
- The condition of the Thessalonian church was much the same: The believers were still being persecuted (compare 1 Thessalonians 1:6 to 2 Thessalonians 1:4). In spite of its troubles, the Thessalonian church was still growing (compare 1 Thessalonians 1:8 to 2 Thessalonians 1:3).

AUDIENCE

The believers in Thessalonica.

Second Thessalonians was written to the same group of people to whom 1 Thessalonians was written: the believers in Thessalonica. Because of the similarities between the two letters, some critical scholars have asserted that each letter was sent to a distinct group in the Thessalonian church: 1 Thessalonians to the Jewish Christians and 2 Thessalonians to the Gentile Christians. This may be a convenient explanation for the similarities between the two letters, but the evidence for this theory is meager. Paul's other letters address Jews and Gentiles together, encouraging them to become one in Christ (see Romans 10:12; Galatians 3:28). It would have been uncharacteristic of Paul to send two separate letters and would merely have promoted more division in the church.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To clear up confusion about the Second Coming of Christ.

After sending his first letter to the church in Thessalonica, Paul received additional news about the believers there. They were enduring intense persecution and great hardship, but despite their troubles, they were clinging to the faith. Some, however, were claiming that Jesus had already returned. These believers may have misunderstood Paul's statement that Christ's return would be as unexpected as a thief coming in the middle of the night (1 Thessalonians 5:1-3). Or perhaps they had received another letter, claiming to be from Paul, that simply declared that Christ had already returned (2:2-3). That rumor, along with persecution, was disrupting and weakening the young church. Thinking they were in the final days, some believers were refusing to work (compare 1 Thessalonians 5:14 with 2 Thessalonians 3:11-12).

Paul knew that he had to write a second letter to dispel the rumors and to guide the young church. In summary, this letter reveals the heart of a concerned pastor. Paul didn't want any false teaching to distract his new converts from the Christian faith. They had already suffered too much for Christ to be sidetracked by idle gossip.

MESSAGE

The letter begins with Paul's trademark personal greeting and a statement of thanksgiving for their faith (1:1-3). He mentions their perseverance in spite of their persecution and trials (1:4) and uses this situation to broach the subject of Christ's return. At that time, Christ will vindicate the righteous who endure and will punish the wicked (1:5-12).

Paul then directly answers the misunderstanding concerning the timing of the events of the end times. He tells them not to listen to rumors and reports that the day of the Lord has already begun (2:1-2), because a number of events must occur before Christ returns (2:3-12). Meanwhile, they should stand firm for Christ's truth (2:13-15), receive God's encouragement and hope (2:16-17), pray for strength and for the spread of the Lord's message (3:1-5), and warn those who are unruly, meaning idle (3:6-15). Paul ends with personal greetings and a benediction (3:16-18).

The main themes in the book of 2 Thessalonians include: Persecution, Christ's Return, Great Rebellion, and Persistence.

Persecution (1:4-12; 3:1-5). Knowing that believers were being persecuted for their faith, Paul encouraged the church to persevere despite their troubles and trials. He affirmed that God would bring victory to his faithful followers and judge those who persecute them.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Christians are still being persecuted because of their strong faith in Christ. Some of the persecutions are overt and obvious. But many are subtle and secretive. In both cases, believers need to focus on God and his goodness, love, and call to faithfulness. God has promised to reward faith by giving believers his power and helping them bear persecution. Suffering for the faith will strengthen us to serve Christ. We must be faithful to him.

Christ's Return (1:5-7; 2:1-12). Because Paul had written that Christ could return at any moment, some of the Thessalonian believers had stopped working in order to wait for him. Certainly believers should be prepared for the Second Coming. But this preparation includes faithfully fulfilling the work to which God has called them, living upright and moral lives, and using their gifts and talents for God's glory.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Christ will return and bring total victory to all who trust in him. This truth should give believers hope regardless of their circumstances. It also should motivate believers to make the most of the time they have left on earth, to use their gifts, and to spread the Good News. If we are ready, we need not be concerned about when he will return. We should stand firm, keep working, and wait for Christ.

Great Rebellion (2:3-12). Before Christ's return, a great rebellion against God will be led by the man of lawlessness (the Antichrist). God will remove all the restraints on evil before he brings judgment on the rebels. The Antichrist will attempt to deceive many.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. We should not be afraid when we see evil increase. God is in control, no matter how evil the world becomes. God guards us during Satan's attacks. We can have victory over evil by remaining faithful to God.

Persistence (1:4, 11-12; 2:13-17; 3:1-15). Members of the Thessalonian church had quit working and had become disorderly and disobedient. Paul chastised them for their idleness. He called them to show courage and true Christian conduct. He also challenged them to pray for courage and for each other and to stand firm in their faith.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Believers must never get so tired of doing right that they stop doing it. Instead, we should stand strong in our faith and continue to live the way God wants us to live. We can be persistent by making the most of our time and talent. Our endurance will be rewarded. When do you feel like giving up or giving in? What can you do to ensure your faithfulness to the Lord?

OUTLINE OF 2 THESSALONIANS

I. The Bright Hope of Christ's Return (1:1–:17)

II. Living in the Light of Christ's Return (3:1-18)

After Paul visited Thessalonica on his second missionary journey, he went on to Berea, Athens, and Corinth (Acts 17–18). From Corinth, Paul wrote his two letters to the Thessalonian church.

2 THESSALONIANS 1

GREETINGS FROM PAUL / 1:1-2

Paul wrote this letter from Corinth less than a year after he wrote 1 Thessalonians. He and his companions, Timothy and Silas, had visited Thessalonica on Paul's second missionary journey (Acts 17:1-10). They established the church there, but Paul had to leave suddenly because of persecution. This prompted him to write his first letter (1 Thessalonians), which contains words of comfort and encouragement. Paul then heard how the Thessalonians had responded to this letter. The good news was that they were continuing to grow in their faith. But the bad news was that false teachings about Christ's return were spreading, leading many to quit their jobs and wait for the end of the world. So Paul wrote to the Thessalonians again. While the purpose of Paul's first letter was to comfort the Thessalonians with the assurance of Christ's second coming, the purpose of this second letter was to correct false teaching about the Second Coming.

1:1 This second letter to the church in Thessalonica begins just like 1 Thessalonians. Paul was the head of the missionary team that had brought the gospel to that city. Silas is called a prophet (Acts 15:32) and was highly regarded in the Jerusalem church. Paul had chosen Silas to accompany him on his second missionary journey (Acts 15:40). Silas is mentioned in the salutation of both letters to the Thessalonians, and he worked with Timothy in Corinth (2 Corinthians 1:19). At this point, all three of these men were in Corinth (Acts 18:5).

Thessalonica was the capital and largest city of the Roman province of Macedonia. The most important Roman highway—extending from Rome to the Orient—went through Thessalonica. This highway, along with the city's busy seaport, made Thessalonica one of the wealthiest and most flourishing trade centers in the Roman Empire. Thessalonica was a free city, meaning it was allowed self-rule and was exempted from most of the restrictions placed by Rome on other cities.

Paul had planted the church when he and his companions had visited Thessalonica on the second missionary journey (Acts 17:1-10). The Thessalonian believers had strong faith, for despite persecution, they had endured (see 1 Thessalonians 1:7-10).

1:2 Paul often would begin his letters with a greeting of grace and peace.

“Grace” is God’s unmerited favor bestowed upon sinful people; “peace” refers to the peace that Christ made between believers and God through his death on the cross. By calling God our Father, Paul presented God as the Father of all believers, shown by God’s sovereign authority and his loving care for his children. Paul calls Jesus Lord, meaning master, one who deserves obedience. The young Thessalonian church experienced God’s grace and peace during a time of trial. This strengthened their faith, and made them an example to the rest of the believers in other cities across the empire.

ENCOURAGEMENT DURING PERSECUTION / 1:3-12

A few months earlier, Timothy had returned to check on the Thessalonian believers and had returned to Paul with the good news of their faith (1 Thessalonians 3:5-6). Paul had written 1 Thessalonians to express his great joy as well as to answer some questions. But some time had passed, and Paul had heard about some other problems in Thessalonica—the church was still facing persecution. False teachers were giving wrong information about the Second Coming, and some of the believers had stopped working in order to wait for Christ’s return.

1:3 Paul had prayed that the Thessalonians’ faith would deepen and that their love would grow and overflow (1 Thessalonians 3:10, 12; 4:10). In the months since he had last written them, Paul could see that their faith was flourishing and they were all growing in love for each other. That was quite a testament to the faith of these believers—especially considering the persecution they continued to endure (1:4; 1 Thessalonians 1:6). No wonder Paul always thanked God in his prayers for these believers, knowing that such thanksgiving was right. Paul was not flattering them; the praise he gave them, both in the last letter (1 Thessalonians 1:4-10) and here, was sincere. God had truly been working in these believers’ lives.

1:4 Apparently, it was not Paul’s pattern to proudly tell God’s other churches about one group of believers in order to boast about certain characteristics. In the case of the Thessalonians, however, Paul sang their praises, just as others had already been doing (1 Thessalonians 1:7-10).

The word hupomone, translated endurance, is the same word used in 1 Thessalonians 1:3. It pictures not passive acceptance in the face of difficulty, but active strength against it, exhibited by faithfulness. The Thessalonian believers remained faithful to God even in all the persecutions and hardships they were suffering. Paul had been persecuted during his first visit to Thessalonica (Acts 17:5-9). No doubt those who had responded to his message and had become Christians were continuing to face persecution.

1:5-6 Persecution and suffering are unavoidable for those who want to follow the Lord (see John 15:20-21). Therefore, the fact that the Thessalonians were being allowed to suffer for their faith, and the fact that in doing so their faith, love, and hope were increasing and strengthening (1:3-4) was evidence that God was using this persecution to show his justice. Through suffering, God's people are strengthened. In suffering, they can remember that they would be made worthy of his Kingdom. Suffering is not a prerequisite to salvation, but suffering and subsequent faithfulness through suffering shows God's work in believers' lives and thus their worthiness for his Kingdom.

Sufferings also set up the perpetrators for punishment. In his justice, God will punish those who were persecuting them. God will act with complete justice when he punishes sinners. God will see to it that those who inflicted persecution and suffering will themselves receive much worse.

1:7-8 Not only will God punish the evildoers, but he will also provide rest for those who were being persecuted. Paul placed himself and his companions along with the Thessalonian believers as people who needed "rest" from God. There are two dimensions of this "rest." Believers can be relieved in knowing that their sufferings are strengthening them, making them ready for Christ's Kingdom (1:5). They can also be relieved to know that all wrongs will be righted when God's final judgment is executed.

So when will this happen? While those enduring suffering would wish for a quick judgment, it may be that the payback does not occur in this life. But this will happen for sure when the Lord Jesus appears from heaven. The flaming fire is a picture of God's holy presence (Exodus 13:21; Deuteronomy 4:12, 24; Isaiah 66:15; Revelation 1:13-14), and the mighty angels are also described in Matthew 25:31; 1 Thessalonians 3:13; Revelation 5:11; 12:7.

When the Lord Jesus returns, he will bring judgment on those who don't know God and on those who refuse to obey the Good News. The act of punishment belongs to God alone; he will deliver the vengeance that sinners deserve.

1:9-10 Paul has explained when and who will be punished; this passage explains what that judgment will be. They will be punished with everlasting destruction, forever separated from the Lord. The word "punished" pictures what God will do to those who have been rebellious. At Christ's return, there will only be two groups of people. Those who belong to him and those who do not. Jesus told a parable about this; it is recorded in Matthew 25:31-46. There are no gray areas in God's judgment. Those who have not identified with Christ and confessed him as Lord will have no hope, no second chance, no other appeal (see 1 Thessalonians 5:3). The place of eternal destruction means eternal separation from God—being “separated” from his presence. The unbelievers will be banned or excluded from the presence of God, who is the Source of life. It is banishment from God—just what rebels deserve. The believers, persecuted and weak as they may be, however, have the Lord and his glorious power on their side. The power of the oppressors is meaningless when compared to the mighty power of God.

When Christ returns, he will receive glory and praise from his holy people. The day of grief for the rebellious will be a day of celebration for believers. The Thessalonian believers would be among those praising him on that day—as will everyone across the ages who has believed the message of salvation in Jesus Christ.

1:11-12 Paul and his coworkers kept on praying for the Thessalonian believers, just as Paul prayed for all the churches. Although the promise of future glory is sure, believers still have a battle here on earth and the need for constant prayer from fellow believers. What were Paul and his coworkers praying for? First, that God would make them worthy of the life to which he called them. To be made “worthy” has the same meaning here as it did in 1:5. Salvation is sure, but the prospect of the glorious future should be an incentive to holy living—and believers will need one another's support and prayers as they seek to live out their faith. The “calling” from God is that his people become like Christ (Romans 8:29). This calling is a gradual, lifelong process that will be completed when we see Christ face to face (1 John 3:2). To be worthy of this calling means to want to do what is right and good.

Second, they were praying that God would fulfill all their good intentions and faithful deeds so that everyone will give honor to Jesus Christ. The ultimate goal of all believers ought to be to glorify Christ through their actions, words, thoughts, and motives. When believers live to honor Christ, Christ is honored in them.

This can happen because of the undeserved favor of our God and Lord, Jesus Christ. Believers cannot show Christ's glory or be glorified in him because of anything they can do—it is only because of God's grace. Only by God's grace did Jesus come to die for sinners; only by God's grace can people receive his sacrifice and be saved from their sins.

2 THESSALONIANS 2

EVENTS PRIOR TO THE LORD'S SECOND COMING / 2:1-12

Some of the Thessalonian believers seemed to have accepted some wrong teaching regarding Christ's Second Coming (2:2-3) and what would happen in the world before he returned. Paul had already taught them much when he was with them and had explained more in his first letter (1 Thessalonians 4-5). This letter tells of a time of great rebellion against God led by a man of lawlessness (the Antichrist). During this time God will remove all restraints on evil, and then he will execute his final judgment.

2:1-2 This introduces the main topic of this letter. He had already taught them about the coming again of the Lord and how all believers will be gathered together to meet him. Apparently, Paul had heard further questions from these believers, so he added more details about what would happen at Christ's Second Coming. Also, he knew that persecution was taking its toll on the believers (1 Thessalonians 1:6; 2 Thessalonians 1:4-7). So he wanted to teach them and encourage them.

Verse 2 describes one of the false teachings about Christ's Second Coming. Some were saying that the day of the Lord has already begun. This final event of history has two aspects to it: (1) the last judgment on all evil and sin; (2) the final reward for faithful believers. At that time, God will intervene directly and dramatically in world affairs. Righteousness and truth will prevail, and Christ will judge sin and set up his eternal Kingdom. First, there will be much suffering, for evil will climax as the end draws near.

False teachers were saying that the judgment day had already begun. This caused many believers to wait expectantly for vindication and relief from suffering. These false teachers had claimed to have had a vision, a revelation, or a letter supposedly from Paul and his companions apparently stating what the false teachers were teaching. Paul does not identify the source of this false teaching any further, so we do not know.

When Christ didn't come and when suffering continued, the believers were becoming shaken and troubled. These words picture unsettled minds and a continuing state of anxiety. They certainly wondered if they had somehow missed out or if they were not going to be saved. Paul assured them that they should not be worried by these false teachers and should listen to him, instead. Paul's authority as an apostle and their relationship of trust with him should affirm that any teaching that contradicted what he had given them needed to be questioned. Paul had shown that he would answer the Thessalonians' questions directly himself or send one of his coworkers. At the end of this letter, Paul would sign with his own hand to authenticate this document.

Paul told them plainly that the day of the Lord had not yet come; three other events would have to happen first. (1) The rebellion must occur (2:3); (2) the man of lawlessness must be revealed (2:3); (3) the restraint of lawlessness must be removed (2:7).

2:3 The coming of the day of the Lord will be "like a thief in the night" (1 Thessalonians 5:2); even so, certain events will precede it. The final day of the Lord will not come until there is a great rebellion against God and the man of lawlessness is revealed. This "rebellion" will be a massive revolt against God. It may begin among those who believe in God and spread to all people who refuse to accept Christ. Thus, it will include Jews who abandon God and some members of the church whose faith is nominal. While rebellion against God seems widespread even today, as the coming of Christ nears, this apostasy and active opposition against God will intensify.

During the rebellion, a remarkable man will come into public view. He will have considerable power from Satan and will personify evil. Throughout history, certain individuals have epitomized evil and have been hostile to everything Christ stands for (see 1 John 2:18; 4:3; 2 John 7). These "antichrists" have lived in every generation, and others like them will continue to work their evil. Then, just before Christ's Second Coming, "the man of lawlessness," a completely evil man, will arise. He will be Satan's tool, equipped with Satan's power (2:9). This man will oppose all law, both God's moral laws, as well as civil laws. He will promote immorality and anarchy. This "lawless" man will be the Antichrist. He will have been in the world, but then he will rise to power and notoriety, shown by the word "revealed." The book of Revelation speaks of a "beast" that symbolizes the Antichrist (Revelation 13:5-8). The beast symbolizes the Antichrist—not Satan, but someone under Satan's power and control (see also Revelation 16:13 and 19:20 where he is the second member of the false trinity). Satan's evil will culminate in a final Antichrist, a man who will focus all the powers of evil against Jesus Christ and his followers, bringing destruction. Yet even this man, for all the power that he will attain, is ultimately doomed to destruction (see Revelation 20:10).

God still reigns and his victory is certain. The evil man will be destroyed, but not before God uses him. During this time of great rebellion, the full extent of wickedness will be demonstrated and rebellion against God will be shown in all its horror and ugliness. Always, through all suffering throughout the ages, God is drawing people to himself, calling them to repent. This will continue during those last days.

2:4-5 This man of lawlessness will attempt, and even will seem to be able to, dethrone God and anything else that is worshiped (idols, nature, self), and then will demand worship and obedience to himself alone. The phrase, position himself in the temple of God pictures one who proclaims that he himself is God. Many have claimed such allegiance throughout history (Roman rulers, various political leaders) and many have been pointed out by others as being the Antichrist, but this one human, yet to come, will be the final, decisive personification of lawlessness, evil, and rebellion against God.

This description of the man of lawlessness is similar to the description of Antiochus Epiphanes, who was predicted in Daniel 11:36-37. It also refers to the “sacrilegious object” noted in Mark 13:14-19. This refers to the desecration of the Temple by God’s enemies through pagan idolatry and sacrifice (see Deuteronomy 29:16-18; 2 Kings 16:3-4; 23:12-14). The first fulfillment of such an abomination occurred in 168 B.C. by Antiochus Epiphanes. He sacrificed a pig to Zeus on the sacred Temple altar. This act incited the Maccabean wars. The second fulfillment occurred when Jesus’ prediction of the destruction of the Temple (Mark 13:2) came true. In A.D. 70, the Roman army would destroy Jerusalem and desecrate the Temple. Some scholars say that a third fulfillment is yet to come. This may look far forward to the end times and to the Antichrist. In the end times, the Antichrist will commit the ultimate sacrilege by setting himself up (perhaps having a statue erected) and ordering everyone to worship him. (See also Revelation 13:14-15.)

Apparently, Paul had taught the Thessalonians about the Second Coming of Christ and the end times. Either they had forgotten his teaching, or the false teachers had been confusing them.

2:6-7 In the present world—the world of the Thessalonians and the world today—two simultaneous events are happening. First, this lawlessness is already at work secretly, although it may not be clearly seen for what it is. The work that the Antichrist, the man of lawlessness, will do is already going on. “Secret” means something hidden, behind the scenes, but something God will reveal. “Lawlessness” is the hidden, subtle, underlying force from which all sin springs. Second, even though this power is working, so is the one who is holding him back. Civilization still has a modicum of decency through law enforcement, education, science, and reason. Although we are horrified by criminal acts, the world has yet to see the real horror of complete lawlessness. This will happen when the one who is holding it back steps out of the way.

Who (or what) “holds back” the man of lawlessness? It seems that the Thessalonians knew that answer (you know) from Paul’s previous teaching. So Paul referred to it here, but did not repeat it. Commentators have considered three possibilities for the identity of this “restrainer”: (1) government and law, which help to curb evil; (2) the ministry and activity of the church and the effects of the Good News; (3) the Holy Spirit. The Bible is not clear on the identity of this restrainer, only that he will not restrain forever. Then the man of lawlessness will be revealed and will do his evil work (as described in 2:3-4). Why will God allow this evil man to act with unrestrained wickedness? To show people and nations their own sinfulness and to show them by bitter experience the true alternative to the lordship of Christ. People totally without God can act no better than vicious animals.

2:8 After the one who restrains rampant evil is removed, then the man of lawlessness will be revealed. For a period of time, he will have great power and act with notorious evil (as noted in 2:2-4). Just as this man of lawlessness will be revealed in God’s timing, however, so he will also be destroyed. There will be an end to this man’s evil. Indeed, when the Lord Jesus returns, he will consume the Antichrist with the breath of his mouth. This picture comes from Isaiah 11:4, “He will rule against the wicked and destroy them with the breath of his mouth.” No matter how powerful this evil man may become, he is no more than a flame to be blown out by the breath of the Lord.

A further picture is seen in the description that the man of lawlessness will be destroyed by the splendor of Christ’s coming. As a mere breath renders the Antichrist powerless, so the very appearance of Christ on the scene will ruin him.

2:9-10 This verse answers the question that might have been plaguing the Thessalonians, and even modern readers. How will this one man become so powerful? How will he attain such notoriety and loyalty from the masses? The answer is that this man will be Satan’s tool. He will come to do the work of Satan with counterfeit power and signs and miracles. Jesus had warned that “false messiahs and false prophets will rise up and perform great miraculous signs and wonders so as to deceive, if possible, even God’s chosen ones” (Matthew 24:24). If even the numerous antichrists will have extraordinary powers (1 John 2:18), this one, who will be filled with Satan’s power, will do signs that are even more extraordinary. But while Jesus and his followers did miracles of compassion for the purpose of bringing glory to God, the Antichrist will do miracles characterized by evil and deceit for the purpose of bringing glory to himself (see Revelation 13:13-14; 16:14; 19:20).

It will be this power that will fool those who are on their way to destruction—those who refused to believe the truth that would save them. But true Christians will stand firm because they understand what is happening and will not be turned away. The statement that they “refused” the truth shows that, at that point in time, God’s offer of salvation will still be available. The evil let loose upon the world will be used by God as a last chance for many. The choice will be crystal clear. Because the Antichrist will have taken over every other religion (2:4), the only two options will be to worship Christ or to worship the Antichrist. The unbelievers in the world will be so enamored of this powerful person that they will choose to follow him—away from God and into eternal death.

2:11-12 Those who make the choice to follow the Antichrist will be confirmed in that choice by God who will send great deception upon them, and they will believe all these lies. They will continue to be deceived further and further—beyond simply believing the delusion—actively forwarding its cause. Again, the choice is made clear: over against “the truth” of the gospel (2:10) is “the lie” of the Antichrist. The truth that God is God versus the lie that the Antichrist is God.

That “God sends” this delusion shows his sovereignty in this entire event. At no point will God be out of control, even as Satan unleashes his power through the Antichrist. God’s sovereignty is displayed in this way in Revelation 17:17, “For God has put a plan into their minds, a plan that will carry out his purposes. They will mutually agree to give their authority to the scarlet beast, and so the words of God will be fulfilled.”

God will use the people’s rebellion as a judgment against them. By their own free will they will choose to rebel. As condemnation on their sin, God will harden their hearts in unbelief. The result of the choice for “believing the lie” is that they will be condemned. The path toward condemnation is downhill and slippery. It begins with fascination with evil and leads to an acceptance of the lie and simultaneous rejection of the truth, powerful delusions that lead one deeper into evil so that it is accepted and even enjoyed. At that point, people’s hearts are hardened against God and his Word, for they do not feel any need for it.

BELIEVERS SHOULD STAND FIRM / 2:13-17

Having just painted the picture of a world taken over by evil, Paul now exhorts the believers to stand firm in their faith. Every passage in the New Testament about the Lord’s return ends with ethical mandates, as found in this section and in chapter 3.

2:13 Once again, Paul and his companions paused to thank God for what he had done and was continuing to do through the Thessalonian believers. In contrast to people who will rebel against God and face eternal destruction, those who believe have a glorious future. God chose the Thessalonian believers to be among the first to experience salvation; they were among the early believers, the first in Thessalonica, and they had been chosen by God for that special privilege. Paul consistently taught that salvation begins and ends with God. The Thessalonian believers had been chosen by God from the beginning. Present and future persecution and suffering should not lead to panic. Instead, believers should stand firm.

2:14 God's "call" came to these Thessalonians through his human emissaries, Paul and his companions. God worked through Paul, Silas, Timothy, and others, who brought the Good News to the Thessalonians so they could share in the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Thessalonians were facing persecution for their faith; Paul had just finished describing a time on earth of even more intense persecution. There was no doubt about the outcome. Those who believe would share in Christ's glory when he comes to restore justice on the earth (see 1:5-10).

2:15 Paul knew that the Thessalonians would face pressure from persecutions, false teachers, worldliness, and apathy. They would be tempted to waver from the truth and even to leave the faith. With all these things in mind, Paul urged them to stand firm and keep a strong grip on everything that Paul and his companions had taught. The Thessalonians had received much teaching in person, and they had Paul's letters. They would need to hold on to the truth they had been taught.

2:16-17 Through his special favor, God and Christ gave the believers everlasting comfort and good hope. Christianity is not a faith of questions and worries—not a faith in which believers must wait until the end to see if they will make it. Instead, believers are given hope and encouragement of the certainty of God's promises. It always helps, however, to pray for believers everywhere—especially those facing persecution for their faith—that God would comfort them and give them strength to continue to do good.

2 THESSALONIANS 3

PAUL'S REQUEST FOR PRAYER / 3:1-5

Paul had been writing about the future, describing the coming of the Antichrist and the future days of rebellion and lawlessness. That man of evil has not yet come because he is being held back. Evil is at work in the world, but it is also being held in check. What does that mean for Christians? How are they to live in this present evil world, as they are preparing for the next?

3:1 Paul prayed regularly for the believers in the various churches, and he did not hesitate to ask for their prayers in return. As he prepared to offer final words of advice, he first asked them to pray for him and his coworkers (the Greek word means “keep on praying”). The focus of Paul’s desire was that the Lord’s message will spread rapidly and be honored wherever it goes. The preaching of the Good News would result in honor being given to the Lord because of the marvelous results in the lives of those who believe. The Thessalonians had been an exemplary congregation (1 Thessalonians 1:6-10). Paul wanted them to pray for God’s power to intervene in other places so that many would be saved and God would be glorified through it.

3:2 In addition to praying for more converts, Paul asked the believers to also pray that they would be saved from wicked and evil people. As the gospel message advances, it always faces severe opposition. The spiritual battle rages intensely for people’s souls, and Satan does not easily let go of his own. Thus, the apostles needed prayer. If Paul asked for it, how much more should believers today pray for one another as they seek to share the gospel message—whether across the street or across the world. Paul’s enemies were those who did not believe in the gospel message and were actively working against it.

3:3 At the end of his first letter (1 Thessalonians 5:24), Paul reminded the believers of God’s faithfulness—he can be depended upon to keep his promises because he is loyal and he is constant. Because of that faithfulness, God would make them strong and guard them from the evil one. As the spiritual battle intensifies, the true enemy of all believers is really only one person—the “evil one,” Satan himself. Because the Lord is faithful, he will protect his gospel message, and it will continue to spread across the world and achieve results. Because the Lord is faithful, he will strengthen and protect the believers. This does not mean that they will never face difficulties; it just means that God is faithful. The result for all believers will be to spend eternity with God. That promise will never change.

Yet even so, prayer is a vital factor behind all of this activity. As the missionaries spread God's message, they understand that spiritual forces were at work—the faithful Lord with them, the evil one against them. They realized that they were not involved in a merely human endeavor. They were on the Lord's battlefields under his command, with his authority, knowing they would win. Yet they needed his guidance and the constant prayers of believers every step of the way.

3:4 Christ is faithful, but his followers must do their part in being obedient. Paul has confidence that the Thessalonian believers were practicing the things he had commanded them. His confidence rested not in the Thessalonians themselves, but in God who had chosen them. They had more than shown their obedience to the teachings of the apostles, even as they had experienced persecution. Believers at this time did not have the New Testament, so they had to listen carefully to the teachings of the apostles; therefore, Paul spoke of them doing what he and the other apostles “commanded” because their teaching came from God.

3:5 Paul's prayer for these believers was that the Lord would bring them into an ever deeper understanding of the love of God and the endurance that comes from Christ. Wanting the believers to move forward with commitment, Paul asked God to guide the believers as they meditated on God's love for them and on Christ's patient endurance. Such inner determination would enable them to face and overcome their difficulties.

AN EXHORTATION TO PROPER LIVING / 3:6-15

Besides the Second Coming, the topic of laziness among believers takes up the most space in the letter. The fact that Paul had already discussed this in his first letter shows that the problem had not been solved but had continued. This caused Paul great concern, so he gave stern commands.

3:6 Paul had already discussed the issue of idle Christians in the first letter, but apparently the problem had continued (1 Thessalonians 5:14). Perhaps Paul's instruction had not been strong enough, so this passage made it clear that his commands regarding idleness came with the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ. The first letter tells Christians to “warn those who are lazy” (5:14)—that is, the believers were to firmly admonish those who were ataktos, a word used for soldiers who would not stay in the ranks. While everyone else was working and serving, they would not. Some were probably using the excuse of waiting for Christ to return. They may have considered working as too menial or as unspiritual, equivalent to laying up treasures on earth rather than in heaven. They may have been creating a problem by expecting wealthier people in the church to support them. But Paul was firm that these believers were not honoring their faith.

Paul's command goes a step further: no longer are believers told to "warn" these lazy people; they are told to stay away from any Christian who lives in idleness and doesn't follow the tradition of hard work we gave you. This does not refer to excommunication from the church, but to withdrawing intimate fellowship from them. By refusing to associate with these people, the Christians were rebuking them, hoping to get them to change their conduct. Basically, Paul was saying, "Cut off their support!"

3:7-8 Paul's first letter describes how he and his companions had worked during their stay in Thessalonica. They were never lazy and had not taken food without paying for it. They did not want to be a burden to anyone but wanted to pay their own way. Paul and his companions probably enjoyed hospitality at various times during their ministry; Paul's point was that he did not expect hospitality or impose it on anyone. Trained as a tentmaker (Acts 18:3), Paul had worked at this job, and then took time to preach the gospel, teach, and build up a body of believers in this city. Because the people who had brought the gospel to the Thessalonians had worked to not be a burden on anyone, so should the new believers in the city follow that example.

3:9 Paul and the other missionaries had the right to expect lodging and food in exchange for the message they had brought (Luke 10:7; 1 Corinthians 9:7-14). Though most traveling preachers did this, Paul did not want to be a burden on others. He did not want to appear to be preaching in order to be housed and fed. In some places he did accept such gifts, but in Thessalonica he did not. So strong was his passion for spreading the gospel message that he would not allow anything to hinder its progress. If it seemed that to accept food and lodging would hinder his effectiveness as a minister of the gospel, then he would gladly waive his rights and work to pay his way. In this way, the missionaries had made themselves an example to follow. Those who share the gospel message with others must not only speak the message but live it as well; they must be examples worthy of imitation.

3:10 Not only had Paul and Silas been an example of Christian living to the Thessalonians, but they had also explained clearly what was expected. The rule regarding laziness had been given right from the start. They had said at that time: Whoever does not work should not eat. The saying may have been coined anywhere and may have been a common theme among laborers, as they worked together or as they trained apprentices. Paul took and applied it to the Christian life so as to show believers that laziness, in any form, is not acceptable. Because Christians are known for their kindness, some might want to take advantage of them. Paul sternly reprimanded such thinking. Those who refused to work should not be given food. If they can earn money for their food, they should do so without depending on others to care for them.

Be careful not to use this verse on those who are willing but unable to work. It is too easy to glibly dismiss the difficult conditions of those with disabilities, lack of job training, or lack of job availability. Paul's harsh words are for people who are unwilling to work when they have both the ability and the opportunity.

3:11-12 Here is the reason for Paul's hard-hitting words on this topic of laziness. Word had reached Paul in Corinth that some of the believers in Thessalonica were idle, refusing to work and wasting time meddling in other people's business. So Paul was not the only one concerned about this issue; the believers in Thessalonica had felt it so important that they had notified Paul. Perhaps they had taken Paul's advice in the first letter but had seen no results, so they wanted him to deal directly with these people.

It is possible that these idle people were being idle for "spiritual" reasons. Some people in the Thessalonian church may have been saying that people should set aside their responsibilities, quit work, do no future planning, and just wait for the Lord's return. Or they may have thought that labor was beneath them and wanted to spend their time being spiritual. But not being busy only made them busybodies. Their lack of activity was leading them into sin. They had become a burden to the church, which was supporting them; they were wasting time that could have been used for helping others.

These church members may have thought that they were being more spiritual by not working, but Paul sternly commanded them to settle down and get to work earning their own living. Paul did not mince words with these people. That Paul made these commands in the name of the Lord Jesus reveals his understanding of his authority as an apostle—even as a personal representative of the Lord himself.

3:13 To those hard-working believers, those who were not lazy, Paul told them to never get tired of doing good. In contrast to the idlers who had persisted in their idleness even since Paul's last letter, these hard-working believers should not let the idlers cause them to become dispirited in their work. Paul knew that the believers could become discouraged when they tried to do right and received no word of thanks or saw no tangible results. But Paul challenged all the believers to keep on doing good and to trust God for the results.

3:14-15 Paul repeated his direction regarding this issue: Take note of those who refuse to obey and stay away from them (see 3:6). The hope was that the idle people would become ashamed of their actions and finally become so hungry (when no one would support and feed them) that they would be forced back to work. Paul was not advising coldness or cruelty, for these people were not enemies. They were misguided and mistaken, but they were not to be thrown out of the church. They needed a good dose of tough love—the kind of love that should be shown to a Christian who needs to be warned.

PAUL'S FINAL GREETINGS / 3:16-18

Paul knew that the church would need to deal with false teaching regarding the Second Coming (as discussed in chapter 2) and with those members who were not living as they should (as discussed in chapter 3). Paul had issued teachings and commands, but the believers would have to carry them out. In his closing words, Paul prayed for peace for the church so that they could handle these issues and then continue strong in the work of the Kingdom.

3:16 Just as Paul began his letter with “grace and peace” (1:2), so he ended it. Paul referred to the Lord of peace often at the end of his letters (see Romans 15:33; 16:20; 2 Corinthians 13:11; Philippians 4:9). The peace God gives does not mean absence of conflict (John 14:27; 16:33). The peace God gives is confident assurance in any circumstance. Not only did the believers have peace, but they also had the Lord himself, for he would give them his peace no matter what happened.

3:17 Usually Paul would dictate his letters to a scribe, but often he would end the letter with a note in his own handwriting (see also 1 Corinthians 16:21; Galatians 6:11; Colossians 4:18; Philemon 19). This assured the recipients that false teachers were not writing letters in Paul's name—as was a concern in Thessalonica (see 2:2). It also gave the letters a personal touch.

3:18 Paul often closed his letters with a prayer of grace for the believers. This closing is identical with his first letter (1 Thessalonians 5:28). Paul wanted his readers to continue to experience the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. “Grace” is undeserved favor from God to his people. This grace from God would help believers in their daily walk with him.

1 TIMOTHY

INTRODUCTION

The wise coach gives his junior quarterback valuable game time—the experience will prepare the young athlete for the starting role next fall . . . or sooner. The wise employer watches for promising young employees, then helps them learn new skills and assume greater responsibilities. Wise parents nurture and teach their children, helping them mature and grow into responsible adults. Wise leaders serve as mentors to emerging, potential leaders.

The next generation holds a vital position in every family, institution, movement, or church—for leadership, vision, life . . . for its future. The apostle Paul knew this truth.

Paul began to follow Christ as an adult. Through a dramatic confrontation on the way to capture and imprison the hated believers in Jesus, Paul's life changed dramatically (Acts 9:1-19). Soon he became known as a fearless champion of the Christian cause, a peerless evangelist, and a pioneering missionary. With strong commitment, deep courage, and boundless energy, Paul went to the ends of his world, preaching and teaching the Good News of Christ to all who would listen. Although thousands had responded to the gospel message and churches had been planted and were growing, Paul knew that the future of the Christian movement would depend on new leadership. Given the hostile environment of the Roman world and the advancing age of the apostles, in a short time the first generation of Christian leaders would be gone. Then who would direct, guide, evangelize, and spread the Word? So Paul encouraged younger coworkers like Timothy and Titus to “teach these great truths to trustworthy people who are able to pass them on to others” (2 Timothy 2:2).

AUTHOR

Paul: the great apostle and missionary of the church.

The first line of this letter to Timothy names Paul as the author (1:1). Paul and Timothy probably met on Paul's first missionary journey (Timothy accompanied Paul on his second journey) when Paul preached at Lystra (Acts 14:6-7). Timothy's grandmother and mother had come to faith first and had been a great influence on him (2 Timothy 1:5; 3:14-15). Their faithful witness and instruction in the Scriptures prepared Timothy also to follow Christ. In addition, Timothy must have seen Paul stoned at Lystra for his faith, dragged out of the city and left for dead, and then return to life after the prayers of the believers. All of these factors must have had a profound effect on Timothy, convincing him that Jesus was, in fact, the promised Messiah. Paul calls Timothy his “child” or “son” (1 Corinthians 4:17; 2 Timothy 2:1), implying a relationship as Timothy’s spiritual father.

Beyond leading young Timothy to Christ, Paul became Timothy’s mentor, bringing him along as a fellow missionary and appointing him to a leadership position in the church. Ever since meeting in Lystra, Paul and Timothy were close, as friends, brothers in Christ, and partners in the ministry. In fact, Paul’s last known message is his second letter to Timothy, in which he asks Timothy to visit him in prison as soon as possible (2 Timothy 4:9). Paul’s letters to Timothy stand as a powerful witness to the close relationship these men enjoyed as Paul gave Timothy encouragement, guidance, and strong instruction.

For more about Paul, see the Author section in the Introduction to the book of Romans.

DATE AND SETTING

Written to the churches in Ephesus and the surrounding area approximately ^{A.D.} 64 from Rome or Macedonia (possibly Philippi) just prior to Paul’s final imprisonment.

The gospel had come to Ephesus through Apollos, an outstanding orator and young believer (Acts 18:24). But when Paul visited the city for the first time (on his third missionary journey), he found many who had an incomplete faith (Acts 19:4). So Paul told the Ephesians about Jesus (Acts 19:5). They responded to his teaching and received the Holy Spirit (Acts 19:6). Paul stayed and ministered in Ephesus for more than two years, first in the synagogue, and then in the lecture hall of Tyrannus (Acts 19:8-10). After a riot ensued, instigated by Demetrius the silversmith, Paul gave final words of encouragement to the believers and left for Macedonia (Acts 19:23–20:1). A few months later, before leaving the area, Paul met with the Ephesian elders at Miletus. During this meeting, Paul warned the Ephesian elders about false teachers who would try to draw believers away from the truth (Acts 20:28-31). After a time of challenge and prayer and an emotional farewell, Paul sailed to Jerusalem (Acts 20:13–21:1). Paul had a very warm and close relationship with the church at Ephesus, and he was concerned for their spiritual well-being.

Although nothing more is said about Ephesus in the book of Acts, Paul probably visited the city after his release from his first Roman imprisonment (see his possible itinerary below). During this visit (with Timothy), he discovered that a number of spiritual problems had arisen during his absence. Paul and Timothy stayed in Ephesus for a while to teach and to straighten things out.

When Paul had to leave for Macedonia, he left Timothy there as his representative to lead the church (1:3).

The area surrounding Ephesus probably had a number of young churches, not just one, with each church led by an elder. Thus, Paul did not appoint Timothy as the “elder” of the churches, but rather as his representative, carrying his apostolic authority to instruct the church (2:1-15) and to appoint elders and deacons (3:1-13).

AUDIENCE

Timothy and the church at large.

Timothy was born and reared in Lystra in Lycaonia. Timothy’s mother, Eunice, and grandmother Lois were devout Jews who had come to faith in Christ (Acts 16:1; 2 Timothy 1:5), but his father was a Greek. Evidently the father was not a Jewish proselyte or a convert to Christianity, since Timothy had not been circumcised (Acts 16:3). Timothy’s mother and grandmother had carefully taught him the Old Testament Scriptures (2 Timothy 3:15), so he was open to the gospel when he heard Paul preach on his first visit to Lystra (Acts 14:6-7).

Because of Timothy’s growth in the faith and his spiritual gifts, Paul chose him to become a partner in spreading the gospel on the second missionary journey (Acts 16:1-3). Paul also may have seen Timothy as one who was free from the prejudices of many Jews—Timothy had a mixed family (a Jewish mother and a Greek father). To avoid a problem with the Jews in the area, Paul circumcised Timothy before they left (Acts 16:3). Paul also ordained Timothy at this time (4:14).

Although Paul trusted Timothy completely and expected him to be a strong leader in the church, Paul also was very aware of Timothy’s weaknesses. Timothy was very young and, evidently, was shy and hesitant. So Paul warned him against being intimidated by his opponents and their teachings (4:12; 2 Timothy 1:5, 7; 3:10; see also 1 Corinthians 16:10-11). In addition, Timothy may have had stomach problems (5:23).

As requested, Timothy left his family in Lystra to travel with Paul. On that journey Timothy helped establish the churches at Philippi, Thessalonica, and Berea (Acts 16:1–17:14). When Paul left Berea early to go to Athens, he left Timothy and Silas behind. But Paul sent word for them to join him as soon as possible (Acts 17:13-15).

Soon after Timothy arrived at Athens, Paul sent him to Thessalonica to strengthen the faith of the believers there (1 Thessalonians 3:1-2). Later, Timothy rejoined Paul at Corinth and helped establish that church (Acts 18:5). The Bible doesn’t say whether Timothy traveled with Paul from Corinth to Ephesus and then to Caesarea, Jerusalem, Antioch, and back to Ephesus (Acts 18:18–19:1). We do read, however, that Timothy worked with Paul at Ephesus (Acts 19:22). Then Paul sent him (and Erastus) to Greece to minister to churches there and to prepare the way for a possible visit by Paul, while Paul stayed at Ephesus (Acts 19:22; 1 Corinthians 4:17; 16:10). Before Paul left Ephesus, however, Timothy rejoined him (Romans 16:21; 2 Corinthians 1:1). Then they traveled together to Macedonia, to Achaia, back to Macedonia, and on to Asia (Acts 20:1-5).

The book of Acts makes no mention of Timothy during the record of Paul's trip to Jerusalem, arrest, two-year imprisonment at Caesarea, and voyage to Rome (Acts 21:1–28:16). We know that either Timothy was with Paul during those years or he rejoined Paul at Rome during the early months of imprisonment, because we read that he was with Paul in Rome (Philippians 1:1; 2:19; Colossians 1:1; Philemon 1).

During Paul's first imprisonment, he planned to send Timothy to Philippi (Philippians 2:19-23). Paul may not have done this, however, because of his early release. After Paul's release from prison, Timothy traveled with Paul to Ephesus, where he was left to care for the church (1:3—see the possible itinerary above). Although Paul asked Timothy to visit him in prison during the second imprisonment, there is no evidence that Timothy made it there before Paul was executed.

Because of the reference in Hebrews to Timothy being out of prison (Hebrews 13:23-24), there is speculation that Timothy had been imprisoned in Rome and then later released. According to tradition, Timothy was martyred during the reign of either Domitian or Nerva.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

False teachers and potential divisions at Ephesus and a possible delay in Paul's arrival to the area. Paul wanted to encourage and instruct Timothy about the organization of a local church and to help him deal with false doctrines.

Having been released from his first Roman imprisonment and apparently on his way to Asia Minor, Paul traveled to the island of Crete and left Titus there to finish organizing the churches (Titus 1:5). Then Paul went to Ephesus, where he was joined by Timothy, who evidently had returned from Philippi (Philippians 2:19-23). Paul and Timothy discovered that heretical teachers were spreading false teachings, just as Paul had predicted would happen (Acts 20:29-30). These false teachers were preying especially on women, new believers who were enjoying unprecedented freedom in Christ to study the Bible and be involved in worship.

As he left Ephesus, Paul left Timothy behind as his representative to reorganize the church there (1:3). Evidently Paul had planned to see Timothy again, where he could have instructed him in person. But Paul was delayed, so he wrote his instructions in the epistle we know as 1 Timothy (3:14-15).

Although 1 Timothy is addressed to one individual, undoubtedly the contents of the letter were meant for the church at large. The epistle is filled with exhortations for the whole church, not just personal matters. Paul warned about false teachers (1:3-7; 6:3-10), gave instructions for worship (2:1-15) and how to deal with various groups in the church (5:1-21), and explained how to choose elders and deacons (3:1-13). Paul gave special instructions about how women should behave in the church because they were susceptible to the false teachings and because many were flaunting their new Christian freedom (2:9-15).

First Timothy is also a letter of encouragement for a young pastor who must have been intimidated by older and more mature members. Paul told Timothy not to let his age limit his ministry (4:12) and to boldly exercise his gifts (4:14-16).

MESSAGE

Paul's first letter to Timothy affirms their relationship (1:2). Paul begins his fatherly advice, warning Timothy about false teachers (1:3-11) and urging him to hold on to his faith in Christ (1:12-20). Next, Paul considers public worship, emphasizing the importance of prayer (2:1-7) and order in church meetings (2:8-15). This leads to a discussion of the qualifications of church leaders—elders and deacons. Here Paul lists specific criteria for each office (3:1-16).

Paul speaks again about false teachers, telling Timothy how to recognize them and respond to them (4:1-16). Next, he gives practical advice on pastoral care to the young and old (5:1, 2), widows (5:3-16), elders (5:17-25), and slaves (6:1, 2). Paul concludes by exhorting Timothy to guard his motives (6:3-10), to stand firm in his faith (6:11, 12), to live above reproach (6:13-16), and to minister faithfully (6:17-21).

The main themes in the book of 1 Timothy include: Sound Doctrine, Public Worship, Church Leadership, Caring Church, and Personal Discipline.

Sound Doctrine (1:3-11; 4:1-10; 6:3-5). Paul's first challenge to Timothy and the Ephesian believers was to combat the false teachers who had infiltrated the church. Paul warned Timothy about these heretics three times in this letter. After each warning, Paul exhorted Timothy to cling tightly to the faith, to be strong, and to live rightly (1:18-19; 4:9-16; 6:11-21). The exact nature of the heresy is unclear from the text, but Paul referred to myths and spiritual pedigrees (1:4), a strain of legalism (4:3), unhealthy desire to quibble (6:4), and teaching for personal, financial gain (6:5). Paul urged Timothy to combat the false teachings by confronting the false teachers (4:6; 6:12) and by having nothing to do with them or their ideas (4:7). Paul also urged Timothy to have love (1:5; 6:11), a sincere and strong faith (1:5, 19; 6:12), a clear conscience (1:5, 19), and a godly life (4:7; 6:11). The greatest weapon against heresy is sound doctrine (1:10; 4:16; 6:3)—holding to the truth and living it. Sound doctrine is also high on the list of qualities needed in elders and deacons (3:9).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY.

The only way to identify what is false is to know the truth. God's truth is contained in his word, the Bible. Thus our theology (that is, our doctrine, what we believe) should be consistent with what the Bible says. Unless we are grounded in the Word, we will be susceptible to any number of false teachings. In addition to being well grounded, we also should avoid anyone who twists the words of the Bible for his or her own purpose. And we should confront and expose false teaching and teachers whenever we find them. How well do you know God's word? Be a student of the Bible, reading, studying, and applying it. And pay careful attention to "sound doctrine" so that you will be able to identify false teaching and stand against it.

Public Worship (2:1-15). Beyond the issue of false teachers, Paul's next area of concern for church life was worship. Paul began by emphasizing the necessity and centrality of prayer. Next, Paul discussed the conduct of women in worship. Evidently the actions of some women had been disruptive. Paul explained that although they were enjoying new freedom in Christ to study the Bible and to worship with men, women should not rush into leadership or flaunt their freedom (2:9-15). In both issues, Paul's focus was unity. The implication is that there were potential or real divisions in the Ephesian church that threatened to disrupt worship.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY.

People attend worship services for many reasons: some come out of habit; others make it a social occasion; some simply want to be seen; a few are so eager to teach and lead that they eagerly follow false teachers with hollow promises. But any motive that does not flow from sincere devotion to Christ holds potential for trouble in the church. Women and men should worship with humility and submission, praying together for God's direction and for the needs of others. What draws you to worship? How often do you pray with your brothers and sisters in the faith?

Church Leadership (3:1-16). Paul gave specific instructions concerning the qualifications for church leaders so that the church might honor God and operate smoothly. Again, the fact that this section has such prominence in the letter seems to imply that less than qualified men were leading the various congregations (or were aspiring to be leaders). In fact, it is likely that the false teachers were former and current leaders in the church. As Paul's representative and with apostolic authority, Timothy was to make sure that church leaders had spiritual maturity, specific spiritual gifts, sound theology, a solid family life, and a good reputation.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. There is no more important role than church leadership; therefore, those selected to fill leadership positions in local churches must be of the highest caliber, wholly committed to Christ and strong in their faith. If you are a new or young Christian, your first priority should be to develop your Christian character. Don't be anxious to hold a church leadership position. May your motive be to seek God, not to fulfill your own ambition.

Caring Church (5:1-20; 6:1-2, 17-19). Jesus told his disciples that the world would know that they were his followers by their love for each other (John 13:35). The greatest witness the Ephesian believers could make for Christ in their world would be as a caring church. But the command to love must result in specific actions. So Paul outlined for Timothy the way the church should treat older men (5:1), younger men (5:1), older women (5:2), younger women (5:2), widows (5:3-6, 9-16), and church elders (5:17-20), and how slaves should respond to their masters (6:1-2). In addition, Paul encouraged Timothy to challenge rich members to invest their wealth in helping others (6:17-19).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The church has a responsibility to care for the needs of all its members, especially the sick, the poor, and the widowed. Caring must go beyond good intentions. Caring for the family of believers demonstrates our Christlike attitude and exhibits genuine love to nonbelievers. What plan does your church have to care for members in need? What can you do to help those who are suffering and struggling? Look for ways to put Christ's love into action in your church and community.

Personal Discipline (4:11-16; 5:21-25; 6:6-16, 20-21). Paul knew that it took discipline to be an effective church leader. Timothy, like the elders, had to guard his motives, minister faithfully, and live righteously. Paul told Timothy to do what God has called him to do despite his young age. In fact, Timothy should set an example of spirituality and right living (4:11-12). Paul also told Timothy to diligently exercise his spiritual gifts, preaching, teaching, and leading (4:13-16). As God's man and Paul's representative, Timothy must keep himself pure, avoiding worldly temptations, especially the love of money (5:21-25; 6:6-10). Finally, Paul urged Timothy to be disciplined by keeping his eyes on Christ (6:11-16) and refusing to become sidetracked by endless, empty discussions (6:20-21).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. All church leaders must keep morally and spiritually fit. To stay in good spiritual shape, you must stay focused on Christ and on your calling, discipline yourself to study God's word and to obey it, and put your spiritual abilities to work. What distracts you from serving Christ wholeheartedly? What has God called you to do to serve him? Be an example to others of how a mature Christian should live.

OUTLINE OF 1 TIMOTHY

- I. Instructions on Right Belief (1:1-20)
- II. Instructions for the Church (2:1–3:16)
- III. Instructions for Leaders (4:1–6:21)

1 TIMOTHY 1

GREETINGS FROM PAUL / 1:1-2

Paul wrote these instructions to Timothy, a young pastor who was also Paul's associate. But they were certainly directed to a wider audience. Paul wanted the believers in Ephesus to comply with his commands through his representative, Timothy. Because Paul addressed the requirements of various roles within the local church, his directions continue to apply to church leaders today.

1:1 Apostle comes from the Greek word apostolos, meaning “one who is sent.” Paul was an apostle appointed personally by Christ Jesus himself. His commission to this position came directly from God on the road to Damascus (see 1 Corinthians 9:1; 15:8). The title apostle was basically reserved for certain followers of Christ who had accompanied Jesus and had seen the risen Lord. Paul presented this important credential of apostleship in most of his letters as a foundation for his instructions. Paul expected to be heard because he represented Jesus Christ.

Paul calls God our Savior. Paul used the phrase “our Savior” six times in the letters to Timothy and Titus (see 1 Timothy 1:1; 2:3; 4:10; Titus 1:3; 2:10; 3:4). Paul may have used this particular Greek word, soter, because, at the time, the cruel emperor Nero applied it to himself. The apostle would not have hesitated to repudiate Nero's claim. Paul reminded his readers who the true Savior was.

Paul calls Christ Jesus our hope. Our hope rests in Jesus Christ. He is the embodiment of our faith, the basis for our eternal life. When we place our hope in Christ, we are not pacified with vague “maybes,” rather we are given certainties. We “hope” for what we already know is ours.

1:2 Paul addressed many of his letters to churches across the Roman Empire, and these letters were meant to be read aloud to all the believers. This letter, although written to Timothy, was also meant to be read to the entire congregation in the church at Ephesus (and beyond) (see 1:3). First Timothy has been called the first of the “Pastoral” Epistles (1 and 2 Timothy and Titus). All of Paul's letters express pastoral concerns, but these three relate specifically to local church issues. Paul and Timothy had developed a special bond, like father and son. Paul probably led Timothy to the Lord, so he was a true child in the faith. For more on Timothy, see the Audience section in the Introduction.

Paul used grace and peace as a standard greeting in all of his letters. However, it is only in his letters to Timothy that he used mercy. “Mercy” carries with it the Old Testament picture of God's loving-kindness. God's mercy helps us day by day. Paul knew that Timothy was facing a difficult situation in Ephesus, so he added the word mercy to reassure Timothy of God's protection and guidance. By using the phrase, God our Father and Christ Jesus our Lord, Paul pointed to Jesus as a full person of the Godhead. Both God the Father and Christ the Lord are coequal in providing the resources of grace, mercy, and peace. Paul recognized the full deity of Jesus.

WARNINGS AGAINST FALSE TEACHINGS / 1:3-11

After communicating volumes with his brief greeting, Paul abruptly turned his attention to one of the immediate reasons for his letter—Timothy's struggle with false teachers. Paul had left Timothy in Ephesus as a personal deterrent to those who were promoting their own brands of religion. To help Timothy, Paul reminded him of the central points in the conflict, then followed with a personal comparison between himself and the false teachers (1:12-16).

1:3 Paul first visited Ephesus on his second missionary journey (Acts 18:19-21). Later, on his third missionary journey, he stayed there for almost three years (Acts 19). Ephesus (along with Rome, Corinth, Antioch, and Alexandria) was a major city in the Roman Empire. Ephesus was a center for the commerce, politics, and religions of Asia Minor, and the location of the temple dedicated to the goddess Artemis. Paul left Timothy in the troubled Ephesian church while he traveled on to Macedonia, and then wrote to his young protégé from there.

Paul gave Timothy a difficult task. It seems that the rather timid disciple may have been reluctant, for Paul gave strong commands and loving encouragement to young Timothy. He was to be undaunted and unintimidated by those teachers (who were probably older men, see 4:12) who were teaching wrong doctrine; that is, doctrine other than the teaching of Jesus, the apostles, and the Old Testament. The English word doctrine came to mean the central truths, or principles, of a philosophy or religion. Paul used the term in writing to Timothy to refer to the unchanging truths of the gospel. No one was at liberty to change that doctrine.

1:4 What were these myths and spiritual pedigrees? There are two possibilities: (1) The church at Ephesus may have been troubled by the same type of heresy that threatened the church at Colosse—the teaching that to be acceptable to God, a person had to discover a certain hidden knowledge and had to worship angels (Colossians 2:8, 18). (2) Thinking that it would aid in their salvation, some Ephesians constructed mythical stories based on Old Testament history or genealogies. Perhaps they placed too much emphasis on Jewish writings such as the Book of Jubilees.

These myths and pedigrees only served to promote arguments and lead to discussion about ideas that did not come from Scripture but from the minds of the false teachers. This, in turn, did not help people live a life of faith in God because it took valuable time away from teaching the truth of Scripture and spreading the gospel. Therefore, Paul urged Timothy to remain in Ephesus, instead of traveling on with him, in order to stifle the false teachers, who were motivated by their own interests rather than Christ's.

1:5 Paul expanded his instruction to Timothy by reminding him and anyone else who would read the letter that the correction of the false teachers would do them good, not harm. The false teachers were motivated by mere curiosity and a desire to gain prestige as intellectuals. In contrast, genuine Christian teachers are filled with love. There are three sources of real love:

1. In Matthew 5:8, Jesus said, "God blesses those whose hearts are pure." A pure heart is devoted to God and free from guilt and corruption. We must keep ourselves morally straight. God purifies us, but there is action we must take to keep morally fit. Daily application of God's word has a purifying effect on our heart and mind. It enables us to love freely.
2. In order to love properly, our conscience must be clear. First, it must be clean from unconfessed sin so that guilt doesn't hinder us. Second, our motives must be free from pride and personal gain. Then we can love openly.
3. When we attempt to love others without sincere faith in Christ, our efforts to minister become hollow and self-serving. Sincere faith enables us to love genuinely.

The commands and instructions in this letter to Timothy reveal Paul's desire to maintain the purest truth in all the church's teachings. As a mother nourishes her child with pure foods, so Paul nourished the infant church with only pure teaching—the truth of God's word. He focused on the truth and love of the gospel (see 1 Corinthians 13).

1:6-7 Paul wrote against those who wanted to be teachers of the law of Moses. These men taught strange philosophical theories and ideas loosely based on the Pentateuch (the first five books of the Old Testament). These men were either Gentiles who were impressed with Judaism or Jews who did not know much but wanted to gain respect. The false teachers at Ephesus had constructed vast speculative systems, and then they argued about the minor details of their wholly imaginary ideas! They wandered away from the gospel, the truth, and love and slipped into meaningless drivel that helped no one and, in fact, hurt the church.

1:8 The false teachers wanted to become famous as teachers of God's law, but they misunderstood the law's purpose. The law was not meant to give believers a list of commands for every occasion, but to show unbelievers their sin and bring them to God. God's law is also important for believers. To use the law as God intended means understanding that God's law gives direction for living a holy life. In Exodus 20, God shows his people the true function and beauty of his laws. The commandments were designed to lead Israel to a life of practical holiness. In these commandments people could see the nature of God and his plan for how they should live. Galatians 2:11-21 shows us that God's law offers direction, not justification. Paul wrote in Romans 7:12, "The law itself is holy," but following the law can never make us acceptable to God.

1:9-11 The law exists not for people who do what is right, but for those who continue in their sin. The list Paul includes follows the order of the Ten Commandments in Exodus 20. The first set of sinners corresponds to the first four commandments (Exodus 20:1-11):

- the disobedient—who cannot be taught
- the rebellious—who cannot be disciplined
- the ungodly—who show no reverence for God
- the sinful—who consider nothing sacred and defile what is holy

The second set violates the next six commandments (Exodus 20:12-16):

- those who murder their father or mother—the ultimate act of dishonoring one's parents
- those who murder other people—breaking the command not to murder
- those who are sexually immoral or homosexual—dealing with adultery and all sexual sin
- slave traders—also translated "kidnappers," picturing the worst form of theft
- liars and oath breakers—those who violate the commandment not to bear false witness
- those who do anything else that contradicts the right teaching—covers anything that might be missed.

Paul had been entrusted with this Good News (Acts 9:15-19; 1 Thessalonians 2:4; Titus 1:3). This call became Paul's life mission as he preached the gospel across the Roman Empire, including Ephesus, where this letter was directed (Acts 20:17-27). All who hear, believe, and accept this "right teaching" have also been entrusted with it.

In short, the law is meant to reveal our sin, but using it as guidelines for our response to God leaves us no better off than the false teachers. The law has a descriptive, not a prescriptive, role. It brings us face-to-face with our problem but does not tell us how to solve it. The Good News challenges us to respond in faith to God, who, through Christ, will forgive us our sins.

PAUL'S GRATITUDE FOR GOD'S MERCY / 1:12-17

In the previous paragraph Paul included a hard listing of sinful behaviors. But his reason was not for self-righteousness—pointing out other people's sins to make himself look better. In the face of our tendency to despair when confronted with our own sinfulness, Paul could cheerfully say, "Well, just look at how desperate I was, and what God's mercy has done for me!" Paul was convinced that if God could save him, then God could save anyone.

1:12-13 His catalog of common sins reminded Paul of his own sin (he called himself the "worst" of sinners, 1:15). But instead of allowing that memory to overwhelm him, he overflowed with gratefulness that God had considered him trustworthy and had appointed him to serve in spreading the Good News of salvation to his fellow Jews and to the Gentiles (see Acts 9:15; 11:25-26; 13:1-3). Paul was certainly thankful, for at one time he used to scoff at the name of Christ. Paul did not exaggerate his past performance. Scripture reveals Paul as an archenemy of Christians (Acts 8:1, 3; 9:1; 22:4; 26:9, 11; Galatians 1:13), that he hunted down God's people, harming them in every way he could. Paul persecuted Christians because he sincerely believed that he was serving God by stamping out this distortion of his beloved Jewish faith. Despite all of his knowledge as a learned Pharisee (Acts 23:6), Paul remained in ignorance about Jesus' true identity and stubbornly remained in unbelief, even after seeing the unwavering faith of Stephen and the other Christians whom he persecuted and perhaps even killed. Paul had the chance to believe, but missed it. Yet God came to Paul even as he set out to capture more Christians, offering grace, mercy, and a new start.

1:14 Paul had blasphemed Jesus Christ, denied the Christian faith, and hated Christians; but God's grace had overcome it all, filling Paul completely with faith and the love of Christ Jesus. God supplied what Paul lacked, and not only supplied it, but gave it to him in exceeding abundance. In order to express the overwhelming sense of God's kindness and grace, Paul coined a compound word, hyperpleonazein, meaning "to superabound." God's undeserved favor toward us is always greater than any words we may use to describe it.

1:15 This true saying is a nonnegotiable truth. We are not asked to consider, but to fully accept. We are invited to submit rather than question. This is truth and everyone should believe it: Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Paul summarized and personalized the Good News: Jesus didn't come merely to show us how to live a better life or to challenge us to be better people. He came to offer us salvation that leads to eternal life. No matter how entrenched your sin, Christ can save you. Have you accepted his offer?

Although Paul was a deeply religious Jew, zealous for his faith, he realized that in his ignorance, unbelief, and desire to destroy the Christian faith, he was indeed the worst of sinners. We think of Paul as a great hero of the faith, but Paul never saw himself that way because he remembered his life before he met Christ. Paul recognized both that he had been a sinner and that he was now saved by grace. He recognized his past, but did not wallow in it. Humility and gratitude should mark the life of every Christian. Never forget that you too are a sinner saved by grace.

1:16 Jesus came to this zealous persecutor, not striking him with judgment (as some might expect), but offering him mercy. Looking back, Paul realized Jesus' great patience in dealing with him; and what an example of mercy Paul gave to us! Jesus offers us mercy; we too can come to him, believe in him, and receive forgiveness and eternal life.

1:17 Reflecting on how good God has been to him, who was a blasphemer and persecutor, caused Paul to praise God. This verse is a typical doxology given by Paul as a natural, emotional response to these reflections about the mercy of God. When Paul realized all that God had done for him, he was left with no other words than glory and honor to God forever and ever. God, our King, is eternal—that is, he can never cease to exist. He is unseen—we cannot see him or touch him; he is Spirit. He alone is God—not one of many.

TIMOTHY'S RESPONSIBILITY / 1:18-20

From the high point of praise to God, Paul turned his attention back to Timothy. The young disciple faced a difficult situation in the church at Ephesus, but Paul knew he could handle the challenge. What Timothy needed in the meantime was encouragement and helpful instructions. Like a coach preparing his eager young fighter for the match of his life, Paul put an imaginary arm around Timothy's shoulders and passed on a few last-minute instructions.

1:18 These instructions (see 1:3, 5) refer to the job Timothy was sent to do in Ephesus—that is, quieting the false teachers. Paul was expressing again his confidence in entrusting Timothy with an important ministry. Further instruction for Timothy's work in the church is given in the remainder of this letter.

Referring to the prophetic words spoken about Timothy, Paul made it clear that his choice of Timothy was not made solely on the basis of their friendship or his hunches about Timothy's abilities. Other believers had noted qualities in Timothy that Paul was happy to affirm and to put to work for the gospel. Scholars have suggested two possibilities for these previous prophecies about Timothy: (1) These were Old Testament promises prophesied by the prophets, promises that Timothy claimed. (2) These were prophetic utterances at Timothy's ordination (Acts 14:23; 1 Timothy 4:14). Timothy had been set apart for ministry when elders laid their hands on him (see 4:14). Apparently at Timothy's "commissioning," several believers had prophesied about his gifts and strengths. These words from the Lord must have encouraged Timothy throughout his ministry. We can only guess who gave the prophecies and what they said; in any case, Paul reminded Timothy of these statements to encourage him.

Paul employed a military metaphor to describe Timothy's work in Ephesus; it would indeed be a fight, but victory would achieve the good of the believers and the church—it was the worthwhile fight of the faith. We are reminded of Paul's words to Timothy as Paul neared death, "I have fought a good fight" (2 Timothy 4:7). Paul often used military language to refer to our spiritual struggle (see Ephesians 6:11-16; 1 Thessalonians 5:8; 2 Timothy 2:3).

1:19 One's faith and one's morals cannot be separated. To cling tightly to the Christian faith, and live by it, results in a clear conscience. Faith and good conscience are like armor for the Christian. They keep us from giving in to temptation and to debilitating spiritual and moral sidetracks. Rejecting the faith and refusing to listen to one's conscience will end in shipwrecked faith. This deliberate action reflects heresy, not just backsliding.

1:20 Apparently these two men had been members of the church (because Paul had put them out of the church). We don't know who Alexander was—he may have been an associate of Hymenaeus, or the coppersmith mentioned in 2 Timothy 4:14 who hurt Paul. But he was not the Alexander mentioned in the riot at Ephesus (Acts 19:33). Hymenaeus's error is explained in 2 Timothy 2:17-18. He weakened people's faith by teaching that the resurrection of the dead had already occurred.

To be turned over to Satan means that Paul removed these men from the fellowship of the church and back into the world—Satan's domain. Paul did this so that they would see their error and repent. The ultimate purpose of this punishment was correction so that they would learn not to blaspheme God. (See also 1 Corinthians 5:1-5; 2 Corinthians 2:5-8; 4:4; 2 Thessalonians 3:14-15.) The church today is often lax in disciplining Christians who deliberately sin. Deliberate disobedience should be responded to quickly and sternly to prevent the entire congregation from being affected. But discipline must be done in a way that tries to bring the offender back to Christ and into the loving embrace of the church. The definition of discipline includes these words: strengthening, purifying, training, correcting, and perfecting. Condemnation, suspicion, withholding of forgiveness, or permanent exile should not be a part of church discipline.

1 TIMOTHY 2

INSTRUCTIONS ABOUT WORSHIP / 2:1-15

The next two chapters cover Paul's thinking on the expected character and behavior of believers when they are functioning as a church. Among the most hotly debated passages written by Paul, this one begins with guidelines for prayer (2:1-8) and moves on to what appear to be rigid restrictions placed on women (2:9-15) within the church. The range of interpretations varies from those who would still forbid women from teaching in the church to those who would write Paul off as presenting views not applicable to today.

If Paul's purpose in writing this letter was to guide Timothy in his confrontations with the false teachers (1:3), then that purpose must be used to understand Paul's instructions. What Paul told Timothy to do in the volatile environment in Ephesus may not be what he would have directed a church to do where peace and harmony prevailed. We must understand the problem that Paul was addressing within Timothy's situation before we conclude what applications might be made to our own. We must remember that Paul shares God's desire for everyone to be saved (2:4). To that end, he wants Christian men to pursue holiness and Christian women to conduct themselves appropriately in the church.

2:1 Paul's urge echoed his original mission for Timothy (1:3). False teaching had to be challenged, and right actions needed to be reinforced. Paul placed primary importance on prayer.

The different words used for prayer focus not so much on different types of prayer as on the scope of prayer—that we can come to God with requests, plead for God's mercy, and give thanks. Although God is all-powerful and all-knowing, he has chosen to let us help him change the world through our prayers. How this works is a mystery to us because of our limited understanding, but it is a reality. This verse highlights the words for all people. Readers often miss the inclusiveness of the word and focus instead on the examples that Paul immediately gave. A common application of this verse, therefore, urges prayer for government leaders. Paul's purpose, however, was most likely to broaden the possibilities for prayer rather than narrowing them. Paul's examples may well have caused Timothy to think of the very persons with whom he was in conflict—the false teachers. Both “kings” and “those in authority” were enemies of the early church. False teachers were people in authority (2:2) who were promoting error and creating controversies in the Ephesian church. Yet Paul urged Timothy to pray for everyone, including his opponents.

In situations of personal conflict, one of the ways to test our objectivity is whether or not we can honestly pray for those with whom we disagree. Jesus was quite clear, “Pray for those who persecute you” (Matthew 5:44).

2:2 Paul’s command to pray for kings was remarkable considering that Nero, a notoriously cruel ruler, was the current emperor (A.D. 54–68). When Paul wrote this letter, persecution was a growing threat to believers. Later, when Nero needed a scapegoat for the great fire that destroyed much of Rome in A.D. 64, he blamed the Roman Christians so as to take the focus off himself. That triggered severe persecution throughout the Roman Empire. Not only were Christians denied certain privileges in society; some were even publicly butchered, burned, or fed to lions. But believers were taught to support the government and those in authority, not rebel against it (Romans 13:1-6; 1 Peter 2:13-25).

Paul did not explain what to pray, but his list in verse 1 was broad enough to include whatever prayer might be appropriate to any situation. He also gave the purpose behind his command to pray. God sets up and removes all rulers; he is ultimately in control (see Psalm 2). Praying for the salvation of the rulers in Rome (and for the return of the noninterfering policy against Christians) would help restore the peace and quietness the Christians had enjoyed prior to the persecution (see 1 Peter 2:12; 3:9).

Even in nations where Christians do not face persecution, they still need to be constantly praying for their leaders. Every day decisions are made in the halls of government that shape the policies, the future, even the morality of the nation. Constant prayer can be a mighty weapon against Satan’s domination so believers can continue with their work of spreading the gospel in godliness and dignity. Godliness means true reverence and religious devotion that leads to exemplary conduct. Dignity means serious purpose, moral earnestness. These descriptive words do not imply private spiritual living. Rather, they convey a public faith consistent with God’s purpose to achieve the salvation of persons and bring them “to a knowledge of the truth” (2:4).

2:3-4 It may be difficult to pray for the salvation of civil leaders, but these prayers are good and pleasing to God, who alone is Savior. The immediate context for Timothy included the conflict within the church with the false teachers. But even in this confrontation, the goal was to bring about their salvation. The recent mention of Hymenaeus and Alexander (1:20) illustrates the importance of redemptive discipline. While these men had been “turned over to Satan” (1:20) and were therefore outside the church, the door of repentance still would have been open to them (see, for example, 1 Corinthians 5:3-5 and 2 Corinthians 2:5-11). In the meantime, they were among the subjects for prayer by the gathered church.

The fact that God wants everyone to be saved and to understand the truth does not mean that all will be saved—the Bible affirms that many people reject Christ (Matthew 25:31-46; John 12:44-50; Hebrews 10:26-29). But God’s desire is that all people would be saved, and he has provided in Christ the means to salvation. First Timothy 4:10 shows that the guarantee of salvation applies only to those who receive it. Paul was not teaching about election here; rather, he was showing God’s intent that the gospel go to all people.

2:5-6 These verses cite three foundational truths of the gospel:

1. There is only one God. Judaism and Christianity shared the common belief that there is only one God (in direct opposition to the Greek and Roman pantheons and to the polytheism of the surrounding nations). The foundation for this teaching is Deuteronomy 6:4-9 (see also 1 Corinthians 8:4).
2. There is also one Mediator who can reconcile God and people, Christ Jesus. Jesus said, “I am the way, the truth, and the life. No one can come to the Father except through me” (John 14:6). Muslims also believe that there is only “one God,” but they differ in how he makes himself known. For the Muslims, God is Allah, and Muhammad is his prophet. The Jews believe in one God yet still await their Messiah; they believe in Moses as this mediator. Some of the Jews in Ephesus as well as the Gnostics may have regarded angels as mediators. The Romans were praising Caesar as their God. The Christians understand that Christ Jesus is our mediator because he is God.
3. He gave his life to purchase freedom for everyone. God is holy, sinless, morally perfect. People are, by nature, sinners. A holy God cannot embrace sinners any more than light can embrace darkness. For hundreds of years, the Jews sacrificed animals to God in order to maintain a right relationship with him. The sacrifices reminded them that sin has consequences and that only spilled blood would be enough to cover the people’s sins. Yet, even that wasn’t God’s complete plan, for at the proper time, he sent his Son to become the final sacrifice, to pay for the sins of all people (past, present, and future) with his own blood.

Christians can respect other beliefs and religions, but we must hold firmly to the three beliefs stated above without the slightest change. Although Christianity may appear “narrow” or “intolerant,” it is willing to embrace everyone who believes. There is only one God; there is only one Mediator; that Mediator gave himself as a ransom—he paid the price. There is nothing more to do except believe. The gospel invitation to believe is centered in Jesus Christ. Believing in something or someone other than Jesus may be faith; but it is not the Christian faith.

2:7 Paul had been chosen as a preacher. He was also an apostle. He operated with a sense of divine commission. He had been given the special privilege of teaching the Gentiles about faith and truth. This was the absolute truth, a point made not for Timothy’s sake, but for the church in Ephesus.

2:8 Continuing the theme of prayer (begun in 2:1), Paul focused on public worship in the church. Prayer in the congregation should be given by men (Greek, andras). To pray with holy hands lifted up to God may appear somewhat unusual, but it was, in fact, the accepted way of prayer among Jews and the earliest Christians. In Old Testament times, prayers were made with the face pointed toward heaven and palms turned upward with hands outstretched. This conveyed supplication and longing for God’s blessing. Quite often, hands were used symbolically to show the humble attitude of the person praying.

But these men who prayed needed holy hands; in other words, they had to be “clean” before God. In Timothy’s context, the outward forms of prayer needed to be authenticated by the absence of anger and controversy. Paul’s concern indicates that the spiritual life of the Ephesian church was being undermined by ineffective prayers and divisive teaching. If individuals should be free from anger and quarreling while they prayed, how much more should those who offered prayer on behalf of others!

Paul’s desire that men alone should pray seems to contradict 1 Corinthians 11:5, where he stated that women who prayed or prophesied should do so with their heads covered. Most likely this problem of women leading in prayer and teaching applied specifically to the Corinthian and Ephesian situations. In these churches, recently converted and emancipated women tended to interrupt the service with improper questions or remarks. Paul urged them to defer to the men. But he was not generally refusing to let women participate in public prayer (see also the discussion on 2:11).

It should also be noted that this verse does not limit prayer to the clergy or the elders, but encourages prayer from laymen. It wasn’t until later in the church that some wrongly restricted prayer to clergymen.

2:9 As the men were to show their right attitudes with “holy hands,” so the women in the Ephesian congregation were to show their holy attitudes with a modest outward appearance. Paul emphasized that their internal character was far more important than their outward adornment. Women’s standard for dress was to be characterized by decent and appropriate clothing. Paul’s appeal here was to good taste and good sense within the culture. Women believers were to “dress” their behavior in a manner that complemented rather than clashed with their character. Women who worshiped in the Christian church should not be given to ostentation, costly attire, and excessive adornment. Neither was seductive or sexually suggestive clothing appropriate. They were not to detract from the worship by drawing attention to themselves. That the Christian women in Ephesus not fix their hair or wear gold or pearls or expensive clothes meant again that their emphasis should not be how they looked, but on who they were.

To understand these instructions, we must look at them in light of the whole Bible. Jesus set women free. He treated them as human beings. He recognized and responded to their needs as human needs. He taught women and included them as his followers. He proved himself to be their Savior, too. The accepted view of women in the time of Christ was as property rather than persons. Jesus personally shattered that conception. The gospel offered to women the gift of personhood—they were worthy of salvation.

Paul’s instructions to the Christian women in Ephesus must be read in both their immediate and larger contexts before applying them. The immediate context was the church in Ephesus, which was suffering from the effect of false teachers who used women as their prime targets (see 2 Timothy 3:6-9). These women were also affected by their personal experiences within Ephesian culture. They would have struggled as much with cultural conditioning as we do.

The larger context includes what Paul taught elsewhere about the role and place of women in the church. One key statement occurs in Paul’s letter to the Galatians: “There is no longer . . . male nor female . . . you are one in Christ Jesus” (Galatians 3:28). Note also Peter’s speech at Pentecost (Acts 2:17-18). Women were not being singled out, nor should these instructions be binding outside of the church. Modesty and self-restraint are for everyone at all times, but these specific prohibitions applied to the church in Ephesus. Possibly, some Christian women in the Ephesian church were trying to gain respect by looking beautiful rather than by becoming Christlike in character. Some may have thought that they could win unbelieving husbands to Christ through their appearance (see Peter’s counsel to such women in 1 Peter 3:1-6). In addition, Paul may have been referring to particular styles in Ephesus that were associated with prostitutes in the local temples. Artemis (also called Diana) was the goddess of Ephesus (see Acts 19:28). Considered the goddess of fertility, she was represented by a carved figure with many breasts. A large statue of her (the rock for which was said to have come from heaven, Acts 19:35) was in the great temple at Ephesus. That temple was one of the wonders of the ancient world. The festival of Artemis involved wild orgies and carousing. Obviously, Christian women should not look like or even copy the styles of the prostitutes in the temple of Artemis.

While there is nothing wrong with Christian women wanting to look nice, each woman must examine her own motives. Today's world places great emphasis on beauty. Christian women, while they can dress nicely and take care of their appearance, must at the same time not let their appearance become all-encompassing, and they must not enhance their appearance merely for "sex appeal" or attention-getting.

2:10 A carefully groomed and well-decorated exterior is artificial and cold without inner beauty. Scripture does not prohibit a woman from wanting to be attractive. Beauty, however, begins inside a person. A gentle, modest, loving character gives a light to the face that cannot be duplicated by the best cosmetics and jewelry in the world. Christian women are not to try to be unattractive; instead, Paul called them to reject the world's standard for attractiveness. A Christian's adornment comes not from what she puts on, but from what she does for others.

While the church should not regulate what can or cannot be worn inside its doors (indeed many who need to know the Lord might not be able to enter if specific standards had to be met), those who claim to be devoted to God ought to dress sensibly and modestly, choosing instead to make themselves attractive by the good things they do.

2:11 Many women have read these verses and been distressed. However, to understand these verses, we must understand the situation in which Paul and Timothy worked. In first-century Jewish culture, women were not allowed to study. Jews and Gentiles regarded it disgraceful for women to discuss issues with men in public. The Jews were stricter, not even allowing women to teach the male children past the age of five. In Greek philosophy, Plato granted women equality with men. Aristotle severely limited their activities, and his view was more widely accepted.

When Paul said that women could learn, he was affirming their recognition as teachable members of the church. Christian women were given "equal rights" with men when it came to studying the Holy Scriptures. This was an amazing freedom for many of the Jewish and Gentile women who had become Christians.

There were several problems in the Ephesian and Corinthian churches that made teaching in this area difficult. Some women, converted Jews, had grown up in an atmosphere repressive toward women. Suddenly these women experienced their freedom in Christ. Some may have overreacted, flaunting their freedom and disrupting the church service. In addition, some of the women may have been converts from the cult of temple prostitution, so widespread in these major cities. These women were immature in the faith and doctrine of Christianity. They needed to learn, not teach. Against this backdrop, we have the influence of the false teachers who emphasized elitism and special knowledge. A third group would be widows or weak-willed women (identified in 1 Timothy 5:3-16 and 2 Timothy 3:5-9) upon whom the false teachers were preying. These women should not be put up front to pray or teach until their doctrine had been straightened out.

Such women were to learn at home from their fathers or husbands; they were to maintain silence and not disturb the worship services (1 Corinthians 14:35). They were to speak, pray, or prophesy only when it was from the Spirit (1 Corinthians 11:5). Paul's prohibition was not against women in general. In several places Paul wrote about women in the church who were coworkers—helping him (Romans 16:1-3) and contending beside him for the faith (Philippians 4:2-3). Paul said women were coheirs of the image of God in Christ, that they were full members of the body of Christ, and that they fully shared in the responsibilities and gifts of serving.

Women were to learn quietly and submissively. The Greek word for “quietly” used here (hesuchia) and in verses 2 and 12 means settled, calm, with voluntary restraint. Another Greek word, sigao, means “to be silent,” which is used in Luke 18:39 and 1 Corinthians 14:34. “Submission” warns against presumptive and inappropriate grasping after authority.

2:12 This statement, I do not let, is part of a series of present tense commands in this chapter (“I urge,” 2:1; “I want,” 2:8 and 2:9). Unfortunately, the translation reads as if Paul wrote, “I never permit a woman to teach.” Also, the grammatical order in Greek for this phrase carries less force than the English one (“To teach, a woman I am not allowing”) and completes the thought about attentive learning in verse 11. The women in the Ephesian church were allowed to learn, but not to teach men. Given the tension between the influx and recognition of women as fellow heirs of Christ within the church on the one hand, and the serious problems being caused by the false teachers on the other, Paul was affirming one right (to learn and listen quietly) while withholding another right (to teach) because of the condition of the church at the time. They did not need more teachers; rather, they all needed to return to the foundational truths of the gospel (2:3-7).

Some interpret this passage to mean that women should never teach in the assembled church; however, other passages point out that Paul allowed women to teach. Paul's commended coworker, Priscilla, taught Apollos, the great preacher (Acts 18:24-26). In addition, Paul frequently mentioned other women who held positions of responsibility in the church. Phoebe worked in the church (Romans 16:1). Mary, Tryphena, and Tryphosa were the Lord's workers (Romans 16:6, 12), as were Euodia and Syntyche (Philippians 4:2).

More likely, Paul restrained the Ephesian women from teaching because they didn't yet have enough knowledge or experience. The Ephesian church had a particular problem with false teachers. Both Timothy's presence and Paul's letters were efforts to correct the problem. Evidently, the women were especially susceptible to the false teachings (2 Timothy 3:1-9) because they did not yet have enough biblical knowledge to discern the truth. Paul may have been countering the false teachers' urging that women should claim a place of equality for prominence in the church. Because these women were new converts, they did not yet have the necessary experience, knowledge, or Christian maturity to teach those who already had extensive scriptural education. Paul was telling Timothy not to put anyone (in this case, women) into a position of leadership who was not yet mature in the faith (see 5:22). This deeper principle applies to churches today (3:6).

The expression, have authority, found only here in the New Testament, implies a domineering, forceful attitude—an abuse of authority. Of course, no one should exercise abusive authority over anyone. The danger Paul was counteracting included a competitive struggle for power within the church as women took their rightful place. But conversely, Paul nowhere teaches male authority over women expressed in harsh domination.

Paul's instruction to the women of Ephesus displayed his missionary strategy. Because his desire was to reach the people of Ephesus with the gospel, he called for moderation and restraint against the potential misuse of freedom. Both Jews and Greeks in Ephesus would be scandalized by women usurping authority over men. This would have created confusion and resentment among the pagans whom the Ephesian Christians were trying to reach. So Paul was giving a local strategy of restraint, not issuing unchanging rules of organization. Remember that equality of worth between the sexes was a completely foreign concept in both Hebrew and Roman cultures. It was not expected nor was it offered. The equality given by Christ was radical (see Galatians 3:26-28).

2:13 In previous letters Paul had discussed male/female roles in marriage (Ephesians 5:21-33; Colossians 3:18-19). Here he talks about male/female roles within the church. Some scholars see these verses about Adam and Eve as an illustration of what was happening in the Ephesian church. Just as Eve had been deceived in the Garden of Eden, so the women in the church were being deceived by false teachers. Just as Adam was the first human created by God, so the men in the church in Ephesus should be the first to speak and teach, because they had more training. Eve should have turned to Adam for advice about Satan's words to her because Adam had more experience with God's instructions. It was also necessary to simplify the task of weeding out the false teachers, also men, who were destroying the church from within. This view, then, stresses that Paul's teaching here is not universal; rather, it applies to churches with similar problems.

Other scholars, however, contend that the principles Paul points out are based on God's design for his created order—God established these roles to maintain harmony in both the family and the church (see Genesis 2:18). God assigned roles and responsibilities in order for his created world to function smoothly. Although there must be lines of authority, even in marriage, there should not be lines of superiority. God created men and women with unique and complementary characteristics. We must not let the issue of authority and submission become a wedge to destroy what can be excellent working relationships, with men and women using their varied gifts and abilities to accomplish God's work.

2:14 Paul was not excusing Adam for his part in the fall (Genesis 3:6-7, 17-19). On the contrary, in his letter to the Romans, Paul placed the primary blame for humanity's sinful nature on Adam (Romans 5:12-21). Eve had not been told directly by God about the trees—Adam had instructed her. In turn, God instructed Adam about the trees before Eve was created. For Eve, the struggle was over whether to submit to Adam's command or to the serpent's words that seemed to offer her knowledge and understanding. But when Adam ate of the fruit, he directly disobeyed God. He was not deceived; he sinned outright. By then, however, Eve had already sinned.

This verse should not be taken to prove that women are more gullible than men in general. In Ephesus, due to the persuasiveness of the male false teachers, some women were gullible. Paul didn't use this verse to say women were easily deceived, but to point out that Eve should have submitted to Adam in her particular situation.

2:15 The phrase saved through childbearing has been understood in several ways:

1. The childbearing mentioned here refers to the birth of Jesus Christ. Women (and men) are saved spiritually because of the most important birth, that of Christ himself. This argument is based on a very obscure reference to Christ and the Incarnation. It would be unlikely for Paul to be so indirect.
2. Man sinned, so men were condemned to painful labor. Woman also sinned, so women were condemned to pain in childbearing. Pain caused a serious complication, but childbearing was not the curse. Both men and women, however, can be saved through trusting Christ and obeying him. Although this is true, it does not seem as forceful in light of the context.
3. From the lessons learned through the trials of childbearing, women can develop qualities that teach them about love, trust, submission, and service. Although this is true, it hardly seems to be the main point.
4. Women who fulfill their God-given roles of childbearing and child rearing are demonstrating true commitment and obedience to Christ. One of the most important roles for a wife and mother is to care for her family. This seems to be the most legitimate interpretation in light of the larger context and also in reference to 5:3-15. The women in Ephesus were abandoning their God-given purpose because of the false teachers. So Paul was telling them that caring for their families, or remarrying if they were younger widows, was one way for them to remain effective and to live faithful lives of service. By means of bearing children, raising them, and fulfilling their design, women would be saved from the evils of Ephesian society and maintain a pure testimony to the lordship of Christ. Paul placed before the women of Ephesus the goal to live in faith, love, holiness, and modesty.

Scholars have written many volumes to present various views of the role of women in worship and leadership. There seems to be enough evidence and divided opinion to conclude that the complete answer cannot be derived from 1 Timothy. Church bodies have to decide the issue for their own congregations. Nonetheless, we would do well to consider the following statements:

- Scripture must be regarded in context. Paul gave other teachings about male/female relationships; all must be considered.

- Paul's clear teachings must be used to clarify what seems less clear.
- Though Scripture is not bound to culture, it is definitely targeted to culture. Paul was focusing on the Ephesians' problem.
- Remember Paul's missionary strategy. His local strategy for Ephesus may not be normative for all time.
- We must be consistent. If we allow women to wear jewelry, but do not permit them to teach, we may be guilty of selectiveness.
- We must not let culture define how the church is run. If culture dictated a militant feminism, we should be against it. But if culture dictated a view of women more subordinated than the Bible suggests, we should oppose that as well.

1 TIMOTHY 3

LEADERS IN THE CHURCH / 3:1-13

The list of qualifications for church office, which is similar to other lists in the Jewish and Greco-Roman world, is not a rigid judgment list for disqualifying certain people. Rather, it serves as a barometer for spiritual maturity. Those who aspire to a church office must realize that living a blameless and pure life requires effort and self-discipline. All believers, even if they never plan to be church leaders, should strive to follow these guidelines because they are consistent with what God says is true and right. The strength to live according to God's will comes from Christ.

3:1 The word elder referred to a pastor or anyone who exercised an overseeing position. The New Testament uses several words for church leaders; the most common are apostle, overseer, bishop, elder, and deacon. At first, the office of "apostle" referred only to the Twelve and a select few others, like Paul, but it came to be used in a less technical sense for church representatives (see 2 Corinthians 8:23; Philippians 2:25). Elders were leaders in specific congregations, and the words were used interchangeably in Paul's letters. They were the teachers. Deacons were the administrators in these early churches—handling people, administration, finances, etc.

There apparently was a saying regarding church leadership, and Paul cited it here as true. It is good to desire to be a spiritual leader. Desires means "sets one's heart on something." Leadership is an honorable responsibility. Paul stressed its importance. However, as Paul would point out, the standards are high.

3:2 Paul enumerated several qualifications for an elder. He must live a life that cannot be spoken against, meaning he must have no flaw in his conduct that would be grounds for any kind of accusation. He must be blameless. The term serves as a general opening summary of character. A leader within the church should have a good reputation among believers. Leadership sets the tone. What follows are the building blocks of that reputation.

The qualification, he must be faithful to his wife, has lent itself to different interpretations. Some say this shows that he should be married. This view gains strength from the fact that the false teachers forbade marriage (4:3). However, both Paul and Timothy were unmarried. If Paul taught that a leader must be married, he would be unable himself to lead and would be contradicting his instructions in 5:14 and 1 Corinthians 7:25-33. Most likely, the leader, if he is married, must be a one-woman man, standing against the immoral standards present in the pagan culture at Ephesus. The Bible rejects marriage as convenience and demands faithfulness and participation in the one flesh created by husband and wife (see Genesis 2:24; Ephesians 5:22-33).

That he exhibit self-control was another way of saying a leader ought to possess sound and balanced judgment, or even common sense. Each of these qualities may be required for leaders, but they ought to be the goal of all believers.

A church leader must live wisely, meaning that his life should be marked by moderation, limits, not extreme or excessive, with an absence of extravagance. We might use the term “balanced” to indicate that this leader possesses the appropriate emphasis on each of the priorities in his life.

A good reputation refers to basic social graces—ordinary dignified behavior. The Greek word is derived from kosmos, “the world or universe,” and pictures a person who lives in harmony with the way God created the world to function.

Hospitality was widely emphasized in Middle Eastern cultures and in the Old Testament (see Exodus 22:21). Believers are commanded to be hospitable (Hebrews 5:10; 13:2; 1 Peter 4:9; 3 John 5), so a leader should also enjoy having guests in his home.

Christian leaders must be able to teach. One of the most important tasks of any church leader is to teach the Scriptures to those in the congregation. The leader must understand and be able to communicate the profound truths of Scripture, as well as deal with those false teachers who mishandle them.

3:3 An elder must not be a heavy drinker, for obvious reasons. Many of these qualities may have characterized the false teachers who caused quarrels in the church (see 6:3-4).

He must not be violent or quarrelsome. A violent person is an abusive individual. Abuse may take many forms (verbal, physical, sexual, even spiritual), but it rises from a deep disrespect for others. Mental illness may also be involved. Such a person tends to be defensive, insecure, and insensitive. A person with a history of verbal battles may find it difficult to lead effectively. Such a person should not be selected to lead. In contrast, he must be gentle and peace loving. Such a person is free from harshness, sternness, or violence.

A Christian leader must not be one who loves money (see 6:5-10). Leaders must have a proper attitude for handling finances in the church. This affects the ethical use of church funds and the administration of proper programs for raising money. It also implies that making money should not be a prime motive for a candidate seeking a church leadership position. Many would-be leaders combine love of money with a quarrelsome nature and end up quarreling in the church over money matters. Such a person should not be selected to lead.

3:4-5 The qualifications for both elders and deacons hinge on the man's ability to manage his own household (see also 3:12). It is not absolutely required that an elder be married or have children. If he does, however, he must manage his own family well. The word manage means compassionate governing, leading, and directing (see 1 Thessalonians 5:12; 1 Timothy 5:17), not stern, cruel, tyrannical, and authoritarian dominance. This type of family leadership reflects the parallel between church and home seen in Ephesians 5:28–6:9.

It makes sense that Paul would use this requirement, for no one can run a household effectively without love and firmness, mercy and guidelines. And if parents don't model what they teach, children rarely follow except under pressure. There are two thoughts in this phrase: on one hand, while it is true that children should show respect and obey their parents, respect and obedience are by-products of responsible leadership in the home. The best way to see a person's ability to handle a large responsibility is to see how he or she performs a small one. The ability to handle his household forms a training ground for a man's ability to handle the family of God in the church. The same love, compassion, firmness, and mercy are needed for both duties.

3:6 New believers should become secure and strong in the faith before taking leadership roles in the church. Too often, when desperate for workers, the church places a new Christian in a position of leadership prematurely. New believers should have a part in God's service, but they should not be put into leadership positions until they are firmly grounded in their faith, with a solid Christian lifestyle and a knowledge of the word of God. Otherwise, the new believer might be proud of being chosen so soon, and the Devil will use that pride to make him fall. The reference to the Devil teaches that in the same way Satan fell because of pride, there waits the danger of pride to new believers who are given responsibility before they are ready. New believers who are too quickly promoted can be easy targets for the Devil's powerful temptation: pride. Pride can seduce emotions and cloud our reason. It can make those who are immature susceptible to the influence of unscrupulous people.

3:7 Requiring the leaders to have a good reputation with people outside the church (that is, nonbelievers in the community) gave the church at large a good reputation in the community. Church leaders, being the most visible people in the church to the secular world, would do well to maintain the highest of standards and the best reputation. Seeing several church leaders make headlines in recent years for tax evasion, wrongful use of solicited funds, and sexual escapades certainly damages the credibility of the church. Church leaders who follow Paul's advice keep their church from facing unnecessary abuse. Otherwise, the result is to fall into the Devil's trap and be disgraced with both the believers and nonbelievers. This trap may either be the moral failure and resultant judgment that a man chosen as leader will fall into, or it could mean the trap of temptation leading to pride as mentioned in verse 6. When Christian leaders have a bad reputation, it keeps nonbelievers from coming to Christ.

3:8 "Deacon" means "one who serves." This position was possibly begun by the apostles in the Jerusalem church (Acts 6:1-6) to care for the physical needs of the congregation. Deacons were leaders in the church, and their qualifications resemble those of the elders; yet their roles were probably somewhat different as they carried out some of the more practical tasks of running and maintaining a church.

We must remember, however, that Paul was probably describing a role or function more than defining an office or position. The original term still generally applied to a class of slaves. Paul's explanation of these roles within the church emphasized the point that the name or title was to be given to someone who was already living out these character qualities. While Paul did not mention teaching requirements for deacons, their lives would have still been models of Christian discipleship.

Deacons, as recognized leaders in the church, also had a high profile and thus were required to be respected. This is not the same term for respectability applied to the elders (3:2). Here the term can mean "serious" or "honorable." Deacons were to take their responsibilities seriously and conscientiously. They should be men of dignity. They also should have integrity, referring to honesty without hypocrisy. Sometimes translated, "not double-tongued," this could refer to not gossiping, or to not saying one thing to one person and another to someone else. Like elders, deacons must not be heavy drinkers and they must not be greedy for money. They must be uninterested in such pursuits.

In some churches today, the office of deacon has lost its importance. New Christians are often asked to serve in this position, but that is not the New Testament pattern. Paul said that potential deacons should be tested before they are asked to serve (3:10).

3:9 Deacons must be men with spiritual depth, committed to the revealed truths of the Christian faith. The seven men chosen to help the apostles in the early church were “well-respected and . . . full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom” (Acts 6:3). While Luke never called Stephen and his companions “deacons,” they have traditionally been held up as early models of the service orientation of that role. They were men whose outward actions demonstrated that the gospel had taken deep root in their lives.

Deacons must not only know God’s truth, they must live it, resulting in a clear conscience (see note on 1:5). Their lifestyles must be consistent with their beliefs. This must necessarily be true for all Christians, and any man chosen for the office of deacon will have shown these qualities beforehand.

3:10 This refers not to some formal testing, but rather to observation by those who appoint deacons. The candidate will have shown the required moral characteristics and approved doctrine (3:9) consistently in the ordinary activities of church membership. A man who has proven his character and ability over time can then serve as a deacon. Testing deacons is needed today. They should not be appointed without consideration of their doctrine and their Christian life.

3:11 In Greek, the same word, gune, is used for “woman” and for “wife.” So three possible interpretations have been given for the identity of these wives:

1. These women were the deacons’ wives.
2. These are women in general. However, the context of church leadership speaks against this interpretation.
3. These women are female deacons or “deaconesses,” such as Phoebe in Romans 16:1. This interpretation is based on the use of in the same way to show the parallel to verse 8.

Whatever the case, Paul expected the behavior of prominent women in the church to be just as responsible and blameless as that of prominent men. They are to be respected and must not speak evil of others; that is, they must not have a problem with gossiping. They should exercise self-control, their lives marked by moderation and limits, not extreme or excessive, with an absence of extravagance. Being faithful in everything they do is an important requirement for anyone who would fulfill many duties on behalf of the congregation. A helper who constantly forgets to fulfill her duties or only does them halfway is not suitable for service in the church.

Although the women in the church at Ephesus were not (at least in the present circumstances) allowed to teach in the formal sense, they were still expected to model all the character qualities of mature believers.

3:12 A deacon must be faithful to his wife, and he must manage his children and household well. This requirement matches the requirement for elders spelled out in verses 2, 4-5, and is included for deacons for the same reasons.

3:13 Deacons are required to have the same high standards as elders for a position that, to many, might seem very unattractive and menial. But God doesn't see it that way. Those who fulfill their servant roles faithfully will be rewarded with respect from others who recognize and appreciate their service. They will also have increased confidence in their faith in Christ Jesus. The faithful servant is able to speak boldly of the faith and serve confidently, assured that what he or she does is appreciated and valued by the Lord Jesus Christ. Humble service may lack earthly rewards, but heavenly rewards are promised.

THE TRUTHS OF OUR FAITH / 3:14-16

Paul hoped to arrive in Ephesus and see Timothy within a short time of this letter's arrival. In case Paul arrived later than planned, he wrote these instructions to Timothy and the Ephesian church. This letter most likely confirmed instructions about governing the church already given to Timothy by Paul. This letter's arrival, prior to Paul's appearance, would have bolstered Timothy's authority in the church to continue to guide the church according to these instructions and to counteract the false teachers.

3:14-15 Again, in opposition to the false teachers who were full of false beliefs, Paul aimed at truthful behavior within the church. Actions speak louder than words, and in harmony they create an attractive song. Paul also knew that if he got the Ephesian Christians behaving as God wanted them to live, the noise of the false teachers would be drowned out.

Lest there be any doubt, Paul identified the household of God as the church of the living God (see also 1 Corinthians 3:16-17; 2 Corinthians 6:16; Ephesians 2:20-22). This "church" does not refer to any particular physical building; rather, it is a collection of all believers in Ephesus and, by extension, across the world. These believers, each serving and worshiping in their individual churches, are the pillar and support of God's truth. The church is not the source of this truth; rather, it functions as the custodian of and the witness to the truth. Those who believe God's truth have the power to change the world. That truth is outlined in the hymn Paul quoted from in the following verses.

3:16 In this short paragraph, probably an excerpt from an early hymn of the church, Paul affirmed the humanity and divinity of Christ. (For other examples of hymns, see Ephesians 5:19; Colossians 3:6; and Philippians 2:5.) By so doing, Paul revealed the heart of the gospel, the great mystery of our faith. Every phrase of the hymn is a “mystery” beyond our comprehension yet available for us to believe. We accept the truth as it has been revealed to us. And the results of our belief are life-changing.

Christ appeared in the flesh. Jesus was a man; his incarnation provides the basis for our being right with God (Philippians 2:7-8 ; see also Romans 1:3).

He was shown to be righteous by the Spirit. Jesus’ resurrection showed that the Holy Spirit’s power was in him (Acts 2:32-33).

He was seen by angels. Jesus is divine and exalted (Philippians 2:9; see also Colossians 2:15; Hebrews 1:6). Presumably, the entire drama of the Incarnation was a spectacle for the angels. They were witnesses and heralds of his coming. But within this poetic expression, the role of the angels and their exposure to Christ exceeds his time on earth.

He was announced to the nations, pointing to the worldwide proclamation of the gospel (Colossians 1:23).

He was believed on in the world. Christ is not only preached among all nations, but he also is believed on across the world. This points to a continual fulfillment today as Christ is still preached in nations that have not heard of him.

Finally, he was taken up into heaven. This refers to the Ascension: “The same one who came down is the one who ascended higher than all the heavens, so that his rule might fill the entire universe” (Ephesians 4:10).

1 TIMOTHY 4:1–5:2

WARNINGS AGAINST FALSE TEACHERS / 4:1-5

Paul's mind turned from the exalted role of the church in the plan of God (3:16) to the obstacles that were preventing the Ephesian believers from being totally effective. Paul warned the church of the tactics and teachings of its enemies. False teachers were (and still can be) a threat to the church. Paul knew that their teachings, if left unchecked, would greatly distort Christian truth. This critical danger would come from within the church.

4:1-2 The false teaching in Ephesus was no surprise; the betrayal of the gospel had been foreseen. Paul's phrase, the Holy Spirit tells us clearly, most likely refers to warnings repeatedly given by Jesus and the apostles against the dangers of false teaching. But Paul's direct concern here was not just about the teachers themselves as much as for those who would be deceived by them.

The last times began with Christ's resurrection and will continue until his return, when he will set up his Kingdom and judge all humanity. Jesus and the apostles forewarned us that during that interim, including the time period we live in, false teachers will abound—loving money and attention, distorting the truth, dividing believers, and causing many to go astray as they follow lying spirits and teachings that come from demons (see Matthew 24:5; Romans 16:18; James 3:15; 2 Peter 2:1; 1 John 3:7-9). These participants in the church will turn away from the faith, even though they may appear to still be faithful believers. They pretend to be religious, but their consciences are dead. Paul had no patience for false teaching and no soft words for false teachers. He never said that the false teachers misunderstood the gospel or that they simply taught in error. Rather, they were hypocrites and liars, with their teaching coming from Satan himself.

4:3-4 Satan deceives people by offering a clever imitation of the real thing. The false teachers, perhaps under Jewish influence, gave stringent rules forbidding marriage and demanding abstinence from certain foods. Later, these teachings became part of what we know as Gnosticism—a belief that spirit is good, but the physical world is evil. Thus, anything done for the body's pleasure or to fulfill its needs (such as sex or eating) was considered evil. To be "good" and to achieve a higher spiritual state, a person must deny all evil, including natural physical desires. Their demands made the false teachers appear self-disciplined and righteous. But their strict disciplines for the body could not remove sin.

Paul had explained the Christian understanding of marriage in 1 Corinthians 7 and Ephesians 5:21-33. Although Paul advised against marriage in some situations, he always upheld marriage as ordained by God and as an illustration of Christ's relationship to his church. But he denied the false teaching that it was wrong to be married. In the same way, a certain amount of abstinence from all food some of the time and from some kinds of food all the time is basic to good health. Abstinence from food for the sake of prayer (fasting) has a history of service in spiritual training. But saying that it is wrong to eat certain foods does not make a person better than anyone else or bring him or her closer to God. Error can be taught under the guise of devotion.

The false teaching was wrong in its conclusions: the physical world is not inherently evil. The physical world that God created should be received with thanksgiving by those who know and believe the truth. All foods are acceptable by those who regard God as their Provider and thank him for them (Romans 14:6; 1 Corinthians 10:30). Because they know the Creator personally, Christians can enjoy his creation all the more, receiving it gladly, with thankful hearts.

4:5 As we recognize God's hand in all the pleasures of his creation and as we offer him thanks, we take what is ordinary and make it extraordinary. In short, it is made holy by the word of God and prayer. God pronounced his creation good. Therefore, we are in agreement with God's declaration when we see all creation as suitable for special use.

A GOOD SERVANT OF CHRIST JESUS / 4:6–5:2

Here Paul directed some personal instructions for Timothy to take to the Ephesian church. His words establish a pattern of individual disciplines that would be helpful for any person taking on spiritual responsibilities. The aging apostle desired for his disciple both an effective ministry and a healthy personal life.

4:6 A worthy servant faithfully teaches the truth to those in his care. If Timothy would faithfully explain what Paul has been talking about to others, he would be fed in the process. Proper spiritual nourishment promotes spiritual growth. Proper nourishment for Timothy included constant meditation on the message of faith (the gospel message) and true teaching (Paul's instructions that Timothy was to communicate).

Timothy had been sent into a setting where there were conflicts over eating habits. Minor matters were being inflated into major issues. Paul was echoing the dietary concerns of the false teachers by emphasizing to Timothy that what really mattered was the feeding of the soul.

4:7 Paul emphasized the absurdity of the false teachings by calling them godless ideas and old wives' tales (see also 1:3-4). Timothy needed to understand the false teaching in order to fight it effectively with the truth, but then he was to not waste time on it. Instead, he should spend his time and energy in training himself for spiritual fitness. Paul often borrowed athletic words to emphasize the need for spiritual training (see 1 Corinthians 9:24; Galatians 2:2; 5:7; 2 Timothy 4:7). "Training" emphasizes the point that spiritual development does not happen by chance. An athlete is focused and committed, constantly training, refusing to let up, always striving. Believers must have the same focus and commitment, refusing to be sidetracked by wrong teaching.

4:8-9 Physical exercise, while benefiting the body, has no eternal benefit. Being in good physical shape positively affects health and perhaps mental outlook; yet spiritual exercise affects everything. It benefits its practitioner in both this life and the next. The key issue is how we use our time. Some people spend ten to fifteen hours a week in physical activity, but spend little time in Bible study, prayer, and service. Paul was not urging Timothy toward a life of asceticism or stiff and narrow godliness. His practical instructions (see 4:12-16) were to be carried out in relationship with others. To Paul it was obvious that this is true, and everyone should accept it. Believers who do spiritual exercise really do have the best of both worlds—they receive immediate and eternal benefits, and they benefit others as they instruct and model the Christian life.

4:10 Believers work hard and suffer much because of eternity. Eternity with God is not just hope for a possible occurrence, it is hope set on a certainty because it is hope in the living God—not on a philosophy, a human being, a material possession, or a standard of behavior (see Colossians 1:29).

As elsewhere (1:1; 2:3; Titus 1:3; 2:10; 3:4), Paul attached the role of Savior to God. God in his fullness—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—was active in carrying out the plan of salvation. Christ is the Savior of all people in the sense that his work on the cross was sufficient to provide salvation for everyone (see 2:6), but it is particularly for those who believe because salvation becomes effective only for those who trust him. Universalism is not taught in this passage. The offer of salvation has a universal range but does not impose itself on those unwilling to respond. This argument was aimed at the false teachers who attempted to restrict salvation to an elite few and put many more requirements on it than believing in God.

4:11 Timothy may have been somewhat shy. Paul encouraged Timothy to take charge as he told Timothy to teach these things and insist that everyone learn them, probably referring to all the matters in this letter. To people like the false teachers and their disciples, Timothy would have to issue commands. It was also his responsibility to continually train the believers in Ephesus.

4:12 The Greek word neotes (translated young) could refer to anyone up to the age of forty. By this time, Timothy was probably in his thirties. Although he was not a youth, he may have been considerably younger than some believers in his congregation. After serving under Paul, they may have looked down on this younger man who was put in charge of their church. Timothy could not control anyone's prejudice about his age, but he was not to be intimidated. Instead, he should be an example to all believers. He must not give anyone ammunition to use his youthfulness against him. Timothy's character, and not his age, would determine his authority to lead.

Timothy was not left to ponder how Paul expected him to be an example. Rather than offering general motivation to be an example, the old apostle issued a checklist.

- What you teach—Our words create impressions that either facilitate or complicate all other communication. Timothy was to teach with gentle authority while avoiding useless or argumentative conversation (see 4:11; 5:1; 6:3-4, 20).
- The way you live—Our lifestyle as well as our specific behaviors must be consistent with the gospel. Timothy was to conduct himself as a representative of Jesus Christ even in the details of daily living (see 6:6-10).
- Love—When we say the right words and live the right way but lack love, we are demonstrating a legalistic view of God's expectations (see 1 Corinthians 13:1-7). After words and actions have had their say, love makes the message ring true or false.
- Faith—Sooner or later, people around us will need to understand what motivates our speech, life, and love. A genuine combination of the above will present to others a way of life filled with hope. Faith finally speaks clearly when speech, life, and love have created a hearing.
- Purity—Paul ended this list with a rarely used term for virtue and chastity. As used here, the word implies integrity and consistency and reinforces the entire list. Perhaps Paul even had the idea of transparency in mind. The above qualities were to be developed, not just for public display, but as the uniform texture of Timothy's life.

4:13 Paul hoped to visit Timothy and the believers in Ephesus soon (see also 3:14-15). Besides carefully observing his private life to keep it above reproach, Timothy was also to give attention and preparation to his public ministry in three main areas, which are then described. Timothy was to focus on reading the Scriptures to the church, a practice begun in Old Testament times (see Exodus 24:7; Deuteronomy 31:11; Joshua 8:35; 2 Kings 23:2-3; Nehemiah 8:1-18) and continued in the synagogues (Luke 4:16; Acts 15:21; Colossians 4:16; 1 Thessalonians 5:27). He was also to be encouraging the believers, through preaching. Timothy was to exhort, that is, to warn, advise, and urge his listeners regarding the words of Scripture, helping them apply those words to their daily lives. Teaching refers to training in Christian doctrine. The people needed to know, understand, and constantly be reminded of the great truths of the Christian faith.

4:14 Others should not look down on Timothy (4:12), and neither should he look down on himself. Paul reminded Timothy that he had the necessary requisites to do the difficult work in Ephesus. Among them was a spiritual gift from God. Though Paul did not define the gift specifically, he was concerned that Timothy might hesitate or fail to use it. When we see abilities of all kinds (spiritual, relational, technical) as gifts from God, we will be in a better position to see his hand at work through people's efforts.

Timothy's commission as a church leader was received through the prophecies spoken to him and when the elders of the church laid their hands on him (see also 1:18). Timothy's gift had been publicly recognized. This should help Timothy's wavering confidence. Timothy could do the task because God had called him to do it, had equipped him to do it, and would be with him through it.

4:15 Paul called Timothy to give complete attention to the matters about which Paul had been writing, making them his number one priority. As Timothy did so, progress would be seen both in his personal life and in the church, and this would end any questioning about Timothy's maturity or credibility.

4:16 In conclusion, Paul advised Timothy to keep a close watch on his private life and his public ministry to the church—his teaching. His conduct in both areas must be above reproach. If he stayed true to what is right, it would benefit him and everyone else. His example would facilitate the salvation of his hearers. Of course, God alone can save, but Paul's words focus on the responsibility of spiritual leaders. By paying attention to his personal spiritual life, Timothy would work out his own salvation (in the sense described in Philippians 2:12), and by paying attention to his teaching, he would help others do the same.

5:1 The wise apostle knew that for this young minister to remain above reproach in dealing with the variety of people in his church, he would have to treat them as family. Speak harshly refers to “verbal pounding,” or disrespectful treatment. If correction became necessary, Timothy should not speak harshly; instead, he should appeal to the older men with kind exhortation, respectfully, as if he were speaking to his father. Even correction or rebuke was to be phrased in encouraging terms.

In the same way, Timothy was to speak kindly to younger men, as if they were his brothers. He was to lead them gently. Without using the specific term, Paul was speaking about submission. Timothy was to practice submissive gentleness in correcting his seniors. He was to do the same in treating his juniors.

5:2 Jesus recognized the personhood of women. They were no longer to be treated as property and, therefore, no longer to be demeaned. Paul affirmed this principle as he explained to Timothy how to treat his sisters in the faith. The most effective method for remaining above reproach would be to treat church members as family members. Thus Timothy should treat the older women as if they were his own mother, and the younger women with all purity as his own sisters.

Today, men in the ministry can avoid improper attitudes toward women by following Paul's advice. Men who see women as fellow members in God's family will treat them with all purity—respecting, protecting, and helping them grow spiritually. Purity refers to the same quality that Paul mentioned in 4:12. It covers moral behavior and transparent attitudes without hidden intentions.

1 TIMOTHY 5:3–6:2A

ADVICE ABOUT WIDOWS, ELDERS, AND SLAVES / 5:3–6:2A

Paul thought of Timothy's audience in Ephesus. There, men and women of all ages were under Timothy's care. Paul thought of the groups within the congregation needing special attention. He wanted Timothy to practice good general principles of personal care and also to deal with some specific people-needs. Paul chose the treatment of widows and elders as prime examples. He also had some instructions concerning slaves who were believers.

5:3 Because there were no pensions, no Social Security, no life insurance, and few honorable jobs for women, a widow was usually unable to support herself. But the care of widows was apparently becoming a major burden to the congregation in Ephesus and called for clarification as to who was really a widow qualifying for support. Paul advised Timothy to identify those widows who had no one else to care for them. The responsibility for caring for the helpless naturally falls first on their families, the people whose lives are most closely linked with theirs. Paul stressed the importance of families caring for the needs of widows and not leaving it for the church to do, so that the church can care for widows who had no families. A widow who had no children or other family members to support her was doomed to poverty. The church should care for such widows, meaning both respectful help and material support.

5:4 A widow who had children or grandchildren should be able to look to them for support. Our parents watched over us when we were helpless. We ought to do no less when the roles are reversed. Family members should look after their parents and grandparents. Paul affirmed this as basic common sense understood even by those who were unbelievers (see 5:8). Paul wanted Christian families to be as mutually supporting as possible. He insisted that children and grandchildren take care of the widows in their families, for this would show godliness at home and it would please God very much. God is pleased when we care for our family members' needs. God underscores the importance of fulfilling these duties by connecting them with the promise of personal benefits in the fifth commandment (Exodus 20:12). Honor certainly involves more than providing care in old age, but the caring treatment of our seniors is part of God's plan.

5:5-6 The true widow (see also 5:3) is alone in this world, that is, destitute, with no one to turn to for help. However, a Christian widow could turn to the church, setting her hope in God. The widows that the church should support are described as women who, since their husbands' deaths, dedicated themselves to God, spending much time in prayer. Anna, the prophetess, fit this description (Luke 2:37). This verse sets up a spiritual contrast regarding the lives of two kinds of widows. The "true widow" lives trusting God and ministering to others. She is not wrapped up in self-pity, but finds a place of effective service, beginning with prayer for others. Meanwhile, the other widow is lost to a self-centered lifestyle that Paul described as death.

Unlike their duties to the dedicated widows described in verse 5, the church was not to support widows who used their widowhood to live only for pleasure or resorted to immoral means of supporting themselves (possibly a reference to prostitution—practically the only "job" a woman could find in New Testament times). A widow who used her life chasing after pleasure was spiritually dead. Obviously, such widows should not be supported by the church.

Paul's instructions establish a strong case for wise assistance. The widow's choices define the ministry the church can have in her life. Honoring and assisting a widow who lives for pleasure would enable her to do wrong. But correcting her and offering forgiveness through repentance could still be an effective ministry by the church.

5:7 Repeating his command from 4:11, Paul told Timothy to also give these instructions (regarding the church's responsibility to widows, family members' responsibility to widows, and the widows' lifestyle) to the people. If all the instructions would be followed, no one would be criticized.

5:8 To default on the basic care and support of a family member is the same as denying the faith, for no one can claim love and allegiance to God and at the same time neglect his or her family (see Matthew 5:46-47). To do so makes people worse than unbelievers, for even unbelieving idol-worshippers understood the responsibility of caring for family needs. There are some obligations to those who have given us life that simply must be honored. Our families provide an arena in which we can demonstrate the quality of our love for God. John provided a scathing rebuke to any believer who would dare to claim affection for God but won't care for their own relatives. Believers who neglect the most basic human responsibilities have, for all practical purposes, denied what they believe.

5:9-10 The list for support on which widows may be placed may have been a particular group of widows who had taken a pledge committing themselves to work for the church in exchange for financial support. Part of this pledge was a commitment not to remarry so that these women could serve the Lord without distraction (see 5:12). Most importantly, however, the existence of a list indicates that the church identified those in need. The believers combined their resources to meet the needs of a known group.

In order to be included on this list, a widow had to meet three qualifications:

1. She had to be at least sixty years old. (Paul's reasons for keeping younger widows off the list for the church's support are explained in verses 11-15.) This was probably not so much a strictly observed age as it was a generally accepted stage beyond which a person's prospects for remarriage were doubtful.
2. She must have been faithful to her husband. This qualification is the same as that given for church leaders and deacons (3:2, 12) for the same reason. Obviously a widow who remarried should not be receiving assistance from the church.
3. She must be well respected by everyone because of the good she has done. A woman who has raised children (orphans perhaps, or her own but somehow could not care for her now), practiced hospitality, helped those in need, established a good reputation for her kindness, and rendered service to the church would be qualified to be on the list of widows.

5:11-13 These verses appear to be an overly harsh indictment of young widows, however, Paul actually was showing great compassion in this instruction. Widows who were younger than sixty should not be put on the list of widows (described in 5:9). Most likely, this did not mean that younger widows were refused assistance by the church; rather, younger widows were not to take a pledge of service to the church, which probably included not remarrying. Paul understood that younger women might face normal physical desires and might want to remarry. While this was perfectly acceptable in most instances, it would be unacceptable if the woman had taken a pledge to the church—then her desires will overpower her devotion to Christ and she might have to break her vow. Vows of this kind were not required nor demanded, but when made, they were considered as binding as marriage itself. Paul preferred that a young widow not put herself in the position of trying to meet an ideal of chaste widowhood and then wishing she hadn't; instead, she should be free to remarry. In fact, as Paul goes on to point out, a young widow needed to have direction, since merely submitting to her own desires might well lead to a denial of the faith through marriage with an unbeliever or to a lifestyle dishonoring to Christ.

The context of this passage reveals two certain concerns of Paul: (1) Some young widows did not qualify for inclusion among the widows under long-term care by the church (5:9-11), and (2) those young widows not under the care of the church should marry and raise a family in a manner honoring to Christ (5:14). Paul was concerned that these young widows would become victims of undisciplined desires. If they were put on the list and received full support from the church, these younger energetic women, with too much time on their hands, were more susceptible to distractions. Their lack of wisdom that comes with age might lead them to be lazy, doing visitation for purposes of gossiping and getting into other people's business. The picture here describes women busy accomplishing little good and much that is destructive. While this may sound like an extremely negative comment about these women, we ought to note the context and take into account that anyone with too much free time can often get into trouble.

5:14 Paul's advice to younger widows was to marry again (if that became an option), have children, and run their homes. As any mother knows, that is enough to keep her busy and out of trouble!

Paul had much more in mind here than merely providing a way to keep young widows off the streets. He placed before them a high calling. Note the two specific roles that he envisioned for these women within marriage. They were to raise children (giving them life and then bearing with them along their road to adulthood). But they were also to take care of their homes. This passage agrees with 2:11-15 in giving women distinct authority within their homes. In Christ, women have worth and worthwhile roles. The immeasurable importance of training the next generation presents a demanding challenge. The outside community would judge Christianity based on how these young widows conducted themselves.

The enemy probably refers to Satan and/or those he uses to tear Christians down. Obviously, young women supported by the church who became local busybodies would not give the church a good reputation in the community and nonbelievers would speak against the church and Christians. Satan and his followers would give the believers enough trouble without them bringing it on themselves.

5:15 That some of these young widows have already gone astray and now follow Satan explains much of the intensity in Paul's expressions throughout this passage. Some women from the church had already broken their commitment to Christ. Though they might still be superficially affiliated with the believers, their lives were representing Satan's power. Turning aside after Satan was probably not total apostasy, but rather the pursuit of a sensually oriented lifestyle leading to idleness, gossip, and at times even false teaching. Their loss bothered Paul. He was determined to help Timothy prevent further losses.

5:16 The role of taking care of her home (5:14) means that women must make sure that any relatives who were widows must be cared for so as not to put the responsibility on the church. In this way, those in need received assistance from their families. Then the church would be freed up to care for widows who are truly alone.

This epistle has been attacked frequently as uncharitable toward women. Paul's limitation on the teaching ministry of women recorded in 2:11-15 has often been taken to summarize all that Paul thought and wrote about women in the church. But given the compromised condition of the church in Ephesus, with Timothy and Paul struggling to stem the tide of false teaching, the specific roles, responsibilities, and value given to women are rather remarkable. Male believers were to exemplify the best treatment of women, especially widows. Women themselves were challenged to live full lives, raising children, managing households, caring for others, and being deeply involved in serving ministries. Those who chafe under Paul's seeming failure to give women "up front exposure" ought to remember that Jesus defined that kind of leadership as the most insignificant by Kingdom standards (Luke 22:25-27).

5:17-18 These elders carried significant responsibilities in overseeing the congregation. Those who do their work well should be paid well. Paul singled out those elders who carried the twin responsibilities of preaching and teaching (for related passages, see Matthew 10:5-16; Luke 10:1-12; 1 Corinthians 9:3-14). Preaching and teaching are closely related. Preaching (literally "laboring in the word") involves proclaiming the word of God, explaining its truth, helping learners understand difficult passages, and helping them apply God's word to daily life. Teaching refers more to the extended training of others in Christian doctrine and the gospel message. These roles carried added importance because the New Testament was not yet available in written form. Elders who worked hard for the believers by adding to their responsibilities both preaching and teaching should be paid a stipend. Paul supported his instruction that the elders should be paid by quoting first the Old Testament (Deuteronomy 25:4) and then the words of Jesus himself (Matthew 10:10; Luke 10:7). This double reference shows that both the Old Testament and the Gospels were considered the Scripture by Paul.

While seeming odd at first, the reference to the ox is very appropriate. Often oxen were used to tread out the grain on a threshing floor. The animal was attached by poles to a large millstone. As it walked around the millstone, its hooves trampled the grain, separating the kernels from the chaff. At the same time, the millstone ground the grain into flour. Muzzling the ox would prevent it from eating while it was working. Paul used this illustration to argue that productive Christian workers should receive financial support. The fact that a person is in Christian ministry doesn't mean that he or she should be poorly paid.

5:19-20 Wherever a group of people work together, conflicts occur. The church and its leaders are not exempt from sin, faults, and mistakes. But criticism may arise for wrong reasons or impure motives—minor imperfections, failure to meet someone's expectations, personality clashes. Thus Paul called upon the Old Testament stipulation that complaints should not even be heard unless there are two or three witnesses to accuse the person (see Deuteronomy 17:6; 19:15; Matthew 18:16; John 8:17; 2 Corinthians 13:1). But just because there were two or three witnesses doesn't mean the accused was automatically guilty. A thorough investigation of charges was still required.

If an accusation was confirmed, however, discipline was in order. Then if the church leader persisted in that sin, Timothy was to publicly expose the sins and rebuke him. The rebuke must be administered fairly and lovingly for the purpose of restoration, but it should cause all who see it to have a proper fear of God. Timothy could not be lax in dealing with elders who persisted in sin. The witness and reputation of the church to the outside world, as well as its own inner purity, depended on fair but consistent discipline.

5:21 As difficult as it might be, Timothy was not to waver on any of these instructions (and perhaps particularly the instructions about rebuking elders when needed). Paul gave Timothy this charge in the sight of God, Christ Jesus, and the holy angels—all of whom judge sinners (see Matthew 25:31-46; Luke 15:10; 1 Corinthians 4:9; 2 Peter 2:4; Revelation 14:7; 20:1-3). Any needed discipline or rebuke must be administered without regard to Timothy's personal inclinations, as if Timothy were pronouncing judgment before God, Christ, and the angels. For the sake of the church, Timothy needed to obey these instructions without taking sides or showing special favor to anyone.

5:22 One way to avoid the sticky problem of disciplining an elder is to be very careful about who is placed in that important position. Timothy should never be in a hurry about appointing an elder because he might overlook major problems or sins. Choosing church leaders today is a serious responsibility. They must have the qualities described in 3:1-13 and Titus 1:5-9. Not everyone who wants to be a church leader is ready or capable. Timothy needed to be certain of an applicant's qualifications before asking him to take a leadership position. If Timothy ordained a man who became a liability because of his persistent sinning, and if Timothy allowed that man to remain in the office despite those sins, Timothy would actually participate in those sins by compromising himself. Instead, he should keep himself pure.

By staying pure, Timothy would be able to more clearly judge those capable of serving the church as elders. In addition, by dealing immediately with sin among the elders, Timothy would show his convictions, his unwillingness to compromise with sin, which would also help him to remain pure.

5:23 The very mention of wine has given rise to questions about why Paul gave this advice to Timothy. Perhaps drinking water of poor quality (water did not come clear and clean from the tap in those days) had led to Timothy's stomach problem and frequent illnesses, so he should stop drinking only water. Paul's counsel here was to make use of alcohol for its medicinal value.

Those who come to this text for either open permission to use alcohol or for prohibition against the use of alcohol will be forced to meet on a middle ground. Paul has, in fact, stated a limited application for alcohol. Within this letter, he has already expressed the other extreme by insisting that those in leadership positions not be heavy drinkers (3:3). The distance is great between a little wine for the sake of his stomach and drunkenness, but some know all too well how quickly that ground can be covered and what destructive results there can be. The validity of the case for either total abstention from or some degree of consumption of alcohol must be constructed from other principles (such as freedom, self-control, moderation, discipline, etc.), and may well have to rely more honestly on personal, situational, and cultural factors.

Whatever the extent of Paul's advice here, it gives us insight into Timothy. Paul's kind words to his dear friend show his concern for Timothy's physical well-being. It also demonstrates his awareness that people in ministry function as whole beings, and that dysfunctions in mental, emotional, spiritual, and physical areas take their toll on effectiveness.

5:24-25 Picking up directly from verse 22, Paul revealed the key difficulty in the task of choosing good leaders in the church. Some people lead sinful lives, while others pass by us before their sins become apparent, if they become apparent at all. A person must be known well before deciding whether he is qualified to serve the church in a leadership position. The judgment Paul referred to included both the judgment of God and the judgment required by Timothy in authorizing leaders. Paul was warning Timothy and us about the importance of not judging by immediate appearances. Sometimes problems are easy to see, but others will not be revealed until later.

In the same way, some people's good deeds may be conspicuous, while others' good deeds, done behind the scenes, won't be known until later. Many of the leadership qualities that Paul listed in 3:2-7 fit in this category. Some, like hospitality and gentleness, create immediate and visible results, while others, like household management and guilelessness, only become apparent over a period of time.

Both verses 24 and 25 explain why Paul instructed Timothy to choose church leaders carefully. Hasty assessment of men for leadership positions could mean overlooking sins or good qualities; then unqualified men might be chosen and qualified men set aside. The hard fact is that in time, a man's true personality is revealed, for better or for worse. It is far better for the church when leaders are carefully and prayerfully selected.

6:1-2a In the Roman culture of Paul's day, slavery was a deeply rooted institution. It was also widespread, since estimates place the number of slaves at 60 million, or half the population of the empire. Slaves conducted most of the functions of society, from the most menial tasks to work as tutors for children and estate managers. They were used as we use tools, machinery, and technology today. Slavery was economic rather than racially motivated. People usually became slaves as a result of war or poverty.

A great social and legal gulf separated masters and slaves. Both Paul and Peter gave instructions about master/slave relations (see 1 Corinthians 7:20-24; Galatians 3:28; Ephesians 6:5-9; Colossians 3:22-25; Titus 2:9-10; the book of Philemon; 1 Peter 2:13-25). The abolition of slavery was not on the horizon for masters and slaves in the Roman Empire, so instructions about this touchy topic became extremely valuable. While not speaking against the institution of slavery, they gave guidelines for Christian slaves and Christian masters.

Paul wrote specifically to Christians who are slaves, explaining that their attitude toward even their unbelieving masters should be full respect. This appeared to be an obvious instruction if the master were a Christian; but even so, then the slave should work all the harder. Even if the master were an unbeliever, however, the Christian slave should still treat him or her with full respect. By so doing, the name of God and his teaching will not be shamed.

Paul's counsel for the master/slave relationship can be applied to the employer/employee relationship today. The attitude and behavior of believers on the job will help or hurt others' openness to the gospel they share. Employees should work hard, showing respect for their employers. In turn, employers should be fair (Ephesians 6:5-9; Colossians 3:22-25). Our work should reflect our faithfulness to and love for Christ. In that way, Christian employees will be a positive witness for Christ to an unbelieving employer.

1 TIMOTHY 6:2B-21

FALSE TEACHING AND TRUE RICHES / 6:2B-10

In this closing section of his instructional letter, Paul returned to discussing how Timothy should handle the false teachers in Ephesus (see 1:3-11). After all, they were one of the causes for this letter. Paul told Timothy to stay away from those who just want to make money from preaching, and from those in the church who stray from the sound teachings of the gospel into controversial arguments.

6:2b-3 Once again Paul repeated the command for Timothy to teach the truths that Paul was giving and encourage everyone to obey them. Paul wanted to make sure Timothy understood that the false teachers were denying the truth, the sound wholesome teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ. Any teaching different from the Christian doctrine, based upon God's word, was false teaching. Any teaching different from the sound instruction of the gospel of Christ is false teaching. Some commentators believe that at least one of the Gospels (perhaps Luke) may have already been in circulation, allowing believers access to that "wholesome teaching" in written form. In any case, those teachings had been preserved orally and constantly taught to believers.

However, Paul's concern here was not about the form of the instruction, but that the false teachers disagreed with what Jesus Christ had taught and demonstrated. They erred in contradicting and discounting Jesus. False teaching is ungodly teaching; it cannot result in a godly life. Our applications of God's word will always depend on how accurately we have understood the teaching of God's word. But these false teachers were not merely mistaken in their doctrine; their evil went deeper. Or rather, it originated in deeper problems. They were not well-intentioned teachers who had made unfortunate mistakes. Their basic motivations were evil.

6:4 Paul revealed the real character of the false teachers behind their veneer of prestige. These are not very flattering words for a group of teachers who apparently thought very highly of themselves! Conceited describes the trait of a person having an excessively favorable opinion of his own ability or importance. The false teachers showed all that and more, yet Paul confronted that conceit by explaining that they were actually ignorant. The utter falsehood of both the content and the conclusions of their teaching was worthy not of pride, but shame. They did not agree with the truth, but instead had an unhealthy desire to quibble over the meaning of words (1:4, 6) that promoted speculation and led to arguments about ideas that came not from Scripture, but from the minds of the false teachers. The controversial ideas and the disputes about words had a devastating effect in the church. With the believers embroiled in arguments over meaningless theories and false doctrine, relationships began to deteriorate. Jealousy is followed by fighting, meaning competition and/or violent and bitter conflict. Slander and evil suspicions surely follow. The seeds of false teaching in Ephesus were yielding a harvest of bitterness.

6:5 Here are more characteristics of false teachers: they always cause trouble because they all had corrupt (debased, depraved, tainted) minds. Not only were they ignorant (6:4), but their minds were so corrupt that the truth (God's truth) was completely absent. They were motivated by getting rich. While Paul instructed the church about the Christian leaders' right to be paid for their services, he made it clear that they should not be greedy (3:3, 8) and should not consider their ministry as a way to get rich. Those who did clearly could not be serving the Lord Christ with pure motives, but instead were serving their selfish desires.

6:6 The false teachers thought religion was a means to get rich; instead, true religion is great wealth in itself when accompanied by contentment. One's religion does not come and go with the uncertainties of material wealth; faith in Christ, with contentment, is the wealth, independent of one's bankbook and possessions. The false teachers had it backward.

True religion (faith in Christ) requires training (4:7) and develops inner spiritual qualities, while at the same time being apparent in the way we relate to others (4:12). It exhibits true character exemplified in the way we serve others. Contentment grows from our attitude toward living God's way. To have contentment in Christ requires four decisions about the events and possessions of our life:

1. We must focus on what God has already allowed us to have.
2. We must disregard what we do not have.
3. We must refuse to covet what others may have.
4. We must give thanks to God for each and all of his gifts (4:3-4).

If we fail to make these decisions, our contentment will diminish.

Finally, the great wealth that motivated the false teachers was neither lasting nor capable of bringing contentment. Their earthly profits would be left behind. What brings great wealth has to do with eternal values. When material treasures become our focus, we quit contributing to our eternal accounts. Whatever gains we may experience in this life mean nothing if they cause us eternal bankruptcy (see Matthew 6:19-24).

This statement provides the key to spiritual growth and personal fulfillment. We should honor God and center our desires on him, and we should be content with what God is doing in our lives (see Philippians 4:11-13).

6:7 Paul followed up his statement about the true source of contentment by discounting any hope of ultimate contentment based merely on this life. The correct perspective on material possessions—money, houses, clothing, vehicles, jewels, land, etc.—remains eternally the same. They cannot last forever. We can lose, break, or ruin them in this life. We didn't bring them with us when we were born, and we cannot carry anything with us when we die.

6:8 Human beings have basic needs. Believers and unbelievers alike require food and clothing (also implying shelter) for survival. The difference should be that when believers' basic needs are met, they ought to be satisfied and content, requiring nothing more. In contrast, unbelievers are driven by society's standards and desires; they cannot be content with only basic needs being met because they must always strive for more.

6:9 After stating the simple plan for living faithfully, Paul challenged the world's view by showing the outcome of trying to gain contentment through the pursuit of wealth. The desire to be rich is, by its very nature, a desire that cannot be satiated. People who long to be rich cannot understand contentment because they can never have enough money. The temptation of money eventually traps people into doing anything to get money—illegal or immoral—even being willing to hurt others. People's desire for money feeds their greed. Soon their passion plunges them into ruin and destruction.

6:10 People often misquote this verse, saying, "money is the root of all evil." But it is the love of money that Paul speaks against. Money itself is not evil; in fact, money can do much good for the furthering of God's Kingdom. Money supports missionaries around the globe; money helps organizations fight for Christian causes in government; money supports churches and church leaders; money helps feed the hungry and clothe the poor. Obviously, while God doesn't need money (in fact, all the money in the world belongs to him), he can use money given by generous people to help those in need. These people can give because they control their money. The problem happens when money controls people.

People who love money are controlled by a ruthless, insatiable master, for the love of money can never be satisfied. Loving money is at the root of all kinds of evil: marriage problems, illegal acts, blowups in partnerships, envy, immorality, lying, ruthlessness, stealing, and a willingness to even hurt others if it makes money. The worst scenario, of course, is that money would actually lead a person from the faith. It's tragic when money replaces God in a person's life. These greedy people found themselves pierced with many sorrows. The picture is that they were being impaled by sharp objects that they continued to push against. Instead of God's way, they chose a path that was taking them deeper and deeper into a briar patch of trouble. Instead of the happiness they expected, money brought grief.

It would be a hazardous mistake to conclude that Paul is teaching that we should not be concerned about money. In fact, we should be respectfully asking God for funds with which to carry out our responsibilities and to help others. It is right to ask God for provision for daily life and to do his will (help children through college, pay off the church mortgage, etc.). Paul was concerned about greed more than he was about money.

PAUL'S FINAL INSTRUCTIONS / 6:11-21

In these final verses, Paul included personal words to Timothy, a final doxology to Jesus Christ, and parting words of instruction about those who were being false to the gospel by their lives and teaching.

6:11 In contrast to the "some" of verse 10 who had wandered from the faith in their quest for riches, Paul addressed Timothy as a man of God who should run from all these evil things, and instead to follow what is right and good. This involves wholehearted efforts to grow into the kind of person God has already declared he would be in eternity. To pursue a godly life means doing actions in line with God's character. These overlap in meaning—the first emphasizes obedience, while the second emphasizes the God-centered motives for obedience.

Faith and love are fundamental to Christianity and basic to Paul's teaching (see 1 Corinthians 13:13). The qualities of faith and love are constantly under improvement by the work of God's Spirit. Our capacity to trust must grow and be renewed, and the development of our love for God and for others involves a lifelong construction project. Believers are to pursue these in the sense that we practice what we already understand, while praying that we might understand and practice more.

Perseverance in persecution and trouble are vital for all believers; Timothy would need an extra dose of perseverance as he led a large congregation through difficult days ahead. Pursuing perseverance would require a willingness to undergo suffering.

Gentleness seems an odd quality for Timothy to pursue; after all, he was already timid and Paul had told him to deal firmly with false teaching. However, gentleness can reveal more power than roughness or harshness. Perhaps by mentioning this Paul was affirming a positive quality that was already a part of Timothy's character. The false teachers could have no power against a righteous, gentle leader with the truth on his side.

6:12 Using the same word he used in 1:18 to describe Timothy's work in Ephesus, Paul described furthering the gospel as a fight—but it is the good fight for what we believe. The verb tense in Greek implies that this fight is an ongoing, continual process requiring diligence and discipline. Timothy would continue a fight already begun by others. Believers today continue the fight for which Timothy and Paul offered their lives.

Those who fight the good fight of the faith can already hold tightly to their prize. Eternal life had been given to Timothy (as for all believers) at the moment of conversion (see John 5:24; 1 John 3:14; 5:13). When a person confesses faith in Jesus Christ as Savior, eternal life begins. Reflecting the confidence Paul had in the outcome of Timothy's life, Paul reminded him of what he had confessed so well before many witnesses. The specific incident Paul had in mind has been identified as unknown, but the fact of Paul and Timothy's long association would have given the elder any number of occasions to observe the younger's faith in action.

6:13-14 Several times in this letter, Paul has charged, commanded, and urged Timothy toward various actions. Here again, Paul made a command to Timothy (see 6:14). Just as Timothy made a good confession before many witnesses, Christ gave a good testimony before Pontius Pilate. The good testimony is understanding and telling who Jesus is. Jesus' trial before Pilate is recorded in the Gospels: Matthew 27:11; Mark 15:2; Luke 23:2-3; John 18:36-37. No matter how difficult circumstances might become, Timothy always would have the example of Jesus who remained faithful in the face of death.

Paul urged (6:13) Timothy to obey the commands with all purity, referring to Paul's previous instruction to continue in his pursuit of godly character. Then no one would be able to find fault with him. The commands need only be followed until our Lord Jesus Christ returns. At that time, the good fight will be over; the battle will be won.

6:15 The right time of the Second Coming is according to God's timetable. Paul's early teachings and writings show that he believed this return would occur very soon. However, at the time of this letter to Timothy, Paul realized that this return might not occur before his death. It would occur in God's own time. As Paul contemplated the glorious display of love and power that will be revealed when Christ returns, he acknowledged God's awesome and transcendent nature.

Paul's doxology may be words from an early Christian hymn or even a Jewish blessing. See Deuteronomy 10:17; Psalm 136:2-3; Revelation 17:14; 19:16 for similar words of praise to God. In any case, Paul's reference to God's plan immediately filled his mind with a word-vision of the one he served with his life. The phrase, King of kings and Lord of lords, reveals that there is no other way to ascribe more power and authority than to God alone. Paul used the common titles for human power, but enlarged them by investing in God supreme power over those we consider most powerful. God has no peer.

6:16 Having established some idea of an appropriate title for God, Paul now lists several of the notable characteristics of our divine ruler. God alone can never die. He is the only one having immortality in himself. He is not subject to death. Others may be given immortality, but only God has it inherent in his being.

Because he is eternal, he gives us eternal life. The bright glory of God's presence creates a barrier of light so brilliant that no human can approach him. Even if the light were removed, God remains invisible, unseen by human eyes (see Exodus 33:17-23; John 1:18). This does not mean God is unknowable, but that his holiness keeps us from seeing him.

God's legitimate power and position require two responses from us: honor and submission to his power. When we approach God, we must not emphasize our own understanding or self-confidence; instead, we must submit to him and worship his awesome majesty. Any claim to equality with God simply widens the gulf between us. As Paul pointed out to the Romans (Romans 1:21-22), those who treat God lightly will not be able to bear the weight of his judgment.

6:17 After concluding his doxology with a decisive "Amen," Paul returned to the matters at hand. Those most in danger of having an incorrect attitude toward God were the rich in this world. In verses 3-10, Paul had instructed those who did not have wealth, but deeply desired it. Here he focused on those who already possessed wealth. Ephesus was a thriving city, and the Ephesian church probably had at least some prosperous members. Perhaps some of the false teachers had already succeeded in amassing a degree of wealth for themselves.

Paul advised Timothy to deal with any potential problems by teaching that having riches carries great responsibility. The wealthy must not be proud, nor trust in their money. Pride was inappropriate because it indicated that the rich were basing their lives on something which will soon be gone. Rather, they should trust the living God. He gave them what they have. The rich must be careful to trust only in the living God for their security. The rich need not be ashamed of their riches; those riches are a gift from God, given to be enjoyed. There must always be a balance between avoiding a stale, ascetic life while at the same time keeping oneself from self-indulgence.

6:18 The rich are not to consume their riches on selfish pleasures; rather, they must use their money to do good. The general goal to do good is broken down into three categories:

1. Being rich in good works means practicing “hands-on” giving to others. People are sometimes more effectively helped by personal involvement than by the giving of material objects or money.
2. Giving generously to those in need strikes a blow against the self-centeredness of our times. We learn to do with less so that more may do with some.
3. Being always ready to share with others improves our ability to respond quickly and effectively. Experience can help us to always be ready to share.

We can experience a deep fellowship when believers make their resources available to one another. Being rich in good works may not necessarily benefit our financial statement, but in the long run it will be a far more valuable asset in God’s eyes.

6:19 Jesus talked about treasure in his Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 6:19-21). The rich must make certain to store up their treasure in heaven, investing their riches for eternity. This kind of investment includes tithing and giving offerings in church, but it is much broader. Any unselfish giving to meet the needs of others, especially the poor, creates a deposit in eternity. The person without God who selfishly pursues wealth will lay up a treasure of God’s wrath (James 5:1-5).

In so doing, those who give are those who provide a good foundation for the future and experience real life as it is meant to be. In contrast to those seeking riches and ending in ruin and destruction (6:9), these generous rich people find true life, both on earth and in eternity. Because God is the source of all life

(6:13), all those who live his way experience real living!

6:20 One last time, Paul exhorted, encouraged, and urged Timothy to guard the teachings and instructions given him. No matter how influential the false teachers would become, Timothy would remain guardian of the truth, teaching it without wavering and without compromise. Paul's ministry on earth would eventually end with his death; Timothy was entrusted with the truth of the gospel so that he, in turn, would pass it along to others. A guardian of the truth should not be involved in godless, foolish discussions or spend time talking with those who oppose him with their so-called knowledge, that is, the false teachers.

6:21 Those who followed the false teachers had wandered from the faith. "Wandered" (literally "missed the mark") does not imply a permanent condition, but a dangerous and fruitless one. True believers would not lose their salvation, but if they followed the false teachers, they would waste valuable time in nonsense—time that could have been spent learning about and sharing the Good News.

The closing benediction includes a plural you, indicating that Paul expected this letter to be read to the congregation and to other churches. Paul began and ended with grace. For him, as it should be for us, grace was never a sociable courtesy but a costly gift from God. Having experienced the grace of God, Paul never tired of praying that others would also experience this grace.

The book of 1 Timothy provides guiding principles for local churches, including rules for public worship and qualifications for overseers (elders, pastors), deacons, and special church workers (widows). Paul told the church leaders to correct incorrect doctrine and to deal lovingly and fairly with all people in the church. The church is not organized simply for the sake of organization, but so that Christ can be honored and glorified. While studying these guidelines, don't lose sight of what is most important in the life of the church—knowing God, working together in harmony, and taking God's Good News to the world.

2 TIMOTHY

INTRODUCTION

What thoughts and feelings must have filled Paul as he sat again in prison, knowing that he soon would face his executioner . . . and then his Lord. Reflecting on his ministry, Paul must have felt joy, remembering his conversion on the road to Damascus, his session with the Jerusalem elders, his trips throughout the world preaching the gospel and planting churches, the explosive spread of Christianity among Gentiles, and his faithful coworkers and close friends: Barnabas, Silas, Priscilla, Aquila, Luke, Peter, James, Mark, Lydia, and so many others. But Paul must have felt a twinge of sadness and regret as he recalled those who had harmed or deserted him or had left the faith: Demas, Alexander, Hymenaeus, and others. Undoubtedly, Paul also experienced moments of intense loneliness. He had been deserted twice—first by those in Asia (1:15), and then by those in Rome at his arrest (4:16). Paul’s emotions also must have included concern . . . for young believers, for the churches, and for those he had appointed to carry the ministry forward—young leaders such as Titus, Timothy, and Tychicus.

Paul knew that the new generation of church leaders was ready—trained, experienced, confident, articulate, courageous, and totally committed to Christ. In fact, already they had ministered in very difficult circumstances, confronting false teachers, organizing local churches, evangelizing the lost, and discipling believers. Titus had worked effectively with the infamous Cretans, and Timothy had led and nurtured the church at Ephesus.

As Paul lay in his cell, awaiting martyrdom at the command of the madman Nero, he was not alone with his feelings: visitors had come, Luke was present (4:11), and God was there. And Paul did not spend his final days and hours wallowing in despair—he encouraged and taught others, read (4:13), and wrote.

AUTHOR

Paul, the great apostle and missionary of the church.

Paul’s final words were bundled in a letter, to his beloved Timothy, his “true child in the faith” (1 Timothy 1:2). A much more personal and somber letter than the others, 2 Timothy contains no complex refutations of apostasy, detailed instructions for church leaders, profound theological treatises, extensive lessons for young believers, or exhilarating doxologies and benedictions. Instead, in this last letter, brimming with quiet emotion, Paul reflected on his life and encouraged, warned, instructed, and exhorted Timothy. It's as though Paul were saying, "I'm trusting you to carry on, Timothy. Stay faithful, stay strong, watch out, and take care!"

What last words would you write to your loved ones and friends? Paul's words flowed from his life of faith and reflected his deep commitment to his Lord. What could you say or write to encourage someone now?

For more about Paul, see the Author section in the Introduction to the book of Romans. See also the Introduction to the book of 1 Timothy.

DATE AND SETTING

Written about A.D. 66 or 67, from Rome.

Paul had written letters to Timothy (1 Timothy) and Titus in approximately A.D. 64-65, during his time of freedom between Roman imprisonments. Just about two years later, he wrote to Timothy again, but this time from prison. Note that the last three of Paul's thirteen letters were written to men who would lead the church after his death. Paul knew the importance of entrusting the ministry to reliable men and women who would be able to teach others (2:2).

Nero, the fifth Roman emperor, began to reign in A.D. 54, at sixteen years of age. The first few years of his rule were peaceful and gave promise of a bright future. During that time, Paul had appealed to Caesar at his trial in Caesarea (Acts 25:10-11) and thus had been brought to Rome to present his case (A.D. 61). It seems that when Paul eventually went to trial, he was cleared of all charges and freed to resume his ministry. For the next few years, Paul traveled extensively and wrote 1 Timothy and Titus. All this occurred during Nero's reign.

After marrying Poppaea, Nero became brutal and ruthless, killing his own mother, his chief advisers, Seneca and Burrus, and many of the nobility to seize their fortunes. Nero's thirst for publicity pushed him into excessive acts of decadence, including chariot races, combat between gladiators, and the gory spectacle of prisoners thrown to wild beasts. In A.D. 64, fire destroyed a large part of Rome. Suspected of ordering the fire himself (to make room for a new palace), Nero deflected blame by accusing the Christians, a devout religious minority who refused to worship the Emperor. Thus began the terrible persecution of the church, with torture, executions, and Coliseum entertainment. Tacitus wrote:

Their death was made a matter of sport; they were covered in wild beasts' skins and torn to pieces by dogs; or were fastened to crosses and set on fire in order to serve as torches by night. . . . There arose a feeling of pity because it was felt that they were being sacrificed not for the common good, but to gratify the savagery of one man. (Tacitus, Annals 15.44)

During this reign of terror for Christians, Paul was taken prisoner again, apparently at Nicopolis where he had intended to spend the winter (Titus 3:12). Paul was taken to Rome and imprisoned in the Mamertime dungeon, in the center of Rome near the forum.

Paul's first imprisonment (about A.D. 60-62) had been similar to house arrest. He lived in a rented house, in relative comfort but under Roman guard, and was able to welcome numerous visitors (Acts 28:23-30). In contrast, Paul's second Roman prison was dark, damp, dirty, and difficult to find (1:17). In the first, Paul had awaited trial with the privilege of a Roman citizen. In the second, he waited for death as a condemned criminal. Paul still was allowed to write and read, but he was lonely (he wanted to see his friends—4:9-11) and he was cold (he wanted his coat—4:13).

A few months after writing this letter to Timothy, according to tradition, Paul was beheaded on the Ostian Way outside Rome. This occurred shortly before Nero's own death, by suicide, in A.D. 68, just as the Roman senate was declaring Nero "an enemy of the people" because of the atrocities he had committed. Peter also was martyred during Nero's reign.

Timothy probably was still in Ephesus when he received Paul's letter. Paul was lonely and wanted Timothy to come and see him. He sent Tychicus to Ephesus with this letter, with the probable understanding that Tychicus would relieve Timothy of his duties there. Sent as the apostolic representative to that city, Timothy had been charged in Paul's first letter (about A.D. 64) with the responsibility of organizing the churches there and for rooting out the false teachers. While 2 Timothy contains pastoral counsel and instruction for the church, it is essentially a personal letter—Paul revealing his heart and soul to his dear friend.

For more on the church at Ephesus, see the Setting section in the Introduction to the book of 1 Timothy.

AUDIENCE

Timothy and the church at large.

Timothy represented the new generation of leadership for the church. He, Titus, and others were expected to fill the shoes of Paul, Peter, and the other apostles and church leaders. Paul had left Timothy in Ephesus and had given him responsibility for refuting the false teachers and organizing the local congregations. Paul had written Timothy (1 Timothy) with specific instructions for choosing elders and deacons and with a challenge to sound doctrine and personal discipline.

It is not surprising that Paul's final words would be penned to Timothy. Paul was instrumental in Timothy's coming to faith, and he thought of Timothy as a son. They experienced a closeness in friendship and in the body of Christ. Paul knew he could count on his beloved friend and coworker. For more on Timothy, see the Audience section in the Introduction to 1 Timothy.

Through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, Paul also was writing to the church at large—believers everywhere, then and in the years to come. Because this letter is so specific and personal, its message applies directly to individual Christians, especially church leaders. Much also can be learned from the close relationship enjoyed by Paul and Timothy. Like father and son, siblings, or very close friends, these men had worked together, prayed for each other, and loved one another. In a world hostile to Christ and those who would claim his name, Paul and Timothy had learned the importance of teamwork and of caring for their brothers and sisters in Christ. In fact, in the last few sentences of this letter, Paul referred to at least nine other fellow servants of Christ. If you were writing your last letter, what coworkers in the ministry would you name? Who is your “Timothy”? We must learn to work closely with other believers—the need and our task is too great to try to minister alone.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To inspire, challenge, and motivate Timothy to carry on the gospel ministry.

This letter to Timothy is tinged with sadness because Paul realized that soon he would be executed. Reminiscences (1:1-5; 3:10-11), references to death (1:10; 2:11) and suffering (1:12; 2:9; 3:11-12), mention of prison life (1:15-16; 2:9), and hints of impending martyrdom (4:6-8, 18) reveal Paul's realistic understanding of his plight. But this letter is not depressing—Paul filled it with notes of triumph as he wrote of his lifelong commitment to Christ (1:12; 2:11-13; 4:7-8) and as he challenged Timothy to carry on with the work to which they had both been called (1:6-7, 13-14; 2:1-7, 15; 3:14-17; 4:1-2, 5).

Paul had prepared Timothy for this day, and he was sure that his protégé was ready. So he wrote to remind Timothy of his call and the task that lay ahead. Paul also was aware of Timothy's shortcomings; he virtually called Timothy's timidity (1:7) being “ashamed” of Christ and of Paul himself (1:8). Paul was challenging Timothy to get his act together.

Paul was amazing. Although deserted by former friends and facing death, he continued to fight the good fight (4:7) and to challenge and inspire others to greatness. Paul's primary focus was to be faithful to Christ and to his call as a minister of the gospel. Next on Paul's list of priorities, however, stood his deep concern for the church and its new leaders. What holds top billing in your life—personal comfort, financial security, pleasure? As with Paul, if you focus on Christ, you will know how to live . . . and you will know how to die.

MESSAGE

Paul's introduction is tender, and every phrase exudes the love he has for Timothy (1:1-5). He then reminds Timothy of the qualities necessary for a faithful minister of Jesus Christ (1:6–2:13). Timothy should remember his call and use his gifts with boldness (1:6-12), keep to the truth (1:13-18), prepare others to follow him in the ministry (2:1, 2), be disciplined and ready to endure suffering (2:3-7), and keep his eyes and mind focused on Christ (2:8-13). Paul challenges Timothy to hold to sound doctrine, reject error and avoid godless chatter, correctly handle the word of truth (2:14-19), and keep his life pure (2:20-26).

Next, Paul warns Timothy of the opposition that he and other believers would face in the last days from self-centered people who use the church for their own gain and teach false doctrines (3:1-9). Paul tells Timothy to be prepared for these unfaithful people by remembering his example (3:10, 11), understanding the real source of the opposition (3:12, 13), and finding strength and power in the word of God (3:14-17). Then Paul gives Timothy a stirring charge: to preach the word (4:1-4) and to fulfill his ministry until the end (4:5-8).

Paul concludes with personal requests and items of information. In these final words, he reveals his loneliness and his strong love for his brothers and sisters in Christ (4:9-22). The main themes in the book of 2 Timothy include: Boldness, Faithfulness, Preaching and Teaching, and Error.

Boldness (1:5-12; 4:1-5). Paul knew that Timothy soon would face opposition and persecution and might become disheartened by Paul's imprisonment and death (1:8-9). He also knew that Timothy had the tendency to be timid, so Paul reminded him that God gives a spirit of power, love, and self-discipline, not timidity (1:7). And Paul urged Timothy to carry out his ministry without fear or shame, to utilize boldly the gifts of preaching and teaching that the Holy Spirit had given him.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. We can easily become discouraged when we are persecuted for our faith. And we can be intimidated by the threats of those who oppose us. But the Holy Spirit helps us to be wise and strong, and God honors our confident testimony for him even when we suffer. To get over our fear of what people might say or do to us, we must take our eyes off people and look only to God, remembering that he has promised to be with us through everything (see Romans 8:38-39). In what situations are you afraid to speak up for what you believe?

What can you do to strengthen your resolve to live more boldly for Christ?

Faithfulness (1:13-14; 2:1, 3-13; 3:14-15). Because of his difficult situation, Timothy may have been tempted to waver in his faith or even to desert the cause of Christ as others had done (4:10, 16). To resist this temptation, Timothy was to remember Christ's faithfulness in suffering and dying for our sins. In addition, Paul's own example was important, for he had been faithful through countless trials and was still serving Christ, even in prison. Paul urged Timothy to maintain sound doctrine, to be loyal and diligent, and to endure.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. We followers of Christ can count on being opposed and suffering because of what we believe and how we live. People don't like to be reminded that they are sinning and headed for hell. Even in our churches we may face rejection when we stand for the truth. But regardless of the cost, we are to be faithful to Christ and to faithfully proclaim his Word. As we trust Christ, he counts us worthy to suffer, and he will give us the strength we need to be strong and faithful to him. What can you do to prepare for times of discouragement?

Preaching and Teaching (2:2, 22-26; 3:16-17; 4:1-5). Paul had spent most of his life spreading the Good News, winning people to Christ, teaching new Christians, and establishing new churches. Paul had trained Timothy to follow in his footsteps, to preach and teach the gospel. So facing the reality of his own death, Paul passed the leadership torch to Timothy and encouraged him to train others who would be able to carry on after Timothy was gone. Timothy should train these men and women in sound doctrine, in being totally committed to Christ, and in how to teach. In large measure we have heard the gospel and have believed because Paul and Timothy were faithful to teach others how to teach others.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The two most important tasks of a Christian leader are evangelism (sharing the gospel with others and leading them to Christ) and discipleship (establishing new believers in the faith). A vital part of the discipleship process is preparing people to transmit God's word to others so that they in turn might pass it on. Of course it is not enough just to teach—teaching must be of the highest quality, mining the depths of God's word. Whom are you helping to disciple? What is your church doing to carefully train men and women to teach?

Error (2:14-21; 3:1-13; 4:9-18). Wherever there is truth, lies will arise. Human beings are sinful and will use anything, even religious causes, to meet their self-centered needs. Remember, too, that Satan is constantly twisting the truth and attempting to deceive, so we shouldn't be surprised that false teachers abound. Paul warned Timothy about heretics and spiritual dropouts. Timothy was not to be surprised, discouraged, or defeated by these false teachers and deserters. Instead, he should stay strong in his faith, confront and refute those who would lead the church astray, and continue to boldly preach and teach the truth. And Paul reminded Timothy that God's word, not theories and philosophies, contains God's truth (see 2:15; 3:16-17).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The Bible warns that in the final days before Christ returns, false teachers will be prevalent. Thus spiritual error and heretics will be increasing through the years. The antidote for false teaching is keeping our eyes on Christ and studying God's word. We must be disciplined and ready to reject heresy. We must know the word of God as our sure defense against error and confusion. How much time each week do you spend in Bible study? What new Christian friend can you help get grounded more firmly in the word?

OUTLINE OF 2 TIMOTHY

I. Foundations of Christian Service (1:1–2:26)

II. Difficult Times for Christian Service (3:1–4:22)

2 TIMOTHY 1

GREETINGS FROM PAUL / 1:1-2

As Paul wrote this second letter, the Christian church throughout the empire was facing severe persecution and hardship. Emperor Nero had begun a major persecution in A.D. 64 as part of his plan to pass the blame for the great fire of Rome from himself to the Christians. This persecution spread across the empire and included social ostracism, public torture, and murder.

Thus, the tone of this letter is somber. Paul, imprisoned for the last time, knew he would soon die. Unlike Paul's first imprisonment in Rome in a house where he continued to teach (Acts 28:16, 23, 30), this time he was probably confined to a cold dungeon, awaiting his death (4:6-8). As Paul awaited execution, he wrote this letter to his dear friend Timothy, a younger man who was like a son to him (1:2). How Timothy must have cherished this last letter from his beloved mentor and friend.

1:1 As at the beginning of 1 Timothy, Paul identifies himself by name and also by his authority. Paul was an apostle, meaning "one who is sent." Paul was not one of the original twelve disciples (who were called apostles after Jesus' resurrection), yet Jesus appeared to Paul personally and commissioned him to be an apostle (Acts 9:1-6; 26:12-18). Paul did not seek this apostleship; instead, he was chosen by God. Thus, Paul could truthfully say he was an apostle by God's will. Obviously, this formal introduction was unnecessary for Timothy; however, Paul knew that his letters and teachings ultimately would reach a much larger audience, so he included these credentials in the salutation.

The phrase, the life he has promised through faith in Christ Jesus, provides almost a summary statement of Paul's theology. To have faith in Christ Jesus involves trusting him, identifying with him, seeing ourselves under his protection and authority, and recognizing his presence in us.

1:2 Paul most likely met the young Timothy and his mother, Eunice, and grandmother, Lois (1:5), when Paul and Barnabas visited Lystra, a city in the province of Galatia, on the first missionary journey (see Acts 14:8-21). The young disciple traveled the empire with Paul, preaching and teaching the Good News. He became Paul's assistant—traveling with, and sometimes for, the great apostle.

That Paul referred to Timothy as my dear son reveals the special relationship that had developed between them, like a father and son. The term of endearment also indicates that this letter will be directed more toward Timothy himself.

Grace and peace appear in the greeting of all of Paul's letters. In his letters to Timothy, however, he added mercy (see also 1 Timothy 1:2). "Mercy" pictures God's "lovingkindness" so often written about in the Old Testament. God's mercy helps us day by day. Paul loved Timothy dearly, so he added "mercy" to reassure Timothy of God's constant protection and guidance, especially important as Paul faced his own death.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO BE FAITHFUL / 1:3-18

Paul's gentle words provide a clearer picture of Timothy's character. After their years of working companionship, the separated ministries had been difficult for both men. The parting had been painful (1:4). When Paul thought of his young disciple's faithfulness, he was reminded of Lois and Eunice, who had made a contribution to Timothy's faith. With these examples in mind, Paul was encouraged, and he proceeded to offer encouragement to Timothy. He elaborated on their shared role as guardians, heralds, and teachers of the gospel.

1:3 Paul constantly prayed for the churches he founded and visited (see Romans 1:8; Philippians 1:3; Colossians 1:3); and Paul prayed constantly for Timothy, his friend, his fellow traveler, his son in the faith, and a strong leader in the Christian church. Although the two men were separated from each other, their prayers provided a source of mutual encouragement. Sitting in a damp Roman prison cell, the great missionary Paul could no longer preach and travel, but he could pray. Paul's dearest friend, Timothy, ministered in Ephesus with believers very dear to him. Paul expressed his thankfulness to God for Timothy and his ministry, praying for him night and day. Paul knew he would die soon, but Timothy had been well prepared to carry on strong leadership in the Christian church. Paul would die; Christ's message would not.

Paul's almost parenthetical statement, that he worshiped God with a clear conscience mirrors his words in 1 Timothy 1:5 (also Acts 24:16). Most likely, Paul was describing his life of service to God as being wholehearted and without regrets (see Romans 1:9). As Paul looked back over his life (mainly his life since his call to apostleship and ministry), he could confidently say that he had accomplished what God had called him to do.

1:4 We don't know when Paul and Timothy had last parted, but it was probably when Paul was arrested and taken to Rome for his second imprisonment. The tears they had shed at parting had revealed the depth of their relationship. Timothy brought Paul great joy. Paul longed to see Timothy again, so twice more in this letter Paul requested that Timothy do his best to come to him soon (see 4:9, 21).

1:5 Timothy's mother and grandmother, Eunice and Lois, were early Christian converts, possibly through Paul's ministry in their home city, Lystra (Acts 16:1). They had communicated their strong Christian faith to Timothy, even though his Greek father (Acts 26:1) was probably not a believer. Paul mentioned that he knew Timothy sincerely trusted the Lord because Timothy's genuine faith stood in bold contrast to the insincerity of many who had deserted Paul (see 1:15; 2:17-18; 3:1-9, 13; 4:3-4, 10, 14, 16). Paul had no doubts concerning Timothy's faith.

Sincere faith means possessing heartfelt trust, not merely professing religious words. We must have genuine, authentic faith to face our work and challenges. Faith requires us to be steadfast and unwavering when we are under pressure or facing opposition. To trust God each day is a decision we must make, not an emotion that we feel. Is your faith halfhearted? Do you rely on how you feel to determine your faithfulness to God?

1:6 In telling Timothy to fan into flames the spiritual gift God gave him, Paul was encouraging him to persevere. At the time of his ordination, Timothy had received a special gift of the Spirit to enable him to serve the church (1 Timothy 4:14). This gift was most likely the gift of ministry, the special grace from God to do Christian service. Verse 7 supports that concept. Paul's words, when I laid my hands on you, most likely meant that Timothy's spiritual gift had been given to him, along with a prophecy, when Paul and the elders laid their hands on him and set him apart for ministry.

Rather than asking Timothy to restart a cold fire, Paul was encouraging him to fan a young fire to keep it at full flame. Timothy did not need new revelations or new gifts; he needed only to "fan" the gift of leadership he already had received, as well as to have courage and self-discipline for holding on to the truth in the days to come (see 1:13-14). When Timothy used his gift, the Holy Spirit would go with him and give him power. God never gives us a task to do without empowering us to carry it out.

1:7 Timothy experienced constant opposition to his message and to himself as a leader. His youth (see 1 Timothy 4:12), his association with Paul, and his leadership had come under fire from believers and nonbelievers alike. Perhaps Timothy felt intimidated, angered, even helpless in face of the opposition from the false teachers. Whatever the degree of his difficulties, Paul urged Timothy to boldness by reminding him of his call, his gift, and God's provision (see 1:6). God has not given his people a spirit of fear and timidity; rather God provides:

- Power—We do not need to have naturally powerful personalities. God gives strength of character and confidence that wins us respect when we face opposition as we speak, preach, and live the truth. God supernaturally replaces any timidity on the servant's part with boldness. Such power is difficult to discredit.
- Love—Accompanying the power to speak the truth must be love for the listeners, believers and nonbelievers alike. Love separates Christians from the heathen world around them. Indeed, love separated the minister of Christ from the false teachers. Such love is difficult to dismiss.
- Self-discipline—This can also be translated “self-control” or “sound mind.” In order to lead others, true ministers must control themselves. To put it another way, a good leader must have a cool head. Such control, such “soundness” is difficult to disclaim.

All of these qualities are gifts of the Spirit, not just natural tendencies. They function best in harmony. Under the pressures of leadership, people tend to gravitate toward a desire for power and boldness as the most effective tools for success. But used alone, these qualities are self-defeating. The inclusion of love and self-control clearly indicates that a leader's effectiveness comes from God's Spirit. We may be impressed by a leader who exhibits boldness and power, but without love or self-control, such a leader is little more than a bully.

1:8 In this time of mounting persecution, Timothy may have been struggling with fears as he continued to preach the gospel. His fears would have been based on fact—believers were being arrested and executed. Against such opposition, Paul urged Timothy to never be ashamed to tell others about the Lord, and not to be ashamed that Paul sat in prison for his testimony. Paul was sure of God's hand in his present situation, and that he was in prison for Christ. Paul told Timothy to be ready to suffer. Eventually, Timothy would be jailed for preaching the gospel (Hebrews 13:23). But Paul promised Timothy that God would give him reliable strength and that he would be able to endure if suffering came. When believers undergo suffering, they need not rely on their own strength for survival and sustenance; instead, God gives power and strength to endure.

1:9 Salvation forms the core of the gospel, the Good News. There would be no gospel without the sacrifice that Jesus Christ made for our sins. God saved his people; God chose his people to live a holy life. God's purpose in salvation was to redeem people for himself—people who lived to glorify him. Holy living seeks God's view instead of the self-centered view. Holiness expects to find God involved in every facet of life. Holiness consistently turns away from self-pleasing answers in order to please God.

God did this not because we deserved it, but because that was his plan long before the world began—to show his love and kindness to us through Christ Jesus. Salvation and holiness rely on the Giver alone, not on the receiver. God's sovereign choice alone, through his planned purpose and his astounding grace, allowed sinners to receive salvation and the right to stand holy before him. Everything fits into the framework of God's sovereignty. We create neither the opportunity nor the possibility of our salvation. God graciously allows us to simply respond to his plan. We are saved only because of Jesus' death on the cross in our place. Only because he took the punishment we deserved does God offer salvation and holiness.

1:10-11 Salvation through Christ was planned by God since eternity; it was made plain to people by the coming of Christ Jesus, our Savior. This coming was in human form—Christ Jesus on earth, in a human body, preaching, teaching, healing, dying, and rising again. His becoming visible and touchable allowed humans access to him in a way that had not been available before the Incarnation. Through his death and resurrection, Christ broke the power of death and showed us the way to everlasting life. He ended death's claim of invincibility and mortally wounded this terrible foe. All human beings still must die, but death is not the end. Believers are given eternal life beginning at the moment of salvation. Believers are immortal—of necessity dying physically, but not forever. They will rise again. This is the mystery our Savior, Jesus Christ, brought to light through the Good News. Paul had been commissioned to proclaim this Good News. As a preacher, Paul announced or proclaimed the message; as an apostle, he acted as one who was sent; as a teacher, he imparted knowledge and gave instruction. Timothy obviously already knew this information. It seems that Paul added these words as he marveled at the wonder of his own call to such a tremendous responsibility.

1:12 Because Paul had traveled the empire announcing and teaching the Good News, he was suffering in prison. His faithfulness to God's call had led him to suffering as a common criminal. But Paul had no doubts and no apologies. He was not ashamed, for he knew he had put his confidence in the right Person and had given his life for the right cause. A lifetime of experience with the Lord—joys, sorrows, pain, frustration, persecution, prayer, ministry, guidance, sustenance—had taught Paul about God in whom he trusted.

The phrase, he is able to guard what I have entrusted to him, (literally, “my deposit”) has been taken to mean: (1) Paul knew that God would guard the souls of those converted through his preaching; (2) Paul trusted God to guard his own soul until Christ’s second coming; or (3) Paul was confident that, though he was in prison and facing death, God would carry out the gospel ministry and guard the teaching through others such as Timothy. The word for “deposit” carries the meaning of placing valuables in the hands of a friend who would keep them safe while you are on a journey. This meaning supports view 3 above, that the deposit was Paul’s message and ministry (see 1:14; to 1 Timothy 6:20).

Paul may have expressed his confidence to encourage Timothy, who was undoubtedly discouraged by the problems in Ephesus and fearful of persecution. Even in prison, Paul knew that God was still in control. No matter what setbacks or problems we face, we can trust fully in God. He will fulfill all his promises on the day of his return.

1:13 Timothy did not need to wonder about the content of right teaching—he could always recall Paul’s teaching and read Paul’s letters as his pattern. Like a sure foundation, Paul’s pattern would keep Timothy from straying from the truth. Timothy had every resource needed to carry on his ministry, and it boiled down to teaching only the truth, and living in the faith and love that he had in Christ Jesus. Sound teaching requires both faith in the heart and genuine love for the Lord. Sound teaching also helps people remain true to the tenets of the Christian faith because it refers to orthodox teaching (see 1 Timothy 1:10; 6:3).

1:14 Timothy was to carefully guard the truth that had been entrusted to him—not by burying it and keeping it hidden, but by entrusting it to faithful men and women, who would teach it to others, who in turn would teach it to others, and on through the centuries. Because men like Timothy guarded the truth as Paul had commanded, two thousand years later we too have the true gospel, the sound doctrine, that we are commanded to entrust to others. Only with the help of the Holy Spirit could the truth remain untainted, guarded, and protected as it passed through the centuries.

1:15 Ephesus was the leading city in the province of Asia, if not all of Asia Minor. By saying that all the Christians had deserted him, Paul may have been referring to a general lack of concern or support for him in his difficult time of need. Many had refused to stand up for him or at least stay at his side during his trial. This occurred not accidentally, but apparently on purpose. This caused Paul much pain. The “everyone” was not literal, but was used by Paul as a sweeping generalization. Those who were resisting Timothy were, in the same action, abandoning Paul. The fact that just a few had remained faithful heightened Paul’s sense of having been deserted.

Nothing more is known about Phygelus and Hermogenes, who evidently opposed Paul’s ministry and/or his authority; the fact that Paul named them could mean that he least expected their desertion or that he knew they were in Ephesus. They may have held leadership positions. Apparently Timothy knew the situation, for Paul added no further details. In any case, these men serve as a warning that even leaders can fall.

1:16 In contrast to those who deserted him, Paul mentioned Onesiphorus as a true and loyal friend. Unashamed of Paul’s imprisonment, Onesiphorus refreshed Paul. The stigma attached to Paul’s chains and any concern about being identified as a friend of this prisoner did not faze this faithful brother who visited and encouraged Paul in prison. Paul prayed that God would show special kindness to him and all his family for his kindness to Paul.

1:17 Onesiphorus lived in Ephesus, but for some reason had been in Rome and, while there, had gone out of his way to search for Paul until he had found him. The aging apostle saw in Onesiphorus a brother who allowed neither inconvenience nor potential embarrassment to keep him from tracking Paul down. Onesiphorus’s visits had refreshed the lonely prisoner.

1:18 Paul prayed that the Lord would show Onesiphorus special kindness on the day of Christ’s return. He was certain that there would be an accounting of each person’s life, and that unrewarded service for Christ in this life would be openly proclaimed. Apparently Timothy was familiar with Onesiphorus and his service in Ephesus. The service Onesiphorus rendered to Paul in faraway Rome was not isolated; Onesiphorus had a record of service in Ephesus as well. Paul’s statement to Timothy gives us a beautiful insight into the character of this otherwise unknown servant of God.

2 TIMOTHY 2

A GOOD SOLDIER OF CHRIST JESUS / 2:1-13

Good parents want their children eventually to leave home and succeed on their own. But after the good-byes and the well-wishes, parents wonder, “Did we teach them well enough to survive?” So parents continue to offer advice. Paul’s last letter to Timothy sounds like wise parental counsel. After affirming Timothy for the good character he had already demonstrated (see 1:5), Paul hinted at Timothy’s “debt” of faith to his mother and grandmother (see 1:5). Then he expressed his confidence in Timothy as the right choice to carry on the ministry in Ephesus. Like a father discussing his son’s future choices, Paul used three vocations to illustrate what it’s like to serve God: military service, athletic training, and farming. Each vocation showed Timothy that he, and all Christians, must work hard and trust God for the long-range results.

2:1 Many of Paul’s associates had deserted him, but at least one had remained (1:15-16). Paul challenged his dear son to be unashamed of the gospel, unashamed of his standing as a leader in the Christian church, unafraid of the false teachers, courageous through hardship and persecution. How? Through the special favor God gave him in Christ Jesus. How can someone be strong with God’s favor? The term implies being helped by someone else, in this case God. Paul was telling Timothy to draw strength from God as he focused on the favor that he would receive through his relationship with Christ Jesus. And he should use this strength in God’s service.

2:2 Timothy heard Paul preach to many diverse groups of people. The message Paul wanted Timothy to “guard” (1:14) was not a privately shared secret, but the accumulation of public teaching. Here Paul reminded Timothy that his essential role as guardian meant ensuring that these great truths were taught to trustworthy people who are able to pass them on to others. Timothy was to keep the process of teaching going. This is a pattern for discipleship. It requires leaders to have a program for developing new leaders who can carry on the ministry. Since Paul, there has been a link from disciple to disciple, from generation to generation. We must keep that link intact. Paul was telling Timothy to pass on what had proven to be true and confirmed by many reliable witnesses.

Paul told Timothy to entrust that truth to reliable people who were both loyal to the faith and able to teach. The stress was on reliability more than position

(see v. 21). Like ripples from a stone thrown into a pool of water, the gospel would spread across the world. When Paul wrote these words to Timothy, he realized that the transmission of the gospel truth to the next generation was passing into the hands of second-generation believers. Up to this point, the Good News was being spread solely by word of mouth and the lives of believers. The Gospels and various letters written by Paul and others may have just begun to be circulated, but they were not gathered into a book called the New Testament until years later. For a while, Timothy had the only copy of 2 Timothy in existence. Part of entrusting the gospel to others was accomplished when painstaking, handwritten copies of the precious letters were made.

If today's church consistently followed Paul's advice, there would be an incredible spread of the gospel as well-taught believers would teach others and commission them, in turn, to teach still others. Disciples need to be equipped to pass on their faith; new believers must be taught to make disciples of others (see Ephesians 4:12-13).

2:3 Paul had given this warning in Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch (Acts 14:22-23). Thus Paul was returning to a theme that he knew would test the mettle of his disciple—suffering. Paul wanted young Timothy to have no illusions: being faithful to the truth, unwilling to twist it for personal gain (unlike many of the false teachers, 1 Timothy 6:3-5), and constantly preaching it even against the persecution that would inevitably lead to suffering. As Paul had suffered, so Timothy would endure suffering along with him (he was eventually imprisoned, see Hebrews 13:23).

Paul followed with three examples to illustrate the attitude that Christ's followers must have through suffering (for the same three examples, see 1 Corinthians 9:7, 24). Each example encouraged Timothy in a different aspect of his ministry.

First, Paul wrote of the soldier. Paul often used military metaphors (see, for example, Romans 7:23; 2 Corinthians 6:7; 10:3-5; Ephesians 6:10-18; Philippians 2:25; 1 Timothy 1:18; Philemon 2). From the military model, Timothy should learn endurance, purpose, bravery, and obedience. Every soldier expects to lose personal autonomy and to experience adverse conditions; so Timothy should expect both hardship and suffering in his ministry of the gospel.

2:4 Paul instilled a sense of purpose and obedience in Timothy. A good soldier obeys the commanding officer. The soldier's call to service takes precedence over the affairs of this life, referring to any business or distraction that gets in the way of the mission. The phrase tied up means "entangled, absorbed." While this life's involvements are not wrong in themselves, they become a problem if the Christian gets so entangled in them that his or her ministry suffers. Christian workers, whether pastors or laymen, must watch their outside involvements carefully. Business ventures, serving on committees or boards, volunteer assignments, and/or home projects can eat up valuable time and energy. Paul wanted Timothy to understand that a good minister of the gospel must have a single-minded purpose—to preach the truth and, if necessary, to suffer for it.

Renouncing whatever could entangle him or her leaves the good soldier free to obey without reservations. This in turn satisfies the one who has enlisted you in his army. The effectiveness of a military unit depends on its single-minded commitment to follow the leader in the accomplishment of the mission. Christ demands unquestioning loyalty and obedience from his servants.

2:5 Next Paul used the athlete as an example. A competitor had to know the rules of his event, train diligently with an understanding of those rules, and finally compete according to the rules. Competitors in the Olympic games also had rules regarding their training—they were required to swear that they had trained for at least ten months. Only then could a competitor be qualified to enter an event. Every event was governed by rules and boundaries; an athlete who failed to compete within those boundaries faced disqualification. But those who competed fairly were eligible to receive the victor's prize.

What were the Lord's rules that Paul wanted Timothy to follow? We must be careful not to give the impression that Christians are rules-oriented or legalistic. We do, however, live under the rule of Christ. We have become athletes by God's grace through faith in Christ. We have accomplished nothing to merit that status, but Christ freely made us members of his team. We must wholeheartedly enter into training and competition (ministry to the church and the world) representing Jesus Christ in every facet of our lives.

2:6 From farmers, Timothy should learn that physical labor produces results. But only hardworking farmers will enjoy the fruit of their labor—a good crop. The farmer knows that seeds will not plant themselves; the harvest will not walk into the barn. The farmer must go out into the fields to sow the seed, water it, protect it, and finally harvest the crop. The reward will be a share of the crops for the farmer and his family to eat, and the rest to sell.

The soldier, athlete, and farmer all teach us the same lesson—to persevere to the end—while also helping us understand other requirements for Christian service.

- The soldier must trust the commanding officer and desire to please him so that obeying the commander becomes central, even when difficulties are encountered. Pleasing Christ gives strength to endure hardship.

- The athlete accepts the rules of the competition in order to complete the challenge of the game, including its difficulties.
- The farmer works hard at plowing, planting, waiting, weeding, and harvesting, and is entitled to enjoy the results.
- The soldier submits to the officer; the athlete to the code of the competition; the farmer to the laws of nature and agriculture. The believer submits to Jesus Christ. In him we have a gracious commanding officer: one who provides an example and directions for our course, and who rewards the hard and patient work of his servants.

2:7 Either Paul was worried that Timothy was not getting the point, or he was confident that the Lord would give Timothy understanding and insight into the wisdom of Paul's words as Timothy reflected on them. Whether what Paul wanted him to think about referred to the three illustrations above or to all of Paul's words to Timothy, the point remains that all believers need to rely on God's wisdom as they reflect on Scripture in order to understand how to apply it to their lives.

2:8-9 Paul's response begins with Jesus Christ. Paul firmly stated that Jesus is fully man (a man born into King David's family) and fully God (raised from the dead). These phrases express a central doctrine for all Christians and the core of the Good News.

Paul made two emphases about Jesus Christ. First, that Jesus Christ is risen from the dead. Because Christ alone has conquered death, he alone can be our Lord. His resurrection encourages any who suffer that they can be hopeful in him. Second, that Jesus Christ is the royal Messiah, the descendant of David. Christ alone has the messianic qualification, and he alone fulfills the promises of God to David that he would rule forever. So Paul stressed Jesus' humanity, showed how Jesus is connected with the Old Testament promises to David, and encouraged all believers to endure hardship because of what Christ has done for us. Paul was chained in prison and was suffering because of this message. He was being treated like a criminal. Such was the persecution against believers—they were considered criminals by the Roman authorities.

But chains could not stop the word of God, for it cannot be chained. By word of God, Paul meant the gospel truth. Although Paul was sitting in chains, he did not feel ashamed or worthless. He knew that the gospel message, entrusted to Timothy and other faithful people, could not be chained (Philippians

1:12-18; 1 Thessalonians 3:1). Even if the Romans succeeded in imprisoning, even killing, every Christian leader, they could never stop the spread of the Good News. God's word would continue to spread, despite persecution, and change lives everywhere.

2:10 Despite Paul's imprisonment, God's word would continue to work, calling out to those God has chosen (those who had not yet trusted in Christ as Savior). Paul could confidently endure anything knowing that God remained in control. Sometimes suffering has no other benefit than what others will learn from our experience of pain. A woman endures the pains of childbirth for the sake of her child. We must never think of suffering as some form of work of merit to earn our salvation or to work off our guilt, nor as some form of punishment from God. Although Paul experienced very real pain as he spread the gospel, he focused on the results of his suffering—others were finding salvation in Christ.

Who are "the chosen"? While the concept of "election" has generated fierce doctrinal differences, most of these differences come from theological and philosophical points of view, not the Bible itself. In this context, Paul indicated that the chosen are those to whom will be brought salvation and eternal glory. Paul makes no claim to know who they are. Their identification falls under the sovereignty of God. For Paul, God authored salvation and commissioned him to spread the word; God knows who will respond. Paul was so sure of God's purpose that he was willing to suffer to see that salvation realized.

2:11-13 This true saying quoted in these verses was probably an early Christian hymn or a quotation used in a Christian ceremony; though it would be equally proper to say that Paul may have provided here, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, another one of the early hymns of the church.

The first couplet of this hymn contrasts death and life—the believer's death to sin at the moment of salvation and the new life begun now with Christ in the world and in eternity. Believers have died with Christ because they have identified with him as symbolized by the sacrament of baptism. The promise is that their identification with him in death means that he will raise them to live with him.

This second couplet contrasts endurance and rewards. Those who live for Christ may face severe hardship that must be endured. Christ endured and now reigns (1 Corinthians 15:25); all believers who endure to the end shall also reign with him (Revelation 3:21; 5:10; 20:4).

The third couplet reveals that commitment to Christ must be total, no turning back; to deny results in being denied (see also Matthew 10:32-33). The Greek tense in the phrase “if we deny” is future. These words provided a solemn warning; but to deny Christ was unthinkable to the early Christians, even in the face of mounting persecution. True believers might be faithless and weak at times; they might falter when giving a testimony (see 2:13), but they would never deny their Lord.

The last couplet reveals the depth of the relationship between believers and Christ the Lord; when we fail at times, this does not mean God will reject us forever. These words apply not to faithless unbelievers, but to believers who at times fail the Lord. Humans, by their very nature, are prone to failure; and Christians, though born again, are still human. But even when believers are unfaithful, God remains faithful. Believers are secure in Christ’s promises. This does not give a license for faithlessness; rather, it eases our conscience when we fail, allowing us to come back to the Father and start anew. God does not deny those for whom he died, for he cannot deny himself.

AN APPROVED WORKER / 2:14-26

The second half of chapter 2 echoes the first letter to Timothy. Apparently, the task of confronting wrong teaching and continuing the good work of discipling believers was not past the crisis stage. As he had done previously, Paul emphasized to Timothy that his moral and spiritual conduct would provide the greatest confirmation of his teaching. No matter how others may respond to the gospel, Timothy himself must remain a consistent example (1 Timothy 4:12).

2:14 Paul’s instruction in the previous verses was meant for all the believers, not just Timothy. These instructions would need to be given often, and Timothy would need to remind and command everyone. All believers, no matter how many years they have believed, need to be reminded of the basis of their faith and how to relate that faith to circumstances of life.

Paul urged Timothy to remind the believers not to argue over unimportant details (stop fighting over words) because such arguments are useless, and even harmful. False teachers caused strife and divisions by their meaningless quibbling over unimportant details (see 1 Timothy 6:3-5). Quarreling about words is a major problem today. Churches split over nonessentials. Quarrelsome people nitpick church programs, undermine productivity with criticism, and verbally attack the innocent. When someone shows a pattern of quarrelsomeness, church leaders should visit that person to deal with the issues in private.

The false teachers were promoting myths and pedigrees (1 Timothy 1:4) and quibbled about words and details that focused not on Scripture, but on their own ideas. This took valuable time away from teaching the truth of Scripture and spreading the gospel. The believers who got caught up in these quarrels about words wasted their time, and some even ended up “ruined” rather than being spiritually strengthened.

2:15 The antithesis of the false teachers are ministers who work hard for God. A good worker who correctly explains the word of truth would be the most effective silencer of the false teachers. The Christians would need unity, strength, and the truth of the gospel to survive the persecutions ahead, to impart the truth to future generations. This incredible responsibility means individual teachers, ministers, and leaders must seek not the approval of people, but the approval of God. An unashamed worker can present his or her life and ministry to God, knowing that God will approve the quality of work. Approval of one’s ministry before God will depend on how well one has proclaimed, explained, and applied the word of truth. We must help the gospel cut a straight path and do nothing to hinder it.

2:16 In important areas of Christian teaching, believers should carefully work through disagreements. But bickering long hours over words and theories that are not central to the Christian faith and life are not more than godless, foolish discussions that provoke anger and lead to more and more ungodliness. Learning and discussing are not bad unless they keep believers constantly focusing on false doctrine or unhelpful trivialities. Believers must not let anything keep them from their work for and service to God. Paul said that the false teachers who engaged in teaching that is contrary to God’s word will advance in ungodliness. The false teachers will progress to even worse forms of disruption and sinfulness (see 3:9).

2:17-18 Paul understood the addictive power of false teaching as people feel the need to be in on these supposedly “intellectual” discussions. Paul compared the spiritual deterioration (“more and more ungodliness,” 2:16) caused by this false teaching to cancer, a fatal disease. The spread and deadly result of false teaching could not be more aptly described.

Hymenaeus is also mentioned in 1 Timothy 1:20, where he is included with a man named Alexander. Paul had handed these men over to Satan—put them out of the church. Just as cancer must be removed from the body for it to survive, these false teachers were removed from the body of believers so they could cause no more harm. Nothing further is known about Philetus. The false teaching of Hymenaeus and Philetus that the resurrection of the dead had already occurred was undermining some of the believers’ faith. These false teachers denied the resurrection of the body. These men in Ephesus grew up under Greek philosophy and a Greek understanding of the world. Greek philosophy viewed the spirit as immortal and the body as evil. Thus, a doctrine that taught the resurrection of the body was especially difficult to believe. So the false teachers tried to combine the doctrine of the resurrection with Greek philosophy in order to make it make sense to them. They taught that when a person became a Christian and was spiritually reborn, that was the only resurrection he or she would ever experience. To them, resurrection was symbolic and spiritual, not real and physical. But this was a lie.

2:19 False teaching, for all its enticing qualities, will not last. Although it plagued the first-century church and still has footholds today, it cannot prevail against God's truth which stands like a foundation stone. Heresies, false teachers, even persecution, cannot destroy the truth taught in God's churches. It stands and will stand until Christ returns.

These next two phrases appear as if they were written on the foundation stone described above (for a similar use of the metaphor, see Romans 4:11; 1 Corinthians 9:2). This inscription can be compared to God's seal—a sign of authenticity and approval.

The first statement, The Lord knows those who are his, may refer to the words of Moses at the time of Korah's rebellion. Korah and several associates challenged Moses' leadership. Moses replied that the Lord himself would reveal to all who were truly his (Numbers 16:4-5). In a shocking display of power, God vindicated Moses' leadership.

These words should encourage all believers. False teachers may cause problems, but God knows his true followers. The Lord sees all who preach and teach in his name, and he knows those who are his.

This second statement, Those who claim they belong to the Lord must turn away from all wickedness, could be from Numbers 16:26 (in the same context as above); however, most commentators prefer to compare it with Isaiah 52:11, citing the use of the same verb in the Greek translation of Isaiah (Septuagint). Those who are the Lord's, those who call on his name, must be responsible to turn away from wickedness.

Both inscriptions together remind the believers of God's sovereign control over his church and the believers' responsibility to turn from evil and maintain pure and holy lives. Timothy did not need to fear for the future of the church, for God was in control. Timothy's responsibility, and indeed the responsibility of every believer, was to stay free from sin and the contamination spread by the false teachers.

God does his part by helping us discern true from false believers; then we must do our part in turning away from wickedness. We must not only repudiate the false teachers, we must also refuse to take part in their false teaching. We should not attend or sponsor meetings, purchase tapes or books, or support them in any way.

2:20 Paul changed his metaphor from a building to household utensils, but continued the same theme. In a large house there are expensive utensils made of gold and silver that are used only on special occasions; other utensils, made of wood and clay, are cheap and for everyday use. Again Paul makes the distinction between commonly useful and uncommonly useful workers of God, pointing out to Timothy that both will be found in the church. It doesn't work to stretch the details of the metaphor too far; Paul's point is that believers should desire to be special "utensils" ready for any special service needed by God.

2:21 Paul may have been emphasizing the individual believer's moral purity in order to fulfill the role God has chosen him or her to play in the household. This most likely refers to personal inward cleansing from involvement in false teachings. People who desire to be used by God must be cleansed from sin and then keep themselves pure by refraining from contacts and activities that could soil them. This does not require a person's isolation from the world (for sin is all around); it refers more specifically to involvement with those whose goal is to lead people away from the faith. Cleansed people who stay away from corrupting influences can be used for God's purpose and are then ready for the Master to use for every good work. How much more powerful the church of God would be in the world if all believers were "clean utensils" ready for the Master's use!

2:22 Paul knew Timothy very well from their years of travel together, and most likely he knew Timothy's weak spots. Timothy was a young man (1 Timothy 4:12), at least young for the responsibilities he carried, so Paul offered no-nonsense advice. The youthful lusts mentioned here are not only sexual, but also the other passions characteristic of the young—impatience, contentiousness, favoritism, egotism, intolerance, etc. (see also 1 Timothy 6:11). As was frequently the case with Paul, when he issued a warning he followed it with an alternative positive strategy. Timothy was to run from temptation but follow anything that would make him want to do right, referring to actions that are morally upright and virtuous. In a word, it expresses a way of life that seeks to model itself after God's directions. Rather than claiming perfection or settling for mediocrity, righteousness requires the pursuit of obedience. Paul also advised Timothy to pursue faith and love and peace. Faith and love are fundamental to Christianity and basic to Paul's teaching (see 1 Corinthians 13:13).

In spite of the individual challenge that Paul presented, he was not permitting Timothy to function alone. He was to find strength and encouragement in the companionship of those who call on the Lord with pure hearts. There were others for whom he was responsible, but also some who would be peers and share a deep and common desire to be faithful.

2:23 While peace should be the norm among believers, we should not entertain false teachings to keep people happy. Paul's language here does not forbid contact with such people, as is demonstrated by verse 25, where the guidelines for treating opponents imply some level of interaction.

There can be no doubt about the problem caused by the false teachers—Paul repeated it several times in his letters to Timothy and Titus. They got people caught up in foolish, ignorant arguments that only start fights and that divided the church (see also 1 Timothy 1:4, 6-7; 4:1, 7; 6:3-5, 20-21; 2 Timothy 2:14, 16-17, 23-24; 4:2-4; Titus 1:9, 13-14; 3:2, 9). Timothy's best approach was to simply not get involved with them. To argue would only make Timothy angry and draw him into the very trap being set by the false teachers.

2:24 The Lord's servants are specifically Timothy and those chosen as leaders in the church. The expression alludes almost without doubt to the pictures of the suffering servant of God found in Isaiah (Isaiah 52:13-15; 53:1-12). The Christian who imitates Christ in this way will bear the experience of "wounds" as he or she attempts to relate compassionately to those who may strike out in hurt or anger. Some people like to quarrel because they have never been listened to before; when we demonstrate kindness, we may find openness where before there was only a wall of arguments.

As a minister of the gospel, Timothy did not have to quarrel with the false teachers; to quarrel could be seen as a need to come to a compromise. There could be no compromise between the gospel truth and the false teachers. Instead, Timothy should promote unity by being kind to everyone. The hard, sharp edge of the truth required the skilled hand of someone who could relate compassionately with others.

Timothy had already met the requirement for a church leader of having the ability to teach effectively (see 1 Timothy 3:2). Paul exhorted him to remain confident in his teaching and to continue teaching the truth to those willing to learn. At the same time, he would need to be patient with difficult people. The Greek word for “patient” is used only here in the New Testament; it literally means “to face ill treatment without resentment.”

2:25 Timothy’s goal was to gently teach his opponents the correct understanding of the truth. Therefore, he needed to maintain contact that would lead to interaction with these people, while at the same time resisting their error. Instead of antagonizing opponents, he should calmly and gently correct their wrong ideas in the hopes that God would change those people’s hearts, and they will believe the truth. Timothy’s first desire ought to be to bring them back into the church, not to punish them (see 1 Thessalonians 3:6, 15).

2:26 To come to their senses could also be translated “return to soberness.” In other words, the false teachers have gotten “drunk,” with the result of losing their senses and getting caught in the Devil’s trap. Satan is at the root of all false teaching and division in the church. He knows the strength of a unified church and fears it. So he creates a “trap”—money, fame, pride of feeling intellectual—to draw people away from the faith and to false teaching. They are then held captive by him to do whatever he wants. But there is hope—escape is possible.

2 TIMOTHY 3:1–4:5

THE DANGERS OF THE LAST DAYS / 3:1-9

Paul's suffering left him with few illusions about his future; he would die before Christ returned. As has already been pointed out, this letter has the recurring tone of someone setting his personal matters in order.

Paul began this chapter with remarks about degenerating conditions in society. Both Paul and Timothy had witnessed how bad "the last days" would become. Paul listed a whole catalog of attitudes and behaviors typical of "last days" people. This list also described the false teachers in Ephesus. Paul characterized them as belonging to the perennial crop of "opposition" leaders who create a following for themselves. Timothy was to resist their methods and their underlying purposes.

3:1 This reference to the last days reveals Paul's sense of urgency. But warnings about the last days were certainly not unique to Paul. It was a common theme among the leaders of the early church (see Acts 2:17; James 5:3; 2 Peter 3:3; Jude 18). Very difficult times means "hard to bear, dangerous, troublesome." Paul's warning deserves our full attention. The "last days" began after Jesus' resurrection, when the Holy Spirit came upon the believers at Pentecost. The last days will continue until Christ's second coming. Paul could speak about the last days as a future event (emphasizing conditions present at the close of the last days), or as a present reality (emphasizing the truth that the state of depravity in the world is always ripe for harvest). This means that we are living in the last days. It should not surprise us, then, to see the moral degeneration of society around us. Paul warned us that it would happen, as did Jesus (see Matthew 24).

3:2 When people misdirect their love—toward themselves and money—there can be no love left to direct toward others. Then moral corruption naturally results, as noted in the following characteristics. To be boastful and proud pictures a heart full of pride that manifests itself in outward boastfulness. Such characteristics reveal a person's inflated self-importance and necessarily leads them to looking down on others. Scoffing at God means speaking disrespectfully of him. Not only are these people guilty of an overinflated sense of their own importance, they also verbally abuse God himself.

The extent of moral degeneration can be seen in the rejection of the most intimate human ties with many blatantly disobedient to their parents. This behavior willfully breaks the fifth commandment to honor one's father and mother (see Exodus 20:12). The commandment was given because God understood the importance of strong families. To “honor” parents means speaking well of them and politely to them. It also means acting in a way that shows them courtesy and respect. It means following their teaching and example of putting God first. Parents have a special place in God’s sight. Even children who find it difficult to get along with their parents are still commanded to honor them. When parents are not respected and honored, disobedience naturally results, and the breakdown of the family easily follows. Paul understood that when families fall apart, “very difficult times” (3:1) follow.

People are in a sad state when they are ungrateful and cannot appreciate anything. In Romans 1:21, Paul noted that ingratitude was second only to dishonoring God as a just cause for God’s judgment on humanity. This leads them to consider nothing sacred. People who set aside God in order to live only to please themselves can only go one direction—toward wickedness. They instinctively resist anyone or any ideas that would force them to measure themselves by God’s standards.

3:3 People will be unloving. The same word is used in only one other place in the New Testament (Romans 1:31), in a passage where Paul listed the characteristics of people who refuse God and follow their own inclinations. Indeed, because these people love only themselves and their money (possessions), as Paul noted in verse 2, they are unloving toward everyone and everything else.

Unforgiving people cannot allow for other people’s mistakes or weaknesses. They are unyielding, unrelenting, and often are filled with extreme bitterness and anger over their own hurts. They simply refuse to forgive, even if presented with the opportunity. Eventually, they become unable to forgive, even when they might acknowledge the need to do so.

People who slander others are quick to spread falsehoods. Slanderers enjoy spreading gossip and malicious reports about others. Destroying another’s good reputation gives them perverse pleasure. Without self-control, they cannot restrain their actions, their feelings, or their words.

Cruel people (“brutes”) are like untamed animals, or “uncivilized” people. They are insensitive and crude, even savage. People will be so evil that they actually have no interest in what is good.

3:4 The next two characteristics begin with the pro- prefix in Greek, indicating a disposition toward some behavior or attitude.

To betray one’s friends is to be treacherous. In some cases, betrayal of another might enhance a person's standing or enrich him or her; at other times, the betrayal could be a vengeful act. Combined with slander (3:3), truth goes by the wayside.

Being reckless can also be translated "headstrong" and "rash." Such people act foolishly and carelessly, completely unconcerned about the consequences for themselves or others. They are determined to have their own way, regardless of advice to the contrary.

These people are puffed up with pride, having an exaggerated opinion of their importance, intelligence, wit, appearance, etc. The idea differs from "lovers of self" in verse 2, for that trait can at least be concealed, while the very nature of pride involves being noticed by others.

The list ends, as it began, with those whose love has become so misdirected that they can only think of pleasure rather than God. Those who fail to acknowledge God eventually aren't able to love God.

3:5 Often these evil characteristics appear in a context of respectability. Religion is not gone; in fact, these character qualities are frequently exhibited by people known for their "religiousness." However, as Paul wrote, they act as if they are religious, using godliness as a cloak of respectability. But they will reject the power that could make them godly, denying God's power over their lives. The "act" could include going to church, knowing Christian doctrine, using Christian clichés, and following a community's Christian traditions. Such practices can make a person outwardly look good, but if the inner attitudes of belief, love, and worship are lacking, the public appearance is hollow, meaningless.

Paul warned Timothy not to be deceived by people who only appear to be Christians. It may be difficult to distinguish them from true Christians at first, but their daily behavior will give them away. The characteristics described in 3:2-4 are unmistakable. In fact, the false teachers plaguing the Ephesian church most likely exemplified many of those characteristics that Paul listed above. Paul had already advised Timothy to stay away from these troublemakers (2:23)—which probably meant excommunication.

3:6 Because of their cultural background, women in the Ephesian church had no formal religious training. They enjoyed their new freedom to study Christian truths, but their eagerness to learn made them a target for false teachers. At this time in history, there were almost no opportunities for women to be employed. Also, the church at Ephesus had a significantly large group of widows (1 Timothy 5:3-16). Thus, there were many women who may not have been fully occupied during the day. They became targets for the false teachers.

The expression, work their way into people's homes, indicates the insidious methods of the false teachers. They targeted vulnerable women. Then with all their intellectual-sounding talk, the false teachers captivated these women and won their confidence. These women were especially vulnerable because they were burdened with the guilt of sin (that is, their consciences were laden with guilt) and controlled by many desires (their personal appetites and aspirations, remnants from their pagan days, were so strong as to still cause them problems, probably leading to their overwhelmed consciences!). Their weakness combined with their guilt made them easy targets for the “cures” that the false teachers brought. Paul warned Timothy to watch out for men who would take advantage of these women.

3:7 These women were forever following new teachings, making them easy targets for the false teachers. But without basic knowledge of the faith that leads to repentance and forgiveness of their sins, these women would only get confused and never be able to recognize and understand the truth. Churches that have little or no biblical and theological content in their teaching program fall right into this error. People who attend this kind of church are easy targets for false teachers. It is possible to be a perpetual student and never graduate to accepting the truth and putting it into practice. But honest seekers and true students look for answers and, when they find them, continue in their study and application of that truth. The accumulation of seminars, classes, Bible studies, and books without specific application in our daily lives can easily become our own version of what Paul was describing here. Remember this as you study God's word. Seek to find God's truth and will for your life.

3:8-9 According to Jewish legend, Jannes and Jambres were two of the magicians who counterfeited Moses' miracles before Pharaoh (Exodus 7:11-12). Paul explained that just as Moses exposed and defeated them (Exodus 8:18-19), God would overthrow the false teachers who were plaguing the Ephesian church. While the false teachers' threat to the church was very real both across the Roman world and in our world today (hence, Paul's advice about dealing with them in this and many other letters), the threat will never be fatal to the gospel. Just as Jannes and Jambres's fake power was eventually revealed by God's power through Moses (Exodus 8:18-19; 9:11), so what fools they are would eventually become clear to everyone. Whatever the temporary success of the false teachers, eventually they would be completely humiliated.

Paul did not specify how that would happen. Perhaps it would not be until Christ's return; or perhaps God would ensure that discerning believers will see through the deception; or perhaps God would work behind the scenes in such a way that the false teachers will be unmasked for who they really are.

PAUL'S CHARGE TO TIMOTHY / 3:10–4:5

Paul laced his letters with encouragement, challenges, hopes, and affirmations for Timothy. In this last section before his closing remarks, Paul reflected on the significance of his and Timothy's life together. Paul gave the consistency of his own example and the trustworthiness of Scripture as two dependable guides for Timothy's future. Paul's words and actions created a seamless pattern for the younger man.

3:10 After strongly denouncing the false teachers and their foolishness, Paul turned his attention back to Timothy, who could look at Paul as an example of living out the opposite characteristics of those described in verses 2-9. That Timothy "knew" about all the activities and characteristics listed here and in verse 11 does not necessarily mean he was an eyewitness. Some of the persecutions mentioned in verse 11 happened before Paul had met Timothy. But Timothy had heard about some of these situations; however, undoubtedly he knew others from personal experience. Paul's words here are not proud; rather, they are a testimony to the truth of the gospel and God's faithfulness, meant to encourage young Timothy. Paul was also using himself as a model for what Timothy should be doing in his leadership role in Ephesus.

Timothy knew the content of Paul's teaching; it was the truth as opposed to the false teachers' lies, myths, and godless arguments. Timothy had been privileged to hear Paul teach many times, to many audiences, on a variety of topics. Paul's teaching would be of no value if it did not impact his life—but it did, as the following characteristics reveal.

Timothy knew how Paul lived. This phrase refers to Paul's manner of life, his general behavior. Timothy had lived and traveled with Paul; he had seen Paul happy, sad, angry, and worried; he had watched Paul handle difficult people and problems; he had seen him study and had heard him pray. Paul's way of life should have been a shining example to Timothy.

Timothy knew Paul's purpose in life, his central mission, his chief aim. Traveling with the tireless missionary must have quickly convinced Timothy of Paul's single-minded focus on his mission. Paul never took that calling lightly.

Timothy knew Paul's faith, love, and patient endurance. Paul called on Timothy to exhibit these qualities, for they are basic Christian virtues (1 Timothy 6:11). The word endurance can also be translated "steadfastness," referring to a person's ability to remain strong under pressure. Paul expected Timothy to model these same character traits in Ephesus.

3:11 Paul mentioned persecution and suffering to contrast his experience with that of the pleasure-seeking false teachers. These persecutions occurred during the first missionary journey. Paul had met Timothy at the beginning of his second missionary journey, but Timothy certainly had heard about these experiences. In 2 Corinthians 11:23-33, Paul had summarized his lifetime of persecutions and sufferings for the sake of the gospel.

In Antioch (in Pisidia), the Jews stirred up some people and Paul was driven out (Acts 13:50). In Iconium, they were mistreated and stoned (Acts 14:4-6). In Lystra, Timothy's hometown, Paul had been stoned, dragged out of the city, and left for dead (Acts 14:19). At times, Paul had been miraculously delivered (as in Philippi, see Acts 16:25-26); at other times, Paul had to suffer through the persecution (as with the stoning in Lystra). To be delivered through persecution and suffering does not necessarily mean escaping from it; Paul knew that God would deliver him as often as needed until Paul's work on earth was done. Indeed, Paul suffered in prison and certainly realized that he would be called on to face the ultimate persecution—death. Paul trusted God that his time had come, that his work was completed, and that he would see his Savior face-to-face.

3:12 In this charge, Paul was telling Timothy that people who desire to live a godly life in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution. Paul knew that truth from his own experience. Jesus had warned his disciples: "Since they persecuted me, naturally they will persecute you" (John 15:20).

Today, most Christians do not face outright persecution just for being Christians (although being a Christian is still against the law in some places in the world). Those who worship freely and unhindered should be deeply grateful. However, we should not assume that this verse does not apply to us. If we stand up for Christian values, we can expect opposition and hostility from the world. Based upon the testimony of countless believers who have lived before us, we can expect to meet with some form of persecution or resistance if we persist in living in obedience to Christ. Absence of persecution may not mean unfaithfulness, but if our lives as Christians never affect the world, we may have to question the depth of our commitment.

3:13 But even as believers faced persecution, evil people and imposters will flourish. These wicked people were progressing toward their wicked goal and dragging others down with them (see 1 Peter 4:2-5).

3:14 Besieged by false teachers and the inevitable pressures of a growing ministry, Timothy might have been tempted at times to abandon his faith or modify his doctrine. Paul counseled Timothy to look to his past and remain faithful to the things he had been taught about Jesus that he knew were eternally true. The false teachers might constantly move on to new and more exciting concepts and ideas for discussion and argument, but Timothy needed to stand secure on what he had learned and firmly believed. This did not mean that Timothy needed no further study, but that the basics that Timothy had learned from people he trusted would never change.

3:15 Timothy was one of the first second-generation Christians: he had become a Christian, not because an evangelist preached a powerful sermon, but because his mother and grandmother had taught him the Scriptures when he was a small child (1:5). For Timothy, the holy Scriptures were primarily the Old Testament—Genesis to Malachi. The sources for Timothy's faith could provide another encouragement to continue in the faith: Paul, his mentor and friend, who provided an unmistakable example of God's faithfulness; the inerrant Scriptures that Timothy had studied and loved since childhood; and Timothy's dear mother and grandmother who nurtured and loved him. Scripture, God's word, teaches about salvation; but knowing Scripture alone saves no one (many Jews had known Scripture from childhood, yet had opposed Jesus and the salvation he offered—see 2 Corinthians 3:15-16; Paul himself exemplified that in his early years, Acts 26:9-11). The Scriptures show people their need for salvation and show them how to get it—by trusting in Christ Jesus.

3:16 Timothy had known the Scriptures from childhood, so he knew that all Scripture was inspired by God. When Paul spoke of all Scripture, he was primarily referring to the Old Testament, since it was complete at that time. But the scope of Paul's assertion would include any writing that was considered authoritative enough to be read in church meetings, which by the end of the first century would have included the four Gospels and Paul's writings. According to 2 Peter 3:15-16, Paul's writings were classified as "Scriptures."

The Scriptures, affirmed Paul, were inspired by God. A translation closer to the original Greek would be, "All Scripture is God-breathed." This tells us that every word of the Bible was breathed out from God. The words of the Bible came from God and were written by men. The apostle Peter affirmed this when he said that "it was the Holy Spirit who moved the prophets to speak from God" (2 Peter 1:21).

Paul's words here reminded Timothy that because Scripture is inspired and infallible, it is also useful. The Bible is not a collection of stories, fables, myths, or merely human ideas about God. It is not a human book. Through the Holy Spirit, God revealed his person and plan to certain believers, who wrote down his message for his people. This process is known as “inspiration.” The writers wrote from their own personal, historical, and cultural contexts. Although they used their own minds, talents, language, and style, they wrote what God wanted them to write. Scripture is completely trustworthy because God was in control of its writing. Its words are entirely authoritative for our faith and lives.

Scripture was profitable to every aspect of Timothy’s ministry. Scripture:

- can teach us what is true. The content and teaching of truth, which must flow from and be consistent with Scripture. By calling the Bible “God-breathed,” Paul was identifying its divine source; by making it the source of doctrine, he was reminding Timothy of its authority. Teaching that contradicted biblical doctrine was to be rejected, corrected, or replaced by accurate teaching.
- can make us realize what is wrong in our lives. The initial impact of true doctrine involves the confrontation of false teaching and understanding. The offensiveness of some who teach biblical truth may have to be excused, but the offensiveness of biblical truth to error and evil requires no apology.
- straightens us out by helping us see our errors. In the area of correction, the Scriptures have two roles: (1) they provide a complete presentation of the teaching, where only part of the truth has been present; and (2) they provide for a right understanding and application where true doctrine may have been taught but has not taken effect.
- teaches us to do what is right by showing us how to please and glorify God. The nature of Scripture allows us to teach it confidently to our children and to learn from it ourselves.

The Bible is not purely a record of the past—the history of the Jews and then of the church. Rather, every story, every prophecy, every teaching, every admonition, and every command points beyond to the author, God, who came to us in Jesus Christ. God confronts us in the pages of his Word—telling us how much he loves us, how we can become his children, and how we should live to please him.

3:17 Scripture’s purpose is to prepare and equip believers for every good thing God wants them to do. Timothy carried a heavy responsibility in Ephesus, but through his faith in and reliance on God’s word, he was capable and proficient—able to meet all duties and challenges. Believers should study the Bible so that they will know how to do Christ's work in the world. Knowledge of God's word is not useful unless it strengthens our faith and leads us to do good (Ephesians 2:10).

4:1 Paul had used these words previously (see 1 Timothy 5:21), but this time he included references to judgment and to Christ's return. Perhaps thoughts of judgment could not escape Paul's thoughts as his own death neared. The time when Christ would appear to set up his Kingdom, although still future in Paul's thought, was so certain as to be part of this charge and encouragement to Timothy. If we are convinced that Christ's return is inevitable, we too will be powerfully motivated by that fact. Thus Paul solemnly urged Timothy with the five specific commands that follow. The aged apostle knew that his death was at hand and that he might not see Timothy again. Therefore these words held heavy importance. Paul wanted Timothy to realize how critical it was for him to obey his words. Timothy would stand before the Lord at the Last Judgment and answer for how he responded to Paul's charge.

4:2 First and foremost, Timothy was to preach the word of God—the message of the gospel. The word suggests vigorous proclamation! Paul wanted Timothy to be bold and passionate. It was up to Timothy to preach the gospel so that the Christian faith could spread throughout the world.

Timothy should always be persistent, whether the time is favorable or not. Paul, soon to die, may have looked back on his life realizing how short the time had been. Paul urged Timothy to make the most of the time he would be allotted on this earth. Timothy would need to patiently correct those who were in error by explaining the truth, helping them to understand and accept it. He should rebuke those who were sinning by explaining their sin and their need for repentance. He should encourage those who were growing, for even those growing in the faith need instruction and guidance. Patience should always characterize Timothy's attitude as he dealt with the people in his church; good teaching (or doctrine) should be the basis for his words.

4:3-4 When Paul spoke about false teaching, he usually focused on the evil intentions of the false teachers. However, false teachers could not flourish if they had no audience. Here Paul was pointing out the fault on the part of the listeners. They would no longer listen to right teaching because it said what they didn't want to hear, convicting them and making demands they didn't want to follow. So these people would turn to others who would tell them what was more palatable. Like the false prophets of Old Testament times, these false teachers would teach what their audience wanted to hear. These people would turn away from the truth taught by Timothy, wandering off into the false teachers' strange myths (1 Timothy 1:4). What they would hear made sense, seemed true, and made them comfortable. So wandering away from the difficult truth was easy.

4:5 Timothy should keep a clear mind in every situation as he interacted with people by not reacting quickly. Keeping his head would make him morally alert to temptation, resistant to pressure, and vigilant. He should not be afraid of suffering, for the suffering, hardship, persecution, and struggles would only intensify in the days and months ahead. Many in Timothy's ministry would look to Timothy as their example. Timothy would have to endure for he must continue to work at bringing others to Christ. That work was to proclaim the gospel to all people at all times, calling on them to repent and be saved. Whatever the obstacles, opposition of false teachers, problems of church administration, distractions, or discouragements, Timothy was not to allow any of them to keep him from his appointed task. Finally, he must complete the ministry God had given him. Nothing should deter Timothy from carrying out his duties until the day when his ministry would be completed (that is, at his death).

How can we know when we have fully carried out our ministry? By defining ministry in terms of lifelong goals rather than temporary jobs, positions, and opportunities. Then, when life ends, we will be able to say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished the race, I have remained faithful" (4:7).

2 TIMOTHY 4:6-22

PAUL'S FINAL WORDS / 4:6-18

Paul's words about his departure would communicate to Timothy that he would not be able to count on Paul's presence or encouragement much longer. Shared leadership was ending. Timothy must take charge.

4:6 Paul viewed his life as an offering, poured out before God. He knew that his death was near. Paul's commitment was total; thus, sacrificing his life to build others' faith seemed to him a joyous reward.

4:7 Paul's three phrases, in the perfect tense, convey finality. Paul knew this was the end. He had called Timothy to "fight the good fight" (1 Timothy 6:12); his own fight was over. The fight had been worthwhile, and he had fought well.

Paul's race was finished, or at least the end was clearly in sight. It is important to note that Paul made no claim to having won the race; he was content with having finished it. Marathon runners know the exhilaration of finishing the grueling miles of that race—they are thankful just to cross the finish line. Completion is a significant accomplishment, revealing incredible endurance and determination.

I have remained faithful means Paul had guarded and preserved the gospel message. Paul had called Timothy to "guard what God has entrusted to you" (1 Timothy 6:20). Paul had remained faithful to the message that had been entrusted to him; this also had been entrusted to Timothy. Paul had never wavered in his faith and trusted that soon he would experience all the promises on which he had based his life and ministry.

4:8 In Roman athletic games, a laurel wreath was given to the winners. A symbol of triumph and honor, it was the most coveted prize in ancient Rome. This is probably what Paul was referring to when he spoke of a prize. Waiting for Paul, laid up for him, was a reward—the crown of righteousness. This phrase could be taken to mean that righteousness itself is the reward (as in James 1:12 and Revelation 2:10, where the "crown of life" is the reward of eternal life), or that the crown is the reward for righteousness (see 3:16). In either case, Paul knew that a reward awaited him.

Paul would receive his reward from the Lord, the righteous Judge. Soon to be condemned to death for his faith, Paul would ultimately be vindicated by God himself. Paul's reward would be given on that great day of his return. This crown of righteousness, this reward, was not for Paul alone. It is promised to all who eagerly look forward to his glorious return. What an encouragement to Timothy, to the loyal believers in his church, and to all believers. Whatever we may face—discouragement, persecution, or death—we know our reward is with Christ in eternity.

4:9 Both here and in verse 21, Paul urged Timothy to come soon, preferably “before winter.” We don’t know what season of the year this was written, but this letter would have to be carried from Rome to Ephesus, and Timothy would then have to make the return trip. The whole process would take a few months. Paul knew his execution was imminent, but he had no idea how quickly it would be carried out. The Roman judicial system often had long delays in its processes; more likely, it was Paul’s feeling of loneliness and isolation that prompted him to say “come soon.” He longed to see Timothy one last time.

4:10 Demas is also mentioned in Colossians 4:14 and Philemon 24. Demas loved the things of this life and so had deserted Paul. Perhaps he was ashamed of Paul’s chains and not willing to face the same fate for the Christian faith. Demas may not have deserted the faith, but he deserted the apostle in his time of need.

Mentioning Demas reminded Paul of more faithful coworkers. Paul did not criticize Crescens and Titus for leaving; apparently they had been sent to do the Lord’s work in Galatia and Dalmatia (on the eastern shore of the Adriatic Sea). That Titus was dispatched from Rome to Dalmatia suggests that he no longer ministered in Crete (which was the focus of Paul’s letter to Titus).

4:11 Demas had deserted; Crescens, Titus, and Tychicus (4:12) had been sent on various missions; only Luke the doctor (Colossians 4:14) remained with Paul, possibly to help minister to his physical needs. Luke had accompanied Paul on the second and third missionary journeys, as well as the voyage to Rome (as noted by the “we” sections in Acts 16–28). This traveling companion and historian (author of the Gospel of Luke and the book of Acts) probably had to frequently use his medical expertise as Paul and his companions were injured with whips and stones in their travels. He may have even been Paul’s secretary for this epistle, putting 2 Timothy into writing as the aging apostle dictated. In addition, Luke probably cared for Paul’s illness, described as a “thorn in the flesh” in 2 Corinthians 12:7-8. Luke had shared Paul’s first Roman imprisonment. He is also mentioned in Colossians 4:14 and Philemon 24.

Paul missed his young helpers, Timothy and Mark. Timothy was to pick up Mark (apparently Mark was located somewhere along Timothy's route) and bring him along. This statement reveals an incredible change in Mark and in Paul's opinion of him. Mark had left Paul and Barnabas on the first missionary journey, and this had greatly upset Paul (Acts 13:13; 15:36-41). Barnabas had wanted to give Mark another chance, but Paul had flatly refused. This had led to the separation of Paul and Barnabas; Paul took Silas on the second missionary journey; but Barnabas took Mark on to Cyprus, to preach there. Barnabas (known for being an encourager) had apparently had a significant impact on the young Mark, for he later proved to be a worthy minister. At some point, Paul recognized Mark as a good friend and trusted Christian leader (Colossians 4:10; Philemon 24). Mark had also been Peter's assistant (1 Peter 5:13) and composed the Gospel named after him, based on Peter's words.

4:12 Tychicus, a trusted companion (Acts 20:4) and messenger (he delivered the letters of Ephesians and Colossians—see Ephesians 6:21; Colossians 4:7), had already left for Ephesus. The phrase here could mean that Tychicus would be delivering this letter to Timothy, being sent also to assume Timothy's role while Timothy traveled to Rome to see Paul. Tychicus was apparently useful for such ministries (see Titus 3:12).

4:13 Because he was a prisoner in a damp and chilly dungeon, Paul asked Timothy to bring him his coat, a heavy outer garment, circular in shape with a hole in the middle for the head. Paul had left it at the home of a man named Carpus, apparently where Paul stayed on one of his visits to Troas (but probably not the visit mentioned in Acts 20:6, for that was several years earlier). Troas would also have been right on Timothy's way from Ephesus to Rome, so Timothy could stop and pick it up.

Even more than the coat, Paul wanted his books and papers. Paul's arrest may have occurred so suddenly that he was not allowed to return home to gather his personal belongings. The books would have included parts of the Old Testament. The papers were very likely parchment or papyrus codices, frequently used in the first century for notebooks, memoranda, or first drafts of literary works. Perhaps these papers were draft copies of some of Paul's epistles.

In our age of disposables we find it difficult to visualize that a person in Paul's day would have just one excellent, durable, and probably valuable coat to use for a lifetime, often passing it on to children or heirs. Items like coats were too important, too difficult to make, to make poorly. Almost anything written was of great value as well. Paul was a scholar and would have gathered for his use a small but effective personal library. When Paul asked for books and papers, he wasn't asking for his whole library, but for a few treasured documents.

4:14-15 Alexander may have been a witness against Paul at his trial, thus doing Paul much harm. This may be the Alexander mentioned in 1 Timothy 1:20, although Alexander was a common name. Timothy apparently knew the man and the situation. Timothy should be careful of, be on his guard against, and stay away from Alexander. If Timothy were to arrive in Rome after Paul's death, he would be Alexander's next likely target. The message Alexander opposed could mean the gospel message, or Paul's words at his trial, where Alexander may have been a witness against Paul (4:14). In the end, the Lord will judge him for what he has done.

4:16 This first time Paul was brought before the judge was most likely a preliminary hearing at which advocates for the accused were usually heard. The Roman legal system allowed for several steps in the prosecution of an accused criminal. Clearly, the mention of a "first" indicates an expectation of a second defense. Perhaps the inconclusiveness of the first hearing was causing a lengthy delay.

In any case, no one had come to speak in Paul's defense or to stand by in his support; everyone had abandoned him (compare 1:15). Although sorely disappointed, Paul seemed to understand, for he hoped that this would not be counted against them (compare this to Jesus' words from the cross, Luke 23:34). Paul realized the fear the Christians were feeling; it had become extremely dangerous to be identified as a Christian in Rome. Emperor Nero had blamed the Christians for starting a great fire in Rome (A.D. 64). He had decreed that the Christians should be persecuted through torture and death as punishment. Three or four years later, when this letter was written, fear was still very present, causing Paul's fellow believers to be unwilling to defend him before the Roman authorities.

4:17 Although no human being had come to support Paul at his hearing, the Lord had stood with him. (See Mark 13:9-11 and Matthew 10:17-19, where Jesus promised help to those arrested for preaching the gospel.) Paul had sensed both the presence and the power of Christ giving him strength. Christ had helped Paul not just for Paul's benefit alone. He had supplied Paul with spiritual power, wisdom, and preaching skills in order to preach the Good News in all its fullness for all the Gentiles to hear. Even at the trial before the Roman authorities who were ready to execute this Christian leader, Paul had proclaimed the gospel! That Paul was saved from certain death most likely described his deliverance from extreme danger (see, for example, Psalm 22:21; Daniel 6:22). Paul knew he wouldn't get out of prison alive, though he was experiencing a temporary reprieve due to a delay in the Roman judicial system.

4:18 Although rescued from certain death at the first hearing (and certainly at many times over the years of his ministry), Paul realized that the end was near. He was prepared to die, confident in God's power and sovereignty. The Lord's deliverance mentioned here would not be physical this time, but spiritual. Here Paul was affirming his belief in eternal life after death. Anyone facing a life and death struggle can be comforted and encouraged knowing that God will bring each believer safely to his heavenly Kingdom. Just as Paul praised God in life (see, for example, Galatians 1:5; Ephesians 3:21), he also praised God in the face of death.

PAUL'S FINAL GREETINGS / 4:19-22

As Paul reached the end of his life, he could look back and know he had been faithful to God's call. Now it was time to pass the torch to the next generation, preparing leaders to take his place so that the world would continue to hear the life-changing message of Jesus Christ. Timothy was Paul's living legacy, a product of Paul's faithful teaching, discipleship, and example. Because of Paul's work with many believers, including Timothy, the world is full of believers today who are also carrying on the work.

4:19 Priscilla and Aquila were fellow Christian leaders with whom Paul had lived and worked (see Acts 18:2-3, 18, 26; Romans 16:3; 1 Corinthians 16:19). While in Corinth, Priscilla, Aquila, and Paul had made tents together. Priscilla and Aquila were an itinerant couple who used the freedom and the money provided by their tentmaking skills to carry out a ministry of hospitality and teaching in various places. They had lived in Rome and Corinth. This time they were in Ephesus, undoubtedly helping Timothy with his work.

Onesiphorus had visited and encouraged Paul in jail during this final imprisonment (see discussion 1:16-18). Paul ended the final chapter in his book and in his life by greeting those who were closest to him.

4:20 Erastus was one of Paul's trusted companions and Timothy's close friend (Acts 19:22). Timothy would be interested in his whereabouts. The same would be true of Trophimus, another companion and friend of both men (Acts 20:4; 21:29). Perhaps Trophimus was to have accompanied Paul from Asia to Rome on this last visit, but had to be left in Miletus because he was sick. Commitment to ministry does not mean immunity to diseases, discouragement, or death. Paul experienced in himself and in his closest associates the realities of serving God in frail human frames under difficult circumstances. Timothy might not have been aware of Trophimus's illness and would have been glad to know the location of this friend from Ephesus.

4:21 Paul certainly wanted to see his friend as soon as possible (4:9). The request that Timothy try to arrive before winter probably included that desire—Paul knew that sailing on the Adriatic Sea was shut down for several weeks during winter because of extreme danger. This also gives insight into Paul's desire to have his coat (4:13) before cold weather set in.

Nothing further is known of the four men listed by name. Paul sent greetings from all the brothers and sisters, even though most had deserted him at his trial (4:16). Paul's spirit of forgiveness in including greetings from them must not be missed.

4:22 The first sentence was directed personally to Timothy. The second includes the plural you and gives a final good-bye to all the believers.

TITUS

INTRODUCTION

Paul is known for his extensive missionary travels, his powerful preaching and teaching, and his courageous witness for Christ. Undoubtedly, most Christians today would characterize him as a hard-line champion of the truth, who rejected compromise and accepted no excuses. Certainly that describes Paul—especially as we read his story in Acts and in his powerful epistles. Speaking to Galatian believers about the false teachers among them, he stated: “If anyone preaches any other gospel than the one you welcomed, let God’s curse fall upon that person” (Galatians 1:9). Paul stood strong for the gospel and against all who would twist it or undermine his ministry.

We must also remember, however, that Paul was a loving, compassionate man. He genuinely cared for people and built many solid relationships wherever he traveled. In fact, Paul concluded most of his letters with personal greetings to close friends and fellow ministers (see especially Romans 16:1-16).

The Pastoral Epistles (1 Timothy, 2 Timothy, Titus) testify to Paul’s tender and loving nature. Paul considered Timothy and Titus to be his “sons” in the faith, and he treated them as such, leading, mentoring, guiding, and counseling them in their ministry and personal lives.

AUTHOR

Paul, the great apostle and missionary of the church.

As with 1 and 2 Timothy, the very first line in the letter to Titus clearly establishes Paul as author. Although certain scholars in the past several decades have tried to disprove Paul’s authorship of this book, the balance of the historical evidence continues to favor Paul. In fact, much of the anti-Paul sentiment seems to be based on the difficulty of placing the writing of the letter to Titus within the narrative in Acts. (See the discussion under “Date” in the introduction to 1 Timothy.) Some critics have also remarked that the writing style and content of Titus differs from Paul’s other letters, but these doubts can be easily resolved by recalling the occasion and purpose of the book. The needs and problems of the church in Crete differed greatly from those in Corinth, Ephesus, and Thessalonica. When Paul wrote to Titus (and Timothy), the churches were much more established than when he wrote his earlier letters (see the discussion under “Date” below). In fact, it would be too simplistic to expect the style and content to be the same when the recipients, occasions, and purposes were so different.

Paul addressed this letter, “To Titus, my true child in the faith” (1:4). We don’t know the circumstances of Titus’s conversion to Christ—the epistles reveal little about his background, and he is not mentioned in Acts—but Titus probably came to faith under Paul’s ministry.

DATE AND SETTING

About A.D. 64 or 65, just after 1 Timothy, possibly from Corinth or Nicopolis. Written to Titus who was ministering on the island of Crete.

Students of the book of Acts will wonder when this visit took place, since Acts does not record a visit by Paul to Crete. Most likely, Paul and Titus went to Crete following Paul’s release from his first Roman imprisonment (Acts 28:16). Paul traveled and ministered for two or three years before again being imprisoned by Rome and ultimately executed in A.D. 66 or 67.

Crete lies southeast of Greece in the Mediterranean Sea, just south of the Aegean Sea. At 160 miles long and 35 miles wide, Crete is one of the larger islands in the Mediterranean. It is quite mountainous but with very fertile valleys. The highest mountain is Mount Ida, the traditional birthplace of the Greek god Zeus. Crete has an ancient history, having been the center of the great Minoan culture that developed during the Middle and Late Bronze Ages. This Roman province had a hundred cities, many of which were scattered along the coast. These coastal towns were heavily populated and fiercely independent. Cretans had a dubious reputation in the Mediterranean world. Epimenides (600 B.C.) called them “liars, evil beasts, slow bellies” (quoted by Paul in 1:12), and Leonides (488 B.C.) said Cretans were “always brigands and piratical, and unjust.”

Crete is not mentioned in Acts as a stop on Paul’s missionary journeys; thus scholars surmise that the gospel must have come to that island by way of Jerusalem and Pentecost. Crete had a large Jewish population, so each year many Cretan Jews would travel to Jerusalem for the festival. At the celebration recorded in Acts 2, Cretan Jews witnessed the power of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:11), heard the gospel in their native language, and responded. When they returned home, they brought the Christian faith with them. The churches on Crete, therefore, were begun in much the same way as those in Rome.

Evidently the character flaws of Cretans in general had been brought into the churches (1:10-16), so Titus had to contend with an unruly and self-centered group of believers. But Paul knew that Christ could change them into people who “do good deeds all the time” (3:8).

You may think that your church is filled with “Cretans.” Remember, Christ can transform individual lives and churches.

AUDIENCE

Titus and the church at large.

Little is known about Titus because he is not mentioned by name in Acts. But Titus must have been a remarkable man, because Paul trusted him and assigned him great responsibility. Galatians 2:3 states that Titus was an uncircumcised Gentile, a Greek—most likely he had come to faith in Christ under Paul’s ministry. It seems amazing that such a faithful and trusted partner and leader of the church would not appear in Acts, so some scholars surmise that Titus may have been Luke’s brother and that Luke omitted his name from the account.

Titus’s faith must have been strong, for Paul presented him to church leaders in Jerusalem as a prime example of a Gentile convert worthy of acceptance by the church. Paul related this incident in Galatians 2:1-5. Tension had been building in the church over whether to accept Paul’s practice of baptizing Gentiles without insisting that they first become circumcised and submit to Jewish laws and rituals. So Paul traveled to Jerusalem to fight for the truth that salvation is by grace through faith alone. He won this test case—Titus was not compelled to be circumcised. This issue finally was resolved at the Jerusalem council (Acts 15:1-35).

Titus became Paul’s key troubleshooter. First, Paul sent him to the church at Corinth, an undisciplined and struggling body of believers in a pagan environment. Titus’s first assignment was to resolve the tensions between Paul and the Corinthians (2 Corinthians 7:6-16; 12:18), something that Timothy had been unable to do (1 Corinthians 4:17; 16:10-11; 4:17). Titus was so successful there that Paul sent him back to collect money from the Corinthians for the church in Jerusalem (2 Corinthians 8:6; 16-24). Here, in the letter to Titus, we find that Paul had sent Titus to Crete, an area known for violence and immorality. Titus’s task was to “complete our work there” (1:5). Later, we discover that Titus visited Paul in Rome during the second imprisonment and then was sent to Dalmatia (a region on the eastern coast of the Adriatic Sea), another difficult area (2 Timothy 4:10). Paul trusted Titus to be his representative, to resolve conflicts, to collect money, and to organize churches. According to ancient tradition, Titus returned to Crete in old age. He died and was buried there at the age of 94.

Titus kept a low profile—we know much less of him than of Paul and other first-century Christian leaders. And Titus was an unlikely leader—a Greek, not an eyewitness to Christ’s life; a Gentile convert, not a Jewish student of the Scriptures. Yet Titus had a profound ministry and impact on church history. God can use a person, regardless of his or her background, nationality, sex, or education, to make a difference in the world. God can use you.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To bolster Titus's authority as Paul's apostolic representative in Crete and to give Titus clear instructions about each aspect of his work in the churches there.

It seems that after Paul's release from the Roman prison in about A.D. 62, he traveled with Titus to Crete, where they ministered together. When Paul continued his travels, he left Titus behind as his representative, to help organize and strengthen the churches there (1:5).

Paul wrote this letter at about the same time as his first letter to Timothy. Having placed these two protégés in strategic locations, Paul wanted to encourage them and counsel them about carrying out their responsibilities. Paul knew through reputation (1:12) and firsthand experience (1:5) that the ministry in Crete would be difficult, so he wanted to give Titus information and ammunition for dealing with the problems he would encounter. Paul's location is unknown, but he may have written from Corinth or Nicopolis (on the western coast of Greece), where he had decided to spend the winter (3:12). Evidently when Paul heard that Zenas and Apollos were traveling to Crete (3:13), he decided to send this letter to Titus with them.

The most important task given to Titus was to instruct and organize the churches on the island. Cretans had the earned reputation of being lazy and immoral (1:12); therefore, sound theology and church discipline were imperative. Already Judaizers were influencing many with their false teachings (1:10-16); these divisive individuals needed to be stopped (3:9-11). And because people seemed to be easily swayed and turned from the truth, each church needed dedicated and spiritual leaders.

Although this letter is addressed to an individual (Titus), Paul also meant for it to be helpful for the churches in Crete.

MESSAGE

Paul begins with a longer than usual greeting and introduction, outlining the leadership progression: Paul's ministry (1:1-3), Titus's responsibilities (1:4-5), and those leaders whom Titus would appoint and train (1:5). Paul then lists pastoral qualifications (1:6-9) and contrasts faithful elders with the false leaders and teachers (1:10-16).

Next, Paul emphasizes the importance of good deeds in the life of the Christian, telling Titus how to relate to the various age groups in the church (2:2-6). He urges Titus to be a good example of a mature believer (2:7-8) and to teach with courage and conviction (2:9-15). He then discusses the general responsibilities of Christians in society: Titus should remind the people of these (3:1-8), and he should avoid divisive arguments (3:9-11). Paul concludes with a few matters of itinerary and personal greetings (3:12-15).

The main themes in the book of Titus include: Character, Church Relationships, A Good Life, and Citizenship.

Character (1:5-16). Paul had left Titus in Crete to “complete our work there and appoint elders in each town” (1:5). So Paul gave Titus a list of qualities for “elders.” These church leaders must be of the highest character, as evidenced by a strong family life (1:6) and a good reputation in the community (1:7-8). They also must be firmly grounded in their faith and able to teach others (1:9). These qualifications were important because of the sinful world surrounding the church (1:12) and because of the potential for heresy and divisions within the church (1:10-11, 13-16). As Paul’s representative, with apostolic authority, Titus was to make sure that church leaders exhibited strong moral character and spiritual maturity.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Churches need leaders who are totally committed to Jesus Christ and who are living the way God wants them to live. It is not enough to be educated, have special abilities and gifts, or to have a loyal following to be Christ’s kind of leader. Church leaders must have self-control, spiritual and moral fitness, and Christian character. God wants Christians to aspire to leadership in his church, but they must be the right kind of leaders. Who you are is more important than what you can do.

Church Relationships (2:1-10, 15; 3:9-11). Part of Titus’s responsibility during his stay on Crete was to teach believers how they should act in the world and with each other (2:15). Paul encouraged Titus to teach with integrity and seriousness and to set a good example for all the believers, especially the new church leaders (2:7-8). Paul emphasized the importance of right teaching (2:1), and he told Titus to rebuke all who would steer believers astray (3:9-11). Paul explained to Titus how his teaching should relate to the various groups in the church. Older Christians should teach younger men and women and be good examples to them (2:2-5). Young people should be self-controlled (2:6), and slaves should be trustworthy (2:10). People of every age and group have a lesson to learn and a role to play in the church, and all should be positive witnesses for Christ in the world (2:2, 8, 10).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Christians who truly believe “right teaching” (2:1) live out what the Bible teaches in their relationships. A local church is a collection of old, young, male, female, rich, and poor, so a church in which believers love each other and get along will draw people to Christ (2:10). Pride and self-indulgence can divide any church, but the antidote is submission to Christ and to each other, as well as self-control. Treat your relationships with other believers as an outgrowth of your faith and part of your witness to the world.

A Good Life (3:3-8; 12-15). Paul reminded Titus that before trusting Christ they had been disobedient to God and enslaved to sin (3:3), but Christ had transformed them (3:4-7). The gospel message is that a person is saved by grace through faith (3:5-7), not by living a good life. But the gospel changes people's lives, so that they eventually perform good deeds (3:8) and become totally devoted to serving others (3:14).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. A good life is a witness to the gospel's power. Christians must have commitment and discipline to serve. When we remember what Christ has done for us, we will be motivated to share his love with others. In what ways are you putting your faith into action by serving others?

Citizenship (2:11–3:2). Paul told Titus to instruct believers that how they live outside the church was very important. Christians must say “yes” to God and “no” to ungodly living in the world (2:12-14). Believers also should be good citizens in society, obeying the government (3:1) and working honestly (3:2).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. How a Christian fulfills his or her duties is a witness to the watching world. A believer's community life should reflect Christ's love as much as his or her church life does. Your neighbors should know that you are a faithful church member and a good citizen.

OUTLINE OF TITUS

- I. Leadership in the Church (1:1-16)
- II. Right Living in the Church (2:1-15)
- III. Right Living in Society (3:1-15)

Tradition says that after Paul was released from prison in Rome (before his second and final Roman imprisonment), he and Titus traveled together for a while. They stopped in Crete, and when it was time for Paul to go, he left Titus behind to help the churches there.

TITUS 1

GREETINGS FROM PAUL / 1:1-4

Christian tradition suggests a missionary visit by Paul and Titus shortly after the first trial. Paul planted the church and left Titus to look after the early organizational phase and to oversee the new congregations. Because the gospel had only recently been preached on the island, believers were susceptible to a number of strong influences. So Titus needed to be on guard. Also, the church in Crete needed strong Christian leaders; Titus was responsible to choose and prepare them.

1:1 Paul identified himself by name and by authority. He called himself a slave of God—that is, one who was committed to obeying God. (This is the only place where Paul used this particular phrase to describe himself.) Even though Paul was not one of the original twelve disciples (later called apostles), he had been specially called by God as an apostle to bring the Good News to the Gentiles (Acts 9:1-16). Paul's twofold reference to himself combines humble obedience with confident authority on his part.

As a servant and apostle, Paul focused his life on two main concerns: faith and truth. God sent Paul to bring faith to those God has chosen and to teach them to know the truth. God's chosen are those who have responded to the gospel. Although we can't totally understand the doctrine of election, it gives us tremendous insight into God's love and wisdom. After responding to faith, God's people then need training in the truth so that they can live godly lives.

Paul's view of ministry was always long-term. He was not content to aim at people merely responding to the gospel. His goal was to bring people to spiritual maturity in Christ.

1:2 God's truth, taught by Paul to God's chosen, gives them the confidence of eternal life. Believers' confidence regarding their eternal future is based on a good foundation, for God himself has promised it before the world began. The promise did not come at a point when sin entered the world or even at the moment that God sent Christ to deal with the problem of sin; rather, Christ's coming and the promise of eternal life had been planned by God from the beginning. God has been and always will be in supreme control of the universe, world events, and the future of his people.

Confidence is also based on the fact that God cannot lie. Apparently lying was commonplace in Crete (see 1:12). Paul made it clear at the start that God does not lie. Trust in God's character forms the foundation of our faith. Because God is truth, he is the source of all truth, and he cannot lie. This puts him in complete contrast to Satan, who is the father of lies (John 8:44). The eternal life that God has promised will be ours because he keeps his promises.

1:3 The promise came before time began. The revealing of that promise, God's Good News, the hope of eternal life, came at the right time. That is, God sent his Son at the proper time, the time of his own choosing (see Romans 5:6; Galatians 4:4; Ephesians 1:9-12; 1 Timothy 2:6), to bring the word of salvation to light. And Paul, at an opportune time in history, was called by God to announce this Good News to everyone.

1:4 Titus, a Greek, was one of Paul's most trusted and dependable coworkers. As a true child, he may have been one of Paul's converts. Although not mentioned in Acts, other epistles point out that Titus fulfilled several missions on Paul's behalf. Paul repeated his standard greeting (grace and peace) with a slight change. The last term repeats the thought of verse 3. Paul used the term Savior for both God the Father and Christ Jesus, thereby revealing his understanding of God's nature and work in salvation (see also 1:3; 2:10, 13; 3:4, 6).

TITUS'S WORK IN CRETE / 1:5-16

Unlike the pressing matter of the false teachers that was on Paul's mind when he wrote to Timothy in Ephesus, Paul's letter to Titus focused on establishing healthy churches on Crete. In both cases, identifying good leaders was a priority. But in Ephesus leaders were needed to get the church back on track, while on Crete effective leaders were needed to get the church moving in the right direction. Paul wanted Titus to choose the right people to lead the growing church in Crete.

1:5 Crete is a long (150 miles), narrow island in the Mediterranean Sea, southeast of Greece. Among its population were many Jews. The earliest converts there were probably Cretan Jews who had been in Jerusalem at Pentecost (Acts 2:11) more than thirty years before Paul wrote this letter. Perhaps there had been some renewed contact with Paul when he was there as a prisoner on his first journey to Rome for trial. Later, he and Titus returned for an evangelistic visit.

Apparently Paul did not stay long in Crete, so he left Titus, his trusted and able fellow worker, to complete the work of establishing correct teaching and dealing with false teachers, as well as appointing elders in each town. Paul had appointed elders in various churches during his journeys (Acts 14:23). On Paul's return from the first missionary journey, he took extra time to revisit every church and establish each church's leadership. He could not stay in each church, but he knew that these new churches needed strong spiritual leaders. The men chosen were to lead the churches by teaching sound doctrine, helping believers mature spiritually, and equipping believers to live for Jesus Christ despite opposition. The following verses give the qualifications for elders.

1:6 Paul briefly described some qualifications that an elder should have. Paul had given Timothy a similar set of instructions for choosing leaders in the Ephesian church (see 1 Timothy 3:1-7; 5:22). Notice that most of the qualifications involve character, not knowledge or skill. A person's lifestyle and relationships provide a window into his character. Consider these qualifications as you evaluate people for positions of leadership in your church. It is important to have leaders who can effectively preach God's word; but even more importantly, they must live out God's word and be examples for others to follow.

The first qualification is to be well thought of for his good life. An elder must have no conduct that would be grounds for any kind of accusation. He must be above reproach. Again, the point here is not that the leaders cannot be blamed, but rather that when blamed, their life will prove the falsehood of the blame.

He must be faithful to his wife means that a church leader should not be promiscuous but should be faithful in his marriage. This did not prohibit an unmarried person from becoming an elder. That his children must be believers who are not wild or rebellious would show that the church leader has proven that he can lead his own household. An elder's children should have received spiritual training and should be believers. This will prove that they care about teaching correct doctrine and discipling others. Obviously, those whose children are rebelling, running wild, and refusing to obey would not be fit for the important position of leading God's people. How one's children live attests to how the Christian life is practiced at home.

1:7 An elder must live a blameless life, emphasizing that this quality is essential in any person who is God's minister. Church leaders who act unworthily and bring blame and reproach on themselves also damage God's work.

Paul's guidelines take on added significance in the Cretan setting, for Cretans were known as having disreputable character (see 1:12). Sometimes the leadership guidelines from Scripture will harmonize with the prevailing standards for mature leaders in a culture, and, at other times, they will conflict. Apparently, Titus was to be careful with the Cretans.

A pitfall of leadership is becoming arrogant. But pride can seduce emotions and cloud reason, making a church leader ineffective. Pride and conceit were the Devil's downfall, and he uses pride to trap others. In addition, a quick-tempered person will speak and act without thinking—hurting people and damaging the church's work and reputation.

These last three prohibitions had particular significance for Titus's search for church leaders in first-century Crete. A church leader must not be a heavy drinker or violent (often the result of being quick-tempered or drunk). Furthermore, the leaders Titus chose should serve out of love, not because they are greedy for money.

1:8 After listing characteristics a church leader should not have, Paul lists these positive qualities. Hospitality was of primary importance in this culture. Believers were commanded to be hospitable (see 3 John), so their leaders should enjoy having guests, revealing devotion and concern for the welfare of others. Paul insisted that the leaders be known for loving all that is good. This person displays that goodness in the spiritual realm as he lives wisely and is fair to others. A believer who is devout will most likely also have a disciplined life, picturing a person who, like an athlete, is constantly “in training” in his Christian life and service. (See note on 1 Timothy 3:2 for more on “self-control.”)

1:9 The church leader must meet moral and spiritual requirements in his personal life, and be reliable in his understanding and teaching of the message he was taught. The last phrase actually occurs first in the Greek for emphasis. The message as it had been taught by the apostles was the trustworthy message that church leaders must teach their congregation. They must be strong and steadfast so that they can encourage others with right teaching and point out the errors of those who oppose them.

Pastors must fulfill a positive and a negative function in handling the truth. They must encourage by preaching, supporting, and reinforcing people as they follow the truth. But pastors must also confront and refute false ideas. Confident leaders with backbone, courage, and an irrefutable message would stand in strong contrast with Cretan lifestyles, character traits, and false teachers (described in the following verses).

1:10 The false teachers Paul and Titus faced were those who insist on circumcision for salvation—the Judaizers (see also 1:14). These were Jews who taught that the Gentiles had to obey all the Jewish laws, rules, and rituals before they could become Christians. This regulation confused new Christians and caused problems in many churches where Paul had preached the Good News. Paul wrote letters to several churches to help them understand that Gentile believers did not have to become Jews first in order to be Christians—God accepts anyone who comes to him in faith (see Romans 1:17; Galatians 3:2-7). Although the Jerusalem council had dealt with this issue (see Acts 15), devout Jews who refused to believe in Jesus still were trying to cause problems in the Christian churches. The ruling of the Jerusalem council may have been honored by those within the churches, but these outsiders did not recognize the apostles as having any authority.

Here Paul identified three characteristics of this brand of false teachers:

1. They rebel against right teaching, flouting the authority of Paul and Titus.
2. They engage in useless talk, speaking lots of words and saying nothing.
3. They deceive people because they do not have the truth.

1:11 These false teachers must be silenced; the Greek word literally means “to muzzle.” Their wrong teaching was ruining people’s faith—whole families had been affected, causing confusion in the church. These teachers taught not the trustworthy message of the gospel (1:9) but their own ideas. Their goal was not to glorify the Lord and build his church but to make money. Naturally it was hoped that these people would respond to the truth and be united with the true body of believers.

1:12 Paul quoted a line from a poem by Epimenides, a poet and philosopher who had lived in Crete 600 years earlier. Paul called him a prophet because other ancient writers (notably Aristotle and Cicero) did so, and because his own countrymen gave him that title. Paul was not saying he was a prophet in the biblical sense. The quotation reveals basic character flaws in the Cretans. They were liars, cruel animals (referring to unrestrained brutality and lives out of control), and lazy gluttons. The reputation of the Cretans was so bad that the verb form of their name (kretizo) was used by the Greeks to indicate lying. Paul applied this familiar phrase to the false teachers.

1:13 The Cretans could hardly argue with one of their own honored prophets, so neither did Paul. Having been in Crete, Paul knew from firsthand experience the type of people with whom Titus was dealing. Paul's recommended remedy was to rebuke the wavering believers sternly, then, if possible, to restore them to strength in the faith.

A forceful, direct response early would prevent utter chaos in the church later. If the first believers were to develop unhealthy spiritual lives, they would carry their "disease" into the ongoing life of the church. Better to deal with the problem right away than to let it build up. But even here, the goal demanded that even the least hopeful candidates for the church be given the opportunity to come to faith.

1:14 Apparently, the false teaching centered on two errors: first, Jewish myths (probably some useless speculations on the Old Testament, see also 1 Timothy 1:4). Titus may well have been facing various shades of syncretism, in which diluted Judaism was being blended with various forms of paganism to yield a deadly brand of godless religion. Second, these human commands most likely focused on rules and rituals, especially Jewish laws regarding what was clean and unclean (as is evident from Paul's words in verses 15-16).

Titus faced the lethal combination of religion and falsehood. Such mixtures have always presented a challenge to God's people. Today the spirit of our times applauds those who create their own personal religion. Self-made rules and guidelines that come from human teaching and not God should never be the basis for Christian thought.

1:15 Phrases like this one, everything is pure to those whose hearts are pure, must be understood in both immediate and wide contexts. Paul was not teaching moral relativism ("As long as I can call myself pure, whatever I choose to do is therefore pure"), but he was speaking against superficial, external legalism. Dietary restrictions or food laws presented a form of religion that people thought provided spiritual substance, but which proved to be empty of real spiritual help. Those who believe sound doctrine and live their faith do not need to worry about rules and rituals regarding what is clean or unclean. No stronger denunciation could be made to these false teachers who taught the need for following rules and rituals in order to be clean and pure. Because of their inner corruption, nothing is pure—nothing they do, say, give, or teach could be pure because their minds and consciences were defiled. Echoing Jesus' teaching in Mark 7:15-19 and Luke 11:39-41, Paul explained that a person who is pure on the inside cannot be corrupted by outside influences; but a person who is corrupt on the inside corrupts everything around him. There can be no purity for such a person.

1:16 The “corrupt and unbelieving” (1:15) false teachers claimed to know God, but their actions revealed their true nature. No matter what rules they claimed to follow, they denied God by the way they lived. The false teachers professed knowledge of God and, with their Jewish background, may have been well versed in the Old Testament. But they based their faith on works, not on the Lord Jesus Christ, thus they denied the God they claimed to know. Paul employed strong words because the sin of these false teachers deserved strong condemnation. Paul called them despicable, revealing his disgust at their sin and hypocrisy; disobedient, because they acted against the God they claimed to know; worthless for doing anything good, because people who live in rebellion against God cannot do any works that please him.

TITUS 2

PROMOTE RIGHT TEACHING / 2:1-15

In chapter 1, Paul set the primary goal for Titus's ministry in Crete: Titus was to teach all the new converts to become "strong in the faith" (1:13). Paul commented on the primary social relationships that were central to the growth of the church in Crete. He did not try to change the system; instead, he sought to change the persons within the systems. Marriages, homes, slavery, and work are all transformed more profoundly from within than from without. Through Titus, Paul was planting seeds of significant change in every facet of life on Crete. But it all depended on the truth of the gospel message.

2:1 The word but contrasts this verse with the previous verses. Whereas the false teachers were deceivers (1:10), Titus was to promote the kind of living that reflects right teaching. Knowledge and acceptance of "right teaching" should lead to righteous living. Behavior should match belief; thus, in the following verses, Paul gave Titus examples of the right behavior expected of several types of people in the churches.

2:2 The older men, though technically not "elders," were the senior members of the community, and should be examples of maturity. They were the "pool" from which elders were to be appointed. Because they were mature members of the community and examples to younger men, Titus should teach the older men to exercise self-control, meaning that their lives should show moderation and clearheadedness, with an absence of extravagance. To be worthy of respect means that they should be "serious minded." They should act as dignified and honorable adults (see also 2:3, 7). To live wisely contrasts with the lifestyle in a heathen atmosphere. They needed to monitor and restrain their passions, anger, and words. Strong faith meant that they were to have a healthy and personal faith in God by maintaining the Christian truth. Love meant that they should be loving, not bitter; their love was to be personal and outgoing (see John 13:34). Patience required endurance and steadfastness.

2:3 Paul's directive for Titus to teach women was in itself a startling departure from the way women were usually treated. The inequalities found in society were not to be brought into church relationships. We honor older people when we consider them capable of still being nurtured.

The older women must also be taught—their lifestyles should be appropriate —dignified, worthy of honor, Christlike. Older Christian women should have a respectful attitude toward all aspects of life and toward people of all ages. They were not to go around speaking evil of others (gossips), nor should they be heavy drinkers. Instead, these older women should teach others what is good. This meant not necessarily public sharing, but sharing their wisdom, knowledge, and faith with their circles of family and friends. No woman should regard her life as less valuable when children have left or after retirement from a career. Nor should they capitulate to despair or loneliness. We need their wisdom, prayers, and examples.

2:4 Specifically, the older women could train the younger women in the church by word and by example. Paul wanted the older women to teach “what is good” (2:3), and here he explained that in detail. First, they could encourage the young women in the church to love their husbands and their children. This seems obvious, but Paul may have included this because of special problems in Crete, or even because of the influence of the false teachers to disregard these responsibilities (see 1:11).

2:5 As with the older men and women, these younger women needed to live wisely. The next word, pure, means to control their passions and desires, remaining true to their husbands (perhaps Paul also mentioned this because of a particular problem in Crete). These young wives and mothers should take care of their homes (which, as any homemaker knows, can be a challenging and diverse career in itself) and do good.

In addition, the young women were to be submissive to their husbands. Submission between marriage partners is an often misunderstood concept. This text, for example, cannot be used to promote the general subjugation of all women under all men. For marriage and family relationships to run smoothly, there must be one appointed leader—God has appointed the husband and father to be this leader. The wife should willingly follow her husband’s leadership in Christ, acknowledging that this is his responsibility.

Maturity provides the key to understanding submission. The husband must not be a tyrant, faithless, unloving, or impatient, as previously mentioned in verse 2. He should be worthy of respect. Likewise, the woman should not be rebellious, undermining or contradicting the man. Submission means to accept the relationship that God has designed, voluntarily subjecting oneself to God’s order and fulfilling the responsibilities that come with it. For more of Paul’s advice about marriage, see 1 Corinthians 7:1-40; Ephesians 5:22-33.

Paul’s purpose in these instructions, and every believer’s purpose in following them, was to glorify God. The believers were being watched; if they lived righteous and blameless lives, they would not bring shame on the word of God. For the believers to continue living in sin amounted to denying God's word and God himself, who had saved them from sin and expected them to obey his commands.

2:6 Paul urged Titus to encourage the young men to live wisely in all they do. Young men today, as much as in ancient times, may lack this quality. If young men exercise self-restraint, balance, and common sense, they can save themselves much trouble in all areas of life.

2:7-8 Titus, qualifying as a "younger man" himself, was urged to be an example for the young men in the churches he led (see also 1 Timothy 4:12). His authoritative words could have no impact if not backed up by a blameless life of doing good deeds. Titus's teaching should emphasize wise living while his lifestyle should be an example of that.

From speaking of Titus's actions, Paul turned to Titus's public ministry of teaching. His life should reflect the integrity and seriousness of what he taught and would contrast him with the false teachers, who taught lies. This quality of integrity would come from careful Bible study and prayer. This would be especially important as Titus taught or confronted others about spiritual or moral issues. If he acted impulsively or unreasonably, he would more likely start arguments than convince people of the truth. Seriousness indicates teaching with reverence so that Titus's words would be respected and taken seriously. Paul counseled Titus to be above criticism in how he taught. Because of his unique role in Crete, his life must display a remarkable degree of correctness. He would be constantly on display. Titus's every word must be measured so that he would remain above reproach and condemnation. His exemplary life, teaching, and speech would shame those who might want to argue with him.

2:9-10 Slavery was common in Paul's day. Millions of slaves occupied the empire, and many of them found their way into the early churches. Slavery was an institution and would not be changed overnight. Thus, Paul did not condemn the institution of slavery in any of his letters. But Paul advised both Christian slaves and masters to be loving and responsible in their conduct (see also Ephesians 6:5-9; Colossians 3:22-25; 1 Timothy 6:1-2; 1 Peter 2:18-25).

Slaves were to obey their masters by nature of their position, but the difference Paul hoped to teach them was in their attitude toward their masters and toward the work they performed. They should treat their masters with respect, and they should do their best to please them. They no longer served because they had to; they served because they loved the Lord and their masters and because they took pride in their work. That the slaves were not to talk back meant that they should not be stubborn, unmanageable, or resistant to authority. That they should not steal referred to any type of theft that might be classified as “petty larceny.” Slaves might be tempted to take “small” needed items, but Christian slaves must resist that temptation in order to show themselves to be entirely trustworthy and good. They would impress their masters and other slaves with the depth of change that God had performed in their lives, making others want to know more about the Christian faith.

2:11 God’s salvation was offered to all the different people in the groups he had just identified. God, by his grace, sent Christ to earth; because of Christ’s death on the cross, salvation is available to all people. The grace of God was revealed in Christ, referring to the incarnation. That message of grace arrived in Crete with Paul and Titus. We can hardly imagine the impact! When the gospel light is turned on in a place of darkness, changes are inevitable. Those who respond are transformed; those who resist and reject the message can do so, but they must face the consequences.

2:12-13 All of Paul’s instructions in verses 1-10 can be summed up in these two phrases. Believers must turn from godless living and sinful pleasures. We live in an evil world where many totally reject God’s influence in any area of life. Christians must renounce that attitude. Sinful pleasures are desires for the pleasures and activities of this world (1 John 2:16). Believers must replace those desires with positive characteristics: self-control, right conduct, and devotion to God. The motivation for righteous living is looking forward to that wonderful event when the glory of our great God and Savior, Jesus Christ, will be revealed. We can look forward to Christ’s wonderful return with eager expectation and hope. Our hope makes us live each day ready morally and ethically to serve him.

2:14 The “great God and Savior, Jesus Christ,” whose return believers await, is the same Jesus Christ who came to earth and died for our sins. Christ’s act of sacrifice is summed up in the words gave his life. It indicates that he gave himself voluntarily. It was an act of love for us. He wanted to free us from every kind of sin. Christ paid the ultimate price. He removed our bondage to sin that made us lawless rebels. Christ has accomplished the work required to cleanse those whom he died to save (see 1 John 1:7; Hebrews 9:12-14). This purification is a process, often called “sanctification.” We are not only free from the sentence of death for our sin, but we are also purified from sin’s influence as we grow in Christ. His redemption took care of the past; his purification makes the present and future an exciting and challenging prospect.

Through his redemption, God made us his very own people. The phrase has an important Old Testament background. The basis of the covenant was God’s choosing this people and purifying them to be set apart for his special use. As people who are cleansed and restored and who understand the awesome price paid on our behalf, we should thank God. We should also live according to God’s will, totally committed to doing what is right. Then, when Christ returns, he will find us ready, waiting, and doing good works.

2:15 Paul repeated his command to Titus to be unafraid in his teaching ministry among the believers in Crete. These things referred to verses 1-10 above. Titus must teach or speak out (as opposed to being silent and thus allowing wrongdoing and sin), encourage (exhort, advise, commend, and/or admonish, depending on the need), and do correcting when necessary (express disapproval, reprimand if needed). In short, he was to persist by every means at his disposal to communicate to those in Crete what he had learned from Paul. Titus could do this on divine authority, for he had been entrusted by God with leadership gifts and with this ministry in Crete.

No doubt, as Titus exercised his God-given authority, some would ignore or disregard him, either because he was younger than they were or because they didn’t agree with his decisions. Paul had made a similar statement with respect to Timothy’s youth in 1 Timothy 4:12. The impact of the phrase communicates the idea that neither Titus nor Timothy should allow anyone else’s definition of who they were to affect what they knew themselves to be. Titus should follow God’s leading as he completed his mission among the Cretan churches.

TITUS 3

DO WHAT IS GOOD / 3:1-8

Most of chapter 2 covered relationships and responsibilities of believers. In this chapter, Paul discussed Christian behavior in the context of government and society. The quality of our earthly citizenship should reflect the confidence we have in our heavenly citizenship! Because we are citizens of the eternal Kingdom, we can live with hope and serve people in the earthly kingdom.

3:1 In addition to teaching, encouraging, and correcting (2:15), a Christian leader must also remind his congregation to submit to the government and its officers. As the believers awaited the return of Christ and living eternally with him in his government (2:13), they had to live under worldly authorities. So Paul explained how believers in Crete could best do that—by subjecting themselves to government rulers and authorities and by obeying civil laws. He did not want any trouble with the authorities that would bring the church under suspicion (see also Romans 13:1-7; 1 Peter 2:13-17).

Christians understand obedience to the government in different ways. All Christians agree that we are to live at peace with the state as long as the state allows us to live by our religious convictions. For hundreds of years, however, there have been at least three interpretations of how we are to do this:

1. Some Christians believe that the state is so corrupt that Christians should have as little to do with it as possible. Although they should be good citizens as long as they can do so without compromising their beliefs, they should not work for the government, vote in elections, or serve in the military. Although this fulfills the principle of abstaining from evil, it prevents the Christian from being salt and light in the governmental, political, and military systems.
2. Others believe that God has given the state authority in certain areas and the church authority in others. Christians can be loyal to both and can work for either. They should not, however, confuse the two. In this view, church and state are concerned with two totally different spheres—the spiritual and the physical. Thus they complement each other but do not work together. This view is very legitimate and supports Jesus' teaching to give to Caesar what is Caesar's and to God what is God's (see Matthew 22:21), but it can lead to isolation from the political world and indifference toward state leaders.

3. Still others believe that Christians have a responsibility to make the state better. They can do this politically, by electing Christian or other high-principled leaders. They can also do this morally, by serving as an influence for good in society. In this view, church and state ideally work together for the good of all. This view is preferred and seems to best portray the New Testament teaching. Nowhere does Jesus call laymen to leave political or social service as a requirement for discipleship. Its inherent danger would be for the Christian to get so involved in worldly affairs that the Christian mission is lost.

Besides being obedient, Paul mentioned readiness to do what is good—in other words, a willingness to serve. No doubt Christians who obeyed the government gave a good witness for their faith among the authorities; Christians active in community service and/or government had great opportunities to witness for Christ.

3:2 These bridge-building characteristics revealed changed lives and made the gospel message attractive to unbelievers. All Christians should check their conduct against these traits. To not speak evil of anyone meant forbidding Christians to spread evil rumors or gossip (see James 3:9). Believers were not to be caught making reports about others that would prove to be untrue. We should be like Christ, who did not retaliate when he was insulted (1 Peter 2:23).

To avoid quarreling means to be peaceable. Christians were to be known as peacemakers in their relationships and within the church. There may be disagreements, but the believers should actively avoid, not the disagreement, but quarreling about it. When disagreements degenerate into quarreling, there is little possibility of preserving peace and working toward a solution.

To be gentle and show true humility follows Christ's example. Christians should not be agitators but conciliators. Believers could show gentleness and humility to unbelievers in their neighborhoods by offering help without strings attached. When we help unbelievers, we open a door for the gospel.

3:3 The Cretans had a reputation for certain vices (1:12), yet Paul well understood that all believers once were sinners and had lived far from God (see also 1 Corinthians 6:9-11; Ephesians 4:17-24). Paul never forgot the change that God had made in his life, beginning with his experience on the Damascus road (Acts 9:1-22). Paul included himself, Titus, the believers in Crete, and all believers across the world in the list of past rebels.

Foolish is used here as it is in Proverbs for those who arrogantly rebel against

God and go their own way. Instead of being submissive, obedient, and ready to do good (3:1), they were disobedient toward God because of sin, and misled by false teachers so that they became slaves to many wicked desires and evil pleasures. Without God, all unbelievers are enslaved to their passions and desires. Left alone, human nature can only go from bad to worse. Instead of avoiding slander and quarrels, being peaceful, considerate, and humble (3:2), their lives were full of evil and envy. No matter how much “love” the world tries to create without God, the overriding power of sin produces a greater amount of hatred. Thus there is no hope for sinful humanity apart from the intervention of the holy God, our Creator.

3:4-6 Fortunately for us, God intervened. God’s kindness and love appeared in the human form of Jesus Christ. By his death, he saved us from our deserved punishment for disobeying God. He offered this salvation because of his mercy alone, not because we deserved it by doing good things. Paul summarized what God does for us when he saves us. God washed away our sins. As Paul explains the transaction, when believers receive this washing of rebirth, all sins, not merely some, are washed away. We gain new life with all its treasures. The process is complete. We can experience what we have in new ways, but we have received the whole package! We live a “new” life because of the Holy Spirit (see Romans 8:9-17) whom he generously poured out upon us because of what Jesus Christ our Savior did.

All three persons of the Trinity are mentioned in these verses because all three participate in the work of salvation. Based upon the redemptive work of his Son, the Father forgives and sends the Holy Spirit to wash away our sins and continually renew us.

3:7 From Adam we inherited guilt, a sinful nature (the tendency to sin), and God’s punishment. Because Jesus took the punishment we deserved for sin and made us right before God, we can trade punishment for forgiveness. We have been declared not guilty. We can trade our sin for Jesus’ righteousness. When we do that, we know that we will inherit eternal life. Eternal life began the moment we gave our life to Christ, but there is more to come! Our experience now is only a foretaste of what God has guaranteed to us in the future!

3:8 The things Paul wrote were true so Titus ought to constantly insist on them. The believers must show their beliefs through their conduct. They must be careful to do good deeds all the time. Sound doctrine must manifest itself in good works. Such teaching and action profits the believers as well as the unbelievers to whom the church witnesses.

PAUL'S FINAL REMARKS AND GREETINGS / 3:9-15

As Titus proceeded with the task of planting and nurturing the church, Paul reminded him that he would encounter resistance. The aging apostle Paul had summarized the key points of the faith that Titus was to communicate. Titus must lead in such a way so that the truth would not be compromised by arguments, curious teachings, or conflicts over power. Some people in the church would not listen and follow even when they were patiently and repeatedly corrected. These people would lead others astray and cause divisions in the church. Titus was not to tolerate their divisive behavior. He would have to put those people out of the church.

3:9 If sound teaching and good deeds were beneficial (3:8), obviously foolish discussions were useless and a waste of time. The false teaching in Crete apparently had Jewish roots and focused on two errors: spiritual pedigrees and quarrels and fights about obedience to Jewish laws—probably some useless speculations on the Old Testament rules and rituals, especially Jewish laws regarding what was clean and unclean. Similar to the methods used by false teachers in Ephesus and Colosse, these teachers were causing controversies, arguments, and quarrels about their own wholly imaginary ideas. The “spiritual pedigrees” may have included imaginary genealogies of angels. These were needed, so the false teachers said, because believers had to worship angels as well as God.

Paul warned Titus and Timothy to not get involved in the false teachers' debates and arguments, to not even bother to answer their pretentious positions. This did not mean that the church leaders should refuse to study, discuss, and examine different interpretations of difficult Bible passages. Paul was warning against petty quarrels, not honest discussion that leads to wisdom. As foolish arguments develop, they should rebuke the false teaching (1:13) and turn the discussion back to a helpful and profitable direction. Meanwhile, the faithful minister should continue to emphasize those truths that God wants taught.

3:10-11 Paul gave a similar warning at the end of Romans 16:17-20 and follows Jesus' pattern in Matthew 18:15-17. Besides avoiding the false teachers' debates, Titus needed to take specific action toward the false teachers themselves, as with anyone who is causing divisions among the believers. Even more than their doctrine, their church-wrecking behavior had to be stopped. While false teachers outside the church were to be avoided, a person inside the church must be warned not to cause division or threaten the unity of the church. Paul allowed for two warnings before having nothing more to do with the person because they have turned away from the truth, are sinning, and condemn themselves. A person's refusal to stop teaching false doctrine and to stop causing division in the church (even after being lovingly admonished) evidenced severe stubbornness.

A local church cannot modify its doctrine for every new idea or accommodate every person's viewpoint. It may be better to risk having a member leave for another church that emphasizes his or her theological "hot button" than to try to be a church that caters to every conceivable theological taste. A church cannot get to the important work of evangelism and service to others if the theological base is shaky or if the church is embroiled in theological controversy.

3:12 Nothing is known about Artemas. Tychicus was one of Paul's trusted companions (Acts 20:4) and a messenger (he delivered the letters of Ephesians and Colossians to the churches in those cities—Ephesians 6:21; Colossians 4:7). Paul planned to send one of these men to Crete to fill in for Titus so Titus could go to meet Paul. We do not know Paul's location at the writing of this letter to Titus; however, he noted here that he wanted to winter in Nicopolis. Three places in the Roman Empire were named Nicopolis (literally "city of victory"), so named after some conquest. The city mentioned here probably was on the western coast of Greece. Titus would have to leave soon because sea travel was dangerous in the winter months.

3:13 Nothing is known about Zenas the lawyer, except that he would have been an expert in the law—either Hebrew or Roman, depending on his nationality (his name is Greek, so we might assume the latter). Apollos was a famous Christian preacher. A native of Alexandria in North Africa, he became a Christian in Ephesus and was trained by Aquila and Priscilla (Acts 18:24-28; 1 Corinthians 1:12). From the context, it appears that Zenas and Apollos were on a preaching mission in Crete. Thus Titus, as leader of the churches in Crete, should be an example to the believers, encouraging hospitality and financial assistance in order that these missionaries would be helped with their trip and have everything they need. (For more about hospitality and help for traveling preachers in the days of the early church, see 2 and 3 John.)

3:14 Paul repeated his words of verses 1 and 8, again stressing the importance of learning to do good by helping others. Speaking to the Cretan believers as our people, Paul urged them to focus these good works on providing for urgent needs. Taking on normal responsibilities ensured that no one would be unproductive. Paul's view of productivity differs radically with today's view. Most people think "productive" means becoming affluent, achieving notoriety, or holding a high position. But Paul emphasized good deeds and fruitful Christian ministry to the needs of others. We must remember that it is the Holy Spirit who makes us fruitful as we use the opportunities given us (Galatians 5:22-23).

3:15 We do not know who was included in the everybody who were with Paul; however, such greetings occurred in many of his letters with the people listed (see for example, 1 Corinthians 1:19-20; Colossians 4:10-15; 2 Timothy 4:9-12). Paul, in turn, sent greetings to all the faithful believers in Crete.

Paul used a similar closing in both his letters to Timothy, asking that God's grace be with them all. The inclusion of "all" indicates that this letter was to be read to a wider audience than just Titus.

PHILEMON

INTRODUCTION

Invisible walls divide people into the “ins and outs,” the “haves and have nots,” and an endless assortment of groups, cliques, and castes. Determined by race, skin color, nationality, money, background, education, status, religion, gender, or ability, individuals are judged, categorized, and put in their place. When those social barriers are crossed, usually it is at a great price.

But Jesus broke the barriers that divide men and women from each other and from God. In a male-dominated society, he spoke freely with women (Matthew 9:18-26; Luke 8:1-3). In the face of holier-than-thou hypocrites, he enjoyed meals with sinners (Matthew 9:10-13). Ignoring years of prejudice and discrimination, he associated with Samaritans (John 4:1-42) and Gentiles (Luke 7:1-10; 8:26-39). And he continually sought to bring outcasts and the powerless into his fold: the crippled and lame (Luke 6:1-11), the desperately ill (Matthew 8:1-4; Luke 17:11-19), the blind (Luke 18:35-42; Mark 8:22-26; John 9:1-7), children (Mark 10:13-16), swindlers and cheaters (Mark 11:13-17; Luke 19:1-10), and the poor (Mark 3:7-12; Luke 21:1-4).

Following in the footsteps of his Lord, Paul became the apostle to the Gentiles as he traveled extensively and shared Christ’s message with all types of people. In fact, writing to the Galatians Paul declared: “There is no longer Jew or Gentile, slave or free, male or female. For you are all Christians” (Galatians 3:28).

Perhaps the greatest example of the barrier-shattering power of the gospel is seen here in Philemon, where Paul reunites a rich slave-owner and his runaway slave, now both members of God’s family.

As you read this personal letter of reconciliation, consider what divides you from your brothers and sisters in Christ. Ask God to obliterate those walls and bring you together.

AUTHOR

Paul, apostle, pastor, friend.

The very first word of this letter names Paul as the writer. In Colossians, Paul explained that, along with his letter to the believers in Colosse, he would be sending Onesimus (Colossians 4:9). Tychicus would deliver both. This letter to Philemon focuses on this same Onesimus. Clearly, then, Paul wrote both letters at about the same time and sent them together.

For more about Paul, see the Author section in the Introduction to the book of Romans.

DATE AND SETTING

Written from a Roman prison in about A.D. 60 (See the Introduction to Philippians.)

This letter was written at about the same time as Ephesians and Colossians. Paul wrote that he was a prisoner (1:1, 9, 23) and in chains (1:10, 13), so clearly he was in prison. And the reference in Colossians 4:9 implies that he would send this letter to Philemon along with his runaway slave, Onesimus.

AUDIENCE

Philemon and the church at large.

Philemon was a leader in the church at Colosse—the church met at his house (1:2). Evidently Philemon was a wealthy slaveholder who had been converted to Christ under Paul’s ministry (1:19). Slaveholders had absolute power over their slaves. Whether or not Philemon was a kind owner, Onesimus had run away and could be beaten, jailed, or even killed for his offense according to Roman law.

People could become slaves by being born to a woman who was a slave, as punishment for a crime, by being kidnapped from another land, and by being conquered by another nation (slave dealers would buy captured prisoners and send them to the slave markets to be sold for a profit). Sometimes, however, parents would sell their children into slavery. And some would voluntarily become slaves in order to pay a debt.

Slavery was taken for granted in the first century—85 to 90 percent of the inhabitants of Italy were slaves. Usually those with financial means would own slaves. Under Roman law, a slave could expect to be set free in seven years. How slave owners treated their slaves could vary greatly, depending on the temperament of the owner and the performance of the slave. Owners could inflict cruel punishments upon slaves, considered as their property, usually by whipping or beating them with a stick. Like thieves, runaway slaves were branded on the forehead. Others were imprisoned. Many slaves died from mistreatment or imprisonment, but it was illegal to take the life of a slave without a court order. Philemon had the power; Onesimus was powerless.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

Onesimus had come to faith in Christ while in Rome and was returning to Colosse, to his master, Philemon.

Because of his unique imprisonment in a rented house, Paul was able to have a steady stream of visitors and to freely preach and teach the word for two years (Acts 28:17-31). During that time, the young man Onesimus heard the Good News and became a follower of Christ (1:10). Onesimus had stolen money from his master, Philemon, and had fled to Rome. Now, as a new Christian, he was preparing to return to Colosse and to Philemon.

Paul wrote this letter on behalf of Onesimus, urging Philemon to see the young man not as a slave but as a “brother in the Lord” (1:16). Thus Paul hoped that Philemon would welcome him (1:17), forgive him (1:18-19), and perhaps even free him (1:21).

Paul’s appeal is based on their common love for Christ (1:9), on their relationship (1:17-19), and on his authority as an apostle (1:8). Philemon’s response is unknown, but it would be difficult to imagine him not welcoming Onesimus as his new brother in Christ.

One of the lessons of this short letter is the example of Paul. He wrote as the advocate of Onesimus, trusting him to return, to submit to Philemon, and to live with the consequences of his actions. Paul believes in Onesimus, that he is a true brother in the faith. Paul does more than write and endorse this runaway slave, he also backs up his words with his money—Paul offers to pay for anything Onesimus may have broken or stolen (1:18).

Another lesson concerns the power of the gospel to bring people together. At opposite poles in their society stood Philemon and Onesimus, yet they became unified brothers through their common faith in Christ. God can reconcile people, regardless of their differences or offenses.

With whom do you need to be reconciled? What new Christian needs your affirmation and support?

MESSAGE

Onesimus “belonged” to Philemon, a member of the Colossian church and Paul’s friend. But Onesimus, the slave, had stolen from his master and run away. He ran to Rome, where he met Paul and there he responded to the Good News and came to faith in Christ (1:10). So Paul wrote to Philemon and reintroduced Onesimus to him, explaining that he was sending him back, not just as a slave but as a brother (1:11-12, 16). Tactfully, he asked Philemon to accept and forgive his brother (1:10, 14-15, 20). The barriers of the past and the new ones erected by Onesimus’s desertion and theft should divide them no longer—they are one in Christ.

The main themes in the book of Philemon include: Forgiveness, Barriers, and Respect.

Forgiveness (1:17-21). Philemon was Paul’s friend, but he also was the legal owner of the slave Onesimus. He could have punished Onesimus severely, as a runaway and as a thief. Paul asked this dear friend not only to withhold punishment, but to forgive Onesimus and to accept him as a new Christian brother, welcoming him into his home as he would welcome Paul (1:17).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Many factors divide people today, including disagreements, politics, arguments, and personal offenses. Yet Christians are to be unified, demonstrating the love of Christ by their love for each other (John 13:34-35). Thus, Christian relationships must be filled with forgiveness and acceptance. Who has wronged you? With what brother or sister in Christ do you feel estranged, distant, or angry? Who do you need to forgive? Build bridges, not walls.

Barriers (1:10-16). Slavery was widespread in the Roman Empire, but no one is lost to God or beyond his love, not even the poorest slave. Slavery was a thick barrier, but God can break through anything that divides people. And God tells us, as those committed to Christ, to love all kinds of people. Christian love and fellowship should overcome all barriers.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. In Christ, we are one family. No walls of racial, economic, political, or social differences should separate us. Christ wants to work through us to remove barriers between brothers and sisters. What can you do to fellowship with Christians of other races? How can you reach out to those from different cultures and social standing?

Respect (1:4-9, 21-25). Paul was a friend of both Philemon and Onesimus. He had the authority as an apostle to tell Philemon what to do (1:8). Yet Paul chose to appeal to his friend in Christian love rather than to order him what to do. Paul clearly made his desires known, but he treated Philemon with respect, as a peer and fellow believer.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Tactful persuasion will accomplish much more than strong commands when dealing with people. No one appreciates being bossed around or ordered what to do. Remember to be courteous and to treat people with respect.

OUTLINE OF PHILEMON

I. Paul's Appreciation of Philemon (1:1-7)

II. Paul's Appeal for Onesimus (1:8-25)

PHILEMON 1

GREETINGS FROM PAUL / 1:1-3

Onesimus, a domestic slave, belonged to Philemon, a wealthy man and a member of the church in Colosse. Onesimus had run away from Philemon and made his way to Rome, where he met Paul, who apparently led him to Christ (1:10). Paul convinced Onesimus that running from his problems wouldn't solve them, and he persuaded Onesimus to return to his master. In Colossians 4:9, Paul regarded Onesimus as a trusted associate. Paul wrote this letter to Philemon to ask him to be reconciled to his runaway slave.

1:1 Although neither Paul nor Timothy had visited the church in Colosse, they had, during their earlier travels, met individual Colossians such as Epaphras, Philemon, Archippus, and Apphia who, after their conversion, had returned with the gospel to their native city. So Philemon was a friend and fellow believer. But this letter does not present doctrine or give commands; instead, it is a request on behalf of another believer. Paul chose to introduce himself in this letter as being in prison for preaching the Good News about Christ Jesus. This is the only one of Paul's letters where he used such an introduction.

Timothy visited Paul frequently during his imprisonment (see also Colossians 1:1) and was with Paul in Rome when he wrote this letter. Timothy was not imprisoned with Paul, but he had stayed in Rome to encourage Paul and to help with ministry needs. Although mentioned in the salutation, Timothy is not considered a coauthor. Paul wrote in the first person throughout this letter (the same is true for the letter to the Philippians).

Philemon was a wealthy Greek landowner living in Colosse. He had been converted under Paul's ministry (1:19), perhaps in Ephesus or some other city where he had met and talked with Paul. During Paul's years of ministry in nearby Ephesus, Philemon had been building up the Colossian church, which would meet in his home (1:2). Thus Paul considered him a much loved coworker. Like most wealthy landowners of ancient times, Philemon owned slaves. Onesimus, the subject of this letter, was one of those slaves.

1:2 Apphia probably was Philemon's wife or another close relative who helped manage his household; otherwise, she would not have been greeted with Philemon in a letter concerning a domestic matter. At this time, women handled the day-to-day responsibilities of the slaves. Thus, the final decision about Onesimus would have been as much her choice as Philemon's. Paul greeted Apphia as our sister, that is, a sister in the Christian faith. Archippus may have been Philemon's son, or perhaps an elder in the Colossian church (at the end of the letter to the Colossians, Paul had given special encouragement to a man named Archippus; see Colossians 4:17). In either case, Paul included him as a recipient of the letter, possibly so that Archippus would read the letter with Philemon and encourage him to take Paul's advice.

The early churches always met in people's homes. Because of sporadic persecutions and the great expense involved, church buildings were not constructed at this time (church buildings were not built until the third century). Many congregations were small enough that the entire church could meet in one home. Because Philemon was one of those who had worked to begin the church at Colosse, it was natural that believers would meet in his house. The church could refer to the entire body of believers, although it seems unlikely because Paul had been writing a letter to the entire Colossian church at this same time. It may have been that, as in any large city even today, smaller groups of believers met regularly in various private homes. One group met in Philemon's home; some met in other believers' homes, such as Nympha's. Paul had greeted Nympha and the church in her house in Colossians 4:15. (For references to other house churches, see Romans 16:5 and 1 Corinthians 16:19-20.)

Because of the personal nature of this letter, Paul apparently chose not to include his instructions to Philemon in his general letter to the Colossians. Paul greeted the believers who met in Philemon's home because Paul knew that not only would this group know about the runaway slave, but they would also become Onesimus's "family" upon his return as a new believer. The church would need to understand Paul's request and Philemon's response to it. Then there would be no gossip, and they could immediately and lovingly accept Onesimus into their fellowship.

1:3 Paul used grace and peace as a standard greeting in all his letters. "Grace" is God's undeserved favor—his loving-kindness shown to sinners whereby he saves them and gives them strength to live for him; "peace" refers to the peace that Christ made between sinners and God through his death on the cross. Peace refers to that inner assurance and tranquility that God places in a person, producing confidence and contentment in Christ. Only God can grant such wonderful gifts.

The phrase God our Father focuses on the family relationship among all believers as God's children. In the context of this letter, Paul was emphasizing the family relationship that the master, Philemon, and the slave, Onesimus, had because both were believers. By using the phrase, Lord Jesus Christ, Paul was pointing to Jesus as a full person of the Godhead and was recognizing Jesus' full deity. God the Father and Christ the Lord are coequal in providing grace and peace.

PAUL'S THANKSGIVING AND PRAYER / 1:4-7

Most ancient letters included a thanksgiving for the addressee immediately after the salutation. With these words, Paul was expressing his love for Philemon. Paul constantly prayed for churches and for individual believers who had specific needs.

1:4-5 Philemon had been converted under Paul's ministry and then had returned to Colosse. Although Paul had never visited Colosse, he had heard (perhaps from Onesimus or Epaphras) about Philemon's continued trust in the Lord Jesus and love for all of God's people. Paul was saying that if Philemon truly loved all the believers, then he certainly would be willing to include another believer—Onesimus—in that love.

1:6 This verse describes Paul's prayer and introduces the request that Paul will make to Philemon in this letter. The word you is singular (as in 1:4)—this was what Paul prayed for Philemon himself. The Greek word koinonia is rendered in these verses as generous. Koinonia is a difficult word to translate, but it incorporates the true outworking of Christian love in the body of Christ. The word focused on Philemon's relationship with other Christians. Paul prayed that Philemon's faith would show itself in koinonia among the believers. Paul prayed that Philemon would put his generosity to work. Paul will soon ask Philemon to welcome Onesimus as if he were Paul, and that Philemon should charge any of Onesimus's debts to Paul (1:17-19). This is true koinonia, Christians giving to one another and caring for one another because they belong to one another.

1:7 The love that Philemon showed to all the believers (1:5) had also given Paul much joy and comfort. Philemon probably had acted out his faith among the believers in many ways beyond sharing his home for church meetings. But Paul was concerned less about Philemon's actions than about the spirit in which he was performing them. Paul hoped that Philemon's loving spirit—which had given others joy, encouragement, and refreshment—would also show itself in his dealings with Onesimus.

PAUL'S APPEAL FOR ONESIMUS / 1:8-22

While in prison, Paul had led Onesimus to the Lord. So he asked Philemon to forgive his runaway slave who had become a Christian and, even going beyond forgiveness, to accept Onesimus as a brother. As Christians, we should forgive as we have been forgiven (Matthew 6:12; Ephesians 4:31-32). True forgiveness means that we treat the one we've forgiven as we would want to be treated. Is there someone you say you have forgiven, but who still needs your kindness?

1:8-9 Carrying on the thought from verse 7—the love Philemon had shown to the believer and to Paul ought to be extended to include another. This was indeed boldly asking a favor—in the Roman Empire, a master had the right to kill a disobedient slave. In any other situation, Onesimus's action of running away would have signed his death warrant. But Onesimus had met Paul, and Paul knew Philemon, so Paul mediated because of their common brotherhood in Christ.

Paul first described his right to make this appeal to Philemon. Paul was Philemon's friend and spiritual father (1:19), but Paul was also an elder and an apostle with authority in the name of Christ. Paul was subtly reminding Philemon of his authority. Paul could have demanded how Philemon should act because it was the right thing to do, but Paul based his request not on his own authority, but on his friendship with Philemon and Philemon's Christian commitment. Paul wanted Philemon's heartfelt, not grudging, obedience, so he preferred just to ask the favor of Philemon.

1:10 In the Greek text, Onesimus's name is the last word in this verse, exhibiting Paul's skillful crafting of this letter. After the introduction and sincere compliments to Philemon, he began to state his appeal. He gave Onesimus's name at the last possible moment, not broaching the actual appeal until verse 17. Paul approached Philemon with tact and humility.

Philemon probably had been angered that his slave had disappeared (in Roman times, it was like losing a piece of valuable property). Thus, Paul first explained that his appeal was on behalf of someone who had become his son during Paul's imprisonment—that is, someone Paul had led to Christ from prison. Philemon would be dealing with a fellow believer.

1:11 Onesimus's name in Greek means “useful.” The name was a common name for slaves and is found in many ancient inscriptions. A nameless slave might be given this name with the hope that he would live up to it in serving his master.

Paul used a play on words, saying that Onesimus had formerly had not been of much use to Philemon in the past, but had become very useful both to Paul and, potentially, to Philemon. Under Philemon's service, Onesimus had failed to live up to his name. Paul was confident, however, that this new man with his new life in Christ would live up to his name if Philemon would take him back. In Colossians 4:9, Paul called Onesimus a “faithful and much loved brother.” Onesimus had become known for his faithfulness.

1:12-13 Although Paul would have liked to keep Onesimus with him, he was sending Onesimus back to Philemon along with Paul’s own heart. Paul asked that Philemon accept Onesimus not only as a forgiven runaway servant, but also as a brother in Christ. This verse suggests that Onesimus himself would deliver this letter to Philemon, so Philemon would need to make his decision as he stood face-to-face with his slave.

Paul was willing to give away his very heart, a part of himself, in order to return Onesimus permanently to Philemon. Onesimus had become part of Paul’s ministry team. This was a sacrifice on Paul’s part, for Onesimus apparently could have helped Paul on Philemon’s behalf. Paul knew that if Philemon were available to be with Paul, he would have helped him in any way he could; therefore, if Paul had kept Onesimus, Philemon would have been helping Paul vicariously. Paul implied that he trusted Onesimus so much that Onesimus’s service could be considered in place of Philemon’s; therefore, Philemon should be able to trust him as well. Paul, imprisoned for preaching the Good News, longed for his friends; how difficult it was for him to send away this man. Yet Paul knew it was his duty to do so—Roman law demanded that a deserting slave be returned to his legal owner (although Deuteronomy 23:15-16 states the opposite). Because Onesimus belonged to Philemon, Paul chose to send him back.

1:14 Paul would have liked to have kept Onesimus with him (1:13). However, he decided not to try to talk Philemon into allowing Onesimus to return to Rome to serve Paul; Paul might have felt that this was taking undue advantage of his relationship with Philemon. Paul sent Onesimus back to Philemon, preferring that Philemon make the final decision in the matter. The help probably did not refer to allowing Onesimus to return to Paul, but that Philemon would pardon his slave from severe punishment since Onesimus had become a new person in Christ. Philemon had to think of Onesimus not as a piece of property, but as a brother in the fellowship.

1:15 Paul considered that all that had happened—Onesimus’s desertion and subsequent conversion to Christ—had been part of God’s providence. God can overrule and bring good out of human sin and folly. Onesimus had caused trouble and heartache, but he had become a new person, and Philemon would soon have him back. The little while of Onesimus's absence would be overshadowed by the devotion that would bind him to his master forever. They would be together for eternity, but Paul also wanted Philemon to take Onesimus back into his service permanently now.

1:16 For Philemon to accept Onesimus back, he would have to do so with the understanding that Onesimus had a new status—he was a person (that is, not merely a slave), and he was also a beloved brother. Paul knew how difficult it might be for Philemon to deal with Onesimus as a “brother” after the trouble he had caused. Paul made it clear that he not only trusted Onesimus (1:13) but that he considered Onesimus a brother in Christ. With these words, Paul deftly placed himself, Philemon, and Onesimus all at the same level. While this prisoner, landowner, and slave had very different social positions, they were equals in Christ. While Onesimus had become very dear to Paul, he would mean much more to Philemon because Onesimus's former relationship with Philemon had laid the groundwork for a lasting relationship between them.

1:17 In this verse Paul stated his request: give him the same welcome you would give me. Like the father of the prodigal son in Jesus' parable (Luke 15:11-32), Philemon should open his arms to welcome Onesimus back to his household and, as a new believer, to the church. God had welcomed Onesimus; so should Philemon. The word partner is koinonon from the word koinonia, translated as generosity. Philemon and Paul shared the koinonia described in verse 6. Paul wanted Philemon's attitude toward Onesimus to be based on his attitude toward Paul.

1:18 Onesimus may have confessed some such act to Paul. The only way Onesimus could have financed his flight was to have stolen from his master money or possessions that he could sell. Even if not, he still would be in debt for the work that had not been performed in his absence. This would cause Onesimus to be extremely afraid to return to his master. It was bad enough that he had run away, but if he had also stolen money or possessions or had harmed his master in any other way, he would be in deep trouble. Thus Paul's letter served as a buffer—giving Onesimus courage to return and giving Philemon the entire picture so that he might deal kindly with his slave.

Any money or possessions that Onesimus had taken certainly were long gone. Onesimus had no means to repay. Paul asked that any money stolen be charged to his own account; in other words, Onesimus no longer would owe Philemon anything, but Paul would. Paul was not suggesting to Philemon that he simply forgive Onesimus's debt; the wrong needed to be righted. Instead, Paul took on that debt on Onesimus's behalf. Onesimus would never know whether the debt was actually demanded and repaid. All he knew was that a debt needed to be paid because of his wrong actions—but that someone else was going to pay it for him. Onesimus got a dose of true Christian love through Paul's action.

1:19 Often, Paul would use a secretary to write his letters as he dictated them (see Romans 16:22). But sometimes at the end of the letters, he would take the pen and write a few words in his own handwriting to authenticate the letters (see, for example, Galatians 6:11; Colossians 4:18). For Paul to write the words I will repay it emphasized that he was placing himself under legal obligation to do so. Paul was not “just saying” this to placate Philemon; he meant to do so by putting it in writing. If Philemon had demanded repayment, Paul would have had to do it. But it seems that Paul knew his friend well enough to know that he would not demand repayment. While Paul told Philemon to put Onesimus's charge on Paul's “page” in the accounting book, Paul also reminded Philemon that he (Paul) had a huge credit already, in that Philemon owed his very soul (his conversion and eternal security) to Paul. Once Onesimus's debt was put on Paul's page, it would be canceled. As Philemon's spiritual father, Paul was hoping that Philemon would feel a debt of gratitude that would cause him to accept Onesimus with a spirit of forgiveness.

1:20 In the matters of ledgers and debts, once Onesimus's debt was repaid, Paul would still have a credit, for who can ever repay someone for bringing him or her to eternal life? Thus Paul asked that the balance be paid in kindness to Onesimus as a favor to Paul. Onesimus had been useful to Paul (1:11); Paul hoped that Philemon would find the same. And as Philemon had refreshed the hearts of the saints (1:7), he could hardly do other than refresh Paul's heart as well.

1:21 Paul was not only confident that Philemon would welcome Onesimus back, but that Philemon would also do even more than Paul asked. This may have been a hint that Philemon would willingly free Onesimus so that he could return to Paul or be freed when Paul got to Colosse. We can be sure that Philemon welcomed Onesimus, but the “even more” is left unknown.

1:22 That Paul would ask Philemon to keep a guest room ready in his home indicates that Paul expected to be released (see also Philippians 2:23-24). Some feel that this was Paul's way of reminding Philemon of his apostolic authority. Or it may have been a tongue-in-cheek way of securing a kindly reception for Onesimus because Paul hoped to eventually arrive to check up on what had occurred. It is more likely that Paul was simply hoping to eventually visit these friends who had been praying for him.

His freedom would be secured through these prayers. The words your and you are plural, focusing on Philemon, Apphia, Archippus, and the church in Philemon's house. Paul had never been to Colosse; the word return in Greek simply means "granted" or "given as a gift" (the root of the word is charis, "grace"). For Philemon and the church in his home to have their prayers answered with a visit from Paul would indeed be a gift of grace. Paul was released from prison soon after writing this letter, but the Bible doesn't say whether he went to Colosse.

PAUL'S FINAL GREETINGS / 1:23-25

While this is Paul's standard benediction, it certainly had special meaning to Philemon. It would take God's grace working in Philemon to enable him to do something difficult, something unnatural—forgiving, welcoming, and accepting into the fellowship as a brother a slave who had, at least at a previous time, proven himself to be unfaithful and untrustworthy. It would be through God's grace alone that this reconciliation would be possible. Yet the grace was available; Philemon only had to act upon it. If the entire letter was meant to be read to the church that met in Philemon's home, then they too would, by God's grace, also need to welcome and accept Onesimus. God's grace, working in the spirits of believers, makes true fellowship and reconciliation possible within any body of believers.

1:23 The you in this verse is singular. These are personal greetings to Philemon. Epaphras was well known to the Colossians because he had founded the church there (Colossians 1:7), perhaps while Paul was living in Ephesus (Acts 19:10). Epaphras may have been converted in Ephesus and then had returned to Colosse, his hometown. He was a hero to this church, helping to hold it together in spite of growing persecution and struggles with false doctrine. His report to Paul about the problems in Colosse had prompted Paul to write his letter to the Colossians. Epaphras's greetings to and prayers for the Colossian Christians reveal his deep love for them (Colossians 4:12-13).

It is unclear whether Epaphras was actually in prison with Paul. Paul's words fellow prisoner in Christ Jesus may have been a metaphor of warfare or "captivity to Christ." It is more likely that Epaphras was with Paul voluntarily and would return to Colosse.

1:24 Mark, Aristarchus, Demas, and Luke are also mentioned in Colossians 4:10, 14. Mark had accompanied Paul and Barnabas on their first missionary journey (Acts 12:25ff.) and eventually wrote the Gospel of Mark. Luke had accompanied Paul on his third missionary journey and was the writer of the Gospel of Luke and the book of Acts. Demas had been faithful to Paul for a while but then had deserted him (see 2 Timothy 4:10). Paul had sent greetings from these same people in the letter to the Colossians. But in that letter, a man “Jesus who is called Justus” also had sent greetings to Colosse. Much speculation has been done as to why his greetings were not included here, but it may simply have been that he was absent on the day Paul wrote this letter to Philemon.

1:25 The word your is plural, indicating that Paul sent this final blessing not to Philemon only, but to the entire church that regularly met in his home (1:2). As Paul had begun his letter with grace (1:3), so he ended it with the benediction that the believers would continue to experience God’s unmerited favor. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ is with Christians’ spirits because the Spirit of Jesus Christ indwells the spirits (the inner selves) of believers (see Romans 8:9-11).

HEBREWS

INTRODUCTION

Faced with the choice of something good or something obviously bad, only a foolish or misguided person would choose “bad.” Good should win every time.

At the next level, however, choices become more difficult—deciding between “good” and “better.” Again in this case, the logical choice would seem to be “better,” but the choice is not as clear-cut as in the former situation: The differences between the two options may seem insignificant, the reasons for choosing what purports to be “better” may be unconvincing, and staying with the familiar “good” may feel comfortable and convenient. Thus, faced with keeping the “good” or moving up to “better,” many people stick with what they have, because, after all, it’s not “bad.”

The next choice is even more difficult—deciding between “better” and “best.” Again, the obvious choice should be “best” every time, but many miss what is best and settle, instead, for “better” or simply “good.” For them it is better to stay with what they know.

The writer of the letter to the Hebrews had to convince the readers to settle for nothing less than God’s very best for their lives. Jews were familiar with God’s goodness and perfection. After all, they were his chosen people, and through them God had communicated his love and plan for the world. They were the recipients of the covenant, the law, the Tabernacle, and profound religious rituals, and they had been blessed with prophets proclaiming God’s messages and priests doing God’s work. Judaism was God’s way, and it was good.

But Jesus, the Christ, had come, fulfilling the law, making the perfect sacrifice, and initiating the new covenant. Christ was a better prophet, a better priest, and a better sacrifice. In fact, he was the ultimate “best.” Many Jews had embraced this new way, expressing faith in Christ (“Messiah”) as Savior and Lord. Yet the familiar Judaism continued to draw them back. Some returned to the old way, and others attempted to combine the old with the new, forming a hybrid of Judaism and Christianity. And so they were missing God’s best.

Hebrews is a masterful document written to Jews who were evaluating Jesus or who were struggling with the Christian faith. The message of Hebrews is that Jesus is better, Christianity is superior, and Christ is supreme and completely sufficient for salvation.

As you read Hebrews, catch the profound message of this important book. Judaism may not be calling you back, but many other gods and belief systems clamor for attention and push for allegiance. Regardless of their claims and promises, know that only Jesus is the truth, and only he brings life. Jesus is the best, the only way (John 14:6). Don't settle for anything less!

AUTHOR

The authorship of Hebrews has been in doubt since its publication. In fact, none of the early writers who refer to this book mention its author. And no one since early times has been able to identify the author.

Hebrews names no one as author. The inclusion of Hebrews into the New Testament canon came from the Eastern church as early as A.D. 185, mainly because of the traditional belief that Paul had written it. Clement of Alexandria described his teacher's (Pantaenus's) explanation for why Paul did not use his own name in this letter. Pantaenus surmised that Paul refrained from mentioning his name out of reverence to the Lord, who himself had been their Apostle (3:1). Clement accepted this explanation and proposed that the original had been written in Hebrew (Aramaic) and Luke had translated it into Greek. But this is conjecture.

What, then, do we know about the author for certain? From the content of the letter we learn that the author was a teacher and a second-generation Christian (2:3). The writer had thought long and hard about a Christian interpretation of the Old Testament. He or she was probably a Greek-speaking Jew, familiar with the Old Testament Scriptures and with the religious ideas of the Jews. The author claims to share the inheritance of their sacred history, traditions, and institutions (1:1), and writes of them with intimate knowledge and enthusiasm. The author seems to have known the Old Testament only in the Septuagint (ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament), which is followed even where it deviates from the Hebrew. The fact that Hebrews contains teachings that are "Pauline" along with the mention of Timothy in 13:23 seems to suggest that the author knew Paul or associated with those who were close to him. The author used Greek with a purity of style and strong vocabulary, and the style is unlike any other New Testament document. However, the fundamental concepts of Hebrews correspond fully with the writings of Paul and John. Beyond this limited profile, the letter gives few authorship clues.

A number of possible authors who fit the profile have been proposed over the years. Paul is one, but while the content of Hebrews does not contradict Paul's writings, the style of Hebrews differs greatly from Paul's letters.

Another suggestion is Barnabas, Paul's friend and companion on his first missionary trip (see Acts 9:27; 11:22-26; 12:25; 13:1-14:28; 15:1-41). Barnabas, "Son of Encouragement," was a Levite (Acts 4:36) and thoroughly familiar with the priestly rituals, which form a large portion of this letter. Despite this strong endorsement, however, there is no other evidence or ancient support for Barnabas as author.

Some suggest Apollos, the charismatic preacher mentioned from time to time in the New Testament (see Acts 18:24-28; 19:1; 1 Corinthians 1:12; 3:4-6; 4:1, 6; 16:12; Titus 3:13), but we know very little about him. Apollos was a Jew, a native of Alexandria, well educated, and well versed in Scripture. Apollos knew Timothy and had been instructed by Paul, indirectly, through Priscilla and Aquila (Acts 18:25-26). Luther proposed Apollos as the author, and many modern scholars lean in that direction because the epistle displays the kind of allegorical interpretations that were prominent in Alexandria.

Finally, there are many other names that have been proposed. Each one has a bit of support: Silas, a member of both Paul's and Peter's circles and possibly the coauthor or secretary for 1 Peter (there are similarities in style between 1 Peter and Hebrews); Philip the evangelist (commendation of Paulinism to Jewish Christians in Jerusalem); Clement of Rome (nearly identical wording in places between his writings and Hebrews); Epaphras (similarities between Colossians and Hebrews); Priscilla (the anonymity of the letter—a woman author would have been difficult for the early church to accept); Priscilla and Aquila together (the use of the pronoun “we” in many places; for example, 5:11; 6:3, 9, 11-12; 8:1; 9:5; 13:18).

Having no known author is one reason that the early church was slow to include Hebrews as Holy Scripture. In the final analysis, Hebrews's own intrinsic worth won its place in the canon. We can only agree with Origen, who stated in the third century: “But who wrote the epistle, God only knows the truth” (quoted by Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History 6.25.14).

DATE AND SETTING

Written in approximately A.D. 60.

Because Clement of Rome used Hebrews, the letter must have been written prior to A.D. 95. An argument from silence is the lack of any reference to the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Certainly in a book written to Jews, an event of such catastrophic proportions would have been mentioned, especially since it would have strengthened the argument for the superiority of Christ and the new covenant over the Levitical ritual. Thus Hebrews must have been written prior to A.D. 70.

An additional important factor in setting a date for Hebrews is the identification of the persecution referred to in 10:32-34. Three Roman persecutions stand as possibilities: under Claudius in A.D. 49, under Nero beginning in ^{A.D.} 64, and under Domitian in the eighties and nineties. Note that the passage says nothing about loss of life. Many believers died under Nero and Domitian, but the persecution suffered by the readers of Hebrews does not seem to have involved martyrdom (12:4). In his persecution, Claudius expelled the Jews from Rome, including Jewish Christians (among whom were Priscilla and Aquila—Acts 18:2). During this expulsion, they would have been publicly mocked, and they would have lost their property. That treatment seems to match the description in chapter 10.

Considering all of the above, Hebrews was probably written in the early fifties or sixties, before the terrible persecution under Nero. This date also seems compatible with the statement that the readers had heard the gospel from those who had heard Jesus (2:3), and that Timothy was still alive (13:23).

AUDIENCE

Hebrew Christians who may have been considering a return to Judaism.

The title “Hebrews” or “To the Hebrews” was not part of the original writing, but appears in some of the earliest copies. Nevertheless, the title is appropriate considering the content, which is narrowly focused on the Old Testament Scriptures and Jewish religious practices. The writer thoroughly discussed the worship in the Tabernacle, the priests and the sacrifices, the covenant, and Jewish heroes including Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, and others. References to “Abraham’s descendants” (2:16), the argument that Jesus is superior to Moses (3:1-19), and the emphasis on “rest” (4:1-11) would have appealed to Jews and would have had very little effect on Gentiles.

Traditionally, Hebrews was thought to have been sent to believers in Jerusalem. Jewish Christians there would have been under the greatest pressure to return to their former religion. And they had suffered severe persecution. The problem with this view, however, is that the strong Greek character of the book would not fit as well with Jerusalem readers as it would with those outside Palestine, especially since many of the Greek-speaking Jews had been driven from Jerusalem following the death of Stephen (Acts 8:1-3). Also, remember that the Jerusalem church struggled continually with poverty and would not have been capable of the generosity mentioned in 6:10, 10:34, and 13:16. In addition, Jewish religious life in Jerusalem was dominated by the Temple, to which Hebrews makes no specific reference.

Another possible destination is Alexandria in Egypt. Support for this city comes from apparent signs of an Alexandrian perspective in Hebrews: similarities with the Alexandrian Jewish scholar Philo, the use of the Old Testament, and the dualism between heavenly archetypes and earthly copies. Yet this may mean only that the author was acquainted with Alexandrian thought, not that Alexandria was the destination.

Many other places have been suggested as possible destinations for Hebrews: Colosse, Samaria, Caesarea, Syrian Antioch, Ephesus, Galatia, Cyprus, Corinth, and Berea. None of these has much evidence or support.

A probable destination is Rome. That is where Hebrews was first known and quoted. In a letter written to the Corinthian church on behalf of the Roman church, Clement of Rome revealed his knowledge of this epistle. Certainly the references to persecution fit Roman readers. Also, the greetings from believers in Italy (13:24) points to a Roman connection. Quite possibly the author, writing from another location, knew Italian believers in that city and was sending their greetings back to Rome.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To present the sufficiency and superiority of Christ to Hebrew Christians who may have been considering a return to Judaism.

We don't know of a specific occasion for the writing of this important letter, but there is no doubt that believers of all backgrounds were subject to persecution and pressure to renounce their faith. Jewish believers were vulnerable to doubts about Christ and to thinking about turning back to their familiar rituals and old way of thinking. Many had been persecuted severely by their countrymen, branded as heretics, and deserted by their extended family. As they thought back to the past, their Jewish traditions and ceremonies must have seemed wondrously attractive. They were tempted to hold on to the old while, perhaps, secretly professing the new. In this way, they thought, they could have both Judaism and Christianity.

The purpose of the Epistle to the Hebrews, therefore, was to remind and convince readers of the sufficiency and superiority of Christ (9:14), to warn them of the danger of drifting away from Christ (2:3), and to exhort them to faithfulness (3:6).

Although most Western Christians do not face severe persecution from family, friends, and society in general, at times they may look back longingly at their previous life "before Christ." Though not tempted to return to a former religion, they may feel the pull of an old lifestyle, materialism, or the cultural cult of self-worship.

Hebrews speaks to this temptation with the clear message that only Christ brings salvation, only Christ brings forgiveness, only Christ satisfies. And he alone deserves our adoration, worship, and praise.

MESSAGE

The primary message of this book, (as presented from 1:4–10:18) is that Jesus is superior to angels (1:4–2:18), superior to the ancient Jewish leaders (3:1–4:13), and superior to the Jewish priests (4:14–7:28). Christ surpasses Judaism because he has a better covenant (8:1-13), a better sanctuary (9:1-10), and a more sufficient sacrifice for sins (9:11–10:18).

Having established the superiority of Christ, the writer moves on to the practical implications of following Christ. The readers are exhorted to hold on to their new faith, encourage each other, and look forward to Christ's return (10:19-25). They are warned about the consequences of rejecting Christ's sacrifice (10:26-31) and reminded of the rewards for faithfulness (10:32-39). Then the author explains how to live by faith, giving illustrations of the faithful men and women in Israel's history (11:1-40) and giving encouragement and exhortation for daily living (12:1-17). This section ends by comparing the old covenant with the new (12:18-29). The writer concludes with moral exhortations (13:1-17), a request for prayer (13:18, 19), and a benediction and greetings (13:20-25).

The main themes in the book of Hebrews include: Superiority of Christ, High Priest, Sacrifice, Promise, Maturity, Faith, and Endurance.

Superiority of Christ (1:1-14; 2:5–3:6; 4:14–5:10; 6:13–10:18). Hebrews reveals Jesus' true identity as God in the flesh. Jesus is the ultimate authority. He is greater than any angel or religion. As the divine Son of God, Jesus is superior to any Jewish leader (such as Abraham, Moses, or Joshua). As the perfect man and mediator with God, he is superior to any priest. As one who endured suffering and temptation, but without sin, he knows us thoroughly. Jesus is the complete revelation of God. And he has been exalted to God's right hand (1:3), crowned with glory and honor (2:9).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. In our competitive society, everyone seems obsessed with winning and identifying with the "best." In our pluralistic society, we are aware of a wide range of religions and worldviews. In all of this clutter, however, we must keep our eyes on Christ, remembering that he alone can forgive sins and give eternal life. Jesus has secured your forgiveness and salvation by his death on the cross and by his resurrection. Don't accept any alternative or substitute, no matter how attractive it may seem. Have you understood that Christ is superior in every way?

High Priest (3:1; 4:14–5:10; 6:19–8:6; 9:6–10:22; 13:11-13). In the Old Testament, the high priest represented the Jews before God. He would make blood sacrifices to atone for the people's sins before God. Once a year, on the Day of Atonement, the high priest would enter the Most Holy Place in the Temple to make atonement for the sins of the whole nation. The high priest would approach God only once a year, but Christ is always at God's right hand, interceding for us.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Jesus Christ is always available to hear us when we pray. He links us with God. In fact, there is no other way to reach the Father except through the Son. Because Jesus lived a sinless life, he was the perfect substitute to die for our sin. And he is the perfect High Priest, having offered himself as the sacrifice. Jesus is our perfect representative with God. Jesus guarantees your access to God the Father. He intercedes for you, so you can come boldly to the Father with your needs. When you sin and are weak, you can come confidently to God for forgiveness and for help. What is keeping you from the Father?

Sacrifice (1:3; 2:9; 7:27; 9:12-14, 24-28; 10:5-22). Old Testament sacrifices had to be perfect: animals without any injuries or blemishes. These animals were killed on the altar, their blood spilled for the sins of the people. Jesus, the divine Son of God and the perfect Son of Man, died on the cross, shedding his blood to secure the forgiveness for all people. Christ's sacrifice was the ultimate fulfillment of all that the Old Testament sacrifices represented.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Because Christ is the perfect sacrifice for sin, our sins are completely forgiven—past, present, and future. Christ removed sin, which barred us from God's presence and fellowship. We don't automatically receive this forgiveness; we must accept Christ's sacrifice for us. By believing in Christ, you are no longer guilty; you have been cleansed and made whole. His sacrifice cleared the way for you to have eternal life. What can you do to express your gratitude to Christ for his profound love for you and for his work on the cross?

Promise (4:1-11; 6:13-20; 7:18-25; 8:6-9:22; 10:15-16). God made a holy promise, a covenant, with Abraham. In this covenant, God promised to bless Abraham, to make of Abraham's descendants a great nation, and to bless all the world through him. God also promised to be with his people and to give them rest. Although the people often failed to live up to their side of the covenant, God always kept his: through Abraham came the nation of Israel, and eventually Christ. In addition, God brought his people to the Promised Land, and eventually he will bring them to their eternal rest.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The old covenant made with Abraham was tied to the nation of Israel. God's new covenant, secured through his Son, is available to all who place their trust in Christ. In addition, the new covenant offers total forgiveness and eternal life. Believers can have hope in the future because of what Jesus Christ has done for them. Eventually they will find perfect rest in heaven. Regardless of your circumstances or difficulties, you can have hope in Christ. If you have trusted him for salvation, the covenant promises apply to you.

Maturity (2:11-13; 5:11–6:3). Although God’s people are saved from sin and given eternal life when they trust in Christ as Savior, they are given the task of going on and growing in faith. Too often, however, believers remain immature, feeding only on “milk” and not “meat” and arguing over the basics (6:1). Through a living relationship with Christ, however, believers can live blameless lives, be used powerfully by God, and mature in their faith.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The process of maturing in our faith takes time and discipline. Daily communication with God through prayer and studying his Word produces maturity. When we are mature in our faith, we won’t be easily swayed or shaken by temptations or worldly concerns. If you find yourself disputing issues of lifestyle, faith, spiritual gifts, and the end times, you may be spiritually immature. Don’t be content to remain a spiritual baby. What can you do to grow in faith?

Faith (11:1-40; 13:1-21). The Bible, from beginning to end, is a book about faith. Many believed God and received multiplied blessings on earth. Others believed God and were persecuted, tortured, and martyred for their faith. God expects his people to come to him in faith and to live by faith, regardless of the circumstances or outcomes. Faith is confident trust in God and his promises. God’s greatest promise is that people can be saved from sin and have eternal life through Christ.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Those who trust in Jesus Christ for salvation, God will transform completely, moving them from guilt to forgiveness, from death to life, and from despair to hope. A life of obedience and trust pleases God. The more you know of God, the more you will trust him. The more you trust, the more you will hope in his promises.

Endurance (2:1-4; 3:1-19; 4:11-16; 6:4-12; 10:19-39; 12:1-29). It wasn’t easy to be a Christian in the first century, especially a Jewish Christian. Believers who had come to faith in Christ out of Judaism were ostracized by their families and persecuted by the religious leaders. When the Romans began to persecute Christians, they seized their property, imprisoned and tortured them. These believers felt tremendous pressure to denounce Christianity, to combine Christian teachings with Judaism, or to be secret believers. Hebrews, therefore, warns against apostasy and against slipping back into old habits and beliefs; the message of this book challenges believers to endure to the end.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Faith enables Christians to face trials. Genuine faith includes the commitment to stay true to God when we are under fire. Endurance builds character and leads to victory. You can have victory in your trials if you keep your focus on Christ and don’t give up. What pressures do you feel to return to an old way of life or belief-system? What can you do to keep your eyes on Christ and not on your struggles? Stay true to Christ, and pray for endurance.

OUTLINE OF HEBREWS

I. The Superiority of Christ (1:1–10:18)

- A. Christ is greater than the angels
- B. Christ is greater than Moses
- C. Christ is greater than the Old Testament priesthood
- D. The new covenant is greater than the old

II. The Superiority of Faith (10:19–13:25)

HEBREWS 1

JESUS CHRIST IS GOD'S SON / 1:1-3

Hebrews 1:1–10:18 presents a series of sections showing how Christ is superior to key aspects of Judaism. The new covenant is shown to be far superior to the old. The writer of Hebrews reported that Jesus Christ, the Messiah, initiated a new, long-awaited age. Christ brought spiritual peace and a spiritual Kingdom. Jesus, the Messiah, has already begun his Kingdom on earth in the hearts of his followers. In chapter 1, Christ is presented as the ultimate and superior revelation of God. This can greatly encourage us and help us avoid drifting away from our faith in Christ.

1:1 The writer divides history into two segments or ages: before Christ and after Christ. He calls the time before Christ long ago. During that time, God used prophets to reveal his message to the people. The original Jewish readers of the book would have remembered that God had spoken many times and in many ways to their ancestors during Old Testament times. God had spoken to Isaiah in visions (Isaiah 6), to Jacob in a dream (Genesis 28:10-22), and to Abraham and Moses personally (Genesis 18; Exodus 31:18). God had taught Jeremiah through object lessons (Jeremiah 13) and had taught the people through a prophet's marriage (Hosea 1–3). Elsewhere, God had revealed his direction to the people through a pillar of cloud and a pillar of fire (Exodus 13:21) and had guided them in decision making through the Urim and Thummim (see Exodus 28:30; Numbers 27:21).

1:2 The same God who spoke through the prophets had now spoken through his Son, through Christ. Jesus completed and fulfilled the message that was originally brought by the prophets and forefathers. The phrase, God promised everything to the Son as an inheritance, refers to Jesus as an heir who will take his position as ruler of the new Kingdom. Referring to Christ as the heir gives him the highest honor and position. This passage alludes to the royal Son of Psalm 2:8.

Jesus worked with God to create the world: through the Son he made the universe and everything in it (see also John 1:2; 1 Corinthians 8:6; Colossians 1:15-16). Jesus was active at the beginning of time as the agent of creation, and he will act at the end of time as the heir (see Psalm 2:8; Romans 8:17; Galatians 4:7).

1:3 Underneath Jesus' human appearance as a Jewish carpenter-turned-preacher was God's own glory. Jesus does more than merely reflect God, he is God. Everything about Jesus represents God exactly. Therefore, he makes God's essence and nature clear to us (John 1:18). The prophets could only tell God's people what they saw and heard. Jesus was God himself—his message was firsthand.

Christ not only created the universe (1:2), he also sustains it. Christ spoke the world into existence (Genesis 1–2), and he supports the world with his omnipotent word (see 11:3). Christ guides the world toward its appointed future—the time when he will receive it as his inheritance (1:2). Because Christ sustains everything, nothing in creation is independent from him. All things are held together in a coherent or logical way, sustained and upheld, prevented from dissolving into chaos. In him alone and the mighty power of his command, we find the unifying principle of all life. He is transcendent over all other powers.

He is able to do this because, after he died and rose again, he returned to heaven and sat down in the place of highest honor. Jesus' death had accomplished what all the animal sacrifices could never do—it cleansed people from the stain of sin. This statement reveals the central theme of the letter: Christ's superior sacrifice for sins. No sacrifice for sin could be greater than the sacrifice offered by the Creator—his death on a cross. Jesus cleansed the world from the domination of sin and took the penalty for our individual sins by dying in our place. No other penalty needs to be paid. We can be completely clean because of what Jesus has done.

Now Christ is in the place of honor at the right hand of the majestic God of heaven. Quoting from Psalm 110:1, the writer combined two Old Testament thoughts expressing God's greatness and Christ's position. To be seated at the right hand of a monarch was to be “second in command”—the literal “right-hand man.” This gives a picture of Christ's power and authority over heaven and earth (see also Mark 16:19; Romans 8:34). Psalm 110:1 is a crucial text and provides a guiding force in this book. It is the only place in the Bible where anyone else besides God is described as enthroned in power. This verse became a main text for the early church to be used as an argument for the deity of Christ.

CHRIST IS GREATER THAN THE ANGELS / 1:4-14

Angels are servants of Christ. They play a vital role in today's world as ministering spirits sent to serve those who have accepted God's salvation. God the Father calls Jesus Christ his one and only Son, and he orders angels to worship his Son. If God, who is above all, gives such praise to Jesus Christ, how can we praise him any less?

1:4 The writer here begins a series of arguments proving Jesus' superiority over angels. Angels are spiritual beings created by God and are under his authority (Colossians 1:16). They help carry out God's work on earth by bringing God's messages to people (Luke 1:26; Revelation 14:6-12), protecting God's people (Daniel 6:22; Matthew 18:10), offering encouragement (Genesis 16:7ff.), giving guidance (Exodus 14:19), carrying out punishment (2 Samuel 24:16), patrolling the earth (Zechariah 1:9-14), and fighting the forces of evil (2 Kings 6:16-18; Revelation 20:1-2). Other popular Jewish teachings during New Testament times said that angels brought people's requests to God and interceded for them. Because of all these beliefs about angels, the Jews honored them highly. However, Hebrews emphasizes that Christ and his work far surpass angels and their work. Jesus created the world, sustains the world, reveals God's glory, makes God known, and provides the perfect sacrifice for sins. No angel can accomplish any of these things.

Christ is far greater than the angels because the name God gave him is far greater than their names. The "name" he received is contrasted with the angels' names. In that time and culture, names captured the essence of a person (see Genesis 27:36). The "name" Jesus received was "Son." This name identified that his relationship with God, his power to forgive people's sins, and his ability to make God known were far superior to any other created being's.

1:5 Beginning here in 1:5 and continuing through 1:13, the writer strings together seven quotations from the Old Testament. The writer introduces two quotations from the Psalms by saying God never said to any angel what he said to Jesus.

The first quote, "You are my Son. Today I have become your Father," comes from a coronation psalm. Psalm 2:7 was also quoted at Jesus' baptism (Mark 1:11) and transfiguration (Mark 9:7), as well as in 2 Peter 1:17. The psalm was originally sung at the crowning of a new king (perhaps originally of David or Solomon). This psalm was used for centuries of Jewish history as a song of worship. Jewish rabbis attached a deeper meaning to the song—one that looked forward to the coming Messiah. Because the Messiah fulfilled the promises of the Old Testament, the writer understands that these Old Testament verses apply to Christ.

God spoke the words, "I will be his Father, and he will be my Son," to David with respect to Solomon (2 Samuel 7:14; 1 Chronicles 17:13). Although Solomon fulfilled these words, Hebrews illustrates that Christ ultimately and completely fulfilled them. In John 7:42, the religious leaders discussed Jesus' authority, and they alluded to this passage in Samuel, which said that the Messiah must come from David's family. The titles of "Father" and "Son" reveal a distinction between these two members of the Godhead. They also reveal the unique relationship of the Son to the Father. No angel can claim such a relationship.

1:6 The writer says that God presented his honored Son to the world. In Jewish families the firstborn son held the place of highest privilege and responsibility. As firstborn of creation, Jesus surpasses any created being. Because of this, the writer had no problem ascribing to Christ the words, "Let all the angels of God worship him." This is a portion of Deuteronomy 32:43, from the "Hymn of Moses," found in the Septuagint (the ancient Greek version of the Old Testament). It is not found in the Hebrew version or English translations based on the Hebrew. All quotes in Hebrews are from the Septuagint. In the original Old Testament text, "him" refers to the Father. Because only God should be worshiped, this verse is further proof that Jesus has a greater position than the angels—he is God.

1:7 This quote from Psalm 104:4 depicts the angels as messengers. Describing angels as wind and flaming fire continues to show Jesus' superiority by contrasting his everlasting glory with the temporality of the angels. "Wind" and "fire" serve as metaphors to illustrate the angels' status as created beings.

1:8-9 These words celebrate the Son's status. Again, the writer quoted a psalm (45:6-7) that had its origin in the Jewish court. This psalm would be sung at a Jewish king's wedding. In celebrating the high office of king, the people referred to the king as "a god." This title was used out of respect for the king's position as God's representative. The title that the people imperfectly placed on the Jewish king was perfectly true of Christ.

That his throne endures forever and ever stresses Jesus' exaltation. His reign is characterized by righteousness, as well as love for what is right and hate for what is wrong. Only Christ has such perfect love for righteousness and hatred for evil. Christ is superior to any other spiritual being. These qualities allowed Jesus to be anointed with the oil of joy. The Jews would anoint their kings and their priests with holy oil. This description, therefore, carries a double meaning, revealing that Jesus had been anointed king and priest. He was able to be a sacrifice for sins because he was perfect and hated all wickedness. God expressed joy in anointing the perfect king and priest.

1:10-12 These words of Psalm 102:25-27 were originally used of God the Father, but are used here to describe God the Son. Jesus is both the Son and Creator. He is eternal and sovereign and therefore worthy of praise. Hebrews celebrates the permanence of Christ by contrasting him with the temporary nature of the world. The world seems permanent to us, but it will one day wear out like old clothing. The world, like the clothing, will be rolled up and fade away. Christ, however, will be always the same. His place is permanent, and he will replace this fading world with a new heaven and new earth (see 12:26-28; Revelation 21).

1:13 Hebrews continues to show how the high position of Christ makes him superior to the angels. This statement (quoted from Psalm 110:1), said that the Messiah will triumph over all his enemies because he is instructed to sit at God's right hand. This position belongs to Christ and not to any created being. The greatest archangels stand before God (Luke 1:19; Revelation 8:2), but none are allowed to sit, for sitting next to God indicates equality.

God promised to make Jesus' enemies a footstool for his feet. This is a picture showing Christ as completely victorious over his enemies. Jesus' honor cannot be superseded, and no angel comes close to this honor.

1:14 Christ possesses the right to sit at God's right hand (1:13), while the angels are his servants. The angels are ministering spirits who are sent from God to care for those who will receive salvation. The angels' purpose is to serve; Christ's purpose is to reign. The fact that angels serve us should encourage us when we feel unloved or forgotten. Because God loves us, he dispatches his angels to help us.

HEBREWS 2

A WARNING AGAINST DRIFTING AWAY / 2:1-4

Highway travelers dislike the sudden appearance of warning signs, but travel could be dangerous without the warnings. The author of Hebrews presents a series of warning signs throughout the book. They aren't flashing lights, but they shout "danger!" If we do not heed the warning, we will not escape. Christ announced salvation, his followers confirmed it, and God testified to it.

2:1 Hebrews was written to encourage Jewish Christians not to turn away from the faith. If these Christians were not careful, pressure from nonbelieving Jews or other influences could cause them to drift away from the truth. These words encouraged the readers to listen very carefully so as not to lose their bearings. To what were they to listen? The truth of the message of salvation through Jesus Christ alone.

2:2 Verses 2-4 explain why Christians should pay careful attention to their faith. If disregarding Moses' law brought punishment, then disregarding the Good News would bring far greater punishment.

The message God delivered through angels refers to the Old Testament law. The account of angels delivering God's law and putting it into effect was part of Jewish and early-Christian dogma (see Galatians 3:19). Although the book of Exodus does not mention angels, the Jews believed that God worked through angels to give Moses the Ten Commandments (see Acts 7:53). God gave the law to govern the lives of Old Testament believers. Those who believed God and obeyed his instructions received his blessing, while those who rebelled discovered that people were punished for every violation and every act of disobedience (see Leviticus 26). Throughout the Old Testament, God enforced these laws by blessing people who followed him and condemning people who rejected him.

2:3-4 As Christ surpasses angels, so Christ's message surpasses their message (see 1:1-3). Old Testament believers who followed God received blessings, and those who disobeyed God received punishment. If that was true for the promise brought by angels, then no one who is indifferent to the message will escape God's punishment.

Three witnesses prove the authenticity of this great salvation and why the readers should not be indifferent to it:

1. The Lord Jesus himself, not angels or people, announced this salvation (see Luke 19:9; John 4:22).
2. Those who heard him speak, eyewitnesses to Jesus' ministry, passed on Jesus' message. These readers (and apparently the author) had not seen Christ in the flesh. They are like us; we have not seen Jesus personally. We base our belief in Jesus on the eyewitness accounts recorded in the Bible (see John 20:29).
3. God verified the message by signs and wonders and various miracles and by giving gifts of the Holy Spirit. These were not given by God to glorify the apostles or to awe the people. Rather, God demonstrated his power through the apostles with these extraordinary events, thereby testifying to the truth of the great salvation that the apostles proclaimed. The gifts serve as continuing reminders to believers across the ages that the gospel of salvation is true. It has been announced and confirmed, and many testify to its truth and power even today. To drift away from this truth (2:1) would be both foolish and disastrous.

JESUS, THE MAN / 2:5-18

Jesus came as a human being so that we could see, in human form, what God was like. In turn, Jesus as a human being experienced the same temptations that all people experience, but he did not sin. Then, as a human being, he experienced death. Through his life on earth and sacrifice on the cross, Jesus became a brother to all mankind and a High Priest who suffered on behalf of sinful people. Through his resurrection, he has been exalted to God's right hand. We must live now by his example.

2:5 The phrase the future world refers to the future Kingdom that Christ initiated and will fully inherit at his second coming. The future world will not be controlled by angels, but by Christ. Angels will continue to serve as God's servants. These words further emphasize the superiority of the Son over the angels (1:13-14).

2:6-8 The writer substantiates the words of 2:5 by here quoting from Psalm 8:3-4, a psalm that tells of human beings' unimportance as well as their greatness. Compared to God's power and the majesty of his creation, people are insignificant. Yet God crowned people with glory and honor when he created them in his image (Genesis 1:27). God also gave people the responsibility and tremendous authority over all things (Genesis 1:28). God intended this key role for people. The phrase, you made him lower than the angels, shows human superiority over all other creation, except the angels. Due to their sin, however, people failed to live up to their potential, correctly fulfill this responsibility, or wisely use their authority. The psalm quoted here originally referred to humanity and its role in creation, and the psalm was regarded as messianic. The author may have been thinking about the double meaning included in the words son of man, showing that Jesus fulfilled the role and destiny originally commissioned to people. What humans could not do, Jesus did.

Although God gave humans the authority over all things (Genesis 1:28), sin entered the world and inhibited them from fulfilling this command (Genesis 3:17-19). We have not yet seen all of this happen because we will not experience perfection in this world. We do not yet see Jesus reigning on earth, but we can picture him in his heavenly glory. He is Lord of all, and one day he will rule on earth as he does now in heaven.

2:9 While we have not seen fulfilled what the psalm writer wrote in Psalm 8, what we do see is Jesus. The words from the psalm previously applied only to humans are here applied to the Messiah. Jesus became human, made lower than the angels. He was the only one who lived the human life as intended: sinless and in perfect fellowship with God. Before Christ, the words of Psalm 8 had not been fully realized, but the words were completely fulfilled in Christ. Jesus was not made lower than the angels in his rank or position, but he is described this way because he became part of the physical world; that is, he became human.

Because of Christ's perfect life and sacrifice for sins, he is now crowned with glory and honor. Christ was worthy to receive these rewards because he suffered death for us. By way of further explanation of this death, the writer elaborated: By God's grace, Jesus tasted death for everyone in all the world. Jesus lived and died physically. Jesus died for everyone in all the world, but not everyone will be saved. The only way for people to be saved and to receive God's rewards is to "believe on the Lord Jesus" (Acts 16:31).

2:10 Christ, the perfect leader, was able to fulfill what no other human was able to fulfill. Many children refers back to 2:6-8. Although people were commissioned to rule the earth, their sin kept them from the task. Jesus' sacrifice brings his human brothers and sisters into glory that will one day be restored to people in the future Kingdom.

Because God made everything, he determines what sacrifice is necessary for sin. He, the Creator of the world, determined what was needed for salvation. Through the suffering of Jesus God could bring people into their salvation. Jesus did not need to suffer for his own salvation because he was God. His perfect obedience (which led him down the road of suffering) demonstrates that he was the complete sacrifice for us. Through suffering, Jesus completed the work necessary for our salvation.

2:11 Christians are the ones Jesus makes holy. This action is once and for all. We have been made holy—set apart for God’s service. Our sin was poured into Christ at his crucifixion; his righteousness is poured into us at our conversion. This is what Christians mean by Christ’s atonement for sin. While God sees us as completely holy through the sacrifice of his Son, we must grow in our holiness as we live for God throughout our lives.

We who have been set apart for God’s service, cleansed, and made holy (sanctified) by Jesus now have the same Father as he does. Because God has adopted all believers as his children, Jesus is not ashamed to call believers his brothers and sisters. Those who are not ashamed of Jesus, gladly accepting him as Savior and Lord, will find that Jesus is not ashamed to call them members of his family (Luke 9:26).

2:12 The next two verses give three quotations from the Old Testament to show the relationship between Jesus and believers. Jesus readily identified himself with God’s people.

While on the cross, Jesus quoted from the opening words of Psalm 22 (see Matthew 27:46). These words of abandonment at the beginning of this psalm give way to words of praise at the end, quoted here. Jesus’ death and humiliation on earth ended in victory, declaring the wonder of God’s name to those who believed, his brothers and sisters (2:11). To “declare a name” means to reveal the character of that person. Attributing these words to Jesus from this messianic psalm means that Jesus, through his humanity, revealed God’s character. The phrase among all your people, quoted here from the Septuagint (the Greek version of the Hebrew Old Testament), has the same Greek word as the New Testament word translated “church.”

2:13 These verses, originally recorded in Isaiah 8:17-18, are applied here to Christ, further showing Christ’s identification with humanity. Isaiah was persecuted and his message rejected by the people. Isaiah encouraged the people not to listen to false advice, but to God alone. Like Isaiah, Christ put his trust in God the Father. Christ readily accepts his relationship with the children whom God has given to him. These are his spiritual “children,” those who are called his brothers and sisters (2:11), God’s people (2:12). Like those faithful to God in Isaiah’s day, we should stay true to Christ and ignore the advice that would distract us from following him.

2:14 After building his case that Christ had become a human being, the writer explained why such association and identity were important. Death is the common fear and final experience of all people, and only as a human being, made of flesh and blood, could Christ die because only by dying could he break the power of the Devil, who had the power of death. His death and his return to life showed that death had been defeated (Romans 6:9).

Sin and death are interconnected: Sin results in death. Only by first breaking the power of sin could Christ then break the power of death. He accomplished both through his death and resurrection. In those acts, Christ dealt the final blow to both Satan and death. Although Satan still holds great power over this world, he is mortally wounded. God allows Satan to work, but limits him (see Job 1:12; 2:6; Ephesians 4:27; 6:11; 1 Timothy 3:7; James 4:7; 1 Peter 5:8-9). Just as salvation is partly realized now and will be fully realized later, in God's Kingdom, so Satan is still at work but will one day be destroyed (Revelation 20:10).

2:15 People have always been slaves to the fear of dying. Eventually, however, death strikes everyone. Through Christ, however, we no longer need to fear dying and death. Christ died and rose again and only in this way could he deliver humanity. Because Jesus died and arose, we no longer need to be enslaved to the fear of dying. We know that because Jesus rose from the dead, we will also. We will die physically, but we are promised new bodies and a new life in eternity with God. Thus, death becomes the gateway to a new life (1 Corinthians 15:55, 57; 2 Corinthians 5:8).

2:16 Angels were not the objects of God's grace. God sent Jesus to die for people, the descendants of Abraham, who were lost in their sin (Romans 5:8). Some believe that this phrase refers only to the Jews, but Jesus had explained that it was through faith in him that people became Abraham's true descendants (John 8:37-39; see also Galatians 3:29). Jesus was born as a Jew, a descendant of Abraham. His death and resurrection offered salvation to all of humanity—both Jews and Gentiles. Abraham's descendants are all who share Abraham's faith. Christ did not become an angel; he became a human in order to help humans.

2:17 Jesus Christ became like us, his brothers and sisters, so that he could become our merciful and faithful High Priest. In the Old Testament, the high priest was the mediator between God and the people. But Jesus' death and resurrection inaugurated a new covenant. Under the old covenant, the high priests had to go before God once a year; Jesus' death accomplished forgiveness once and for all for those who believe in him. Christ performed perfectly and completely the duties of a high priest. Thus the writer calls him our High Priest, our representative before God.

Jesus became like us in every respect except for the sinful nature—Jesus never shared in that part of humanity (4:15; 7:26). Only in this way could he offer a sacrifice that would take away the sins of the people. That sacrifice was his life. A holy God cannot overlook sin; thus, the sinfulness of humanity had to be punished. In the Old Testament, God required his people to sacrifice animals (“perfect” animals, healthy and whole) to atone for their sins. At the right time, God dealt once and for all with sin and its ultimate consequence—death and eternal separation from God. Instead of sending all humanity to eternal punishment, God took the punishment himself (Romans 8:3). Sin had to be punished, but Jesus shed his blood—gave his life—to take away our sins so that we wouldn't have to experience spiritual death. His sacrifice transforms our lives and hearts and makes us clean on the inside.

2:18 Jesus came to earth as a human being; therefore, he understands our weaknesses and shows mercy to us. Because he was fully human, Jesus himself has gone through suffering and temptation. This suffering refers not only to the Cross, but also to the temptations Jesus experienced throughout his life—from Satan's temptations in the wilderness to the drops of blood he shed in prayer before his crucifixion. Having undergone all the tests and temptations of human life, Jesus is able to help us when we are being tempted.

HEBREWS 3

CHRIST IS GREATER THAN MOSES / 3:1-19

Moses has always been highly revered by Jewish people, by the Christian church, and even in Hollywood movies. But Jesus should receive much more honor and glory than Moses. “The Lawgiver,” Moses, served God faithfully. But Christ was much more than a servant—he was God’s Son. He was put in complete charge of God’s house, the church. As Christians, we are part of God’s house, and Christ is in charge of us. We must recognize him as our highest authority.

3:1 Chapter 2 tells that we are brothers and sisters along with Christ. We belong to God, meaning we are set apart by Jesus for service to God. Because of this relationship, we are bound for heaven (2:10).

In 2:1, the writer warned Christians not to “drift away” from their faith. This verse gives a command that will help believers keep from drifting: Think about this Jesus. This command comes from a strong Greek verb meaning “to give thoughtful and diligent reflection. Hebrews calls Jesus God’s Messenger and High Priest. Jesus was sent as God’s representative. God sent Jesus to earth as a Messenger; Jesus returned to heaven as our High Priest (a role introduced in 2:17-18). He came delivering God’s message to people; he returned bringing people back to God. Jesus now serves as the mediator between people and God (a theme developed in 8:6; 9:15; 12:24). These words would have been especially meaningful to Jewish Christians.

3:2 Few people in Scripture had these three roles: prophet, priest, and leader. Moses was one such man, honored by the Jews. Moses served faithfully and was entrusted with God’s entire house (see also Numbers 12:7). Moses’ life and writings attest to his faithfulness. To the Jewish people, Moses was a great hero; he had led their ancestors, the Israelites, from Egyptian bondage to the border of the Promised Land. He was the prophet through whom God had given the law, and he had written the first five books of the Old Testament. God’s entire house most likely refers to God’s chosen people, among whom Moses exercised his ministry. Moses had served God faithfully, and the writer of Hebrews honored Moses by comparing him to Jesus, who was faithful to God, who appointed him. Moses led the people of Israel out of Egyptian bondage; Christ leads us out of bondage to sin. Both were faithful to the work God gave them to do.

3:3 Moses was a human servant; Jesus is worthy of greater honor as the central figure of faith because Jesus is God himself. Although Moses faithfully served in God's house (among God's people) and deserved credit for his work, Jesus deserves far more glory because he created that house and possesses the glory of God himself (1:3). Moses worked within the house, but Christ oversees the house.

The Jewish Christians respected Moses as one of God's greatest messengers. In order to show that Christ was superior to the old covenant, the writer both compared and contrasted Jesus and Moses. Because of Moses' faithfulness, he is worthy of great honor. But Jesus is worthy of greater honor. Even the great leader Moses is nowhere near being Christ's equal. Through Moses, lawgiver and leader, God gave the old covenant. But it was merely a shadow of what was coming (10:1). Moses was an intermediary, the people's leader and intercessor (see Exodus 32:11; Numbers 14:13); he could not save the people's souls. Jesus enacted the new covenant, whereby salvation could be offered to all who believe.

3:4 If the builder deserves more praise than the house (3:3), how much more does God deserve praise, for he made everything—referring not just to the Jewish nation or to the Christian church, but to all of creation. The switch from calling Jesus the builder (3:3) to calling God the builder affirms Christ's deity. These first readers, who were considering abandoning Christianity and returning to their Jewish roots and Jewish laws, were in danger of praising the "house" more than the builder. Such action would effectively turn them away from the one who is God, Jesus Christ.

3:5-6 This repeats the thought from 3:2—that Moses was certainly faithful in God's house, but he was merely a servant. Moses' work was an illustration of the truths God would reveal later. Moses wrote the first five books of the Old Testament, recording Israel's history. But that history was not complete; Moses' words point forward to what was to come—fulfillment through God's Son.

Christ, the faithful Son, is superior to Moses as a son is superior to a servant. While both had been appointed (3:2), and while both were faithful, Moses was a servant while Christ is in charge of the entire household, referring to the church, the believers. Those who are part of God's household became so through faith in Christ. Christ makes our salvation secure, but that salvation comes with a solemn responsibility to keep up our courage and remain confident in our hope in Christ. Those who profess Christ ought to demonstrate true faith. God had required faithfulness from the great leader

Moses and even from the Son himself. All of God's people, his household, the brothers and sisters of Christ, must remain faithful. Christ lives in believers; he will help us remain courageous and hopeful to the end. We are not saved by being steadfast and firm in our faith, but our courage and hope do reveal that our faith is real. Without this enduring faithfulness, we could easily be blown away by the winds of temptation, false teaching, or persecution.

3:7-9 God, through the Holy Spirit, is the true author of the Old Testament (see also 10:15). The Holy Spirit inspired the prophets and forefathers (1:1). The Holy Spirit used the quote from Psalm 95 (described in the following paragraphs) to speak to the Hebrew believers of the first century, and it applies to believers today as well.

The quotation comes from a psalm of worship used as an opening to synagogue worship on Friday evening and Sabbath morning. The first part of the psalm calls God's people to worship him. The second part of this psalm (the part that is quoted here) warns the people that worshipers can only worship God if they are not rebelling against him.

The Hebrew readers knew the story well. The generation who left Egypt had witnessed astounding miracles, yet they had lost faith in God. They were poised to enter the Promised Land, but they became afraid of the spies' report of walled cities and giant men. At that point, they rebelled, hardening their hearts, refusing to trust that God would help them take the land he had promised them (Numbers 13:26–14:38). Their unbelief kept them from receiving the rewards and blessings God had for them. Although God had miraculously rescued them from Egypt and had demonstrated his power and care over his people, the people disobeyed God. Not only at that point, but throughout the forty years of wandering in the wilderness, the people constantly tested God's patience. He continued to do miracles on their behalf; they continued to harden their hearts against him.

The original readers of this letter were on the verge of abandoning Christ and returning to Judaism. This passage reminded them of the consequences of hardening their hearts against God by using the example of their ancestors. Hopefully, these Christians would learn from their ancestors' mistakes. Believers are warned, today you must listen, don't harden your hearts. Hard hearts can be the result of disobedience, rebellion, lack of trust, neglect of worship, refusal to submit, and ungratefulness for what God has done for us.

3:10-11 Rebellion makes God angry as expressed in these words from Psalm 95. God does not look away from sin; he acts against it and punishes it. God grew angry because the people's hearts always turned away from him. The people continually turned away from God in their actions, attitudes, thoughts, and beliefs. If the hearts of the people had honored God, they would have trusted God and entered the Promised Land. But their rebellion led to punishment. The Israelites lost their chance to enter the Promised Land when God said, "They will never enter my place of rest." God's rest has several meanings in Scripture: (1) the seventh day of Creation and the weekly Sabbath commemorating it (Genesis 2:2; Hebrews 4:4-9); (2) the promised land of Canaan (Deuteronomy 12:8-12; Psalm 95); (3) peace with God now because of our relationship with Christ through faith (Matthew 12:28; Hebrews 4:1, 3, 8-11); and (4) our future eternal life with Christ (Hebrews 4:8-11). All of these meanings were probably familiar to the Jewish Christian readers of this book.

3:12 The lesson from Israel's experience applies to all believers. The readers had not yet revolted against Christ or drifted away from him, but they were in danger of emulating Israel's rebellion. The Israelites, who, with their own eyes, had seen great miracles from God's hand, had fallen away from God. Christians must be careful not to fall into the same snare. No Christian is immune from turning away from or rejecting God. Sometimes people gradually drift (as in 2:1-4); sometimes they rebel. We believers should carefully watch our Christian lives.

An evil and unbelieving heart leads to dire consequences; it causes a person to turn away from the living God. As illustrated by the Israelites, hard hearts can cause rebellion. Turning away from Christianity implies more than turning away from a system of beliefs or a set of doctrines; it means turning away from God.

3:13 A safeguard against believers turning away from God is for them to warn each other every day. Believers should continually remind each other to turn away from sin and to stay focused on Christ. People cannot live as Christians in a vacuum. Christians need each other so that they don't become deceived by sin and hardened against God. We protect against sin's deceitfulness by checking (1) our private intentions and desires against those of a group of trusted Christian friends, and (2) our group's intentions and desires against the teachings of the word of God.

3:14 Faith is a journey. Believers must be faithful to the end, trusting God just as firmly as when we first believed. As time goes by, we must not let doubts or fears draw us away. The writer was concerned that the faith of some of these Hebrew Christians was faltering. He urged them to hold on so that they would,

in the end, share in all that belongs to Christ. Jewish readers of Hebrews would understand this picture of faith because it was the actual experience of the generation that had fled Egypt in the Exodus. Through unfaithfulness and rebellion, the Israelites had lost God's blessings. The writer turns to this theme in the following verses.

3:15 By repeating a quote used in 3:7, the writer continues to remind the people not to harden their hearts. The Israelites, when they rebelled in the wilderness, did not trust God, nor were they faithful to the end. Christians must be. The repeated (from 3:13) word today shows the urgency of this message. Today we can act; we don't know what will happen tomorrow. (For more on hard hearts, see the commentary on 3:7-9.)

3:16-17 The writer's illustration points out that a good beginning does not guarantee a victorious end. If people could rebel against God even after they had actually heard his voice, the danger for falling away is real for any Christian. The Israelites saw the plagues God sent on Egypt before Moses led the people out, yet they rebelled against God. The rebellious Israelites failed to enter the Promised Land because they did not believe in God's protection (see Numbers 13-14). So God sent them into the wilderness to wander for forty years. Those who rebelled fell (died) in the wilderness without ever experiencing the Promised Land. Open defiance of God leads to catastrophic results, barring entrance to God's rest. We must not take God's wrath lightly.

3:18-19 The rebellious generation of Israelites could not enter his place of rest (the Promised Land) because of their unbelief. But this "unbelief" was more than just a mental process; their unbelief caused them to disobey. There is a strong connection between unbelief (the underlying attitude) and disobedience (the resulting action). Both their actions and their beliefs condemned them.

The nation had been rescued from Egypt, had seen God's salvation, and had been given the hope of a new land. Yet they had disobeyed. Christians have been rescued from sin, have seen God's salvation, and have been given the hope of eternal life. For those who reject Christ, the penalty is greater than it was for the Israelites. The penalty is God's rejection. Just as Christ was greater than Moses, so those rejecting Christ will receive greater punishment than those who rejected Moses.

HEBREWS 4:1-13

PROMISED REST FOR GOD'S PEOPLE / 4:1-13

The end of chapter 3 explains that the Israelites who rebelled against God never entered “his rest” (referring to the Promised Land in 3:18-19). Having shown that Jesus is superior to the great leader Moses, the author turned to another great Israelite leader, Joshua. God’s servant Joshua led Israel into the Promised Land, yet he did not provide God’s true “rest” (see 4:8). One greater than Joshua accomplished that.

4:1 While the next generation of Israelites (after those who sinned and died in the wilderness) did enter and possess the land, this was still only a shadow of the final “rest” that was to come. The Jewish people refused God’s plan and rejected their Savior; thus, the promise of entering his place of rest still stands—God has made this rest available to Christians. Since God had barred the rebellious Israelites from his “rest,” the promise stands for those who remain obedient to him. The promise has not been fulfilled, but neither has it been revoked. But Christians must learn from the tragic mistake of the Israelites. The writer of Hebrews warned readers how serious it would be to turn away from Christ by saying we ought to tremble with fear that some of you might fail to get there. Just as God rejected the rebellious Israelites on the basis of their unbelief (3:19), so he will reject those who turn away from Christ, refuse to believe him, or refuse to follow him.

4:2 The Old Testament Jews received God’s message in the great deliverance from Egypt and the covenant given to Moses at Mount Sinai. These New Testament believers received this Good News of God’s place of rest in the person of Jesus Christ, his death on the cross, and his resurrection. Jews from both the Old Testament era and the New Testament era had received communication from God. But for many, the message did them no good. Why not? They didn’t believe what God told them. Not only must God’s message be heard, it must also be combined with faith before it will be effective.

4:3 The point has already been made that the Old Testament Jews had failed to enter God’s “rest” (see commentary on 3:10-11, 18-19), yet this promise of rest still stands (4:1). Only those who believe can enter God’s place of rest. Believing in Jesus may seem easy, almost effortless, just a nod, a quick prayer, or a walk forward at a church service. While making a profession of faith in Christ is simple, truly believing in Jesus leads to a life of commitment and discipleship that will put the believer at odds with the greedy, self-centered, cruel, and power-grabbing world. People who believe in Jesus find that each day requires a full effort. Those who believe in this way enter God's place of rest.

For those who fail to believe, there is a stern warning (see also 3:11, 18-19; 4:5). Because the Israelites lacked the faith to receive God's rest when he offered it, God, in his anger, vowed that they would never enter it. God's anger is not spiteful or reactionary. Rather, his anger emerges from the perfection of his character. Since God is perfect, he becomes angry at sin. The Israelites' unbelief caused them to forfeit God's promised rest, even though his place of rest has been ready since he made the world. Everything God will do had already been planned and foreseen. The point is that God's rest has been available to his people since the dawn of time. The "rest" offered in the Promised Land merely pictured the true and final rest in heaven for those who believe.

4:4 Genesis 2:2 records that on the seventh day after creating the universe, God rested, not because he was tired, but to indicate the completion of creation. The world was perfect, and God was satisfied with it, so he rested. This does not mean that God became idle; Jesus taught that God still works (John 5:17). God's rest is both present peace with God and future eternal joy when creation will be renewed, every mark of sin removed, and the world made perfect again. Those who believe will join God in his rest and one day be restored to a perfect condition. Our rest in Christ begins when we trust him to complete his good and perfect work in us.

4:5-6 But to those who don't believe, the author repeats his warning from the other passage, taken from Psalm 95 (see also commentary on 3:10-11, 18-19; 4:3). God's people who had seen great miracles in the exodus from Egypt never entered God's rest. Having great leaders like Moses, Joshua, and Caleb did not cover for the people's unbelief and rebellion. Not only did the people's sin keep them from possessing the land, it kept them from close fellowship with God. We must be careful that we don't believe we are Christians just because we belong to a good church or have a good Christian family. The Israelites, God's chosen people, failed to enter because they disobeyed God. But that doesn't mean God's place of rest no longer exists. It is still there for people to enter.

4:7-8 Humanity did not lose its chance for salvation with Israel's failure, but the writer again warned his readers not to harden their hearts (see commentary on 3:7-9).

The phrase, God set another time, means that the time of rest will come, indeed it has come, for the time is today. At the time of the writing of Psalm 95, partially quoted in this verse, no one had entered God's complete rest. Many Jewish people may have believed that they had already received God's rest by inhabiting the land of Canaan. But the writer argues that it cannot be so. Joshua and the Israelites did settle Canaan and did achieve periods of peace and prosperity. Yet, if this had been God's promised rest, God would not have spoken later about another day of rest. In other words, there would have been no need for this renewal of the promise recorded here from the psalm written by David. If God only intended an earthly kingdom, God would not have promised "another day." Therefore the rest was not in the land, but in God's eternal Kingdom.

4:9 The word so indicates that the following is a logical conclusion from what has preceded. The words special rest are one word in the Greek, occurring only here in the entire Greek Bible. The kind of rest the author described is different from what the Israelites expected. This rest refers to what God did when he completed creation (see commentary on 4:4, 10). This rest is still waiting. It has not been fulfilled, as the author has explained above.

Why would this special rest have been so important to the readers of this book? The readers, Jewish Christians, had two important reasons to look forward to rest. (1) Jewish history was filled with wanderings and political turmoil. To finally rest in the full and realized promises of God would be great comfort. (2) Christians in the first century often faced deprivation and hardships, the animosity of Satan's agents, and the carrying of one's "cross"—identifying with Jesus. Those who turned from the Jewish faith to Christianity often incurred the wrath of other Jews (facing excommunication) and of their families (being disowned). To enter God's promised rest was a great promise—struggle will be done and pain will be over.

Yet this rest remains only for the people of God. Although the Jewish people who were originally offered the rest had refused it, God's plan could not be thwarted; God offered it to others—both Jews and Gentiles who believe in Jesus Christ as Savior. (This teaching is similar to Jesus' parable of the great banquet recorded in Luke 14:15-24.)

4:10 The author has shown that the rest remains for the people of God—the Christians (4:6, 9). That rest remains and people will find rest from their labors. Does this "rest from labors" begin now, or do believers have to wait for heaven? Some suggest that it begins after death, citing Revelation 14:13. Most likely, however, believers do experience God's rest in this present life, but will receive it completely and fully after death when they arrive in heaven. The "labors" from which believers can rest do not mean inactivity. After all, believers have much work to do in this world in order to advance God's Kingdom. "Labors," therefore, may refer to ceasing from trying to work for salvation. Many of these Jewish readers had been brought up under the Pharisees' system of strict laws and rule keeping. These Jewish Christians could rest from those labors, resting instead on what Christ had done. The promised rest for believers is the same as God's rest, and just as certain; it will be just as God rested after creating the world (see 4:4).

4:11 This statement is an intentional paradox: let us do our best to enter that place of rest. We need to strive to obtain what is ours by promise but not yet ours by experience. The children of Israel had been promised the good land, but it wasn't theirs until they possessed it. All believers must diligently work out their faith, seeking to obey Jesus day by day, drawing closer to God through experiences in life (Philippians 2:12). There is no time while living on earth at which a Christian "arrives" at spirituality. Each day God's people are making a choice either to grow closer to him or to drift away.

Nevertheless, the message here is a warning to people who would be lazy in their spiritual life. Laziness can cause a person to fall into disobedience, and anyone who disobeys God . . . will fall. Today's pressures make it easy to ignore or forget the lessons of the past. But the author cautions readers to remember the lessons the Israelites learned about God so they will avoid repeating the Israelites' errors.

4:12-13 God will discern whether or not we make every effort (4:11) and whether or not we have truly come to faith in Christ; nothing in all creation can hide from him. We may fool ourselves or other Christians with our spiritual lives, but we cannot deceive God. He knows who we really are because the word of God is full of living power. The word of God cannot be taken for granted or disobeyed. The Israelites who rebelled learned the hard way that when God speaks, they must listen. Going against God means facing judgment and death.

The word of God is living, life-changing, and dynamic as it works in us. The demands of the word of God require decisions. We not only listen to it, we let it shape our lives. Because the word of God is living, it applied to these first-century Jewish Christians, and it applies as well as to Christians today. Most books may appear to be dusty artifacts just sitting on a shelf, but the word of God collected in Scripture vibrates with life.

The word of God penetrates through our outer facade and reveals what lies deep inside. The metaphor of the sharpest knife pictures the word of God cutting deep into our innermost thoughts and desires, revealing what we really are on the inside. Nothing can be hidden from God; neither can we hide from ourselves if we sincerely study the word of God. It reaches deep past our outer life as a knife passes through skin.

Two thoughts are presented by the phrase, everything is naked and exposed before his eyes. (1) We cannot give excuses, justifications, or reasons—everything is seen for exactly what it is. No one can deceive God. (2) We are exposed, powerless, and defenseless before God. The word refers to the paralyzing grip of a wrestler in a choke hold.

The word of God penetrates like a sword, exposing us to God himself to whom we must explain all that we have done. All people must give an account to God, but without trappings and rationalizations. These words give warning that believers must be careful not to drift away, but to obey God wholeheartedly. God is the final Judge. This verse paves the way for the following section describing Jesus Christ as our High Priest. With our lives laid bare before God, we would be hopelessly lost without Christ. Because he took our judgment and serves as our advocate with God, we can rest secure with God.

HEBREWS 4:14–5:10

CHRIST IS OUR HIGH PRIEST / 4:14–5:10

These verses logically follow from 2:17–3:1. The intervening section explains how Jesus is greater than Moses and Joshua, two of Israel's greatest leaders. Jesus is greater than the law Moses gave; he gives a rest greater than Joshua gave in conquering the Promised Land. The writer moved on to show how Jesus is also greater than anyone in the Jewish priesthood, another important part of the Jewish heritage. Our merciful and faithful High Priest, Jesus, became like us in order to die for us, offering the once-and-for-all sacrifice for sin.

4:14 To the Jewish Christian readers, the high priest had been their highest religious authority. The priesthood began with Aaron, Moses' brother (Exodus 28:41). Only the high priest could intercede with God for the sins of the nation (Leviticus 16). But Jesus is a great High Priest, better than all the high priests of Israel. Here is why:

- The high priests were humans who could offer sacrifices but could do nothing to take away sin. Jesus gave his life and died as the final sacrifice for sin.
- The high priest could enter the Most Holy Place only once a year to atone for the sins of the nation. Jesus has gone to heaven and has unrestricted access to God the Father.
- The high priests were human and sinful themselves. Jesus intercedes between God and people as the sinless Son of God, human yet divine.
- The high priests were the highest religious authorities for the Jews. Jesus has more authority than the Jewish high priests because he is both God and man.
- People could not approach God except through a high priest. When Jesus died, the veil that separated the Most Holy Place in the Temple was torn in two, indicating that Jesus' death had opened the way for sinful people to reach a holy God.

Because of all that Christ has done and is doing for us, let us cling to him and never stop trusting him. Allow Jesus to be your High Priest; only he can protect you from inevitable judgment (described in 4:12-13). Christ is a faithful High Priest who represents all who trust in him.

4:15 Because Jesus, our High Priest, was made like us, he experienced life completely. He grew tired, became hungry, and faced normal human limitations. Thus Jesus understands our weaknesses. Not only that, but he also faced all of the same temptations we do, yet he did not sin. Jesus, in his humanity, felt the struggle and reality of temptation. Matthew 4:1-11 describes a specific series of temptations from the Devil, but Jesus probably faced temptation throughout his entire earthly life, just as we do (see 1 John 2:16).

4:16 Through his death on the cross, our great High Priest, Jesus, opened access to God. Now people can approach God directly because of Jesus' sacrifice for sins. Because Jesus gave his life to do this for us, let us come boldly to the throne of our gracious God. This verse is an open invitation to regard God as a great ally and true friend. Yes, God occupies a throne, a seat of power and authority, but it is a throne of a gracious God. "Grace" means undeserved favor. Our ability to approach God does not come from any merit of our own but depends entirely on him. He is our Father, who loves us as his children. At God's throne, we will not receive anger or be ignored; instead, we will receive his mercy, and we will find grace to help us when we need it. God listens to our needs. No request is insignificant, and no problem is too small. God promises to help us at just the right time—his time. This doesn't mean that God promises to solve every need the moment we come to him. Nor does it mean that God will erase the natural consequences of any sin that was committed. It does mean, however, that God listens, cares, and will answer in his perfect way, in his perfect timing.

5:1 The Hebrew readers would have known that a high priest is a man chosen to represent other human beings in their dealings with God. A high priest had two primary jobs: representing God to the people by teaching the word of God, and representing the people to God in making atonement for their sins (Leviticus 1–4; 16). The high priest served as the "boss" over all the other priests, so he was in charge of presenting the people's gifts to God and offering their sacrifices for sins. Every sin required a penalty and a sacrifice in order for the worshiper to receive forgiveness. No person could offer a sacrifice without the aid of a priest as a mediator. The idea of mediator is central to the Bible. Humans subject to sin and by nature inclined to sin need mediation in order for them to establish any relationship with a holy God.

5:2 The Jewish high priest was only a human, subject to the same weaknesses as other people. This verse pictures a high priest who, fully alert to his own sinfulness and mortality, empathizes and deals gently with the people he represents, even though they are ignorant and wayward. The priest's knowledge of the people is intense, personal, and empathetic.

5:3 Of all people, the high priest should understand how humbling a job he had—and how vital a role he played. Without his mediation, the people would perish. He had to offer sacrifices, both for their sins and for his own sins. The high priest, while holding an honorable and prestigious position as mediator between God and the people, was not absolved from penalty for his own sin. Neither was he in a special category of human beings or exempt from the law himself.

5:4 The position of high priest carried special honor, and no one could become a high priest just because he wanted to. The high priest had to be called by God for this work, just as Aaron was (Exodus 28:1-3). Aaron, brother to Moses, served as the first high priest of Israel. Leviticus 8 and 9 describe the ordination ceremony for Aaron and his sons. Their “holiness” came from God alone, not from the priestly role.

5:5 As the Old Testament high priests did not take upon themselves the honor but were honored by God's selection, Christ did not exalt himself to become High Priest. Christ also was chosen by God, as demonstrated by the quotation from Psalm 2:7, “You are my Son. Today I have become your Father.” Christ became the High Priest and perfectly fulfilled the requirements.

5:6 Although Christ fulfilled the above requirements for becoming the perfect High Priest, he did not have one significant requirement: he was not born into the tribe of Levi and had not descended from Aaron. Jesus was of the tribe of Judah (see Genesis 49:10; Matthew 2:6; Revelation 5:5). Only Levites could be priests, and only descendants of Aaron could be high priests in the Jewish system. The book of Hebrews, however, tells how Christ's priesthood was greater than the Aaronic priesthood by quoting Psalm 110:4: “You are a priest forever in the line of Melchizedek.” These words, coming from the inspired psalmist David predicted that the Messiah would come from a line of priests not traced back to Aaron. This theme is discussed extensively in chapter 7. The priests in the line of Aaron were not priests forever. Jesus, however, is a priest forever. In addition, Aaron's descendants were priests but not kings. Israel's kings could not serve the functions of the priests (those who tried faced dire consequences, such as Saul in 1 Samuel 13:8-14 and Uzziah in 1 Chronicles 26:16-21).

5:7 High priests had to be human (and thus able to sympathize with those they represented), and they had to be called by God. Christ fulfilled both of these requirements (4:15; 5:5-6). Jesus' humanity allowed him to sympathize with us. To show this, the writer reminded the readers of how, while Jesus was here on earth, he agonized as he prepared to face death (Luke 22:41-44). Although Jesus cried out to God, asking to be delivered, he was prepared to suffer humiliation, separation from his Father, and death in order to do God's will. He offered prayers and pleadings, with a loud cry and tears. He knew he had been sent to die, but in his humanity, he faced great fear and sorrow over what he knew would happen. In his humanity, he did not want to die, but he submitted himself to the Father's will and God heard his prayers. Jesus suffered extreme agony and death in submission to God. But his prayer was answered in that he was saved from the power of death. He overcame death through his resurrection.

5:8 In the kingdoms of any ancient regime, no prince suffers; the crown prince especially is pampered and prepared for kingship. But Jesus, even though he was God's Son . . . learned obedience from the things he suffered. The bewildering lesson of this verse is that God himself, born of human parentage, actually learned something in the suffering he underwent. Was the all-knowing God in need of learning? Jesus learned about the human condition. That knowledge brought more empathy than intelligence, more personal identification than measurable data.

Like Jesus, believers often learn obedience through their suffering (see 12:2-11). This example from Christ encouraged the readers to remain firm and not drift away from the faith in times of suffering. Just as Christ was perfected through his suffering, so Christians will be, too.

5:9 The author of our salvation was qualified as a perfect High Priest through suffering. The word "perfect" does not refer to Jesus' sinless state; Jesus was already perfect before he faced suffering. His perfection was put to the test and came out with flying colors. Because humans experience suffering and death, Christ became fully human and experienced these parts of humanity as well. By sharing our experience of suffering, Christ shared our human experience completely. Because Christ lived, died, and rose again, he became the source of eternal salvation for all those who obey him. These last words warned those who would turn away from Christ and turn back to an inferior system. Salvation comes only to those who obey as Christ obeyed—with complete submission to God and his will, even in the face of suffering.

5:10 Going back to the theme in 5:6, Jesus was designated . . . to be a High Priest in the line of Melchizedek. All priests in Aaron's family line needed mediation for their own sins. All human priests died and were succeeded by others. But Jesus was fundamentally different. Jesus did not need mediation for personal moral flaws. Jesus died, but rose again to die no more. No one succeeded Jesus; he is a priest forever. He is both human and divine, made perfect through suffering, able to understand our weaknesses. That's quite unlike the Aaronic priesthood, so the writer compares Christ's priesthood with "the line of Melchizedek."

The theme of Melchizedek is postponed until chapter 7 so that the writer can give a parenthetical remark addressing the spiritual state of the readers.

HEBREWS 5:11–6:20

A CALL TO SPIRITUAL GROWTH / 5:11–6:12

The writer will further explore Christ's priesthood (chapter 7), but here pauses the argument to give readers a wake-up call. The concepts that follow in this letter will be understood by growing Christians, not stagnant ones. Christians must not be casual about the word of God; people must listen attentively. Hebrews continually challenges Christians to persevere in their faith.

5:11 Regarding Christ's role as High Priest, there is much more that the writer would like to say. Instead of working hard in their faith, these Christians were choosing the easier road. The writer illustrates this by saying, you don't seem to listen, so it's hard to make you understand. Apparently the writer was personally acquainted with many Jewish believers who fit this description or had heard about their unwillingness to apply some of these important concepts about their faith.

5:12 Apparently, these people had been Christians for a long time; so long, that they ought to have been teaching others. However, they had been lazy in their faith and needed someone to teach them again the basic things in the Scriptures. No wonder they were in danger of drifting (2:1)! Rather than explore and deepen their knowledge of Christ, rather than trying to please God with their actions, they considered abandoning Christ when they faced opposition. Basic things refers to the simple message of the gospel and the basic beliefs of the faith. Instead of teaching them to others, these believers needed to be taught all over again. They were like babies, still drinking milk instead of growing up into eating solid food—the more difficult teachings of God's word, such as the significance of Christ's position as High Priest (which the writer had just begun to discuss and will continue to discuss in chapter 7).

5:13 These immature Christians were living on milk, that is, they had not grown in their faith. They remained inexperienced and unskilled in applying their knowledge to their lives and doing what is right. They had received enough instruction, but they were still acting like infants.

5:14 This verse contrasts the spiritual babies (5:13) with the spiritually mature. These mature believers are called thus because they have trained themselves to recognize the difference between right and wrong and then do what is right.

Spiritually mature Christians constantly examine themselves, turn away from sin, and learn what actions, thoughts, and attitudes will please God.

6:1-3 Just after admonishing readers for baby-food spirituality, the writer indicated that “real food” would be coming. The writer would not give in to their immaturity and provide them with only milk, because rehashing the basic doctrines would not help them resist the temptation to drift away from Christ. They must gain a deeper understanding, moving beyond the basics of Christianity.

Of course, believers don’t “leave” these teachings as if they didn’t need them anymore; the elementary teachings are essential for all believers to understand. The elementary teachings about Christ include the importance of turning away from evil deeds and placing our faith in God. Other basic instruction included baptisms, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. These Christians needed to move beyond these basics of their faith to an understanding of Christ as the perfect High Priest and the fulfillment of all the Old Testament prophecies. Rather than arguing about the respective merits of Judaism and Christianity, they needed to seek deeper understanding of God by studying the more difficult concepts in his Word.

6:4-6 Let us first consider the subject of these verses. The writer described certain people with four phrases: (1) once enlightened, (2) experienced the good things of heaven, (3) shared in the Holy Spirit, and (4) tasted the goodness of the word of God and the power of the age to come. The writer was saying that it is impossible for such people, if they fall away, to be restored to repentance. There are four main interpretations of this passage.

1. One interpretation states that this passage means Christians can lose their salvation. However, this is dismissed by other portions of Scripture (see John 10:27-29; Romans 8:38-39).
2. Some interpret this passage as hypothetical: “if it were possible.” But if this passage were only hypothetical, then the warning would be unnecessary.
3. Another interpretation is that the writer may have intended to illustrate someone who seemed to be a Christian but really never was a true follower of Christ. All of the descriptive phrases could describe someone who is not really in the faith. This interpretation is acceptable when considered in the greater context. Hebrews 3:16-19 reviews how each Jew living in the wilderness had seen God’s great power, had eaten manna, had accompanied God, and had looked like one of God’s people, yet never entered the Promised Land. The writer did not want the Christians to fall into the same category and experience the same fate.

4. Another reasonable interpretation arises by linking this portion of Scripture with 10:25-31 (another severe warning). The writer of Hebrews was warning against a specific kind of apostasy: forsaking Jesus as the perfect sacrifice for sins and returning to animal sacrifices as a means of atoning for sins. Thus, the severe warning is for those Jewish Christians who had originally accepted Christ's redemption through his shed blood and then reverted to offering up the blood of bulls and goats as a means of cleansing their sins.

In the first century, a pagan who investigated Christianity and then went back to paganism would make a clean break with the church. But for Jewish Christians who decided to return to Judaism, the break was less obvious. Their lifestyle remained relatively unchanged. But by deliberately turning away from Christ, they were cutting themselves off from God's forgiveness.

It is impossible for people who have professed to be Christians and have experienced all of the beautiful gifts described in these verses, and then turn away from Christ to be restored. Why? Because they are nailing the Son of God to the cross again by rejecting him. These people have shown contempt for Christ through their deliberate actions. It would be like personally crucifying Christ again. Many have argued whether someone who turns away from Christ can be restored to Christ. Some point to this passage to prove that a backslider cannot be restored. But "backsliders" are not the subject here. This passage refers to people who walk with Christ for a while and then deliberately turn around and walk the other direction, rejecting Christ. These people can never be restored because they will not want to be restored. They have chosen to harden their hearts against Christ. It is not impossible for God to forgive them; rather, it is impossible for them to be forgiven because they won't repent of their sins.

To the Hebrew Christians, these verses revealed the danger of returning to Judaism and thus committing apostasy. Those who reject Christ will not be saved. Christ died once for all who believe. He will not be crucified again.

6:7-8 In these verses, a farming illustration further describes the argument of 6:4-6. Someone who abandons Christ can be compared with a field that bears thistles and thorns. Such land refuses to yield a good crop no matter what attention it gets; it is useless. So with those who do not persevere to the end (6:11); their punishment is real and guaranteed—the farmer will condemn that field and burn it. (See also Matthew 3:10; John 15:1-6.)

However, believers who stay close to God, seeking to grow closer to him, can be described as those who bear a good crop and receive the blessing of God. Just as both fields receive rain, so both groups receive God's concern and care. Only one group is genuine, however.

6:9 After arguing that it is possible for non-Christians to seem like true Christians, the writer continues that we really don't believe that it applies to you. The stern warnings are now balanced with an encouraging note. The writer assures readers that the dire warnings of tragedy and spiritual loss are, thankfully, not going to be enacted against the Hebrew believers. Confidence in the Farmer and a positive survey of the soil overcome the writer's earlier worry about the appearance of weeds (in this case, the Christians who felt like retreating into prior religious ritual). But these Christians must make headway in their Christian faith. They cannot be lazy, but now must move on. The phrase, you are meant for better things, things that come with salvation, refers to the new covenant as compared to the old. The better things are in the new covenant through Jesus Christ. There would be no reason to return to the "old things" of Judaism that could not bring salvation.

6:10 While believers do not need to work for salvation, salvation ought to change their lives so that they naturally want to serve God, do good works, and advance his Kingdom. Although a believer may not presently be receiving rewards and acclaim, God knows the efforts of love and ministry: He will not forget a believer's hard work for him. One example of this hard work was these believers' caring for other Christians. As discussed elsewhere in the New Testament, what believers do for others is done for God (Matthew 25:35; Romans 12:6-18; 1 John 4:19-21). Good works do not guarantee salvation, but salvation changes the lives of God's people, leading them to perform good works.

6:11 The service of loving others mentioned in 6:10 should be continued as long as life lasts. It pleases God when his people serve him. Believers have work to do in the world and should continue showing that diligence to grow and serve. Why? To make certain that what is hoped for will come true. In other words, we serve, not in order to get to heaven (as in some religions of the world), but because we are assured of the full realization of what we hope for and because we love the one who gave us that assurance. Our conviction must produce actions that show our true colors. We don't serve merely for the fun of it or for humanitarian principles, but because our hope is in our future life with Christ.

6:12 The opposite of being diligent is to become spiritually dull and indifferent (see 5:11). Believers are to be diligently growing and serving, not sitting back making everyone else do the work. To keep from becoming inactive or indifferent, believers would do well to follow the example of those who are going to inherit God's promises because of their faith and patience. The writer anticipates the example of many Old Testament followers of God (who are discussed later in chapter 11; see also 13:7). Their example should be actively imitated, not merely learned and acknowledged. Imitating these people's examples of faith in God will help Christians of all times keep from drifting away from Christ (2:1-4) or becoming hard-hearted (3:7–4:13).

GOD'S PROMISES BRING HOPE / 6:13-20

After encouraging the readers to imitate other faithful people, the writer offered an example from the Old Testament whose example would be worth imitating: Abraham. The readers could trust in God's promises because Abraham did, and he was rewarded.

6:13-14 For these Jewish Christian readers, a well-known example of one who will "inherit God's promises" because of "faith and patience" (6:12) was Abraham. God had made a promise to Abraham, recorded in Genesis 22:17, "I will multiply your descendants into countless millions." It was not really necessary for God to swear that he would keep his promise, because God cannot lie or break his word. However, God made the promise, swearing by the greatest standard and with the highest accountability possible—he took an oath in his own name. Abraham could not have received greater assurance.

6:15 The author's antidote for apostasy is waiting patiently. Abraham waited patiently, and that patience was rewarded. Abraham's patient wait lasted for twenty-five years—from the time God had promised him a son (Genesis 17:16) to Isaac's birth (Genesis 21:1-3). Because our trials and temptations are often so intense, they seem to last for an eternity. Both the Bible and the testimony of mature Christians encourage us to wait for God to act in his timing, even when our needs seem too great to wait any longer. God's promises always come true—we can count on him.

6:16 This description of taking an oath has carried over the centuries so that today we understand the concept completely. Even in modern wedding ceremonies, the oaths (vows) that the man and woman make to each other are witnessed by other people, who are then obliged to hold the two people accountable for their promises. But even more than that, the oath is made before God—someone greater holds people to their vows. It follows, then, that without any question that oath is binding. We call on greater authority because we know that difficulty in keeping promises may wear at our resources and efforts.

6:17 Humans often need promises sealed with oaths, so God did this for us because he wanted us to be perfectly sure that he would never change his mind. Abraham did not see his millions of descendants while he was alive, but he did have one son—the beginning of that fulfillment. Abraham not only had countless descendants in the Jewish nation, but his descendants came to include all people of faith (Galatians 3:7-9). The fulfillment of God's promise to Abraham should convince believers that all of God's promises to them will also be fulfilled.

6:18 God confirmed his promise with an oath (6:17), and these two things are unchangeable because it is impossible for God to lie. God provides us security because of his own character. Patience is our part whereby we hold on to his promise with confidence.

The phrase, we who have fled to him for refuge, pictures a person who fled to one of the cities of refuge that provided protection for someone who accidentally killed another (Numbers 35). Christians also have fled for safety to the place of security and protection from the punishment against them. Christ provides the safest place, the hope we count on, the encouragement we need. We must “hold on to his promise,” grasping it, refusing to let go no matter what might happen around us. For more on this promise, see commentary on 6:11-12.

6:19-20 This confidence (referred to in 6:11-12, 18) is like a strong and trustworthy anchor for our souls, secure and immovable. Not only does this confidence in God's promises hold us secure, but it leads us through the curtain of heaven into God's inner sanctuary. The inner sanctuary refers to the Most Holy Place in the Jewish Temple. A curtain hung across the entrance to this room prevented anyone from entering or even getting a fleeting glimpse of the interior of the Most Holy Place where God resided among his people (see also 9:1-8). The high priest could enter there only once a year (on the Day of Atonement) to stand before God's presence and atone for the sins of the entire nation (see 5:1-3). But Jesus has already gone in there for us, opening the way into God's presence by his death on the cross. His death tore the curtain in two (Mark 15:38), allowing believers to come directly into God's presence. What only the high priest could do before, Christ did and allows us to do as well. In this way, Christ's high-priestly work was different from any other priest. Other priests took people's sacrifices and represented them in the presence of God. Now, through Christ, we can approach the throne with confidence (10:19). Repeating the theme touched on in 5:5-10, the writer again describes Jesus as our eternal High Priest in the line of Melchizedek. An explanation of this comparison follows in chapter 7.

Note Jesus' crucial role in communicating and securing God's eternal promises for us. The promises, an expression of God's holy character, are eternally valid. Jesus activates the promises, eliminating, as it were, the impediment (sin) that renders the promises ineffective. By God's promises and Jesus' intercession, believers are incorporated into the family of God.

HEBREWS 7

MELCHIZEDEK IS COMPARED TO ABRAHAM / 7:1-14

After the warnings given in 5:11–6:12, chapter 7 picks up the theme of 5:10, which says that Christ was designated High Priest in the order of Melchizedek. Jesus is superior in rank and authority to Melchizedek and any other religious authority. In this discussion, the author shows that the Levitical priesthood, very familiar to Jewish readers, has been replaced by a new order of priests who were foreshadowed and characterized by Melchizedek.

7:1-2 The description of Melchizedek comes from Genesis 14:18-20. He seems to have been an extraordinary man who served his people in both the offices of king and priest. Salem may later have become the city of Jerusalem. The appellation God Most High means that Melchizedek worshiped the one true God.

This passage refers to the time when Abraham was returning home after winning a great battle against many kings. Four kings in Abraham's region had united and had conquered Sodom and other neighboring cities (Genesis 14:1-11). Abraham's nephew Lot and his family lived in Sodom. When Abraham heard that Lot and his family had been captured, Abraham mobilized 318 men for battle. With a surprise attack, Abraham and his tiny band of men liberated Lot and the others who had been captured (Genesis 14:12-16).

After defeating the four kings, Abraham became the greatest power in the land, and Melchizedek met him and blessed him. Then Abraham took a tenth of all he had won in the battle and gave it to Melchizedek because Melchizedek was a priest of God Most High. By giving the tithe to Melchizedek, Abraham was giving the gift to God's representative. Although these two men were strangers to each other, they shared a most important characteristic: Both worshiped and served the one God who made heaven and earth. This was a great moment of triumph for Abraham. He had just defeated an army and had freed a large group of captives. If he had any doubt in his mind about who had gained the victory, Melchizedek set the record straight (Genesis 14:20). Abraham recognized that he and this man worshiped the same God.

The original readers of Hebrews would have known that Melchizedek was greater than Abraham because he was able to receive tithes and give a blessing (see 7:7). This argument may not carry the same logical forcefulness for readers today as it did then, but these early Jewish believers understood the argument.

One of the reasons why Melchizedek is so significant is that his name means “king of justice” (the suffix of his name, “zedek,” means justice.) He is also the “king of peace” because Salem means “peace.” (“Salem” can be translated peace.) In Melchizedek’s name and position, justice and peace come together. Therefore, Melchizedek represents the same character traits as the Messiah, Jesus, who revealed God’s justice and peace.

Who was Melchizedek? Through the years, many have believed that he was Christ himself appearing in human form to Abraham—technically called a “Christophany” (an appearance of Christ in the Old Testament). This seems unlikely because Melchizedek is said to resemble Christ (7:3). Ancient Jewish interpretation said he was an angelic being, but there is no evidence in Genesis, Psalm 110:4, or Hebrews to support this theory. The best interpretation is that Melchizedek was a non-Jewish, historical priest-king who lived in ancient times and was a symbol and type of Christ.

7:3 To bolster the argument, the author of Hebrews used what is not said in Genesis 14 as much or more as what is said. The Bible does not provide a genealogy for Melchizedek nor a record of his death. While the Bible does not supply details of Melchizedek’s life, most likely Melchizedek was a human king and priest who really did have parents, and thus was born and eventually died. Jewish theology and typology, however, is built only on what the Bible text says. Because in the Bible text there is no record of his father or mother or any of his ancestors, it is as though he didn’t have any. Because the text records no beginning or end to his life, it is as though Melchizedek never was born or died. The contrast is being made between Melchizedek and Aaron’s priestly line, which depended entirely on genealogy. Priests in Aaron’s family succeeded upon the death of the prior priest, making the date of death extremely important. None of the apparatus of the Aaronic priesthood (Exodus 39) applied to Melchizedek, except God’s appointment. In this way, Melchizedek foreshadows Jesus, God’s special emissary.

With no record of beginning or end, Melchizedek remains a priest forever, resembling the Son of God (see also Psalm 110:4). Hebrews doesn’t say that Jesus resembled Melchizedek, but that Melchizedek resembled Jesus. Melchizedek was a real man, a servant of God, whose history is recorded in the book of Genesis in such a way as to make him resemble the one who would come and fulfill completely the offices of priest and king, and who would truly be a priest forever.

7:4 As great as Abraham was, Hebrews says that Abraham recognized how great Melchizedek was by giving him a tenth of the spoils of the battle. The argument follows a simple logic here. The strength of the argument hinges entirely on this premise: Greater beings receive donations from lesser beings, a very persuasive argument to the original readers. Since Melchizedek received a tithe from Abraham, Melchizedek was greater than Abraham (see 7:7). Because Melchizedek was greater, the author will argue that the priesthood that comes from Melchizedek must be greater than the priesthood that comes from Abraham, who is the “patriarch” of the entire Jewish nation. In the same way, Jesus is in a class altogether different from the prophets, angels, priests, and patriarchs.

7:5-6 The major premise of 7:4 is further explained by the Jewish law. In the Old Testament, as God began teaching the Israelites his laws, he also was teaching his people how to worship him. To help in this, he needed ministers to oversee the operations of the Tabernacle and to help the people maintain their relationship with God. The descendants of Levi were set apart, dedicated to serving God. Their jobs meant that they did not have the time to maintain land, so when the tribes were allotted land in the book of Joshua, the Levites were given none. Instead, God arranged for the other tribes to meet the Levites’ needs through donations—thus the law of Moses commanded the Levites to collect a tithe from the people. This was for their support—they were collecting from fellow Jews, their own relatives. The gifts came from their “equals.”

Now Melchizedek was not even related to Levi, yet he collected a tenth from Abraham. To comprehend this argument, we need to understand that Abraham represents his entire nation. Israel’s first high priest, Aaron, descended from Levi (the tribe of priests), and Levi descended from Abraham. Therefore, if Abraham recognized Melchizedek as his superior, then Melchizedek is also superior to all of Abraham’s descendants, including the line of priests. This makes Melchizedek’s priesthood greater than the Jewish priesthood. Melchizedek was not related to Levi, and neither was Jesus, who was born into the tribe of Judah.

The priests and Levites owed their position to their birth; they owed their receiving of tithes to provisions in God’s law. Melchizedek, however, stands in history as a solitary figure. He was given the tithe, not because of provision in the law, but because Abraham recognized his greatness. Melchizedek, in turn, acknowledged his superior position as he placed a blessing upon Abraham.

7:7 For the original readers, this logic secured the conclusion. Melchizedek, as a priest of God Most High, had the power to bless. Therefore, Melchizedek must be superior to Abraham, who was blessed. A blessing was a significant ritual passed along from fathers to sons, as well as from prominent to less prominent people. Thus it follows that the one who has the power to bless is obviously greater than the one being blessed.

7:8-10 The strength of the argument continues with assumptions that are not as persuasive today as they were in the first century.

First, Melchizedek is compared to Levitical priests, who would receive the tithes, but eventually they would die. Because Scripture does not record Melchizedek's death, it is as if he lives on (see 7:3). Because Melchizedek is not recorded to have died, his priesthood extends forever, in contrast to the Levites, who died and passed on their service to their sons. This is how Melchizedek resembled Christ, who really does live and serve forever. What the author asserts about Melchizedek "from the record," Jesus fulfills in person and power. Having died on the cross and risen again, Jesus lives never to die.

Second, Melchizedek is compared to Levitical priests, who paid a tithe to him through their ancestor Abraham. The Levites are represented by their ancestor Abraham: For although Levi wasn't born yet, the seed from which he came was in Abraham's loins when Melchizedek collected the tithe from him. When Abraham gave Melchizedek one-tenth of his booty, the unborn Levites also participated in the action. In this way, Melchizedek would also be greater than the Levites and the Levitical priests. This principle of corporate solidarity was very popular in Eastern and Middle Eastern customs and is often seen in the Old Testament when blessings and punishments are given to sons' sons. Abraham was a great man, and his descendants served as acceptable priests. But Melchizedek was greater and therefore his priesthood was better.

7:11 In 7:11-19, the writer seeks to show how the Levitical priesthood and the ritual system of sacrifice were insufficient to save people. Thus, that system was merely a preparation, a picture, of what would come and fulfill it. If the Levitical priesthood had been sufficient, the author asks, why did God need to send a different priest? The Levitical priesthood could not allow people to approach God because the animal sacrifices alone really could do nothing to remove sin. Thus God's purposes could not be achieved through the Old Testament priesthood because all along it had been meant as a shadow of what was to come. When this better way would come, the old way would become obsolete (see Hebrews 8:7ff.). A new way would mean a new law and a new system (7:12). God could not simply provide another human priest; instead, he provided something new.

7:12 Provisions for the Levitical priesthood were given in the law—including their duties, ordination, clothing, etc. But the law could not foresee a change in the priesthood, such as a new priest arising from the tribe of Judah (as did Jesus Christ, 7:13). Therefore, when the priesthood is changed, the law must also be changed to permit it.

Few things were as stable as the Old Testament law. Kings came and went; high priests died and made way for new high priests. But the law never changed. The Old Testament law is not God's final word, however; it was, in fact, preparatory. Christ himself became the final word. The law was not changed, but rather was fulfilled, rendering the ceremonial parts of the law (such as the system for animal sacrifice) out of date. The ceremonial laws have been superseded by Christ himself, who was the final and sufficient sacrifice.

Christ was not just another priest in the old system; rather, the entire system was changed with Christ as the High Priest in the new system. For readers who were close to lapsing into Judaism, these words would remind them that their old Jewish ways had been fulfilled and replaced by Christ.

7:13-14 By law, only Levites could serve as priests (see commentary on 7:5-6). The one we are talking about, Jesus, belongs to a different tribe—he came from the tribe of Judah. (Luke 2:4; 3:31, 33). Judah, one of the twelve tribes of Israel, was the largest tribe (Numbers 1:20-46), and it was the tribe from which most of Israel's kings had come (see Genesis 49:8-12). Later, Judah was one of the few tribes to return to God after a century of captivity under a hostile foreign power. Also, Judah was prophesied as the tribe through which the Messiah would come (Micah 5:2).

This is only one example, but an undisputed one, that the Old Testament ceremonial law cannot bring salvation. The descendants of Levi were made to be the priests, but God proclaimed that the Messiah would come through the tribe of Judah. This is further proof that the Levitical priesthood was temporary. The better High Priest was coming.

CHRIST IS LIKE MELCHIZEDEK / 7:15-28

Centuries after Melchizedek, the psalmist predicted that the Messiah would be a priest in the order of Melchizedek (Psalm 110:4). More than one thousand years later, the author of Hebrews quoted the psalmist. Melchizedek was not the final priest. Neither was Aaron. Christ became the perfect, final priest. He is the one who allows us to follow him as he enters God's presence.

7:15-17 Old Testament priests were vital to the spiritual life of Israel, but they were imperfect and temporary. Only one priest could fulfill God's plan. The writer explained about this different priest who has now come. He is like Melchizedek and has a priesthood in the line of Melchizedek—as described in 7:1-10. By being in the line of Melchizedek, Jesus Christ was both priest and king. He did not become a priest by belonging to the tribe of Levi. As Melchizedek was a Gentile priest, so Jesus did not fit the pattern. As described in 7:13-14, Jesus was not born into the tribe of Levi, but the tribe of Judah. Instead, he became a priest by the power of a life that cannot be destroyed. Because there is no record in Scripture of Melchizedek's death, it is as if he never died. So with Jesus—death could not master him. He died, but he rose never to die again. As a result, he will never cease his priestly ministry. Jesus fulfills the qualification of being a priest forever. The one who never dies has become the final High Priest, and his sacrifice has forever settled the breach that human sin created between almighty God and sinful humanity. Christ is immortal, fulfilling the prophecy of Psalm 110:4. The old priesthood was incomplete and is now abolished.

7:18-19 The law had limitations. If the law had been the perfect path to God, all the people would have been able to enter God's Most Holy Place. As it was, only the high priest could enter God's presence—and only once a year. Even then, the sacrifices could not completely atone for sin. But God had already planned for a better way: the old requirement about the priesthood was set aside because it was weak and useless. There was nothing inherently wrong with the system, for God himself had created it. Rather, it was meant to foreshadow what God would do through his Son.

In addition, the law made nothing perfect. This does not mean, however, that the law was purposeless. The law taught the consequences of sin (see Romans 3:20; 5:20) and pointed people to Christ (see Galatians 3:24-25). But law-keeping cannot save anyone. If the old system couldn't accomplish anything for sinful people, what could they do? The first-century readers needed to realize that a better hope had been made available—one that allowed them to draw near to God.

7:20-22 God did not have to take an oath because he cannot lie. Yet by taking an oath he added emphasis that what he said would definitely be so (see also 3:11; 4:3; 6:17). In the normal matter of the Levitical priesthood, men were appointed based on the law. But this was not so with Jesus. God ordained Jesus' priesthood with an oath when he said, "The Lord has taken an oath and will not break his vow: 'You are a priest forever'" (quoted from Psalm 110:4). No similar, explicit oath is mentioned in the establishment of Aaron's priesthood (Exodus 28). The matter of God making an oath, in addition to the power of his word, underscores the argument that Jesus is truly superior in every way—the only Savior.

This “oath” emphasizes that Jesus guarantees the effectiveness of this better covenant. The name “Jesus” emphasizes this point. The writer was not talking about Melchizedek or any earthly high priest, but about the Son of God, who is now seated at the right hand of God. Therefore, he is the “guarantee” from God to us. Jesus guarantees God's forgiveness of us, and he guarantees our acceptability with God. Because Jesus lives forever, the better covenant is permanent.

7:23-24 The historian Josephus estimated that eighty-three high priests served Israel from the first high priest, Aaron, to the fall of the second Temple in A.D. 70. Each served in his job, and each eventually died. But Jesus remains a priest forever. Again the writer contrasted the many people with the perfect One (see also 1:1-3). Every high priest would hand off his job to his successor. Not Christ; his priesthood will never end. Only Jesus is qualified to become a permanent priest for the entire human race.

7:25 Two themes portray Jesus' ministry for the community of believers. First, Jesus is able, once and forever, to save everyone who comes to God through him. No one can add to what Jesus did to save us; our past, present, and future sins are all forgiven. In addition, Jesus is with the Father as a guarantee that our sins are forgiven and that we have access to God.

Second, he lives forever to plead with God on believers' behalf. As our High Priest, Christ is our advocate, the mediator between us and God. His purpose is to intercede for those who follow God. He looks after our interests, presenting our requests to the Father. Christ makes perpetual intercession for us before God. Christ's continuous presence in heaven as the Priest-King assures us that our sins have been paid for and forgiven.

7:26 Concluding the thought begun in 7:23-25, the writer explained again that the Old Testament system has been superseded by a full and final sacrifice. Jesus is the kind of high priest we need because he is:

- holy, meaning that Jesus knew no sin. Jesus perfectly fulfilled all that God is and all that God required in a high priest who would bring salvation to sinful people (see 4:15).
- blameless, meaning he is without evil and is completely innocent. During his earthly life, even as he faced temptation, he remained completely obedient to God and completely without sin (see James 1:27).

- unstained by sin, that is, he remains undefiled even as he deals with sinful people in a defiled world (see 1 Peter 1:4).
- set apart from sinners because Jesus' sinless life separates him from sinful creation. Yet it was only through his separation by his sinlessness that he could act on our behalf.
- given the highest place of honor in heaven. He is greater than any other high priest because he represents people in the very throne room of God.

7:27 The final argument for Jesus' superiority shows the contrast between the essential nature of the priests and Jesus. The priests under the old covenant were merely sinful human beings; thus, they had to make a sacrifice for their own sins first before they could offer the sacrifices for the sins of the people. And this had to be done every day because no sacrifice could permanently remove the stain of sin.

Jesus, however, was completely sinless, never needing to offer a sacrifice for himself, nor did he need to repeat his sacrifice. When he sacrificed himself for sins, his perfect sacrifice obliterated the penalty of sins once for all, bringing the sacrificial system to an end. He forgave sins—past, present, and future. The Jews did not need to go back to the old system because Christ, the perfect sacrifice, had completed the work of redemption. You don't have to look for another way to have your sins forgiven—Christ was the final sacrifice for you.

7:28 The high priests under the law of Moses were not perfect; they were limited by human weakness. They could not bring sinners into the perfect presence of God. But God designed another way that he secured with an oath (see 7:21). This "oath" was fulfilled and the new priesthood came after the law because the law had been surpassed by the appointment of his Son, who has been made perfect forever.

As we better understand the Jewish sacrificial system, we see that Jesus' death served as the perfect atonement for our sins. His death brings us eternal life. How callous, how cold, how stubborn it would be to refuse God's greatest gift. The original readers would be foolish to abandon Christianity and revert to a system that was now obsolete.

HEBREWS 8

CHRIST IS OUR HIGH PRIEST / 8:1-13

Chapter 7 explained that Jesus is a greater priest than any priest who had descended from Israel's first high priest, Aaron. The writer now summarizes his message; what he has been saying is that Christ is superior to everything in the Jewish priesthood. Whatever the Jewish believers had previously trusted for salvation was merely a shadow of reality, not the reality itself. That shadow is now utterly replaced by the reality of Christ as High Priest.

8:1 Jesus is our High Priest, who is seated in the place of highest honor in heaven, at God's right hand. This portrayal of Christ is a key argument for the deity of Christ in Hebrews. This place at God's right hand belonged to Christ because he was more than just a high priest; he is God's Son. Heaven refers to the heavenly sanctuary (see 8:2), the dwelling place of God, the ultimate and eternal destination for all who believe (4:1; 6:19-20; 11:10; 12:22), and therefore an even greater reality than what we see. This present world is merely a representation or shadow of what will come (see 8:5). Because of this, Christ's ministry will be greater than the priests who served in the earthly Tabernacle or Temple, as we see in the following verse.

8:2 Verse 1 describes Christ's exaltation at God's right hand; verse 2 describes his service. Christ, the exalted one, is a servant who ministers in the sacred tent in heaven. Jesus serves by taking his rightful place as our Savior and Mediator. His place in heaven secures our place there. Christ returned to the presence of God in heaven, the true place of worship that was built by the Lord and not by human hands. God allows us to enter that same throne room and bring our worship and requests to him. This "true" place of worship does not imply that the Tabernacle and Temple on earth were false but that they were imperfect shadows of the true and perfect place of worship (8:5). Before Christ, the high priest could only enter a special place, the Most Holy Place, to come into the presence of God. Today, through prayer, we can enter the throne room of heaven, and we will one day eternally live in that presence. By extension, then, the "old" way through the Jewish priesthood no longer exists; it is replaced by Jesus Christ, the way, the truth, and the life (John 14:6).

8:3 The high priest's work was to offer gifts and sacrifices. Priests had been appointed to offer sacrifices to atone for sin, so Christ, as our High Priest, must also make an offering. He offered his own life to God in our place—the perfect gift that could never be surpassed. “He sacrificed himself on the cross” (7:27). Christ’s sacrifice is all-sufficient; that is, all sins are covered in his once-for-all offering to God. Therefore, his role as priest, his sacrifice, and his service to God all surpass the plan under the old covenant.

8:4 Under the old Jewish system, priests were chosen only from the tribe of Levi, and sacrifices were offered daily on the altar for forgiveness of sins. This system would not have allowed Jesus to be a priest, for according to the law, a priest had to come from the tribe of Levi, not Judah (see 7:12-14). The use of the present tense in there already are priests indicates that this book was written before A.D. 70, when the Temple in Jerusalem was destroyed, ending the sacrifices. But Jesus’ perfect sacrifice had already ended the need for priests and sacrifices. Christ was appointed High Priest of a new and better system that allows God’s people to enter directly into God’s presence.

8:5 The priests who offered sacrifices served in a place of worship that is only a copy, a shadow of the real one in heaven. This continues to show the insignificance of the Jewish priests’ earthly service. Certainly it was important work, but their service was only an illustration of what was coming.

God gave Moses the pattern for the Tabernacle, and Moses was warned to follow it carefully, having been warned to make everything according to the design God had shown him (see Exodus 25:40). This earthly sanctuary was meant to reflect, however imperfectly, the heavenly Tabernacle. The book of Hebrews does not try to describe heaven; instead, it shows how Christ serves in a better, more personal way than any other priest could. Because the Temple at Jerusalem had not yet been destroyed, using the worship system there as an example would have had a great impact on this original audience. Their Temple, and all they knew about the original Tabernacle constructed by Moses, had been an imperfect picture intended to give the people an appreciation of the heavenly reality that would one day be theirs.

8:6 Although the priests descended from Aaron possessed a job of high honor and dignity, the ministry Jesus has received is far superior to the ministry of those who serve under the old laws. Jesus’ ministry and the new covenant are superior for several reasons:

- they completely fulfill and replace the priests’ ministry and the old covenant;
- they last for eternity, because Jesus is High Priest forever;

- they require no further sacrifices;
- they accomplish what all the other sacrifices could not do—truly atone for sin;
- they provide sinful humanity the opportunity to have a personal relationship with God (see 8:10-11).

This better covenant is based on better promises that the writer will discuss in greater detail in 8:10-12.

8:7 The need for a second covenant implies that the first covenant was faulty. Does this mean that God ordered Moses and Aaron to begin a way of worship that was mistaken or poorly contracted? No, but the old covenant was in every way preparatory for and pointing to the dynamic of the new covenant (see 7:11-19; also Romans 3–4; 9–11). The old covenant was replaced because it was not eternal, not sufficient to completely deal with sin, and could not provide sinful humanity with a relationship with God. In its time, however, the old covenant was necessary. But it needed to be replaced by a better covenant, as was prophesied by Jeremiah and quoted in the following verses.

8:8 Since the people continually broke God’s covenant, God found fault with the old covenant. A part of the covenant involved keeping God’s laws; however, the Israelites chose to disobey (see Jeremiah 7:23-24). When they failed to keep the requirements imposed on them, they broke the covenant. God, however, promised a new covenant that would not be filled with laws about sacrifices and other external responsibilities. Rather, it would bring about spiritual reconciliation by producing change in people’s inner beings.

Verses 8-12 quote Jeremiah 31:31-34, which is the longest Old Testament quotation in the New Testament. Jeremiah prophesied about a future time when a better covenant would be established, because the first covenant, given to Moses at Mount Sinai, was imperfect and provisional. The Israelites could not maintain faithfulness to it because their hearts had not been truly changed. This change of heart required Jesus’ full sacrifice to remove sin and the Holy Spirit’s permanent indwelling. When we turn our lives over to Christ, the Holy Spirit instills in us a desire to obey God.

8:9 The old covenant was broken, not once, but many times. The Jewish readers’ ancestors had been miraculously freed from slavery in Egypt. In the wilderness, they had received God’s laws and had made a covenant of obedience. However, they did not remain faithful, and by that disobedience, they voided their part of the agreement. Grieved and offended by the willful disobedience of his chosen people, God turned his back on them. This means that they faced the consequences of sin instead of receiving the blessings of obedience. While God may have allowed such consequences, he never abandoned his people. Instead, he promised something better for all who would remain faithful.

8:10-12 Under God's new covenant, God's law is inside us. It is no longer an external set of rules and principles. The Holy Spirit reminds us of Christ's words, activates our consciences, influences our motives and desires, and makes us want to obey. Now we desire to do God's will with all our heart and mind.

This new covenant has four provisions:

1. The new covenant provides inward change: "I will put my laws in their minds . . . I will write them on their hearts." This means having a new "heart," and with it a new sense of intimacy with God where he is known as Father and where Christians are known as children of God and heirs. This new heart will bring the people's relationship with God to a personal level (not just through intermediaries). Having these laws written on our hearts means that we will want to obey God.
2. The new covenant provides intimacy with God: "I will be their God, and they will be my people." This reveals a positive, close relationship between God and his people. In the first covenant, people continually failed to live up to this relationship. In the new covenant, this relationship is secured through Jesus Christ. Although the promise was always there, it now has a newer and richer meaning because of the provision of Christ.
3. The new covenant provides knowledge of God: "Everyone, from the least to the greatest, will already know me." The new covenant brings a new relationship between people and God, making each believer a priest (1 Peter 2:5, 9). Every believer has access to God through prayer. Every believer can understand God's saving promises as revealed in the Bible because he or she has God as a living presence in his or her heart. Of course, there will still be the need for teachers, but every believer will be able to know God—not just priests or a select few.
4. The new covenant provides complete forgiveness from sins: "I will forgive their wrongdoings, and I will never again remember their sins." People of the old covenant had forgiveness of sins (see Exodus 34:6-8; Micah 7:18-20), but they had experienced an incomplete, unlasting forgiveness as demonstrated by the incessant need to make sacrifices for sins. In the new covenant, sin and its effect of separating people from God are eliminated.

God wipes out memory of sin and renders sin as if it had never occurred. Sin's impact is completely overcome, making it possible for believers to receive the promised blessing. There is no longer any barrier to our relationship with God.

All four of these characteristics bring about a true righteousness that could not be known under the old covenant.

8:13 Introducing a new covenant means that God has made the first one obsolete. The old one was fulfilled by Christ and completed by him; therefore, it was no longer needed. Old systems, old sacrifices, and the old priesthood now have no value in securing God's approval. "Hang on to the old covenant if you will," warns Hebrews, "but you're hanging on to a shadow, a bubble ready to burst, a moment passing into history. The old covenant has served its purpose and will soon be just a memory. You can't live in the past, so your real choice is clear: accept the new covenant or none at all."

God does not change his mind. He did not send his Son to repeal, abolish, or annul what he had told his people previously. Instead, the Father sent his Son as the fulfillment of the old covenant. Jesus' coming had been part of God's plan from Creation (see Genesis 3:15). The disciples did not thoroughly understand how Jesus fulfilled the Scriptures until after his death and resurrection (Luke 24:25-27).

HEBREWS 9

OLD RULES ABOUT WORSHIP / 9:1-10

The end of chapter 8 explains that the old (or first) covenant was made obsolete by the new covenant. This chapter discusses that old covenant. As the Israelites had learned God's laws and how to worship him, God had given them instructions for building a place of worship (8:5; see Exodus 25:40). Called the Tabernacle, this portable building traveled with the Hebrews as they traveled to the Promised Land. It became the place where God lived among them.

9:1 The original readers of Hebrews would have known all about the regulations for worship that were required by the first covenant. The first covenant also had made provision and instructions for a sacred tent here on earth (first the Tabernacle, later the Temple).

9:2 The tent (or Tabernacle) that God's people used for worship was constructed while the Israelites were en route to the Promised Land. It was a portable structure that could be taken apart and carried when the people moved from place to place. God's instructions for building the Tabernacle are in Exodus 25–31.

The tent had two rooms: an inner room (called the Most Holy Place) and an outer room. A priest on duty would enter the first room, called the Holy Place, each day to commune with God and to tend to the other elements located in this room. The lampstand, the menorah, was a seven-branched candlestick standing in the south side of the room (Exodus 25:31-40; 37:17-24). Its candles burned day and night and provided light for the priests as they carried out their duties. The light also symbolized God's presence. The Menorah still remains as a major symbol of the Jewish faith.

The table was made of wood and overlaid with pure gold (Exodus 25:23-30; 37:10-16). On this table sat the loaves of holy bread. Once a week on the Sabbath, a priest would enter the Holy Place and set twelve freshly baked loaves of bread on a small table. This bread symbolized God's presence among his people as well as his loving care in meeting their physical needs. The bread was to be eaten only by the priests on duty.

9:3-4 Beyond the first room, the Holy Place, there was a curtain (described in Exodus 26:31-33). This curtain prevented anyone from entering or even getting a glimpse of the interior of the second room called the Most Holy Place, symbolizing that sinful people could not approach the holy God. The curtain formed the separation between the holy God and sinful people (see 6:19). The original readers would have known of the magnificent curtain in Herod's Temple. It was made of blue, purple, and scarlet woven linen. Figures of the cherubim were embroidered on it. The Most Holy Place was where God himself dwelt. Only the high priest could enter the Most Holy Place, and then, only once a year (on the Day of Atonement) to make atonement for the sins of the whole nation.

The elements in the Most Holy Place included a gold incense altar, placed just outside the curtain, for it was used daily (see Exodus 30:6-8; 37:25-28; 40:5). The high priest burned incense on the altar twice daily. The Ark of the Covenant was a wooden chest, the most holy piece of furniture in the Tabernacle. The wood was acacia wood covered with gold on all sides (Exodus 25:10-22; 37:1-9). The Ark symbolized God's covenant with his people. On the annual Day of Atonement, the high priest would enter the Most Holy Place to sprinkle blood on the top of the Ark (called the atonement cover) to atone for the sins of the entire nation.

The Ark of the Covenant itself contained certain holy objects. First described in Exodus 16:32-35, the gold jar containing some manna symbolized God's care in providing food for his people in the wilderness. It may have been lost when the Philistines captured the Ark and held it for a time (see 1 Samuel 4-6). Aaron's staff that sprouted leaves is first described in Numbers 17:1-11. This staff showed that Aaron's descendants had indeed been chosen by God to care for the priesthood. It certified their authority as priests. This staff was also probably lost during the Philistine control of the Ark (see 1 Samuel 4-6). Also included were the stone tablets of the covenant with the Ten Commandments written on them. These two stone tablets were put in the Ark at Mount Sinai. When the Ark was placed in Solomon's Temple, only the tablets of the Ten Commandments were still inside (1 Kings 8:9).

9:5 Next the author described the glorious cherubim that decorated the top of the Ark of the Covenant (Exodus 25:18-22). Cherubim are mighty angels. One of the functions of the cherubim was to serve as guardians. These angels guarded the entrances to both the tree of life (Genesis 3:24) and the Most Holy Place (Exodus 26:31-33). The living creatures carrying God's throne in Ezekiel 1 may have been cherubim. With their wings stretched out over the Ark's cover, also called the place of atonement, these two gold statues were believed to support God's invisible presence. The glory of God's presence hovered over the Ark of the Covenant (see Exodus 40:34-36; Leviticus 16:2).

The place of atonement was also called atonement cover or the mercy seat. This place was significant because it was where sin was taken away. The blood from the sacrifice given on the Day of Atonement was sprinkled by the high priest on this cover (Leviticus 16:15-17) and the people experienced God's forgiveness.

The original readers would have been very well acquainted with the apparatus of the Tabernacle. The intention was not to give a commentary on these things; so the writer explained, we cannot explain all of these things now.

9:6 Having reminded the people of the basic arrangement of the holy rooms in the Tabernacle, the writer gets to the reason for this discussion. The priests would serve regularly in the first room—daily offering incense (see Exodus 30:7), setting out the holy loaves on the Sabbath (Leviticus 24:8-9), and trimming the wicks on the candles in order to keep them burning (Exodus 27:20-21).

9:7 In addition to these regular services, the high priest goes into the Most Holy Place, but only once a year on the Day of Atonement. This day was strictly observed (see Leviticus 23:26-32), and no one was permitted to enter the Most Holy Place on any other day. On this day, the blood sprinkled on the place of atonement on the Ark of the Covenant symbolized atonement for the sins of the nation (Leviticus 16:15-30). As part of the yearly ritual, the priest would enter the Most Holy Place with the blood of a bull. This blood would serve to cover his own sins. Then the priest would leave the room and return with the blood of a goat. This blood would cover the sins the people had committed in ignorance. The blood that the priest brought into the Most Holy Place would be sprinkled on the altar of incense and on the front of the place of atonement. (In the day of the original readers, the Ark of the Covenant was missing, so the priest would simply sprinkle the blood into the Most Holy Place.)

9:8 The ceremony carried out on the Day of Atonement revealed that people had no direct approach to God. Ordinary people could never enter God's presence and had to depend on the high priest. A heavy curtain blocked the Most Holy Place; thus, this place was not open to the people. The way had not yet been revealed—Christ would do that. As long as the first room as well as the entire system were still in use, people would be unable to approach God directly.

The Holy Spirit revealed that the sacrifice system was ineffective for bringing unhindered fellowship with God, and that one day, people would experience a new kind of relationship with God that would effectively remove sin. The old covenant pointed to what Christ would do in the new covenant.

9:9 This older way was simply an illustration pointing to the present time. Under the old covenant, the people did not have direct access to God. But under the new covenant made available through Christ, God's people can have access to God and be free from guilt. This guilt was never fully relieved in the old covenant, for the gifts and sacrifices that the priests offer are not able to cleanse the consciences of the people who bring them. These sacrifices symbolized atonement for sin and provided a way for the people to continue to worship God, but the sacrifices could not change the people's hearts and lives.

9:10 The writer continues to show why the old system of sacrifice through the priests was inadequate. The people had to keep the Old Testament dietary laws and ceremonial cleansing laws until Christ came with God's new and better way. The food, drink, and ritual washing laws (Leviticus 10:8-9; 11; 15:4-27; Numbers 19:7-13) dealt only with external regulations that were required under the old covenant.

God replaced this old system in order to correct its limitations. This order began with the new covenant in Christ when God's laws were written on people's hearts (see commentary on 8:10-12). Perhaps some of the original readers had been considering reverting back to certain ceremonial rules. The book of Hebrews points out that these rules are no longer necessary or spiritually beneficial.

CHRIST IS THE PERFECT SACRIFICE / 9:11-28

Under the first covenant, sins were covered temporarily by the blood of bulls and goats. Under the second covenant, the blood of the supreme sacrifice, Jesus Christ, covered all believers' sins. Under the first covenant, the blood had to be shed and offered to God again and again. Under the new covenant, Jesus' blood was shed once for all. Under the old covenant, the priest physically sprinkled blood on the ceremonially unclean. Under the new covenant, we who believe in Christ are covered by his blood, which was shed two thousand years ago.

9:11 Although the people worshiped under the old covenant for nearly fifteen hundred years, God provided a new way that arrived because Christ has now become the High Priest. Christ fulfilled perfectly and completely all that had been illustrated in the old covenant (described in 9:1-10). Christ came as a priest of the new covenant, called the good things that have come.

As a high priest, Christ also served in the Tabernacle, but his ministry was in that great, perfect sanctuary in heaven, not made by human hands and not part of this created world. Christ's ministry on our behalf was in God's presence, a place where the blood of goats and bulls would have no effect. This point again reveals Christ's superiority.

9:12 This imagery comes from the Day of Atonement rituals described earlier. Just as a priest would enter the earthly Most Holy Place, Christ took blood into that Most Holy Place in heaven. But he took not the blood of goats and calves, but his own blood. With that blood, he secured our salvation forever. The real work was done on the cross.

Believers are forgiven on the basis of the shedding of Jesus' blood—he died as the perfect and final sacrifice. (See also Romans 5:9; Ephesians 1:7; 2:13; Colossians 1:20; 1 Peter 1:18-19.) Christ's sacrifice was so perfect and effective that it never needs to be repeated.

9:13 Christ's sacrifice was superior to any of the sacrifices offered under the old covenant. Under the old system, the priests offered goats and bulls as sacrifices (see commentary on 9:7). The ashes of a young cow refer to a ceremony described in Numbers 19:1-10. This ceremony was performed when someone was made unclean and needed to be purified. This ceremony served to purify an unclean person; thus, it could cleanse people's bodies from ritual defilement. A ritually defiled person could not participate in Jewish ceremonies until he or she was cleansed (see also Mark 7:15-23; Acts 10:15; 21:28). But the offering only provided ceremonial purity on a temporary basis.

9:14 If the old way of ceremonial cleansings allowed people to be made clean (as described in 9:13), just think how much more the blood of Christ will purify our hearts. Christ's sacrifice did more than purify ceremonially, which is all the ashes could do, it cleansed hearts. When the people sacrificed animals, God considered the people's faith and obedience, cleansed the people from sin, and made them "ceremonially" clean and acceptable according to Old Testament law. But Christ's sacrifice transforms our lives and hearts and makes us clean on the inside. His sacrifice is infinitely more effective than animal sacrifices.

Christ's blood cleansed his followers from deeds that lead to death. Before people follow Christ, they are filled with sinful thoughts, actions, and behavior. These deeds defile people, placing them in need of atonement (see 6:1). It could be that the original readers were tempted to revert to sacrifices because of guilty feelings over their sins. It could be that they had difficulty trusting in Christ's forgiveness and felt the urge to do something themselves. In a similar way, Christians today often try to appease their consciences by doing good deeds, giving money, living up to leaders' expectations, or taking on extra responsibilities. For the original readers and for us, the message is clear. Our consciences can be clean on account of what Christ has done.

The purpose of all the cleansing was to allow the people to worship the living God. Now that sins are forgiven, we can worship truly and freely. We are not limited to external actions; we can worship in spirit. Our worship does not need to be mediated through a priest; we can worship God on our own with unlimited access to him.

9:15 Because Christ offered himself to God (9:14), he is the one who mediates the new covenant. As our High Priest, Christ acts as the mediator, or advocate, between us and God. He intercedes for all who believe, looking after their interests and presenting their requests to God.

Because Christ serves as our Mediator, all who are invited can receive the eternal inheritance God has promised them. The phrase, all who are invited, refers to all who believe in Jesus Christ and accept his sacrifice on their behalf. That they are “invited” points to God’s initiative in giving salvation. The inheritance is the final end of the new covenant—believers one day living in heaven with God. This inheritance will last forever.

Christ’s sacrificial death saves not only those who died after Christ, but it also saves those who died under that first covenant. People in Old Testament times were saved through Christ’s sacrifice, although that sacrifice had not yet happened. Those who offered unblemished animal sacrifices were anticipating Christ’s coming and his death for sin. There was no point in returning to the sacrificial system after Christ had come and had become the final, perfect sacrifice.

9:16-17 These two verses introduce a parenthetical thought that shows when the new covenant was actually initiated. Through a play on words, the author speaks of someone who leaves a will. The word for “will” is the same word elsewhere used as “covenant.” The new covenant was inherited by God’s people at the death of Christ. In essence, he left the new covenant in his will. When he died, it was received by God’s people. When Jesus died, the will was enacted and the promised inheritance (salvation and eternal life) was received. His death also provided the blood needed to put the covenant into effect.

9:18 To understand the reason why blood was required under the first covenant, we need to understand the Bible’s view of sin and forgiveness. God is the sovereign judge of the universe. He is also absolutely holy. As the holy judge of all, he condemns sin and judges it worthy of death. In Old Testament times, God accepted the death of an animal as a substitute for the sinner. The animal's shed blood was proof that one life had been given for another. So on the one hand, blood symbolized the death of the animal, but it also symbolized the life that was spared as a result. (See also 9:22.)

9:19 This passage describes the covenant sacrifice of Sinai (Exodus 24:3-8). After Moses had given the people all of God's laws, he sealed the covenant with blood. The blood that sealed the covenant, the blood of calves and goats, was mixed with water to symbolize cleansing. Scarlet wool was tied onto the branches of hyssop bushes and was used to sprinkle the blood on the book of God's laws and all the people. In the ceremony described here, Moses would sprinkle half the blood from the sacrificed animals on the altar to show that the sinner could once again approach God because something had died in his or her place. Moses then would sprinkle the other half of the blood on the people to show that the penalty for their sin had been paid and they could be reunited with God. Through this symbolic act, God's promises to Israel were reaffirmed and lessons were taught about Christ's future sacrificial death.

9:20-21 In the same way that Moses sprinkled blood on the sacred tent and on everything used for worship, so Christ shed his blood in order to confirm the covenant. As the old covenant was sealed with blood, so was the new covenant. This quote has been adapted from the Septuagint (the Greek version of the Old Testament) of Exodus 24:8.

9:22 Blood from a sacrifice symbolized cleansing and forgiveness, thus nearly everything was purified by sprinkling with blood. In fact, without the shedding of blood, there is no forgiveness of sins. Why does forgiveness require the shedding of blood? This is no arbitrary decree on the part of a bloodthirsty God, as some have suggested. There is no greater symbol of life than blood because blood keeps us alive. Jesus shed his blood—gave his life—for our sins so that we wouldn't have to experience spiritual death, eternal separation from God. Jesus is the source of life, not death. He gave his own life to pay the penalty for us so that we might live.

9:23 The earthly tent and everything in it were, in a way that we don't fully understand, copies of things in heaven, illustrating God's heavenly originals, which are far better than the earthly copies. Just as the copies had to be purified, so the real things in heaven had to be purified with far better sacrifices than the blood of animals. This purification of the heavenly things can best be understood as referring to Christ's spiritual work for us. Of course, the "better sacrifices" were, in fact, only one sacrifice. The real spiritual work of forgiveness continues in the presence of God as he forgives us because of Christ's death in our place. Why did the heavenly Tabernacle need to be purified? Heaven and God's presence are already holy, so this probably refers to the cleansed people of God, who can now stand in God's presence.

9:24 The priests worked in a symbolic, man-made earthly place of worship. Christ, however, entered into heaven itself to appear now before God. Among references to priests, Tabernacles, sacrifices, and other ideas unfamiliar to us, we come to this description of Christ as our Advocate, appearing in God's presence on our behalf. No intermediary priests or saints are necessary. Christ is our perfect representative. He is on our side at God's side. He is there now, always available.

9:25 Unlike the priests, Christ did not offer himself again and again, like an earthly high priest who had to go into the Most Holy Place and offer the blood of an animal year after year. Christ's sacrifice invalidated any other sacrifice.

9:26 If Christ's sacrifice had followed the pattern of the old covenant, he would have had to die again and again. Christ's sacrifice, however, initiated a new covenant and was the perfect sacrifice. As a result, he came once for all time and, by doing so, has removed the power of sin forever. Sin is more than just covered; it is obliterated. It is forgiven and forgotten.

9:27-28 Each person lives on earth and then dies only once. After that, says the writer, comes judgment. All people will stand before God. Those who follow Christ have hope. Christians know that just as death and judgment are certain, so is their hope (9:28). All people die physically, but Christ died only once as a sacrifice to take away the sins of many people so that we would not have to die spiritually. Christ's sacrifice was the turning point in history. The word once indicates the completeness and finality of Jesus' sacrifice. Many people refers to everyone—all humanity (see 2:9).

Jesus went into heaven and likewise will come again. Because his death took care of sin completely and finally, he will not need to deal with our sins again. That work was finished. Instead, at his second coming, he will bring salvation to all those who are eagerly waiting for him. When he returns, he will proclaim the full benefits of salvation. Those who are eagerly waiting for him conveys a warning, reminding the readers to remain faithful to Christ during their time of testing and persecution on earth.

HEBREWS 10

CHRIST'S SACRIFICE ONCE FOR ALL / 10:1-18

Until Christ, animal sacrifices took place “year after year” on the Day of Atonement, reminding the people of their guilt. In the new covenant between God and his people, God promises that he will remember our sins no more because of Christ’s one-time sacrifice.

10:1-2 The old system in the law of Moses simply offered a shadow of what was coming. The reality of the good things are the new covenant described in 8:10-12, including direct access to God. Because the law was not the final plan, it was never able to provide perfect cleansing from sin. If sacrifices could have made people perfect, they would not have been repeated again and again, year after year. Instead, they would have stopped, the worshipers would have been purified, and guilt feelings would have disappeared. But the endless nature of the sacrifices proved their inability to purify worshipers, remove their guilt, and provide closeness with God. Only Christ’s sacrifice can purify people once for all time (see 9:12). Only Christ’s sacrifice can remove the guilt from sin and offer clean consciences (see 9:14).

10:3-4 The daily and yearly repetition of the sacrifices reminded the people of their sins, and taught them that it is not possible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sins. Animal sacrifices provided only a temporary way to deal with sin until Jesus would come to deal with sin permanently.

10:5-7 Although sacrifices were necessary to pay the price of sin, this quotation reveals that God never took pleasure in sacrifices—you did not want animal sacrifices and grain offerings. In many places in the Bible, God revealed that he didn’t want the sacrifices of a person whose heart was not right. God wanted his people to obey him. The sacrifices were necessary, however, because the people did not live up to the regulations that God had given them.

Applying to Christ the words of Psalm 40:6-8, Christ came to offer his body on the cross for us as a sacrifice that is completely acceptable to God. God’s new and living way for us to please him comes not by keeping laws or even by abstaining from sin, but by turning to him in faith for forgiveness and then following him in loving obedience. This was what set Christ’s sacrifice apart. He followed God’s will, obeyed him, and offered the perfect sacrifice of perfect obedience.

The entire Old Testament (the Scriptures) had written about Christ and his coming. The law and the sacrificial system was a shadow of what was to come. Christ fulfilled the law as well as the prophecies that announced the coming of the new covenant.

10:8-9 These two verses repeat the ideas from 10:5-7, reinforcing the contrast between the old way and the new. God did not want the sacrifices required by the law of Moses. God had never planned for the old system to be the final system. Instead, he provided a new way, a new covenant through Christ, who obeyed God and willingly gave up his life as a perfect sacrifice. Christ cancels the first covenant in order to establish the second. Setting aside the first system in order to establish a far better one meant doing away with the system of sacrifices contained in the ceremonial law. (It didn't mean eliminating God's "moral" law, contained in the Ten Commandments.) The ceremonial law prepared people for Christ. With his coming, that system was no longer needed.

10:10 For the seventh time in less than two chapters, the phrase once for all is used to underscore the finality of Christ's sacrifice.

God wants his people to be made holy. The God of Israel and of the Christian church is holy—he sets the standard for morality. Holiness means being totally devoted or dedicated to God, set aside for his special use, and set apart from sin and its influence. Holiness comes from a sincere desire to obey God and from wholehearted devotion to him. God's qualities make us different. A follower of Christ becomes "holy" (sanctified) by the sacrifice of the body of Jesus Christ. We cannot become holy on our own, but God gives us his Holy Spirit to help us obey him and to give us power to overcome sin.

10:11-12 Here again is the point of 10:1 that the priests had to offer sacrifices day after day. These sacrifices could never take away sins. By contrast, our High Priest offered himself to God as one sacrifice for sins, good for all time. The sacrificial system couldn't completely remove sin; Christ's sacrifice did so. Christ now sits at God's right hand (see commentary on 1:3, 13; 8:1). He is able to sit because his sacrifice was completely sufficient to take care of sin.

10:13-14 Since that time, Christ waits until his enemies are humbled (see also 1:13; Psalm 110:1). Christ paid the penalty for our sins, and by one offering he perfected forever all those whom he is making holy. Believers are perfected forever because they are new creations whom God sees as holy. Verse 14 contrasts believers (who are being made holy) with people who refuse to believe—the “enemies” mentioned in verse 13.

Although we are made holy when we accept Christ as Savior, God is also continually making us holy. In Christ, we are free from the penalty of sin (judgment) and the power of sin (compulsion to sin, death). But while still alive on earth, we are not free from the presence of sin (temptations) and the possibility of sin (failures). We are saved by God’s grace, but we still need to grow. We can encourage this growth process by deliberately applying Scripture to all areas of our lives, by accepting the discipline and guidance Christ provides, and by giving God control of our desires and goals.

10:15-17 Again Hebrews states that the Holy Spirit is the author of the Old Testament (see also 3:7; 9:8). Quoting again from Jeremiah 31:33-34 (as in 8:10-12), Hebrews makes the connection between Christ’s sacrifice and the new covenant. Here again we see a close connection between the forgiveness of sins and the ability to know God. The new covenant and new sacrifice brought forgiveness in a better way than the Levitical system could provide. With sins forgiven, Christians can now enter the real presence of God. The guilt that remained under the old covenant has been permanently removed.

10:18 Christ forgives completely, so there is no need to confess past sins repeatedly. As believers, we can be confident that the sins we confess and renounce are forgiven and forgotten. Because sins have been forgiven, there is no need to offer any more sacrifices. God requires no more sacrifices to make people acceptable to him because Christ’s once-for-all sacrifice makes people acceptable.

A CALL TO PERSEVERE / 10:19-39

The first section, 1:1–10:18, developed the superiority of Christ. The second section, 10:19–13:25, develops the church’s responsibility to live in faith. The author applies the doctrines that have been discussed up to this point.

10:19-20 Through his death on our behalf, believers can boldly enter heaven’s Most Holy Place because of the blood of Jesus. Believers have access to the heavenly sanctuary; that is, they have free access to God. Christ now sits at God’s right hand as our High Priest in this heavenly sanctuary (see 6:19-20; 8:1-2; 9:11-12, 24). The blood refers to Jesus giving his life for us (see 9:12, 14; 10:19, 29; 12:24; 13:12, 20). This encouragement for boldness is remarkable because, under the old covenant, the Most Holy Place was sealed from view by the sacred curtain. But Jesus' death in his human body opened up access to God. When Jesus died on the cross, the curtain in the Temple (which had replaced the Tabernacle) tore from top to bottom (Mark 15:38), thereby unveiling the glorious reality that believers now have free access to God. By means of his death, Jesus opened the new, life-giving way. He truly was "the way" itself (John 14:6).

10:21-22 What Christ has done for Christians is the focus of the next three exhortations—the first dealing with their faith in God (10:21-22), the second dealing with their hope in their salvation (10:23), and the third dealing with their love for each other (10:24-25).

Because of believers' relationship with this great High Priest, they can go right into the presence of God. The author encourages readers to come into God's presence with these characteristics:

True hearts. We come not halfheartedly or with improper motives or pretense, but with pure, undivided, and sincere worship.

Fully trusting him. Christians can approach God boldly, free from guilt because of the work of Jesus Christ. We can go to God without doubting, trusting that he will hear and answer us.

Evil consciences . . . sprinkled with Christ's blood to make us clean. This is sacrificial language. Under the new covenant, hearts and consciences are cleansed (see 9:14). This differed from the old covenant in that it completely cleansed the conscience, not partially or temporarily.

Our bodies . . . washed with pure water. The imagery of an external action actually pictures an inward cleansing. Just as baptism is an outward sign that represents the purification that Christ does inside us, so this washing speaks of an internal cleansing from sin. Once cleansed, Christians can approach God.

10:23 The readers were encouraged to hold tightly to the hope, referring both to what they believe about God and what they say to others. When they were converted and baptized, early Christians confessed what they believed about Christ. Here they were told to hold on to what they had previously claimed without wavering. Christians had good reason to hold on to their confession: God can be trusted to keep his promise. God made the promise; because God is faithful, we know that what he promised will come to pass.

10:24-25 This word encourage means to "stimulate strongly," "arouse," or “incite to riot.” Christians need to spur or stimulate each other in two areas: (1) Love—not an emotion but a choice to act regardless of our feelings. We are to act lovingly toward other believers. (2) Good deeds—works done for the good of others.

Believers also must not neglect meeting together. Some Christians (then as well as today) were not going to the church meetings. For whatever reason, these believers were trying to survive on their own. To withdraw from corporate strength is to invite disaster, like a soldier in battle who lags behind the rest of his platoon and becomes an easy target.

Finally, believers must encourage and warn each other. These words reveal that Christians are responsible for each other. Christians cannot be concerned just for their own spiritual well-being; they must also encourage others to keep fervent in their love and active in their service to God. This encouragement should happen especially now that the day of his coming back again is drawing near. This “day” (Christ’s return) is guaranteed; Christ will return. Through the centuries, many Christians have been discouraged because they believed that Christ should have already returned. But Christ has not forgotten, and he has not changed his plans. Christians must live as if the Lord will come back at any moment. Christ must not find us lax in our devotion and preparation.

10:26 This is the second great warning against apostasy (see the first one in 6:4-6). For those who have received a full knowledge of the truth of the gospel and yet reject Christ, the consequences are severe. For those who learn the truth and then deliberately continue sinning, there is no other sacrifice that will cover these sins. When people deliberately reject Christ’s offer of salvation, they reject God’s most precious gift. They have rejected the only sacrifice that could have saved them.

This warning was given to Jewish Christians who were tempted to reject Christ for Judaism. It applies, however, to anyone who turns away from Christ to another religion or, having understood Christ’s atoning work, deliberately turns away from it (Mark 3:28-30). Under the old covenant, the Jews had this threat of punishment if they rejected God’s way (see also Numbers 15:30-31). There is no other acceptable sacrifice for sin than the death of Christ on the cross. If, after understanding the gospel message, someone deliberately rejects the sacrifice of Christ, that person cannot be saved because God has not provided any other name under heaven for salvation (see Acts 4:12).

10:27 For those who have rejected Christ, the only future they can look forward to is God’s judgment, namely the raging fire that will consume his enemies.

The book of Hebrews is filled with the message of the hope that Christians have. They can look forward to their guaranteed salvation. Those who do not follow Christ, however, also have a guarantee. They will face God's wrath as experienced in the "raging fire" of hell. God promises eternal punishment for those who reject him (see Isaiah 26:11; Revelation 20:11-15).

10:28 Under the old covenant, anyone who refused to obey the law of Moses was punished by death. All it took was the testimony of two or three witnesses. This meant the person had rejected the authority of the Mosaic law; this was as serious as the sin of idolatry. There were sacrifices available for sins that were unintentional, but if someone willfully rejected God's covenant and followed after another god, there was no mercy and no sacrifice (Deuteronomy 17:2-7). If God required physical death for breaking the old covenant, the new covenant's punishment would be much greater (10:29).

10:29 Those who reject Christ and deliberately continue to sin (10:26) will receive a terrible punishment, worse than those who refused to follow the old covenant. Those who treated the old covenant in this way received physical death (10:28). Those who treat the new covenant (and Christ) with contempt, however, will receive something far worse than physical death. Because the blessings under the new covenant are greater, there awaits even greater punishment for those who scorn it. The book of Hebrews issues a strong warning and gives three specific indictments against these people.

1. They have trampled on the Son of God. To refuse to accept the sacrifice of his life on our behalf is to show contempt and disdain for Christ. The word for "trample underfoot" is vivid and conveys strong antagonism.
2. They have treated the blood of the covenant as if it were common and unholy (or "defiled"). The blood of the covenant refers to Christ's blood and thus to his death. The importance of the blood has been established in previous verses (7:22; 9:15-18; 10:12-18). Since blood ratified the covenant, to reject the consecrated blood of Christ was the ultimate rejection.
3. They have insulted and enraged the Holy Spirit who brings God's mercy to his people. The sacrifice of Christ is tied with the Holy Spirit; therefore, to scorn Christ's sacrifice is to insult and enrage the Holy Spirit (see 9:14). This is equivalent to blasphemy against the Holy Spirit (see Matthew 12:31-32).

10:30-31 The terrible punishment (10:29) will come from the hands of God. Two lines quoted from Moses' farewell song in Deuteronomy 32 emphasize this truth. In this song, Moses warned the people against apostasy and unbelief. God's judgment will come and will be severe: "I will take vengeance. I will repay." God, the Sovereign of the universe, has the right to punish those who disobey him. God's holiness and perfect justice demand that he punish those who sin. Only God is allowed to avenge, for he alone is perfect, and he has been wronged by those who reject him. To those who heard the gospel and then treated it with contempt, God says, "The Lord will judge." They will be judged because they have rejected God's mercy.

These quotations show that it is a terrible thing to fall into the hands of the living God. God's power is awesome, and his punishment terrible. These words give us a glimpse into the awesome holiness of God. He is sovereign; his power is unlimited; he will do as he promises. Those who reject the covenant will be punished. For them, falling into God's hands will be a dreadful experience. They will have no more excuses. They will discover that they were wrong, but it will be too late.

10:32-34 After a harsh warning, the readers are encouraged that their past actions demonstrate their genuine faith. Remembering their past faithfulness should encourage them to persevere in their faith. Like many Christians, these people had a deep love when they first learned about Christ. The memory of that closeness and their deep desire to serve him would encourage them during difficult days.

During those early days, these believers had remained faithful even though it meant terrible suffering. They had been exposed to public ridicule and beaten. During those difficult times of persecution, they had encouraged each other, helping each other remain firm by helping fellow believers who were suffering the same things. Apparently the recipients of this letter had risked their own reputation and public standing as they suffered along with those who were thrown into jail.

In addition, when their goods were taken from them, they accepted it with joy. The text does not say whether this action was from the local government or from angry neighbors. Either way, the writer points to the good attitude that the people maintained. At that time, they were able to endure because they knew better things were waiting for them in eternity. The word "better" means superior in quality and reality. The believers trusted in God's promises of future tremendous rewards.

10:35-36 These hardships would not cease for the believers, so they would need to continue to have patient endurance. The writer implores, Do not throw away this confident trust in the Lord; that is, do not abandon your faith in times of persecution, but show by your endurance that your faith is genuine and sincere, and that you will continue to do God's will. Such faith means resting in what Christ has done in the past, but it also means trusting him for what he will do in the present and in the future (see Romans 8:12-25; Galatians 3:10-13). Doing so will bring great reward—joy today and heavenly possessions in the future—the greatest of which is eternal life.

10:37-38 One of the promises that believers will receive (10:36) is the return of the Christ. Through this quote of Habakkuk 2:3-4, readers are reminded that the day is drawing near (see also 10:25). This second coming of Christ and all the blessings that come with him outweigh any discomfort faced by believers in this life. Those who remain faithful to God are the righteous who will live by faith. These people will persevere to the end. However, those who turn away forfeit the heavenly blessing because they prove that they do not belong to God's household. People who defect from the Christian faith when persecution comes will be forfeiting the ultimate goal of salvation—living forever with Christ.

When the prophet Habakkuk penned these prophetic words, evil and injustice seemed to have the upper hand in Israel. Like Habakkuk, Christians often feel angry and discouraged as they see what goes on in the world. Habakkuk complained vigorously to God about the situation. God's answer to Habakkuk is the same answer he would give us: "Be patient! I will work out my plans in my perfect timing." The Coming One (Christ) will come and not delay.

10:39 The writer knew that these readers were not like those who turn their backs on God and seal their fate. Such people are hard-hearted and stubborn, rejecting Christ as Savior (10:29). Instead, the readers had faith that assures their salvation. This vote of confidence readies the believers to learn from the examples of faith and perseverance that will be cited in the next chapter. Living by faith is far better than merely fulfilling rituals and rules. The examples of faith in chapter 11 can challenge us to grow in faith and to live in obedience to God each day.

HEBREWS 11

GREAT EXAMPLES OF FAITH / 11:1-40

Chapter 11 serves as a parenthesis; 12:1 resumes the theme of the last part of chapter 10. The words of 10:39 regarding those who believe lead to the description of the faith that causes Christians to hold on and not lose hope in the face of persecution and trials.

11:1 In this wonderful and well-known chapter, faith is explained as the confident assurance that what we hope for is going to happen. Faith starts with believing in God's character, that he is who he says he is. Faith culminates with believing in God's promises, that he will do what he says he will do. We often think of the word hope in terms of uncertain desire—"I hope it doesn't rain on Saturday." For believers, however, "hope" is a desire based on assurance, and the assurance is based on God's character.

Faith is the evidence of things we cannot yet see, meaning we have complete confidence that God will fulfill his promises, even though we don't yet see any evidence. These include eternal life, future rewards, heaven, and so forth. Faith regards these to be as real as what can be perceived with the senses. This conviction about God's unseen promises allows Christians to persevere in their faith regardless of persecution, opposition, and temptation.

11:2 People with faith please God very much. But faith is not something we must do in order to earn salvation. If that were true, then faith would be just one more deed, and human deeds can never save us (Galatians 2:16). Instead, faith is a gift God gives us because he is saving us (Ephesians 2:8).

Even in days of old (Old Testament times), grace, not deeds, was the basis of salvation. This is why the book of Hebrews says, "It is not possible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sins" (10:4). God intended for his people to look beyond the animal sacrifices to him, but too often they instead put their confidence in fulfilling the requirements of the law. When Jesus triumphed over death, he canceled the charges against believers and opened the way to the Father (Colossians 2:12-15). Because God is merciful, he gives us faith. It would be tragic to turn faith into a deed and try to develop it on our own!

When believers have faith, that is, when they have confidence in God, they receive God's approval. The rest of the chapter presents examples of men and women who received God's approval because of their faith.

11:3 Here is an illustration of faith. Faith allows us to understand that the entire universe was formed at God's command. God created the world from nothing by his creative word alone. Believing this fact requires spiritual perception—that we receive only by faith. This passage reminds us that all of creation was new, not made from preexistent materials. The visible world did not come from anything that can be seen. God called the universe into existence out of nothing; he declared that it was to be, and it was (see Genesis 1). We understand this by faith, not because we saw it happen but because we understand from what we read in Scripture and from our relationship with the loving Father that the world was created with a purpose and that we are part of that purpose.

The Jewish believers reading this letter were in danger of returning to Judaism. Many may have desired to turn back because the “visual” nature of the rituals and sacrifices made their faith seem more real. Christianity, however, was based on so many invisible realities that many Jewish Christians may have begun to doubt its reality. Hebrews shows that Christianity’s “unseen truths” are more real and more certain than what can be seen.

11:4 Cain and Abel were Adam and Eve’s first two sons (see Genesis 4:2-5). Cain, a farmer, brought an offering to God from the ground. Abel, a shepherd, brought firstborn sheep. Abel’s sacrifice (an animal substitute) was a more acceptable offering and God accepted it. Therefore, Abel was commended as a righteous man (see Matthew 23:35). Because of Abel’s faith, he still speaks by his example.

11:5 Enoch is the next example of faith (see Genesis 5:20-24). Enoch was approved as pleasing to God, and as a result, was taken up to heaven without dying. This passage states that God took him away from earthly life to heavenly life. Enoch is one of two Old Testament characters who never died (the other being Elijah, 2 Kings 2:11-12). God chose to take Enoch without dying because Enoch lived by faith. He was a righteous man who was commended as one who pleased God.

11:6 God gave his approval to these Old Testament people because of their faith (11:2). In fact, it is impossible to please God without faith. This would have functioned as a warning to those Hebrew Christians whose faith was wavering. No one (not Abel, Enoch, or anyone else) can please God without faith. It is an absolute requirement. All the rituals mean nothing without faith.

To come to God has two presuppositions here: (1) The person must believe that there is a God and then (2) believe that God rewards those who sincerely seek him. Believing that God exists is only the beginning; even the demons believe in God's existence (James 2:19-20). God will not settle for mere acknowledgment of his existence. He wants a personal, dynamic relationship with you that will transform your life.

11:7 Old Testament examples of faith continue with Noah who, by faith, believed God's warnings of something that had never happened before (Genesis 6–9). Noah had faith, and so built an ark. Noah's faith condemned the rest of the world because it illustrated what the people lacked. Those without faith faced God's judgment; those with faith were saved. Noah is the first person in the Bible to be called "righteous"—made right in God's sight (see Genesis 6:9). To say that Noah was righteous and blameless does not mean that he never sinned. Rather, it means that he wholeheartedly loved and obeyed God. For a lifetime, Noah walked step-by-step in faith as a living example to his generation and future generations (see also Matthew 24:37-39; Luke 17:26-27; 1 Peter 3:20; 2 Peter 2:5). The early believers could learn this lesson from Noah: requiring no physical evidence of what was coming, he simply trusted God and obeyed.

11:8 Abraham is the next Old Testament example of faith. Genesis records his faith in Genesis 15:6, and Hebrews has already mentioned his faith in 6:13-15. Two other notable New Testament passages speak of Abraham: Paul used Abraham as an example of justification by faith (Romans 4); James used Abraham as an example of faith that results in works (James 2:20-24). Hebrews explains that it was by faith that Abraham obeyed, and it describes three actions resulting from Abraham's faith: (1) he moved to a new home (11:8); (2) he became a father in his old age (11:11); (3) he was willing to obey God's command to sacrifice his only son (11:17). Abraham demonstrated his faith through his actions. His faith made him right with God.

Abraham's faith is first seen in his obedience to leave home and go to another land that God would give him as his inheritance. Abraham left on the basis of God's promise, without knowing where he was going (see Genesis 12:1-9). Abraham trusted in God's promises of even greater blessings in the future. Abraham's life was filled with faith.

Believers can take heart from Abraham's example of faith. God may ask us to give up secure, familiar surroundings in order to carry out his will; he may ask us to do some difficult tasks. But we can be sure that the outcome always will be for our best, drawing us closer to him.

11:9 Abraham lived by faith throughout the rest of his life, continuing to trust God as he lived in the land God promised him. This land was to be his “as his inheritance” (11:8), yet Abraham never possessed the land. Instead, he lived in “his” land like a foreigner, living in a tent. He didn’t build cities and take over the land, and neither did his son and grandson, Isaac and Jacob. That job would be left to their descendants, hundreds of years later. But Abraham believed God’s promise that eventually the whole country would belong to him and his descendants (Acts 7:5). Yet even all that time, they understood that the land was not their final destination. Their real home was in heaven. Isaac and Jacob, to whom God gave the same promise, also remembered that promise and lived by faith.

11:10 Abraham lived by faith (11:9) because he was confidently looking forward to a city . . . designed and built by God. The verb “looking forward” connotes intensely looking forward to and waiting for that city. This was not an earthly city, but a city with eternal foundations. This contrasts with the tents in which Abraham lived. This city, though as yet unseen, stretches to eternity; thus, it is permanent and secure. Having God as builder means that everything will be perfect. As Abraham was confident, so can we be.

11:11 It took faith for both Abraham and Sarah to trust in God’s divine intervention in their physical bodies that were both too old to produce children. In addition, Sarah was barren (unable to have children) in her childbearing years. God promised Abraham a son, but Sarah at first doubted that she could become pregnant in her old age. Abraham was one hundred and Sarah was ninety when Isaac was conceived (Genesis 17:1, 15-16; 21:1-7). But Abraham believed that God would keep his promise. The faithfulness of God picks up the theme from 10:23.

Promises from God (no matter how unlikely or even impossible they may seem as we look around at our circumstances) can be trusted because we can trust God’s character. God cannot lie, and he will not make a promise that he does not intend to keep.

11:12 Abraham and Sarah became parents because of their faith. It didn’t matter to them that they seemed to be too old to have any children. Because they believed God, he rewarded their faith with a child whose descendants became a nation with so many people that, like the stars of the sky and the sand on the seashore, there is no way to count them. This had been part of God’s covenant with Abraham (Genesis 22:17 ; see also Genesis 12:2; 15:5). The contrast is being made between Abraham (one man) and his countless descendants (the Jews, and eventually all Christians), all because of that one man's faith. God had indeed been faithful to his promise.

11:13 All these faithful ones so far described died without receiving what God had promised them—the promise of the new, eternal city (see 11:10). But these heroes saw and welcomed the promise even though it was, as it were, from a distance. These people of faith died without receiving all that God had promised, but they never lost their vision of heaven (11:16). Their future hope was not for this earth. Thus they agreed that they were no more than foreigners and nomads here on earth. Their “agreement” was not passive receptivity, but an active declaration and pronouncement because of their faith in God.

11:14-16 The world to come will be better than this present world. These people were foreigners and nomads, but they were not seeking to return to their old homeland on earth. Instead, they were looking for a better place, a heavenly homeland, the country of their own that they saw in the distance (11:13). As they served God and walked with him in this land, they knew that this world was not their home, and they looked forward to that better place. Because of these people's faith, God is not ashamed to be called their God (see also Exodus 3:6), and he has prepared a heavenly city for them (see John 14:2ff).

11:17-18 Abraham trusted God's promises so much that when God commanded him to offer Isaac (his only son) as a sacrifice, Abraham obeyed. Abraham passed that test because he was willing to do as God asked. When God promised that many descendants would be born through Isaac, Abraham believed. But at God's command, Abraham brought Isaac to the altar, tied him up, placed him on the altar, and was about to sacrifice him, but God intervened at the last minute, sparing Isaac (Genesis 22:1-19). Although he didn't understand God's command, his obedience was prompt and complete.

11:19 Abraham had believed God's promise to bring a great nation out of Isaac; so Abraham assumed that if Isaac died, God was able to bring him back to life again. Abraham even had told his servant that the boy would come back alive (see Genesis 22:5). As a result of Abraham's faith, he figuratively received his son back from the dead. When Isaac was on the altar, he was as good as dead, but God spared him and restored him to Abraham.

11:20 Other patriarchs are discussed in 11:20-22. It was by faith that Isaac blessed his two sons, Jacob and Esau. God chose the younger son, Jacob, to continue the fulfillment of his promise to Abraham (see Genesis 25–36 for the story of Esau; Jacob’s story continues to the end of Genesis). The ancient story of deception, greed, birthright, and blessing is of no concern here. Verses 20-21 focus on the “blessing” conferred by aged fathers on their sons. Because of deception, Isaac blessed Jacob (the younger son) instead of Esau, but this would have occurred anyway, for that was God’s plan. Esau also received a blessing. The point is that Isaac had confidence in what God was going to do in the future.

11:21 Isaac had blessed Jacob and Esau; Jacob’s sons had become the fathers of Israel’s twelve tribes. Jacob, when he was old and dying, believed the promise to Abraham and blessed all of his sons, but also two of his grandsons—each of Joseph’s sons (Genesis 48:1-22). As noted in Isaac’s case, Jacob blessed “out of order”; that is, he blessed the younger son over the older, by faith, realizing that it was God’s plan. This blessing was directed by God.

11:22 Joseph, one of Jacob’s sons, was sold into slavery by his jealous brothers (Genesis 37). Eventually, Joseph was sold again—this time to an official of the pharaoh of Egypt. Because of Joseph’s faithfulness to God, he was promoted to a top-ranking position in Egypt. Although Joseph could have used that position to build a personal empire, he remembered God’s promise to Abraham. After he had been reconciled to his brothers, Joseph brought his family to be near him. Joseph believed God’s promise that the people of Israel would leave Egypt and return to Canaan. He was so sure of it that he commanded them to carry his bones with them when they left, so that he could be buried in the Promised Land (Genesis 50:24-25; Exodus 13:19; Joshua 24:32). Like Isaac, Joseph gave these instructions when he was about to die. Even on his deathbed, Joseph persevered in his faith, looking forward to the promises God had made.

11:23 Moses’ parents are listed among these great people of faith. Through their faith they recognized that God’s hand was on Moses and that he was an unusual child (see Exodus 2; 12; 14). Moses’ parents disobeyed the king by faith, not being afraid of what the king might do to them if he discovered that they had been hiding their child for three months. Pharaoh had commanded that all male children born to the Hebrew slaves were to be killed. God used these parents’ courageous act to place their son, the Hebrew of his choice, in the house of Pharaoh.

11:24-25 Moses' great faith was also revealed through his difficult decision. Through God's providence, Moses was raised by Pharaoh's daughter as a member of Pharaoh's own household (Exodus 1-2)! Although Moses had been given a great Egyptian education, wealth, and status, he rejected this heritage and chose to share the oppression of God's people instead of enjoying the fleeting pleasures of sin. Moses knew he could not participate in a comfortable and easy life while his fellow Hebrews were enslaved. Because of his faith, Moses knew that earthly comfort was not the ultimate purpose of his life.

11:26-27 Moses' great secret was that he looked ahead to the fulfillment of God's promises. Moses illustrates that faith requires individuals to put their own desires aside for the sake of Christ. He was motivated by looking ahead to the great reward that God would give him. Since this reward would come from his Lord, Moses was willing to suffer for the sake of the Messiah. Although Moses did not personally know Jesus Christ, Moses suffered for the sake of doing God's will and for the sake of proclaiming God's way of redemption to the Hebrews; thus, this passage speaks of Moses' suffering for the sake of the Messiah. Because God's history of salvation and redemption continued until Christ, Moses' suffering is linked to the cause of Christ. Rather than make Egypt and this world his home, Moses left the land of Egypt and kept right on going because he kept his eyes on the one who is invisible. By faith, he was certain of what he could not see (11:1).

11:28 Moses' faith encouraged him to be God's spokesman to the Hebrews. Through this faith, Moses commanded the people of Israel to keep the Passover. This incident occurred as the last of a series of plagues that devastated Egypt. The Hebrews followed God's instructions, given through Moses, to sprinkle blood on the doorposts so that the angel of death would not kill their firstborn sons. The "blood" was from a lamb slain as part of the Passover meal. That night the firstborn son of every family who did not have blood on the doorposts was killed. The lamb had to be killed in order to get the blood that would protect them. (This foreshadowed the blood of Christ, the Lamb of God, who gave his blood for the sins of all people.)

11:29 The people of Israel leaving Egypt provide the next example of faith. It was by faith that they went right through the Red Sea as though they were on dry ground. The sight of the Red Sea parting and the requirement to walk into the seabed between walls of water must have been terrifying. But through Moses' leadership and their own faith, the people of Israel walked ahead and were delivered from Egypt.

As the people of Israel took the path through the Red Sea, the Egyptians followed, but not in faith. As a result, all the soldiers in the army drowned (see Exodus 14:5-31). This example of the Egyptians would be a warning to those who considered drifting from Christ. God severely punishes those who do not live by faith in him. Those who walk in faith, even into “seas” of difficulty or fear, will find their faith rewarded.

11:30 The wilderness wandering of the Israelites is skipped because it did not demonstrate the faith of the Israelites. In fact, Hebrews 3–4 points out that the people did not exercise faith during this time and therefore received God’s punishment.

After the wandering, however, the people exercised faith and obeyed God when they marched around Jericho seven days, and the walls came crashing down. The command to march around the city for seven days must have seemed ridiculous (see Joshua 6), but the people believed God and followed his instructions. Their faith encouraged them to obey God. When they obeyed God, they won their first victory.

11:31 When Joshua planned the conquest of Jericho, he sent spies to investigate the fortifications of the city. The spies met Rahab, who hid them. Rahab is an odd entry in this “hall of faith” because she was a Gentile and a prostitute (read the story in Joshua 2 and 6). But she demonstrated her faith in God by welcoming the spies and by trusting God to spare her and her family when the city was destroyed (Joshua 2:9, 11). Rahab’s faith was rewarded: she and her family were saved. Even more important, she became an ancestor of Jesus. We read her name in Matthew 1:5—she was the mother of Boaz. Rahab’s faith, despite her past sins, is contrasted with those who refused to turn to God and obey him.

11:32-35 The roll call of heroes continues. The Old Testament records the lives of many people who experienced great victories; a few are selected for mention here. None of these people were perfect; in fact, many of their sins are recorded in the Old Testament. But these were among those who believed in God:

- Gideon, one of Israel’s judges, was known for conquering the Midianite army with only three hundred men who were armed with trumpets and jars (Judges 6:11–8:35).
- Barak served with Deborah (another judge of Israel) in conquering the army of General Sisera from Hazor (Judges 4:4-23).

- Samson, another judge, was a mighty warrior against God's enemies, the Philistines (Judges 13–16).
- Jephthah, still another judge, delivered Israel from the Ammonites (Judges 11:1-33).
- David, the beloved king of Israel and a great warrior, brought peace to Israel, defeating all of his enemies.
- Samuel, the last judge of Israel, was a very wise leader. He also was a prophet. Samuel, along with all the prophets, served God selflessly as they conveyed God's words to an often rebellious people.

These people demonstrated that faith will accomplish much:

- They overthrew kingdoms. Throughout their years in the Promised Land, the Israelites had great leaders who brought victory against their enemies. People such as Joshua, all of the judges, and King David were great warriors.
- They ruled with justice. Many of the judges, as well as leaders such as Nehemiah, administered justice to the people.
- They received what God had promised. Some people actually did see the fulfillment of some of God's promises, such as possession of the Promised Land.
- They shut the mouths of lions. Daniel was saved from the mouths of lions (Daniel 6). This statement could also refer to Samson (Judges 14:6) or to David (1 Samuel 17:34-35).
- They quenched the flames. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were kept from harm in the furious flames of a fiery furnace (Daniel 3).
- They escaped death by the edge of the sword. Elijah (1 Kings 19:2-8) and Jeremiah (Jeremiah 36:19, 26) had this experience.
- Their weakness was turned to strength. Hezekiah was one who regained strength after sickness (2 Kings 20).
- They became strong in battle and put whole armies to flight. This refers to Joshua, many of Israel's judges, King Saul, and King David.
- Some even received their loved ones back again from death. The widow from Zarephath received her son back from the dead because of Elijah (1 Kings 17:17-24), and so did the Shunammite woman, through Elisha (2 Kings 4:8-37).

We, too, can experience victory through faith in Christ. We may have experiences similar to those of the Old Testament saints; more likely, however, our victories will be directly related to the role God wants us to play. Your life may not include the kinds of dramatic events recorded here, but it surely includes moments where faith is tested. Give testimony to those moments, publicly and honestly, and thereby encourage the faith of others.

While the above examples mention great victory—there is a victory that may not seem so. Other believers were tortured, preferring to die rather than turn from God. These faithful people experienced the blessings and endured persecution because they placed their hope in the resurrection. These people lived by faith because they knew that gaining the world and achieving this world's success was not their objective. They waited for a better life that would begin after death. This promise of a better life encouraged them during persecution and other difficulties.

11:36-38 These descriptions could apply to many people who lived by faith—including some who were part of the community of the original readers of this epistle. Many Christians were persecuted and punished for their faith. They were:

- mocked—like Elisha (2 Kings 2:23-25), Nehemiah (Nehemiah 2:19; 4:1), and Jeremiah (Jeremiah 18:12).
- cut open with whips—like Jeremiah (Jeremiah 37:15).
- chained in dungeons—like Joseph (Genesis 40:15), Samson (Judges 16:21), Micaiah (1 Kings 22:26-27), Hanani (1 Chronicles 16:10), and Jeremiah (Jeremiah 37:16; 38:6).
- killed by stoning—like Zechariah (1 Chronicles 24:20-21); according to Jerome, Jeremiah was stoned at the hands of Jewish Egyptians because he denounced their idolatry.
- killed by being sawed in half—like Isaiah, presumably. Although we do not know for sure, tradition (from the apocryphal book, The Ascension of Isaiah, chapters 1-5) says that the prophet Isaiah was sawed in half at the command of King Manasseh because Isaiah had predicted the destruction of the temple. Isaiah had at first escaped and hid in the trunk of a tree while in the hill country. Manasseh supposedly had the tree sawed in half with Isaiah in it.
- killed with the sword—although some prophets did escape death by the sword, others did not (see 1 Kings 19:10).

Many of God's followers who lived before Christ and many who have lived after Christ have been persecuted. Their clothing was the skins of sheep and goats. Many faced being hungry, oppressed, and mistreated. Some had to wander and hide in the wilderness. Despite their difficult lot, the writer of Hebrews claims that they were too good for this world. These people were great men and women of faith.

11:39 All of the above people mentioned by name and those alluded to received God's approval because of their faith. These people looked forward to a better day and salvation, but none of them received all that God had promised. Of course, they saw some of God's promises fulfilled, but not the promises that referred to the new covenant and the promised eternal Kingdom. These people did not live to see the Kingdom arrive, but their future citizenship was secure there. Thus, they were able to endure suffering.

Hebrews 11 has been called faith's "hall of fame." No doubt the author surprised his readers by this conclusion: these mighty Jewish heroes did not receive God's full reward because they died before Christ came. In God's plan, they and the Christian believers (who were also enduring much testing) would be rewarded together.

11:40 The far better things that God has in mind refers to the new covenant. The forefathers did not receive this; rather, it is experienced by those who live after the death and resurrection of Christ, for he is the one who introduced the new covenant and the new promises (see commentary on 1:2).

There is a solidarity among believers (see 12:23). Old and New Testament believers will receive the prize together. Not only are we one in the body of Christ with all those alive, but we are also one with all those who ever lived. One day all believers will share in the promised blessing with Christ. We will then be complete and perfect in him.

HEBREWS 12

GOD'S DISCIPLINE PROVES HIS LOVE / 12:1-13

The book of Hebrews has, up until 10:19, described the superiority of Jesus Christ and of the new covenant. Hebrews 10:19 through 13:20 describes the church's responsibility in light of Christ's superiority. In chapter 11, faithful people from Jewish history are held up as examples of patient perseverance as they awaited the promises of God.

Chapter 12 contains clues regarding the situation of the believers to whom this letter was written. They have been encouraged not to drift away (2:1), but in this chapter we perceive a community weary of persecution, struggling to stay strong in an increasingly hostile environment, but weakening perhaps to the point of giving up and turning away from their faith.

12:1 The faithful believers throughout the centuries (chapter 11) now stand as a huge crowd of witnesses to the life of faith. They do not “witness” as if they were merely spectators, looking down from heaven and watching believers' lives; instead, they witness through the historical record of their faithfulness that constantly encourages those who follow them. These great believers' lives, examples, and faithfulness in God, without seeing his promises, speak to all believers of the rewards of staying in “the race.” This metaphor is of a marathon, a test of stamina and commitment, an apt description of the lives of these suffering believers.

The first step of preparation to run the race requires that the racers strip off every weight that might slow them down. Christians must be “spiritually trim” and able to run the race unencumbered (see 1 Corinthians 9:25; 2 Timothy 2:3-4). Many “weights” may not be necessarily sinful acts, but could be things that hold us back, such as use of time, some forms of entertainment, or certain relationships. But it is especially important to strip off the sin that so easily hinders our progress. Sins such as greed, pride, arrogance, lust, gossip, dishonesty, and stealing can cause believers to drift off spiritual course. Then they must run with endurance the race that God has set before them. They do not select the course; God marks it out.

12:2 Jesus, our example, perfectly finished his race. Because he stands at the finished line, Christians should keep their eyes on him, looking away from other distractions or options. It is upon him that our faith depends from start to finish. Jesus is the first who obeyed God perfectly and thus began the new covenant (see also 2:10). He set the course of faith, ran the race first (6:20), and now waits for us to join him at the end, encouraging us all the way. He is also the one who brings us to our intended goal because he was made the perfect High Priest through suffering and obedience (see 2:10, 5:8). He was willing to die a shameful death on the cross. Yet Jesus endured all this suffering on account of the joy he knew would be his afterward. He kept his eyes focused on the goal of his appointed course, the accomplishment of his priestly work, and his seat beside God's throne in heaven. Knowing that a great reward was coming for God's people gave Jesus great joy. He did not look at his earthly discomforts, but he kept his eyes on the spiritual, invisible realities. Like Christ, we should persevere in times of suffering, looking to Christ as our model and concentrating on our heavenly destination.

12:3 When these believers were tempted to focus on their trials, even to the point of considering renouncing their faith, Hebrews encouraged them to think about all he endured when sinful people did such terrible things to him. Christ was ridiculed, whipped, beaten, spit upon, and crucified. Even so, he did not give in to fatigue, discouragement, or despair.

By focusing on Christ and what he did on our behalf, we won't become weary and give up. Trials can cause us to become discouraged and even to despair. Facing hardship and discouragement, we must not lose sight of the big picture. We are not alone; Jesus stands with us. Many have endured far more difficult circumstances than we have experienced. Suffering trains us for Christian maturity, developing our patience and making our final victory sweet.

12:4 Here we find a clue about the present situation of the readers in that the writer mentions their struggle against sin. This "struggle" refers not to personal struggles against temptation, but rather to their struggle against sinful people. Just as Christ struggled against sinful people (12:3), so Christians struggle against opposition from hostile nonbelievers and sometimes even from fellow believers. During their struggle, the Jewish Christians had not yet given their lives. These readers were facing difficult times of persecution, but none of them had yet died for their faith. As difficult as these times were, they did not compare with the difficulties that Christ faced.

12:5-6 Difficult times may come as a result of God's discipline. In fact, discipline is so important that the writer explains it as the normal experience of believers. The believers should have remembered the words of Proverbs 3:11-12, which say, My child, don't ignore it when the Lord disciplines you, and don't be discouraged when he corrects you. For the Lord disciplines those he loves, and he punishes those he accepts as his children. He cares about us enough to help us mature. Like a loving father, he wants us to stay away from what would hurt us and to move along the path toward maturity. Sometimes that involves discipline.

12:7-8 Because God promises to discipline his children, believers must endure this divine discipline. The only other choice would be to refuse to endure it, to pout, to grow depressed, or to give up completely. How much better to remember that, when God disciplines you, he is treating you as his own children. Christians will experience God's discipline. Those who are not disciplined are illegitimate and are not really his children after all. Under Roman law, illegitimate children also did not receive any inheritance or recognition that came with being a genuine child. When we experience God's discipline, we can be encouraged that we really are God's children.

12:9 The analogy between human fathers and the heavenly Father figures often in Jesus' teachings (see Matthew 7:9-11; 21:28-31; Luke 15:11-32). Here earthly fathers are compared to our heavenly Father. Verses 7-8 describe the value of discipline and assert that all of God's children will endure discipline; verses 9-10 teach the parallel between God's discipline and earthly parental discipline. All people (or at least the vast majority) had human fathers who disciplined them. Rarely did that discipline occur out of cruelty; instead, loving fathers would discipline with the children's best interests in mind. As a result, they have our respect.

If we respected the discipline of our earthly parents, should we not all the more cheerfully submit to the discipline of our Father in heaven? Submission to God's discipline means not trying to wriggle out of it by making excuses or hardening our hearts; instead, it means allowing the discipline to drive us to our knees before God so that he can teach us the lessons he has for us. When we have this attitude toward God's discipline, we will live forever—referring to our ability to truly enjoy this life and to look forward to eternity with God.

12:10 Earthly fathers are imperfect. Sometimes they discipline when they shouldn't or in the wrong way, and sometimes they fail to discipline when they should. But most of them did the best they knew how for the few years during which they had responsibility for us. Their effort reminds us of the perfection of God's discipline—it is always right and good for us (Romans 8:28-29;

1 Corinthians 10:13).

God's discipline also means that we will share in his holiness. Discipline may not be enjoyed, but it brings great reward. Sharing in holiness refers to our growth. God's discipline helps Christians become more and more like Christ, mature and complete (see Matthew 5:48; 1 John 3:2).

12:11 While no discipline is enjoyable while it is happening, Christians can respond to it by remembering the end result of the discipline. Certainly discipline is painful; if it weren't, it would have little effect in combating sin or changing us from within. The result of discipline, however, makes the pain worthwhile: a quiet harvest of right living. When discipline cleans up sin in our lives, it moves us on the pathway toward righteousness and holiness. The promised peace refers both to an inward tranquility and contentment (Philippians 4:11-12; James 1:4) in any circumstance (Philippians 4:6-7).

12:12-13 This passage vividly pictures God as a challenging coach who pushes us to our limits, encouraging us beyond what we think we can attain. Tired hands want to stop working. The Christians were at the point of sheer exhaustion; morale was low. Rather than concede defeat, Christians must take a new grip to make the effort and always be ready to endure. Discipline or persecution should not cause Christians to fear; instead, difficult times should encourage them to endure. Rather than dropping in defeat, Christians should stand firm—even when knees are weak and legs are shaky—in their confident expectation of Christ's return (see 10:37).

Most "paths" encountered in nature wind and dip along with the terrain. A straight path, however, has most likely been constructed by someone who took the effort to move the rocks, level out the holes, and even clear away little pebbles that would be hard on one's feet. This picture of making a straight path ties in with the "righteousness" (12:11) that results in the life of a person who has faced discipline and has worked to remove any stumbling blocks that would impede progress. Hard work obviously helps, but it has another benefit for those who follow behind. Some who follow may indeed be weak and lame. We can help them not to stumble and fall by encouraging them and working hard to remove the obstacles that may be in the path.

As said throughout this epistle, Christians have the responsibility to encourage one another and to help those who are weak. If the original readers were contemplating a return to Jewish practices, their example would prove discouraging to new Christians. Instead of running in a straight, clear path, they would be adding hindrances and obstacles to the already difficult trip. Believers must not live with only survival in mind—others will follow their example.

A CALL TO LISTEN TO GOD / 12:14-29

Believers have been encouraged to endure suffering as part of God's plan for them and to continue to walk with God in holiness and righteousness. They must also carry certain attitudes and responsibilities to people in this world—both fellow believers as well as nonbelievers (some of whom may even be their persecutors).

12:14 First, believers must try to live in peace with everyone. Believers are to have as peaceful relations as possible with their unbelieving neighbors and associates, as well as harmonious relationships within the church. Certainly they should not be the cause of dissension. Christian fellowship should be characterized by peace and building up one another (see 1 Thessalonians 5:11).

In addition to seeking peace, believers must also seek to live a clean and holy life (see also 12:10). "Holiness" means devoted or consecrated to God's service. In a practical way, our holiness means honoring God in how we treat others—friends, neighbors, spouse, children, even enemies—and in how we run our businesses, finances, etc. Holiness causes the behavior, thoughts, and attitudes of Christians to be different from unbelievers. Our holiness, provided for us by the death and resurrection of Christ, will allow us to see the Lord as he really is, when we go to be with him forever.

12:15 As believers deal with interpersonal relationships in the local church, they should look after each other. By doing so, none . . . will miss out on the special favor of God. The words "special favor" are also translated "grace," here referring to all the benefits that God has bestowed on his children. Believers should encourage each other to appropriate these blessings, for these will help them stand firm. Too often believers "miss out" because they are not aware of God's promises, teachings, or guidance.

The allusion to the bitter root of unbelief comes from the language of Deuteronomy 29:18-19. Moses cautioned that the day the Hebrews chose to turn from God, a root would be planted that would produce poison. If such a person assumes to have God's blessing and then proceeds to disobey, this plants an evil seed that begins to grow out of control, eventually yielding a crop of sorrow and pain. But believers can watch out that this doesn't happen. Christians should not allow people who undermine faith to remain in the church. Their influence may not be noticeable at first, but it will come (see also 2 Peter 2).

12:16-17 Though there is no mention of Esau's immorality in the Old Testament, certain Jews regarded his marriages to Hittite women as being immoral (Genesis 26:34-35; 28:49). Sexual immorality has no place among Christians and should not be tolerated in the church. God forbids sexual sin because he knows its power to destroy us physically and spiritually. No one should underestimate the power of sexual immorality. God wants to protect his people from damaging themselves and others.

Believers are also commanded to see that no one is godless like Esau. Esau did not follow the examples of those who kept their eyes focused on heavenly rewards (see chapter 11). Rather than take interest in his birthright, which had great spiritual value, he traded his birthright as the oldest son for a single meal (see Genesis 25). A birthright was a special honor given to the firstborn son. By trading his birthright, Esau showed complete disregard for the spiritual blessings that would have come his way if he had kept it. Because of this attitude, when he wanted his father's blessing, he was rejected . . . it was too late. Esau's sin was impulsiveness and complete disregard for his spiritual heritage. Just as Esau had little regard for spiritual matters, the church should be on the lookout for people who join the church but have no real concern for spiritual matters.

Those who reject God's way will not be given a second chance when it comes time for others to inherit his spiritual blessing. No amount of pleading before God's throne will change his mind about the fate of those who rejected him while alive on earth.

12:18-21 This again contrasts the old and new covenants by contrasting the earthly Mount Sinai (12:18-21) and the heavenly Mount Zion (12:22-24).

The scene described in this passage comes from Exodus 19. As the Israelites were camped at the foot of Mount Sinai, God was preparing the nation for receiving his Ten Commandments. God commanded that no one, not even an animal, should touch the mountain under penalty of death (Exodus 19:12-13). The fire, darkness, gloom, and whirlwind describe the awesome scene on the mountain, for God himself descended there to speak with Moses (Exodus 19:18-21). A blazing fire engulfed the top half of the mountain; this illustrated the Lord's presence. The loud trumpet blast came from the mountain and caused the people to tremble (Exodus 19:16, 19). They begged God to stop speaking (Exodus 20:18-19). The fear caused the people to beg that Moses be the lone mediator. They thought they would die if God were to speak directly to them (see Deuteronomy 5:25-27).

The old covenant, with its display of God's awesome power, still was not superior to what God had planned in the new covenant. The old covenant caused only fear from the people; they begged that they would not have to approach God themselves. God, in turn, did not allow them to approach him. God has offered something new (12:22). Returning to this old way would be foolish.

12:22 Instead of coming to a threatening mountain of fear and death, you have come to Mount Zion. Mount Zion represents a new community and a new relationship with God, the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem (described in Revelation 3:12; 21:2). Here believers live with God and can worship him without reserve. In this city, thousands of angels in joyful assembly continually worship God. The new Jerusalem is the future dwelling of the people of God. All Christians will have a new citizenship in God's future Kingdom. Everything will be new, pure, and secure.

12:23 Christians do not enter a covenant in which someone like Moses must go up the mountain to meet with God. Rather, we have come to the assembly of God's firstborn children. The assembly means the church or congregation, referring to the gathering of believers who have been called out by God for the special purpose of loving, obeying, and worshipping him. We are no longer separated from the angels, but join them in praising God. All believers are God's firstborn, for all are promised his inheritance (Ephesians 1:11).

As his children, our names are written in heaven, presumably in the Book of Life (Luke 10:20; Philippians 4:3; Revelation 3:5; 13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15; 21:27). Christians are heavenly citizens, officially registered and recorded. Although Christians worship God in spirit now, one day they will take up residence in heaven and worship him face-to-face.

We do not need an intermediary; we have come to God himself. We have free access to God (4:16; 6:19-20; 7:25; 10:19-21). Because our names are written, we have no fear of this God who is the judge of all people. Although Christians will be judged (9:27), we do not need to fear it because Christ has taken our punishment. The judgment believers face will be for receiving rewards based on what we have done in our lives.

We can look forward to a glorious eternity, for we are promised that when we die, we will come to the spirits of the redeemed in heaven who have now been made perfect. Spirits refers to spiritual beings of people (see 12:9) but not angels, for believers have been made perfect by the Savior's death (12:2). This is the day we anticipate, when all believers will have been made complete and will have reached their fulfillment. At death, Christians reach the finish line of their race. At the end is not fear but joy, justice, God's favor, and eternal life in God's heavenly city.

12:24 Believers have also come to Jesus, the one who mediates the new covenant between God and people. The only access to God is through Jesus Christ, who is “the way” (John 14:6). This new covenant far surpasses the old covenant; no person who understood the new covenant could ever intelligently choose to revert to the old way. We come to the sprinkled blood because through it alone can we receive God's gracious forgiveness.

In contrast with Christ's redeeming blood, the blood of Abel is pictured as crying out for vengeance. Abel is referred to here because his sacrifice is the first one mentioned in the Bible and because it provided the impetus for the sacrifice system in the old covenant. Abel's blood cried out for vengeance; Christ's blood speaks a “better word,” calling all people to repentance. Christ's death brought peace and hope. Christ's blood brought the end of the old covenant and sealed the new one.

12:25 If people refuse to follow God's new covenant, they reject his plan. But more than the plan, they reject God himself. To do so is final and tragic, so the writer again warns his readers: See to it that you obey God, the one who is speaking to you. This continues to reflect the awesome picture of Mount Sinai mentioned in 12:18-21. At that time, the people of Israel who refused to listen to Moses did not escape God's punishment. If they did not escape, and Moses was merely an earthly messenger, then how terrible is the danger of eternal punishment to those who reject the One who speaks from heaven.

12:26 When God gave the first covenant, his voice shook the earth (Exodus 19:18). Psalm 68:8 also describes an earthquake accompanying God's revelation at Mount Sinai. God promises that he will once again . . . shake not only the earth but the heavens also (quoting from Haggai 2:6). At the end of the world, God will shake the earth again. This shaking stands for another major cataclysm in the earth to go along with God's revelation to all the nations. This divine judgment will terrify those who have refused to listen to him and who face his judgment. But to those who follow God and are members of the new covenant, this will be a moment of glorious expectation, as we wait for our King to return and set up his eternal Kingdom.

12:27 When God shakes the world again, he will do it for a final time. One day, God will shake this world, and it will come apart completely (Mark 13:31; 2 Peter 3:7). At that time, things on earth will be destroyed—the earth, the universe, animals, people, and everything else that can be seen. Only what belongs to God's Kingdom will be unshakable. These will be left, for they belong to the heavenly city.

Eventually the world will crumble, and only God's Kingdom will last. Those who follow Christ are part of this unshakable Kingdom, and they will withstand the shaking, sifting, and burning. When we feel unsure about the future, we can take confidence from these verses. No matter what happens here, our future is built on a solid foundation that cannot be destroyed. Don't put your confidence in what will be destroyed; instead, build your life on Christ and his unshakable Kingdom. (See Matthew 7:24-27 for the importance of building on a solid foundation.)

12:28 Because this world will one day disappear, faith concentrates on the heavenly promises. The future, unseen world is actually more real than this present one. This one can be shaken and destroyed, but believers are receiving a kingdom that cannot be destroyed. Christians receive it by God's grace, not through their own effort or by any means other than God's kindness. Because we have this kind of kingdom, we should be thankful and worship God with holy fear and awe. When we truly worship God, we do it all the time—not just in a Sunday morning worship service that has a few hymns, an offering, a sermon, and a time of prayer. True worship includes every action of every day. By obeying God, our lives become living sacrifices of worship (see Romans 12:1-2).

12:29 God is worthy of our thanks and worship because he is a consuming fire. This description may be taken from Deuteronomy 4:24. God reigns over and will destroy everything that is temporary. Everything that is imperfect and bound by time will end. Only the new covenant and those who are part of it will survive. There could hardly be a more startling conclusion to this letter for these Jewish Christian readers who were considering turning away from the faith. Failure to listen to God, refusing to accept all that he has done, will bring catastrophe.

HEBREWS 13

CONCLUDING WORDS / 13:1-25

After giving commands to pursue peace and holiness (12:14-29), the book of Hebrews presents three commands that deal with the social life of a Christian (13:1-3). This final chapter presents a series of exhortations regarding believers' social, private, and religious lives. The readers are encouraged to make a final break with Judaism. The changeless Christ remains both our great High Priest and the perfect sacrifice. All people need the salvation available only through the Lord Jesus.

13:1 The first command is: continue to love each other with true Christian love. The early Christians faced persecution and hatred from the world; hopefully, within the church and in the fellowship of believers, they should be able to find love and encouragement. The church ought to be a haven for believers. The command for believers to love one another was not new (see Leviticus 19:18; John 13:34-35). Believers are to love one another based on Jesus' sacrificial love for them. Such love brings people to Christ and will keep believers strong and united in a world hostile to God. Jesus was a living example of God's love, and we are to be living examples of Jesus' love (see also Romans 12:10; 1 Thessalonians 4:9; 1 Peter 1:22; 2 Peter 1:7).

13:2 The second command is to show hospitality to strangers. This kind of hospitality was important because inns of that day were expensive, as well as being centers for pagan practices and criminal activities. This hospitality also helped spread the gospel because traveling missionaries would be able to go to more places and minister to more people if they did not have to stay in inns. These "strangers" to be entertained, however, were not to be people who worked against God's Kingdom; that is, believers were not to welcome false teachers into their homes (2 John 10-11; 3 John 5-9).

A further encouragement to this kind of hospitality comes from the biblical record that, through their hospitality, some have entertained angels without realizing it. This happened to Abraham (Genesis 18:1-14) and Lot (Genesis 19:1-3). That hospitality was given to and received by angels shows the importance of the hospitality Christians ought to give one another. It is better to offer hospitality generously than to miss the chance to entertain angels.

13:3 The third command focuses on those in prison. This instruction was already alluded to in 10:32-34. Believers are to have empathy for prisoners, especially for (but not limited to) Christians imprisoned for their faith. Jesus said that his followers would represent him as they visited people in prison (Matthew 25:36). Others who were mistreated—beaten, robbed, assaulted, humiliated—also needed to be remembered. Believers must suffer with them and share their sorrow (see also 1 Corinthians 12:26; 2 Timothy 1:16).

13:4 In addition to commands for the social life of Christians (13:1-3), Hebrews also includes commands for private lives. Believers had a responsibility to give honor to marriage, and remain faithful to one another in marriage. This would include promises to love continually, to remain faithful in thought, attitude, and action, and to support and provide for each other.

Hebrews presents two specific ways to “remain faithful.” Believers can stay away from immoral behavior and adultery. Immorality and adultery have split marriages for thousands of years. God’s commands against such actions (given for people’s own good) have been in place for just as long (see Exodus 20:14, 17; Job 24:15-24; Proverbs 5:15-23). Christians, however, are to maintain high standards (Matthew 5:27-28). Hebrews makes the point that even if no consequences are seen right away, promiscuous people will incur God’s wrath—God will surely judge them.

13:5 Another command for the believers’ private lives concerned material needs: Stay away from the love of money. This was also commanded by Jesus (Matthew 6:24; Luke 16:13) and Paul (1 Timothy 3:3; 6:10). Materialistic cravings and greed are a great evil because they show dependence on money rather than on Christ. Materialism is the antithesis of chapters 11–12, where a life pursuing heavenly rather than earthly rewards is extolled. Materialism also demonstrates that someone cares more about items they can see than about spiritual promises that they cannot presently see.

The antidote to greed is contentment, so the writer says, be satisfied with what you have. Again, this teaching was given by Jesus (Matthew 6:31-34) and Paul (Philippians 4:11; 1 Timothy 6:6). Our contentment should be in what Christ gives, not in what we can achieve for ourselves. Money cannot save a soul from God’s punishment. Money cannot even bring contentment. Where money fails, God does not. For God has said, “I will never fail you. I will never forsake you.” When faith reminds us that God is in control, we remember that we have all we need.

13:6 Money cannot give security (13:5); only God can truly help us. While we are not guaranteed to have earthly possessions, we are guaranteed that God is our helper. He watches over his people and gives them what they need. Every believer, along with the psalmist (see Psalm 118:6), can say with confidence that the Lord is my helper. It must have been wonderful for these Jewish believers to realize that, when they became believers, the promises in the psalms could still be used as songs of praise!

When we are confident that God is our helper, we need not be afraid. If the king of the universe is on our side, what can mere mortals do? Granted, humans can take our possessions, mistreat us, throw us into prison, or even kill us. Humans cannot hurt our souls or affect our salvation (Matthew 10:28). With God as our helper, we truly have nothing to fear!

13:7 Next follows instructions about the religious life of his readers (see also 13:17, 24). Their religious leaders had provided examples for others to follow. The leaders referred to here were most likely the founding Christians, the elders of the group who first taught them the word of God. Although these leaders had died, their influence remained, as evidenced by the existence of the communities of believers. These leaders had copied Christ's example and the example of the great crowd of witnesses (12:1-2). Because they had trusted the Lord and done good, their lives were worth imitating.

13:8 Though times and leaders change, Jesus Christ does not. Jesus Christ is the same all the time. He served faithfully yesterday (dying on the cross to make atonement for our sins; see 2:17-18). He serves faithfully today (interceding for us at the right hand of God; see 4:14-16; 7:25). He will remain faithful forever. Because of what he has done in the past and what he does in the present, he is sufficient for any need any believer will ever have. (See also 1:12.)

Human leaders have much to teach us, and we can learn much from emulating them (13:7), but we must keep our eyes on Christ, our ultimate leader. Unlike any human leaders, he will never change. Christ has been and will be the same forever. In a changing world we can trust our unchanging Lord.

13:9 Since Christ never changes, neither can the new covenant that he initiated. Be careful not to be attracted by strange, new ideas (see 1 Timothy 4:16; 6:3; Titus 1:9). In order to do that, believers must be familiar with the correct teachings. Christians today have an advantage of having the entire Bible and Bible study tools. When we hear an interesting new doctrine, we should be sure to study it ourselves and become certain it is true.

Many "strange ideas" arose during the days of the early church. One of these concerned ceremonial rules about food. Apparently some false teachers had been teaching these Jewish converts that they still needed to keep the Old Testament ceremonial laws and rituals (such as not eating certain foods). But these laws were useless for conquering a person's evil thoughts and desires (Colossians 2:23). The believers' spiritual strength (referring to their inner selves) comes from God's special favor, not by the foods they did or did not eat. Laws could influence conduct, but they could not change the heart. The ceremonial foods might fulfill a ritual, but they don't help those who follow them. Lasting changes in conduct begin when the Holy Spirit lives in each person. Since God's approval is secured by grace, it was valueless to keep these ceremonial laws.

13:10-12 Returning to similar arguments used throughout the book, Hebrews again compares Christ and the new covenant with the old covenant. Here are further analogies between the Day of Atonement ceremony and Christ's once-for-all sacrifice on the cross (for more on the Day of Atonement, see commentary on chapters 9–10). We read how the high priest brought the blood of animals into the Holy Place as a sacrifice for sin (see 9:7). The new detail included here reminds the readers that the bodies of the animals were burned outside the camp. The priests could eat the meat of the sacrifices that were offered on a daily basis, but not on the Day of Atonement; on that day, the remainders of the slain animals were burned outside the camp.

In a similar way, Jesus suffered and died outside the city gates (see Matthew 21:39; 27:31-33; John 19:20); this refers to Jesus' crucifixion, which occurred outside the city walls. However, Christ's sacrifice could make his people holy by shedding his own blood. Christ's sacrifice was final, once and for all. Those who still were holding on to the old covenant and its trappings (sacrifices, ceremonial foods) have no right to participate in the new covenant that Christ sealed with his death. People cannot partake of both covenants. This was an important point for the Hebrew Christians, who were considering practicing Jewish ceremonial laws in addition to their faith in Christ. To revert to Jewish practices in order to gain God's approval, these people would lose their right to participate in the new covenant.

13:13 When Christians suffer persecution, they join Christ in his suffering. When Christians suffer for the cause of Christ they go out to him outside the camp and bear the disgrace he bore. The original readers might experience disgrace because they seemed to be abandoning their Jewish roots, but they could not cling to their roots and still worship at the cross of Christ. The ridicule and persecution came from Jews who didn't believe in Jesus the Messiah. Most of the book of Hebrews explains how Christ is greater than the sacrificial system. Here is the practical implication of this lengthy argument: It may be necessary to leave the "camp" and suffer with Christ. They needed to move outside the safe confinement of their past, their traditions, and their ceremonies to live for Christ.

13:14 The reason given for joining the suffering of Christ is that this world is not our home. This is more than a passing point; it provides a key New Testament theme on our true citizenship (Philippians 3:19-21; 1 Peter 1:17; 2:11). We should not be so attached to our worldly possessions that we forget to obey Christ. Life on earth is temporary. It would not be appropriate for Christians to grow too comfortable here. Jobs, money, homes, and hobbies should not become the most important parts of their lives.

Instead, Christians should be like the heroes of faith discussed in chapter 11 and spend their lives looking forward to our city in heaven, which is yet to come. We should not be content or attached to this world, because all that we are and have here is temporary. Rather, we should eagerly expect the coming Kingdom. Only our relationship with God and our service to him will last. We shouldn't store our treasures here; we should store them in heaven (Matthew 6:19-21).

13:15 The need for blood sacrifices ended with Jesus' death on the cross. But Christians do have a sacrifice that they can bring continually—called here a sacrifice of praise. God wants us to offer ourselves, not animals, as living sacrifices—daily laying aside our own desires so that we can follow him. We do this out of gratitude that our sins have been forgiven. We do this with Jesus' help because he alone makes our sacrifices acceptable. By continually offering this sacrifice of praise, we proclaim the glory of his name and thereby show that we are loyal to him (see also Romans 12:1-2). Since these Jewish Christians, because of their belief in Jesus as the Messiah, no longer worshiped with other Jews, they could consider praise and acts of service their sacrifices. These were sacrifices that they could offer continually, anywhere, anytime.

13:16 Another "sacrifice" that pleases God focuses on service to others. Acts of kindness and sharing our resources are very pleasing to God, even when they go unnoticed. In times of persecution especially, Christians depend on one another (see 10:24; 13:20). Doing good and a willingness to share with those in need strikes a blow at the self-centeredness of our times. Believers experience fellowship with other believers when they make their resources available to those in need.

13:17 Members in the church have the responsibility to obey their spiritual leaders. While 13:7 referred to past leaders who had died, this verse refers to the present leaders in the various congregations. Wise and God-honoring leaders watch over the church and have the best in mind for their followers. These leaders are concerned for the deepest needs of those in their fellowship. These leaders also take on great responsibility to watch over the souls of those in their congregations. They are accountable to God. Because of this grave responsibility, cooperative followers can greatly ease the burden of leadership. Too many believers create problems and tension for their leaders through endless complaints and interpersonal conflicts. How welcome would cheerfulness, helpfulness, and loyalty be to your leaders!

13:18-19 Apparently the writer of this letter, like his readers, had come face-to-face with persecution. The writer says he and his companions had done nothing wrong—our conscience is clear—but requests prayers in order to continue to live honorably. Because of this purity before God and purity of motivation, the writer could freely request prayer from fellow believers. In fact, he depended on it. This offers a clue that the writer of Hebrews may have been a former leader of the church who was traveling in another area. This leader requested prayer to come back to the readers soon. We do not know what prevented the writer from returning, but it was apparently significant. Whatever the problem was, the writer depended on the support of this church by asking for their prayers.

13:20-21 This doxology describes God as the God of peace. This characteristic of God may have been included to promote harmony and to heal the disunity among the readers. Perhaps the writer wanted to encourage those whose faith was wavering due to persecution or to stress the peace between people and God that Jesus established through the Cross (such peace should carry over among God's people).

God brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus. That fact proves that Jesus was an effective sacrifice and High Priest and is superior to anyone or anything in the old covenant. In fact, without the Resurrection, there would be no new covenant. The resurrection of Jesus from the dead is the central fact of Christian history. Called here, the great Shepherd of the sheep, Christ had laid down his life for the sheep (John 10:11). The new and everlasting covenant had been signed with his blood.

This closing prayer contains two requests: first, that God would equip the believers with all they would need for doing his will (for more on good works, see 10:24 and 13:16); second, that God would produce in them all that is pleasing to him. They had begun to do works that accompanied their salvation (6:9-10), but now they needed to mature in this area. So the writer prays for God to perfect them.

These verses (which borrow in part from Isaiah 63:10-14 and Zechariah 11:4 in the Septuagint) include two significant results of Christ's death and resurrection: (1) God works in us to make us the kind of people who will please him; and (2) God equips us to do the kind of work that will please him. Let God change you from within and then use you to help others.

13:22 This letter includes its share of commands, appeals, rebukes, and warnings. Readers are encouraged to take it all seriously, but in the right spirit, realizing that the writer loves them and has only their best in mind. The letter has encouraged the readers to understand Christ's role as priest and understand that the new covenant is superior to the old covenant. These important words could make the difference between their holding on to Christ or turning away—the difference, literally, between eternal life and eternal death. So the writer urged his readers to please listen carefully.

13:23 Other than this statement, the New Testament does not record Timothy's imprisonment. He may have been imprisoned in Rome or Ephesus. This is probably the same Timothy who was the disciple of Paul, and to whom Paul wrote two letters that now appear in the New Testament. (For more about Timothy, see the Introduction to Paul's letter to 1 Timothy.)

Timothy traveled the Empire with Paul, serving as his assistant and sometimes as his emissary. Timothy's name is included as cosender on many of Paul's letters to the churches. Timothy became an important leader in the early church, continuing the ministry of the word after Paul's death. Apparently he, too, was put in jail at one point but was released. The writer knew Timothy, and if Timothy arrived in time, the writer would bring him to see the readers.

13:24-25 Most New Testament letters end with greetings from the writer to others in the church and from the Christians in one locality to the Christians receiving the letter. So this letter offers greetings from the writer to the leaders and to the other believers. At the time of this letter, most churches still met in people's homes. These house churches, situated in different localities, needed to be encouraged about their unity with all other believers. The call to greet all the leaders and all of God's people underscored the importance of unity. The writer, in turn, sent greetings from the Christians from Italy.

A final benediction ends the letter: May God's grace be with you all. Concluding with "grace" is an appropriate ending for this letter. God's approval could not be won through ceremonies or through following the old covenant. Rather, God's grace comes through the new covenant.

Hebrews is a call to Christian maturity. It was addressed to first-century Jewish Christians, but it applies to Christians of any age or background. Christian maturity includes making Christ the beginning and the end of our faith. To grow in maturity, we must center our lives on him, not depending on religious ritual, not falling back into sin, not trusting in ourselves, and not letting anything come between us and Christ. Christ is sufficient and superior.

JAMES

INTRODUCTION

The letter from James reads like a Monday morning office memo. From the beginning, he expects his readers to put their faith into action. His challenges are not dated. James addresses practical issues that are as current as this morning's newspaper. The faith that Christians claim must be demonstrated in all the situations and circumstances of life—at work, at home, in the neighborhood, in church. Trials and hardships are not to be seen as hindrances to faith, but as opportunities to exercise healthy faith. Knowing God's word is not enough. That knowledge must be applied to our everyday lives. Real faith is the application of God's truth to ourselves.

AUTHOR

James, son of Joseph and half-brother of Jesus, also known as “James the Just.”

What would it have been like to have Jesus in the family? Would Mary and Joseph wonder about their parental responsibilities? Would younger brothers and sisters be jealous, resentful, or awestruck? Would these children have seen anything special about their eldest sibling? Because there is so little information in Scripture about Jesus' early years, we can only speculate about what it would be like to have Jesus as a son or as an older brother. But such was the experience of James, the author of this book that bears his name.

We know very little about the relationship between James and Jesus. We do know, however, that the townsfolk who saw Jesus as a boy and young man rejected his claim to be the Messiah and were amazed at his wisdom and miraculous powers (Matthew 13:53-58). Evidently, Jesus had kept a low profile in Nazareth. These skeptical neighbors included James in their description of Jesus' family: “‘He's just a carpenter's son, and we know Mary, his mother, and his brothers—James, Joseph, Simon, and Judas. All his sisters live right here among us. What makes him so great?’” (Matthew 13:55-56; see also Mark 6:1-6).

At one point in Jesus' ministry, his “family” tried to stop him and “take him home” (Mark 3:21); presumably James was one of the family members who claimed that Jesus was “out of his mind.”

Certainly Mary and Joseph knew who Jesus was. After all, they had heard the angels predict his miraculous conception (Matthew 1:18-25; Luke 1:38-56), and they had been present at his birth (Luke 2:1-7). In fact, “Mary quietly treasured these things in her heart” (Luke 2:19). They also had seen the boy Jesus grow and mature, with profound wisdom beyond his years (Luke 2:40, 49-52). Surely Mary and Joseph would have explained Jesus’ true identity to the rest of the family. But James and the others (including Jude, the author of the book of Jude) remained unconvinced. John explains, “For even his brothers didn’t believe in him” (John 7:5).

Yet, just a few years after that incident, James became the leader of the church in Jerusalem (Acts 12:17). We don’t know how James attained that important position, though Clement of Alexandria wrote that he was chosen for the office by Peter and John; but clearly he was the leader. In fact, when controversy over Gentile believers threatened to divide the church, Barnabas and Paul met with the elders and apostles in Jerusalem and submitted to their authority with James as the moderator, spokesman, and announcer of the final decision (Acts 15:1-21).

Later, just before Paul’s arrest, Paul brought money that he had collected for the church in Jerusalem on his third missionary journey to James and the rest of the elders and “gave a detailed account of the things God had accomplished among the Gentiles through his ministry” (Acts 21:19).

That this James is the James mentioned earlier as Jesus’ brother is confirmed by Paul in Galatians 1:18-19: “It was not until three years later that I finally went to Jerusalem for a visit with Peter and stayed there with him for fifteen days. And the only other apostle I met at that time was James, our Lord’s brother.” Later Paul adds, “In fact, James, Peter, and John, who were known as pillars of the church, recognized the gift God had given me, and they accepted Barnabas and me as their coworkers. They encouraged us to keep preaching to the Gentiles, while they continued their work with the Jews” (Galatians 2:9).

What changed James from a skeptical younger brother to a committed follower of Jesus and outspoken leader of the church? He saw his brother alive—he saw the risen Christ!

Writing to the Corinthians, Paul lists the eyewitnesses to the Resurrection: “I passed on to you what was most important and what had also been passed on to me—that Christ died for our sins, just as the Scriptures said. He was buried, and he was raised from the dead on the third day, as the Scriptures said. He was seen by Peter and then by the twelve apostles. After that, he was seen by more than five hundred of his followers at one time, most of whom are still alive, though some have died by now. Then he was seen by James and later by all the apostles. Last of all, I saw him, too, long after the others, as though I had been born at the wrong time” (1 Corinthians 15:3-8). Jesus appeared personally to his brother James. Imagine that reunion! Then, after the Ascension, we find James with the apostles, Mary, and others, praying continually (Acts 1:12-14) and waiting for the Holy Spirit as Jesus had told them to do (Acts 1:4-5).

This is James who describes himself as “a slave of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ” (1:1) and as a believer “in our glorious Lord Jesus Christ” (2:1). He is a man whose life was changed by Christ: a sibling turned servant; an antagonist turned apologist; a passive observer turned passionate follower.

What a wonderful opportunity we have, to read and study this book authored by God and written by one who had intimate contact with Jesus, who was an eyewitness to the ministry of Jesus and the beginnings of the church as recorded in the Gospels and in Acts.

It should be noted that other men named James are mentioned in the New Testament, and each one, at various times, has been proposed as a possible author of this book. These men include:

- James, the son of Zebedee and brother of John (see Mark 1:19). This James belonged to the inner circle of disciples (with John and Peter). Certainly he would have had the prominence to be a biblical author. But he was executed by Herod in A.D. 44 (Acts 12:2), too early for the writing of this book.
- James, the son of Alphaeus. This James was also one of the original twelve disciples. He is listed as an apostle (for example, Matthew 10:2-3) and quite possibly is “James the younger” (Mark 15:40).
- James, the father of Judas, one of the twelve, not Judas Iscariot (Luke 6:16).

So little is known about these last two men (and any other unmentioned individuals named James) that they are not taken as serious candidates. The book begins with the straightforward statement, “James, a slave of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ” (1:1). The author assumes that his readers (called “Jewish Christians scattered among the nations”) would know his identity. This James, the author, must have been someone well-known, with stature and authority in the early church. James, the brother of Jesus and the leader of the Jerusalem church, is the obvious choice. This is also the traditional view (since early in the third century) and the belief of most biblical scholars today.

According to Josephus, a first-century Jewish historian, James was condemned to death by the Jewish Sanhedrin in A.D. 62—just after the death of the Roman governor Festus (see Acts 24:27–26:32) and just before the arrival of his successor Albinus.

DATE

James wrote this book about A.D. 47–49.

There are several reasons for believing that the book of James was written early in the life of the church.

- With James the brother of Christ as the author, the book would have had to be written before A.D. 62, the year of James's martyrdom according to Josephus.
- The book does not mention the Jewish/Gentile controversy of the fifties and sixties. Remember, James was the moderator of the Council of Jerusalem, convened to consider this issue (Acts 15). This council is thought to have been held around A.D. 50. Paul spent much time discussing the problem of the Judaizers in his letters.
- This letter has no mention of the apostle Paul or allusions to his writings. It is probable, therefore, that it was written before Paul's rise to great prominence in the church.
- James does not discuss false teachings, another later issue in the church and a prominent theme in the writings of Paul, Peter, Jude, and John.

The book of James was written after the death of Stephen (A.D. 35), the persecution that caused many of the Jerusalem believers to flee for their lives, the conversion of Paul (A.D. 35), and the death of James the apostle (A.D. 44).

It was written before the Council of Jerusalem (A.D. 50), Paul's second and third missionary journeys (A.D. 50–52, 53–57), Paul's final imprisonment and martyrdom (c. A.D. 67), and the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus (A.D. 70).

Some have argued for a late date by another author because of the excellent Greek used in the book. James's natural language would have been Aramaic, and he probably would not have been fluent in good Hellenistic Greek. It is possible, however, that James, like Paul (see Colossians 4:18) used a "secretary" to translate his words into Greek, the language of world trade and the appropriate choice to reach those scattered among the nations.

James wrote to Jewish Christians in the first century. He also wrote to us, today, who are also "scattered among the nations." Although separated by nearly twenty centuries, the needs are much the same, and James's message still needs to be heard and applied.

SETTING

Place James probably wrote this letter from Jerusalem, where he lived. Jerusalem was the holy city of the Jews, the focus of the nation's political and religious life. In Jerusalem, Israel's greatest kings had reigned and prophets had ministered. And the temple was there. No matter how far they had been scattered, Jews all over the world looked to Jerusalem as their home and a symbol of God's presence among them. A reading of the last chapters of the Gospels and the first half of Acts provides an eyewitness view of the historical context of this book.

Religion When Jesus walked the streets of this great city, he encountered Pharisees, priests, scribes, and other religious zealots committed to the purity of Judaism. Eventually these religious leaders plotted Jesus' death (see Luke 22:1-6), hoping to stop the spread of what they considered to be heresy. However, after the Resurrection and the coming of the Holy Spirit, the church was born—the disciples preached without fear, and thousands responded to the gospel message (see Acts 2:1-47; 6:7). The religious leaders reacted by working still harder to eliminate the church and obliterate any trace of Jesus' followers (see Acts 6:8–8:3; 9:1-2). Yet the Jerusalem church flourished through this persecution, with James as one of the leaders. Wonderfully, many Jewish religious leaders came to faith in Christ. The Jerusalem church included former priests and Pharisees.

In Jerusalem, the first great crisis of the church was successfully resolved through a church council (Acts 15); yet a few years later, in this same city, the apostle Paul was mobbed in the temple and arrested (Acts 21–22).

James wrote from a city in religious turmoil, with opposition from Sadducees, legalistic Pharisees, and a vengeful high priest. Christians were a persecuted minority.

Politics During these times, Judea was under Roman domination. Herod the Great had been appointed king of the Jews by Augustus in 40 B.C., and he had chosen Jerusalem as his place of residence and reign. All the Roman governors ruled with power and intimidation, but they would often try to keep the peace by appeasing the religious leaders. Herod the Great even had constructed a magnificent temple. And Jesus was crucified when Pilate bowed to political pressure (Matthew 27:15-26). But most Jews chafed under Roman rule and longed for the freedom and glory of the past. Uprisings and insurrections were common, and the land of Palestine continued to be an irritant to the Romans. Eventually Emperor Titus destroyed the city and the temple in A.D. 70.

James wrote from a city in political turmoil, in a land where the people lived under foreign rule, in occupied territory. Christians had to accept their lot and live quiet testimonies within a hostile atmosphere.

Economics In general, the Jews of Jerusalem were poor, although many of the landowners and religious leaders had wealth. In addition, tax collectors like Matthew (Matthew 9:9) and Zacchaeus (Luke 19:1-10) made financial gains by allying themselves with the Romans and exploiting their countrymen. Eventually, however, Jerusalem became desperately poor because of Roman greed and a terrible famine (Acts 11:28-30).

James wrote from a city with an unstable economy and from a people with very few material resources. The Christians in Jerusalem were poor. Because of the conditions in Jerusalem, the Jewish believers were tempted to compromise their values and beliefs in order to escape persecution or to improve their economic situation. Certainly it would have been tempting to be secret believers, blending in with society and not causing problems. Or they might have been tempted to turn away from Christ altogether, giving in to the religious, political, and economic pressures.

Christians today face similar temptations. Although they may not be ruled by a foreign nation, believers are in a distinct minority in the world. Christ's teachings and commands continue to clash with society's values. And many Christians are persecuted socially, economically, and religiously because of their beliefs. Even in "Christian" countries, followers of Christ can feel alienated and ostracized. In an attempt to cope with the surrounding pressures, believers must resist the temptation to become secret Christians and silent witnesses.

AUDIENCE

"To Jewish Christians scattered among the nations" (1:1).

Christianity is Jewish. That may seem like a contradiction, but it's true. Mary, the mother of our Lord, was Jewish, as was Joseph. So Jesus was reared in a Jewish home. And in his public ministry, Jesus came first to the Jews, God's chosen nation, calling them to repentance and faith. All of the original twelve disciples were Jews. Christianity began in the temple and synagogue, as seeking Jews found the Messiah.

Quite naturally, therefore, Jerusalem was the birthplace of the church. That's where Jesus was crucified, and where he arose and later ascended. In Jerusalem the Holy Spirit filled the early band of believers. And that's where the apostles ministered. The Jerusalem church experienced explosive growth, with thousands responding to the gospel (Acts 2:41; 4:4; 5:14; 6:1, 7). Believers met in the temple courts and in homes (Acts 5:42), worshiping, eating, learning, and serving together.

Jesus had told his followers to spread the faith beyond Jerusalem, to "Judea, in Samaria, and to the ends of the earth" (Acts 1:8). In the Olivet discourse Jesus predicted terrible persecution and the eventual destruction of Jerusalem (Luke 21:5-24)—Jesus knew that his followers would be scattered. The persecution began soon after Jesus' ascension. Whether or not these early Christians were ready, many of them were forced to spread throughout the Roman Empire (Acts 8:1). They traveled to Samaria, and "as far as Phoenicia, Cyprus, and Antioch of Syria” (Acts 11:19).

The scattered believers “went everywhere preaching the Good News about Jesus” (Acts 8:4), and thus added many new converts to the faith. This created a need for follow-up, spiritual instruction, and encouragement for the new converts. For example, the apostles in Jerusalem sent Peter and John to Samaria to check out Philip’s ministry (Acts 8:14), and they sent Barnabas to Antioch when they heard of Greeks being converted there (Acts 11:19-22).

Of course, followers of Jesus, the Messiah, were already living in many foreign lands, having come to faith at Pentecost. Held fifty days after Passover, Pentecost (also called the Feast of Weeks) was a festival of thanksgiving for the harvested crops. Each year, Jews from many nations would gather in Jerusalem for this celebration. According to Acts 2:9-11, “Parthians, Medes, Elamites, people from Mesopotamia, Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, the province of Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia, Egypt, and the areas of Libya toward Cyrene, visitors from Rome (both Jews and converts to Judaism), Cretans, and Arabians” heard the Spirit-filled message in their native languages. They also heard Peter’s powerful sermon (Acts 2:14-41), and many came to faith in Christ. Returning to their homes, these new converts became an international evangelistic team. In fact, it is likely that the church at Rome was established by those who had heard about Jesus and had believed in him in Jerusalem, at Pentecost.

James, as the leader of the Jerusalem Christian community and as shepherd to a scattered flock, wrote to this large group of Jewish believers in Christ who were living far beyond the walls of Jerusalem. Thus he addressed his letter, “To Jewish Christians scattered among the nations” (1:1). Because this letter was written early in the life of the church (before Paul’s missionary journeys), nearly all of the believers would have been Jewish, but it is a book for all Christians, both Jewish and Gentile believers.

James knew what these young believers would be facing as they attempted to live for Christ, far away from the apostles and elders. There would be trials and persecutions, similar to what had driven many of them from their homes. There would be suffering. There would be temptations. There would be pressures. James was concerned that his Christian brothers and sisters should persevere.

James also knew that it is easy to slip back into old habits or spiritual neutrality when one has moved away and is surrounded by those who believe differently. And so he challenged his readers to move beyond mere words into action—to live out their faith.

James was also concerned about the body, the fellowship, and the church. And so he warned of discrimination and divisions and urged believers to guard their speech, to seek divine wisdom, to be humble, and to pray for each other.

The first-century readers of this letter would have appreciated James's direct and practical approach. He got right to the point with Spirit-led answers that they needed.

MESSAGE

James begins his letter by outlining some general characteristics of the Christian life (1:1-27). Next, he exhorts Christians to act justly in society (2:1-13). He follows this practical advice with a theological discourse on the relationship between faith and action (2:14-26). Then James shows the importance of controlling one's speech (3:1-12). In 3:13-18, James distinguishes two kinds of wisdom—earthly and heavenly. Then he encourages his readers to turn from evil desires and obey God (4:1-12). James reproves those who trust in their own plans and possessions (4:13–5:6). Finally, he exhorts his readers to be patient with each other (5:7-11), to be straightforward in their promises (5:12), to pray for each other (5:13-18), and to help each other remain faithful to God (5:19-20).

The main themes in the book of James include: Living Faith, Trials, Law of Love, Wise Speech, and Wealth.

Living Faith (1:19–2:26). This is the most familiar theme of the book and the most controversial. In fact, many have believed that what James wrote about “faith and works” contradicts the teachings of Paul. At times, it sounds as though James wrote that we are justified (made righteous in God's sight) by what we do (“deeds” or “works”), where Paul wrote that we are justified by faith alone, not by works.

But there is really no contradiction. Here's why:

First, both James and Paul used the same working definition of “saving faith”—total trust in Jesus Christ. Consider these examples from James: “when your faith is tested, your endurance has a chance to grow” (1:3); “their prayer offered in faith will heal the sick” (5:15). The word “faith” clearly refers to heartfelt and sincere trust.

Paul explained saving faith similarly when he wrote: “What is important is faith expressing itself in love” (Galatians 5:6); “Abraham never wavered in believing God's promise. In fact, his faith grew stronger, and in this he brought glory to God. He was absolutely convinced that God was able to do anything he promised. And because of Abraham's faith, God declared him to be righteous” (Romans 4:20-22). Notice the phrases “never wavered,” “absolutely convinced,” and “expressing itself in love.” To Paul, saving faith was not mere intellectual assent to the facts of the gospel—it was deep and sincere trust in Christ.

Second, both James and Paul were writing to correct misunderstandings of the relationship between faith and works in the process of justification. But they were correcting different problems.

James wrote to correct “easy-believe-ism,” the kind of superficial belief in Christ that is mere intellectual assent—the attitude that turns faith into cold orthodoxy, with the person merely believing the right facts about God and Jesus. James explained it this way: “Do you still think it’s enough just to believe that there is one God? Well, even the demons believe this, and they tremble in terror!” (2:19). Obviously, demons aren’t Christians, and yet in one respect they are “believers.” Their kind of belief is far from the faith that saves.

The Jerusalem church had experienced tremendous growth. With this growth there undoubtedly were many “hangers on,” spiritual groupies, people who wanted to be part of the Christian crowd but had no depth to their faith. Ananias and Sapphira seem to fit into that category. Their phony profession and dramatic deaths rocked the young church (see Acts 5:1-11). Later in the New Testament, we hear of others who left churches when the going got tough: “These people left our churches because they never really belonged with us; otherwise they would have stayed with us. When they left us, it proved that they do not belong with us” (1 John 2:19).

To deal with this problem head-on, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, James pronounced that superficial faith, just believing the facts about Christ, is not enough. True faith involves wholehearted and genuine trust in Jesus Christ and will be evidenced by a changed life. In other words, true faith will produce good works.

Paul’s statements, however, were meant to counter a Jewish emphasis on obeying the law (especially the ceremonial law as given in the Pentateuch). Many Jews who had come to faith in Christ felt obligated to observe Jewish laws and customs—some going so far as to insist that all new believers, even Gentiles, should keep Jewish laws, especially circumcision. Paul’s strong teaching was that the purpose of the law was to prepare the way for the Messiah (making people aware of their sinfulness and providing a picture of God’s perfect sacrifice for sin)—thus the law was fulfilled in Christ. Believers, therefore, were under no obligation to obey Jewish laws. Paul made it clear that salvation is by grace through faith, not by slavish obedience to the laws (see Galatians 3:1-6). In fact, it was just this issue that brought Paul to the church council of Jerusalem. There, after Paul presented his case, James spoke for the elders and declared that the Gentile believers were not obligated to keep the Jewish ceremonial laws (see Acts 15:12-29).

In all of this, Paul’s main point was that a person could never be good enough to “earn” his or her salvation. And because everyone has sinned, all people fall into this lost category—all fall short. “We are made right in God’s sight when we trust in Jesus Christ to take away our sins. And we all can be saved in this same way, no matter who we are or what we have done. For all have sinned; all fall short of God’s glorious standard. Yet now God in his gracious kindness declares us not guilty. He has done this through Christ Jesus, who has freed us by taking away our sins” (Romans 3:22-24). Interestingly, James also underlined the universality of sin and the need for salvation when he wrote: “And the person who keeps all of the laws except one is as guilty as the person who has broken all of God’s laws” (2:10).

In summary, James was speaking of good deeds after conversion, as evidence of faith and a right relationship with God—true faith produces good works. Paul was speaking of good deeds before conversion—they can never earn or produce a right relationship with God—obedience follows profession.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The problem faced by James in the first century is one that is prevalent today. Churches are filled with people who claim to be followers of Christ. Unfortunately, however, the claims of many of those professed followers are hollow because their faith is shallow—their lives belie their profession by specific non-Christian actions and attitudes or by what they fail to do. The application of this theme in the book of James is clear: the church must continually call people to genuine faith in Christ—faith that results in changed lives. And individual Christians should evaluate their level of obedience to their Master and recommit to doing the good works that result from being saved.

How deep is your faith? Do you merely know a lot about God, or do you really know him? Do you have a superficial faith, or do you have a deep trust?

Trials (1:2-18; 5:7-11). The early church was born at a time of severe trials—remember, James was writing to believers who had been scattered throughout the world by persecution. So it should come as no surprise to find that one of the major themes in this book is how to react to trials and testing.

Many of these trials came from the outside. Zealous Jews, like Saul of Tarsus before his conversion, imprisoned and killed followers of Christ (Acts 6:8–7:60). Public acknowledgment of Christ as Savior and Lord did not lead to popularity, power, and prestige. James also knew of the struggles that would occur on the inside. A trial can test believers’ faith, causing doubts and discouragement and making them susceptible to a variety of temptations. And Satan tries to use tough times to divide the church. So James challenged his young flock to recognize the sources of their problems—their sin nature and the evil one (1:13-16), to keep focused on God and his goodness (1:17-18), and to resist Satan’s subtle attacks (4:7).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The way of the cross is not the way of the world—our values, priorities, and lifestyle can be very threatening to those who don't know the Savior. Every day, Christians face scores of decisions that could result in being "persecuted" for their faith. In addition, adversity is a part of life, a result of being mortal and human. We live in a fallen world; and people, all people, get sick, struggle through life, and eventually die. God doesn't promise to spare us from those trials and give us perpetual health, wealth, and good feelings. But he does promise to be with us in everything we face (see John 16:31-33; Romans 8:35-39).

So today, James would urge us, like his first-century readers, to see our trials as tests of faith that can help us grow and mature (1:3-4, 12). He would also tell us, however, to distinguish between external trials and internal temptations, which are rooted in the sinful nature (1:13-15). These self-centered desires must be resisted, and we should focus on God and his love and truth and not on ourselves (1:16-18).

How are you responding to the trials in your life? Are you giving in or keeping the faith? Are you allowing tough times to separate you from other Christians or pull you together?

Law of Love (1:27; 2:8-17; 3:17-18; 4:11-12; 5:19-20). For James, the law of love included looking after "orphans and widows" (1:27), not showing favoritism (2:8-9), being merciful (2:12-13), clothing the naked and feeding the hungry (2:14-17), being a peacemaker (3:17-18), not speaking evil of another (4:11-12), and praying for each other (5:13-16). In fact, keeping the royal law is a powerful demonstration of our faith in Christ, as we discussed earlier under "living faith."

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Our world is filled with those who need compassion, mercy, and love translated into food, shelter, medical care, counsel, and friendship. God's message to the church, and thus to us, through James is to obey the law of love. This means supporting Christian welfare and mission agencies and individuals with our prayers and money. It also means being sensitive to the needs in our neighborhoods and looking for ways that we can become involved personally. "If you really keep the royal law found in Scripture, 'Love your neighbor as yourself,' you are doing right" (2:8).

Are you obeying the law of love? Are you holding tightly to your money, or are you giving to those in need? Are you focused on your own comfort, or are you sacrificing to help others?

Wise Speech (1:19, 26; 3:1-18; 4:11-16; 5:9, 12). At the time James wrote this book, it seems as though many wanted to be teachers in the church, even though they weren't qualified. It is in this context and to those who presumed to be teachers that James wrote his words about the tongue and godly wisdom.

James began by warning aspiring teachers that they would be judged very strictly (3:1-2). He then discussed the issue of speech. Of all people, teachers should watch what they say, since most of what they teach directly impacts others.

Next, James discussed “wisdom.” Although this may seem to be an abrupt change of thought and a new topic, there is a definite connection between “wisdom,” “speech,” and teachers. The key to controlling the tongue is to rely on God’s wisdom and insight, and not be led by “envy and selfish ambition” (3:13-17). In fact, the ability of a person to control his or her tongue tells much about that person’s relationship with God. Teachers are known as “wise” people; after all, they have the answers, and they tell us what to do and teach us how to think. But true wisdom comes from God and will show up in a person’s life (3:13), not just in his or her words.

James’s readers learned that they would have to be wise and then use their tongues wisely if they ever wanted to become teachers.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Today, almost any believer can have a teaching role in the church as pastor, elder, Sunday school teacher, youth sponsor, small group leader, counselor, or Bible study teacher. And even if they don’t have a recognized teaching position in the church, mature Christians should teach and encourage new believers in the faith. To these teachers in our churches, James would say, “What is the source of your teaching? Where is the wisdom? Watch what you say and make sure it is from God.”

Beyond the issue of teachers and teaching, there is a strong application to all believers to guard our mouths. It is easy to be critical of others, to get in the last word, to complain, to brag of our accomplishments, or just to talk to hear ourselves. But those words come directly from “envy and selfish ambition” (3:14). And nothing hurts churches or relationships more quickly than careless or harmful talk.

How is your speech? Are you quick to defend yourself and to get in an authoritative word, or are you a good listener? Do you voice your grievances and blast your opponents, or do you try to speak constructively? Are you quick to pass on the morsel of gossip, or do you remain silent and think the best of others?

Wealth (1:9-12; 2:1-7; 5:1-6). It is not surprising that there are significant references in James’s epistle to wealth, especially the relationship between the poor and the rich, because the church in Jerusalem was poor. In fact, this church eventually became so impoverished, especially after a devastating famine, that Paul collected money for them on his third missionary journey (see Acts 11:28-30; 24:17; Romans 15:25-26; 1 Corinthians 16:1-4; 2 Corinthians

8:1–9:5).

A factor that contributed to their poverty was the emphasis on caring for the needy and feeding the hungry in the church. In Acts we read about the concern for widows and the “daily distribution of food” (Acts 6:1-4). Providing food for so many must have been a drain on their personal financial resources. In addition, there were conflicts between the rich and the poor. In the text we read that the rich were exploiting the poor and taking them to court (2:6-7). As in most cultures, society was stratified according to wealth with many becoming rich at the expense of the poor (5:4-6).

It is easy to imagine the mixed feelings of poor Christians: from a human standpoint they envied the rich and wanted to curry their favor with the hope of moving out of poverty, or they may have been filled with anger and desired revenge. Yet as followers of Christ, they were to love their neighbors (2:8).

James’s message was direct and clear to both the poor and the rich. To the poor, he gave words of hope, and to the rich, words of warning. First, the poor should realize that they had a “high position” even though they were at the bottom in society (1:9). Second, they should not fawn over wealthy people who came to the church meetings. Wealth was not a mark of spirituality (in fact, the opposite was usually the case), and showing favoritism is a sin (2:1-9). Third, the poor should remember that what really counts is being rich in God’s sight (1:12).

James warned the rich that their powerful and comfortable position was temporary (1:10-11). He told rich oppressors that they would be punished for hoarding wealth, cheating workers, and wiping out their opposition (5:1-6). The rich would be condemned not for having wealth, but for what they did to become wealthy and how they used their riches.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Although much has changed since the first century, society is still stratified, with the wealthy and powerful featured as heroes and role models. Many of the rich use their money to get their way and to oppress the poor. And whatever the source of the wealth, very little is given to help the needy—rather it is hoarded for “the last days,” for one’s retirement funds or estate (5:3).

James’s message hits home. People are foolish (both Christians and non-Christians) to spend their lives on money. Chasing wealth is a futile pursuit because in God’s eyes money is worth so little in comparison with what is important and valuable in life—seeking his Kingdom and righteousness (Matthew 6:33). The main trap of accumulating wealth is that it can give a false sense of security; that is, we can begin to trust in money instead of God.

What role does money play in your life? Are you obsessed with gaining wealth, or do you see money as a resource to be used for good? Do you spend, spend, spend on yourself, or are you a good steward of the time, money, and other resources entrusted to you? Do you work to be popular with the rich and influential, or do you associate with the poor, regardless of what others may say or think?

OUTLINE OF JAMES

I. Genuine Religion (1:1-27)

II. Genuine Faith (2:1–3:12)

III. Genuine Wisdom (3:13–5:20)

JAMES 1

GREETINGS / 1:1

How often do we open a letter without checking to see who sent it? Ancient letter writers signed their names right at the beginning, so readers immediately knew the source. Modern readers of the New Testament, however, frequently skip over the address. It strikes us as unimportant. Our oversight is a mistake. The first verses of New Testament books often tell us the writer's identity and how the writers perceived their roles. In James's case, these helpful insights prepare us for the entire letter. We treat letters with more respect when we understand who sent them and why.

1:1 James is only mentioned by name a few times elsewhere in the New Testament (Matthew 13:53-55; Acts 1:12-14; 15:12-21; 1 Corinthians 15:3-8; Galatians 1:19; 2:7-9). As the leader of the Jerusalem church, however, he was known on a first-name basis by the rapidly expanding Christian world. By simply using his first name, James manages to convey both humility and authority as he signs his letter. He could have identified himself as "brother of Jesus," or "leader of the Jerusalem church," but the only addition to his name is the title of slave of God. The Greek word doulos (slave, servant) refers to a position of complete obedience, utter humility, and unshakable loyalty. Many of the first followers of Christ were, in fact, slaves. But among Christians, the idea of being a slave of Christ became not a position of humiliation, but a place of honor. There can be no greater tribute to a believer than to be known as God's obedient, humble, and loyal servant. The three names, Lord Jesus Christ, refer to the unique character of Jesus. He is the heavenly, exalted Lord who will one day return in glory to this world. He is Jesus, God come to earth as a human being. He is Christ, the anointed one who fulfilled God's purposes by dying for us.

The Jewish Christians scattered among the nations referred to Jewish believers who had left Palestine by force or by choice. The deportation of Jews to foreign lands had been practiced since the days of the Assyrians over six hundred years before Christ. But many Jews had also emigrated to other lands in the quest for wealth and opportunity. This network of Jewish communities scattered throughout the Roman Empire became the stepping stones for the spread of the gospel. The book of Acts describes the missionary pattern of Paul and others. In almost every town they visited, the presence of a Jewish synagogue gave them an open forum from which to communicate the Good News. What history records as the splintering of the nation of Israel was used by God to facilitate the spread of his Word.

ENDURING TRIALS AND TEMPTATIONS / 1:2-18

James wrote to believers facing difficult times. Their troubles ranged from personal trials to disabling doubts; from persecution for following Christ to the lure of respectability in their community and the dangers of spiritual pride. James wrote to encourage his brothers and sisters in their faith.

James's approach illustrates the variety of forms that encouragement can take. At times, James confronts. In other places, he gently encourages. He uses hyperbole (extreme illustration) in a way that reminds us of his half brother, Jesus. Sparks and forest fires, rudders and large ships create mental pictures like Jesus created with his needles and camels. James begins his letter looking directly at trials and daring to spur his fellow believers with a challenge: "Meet the very worst that life presents you with joy."

1:2 How can a person consider trouble as an opportunity for joy? This is a remarkable command—we are to choose to be joyful in situations where joy would naturally be our last response. When certain circumstances make us angry and we want to blame the Lord, James directs us to the healthier alternative—joy. Those who trust in God ought to exhibit a dramatically different, positive response to the difficult events of life.

Our attitude is to be one of genuine rejoicing. This is not joyful anticipation for trials. Instead, it is joy during trials. The joy is based on confidence in the outcome of the trial. It is the startling realization that trials represent the possibility of growth. In contrast, most people are happy when they escape trials. But James encourages us to have pure joy in the very face of trials. James is not encouraging believers to pretend to be happy. Rejoicing goes beyond happiness. Happiness centers on earthly circumstances and how well things are going here. Joy centers on God and his presence in our experience.

The word whenever doesn't allow much room for doubt. We are urged to be joyful not if we face trouble, but whenever. Trials, problems, situations can be joy robbers if we lack the proper attitude. Where does this trouble come from? The troubles and trials we face can be hardships from without or temptations from within. A trouble may be a hard situation that tests a person's faith such as persecution, a difficult moral choice, or a tragedy. Life's trail is marked with such trials. Enduring one trial is not enough. God's purpose in allowing this process is to develop complete maturity in us.

Considering your troubles to be joy comes from seeing life with God's perspective in mind. We may not be able to understand the specific reasons for God's allowing certain experiences to crush us or wear us down, but we can be confident that his plan is for our good. What may look hopeless or impossible to us never looks that way to God!

1:3 Although we tend to think of testing as a way to prove what we don't know or don't have, being tested ought to be seen as a positive opportunity to prove what we have learned. This testing of our faith is a test that has a positive purpose. In this case, the troubles do not determine whether or not believers have faith; rather, the troubles strengthen believers by adding endurance to the faith that is already present. Endurance is faith stretched out; it involves trusting God for a long duration. James is not questioning the faith of his readers—he assumes that they trust in Christ. He is not convincing people to believe; he is encouraging believers to remain faithful to the end. James knows that their faith is real, but it lacks maturity.

We cannot really know our own depth until we see how we react under pressure. Precious diamonds begin as coal, subjected to intense pressure over a period of time. Without pressure, coal remains coal. The testing of your faith is the combined pressure that life brings to bear on you. Endurance, like a precious gem, is the intended outcome of this testing. Endurance is not a passive submission to circumstances—it is a strong and active response to the difficult events of life, standing on your feet as you face the storms. It is not simply the attitude of withstanding trials, but the ability to turn them into glory, to overcome them.

1:4 It is not our nature to endure. When it comes to trials, we would rather escape, explain, or exit the difficulty. In fact, we will tend to do almost anything to avoid enduring a trial. Faithful endurance, however, generates whole people, recognized as strong in character, or mature. We will be seasoned, experienced, well-developed, fit for the tasks God sent us into the world to do. This strength is a quality developed by how much we have learned from the trials we have experienced. We are also ready for anything because we have been fully trained. The weaknesses and imperfections are being removed from our character; we are gaining victory over old sins; we are demonstrating a sense of competence about life. This completeness relates to the breadth of our experience.

1:5 If James 1:2-4 describes the benefits of responding correctly to trials, this verse draws attention to our hopelessness without God's assistance. We need a certain kind of wisdom in order to let our troubles be an opportunity for joy. That wisdom, says James, comes from God.

The wisdom that we need has three distinct characteristics: (1) It is practical—The wisdom from God relates to life even during the most trying times. It is not a wisdom isolated from suffering and trials. This wisdom is the tool by which trials are overcome. An intelligent person may have profound ideas, but a wise person puts profound ideas into action. (2) It is divine—God’s wisdom goes beyond common sense. Common sense does not lead us to choose joy in the middle of trials. This wisdom begins with respect for God, leads to living by God’s direction, and results in the ability to tell right from wrong. (3) It is Christlike—Asking for wisdom is ultimately asking to be like Christ. The Bible identifies Christ as the “wisdom of God” (1 Corinthians 1:24; 2:1-7).

Recognizing our lack of wisdom might cause us to despair, but God wants us to ask him. How do we know that God has answered our request for wisdom? When troubles come we will find ourselves responding with an attitude of joy. We will realize that joy is not our own doing, but is a gift.

Note that what God promises is to supply the wisdom for what must be done. Decisions still will have to be made, and actions will have to be taken. The wisdom is guidance for what God wants us to do, not his removal of our participation. We must remember that God’s promises do not submit to our plans. This verse is not permitting us to ask God for wisdom to bring about our will. Instead, we should humbly ask him for wisdom to remain in his will.

1:6 The one condition for receiving this gift of God is faith—being sure that we really expect God to answer. God will generously give wisdom, but we will not receive it if we do not have confidence that God will answer the request. That lack of confidence reveals a doubtful mind. “Doubt” means “a divided mind.” Doubting here has nothing to do with doubting whether God can do something; rather, it describes a people “divided” between being self-centered and being God-centered. This is the reason why James adds the idea of the wave, because it really means to be driven and tossed between self and God. The behavior of sea waves is unsettled, going back and forth, driven by the wind, like the doubter’s mind. Such a person wavers between choices and may, in the end, make no decision at all. Circumstances become the decision makers in that person’s life. When God’s promises and commands are given equal authority with our feelings and desires and the world’s ideas, the result is an unsettled sea of indecision and chaos.

1:7 The person who asks trustingly does not determine how God will answer, but he or she can be confident in knowing that God will answer. The person who asks doubtfully should not expect to receive anything from the Lord because the request was not genuine. When it seems as if God hasn't answered our prayers, we need to begin the search for a solution by asking ourselves whether we were trusting when we prayed. If our loyalties are straightened out, God's answers to prayer are restored to us.

1:8 To waver back and forth is to be double-minded. These people may “trust” God and claim to be believers, and yet be filled with doubt, keeping other options open in case God does not prove to be dependable. Wavering people are walking contradictions. Such instability is revealed not only in their prayers, but in all they do. When indecisiveness marks a relationship with God, that instability will affect all of life.

1:9 Next James turns his attention to potential differences among Christians—notably between rich and poor. Although they share a common bond in Christ, they will face different trials as their faith is tested. James returns to this theme throughout his letter.

Some of the believers were poor, low on the socioeconomic scale. The Greek word here means “insignificant in the world's eyes, lowly, relatively poor and powerless, lacking in material possessions.” They receive the subtle honor of being mentioned first. These scattered Jewish Christians, especially those in Palestine and Syria, would have been in such circumstances. They would have been ostracized by the Jews and often were disowned by their families. This was also a time of famine, and Christians may have suffered severely (Acts 11:28-29).

Contrary to the world's opinion of the poor, James says that God has honored them. Their high position is a present reality for these believers. It is their rich heritage as children of God who live in anticipation of participating in Christ's eternal Kingdom (2:5). They may be facing trials and persecution now, but they can be glad that God has honored them as his very own children.

Whatever our social or economic situation, James challenges us to see beyond it to our eternal advantages. What we can have in Jesus Christ outweighs anything in this life. Knowing him gives us our high position, where we find our true dignity.

1:10 As the gospel spread around the Mediterranean world, some who believed would have been rich Jews. Some, like Lydia in Philippi (Acts 16:11-15), were Gentiles, and wealthy. To such people, James gives a special challenge. He reminds them not to measure their worth by their riches nor to depend on their possessions for security and joy because earthly treasures will fade away like a flower in the field. Christians, rich and poor alike, were being persecuted for their faith. Wealth was not always an effective protection against mob violence (see Acts 17:1-9). As they were being persecuted, the rich looked very much like the poor, and certainly they were on the same level. This identification with poor believers could be part of the “humbling” that James is pointing out. That God has humbled them also means to be brought lower in Christ. That is, the rich are great in this world but are made equal to the poor in God’s world.

Wealth and the abilities that lead to wealth can create a barrier between us and God. If we are rich, or even if we live what we modestly call a “comfortable” lifestyle, James reminds us that our only lasting security is in a relationship with Christ. We must not trust what money and power seem to guarantee; instead, we must humbly trust in God and his eternal riches.

1:11 James describes a common occurrence in the Middle East. Morning is often welcomed by colorful desert flowers, bursting from the cool night. Their death is sudden as the hot sun rises. This withering and fading of wealthy people is as sudden as the death of the wild flowers. Death always intrudes. Life is uncertain. Disaster is possible at any moment.

The poor should be glad that riches mean nothing to God; otherwise poor people would be considered unworthy. The rich should be glad that wealth means nothing to God, because wealth is easily lost. We find true wealth by developing our spiritual lives, not financial assets. James begins his letter by making sure that believers, both poor and rich, see themselves in the same light before God (see Galatians 3:28; Colossians 3:11). James calls his readers to find hope in God’s eternal promises.

1:12 The Bible deepens the meaning of how God blesses the people to include a deep joy that comes from receiving God’s favor. As athletes persevere in training in order to improve their abilities and endurance for competition, so Christians persevere in spiritual training as they patiently endure testing that will bring maturity and completeness. Today’s trials will seem like training when we face tomorrow’s challenges. The way to get into God’s winner’s circle is to love him and stay faithful even under pressure.

There is a finish line. There are successes along the way—spiritual progress has its mile markers. But the trials of this life are contained in this life. Someday the test will be over. The first chapter of James teaches us that God’s long-term goal for us is maturity and completeness, but his eternal goal for us is the crown of life, a rich expression of hope. The believer who patiently endures by trusting God will have a life that, though not full of glory and honor, is still truly abundant, joyful, and victorious. Standing the tests of life gives believers even now a taste of eternity. Looking forward to that wonderful reward, and to the one who will present it to us, can be a source of strength and encouragement in times of trial (see also 1 Corinthians 9:24-27; 2 Timothy 4:7-8). Christians can consider themselves truly blessed, no matter what their outward circumstances, because they have been promised the crown of life.

1:13 We must have a correct view of God in order to persevere during times of trial. Specifically, we need to understand God's view of our temptations. Trials and temptations always present us with choices. God wants us to make good choices, not evil ones. Hardships can produce spiritual maturity and lead to eternal benefits if endured in faith. But tests can also be failed. We can give in to temptation. And when we fail, we often use all kinds of excuses and reasons for our actions. The most dangerous of these is to say, "God is tempting me." It is crucial for us to remember that God tests people for good; he does not tempt people for evil. Even during temptation we can see God's sovereignty in permitting Satan to tempt us in order to refine our faith and help us grow in our dependence on Christ. Instead of persevering (1:12), we may give in or give up in the face of trial. We might even rationalize that God is at fault for sending such a trying experience, and thus blame God for our failure. From the beginning it has been a natural human response to make excuses and blame others for sin (see Genesis 3:12-13). A person who makes excuses is trying to shift blame to something or someone else. A Christian, on the other hand, accepts responsibility for his or her wrongs, confesses them, and asks God for forgiveness. Because God is never tempted to do wrong, he cannot be the author of temptation. James is arguing against the pagan view of the gods where good and evil coexisted. God does not wish evil on people; he does not cause evil; he does not try to trip people up—he never tempts anyone.

At this point, the question may be rightly asked: "If God really loves us, why doesn't he protect us from temptation?" A God who kept us from temptation would be a God unwilling to allow us to grow. In order for a test to be an effective tool for growth, it must be capable of being failed. God actually proves his love by protecting us in temptation instead of protecting us from temptation (1 Corinthians 10:13).

1:14 Some believers thought that since God allowed trials, he must also be the source of temptation. These people could excuse their sin by saying that God was at fault. James corrects this. Temptations come from within, from the lure of our own evil desires. James highlights individual responsibility for sin. Desires can be either fed or starved. If the desire itself is evil, we must deny its wish. It is up to us, with God's help. If we encourage our desires, they will soon become actions. The blame for sin is ours alone. The kind of desire James is describing here is desire out of control. It is selfish and seductive.

Does James take Satan off the hook by placing responsibility for temptation on our desires? No, he does not. We may be led by our desires, but it is the Devil behind the impulse when we are going in an evil direction. Temptation comes from evil desires within us, not from God. We can both build and bait our own trap. It begins with an evil thought and becomes sin when we dwell on the thought and allow it to become an action. Like a snowball rolling downhill, sin grows more destructive the more we let it have its way. The best time to stop a temptation is before it is too great or moving too fast to control. (See Matthew 4:1-11; 1 Corinthians 10:13; and 2 Timothy 2:22 for more about escaping temptation.)

1:15 James traces the result of temptation when a person yields to it. Note that the first two steps in the process (evil desires lead to evil actions) emphasize the internal nature of sin. When we yield to temptation, our sin sets deadly events into motion—evil actions lead to death. There is more to stopping sin than just stopping sinning. Damage has been done. Deciding to “sin no more” may take care of the future, but it does not heal the past. That healing must come through repentance and forgiveness. Sometimes restitution must be made. As serious as the remedy sounds, we can be deeply grateful that there is a remedy at all.

1:16 The danger behind James's warning to us not to be misled is the temptation to believe that God does not care, or won't help us, or may even be working against us. The picture is not pretty. If we come to believe we are alone, we have been misled. If we distrust God, we have been misled. And if we dare to accuse God of being the tempter, we have been thoroughly misled.

1:17 So how can we keep from falling into temptation? The way is found in a close relationship with God and the application of his word to daily life. This pattern will lead us to see clearly that every good and perfect gift is from above. In contrast to the view that God sends evil, James points out here that whatever is good and perfect comes to us from God above. We can be assured that God always wills the best for us—not good things today and bad things tomorrow. God's character is always trustworthy and reliable—he never changes or casts shifting shadows (Malachi 3:6). Nothing can block God's goodness from reaching us. He is undaunted by our inconsistencies and unfaithfulness.

1:18 A shining example of the good things God gives ("whatever is good and perfect") is spiritual birth! We are saved because God chose to make us his own children. Our spiritual birth is not by accident or because God had to. The new birth is a gift to all believers (see John 3:3-8; Romans 12:2; Ephesians 1:5; Titus 3:5; 1 Peter 1:3, 23; 1 John 3:9). The true word is the gospel, the Good News of salvation (Ephesians 1:13; Colossians 1:5; 2 Timothy 2:15). We hear about the gift of birth through the reading and preaching of the gospel, and we respond to it.

LISTENING AND DOING / 1:19-27

James has spoken of the new birth; he now explains that this new birth should reveal itself in the way we act. He has also connected the new birth with its source, God's word. The ongoing importance of that word will be the subject of the next paragraph. The word that brings us life also guides us in living the life it has brought to us. From the grand scope of God's eternal plan and the unique place of believers in creation, James turns to the painful and practical essentials of living as God's "own children."

1:19 The expression be quick to listen is a beautiful way of capturing the idea of active listening. We are not simply to refrain from speaking; we are to be ready and willing to listen. This "quick" listening is obviously to be done with discernment. We are to check what we hear with God's word. If we don't listen both carefully and quickly, we are liable to be led into all kinds of false teaching and error.

Quick to listen and slow to speak should be taken together as sides of the same coin. Slowness in speaking means speaking with humility and patience, not with hasty words or nonstop gabbing. Constant talking keeps a person from being able to hear. Wisdom is not always having something to say; it involves listening carefully, considering prayerfully, and speaking quietly. When we talk too much and listen too little, we communicate to others that we think our ideas are much more important than theirs. James wisely advises us to reverse this process. We need to put a mental stopwatch on our conversations and keep track of how much we talk and how much we listen. When people talk to us, do they feel that their viewpoints and ideas have value?

We should also be slow to get angry. Anger closes our minds to God's truth (see an example in 2 Kings 5:11; see also Proverbs 10:19; 13:3; 17:28; 29:20).

It is anger that erupts when our egos are bruised. It is just the kind of anger that rises from too much fast talking and not enough quick listening!

When injustice and sin occur, we should become angry because others are being hurt. But we should not become angry when we fail to win an argument, or when we feel offended or neglected. Selfish anger never helps anybody (see Ecclesiastes 7:9; Matthew 5:21-26; Ephesians 4:26).

1:20 Anger that results in thoughtless, uncontrolled temper and leads to rash, hurtful words can never make things right in God's sight. Our anger toward others does not create within us a life that can withstand God's scrutiny. Why not? Because expressed anger tends to be uncontrollable. Anger is inconsistent with Jesus' command to love our enemies (Matthew 5:43-48) and not hate our brothers (Matthew 5:21-26). Anger usurps God's role as judge. In fact, we can be sure our anger is wrong when it keeps us from living as God wants us to live.

1:21 Get rid of all the filth and evil in your lives. According to the Greek, this is a once-for-all action. Why should we do this? Progress in our spiritual lives cannot occur unless we see sin for what it is, quit justifying it, and decide to reject it. James's word picture here has us getting rid of our evil habits and actions like stripping off dirty clothes. After we "get rid," then we need to humbly accept the message of God, seeking to live by it because it has been planted in our hearts and becomes part of our being. God teaches us from the depths of our souls, from the teaching of the Spirit, and by the teaching of Spirit-led people. The soil in which the word is planted must be hospitable in order for it to grow. To make our soil hospitable, we must give up any impurities in our lives. God's word becomes a permanent part of us, guiding us through each day. The implanted word is strong enough to save our souls. When we absorb the characteristics taught in the word, these are expressed in living. Trials and temptations cannot defeat us if we are applying God's truth to our lives.

1:22 Simply reading, even studying, God's word does not profit us if we do not obey what it says. We listen to God's message not just to know it, but also to do it. We would be fooling ourselves to congratulate ourselves about knowledge of Scripture if that's all there is to it. Worthwhile knowledge is a prelude to action; God's word can only grow in the soil of obedience. In order for a lesson to make a difference in a student's life, it must enter the heart and mind, affecting his or her life. It is important to hear God's word, but it is much more important to obey it. We can measure the effectiveness of our Bible study time by the effect it has on our behavior and attitudes. Do we put into action what we have studied?

1:23-24 Some people take a casual look at God's word without letting it affect their lives, like the person who looks so quickly into a mirror that flaws go undetected and nothing is changed. They listen but don't act. The other approach is the intent look, the deep and continued study of God's word that allows a person to see flaws and change his or her life in line with God's standards.

The kind of "mirror" that God's word provides is unique. It shows us our inner nature in the same way that a regular mirror shows our exterior features. Both mirrors reflect what is there. When God's word points out something in us that needs correction, we had better listen and act.

1:25 People who look steadily study with serious attention and then make God's law their chosen lifestyle. They study with rapt attention not only once, but continuously; as a result, they remember God's word and do what it says. This law is perfect; it cannot be improved.

This law sets people free because it is only in obeying God's law that true freedom can be found (compare John 8:31-32). As Christians, we are saved by God's grace, and salvation frees us from sin's control. As believers we are free to live as God created us to live. Of course, this does not mean that we are free to do as we please (1 Peter 2:16)—we are now free to obey God.

God will bless these people who look steadily at God's word, do what it says, don't forget what they have heard, and obey it.

1:26 God's perfect law should be put into practice in our speech. Here James introduces two major themes that he will discuss at length later: the use of the tongue (3:1-12) and the treatment of the unfortunate (throughout the letter).

Knowing how to speak well—as a great teacher would—is not nearly as important as having control of our speech: knowing what to say and where and when to say it. If you claim to be religious but don't control your tongue, you are just fooling yourself. The way that others will know whether or not our faith is real is by what we choose to talk about and the way we speak. James will discuss this more in chapter 3.

It is self-deception to have religious practices that do not lead to an ethical lifestyle. Even our outward religious practices are worthless without obedience. And we cannot be obedient if we cannot control our mouths. James does not specify how the tongue offends, but we can imagine a series of ways that our tongues dishonor God—gossip, angry outbursts, harsh criticism, complaining, judging. Our verbal actions speak louder than our religious rituals. Pretending to be religious and convincing ourselves that we are is not only deceptive to others, it is also a deadly self-deception. Conversion is meaningless unless it leads to a changed life. A changed life goes nowhere unless it serves others.

1:27 From a religion easily capable of rationalizing any behavior, James now turns to a relationship where God is allowed to direct the terms of behavior—pure and lasting religion. James explains religion in terms of practical service and personal purity. Rituals done with reverence are not wrong; but if a person still refuses to obey God in daily life, his “religion” is not accepted by God.

Pure and lasting religion is not perfect observance of rules and observances; instead, it is a spirit that pervades our hearts and lives (Leviticus 19:18; Isaiah 1:16-17). Like Jesus, James explains religion in terms of a vital inner faith that acts itself out in daily life. Our conduct must be in keeping with our faith (1 Corinthians 5:8). Orphans and widows are often mentioned in the concerns of the early church because these were the most obviously “poor” in first-century Israel. The widows, because they had no access to inheritances in Jewish circles, were very much on the outskirts of society. This is why Paul had to develop an entire order concerning widows in his own churches, as in 1 Timothy 5. The widows could not get jobs, and their inheritances went to their oldest sons. It was expected that the widows would be taken care of by their own families, and so the Jews left them with very little economic support. Unless a family member was willing to care for them, they were reduced to begging, selling themselves as slaves, or starving. By caring for these powerless people, the church put God’s word into practice. When we give with no hope of receiving in return, we show what it means to serve others.

Even today, the presence of widows and orphans in our communities and cities makes this directive of James very contemporary. To this group we can also add those who have become de facto widows and orphans through the death of families in divorce. These people have complicated lives. The needs always threaten to overwhelm our human resources. Looking after hurting people is stressful work. Yet we are called to be involved.

In addition, those with pure and lasting religion will refuse to let the world corrupt them. To keep ourselves from being corrupted by the world, we need to commit ourselves to Christ’s ethical and moral system, not the world’s. We are not to adapt to the world’s value system based on money, power, and pleasure. True faith means nothing if we are contaminated with such values. James was simply echoing the words of Jesus in what has been called his “high priestly” prayer (John 17), where Jesus emphasized sending his disciples into the world but expecting them not to be of the world. As we make ourselves available to serve Christ in the world, we must keep putting ourselves under the protection of this prayer. The prayer makes two important points: (1) we remain in the world because that is where Christ wants us; and (2) we will have God's protection.

JAMES 2

DO NOT FAVOR THE RICH / 2:1-13

James 1:19-27 encourages us to put our beliefs into practice. In 2:1-13, James gives a practical lesson: we are not to show favoritism. Such discrimination violates God's truth. James takes it for granted that the believers in the church will welcome strangers. But he is urging them to be alert about the way that they welcome strangers into the church. He does not want the warmth or honor of the welcome to be determined by the status or apparent wealth of the visitor. It is showing favoritism based on social standing that James specifically condemns. He makes it a cause for questioning the reality of a person's faith.

2:1 The brothers and sisters were members of the church and his family in the Christian faith. The family relationship he is describing is limited to those who have faith in our glorious Lord Jesus Christ. Because of their shared position as believers, James's readers were to follow the instructions he was about to give them.

The believers receiving this letter were already guilty of showing favor to some people more than others. The believers apparently were judging people based only on externals—physical appearance, status, wealth, power; as a result, they were pandering to and being unduly influenced by people who represented these positions of prestige.

James's command remains important for churches today. Often we treat a well-dressed, impressive-looking person better than someone who looks poor. We do this because we would rather identify with successful people than with apparent failures. The irony, as James reminds us, is that the supposed winners may have gained their impressive lifestyle at our expense. Our churches should show no partiality with regard to people's outward appearance, wealth, or power. The law of love must rule all our attitudes toward others. Too often preferential treatment is given to the rich or powerful when offices for the church need to be filled. Too often, a church brushes aside the suggestions of its more humble or poorer members in favor of the ideas of the wealthy. Such discrimination has no place in our churches.

2:2-3 James launches into a vivid hypothetical case study. Two men were entering the church meeting. We can assume that these men were both visiting, since they are described only by appearance. One man was rich, as noted by his fancy clothes and expensive jewelry. The other was poor and dressed in shabby clothes. In this scenario, the rich man is given special attention and a good seat. The believers were impressed by him. He became the object of special service and deference. The poor man, however, gets standing room only, or a seat on the floor. He is given neither dignity or comfort. James speaks out against this. It is our relationship with Christ that gives us dignity, not our profession or possessions. When we gather for worship, we ought to be conscious that even if we are familiar with everyone in the room, Christ is present. If there are two or three of us gathered in his name, he is there (Matthew 18:20). Before we worship, we ought to recognize Christ's presence. Can we not assume that he follows his own advice? When Jesus meets with us, does he assume a place of honor or jostle for our attention? Or should we imagine that Jesus takes the place of deepest humility among us and waits to be recognized as Lord? When we neglect or ignore the poor or powerless, we also ignore Christ.

2:4 Such discrimination shows that the believers are being guided by wrong motives. James condemned their behavior because Christ had made them all one (Galatians 3:28). Why is it wrong to judge a person by his or her economic status? Wealth may indicate intelligence, wise decisions, and hard work. On the other hand, it may mean only that a person had the good fortune of being born into a wealthy family. Or it can even be a sign of greed, dishonesty, and selfishness. When we honor someone just because he or she dresses well, we make appearance more important than character.

Another false assumption that sometimes influences our treatment of the rich is our misunderstanding of God's relationship to wealth. It is deceptively easy to believe riches are a sign of God's blessing and approval. But God does not promise us earthly rewards or riches; in fact, Christ calls us to be ready to suffer for him and give up everything in order to hold on to eternal life (Matthew 6:19-21; 19:28-30; Luke 12:14-34; 1 Timothy 6:17-19). We will have untold riches in eternity if we are faithful in our present life (Luke 6:35; John 12:23-25; Galatians 6:7-10; Titus 3:4-8).

2:5 Jesus' first followers were common people. God chose the poor in this world to be rich in faith. Christianity has a special message for the poor. In a social system that gave the poor very little, Jesus' message to them was certainly good news. The poor people may not have mattered in that society, but they mattered very much to God. The poor will inherit the kingdom God promised to those who love him. The poverty of poor believers is only poverty in the eyes of the world, but they are rich in faith and will inherit the Kingdom. The rich are not excluded from the Kingdom; just as the poor are not "chosen" due to any merit of poverty. However, great riches can stand in the way of a person recognizing his or her need for God (Mark 10:23; Luke 12:34). The poor, on the other hand, have nothing about which they can boast before God (1 Corinthians 1:29). To continue to show favoritism to those who are only rich by the world's standards is not only wrong, but shortsighted.

Rich or poor, believers must obey God and love him. This could be called the heart of James's message. If we really love God, both our faith in him and our obedience to him will be right. We will not belittle anyone with whom we share a common inheritance.

2:6-7 These believers insult the poor because they were not treating them as God treats them. James showed how evil their actions were by making three observations. First, it is the rich who oppress others. In this society, the rich oppressed the poor. In James's original case study (2:2-4), both the rich person and the poor person are probably visitors to the church who are unbelievers. At best they are people whose faith is not yet known. So how wrong it is to fawn over this rich person who may not be a believer, and ignore the poor person, who might be a believer.

Second, the rich typically showed no mercy or concern for the poor. They would take the poor into court, most likely for not repaying a debt. Wealthy moneylenders often took advantage of the poor. A creditor, if he met a debtor on the street, could literally grab him and drag him into court.

But economic persecution was not the only oppression these believers faced from the wealthy; James's third observation focuses on religious persecution. These rich people are the ones who slander Jesus Christ either by speaking evil of him or by insulting Christians. James pointed out the irony that Christians would show favoritism to those who were known to slander Christ!

2:8 Love is the source from which our attitudes toward others should flow. This royal command is a law from the King of kings (see Matthew 22:37-40). This law is God's will for his followers: "Love your neighbor as yourself." In the Old Testament (Leviticus 19:18; Proverbs 14:21), one's neighbor would be a fellow Israelite; but Jesus' application included everyone with whom we might come into contact. James was calling his readers to obey the royal law of love that would forbid them to discriminate against anyone who entered their fellowship. We are to show favor to everyone, whether the person is rich or poor. We are to be kind, overlooking other superficial trappings.

2:9 Giving special attention to the rich is not a minor transgression or an unfortunate oversight; according to James it is sin, and those engaged in this action are guilty of breaking that law noted in 2:8. Discrimination against anyone on the basis of dress, race, social class, wealth, sex, etc., is a clear violation of the royal law of love. We must treat all people as we would want to be treated. Our attitudes and actions toward others should be guided by love.

2:10 Why is a person who commits one sin as guilty as the person who has broken all of God's laws? James's point here is that no matter what commandment someone breaks, that person is guilty of an offense against God. He or she has violated the will of God. We cannot excuse the sin of favoritism by pointing to the rest of the good we do. Sin is not simply balanced against good—it must be confessed and forgiven. If we've broken just one law, we are sinners. We can't decide to keep part of God's law and ignore the rest. If we have broken it at all, we need Christ's payment for our sin.

2:11 The law is a unit, and to break one law is to become guilty of the entire law. Jewish theologians of the day would have disagreed with James, saying some laws were "light" and some "heavy," meaning that breaking some was not as serious as breaking others. It might seem that stumbling on the act of showing favoritism is breaking one of those "least commandments," not nearly as bad as adultery or murder. But God's law was not written with "heavy" and "light" commands so that obedience to some outweighed obedience to others. Believers are called to consistent obedience.

2:12 Obedience must also be a lifestyle, a habit. Whenever you speak and whatever you do covers all human behavior (see also Acts 1:1; 7:22; 1 John 3:18). The believers would be judged on the basis of their obedience to God's will as expressed in his law. Although God has accepted those who believe in him, we are still called upon to obey him. But his law is not a burden; instead, it sets us free because we are obeying out of joy. We are grateful that God has given us freedom from sin's penalty and the Spirit to empower us to do his will.

2:13 Mercy is precisely what the believers were not showing when they insulted poor people. If they continued to discriminate, they would be in danger of facing their own judgment without mercy. This is an excellent statement of New Testament ethics: What we do to others we actually do to God, and he returns it upon our heads. We stand before God in need of his mercy. We can't earn forgiveness by forgiving others. But when we withhold forgiveness from others after having received it ourselves, we show that we don't understand or appreciate God's mercy toward us.

Not showing mercy places us only under the judgment of God, but showing mercy places us under God's mercy as well as his judgment. We will always deserve God's judgment because we can never adequately obey God's royal law. But our merciful actions are evidence of our relationship with Christ. And it is that relationship that vindicates us. We stand before God, from whom we know we deserve judgment and upon whom we are depending for mercy. Because of God's character, his mercy . . . will win out over his judgment against us. The world is looking for evidence that God is merciful. Being people who have experienced mercy and who express mercy will catch their attention.

FAITH RESULTS IN GOOD WORKS / 2:14-26

The remainder of chapter 2 is often cited to show that the teachings of James and Paul were completely contradictory.

James: "Faith is dead without good deeds" (2:26).

Paul: "We are made right with God through faith and not by obeying the law" (Romans 3:28).

However, careful reading and understanding of both Paul and James will show that instead of contradicting, their writings really complement each other.

First, consider the writers' viewpoints in light of the situations they were addressing in their letters. They were confronting different issues. Paul was responding to the Judaizers, who said works—such as circumcision and observing Jewish ceremonial laws—were necessary for salvation. James was responding to those who believed that mere intellectual agreement was enough to obtain salvation.

Second, there is a difference in the time frame in the believer's life as they make their statements. Paul began at the very beginning—at conversion. No one can ever earn God's forgiveness and salvation. We can only accept it. James spoke to the professing believer, one who has already accepted that forgiveness and salvation, explaining that the person must live a new life. No one can be saved by works; no one can be saved without producing works. We are not saved by good works, but for good works. James's point was not that works must be added to faith, but that genuine faith includes works.

2:14 This person who claims to have faith obviously thinks that his belief alone, without any good actions (deeds done in obedience to God), is satisfactory in God's sight. However, faith not accompanied by deeds has no saving value.

Anyone can say he has faith, but if his lifestyle remains selfish and worldly, then what good is that faith? It is merely faith that believes about Jesus, not faith that believes in him. That kind of faith can't save anyone. Instead, the faith that saves is faith that proves itself in the actions it produces.

Two images help us remember the importance of genuine faith:

1. On one side are people who project confidence in their standing before God and yet show no evidence that their faith affects any of their actions. They may even take pride in the fact that they can believe what they want and that no one has the right to challenge their faith. After all, “only God really knows for sure,” they may say.
2. On the other side are people whose lives demonstrate such a frantic flurry of activity that they literally have no time to think or talk about their faith. Those people, whose lives at first exhibit the marks of someone who believes, turn out to have real doubts. They doubt God's acceptance and feel compelled to work very hard in hopes of gaining that acceptance. But trying hard to build merit with God becomes a substitute for faith.

James helps us see that genuine faith will always combine deep trust in God and consistent action in the world. It is not the one who claims to have faith, but the one who actually has faith who is saved.

Someone may ask, “But what if genuine belief never really gets a chance to demonstrate itself in action?” One instance of genuine faith given little time is the case of the thief on the cross who believed in Jesus (Luke 23:32-43). In sight of death, this man acknowledged Jesus as the Christ. Did even this man's short-lived, genuine faith lead to real action? Certainly it did! The dying thief said a few words of profound eloquence: “Jesus, remember me when you come into your Kingdom” (Luke 23:42). The thief could not possibly have known how many times his simple trusting witness during his final agony would give hope to others who felt they were beyond God's help.

Most of us have a great deal more time than the thief on the cross. Do our lives count for as much? Do we declare our faith and then demonstrate its vitality throughout our life?

2:15 James gives an example of a hypothetical person who may have been someone in the church fellowship—a brother or sister—who was in real need. To be without food or clothing is to be in a desperate yet all-too-common situation. There is hardly a church today within whose walls there are not persons who live without adequate food and shelter.

2:16 Something could be done for this needy person. There would be plenty of clothes and food in the fellowship to care for this person, but the person was sent away empty-handed, with a prayer over his head, but no clothing on his back or food in his stomach.

Too often, we in the church offer mere words—prayers, advice, encouragement—when we are being called upon to act. The need is obvious, and the resources are not lacking, yet the help is not given. “What good does that do?” James asks. Faith that does not result in actions is no more effective than a pious wish for the poor person to be warmed and fed. Words without action accomplish nothing.

2:17 A conviction or intellectual belief that refuses to obey the commands of Christ is unprofitable—it is dead. Good deeds are the fruit of living faith. If there are no positive actions, then the professed faith is no faith at all—it is dead and useless. The right actions prove our faith to be real faith. Believing involves faith keeping company with action. If those around us note our actions, they should be led to know the faith that motivates them. If others hear us speak of faith, they must also see us act out that faith.

2:18 This someone considers faith and good deeds to be separate and alternate expressions of Christianity. “You do your deeds, I’ll have my faith, and we’ll be religious in our own ways.” But the two cannot be separated without ceasing to be alive. Faith lives in the action it generates; actions require faith to gain a particular meaning.

James responded with a challenge: “I can’t see your faith if you don’t have good deeds, but I will show you my faith through my good deeds.” Faith cannot be demonstrated apart from action. Faith is within us; it can only be seen by the actions it produces through us. Anyone can profess faith, but only action shows its genuineness.

2:19 The acceptance of a creed (even a true one) is not enough to save anyone. The demons have complete and thorough conviction that there is one God, but they are terrified by that truth. They believe in God only to hate and resist him in every way they can. Their “faith” even moves them to a negative reaction, while the faith of some of James’s readers isn’t real enough to give them a shiver. The demons tremble in terror and demonstrate that their “faith” is real, though misdirected.

2:20 James addresses his hypothetical person who held the above views, calling that person a fool. The foolish person is literally a “hollow man.” If the faith around which we build our lives turns out to be empty, we are truly hollow people. When will you ever learn that faith that does not result in good deeds is useless? There are times when we need more teaching or understanding in order to respond to God’s direction. But most often we know what needs to be done, yet are unwilling to act. When it comes to putting into practice what we know, is it our habit to obey God?

2:21 From his own case studies, James now turns to historical figures from the Old Testament that he expects will confirm what he has been teaching about the importance of active faith. Abraham was one of the Old Testament figures most revered by the Jews (see Genesis 11:27–25:11 for Abraham’s biography). Abraham’s remarkable obedience in being willing to sacrifice his son at God’s command was evidence of the works for which Abraham was declared right with God.

What was Abraham doing when he offered his son Isaac on the altar? He was trusting God. The lesson we can draw from Abraham’s life is not a comparison between his sacrifices and ours. We can expect that in one way or another, our faith will have to grow from internal trust to external action. Eventually, like Abraham, we too will have to answer the question, “Do I really trust God?”

2:22 Abraham had great faith in God (Genesis 15:6), but James points out that Abraham’s faith was much more than just belief in the one God—the fruit of Abraham’s great faith was in his deeds: His faith was made complete by what he did—by his actions. His faith produced his actions, and his actions completed his faith, meaning they “perfected” or “matured” it. Mature and complete believers are produced through perseverance in trials; mature and complete faith is produced through works of obedience to God. Faith and works should not be confused with each other, but neither can they be separated from each other.

2:23 Abraham believed God, so God gave Abraham the status of a right relationship with him—and this happened before Abraham’s noted works (such as his willingness to sacrifice Isaac), and even before Abraham was circumcised (see Paul’s words in Romans 4:1-17). The Scriptures to which James is referring is Genesis 15:6, “Abraham believed God, so God declared him to be righteous.” James showed that Abraham’s righteousness was the basis and reason for all those actions. Because of Abraham’s great faith and obedience, he held the privileged status of being called “the friend of God” (see also 1 Chronicles 20:7; Isaiah 41:8). Acting out our trust in God will lead to friendship with him, as it did in Abraham’s case.

2:24 We are made right with God by what we do, not by faith alone. Many have said that this statement contradicts Paul’s position, who wrote: “We are made right with God through faith and not by obeying the law” (Romans 3:28). Indeed, if both James and Paul used the term “made right” (justified) in the same way, this verse would contradict Paul’s teaching about justification by faith alone. But for James, being “made right” refers to God’s final verdict over our entire Christian lives, whereby we are declared righteous for having lived a life that was faithful to the end. For Paul, being “made right” is the initial granting of righteousness upon a person’s acceptance of Christ. For James, “works” (what we do) are the natural products of true faith; for Paul, “works” (“obeying the law”) are what people were trying to do in order to be saved. For James, faith alone is the shallow belief in an idea; no commitment or life change is involved. For Paul, faith is saving faith—the belief that brings about an intimate union with Christ and results in salvation and obedience.

Paul made clear that a person enters into God’s Kingdom only by faith; James made clear that God requires good deeds from those who are in the Kingdom.

A person receives salvation by faith alone, not by doing works of obedience; but a saved person does works of obedience because of that faith. For people who rely on their religious “busyness” for their salvation or merit before God, Paul’s words are critical—those works alone can do nothing to save them. For people who rely on their intellectual assent of a belief, with only a verbal commitment, James’s words are critical—their belief alone can do nothing to save them.

Two brief questions that help us monitor our spiritual health are: Who am I trusting? and Why am I working? If we are trusting anyone (including ourselves) other than Christ as the source and provider of our justification, we are lost. If we are acting for any reason other than in obedience and thanksgiving to Christ for what he has done for us, we are lost. We only truly find our salvation in Christ. Out of our trust in him will flow action.

2:25 In the same way, even Rahab the prostitute was made right with God by her actions. God’s final judgment on a person’s life considers the righteousness that person shows through works. But why would James bring up Rahab? After speaking of the great faith of Abraham, the father of Israel, James cited the example of Rahab, a pagan woman with a bad reputation (see Joshua 2:1-24;

6:22-25). But these two people, as opposite as they were, cemented James's argument—both people were made right with God on the basis of their actions that resulted from their faith. The contrast is not between faith and works, but between genuine faith and false faith.

2:26 Faith and good deeds are as important to each other as body and spirit. Good deeds are not added to faith; instead, the right kind of faith is faith that “works,” that results in good deeds. Otherwise, Christianity is nothing more than an idea.

No one is moved to action without faith; no one's faith is real unless it moves him or her to action. The action is obedience to God. This draws us back to James's words in the first part of this chapter concerning care for others. The believer must do what God calls him to do—serve his brothers and sisters in Christ, refuse to discriminate among them, and help them out with good deeds.

Understanding how faith and deeds work together still doesn't mean that our lives will be different. James is about to continue with a series of life situations that we all encounter. It is in these everyday events that we demonstrate our faith to be alive or dead. From time to time, we need to take our own spiritual pulse by matching our lives with God's word. But we also need to have people around us, the body of Christ, whom we can ask, “How do you see me putting my faith in Christ into action?”

JAMES 3

CONTROLLING THE TONGUE / 3:1-12

In the early church, teachers were very important. Both the survival and spiritual depth of believers depended on them. In the church at Antioch, they were ranked in status with the prophets who sent out Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13:1). Teachers were the point of contact for all new believers because converts needed instruction in the facts of the gospel, and teachers would build them up in the faith. The problem, however, was that some teachers had the ability to communicate but were driven by very worldly motivations. They would take leading positions in a church, form cliques, and use their teaching positions to criticize others. In this way, they could maintain their position and importance.

In this chapter, James's immediate concern is with the speech of false teachers who are ruining believers with their uncontrolled tongues. From that immediate concern he launches into the wider area of the use of speech among believers.

3:1 James taught that people should not rush to become teachers in the church. Many of his status-conscious readers would have desired the reputable position of teachers in the community. Coming hard on the heels of chapter 2, one of the most honorable “works” that would immediately come to the Jewish mind would be the position of teaching. James has in mind a greater emphasis on spiritual growth and self-control before someone assumed the role of a teacher. Teachers will be judged by God with greater strictness. Teaching authority carries with it greater responsibility. As works reveal the depths of a person's faith, so words show the depth of a person's maturity. The teacher is held to greater accountability because of his or her key teaching role (Luke 12:42-48).

3:2 We all make many mistakes or slip up when we are off guard. We all stumble, but our most frequent failures occur when we are speaking. Because we are prone to make mistakes in our speech, we need to be even more careful to let God control what we say. He is capable of guiding our motivation, our thoughts, our very choice of words, and even the impact our communication has on others.

Many people may think that it is impossible to control their tongues, but most people haven't even begun to try. The ability to control the tongue is the mark of true maturity for the Christian (see 1:19, “be slow to speak”). When Jesus confronted the religious leaders about their accusations against him, he said that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks—showing that what is inside of a person affects what they do with their speech (Matthew 12:33-37). He also said that we must give account for every careless word we utter (Matthew 12:36). People who can control their tongues will be able to control themselves in every other way. The wisdom and love from God and the self-restraint given by the Holy Spirit will help us exercise this control. (See Proverbs 15:1-4 for more on how a mature person controls his or her tongue.)

3:3-5 Bit . . . Rudder . . . Tongue . . . Spark. What do these things have in common? They are all small but very effective controllers—they each direct something much larger than themselves. James is building a case for the damaging power of our words. We see this evidenced in history when dictators such as Adolph Hitler, the Ayatollah Khomeini, Joseph Stalin, and Saddam Hussein used their words to mobilize people to destroy others. We see it evidenced in church splits and in the ruining of a pastor's reputation. And we see how verbal abuse in the home can destroy the very personhood and character of spouses and children.

Satan uses the tongue to divide people and pit them against one another. Idle words are damaging because they quickly spread destruction. We dare not be careless with our words, thinking that we can apologize later, because even when we do, the damage remains. A few words spoken in anger can destroy a relationship that took years to build. Remember that words are like fire; they can neither control nor reverse the damage they do.

3:6 The tongue is full of wickedness because of the damage it can cause in the world and bring to the rest of the Christian community. The uncontrolled tongue can turn one's life into a blazing flame of destruction. This means that the tongue can destroy all the good that we've built up over a lifetime. While we have ministered for years and years and seen abundant fruit, if we fail to control the tongue, we can undo all the good we have built up in our years of ministry. Our speech has a power that few other capabilities possess, for our tongue can be set on fire by hell itself. Flames of hate, prejudice, slander, jealousy, and envy seem to come from the very lake of fire where Satan will be punished (see Revelation 20:10, 14-15 for more on the lake of fire).

3:7-8 Although people can tame all kinds of animals . . . no one can tame the tongue. Why? Because it is an uncontrollable evil, full of deadly poison. The tongue is always capable of evil; it remains untamed throughout life. With our tongues we can lash out and destroy. By recognizing the tongue's deadly capacity, we can take the first steps to keep it under control.

No person can tame the tongue, but Christ can. To do it, he goes straight for the heart (Mark 7:14-15; Psalm 51:10) and the mind (Romans 12:1-2). We should not try to control our tongues with our own strength; we should rely on the Holy Spirit. He will give us increasing power to monitor and control what we say. For when we feel offended or unjustly criticized, the Spirit will remind us of God's love and keep us from reacting. The Holy Spirit will heal the hurt and keep us from lashing out. We can make sure we are in the Spirit's control by incorporating Scripture into our lives and by asking the Spirit to direct our thoughts and actions each day.

3:9-10 How strange that the tongue is able to speak praises to our Lord and Father at one time, and then it breaks out into curses against other people. We should have the same attitude of respect for fellow human beings as we have for God, because they are created in his image. Yet we have this horrible, double-sided tongue, so that blessing and cursing come pouring out of the same mouth.

Some people think that the only restraint against foul talk, calling people names, and bad language is social disapproval. But God's word condemns it. James says that the reason we should not curse people is because they have been made in God's likeness. We should not use any word or name that reduces them to anything less than their full stature as God's created beings.

3:11-12 A spring cannot have both fresh and bitter water. Although different kinds of water won't bubble from the same opening, Christians' speech can be very inconsistent. One time we may speak in a way that honors God and another time in a way that gives Satan power to operate. We can choose how we will respond. If we do not, we give Satan an opening to control us. We should produce the kind of fruit that we've been created and regenerated to produce—the fruit of righteousness (see James 3:18)—just as you would expect to pick olives from an olive tree. Only a renewed heart can produce pure speech. If the source of our thoughts and actions is the love of God in our lives, then we will not be able to generate the kind of negative speech that James warns us against.

WISDOM FROM HEAVEN / 3:13-18

James lays down a challenge before the church for those who claimed to have true wisdom: they need to observe the true wisdom that comes from heaven. The church James wrote to was a church under pressure. When under pressure, a church can split into factions. There was no formal clergy or ordination process, so self-styled teachers could emerge, claiming to have wisdom. As each teacher promoted his brand of wisdom and gained a following, the community of believers was divided. In the New Testament church there were many problems with factions or a “party spirit” (see Acts 6; 1 Corinthians 1; see also Philippians 1:17; 2:3).

Jesus taught that we would know true teachers from false ones by how they lived (Matthew 7:15-23). Good teachers will exemplify good life-disciplines. Their activities, actions, and accomplishments will reveal the true heart of their Christian faith. In this section, good deeds are contrasted with bitterness, and humility is contrasted with selfish ambition.

3:13 The truly wise person demonstrates his or her understanding of Christ by the way he or she lives. Our works show where our hearts are invested (Matthew 6:19-21, 33). Do our attitudes and motives match our actions? While we may not claim to be wise, we can aim at living in wise ways—a life of steady goodness. The guidance given to us in God’s word is dependable wisdom. But as we seek to do good deeds, we must watch out for pride. Pride is having an attitude of self-importance about the talents and abilities that God has given us and using them to set ourselves up as superior or to be divisive in our relationships with others. Wisdom, then, involves both actions and attitudes in living. A wise life will display not only goodness, but also humility.

3:14 Being bitterly jealous is misguided zeal that results in contentiousness. It is anger at the accomplishments of others. Whenever we find fault with a leader, we must ask ourselves what is motivating us to feel strongly about that person’s failure. Do we actually share the same weakness? Do we imagine ourselves doing better in that role? Or are we, in fact, simply envious of the abilities or success God has allowed him or her to have? A positive answer to any of these ought to make us very careful in how we express our criticisms.

Here and in Philippians 2:3, selfish ambition refers to leaders in the church who are developing a “party spirit.” This produces factions who are for or against the pastor or certain programs, who take sides on issues not necessarily central to the Christian faith. Selfish ambition is the desire to live for one’s self and no one or nothing else, only for what a person can get out of it. In an attempt to persuade others, the person may lose his sense of reason and become fanatical. Having confidence in only his knowledge, he arrogantly lords it over others. Such a person should not brag about being wise for that is the worst kind of lie.

3:15 The source and standards of this kind of wisdom are from the world and not

God. Its teachers are self-centered and shallow. This wisdom doesn't come from faith—it is earthly and unspiritual. “Unspiritual” could refer to the natural man. The term for unspiritual is used in the New Testament for the person who does not have God's Spirit (3:15), or does not accept the guidance that comes from the Spirit of God (1 Corinthians 2:14). This person teaches only the wisdom of this life, based on human feelings and human reasoning alone. The real source of these thoughts is the Devil whose purposes are always destructive; they can produce a climate in the church, at home, and at work that damages relationships. Think of how quickly our words, language, and tone of voice can create a destructive climate.

3:16-17 People filled with jealousy and selfish ambition think they must be first in everything. They cannot stand to see anyone else in the limelight, or have anyone else cast a shadow on what they do. This leads to desires and strategies for revenge that can lead to disaster. By contrast, the following seven characteristics of heavenly wisdom are strung together like pearls. They are what wisdom is and produces.

The wisdom that comes from heaven is . . . pure. To be fruitful for God, we must have moral and spiritual integrity. It is also peace loving. This is peace that goes beyond inner peace; it is opposed to strife. It is peace between people, and between people and God. It must be peace that affects the community. Christians must not only prefer peace, but they should also seek to spread it.

It is gentle at all times. This is the opposite of self-seeking. It does not demand its own right. To be gentle is to make allowances for others, to temper justice with mercy. It is the kind of treatment that we would like to receive from others.

This wisdom is also willing to yield to others. Heavenly wisdom is reasonable, flexible—willing to listen and to change. Just as good soldiers willingly follow orders from their superiors, people with heavenly wisdom willingly follow God's orders and respond to his correction.

This wisdom is also full of mercy and good deeds. God's wisdom is full of God's gracious forgiveness. And his love leads to practical action, helping and serving others. We should be willing to forgive even when the problems we are facing are someone else's fault.

God's wisdom shows no partiality, meaning single-minded and free from prejudice toward people and without double-mindedness toward God (1:5-8). Finally, it is always sincere, meaning “unhypocritical.” God's wisdom makes people genuine.

3:18 Peacemakers are able to plant seeds of peace and reap a harvest of goodness. This section gives three suggestions for controlling the tongue:

1. Seek God's wisdom.
2. Admit jealousy and arrogance without trying to cover them up.
3. Create a climate of peace wherever God leads you.

In Matthew 5:9, Jesus promises that the peacemakers will be blessed. Their reward will be to see right relationships between God and people. (For more on sowing wisdom and truth and reaping righteousness see Psalm 1:3; Proverbs 11:30; Galatians 6:7-10; Philippians 1:11.)

JAMES 4

SUBMIT YOURSELVES TO GOD / 4:1-12

At the end of chapter 3, James explains that false wisdom leads to disorder and every kind of evil (3:16), and that true wisdom has wonderful results (3:17-18). From this poetic description of wisdom expressed in general terms, James returns to practical application. His readers need to know what wisdom is, but they need even more to live wisely. Chapter 4 begins with a challenge to change their current behavior. His questions take on the firmness and commitment of a person who understands that unchallenged evil will not go away. James wants his brothers and sisters to resist not only the practices of evil wisdom, but also the source from which this wisdom springs. His plan requires a declaration of allegiance to God and open rebellion from the Devil's ranks.

We need to feel the impact of these same truths as James describes situations that are only too true in churches today. The quarrels and fights that James observed still characterize the life of the body of Christ and seriously hamper the effective communication of the gospel. Outsiders who look to the church as a place of solace and salvation often find it is full of strife. We desperately need God's wisdom in our churches.

4:1 The word quarrels refers to fighting without weapons, as in personal conflicts. These conflicts have nothing to do with quarrels with the pagan world; these are quarrels within the church, among believers. James is describing a condition where a group has come to a state of war, with open skirmishes breaking out among people. Sides have been chosen, positions have been dug in. In cases like this, believers have ceased being peacemakers (3:18); instead, they live in open antagonism toward one another. The word fights refers to battles with weapons, an armed conflict. It was used figuratively to indicate the struggle between powers, both earthly and spiritual.

Obviously, disagreements will occur in every church. But when they happen, are we wise enough to understand why? Do we know their source? When handled correctly, with godly wisdom, they can lead to growth. Sadly, however, some churches become permanent battlegrounds. New believers find themselves in a cross fire of arguments, resentments, and power struggles that may carry a veneer of spiritual truth, but are more often simply personal conflicts between people. In the process, innocent bystanders are sometimes deeply wounded. Many of us know people who have been alienated from the church because of a conflict that had nothing to do with the gospel.

Fights and quarrels are being caused, not by some external source, but by the people's evil desires. When everyone seeks his or her own pleasure, only strife, hatred, and division can result. At war within suggests a raging battle fought between the desire to do good and the desire to do evil.

4:2 The craving described here becomes so strong that the people scheme and kill to get it. The word kill can be taken as a hyperbole for bitter hatred. Instead of rethinking their desires, the people being described by James resort to jealousy, fights, quarrels, and worse. Yet, for all their anxious self-seeking and antagonism in getting what they want, they still can't possess it.

Why? We learned (from getting our first tricycle or doll to driving our first new car) that fulfilled desires don't satisfy at the level they advertise. Sometimes we actually do get just what we wanted, only to discover that we still do not have what we really needed—the deep contentment that only comes when we are right with God. Trusted alone, our desires will only lead us to the things of this earth and not to the things of God.

In summary, James's message is: The reason you don't have what you want is that you don't ask God for it. In other words, "You don't have what you desire because you don't desire God."

4:3 Almost as bad as not asking is asking wrongly. If we misunderstand the correct use of prayer, we might not pray at all, or we might attempt to manipulate God. Later, James makes it clear that, when we pray, we must humble ourselves before God (4:7). Otherwise we will not be answered. People should not be surprised when their prayers go unanswered because often their whole motive is wrong. They were going to spend what they received on their pleasures (the same word as "desires" in 4:1). The people's desires were so strong that they were fighting, quarreling, and then using prayer to get what they wanted. Their motives were not to help others, but to satisfy themselves.

4:4 The shocking word adulterers graphically describes the spiritual unfaithfulness of the people and intends to jar them into facing their true spiritual condition. These believers were trying to love God and have an affair with the world. The fact that God would express in the strongest terms possible the importance of faithfulness ought to unsettle us. Biblical standards of personal, marital, and spiritual behavior are under a constant attack of erosion. We are bombarded with the message to compromise.

From the world's point of view, we should be flexible, tolerant of sin, and accommodating. But it won't work, because friendship with this world makes a person an enemy of God. For believers, the world and God are two distinct objects of affection, but they are direct opposites. The world is the system of evil under Satan's control, all that is opposed to God. To be friendly with the world, then, is to adopt its values and desires (see also Romans 8:7-8; 2 Timothy 4:10; 1 John 2:15-17). These believers may indeed love God, but they are also infatuated with the benefits of this world's system. They worship God, but they want the influence, living standards, financial security, and perhaps some of the freedom the world offers. These pursuits will only undermine the generosity, caring, and sharing that should characterize Christians.

What then is a believer's proper relationship to the world? Some have used biblical statements like this one from James as a basis for a radical withdrawal from the "world." But withdrawal is not the answer. Although it is true that we are called to be in the world but not to belong to this world (John 17:14), we should love the people in this world enough to give them the gospel. To do so, we need to befriend them without befriending the things of this world that are opposed to God (see 1 John 3:15-17).

4:5 James 4:6 (the next verse) is a quotation from the Old Testament—namely, Proverbs 3:34. However, this expression is not a direct quotation of any verse in the Old Testament. James is following an approach used elsewhere in the New Testament of summarizing Old Testament teaching rather than quoting directly. The Greek text of the phrase, the Holy Spirit, whom God has placed within us, jealously longs for us to be faithful, offers several alternative renderings, so the context must help us determine what the writer meant. Either James was saying that God, who caused his Spirit to dwell in the believers, is jealous for their friendship, or he was saying that the spirit that God put in man is one prone to jealousy—and therefore must be kept in check. The point of the statement is to affirm the believers' friendship with God over against the world.

We may say that we will befriend both God and the world, but in practice, we can only choose one way. The more we give ourselves to the world, the stronger will be our allegiance to the world. The more we give ourselves to God, the stronger will be our bond with him. "Wherever your treasure is, there your heart and thoughts will also be" (Matthew 6:21), said Jesus.

To those who make the wise choice, facing what may seem like a hopeless battle, James adds a wonderful word of hope.

4:6 We will need to rely on God's strength to stand against such evil desires. That strength is available. Quoting from Proverbs 3:34, James offers hope to those who desire friendship with God. God sets himself against the proud because pride makes us self-centered and leads us to conclude that we deserve all we can see, touch, or imagine. It creates greedy appetites for far more than we need. Pride can subtly cause us to no longer see our sins or our need for forgiveness. But humility opens the way for God's grace to flow into our lives; thus, God shows favor to the humble. Humility is not weakness; instead, it is the only place that believers gain courage to face all their temptations and sins with God's strength. As God gives us more grace, we realize that this world's seductive attractions are only cheap substitutes for what God has to offer. It is our choice—we can humble ourselves and receive God's grace, or we can continue in our pride and self-sufficiency and experience his anger.

How do we, so prone to pride at the very moments when we think we might be approaching humility, discover true humility? How do we become the kind of humble people who find the overflowing grace that God promises? Having revealed our need, James now points clearly to the way.

4:7 We humble ourselves before God by recognizing both his friendship and his authority. We enter a relationship with God, not as equals, but as trusting servants. Although he is not specifically defining the term, James is describing the life of faith. True faith responds to God actively rather than passively. Although God initiates and facilitates all that occurs between us and him, our involvement is never entirely excluded. Personal humility before God is part of living faith.

Satan knows that as long as he can stimulate human pride, he can delay God's plan, even if only temporarily. But as powerful as Satan is, his only power over believers is in his powerful temptations. We can resist the Devil, and he will flee from us. Conversely, a lack of resistance will practically guarantee ongoing harassment by Satan (see also Ephesians 6:10-18 and 1 Peter 5:6-9).

Once we have identified the Devil as our enemy, we need to understand who he is and how he operates in order to effectively resist him. The Devil's primary purpose is to separate man from God. Destined for destruction, he wants to take as much of creation with him as he possibly can. Among the reasons we so desperately need God's grace is that we are locked in mortal combat with a superior enemy. We need God's help to resist Satan's separating schemes and instead draw near to God.

The commands that follow, and indeed the rest of this letter, are footnotes on the above two statements. Both humility before God and resistance of the Devil are required.

4:8 The idea of humility before God now includes the added benefit of God's immediate response. We can draw close to God, and God will draw close to us. The command to wash your hands means to purify our actions and change our external behavior. The way we live matters to God. As we draw near to God, we will become aware of habits and actions in our lives that are not pleasing to him. Washing our hands pictures the removal of these things from the way we live. We must distance ourselves from the sins that God points out.

Similarly, the command to purify your hearts calls for purity of thoughts and motives—changes on the inside. The people could not remain hypocrites, trying to love both God and the world. Purity of heart, then, implies single-mindedness.

4:9 As God draws near to us, we ought to sense our unworthiness. After all, we are being allowed to approach the holy, perfect God.

James has described a long spiritual process in the last eight verses. He began by describing people in conflict with each other and within themselves. Then he described the source of those conflicts as inappropriate desires motivated in large part by trying to stay close to the world and to God. Unmasking of such a life and calling believers to humility may not be a welcome message. Surrender may not come easily. Long-held desires may respond with defiance. Repentance may have to include remembering how far we have broken from God's way before we have turned back.

These different terms, sorrow, deep grief, sadness, and gloom, capture the struggle of a soul drawing near to God. There is a dying which takes place. This is a call to deep and heartfelt repentance. The people's laughter (scornful laughter that refused to take sin seriously) and their joy in the world's pleasures need to be completely changed—to mourning over their sins (see also Luke 6:25). Until this happens, there is no room for the laughter of real freedom and the joy of the Lord. The Christian life involves joy—but when we realize our sins, we must be mournful so that we can repent. Only after mourning can we move on to joy in the grace God gives us.

4:10 To bow down before the Lord and to admit our dependence on him means recognizing that our worth comes from God alone. It is recognizing our desperate need for his help and submitting to his will for our lives. Although we do not deserve God's favor, he reaches out to us in love and gives us worth and dignity, despite our human shortcomings. When we do so, the promise is sure: he will lift us up and give us honor. One of the most touching biblical illustrations of this truth is found in Jesus' parable of the forgiving father (see Luke 15:11-32). The son took his inheritance and set out to be the world's best friend. It was not until he found himself bankrupt in every way that he repented. He returned home, grieving. The son confessed to his father that he was unworthy to be called a son. But the father lifted him up and welcomed him back into the family. The act of returning required submission. The wayward son's words of repentance required humility. The end result was great joy. Humility before God will be followed by his lifting us up.

4:11 With an abrupt shift from describing an appropriate attitude toward God, James turns to the proper relations between believers. We love God by being humble before him; we love our neighbor by refusing to speak evil. To speak evil can take many forms. We may speak the truth about a person and still be unkind, or we may spread gossip that others have no business knowing. We may be questioning someone's authority or nullifying their good work by backbiting. Obviously, this hurts the harmony among believers (see also Romans 1:29-30; 2 Corinthians 12:20; 1 Peter 2:1). The tense in the Greek reveals that James is forbidding a practice that is already in progress. The people were in the habit of criticizing one another.

This verse includes the sixth and seventh times in his letter that James has mentioned God's law (see 1:25; 2:8-10, 12). It is the royal law—the law that frees or convicts, the law that must be kept. Here the law is under attack. The specific problem being confronted violates the ninth commandment: “Do not testify falsely against your neighbor” (Exodus 20:16). It also violates the more fundamental law of Christ, “Love your neighbor as yourself” (Matthew 22:39; see also Leviticus 19:18). Jesus called this the second greatest commandment (Mark 12:31). If a believer speaks against another believer, he is criticizing and condemning the law because he is not showing love and is not treating others as he would like to be treated. His disobedience shows disregard for the law, for he is passing judgment on its validity. By doing so, he is putting himself above God. When we judge one another in this slanderous way, we are clearly failing to submit to God.

4:12 God alone is both the source and enforcer of the law. We who are accountable to God's law cannot place ourselves in God's place. God rewards those who obey the law and destroys those who disobey (see Deuteronomy 32:39; 1 Samuel 2:6; Psalm 68:20; 75:6-7; Matthew 10:28). James also takes away any rights we might claim for criticizing our neighbors. Behind the critical spirit is an attitude that usurps God's authority and is full of pride. There should be no critical, harsh faultfinding in the body of Christ. The principle in this verse does not prohibit the proper action of a church against a member who is acting in flagrant disobedience to God (1 Corinthians 5–6). Rather, James is concerned with the critical speech that condemns or judges others' actions and their standing with God. He is confronting individuals who might be tempted to set themselves up as personal watchdogs on other believers.

We might think that just criticizing a church member or spreading a little interesting gossip is not that serious—especially when compared to other sins. But the Bible sees it as a sin of utmost seriousness because it breaks the law of love and it tries to usurp God's authority. As we saw in chapter 3, the tongue is a tool of deadly sin. We dare not minimize its danger.

TRUST GOD IN MAKING PLANS / 4:13-17

James maintains the passion of the last section in this new one. The progression has moved from humbling ourselves and our relationships to God, to our future and the need to entrust it to God.

This section includes three essential facts of life that make for good planning:

1. God is in control (4:15)
2. Life is a daily gift (4:15)
3. All our going and doing must be carried out with the first two points in mind.

This section is not an argument against making careful plans; rather, it is a caution to submit to God, even in our planning.

4:13 The you people is most likely businesspeople. Addressing this letter to scattered people presumes, at least in part, people moving to establish new lives in distant places. But its lessons apply to any situation that requires planning.

Planning is not evil—in fact, businesspeople are wise to plan ahead. The problem that James addresses, however, is that God is not included in those plans. The merchants plan with arrogance, thinking they can go wherever they like and stay for as long as they like. Their way of planning, doing business, and using money may be honest, but it is really no different than the planning of any pagan businessperson. These Christian business people ought to know better.

4:14 There is a problem with these well-made plans—no one can know what will happen tomorrow, to say nothing of a year in the future (see Proverbs 27:1; Luke 12:16-21). These people were planning as if their future was guaranteed. James is not suggesting that they make no plans because of possible disaster, but to be realistic about the future as they trust God to guide them.

Because the future is uncertain, it is even more important that we completely depend on God. Our lives are uncertain, like the morning fog that covers the countryside in the morning and then is burned away by the sun. Life is short no matter how long we live. We shouldn't be deceived into thinking we have plenty of time left to live for Christ, to enjoy our loved ones, or to do what we know we should. Today is the day to live for God! Then, no matter when our lives end, we will have fulfilled God's plans for us.

4:15 Believers cannot live independently of God; therefore, our plans cannot ignore him. We must make sure those plans include the clause, if the Lord wants us to. We are to plan, but we are to recognize God's higher will and divine sovereignty. This means far more than simply saying, "If God wills," whenever we speak about future plans, for that too can become meaningless. It means planning with God as we make our plans. Our plans should be evaluated by God's standards and goals, and they should be prayed over with time spent listening for God's advice. Such planning pleases God.

4:16 These businesspeople, instead of focusing on God's will in their plans, were arrogantly boasting as though they could control their own destiny. Such boasting is evil because it takes no thought of God.

4:17 This verse sums up all of chapters 1–4 and the entire ethical problem in the whole book of James. He may be telling these merchants that they know what they should do—that is, honor God in their business practices. If they ignore that, they sin. In a broader sense, James adds these words as an admonition for all his readers to do what he has written: it is sin to know what you ought to do and then not do it. They have been told, so they have no excuse.

We tend to limit sins to specific acts—doing wrong. But James tells us that sin is also not doing what is right. (These two kinds of sin are sometimes called sins of commission and sins of omission.) It is a sin to lie; it can also be a sin to know the truth and not tell it. It is a sin to speak evil of someone; it is also a sin to avoid that person when you know he needs your friendship. We should be willing to help others as the Holy Spirit guides us. If God has directed you to do a kind act, to render a service to others, or to restore a relationship—do it. You will experience a renewed and refreshed vitality to your Christian faith.

JAMES 5

WARNING TO THE RICH / 5:1-6

Chapter 1 included the challenge to see that humble circumstances have distinct spiritual benefits (see 1:9-11) as opposed to riches, which require humility. In chapter 2, James warned about the destructiveness of preferential treatment based on wealth. At the end of chapter 4, James warned against being seduced by the world. He begins chapter 5 by warning wealthy non-Christians of their hopeless end and the worthlessness of their riches. Their wealth will not save them from God's judgment. This should comfort the believers, knowing that any wrongs against them will be avenged. It should also be a clear warning that they shouldn't make riches the focus of their desires because, ultimately, riches amount to nothing.

5:1 These rich people are probably not believers, but rich nonbelievers (perhaps the same people referred to in 2:6). Very likely the wealthy landowners are the objects of James's scathing rebuke. These rich people have lavish surroundings, plenty of food, plenty of money. But there are terrible troubles ahead of them—not earthly suffering, but eternal suffering—and they should be wailing in sorrow for what they will lose then. The words weep and groan were often used in the Old Testament by the prophets to describe the reaction of the wicked when the Day of the Lord (the day of God's judgment) arrives (see Isaiah 13:6; 15:3; Amos 8:3). Jesus said that those who would be excluded from God's Kingdom would be weeping and gnashing their teeth (Matthew 8:12; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30).

5:2 The instability of wealth is the clearest warning of the coming "troubles" of the rich. Goods that are rotting and clothing that turns to rags indicate the impermanence of life. Their money, security, lavishness, and self-indulgence are as good as rotted because they can do nothing for them in eternity.

5:3 Precious metals have been hoarded away, unused. When it is kept from being used to help others, wealth becomes worthless. James warns us that even what seems most indestructible (gold and silver) is doomed if it is not put to good use. The uselessness of hoarded gold and silver will eat away at them in hell. It will reveal the greed, selfishness, and wickedness of the rich. They failed to do good with what they had, and that was sin (4:17).

Few people in the Western world can read this passage with understanding and not be at least singed by its truth. We have probably added a new dimension to the problem in that we have not hoarded in order to preserve for later; rather, we have hoarded in order to waste. Believers today find themselves participating in society's tendency to consume as much as possible without regard to the conditions elsewhere in the world, or even what we will leave to our children and grandchildren. Will not our treasure stand as evidence against us on the day of judgment?

5:4 These field workers worked for rich people during the day and would be paid at the end of the day. They were poor peasants. Most likely they had been forced off their own land by foreclosures, and then they hired themselves out to the wealthy holder of a huge estate. They lived on the verge of starvation—today's wages bought tomorrow's food. If a worker did not receive his pay, his whole family went hungry. If the owner refused to pay, there was little or nothing the worker could do. The money that should have gone to the workers is also evidence against these rich people. The cries of the withheld wages and of the reapers have reached the ears of the Lord Almighty. The only resource the poor had was to call out to God.

If we are facing oppression, faith requires that we remember God is our strength and our defender. Temporary circumstances do not change the fact of God's sovereignty. God will protect us from spiritual evil in this life and give us the joys we desire in the next. He will insure that justice will be done, and he will judge the oppressors.

5:5 The lifestyles of the rich and famous may make interesting media fodder, but they are noxious to God. These rich, who have taken the land from the poor and then refused to pay their deserved wages, have shown gross lack of concern and selfishness. To this they have added an attitude of wastefulness and self-indulgence that God detests.

A life of luxury and satisfying every whim is essentially worthless. Money will mean nothing when Christ returns, so we should spend our time accumulating treasures that will be worthwhile in God's eternal Kingdom. Money itself is not the problem: Christian leaders need money to live and support their families; missionaries need money to help them spread the gospel; churches need money to do their work effectively. It is the love of money that leads to evil (1 Timothy 6:10) and causes some to oppress others to get more. This is a warning to all Christians who are tempted to adopt worldly standards rather than God's standards (Romans 12:1-2) and an encouragement to all those who are oppressed by the rich.

For these rich people, their treasure is worldly wealth. They have enjoyed life, feasting as they would on the day when an animal is slaughtered. Ironically, James says that they are like fattened animals ready for the slaughter when the day of God's judgment arrives (see Jeremiah 12:1-3).

5:6 The condemning and killing of good people probably was both active and passive. Inconvenient people may indeed have been murdered; but more likely, the poor people who could not pay their debts were thrown in prison or forced to sell all their possessions. With no means of support and no opportunity even to work off their debts, these poor people and their families often died of starvation. God also considered this murder. Either way, in the unjust system, it was legal. The poor had no power to defend themselves. Their only recourse against the evil rich was to cry out to God.

The conditions that James is describing may seem hopeless. Many of the rich will not repent. Believers can live with hope, however, because Christ is coming back. He will bring judgment and justice. It is to Christ's return that James now turns.

PATIENCE IN SUFFERING / 5:7-12

The believers, most of whom were poor, were frequently exploited by the rich and were persecuted because of their faith. This external pressure led to problems in the church as their frustration reached the boiling point. James encouraged the believers to be patient until the Lord's return. But the patience he describes is not passive. It is a patience that involves action. In this section, James illustrates some helpful sources for personal application. After speaking of the need for patience, he proceeds to reveal a number of different lessons that reinforce and apply his theme. The principle of patience will not mean much unless we can apply it to our lives. By looking at life through James's eyes, we discover there are many ways God gives us guidance and encouragement.

5:7 The believers are to be patient even in the midst of injustice. The believers need to endure, trust in God through their trials, and refuse to try to get even for wrongs committed against them (see also 1:2, 12; Psalm 37). But patience does not mean inaction. There was work to be done—serving God, caring for one another, and proclaiming the Good News. There is an end point, a time when patience will no longer be needed—the Lord's return. At that time, everything will be made right. The early church lived in constant expectation of Christ's return, and so should we. Because we don't know when Christ will return to bring justice and remove oppression, we must wait with patience (see 2 Peter 3:8-10).

As an example of patience, James talks about the farmer who must patiently wait for the precious harvest to ripen. Patience must be exercised and developed between the rains. Even nonfarmers have plenty of opportunities to develop patience. The waiting for the arrival of a baby, starting a new job, finishing school, waiting for a loved one's visit, slowly improving health during a prolonged illness—all these situations try our patience. We will exercise patience as we concentrate on the end result of our waiting. God's way is seldom the quick way, but it is always the complete way.

5:8 Instead of being like the rich people of verse 5 who have “fattened” their hearts on the wealth of this world, believers are to allow the assurance of Christ's return to help them be patient and take courage. Whatever the circumstances, James encourages us to be rock solid in our faith and to have a faith-inspired joy that permeates every part of life (see 1:2-4). Like the farmer, we invest a long time in our future hope. The farmer is at the mercy of the weather—it is outside his control. But we do know that the coming of the Lord is near.

5:9 These believers, facing persecution from the outside and problems on the inside, may naturally find themselves grumbling and criticizing one another. James doesn't want them to be filled with resentment and bitterness toward each other—that would only destroy the unity they so desperately need. Refusing to grumble about each other is part of what it means to be patient (5:7). Grumbling against one another indicates a careless attitude of speech. Because of the dangers created by our speech (see James 3:1-12), we cannot afford to be lax in the way we speak to and about each other.

James has already mentioned the great Judge (4:12). This Judge is not far away, but standing at the door. James is warning believers not to be in the middle of judging, quarreling, criticizing, or gossiping when the one they should be serving returns. Knowledge of Christ's presence is not only comforting; it can also be convicting—especially when we begin behaving as if he were far away.

5:10 Jewish Christians knew the stories of the prophets, many of whom suffered greatly or were killed for proclaiming God's message (for example, see Elijah in 1 Kings 19:1ff; Jeremiah in Jeremiah 38; Amos in Amos 7). James is reminding his readers that even those who spoke in the name of the Lord had to have patience in suffering. Part of his point is that God does not preserve from suffering those he has called; rather, he preserves them in suffering. They are an example to all believers because of their obedience and faithfulness despite the hardships they endured.

5:11 Here James is leading his readers to apply the lessons from Old Testament lives. For instance, Job may offer us a fascinating look at ancient history and an interesting biography, but Job's best work is as a teacher: one who has suffered and can help us cope with suffering. His life is an example we need to follow. Job may have complained, but he did not stop trusting or obeying God (see Job 1:21; 2:10; 16:19-21; 19:25-27). And the Lord did deliver and restore him (see Job 42:12). The believers, after all the suffering they had endured thus far, were encouraged not to give up—God would deliver and reward them.

We can see clearly from Job's life that perseverance is not the result of understanding. Job never received an explanation from God for his suffering. This is partly because pain is often a part of life that must be endured beyond explanations. There are many things we can understand, but not everything. God's purpose is not that we just develop a mind full of explanations and answers; his purpose is to bring us to a place where we trust him. God does not enjoy watching his people suffer. He allows them to face such pain because a greater good will be produced. In the meantime, James encourages his readers to trust in God, wait patiently, persevere, and remember God's tenderness and mercy.

5:12 James is referring to Jesus' words in Matthew 5:34-37. Taking oaths was a common practice, and James wanted it discontinued among the believers. People made disrespectful or arrogant verbal guarantees that they themselves could reverse by legal technicalities. Like boldfaced warranties with lots of fine print, these oaths were intended to create an impression of truth—but those who uttered them did not really expect to be held to them. Christians should never need to take an oath in order to guarantee the truth of what they say. Our honesty should be unquestionable. Believers should not need oaths, for their speech should always be truthful. There should be no reason for them to have to strengthen a statement with an oath. God will judge our words.

Should we take oaths in court? The oaths forbidden here are those used in casual conversation, not formal oaths taken in a court of law. Legal oaths are intended to bind those who make them. Perjury is a serious offense. Most scholars conclude that James does not require us to refuse to take oaths in court.

A person with a reputation for exaggeration or lying often can't get anyone to believe him on his word alone. For example, this person might say, "I promise!" or "I swear!" Christians should never become like that. Always be honest so that others will believe your simple yes or no. By avoiding lies, half-truths, and omissions of the truth, you will become known as a trustworthy person.

FAITHFUL PRAYER / 5:13-18

James closes his letter as he began it, with a call to prayer. James uses his closing words to describe effective prayer. He details prayer in several forms (praise, intercession, confession) and connects prayer with several other important spiritual disciplines (healing, confession, anointing, correction, praise, and mutual forgiveness). If we can say that James's letter summarizes the work of faith, his conclusion focuses on faith's finest work—believers effective in prayer.

5:13 There are many responses to suffering. Some of us worry; some of us vow revenge against those who have caused the suffering; some of us let anger burn inside us. Some grumble. But James says the correct response to suffering is to keep on praying about it (see also Psalm 30; 50:15; 91:15). This is not necessarily a prayer for deliverance from the trouble, but for the patience and strength to endure it.

If we are fortunate enough to be happy, we should thank God by singing praises to the Lord (see also 1 Corinthians 14:15; Ephesians 5:19; Colossians 3:16). Because our praise is directed to God, singing is actually another form of prayer.

5:14 One characteristic of the early church was its concern over and care for the sick. Here James encourages the sick to call for the elders of the church for counseling and prayer. The elders were spiritually mature people responsible for overseeing local churches (see 1 Peter 5:1-4). The elders would pray over the sick person, calling upon the Lord for healing. Then they would anoint him with oil in the name of the Lord. As the elders prayed they were to voice clearly that the power for healing resided in the name of Jesus. Anointing was often used by the early church in their prayers for healing. In Scripture, oil was both a medicine (see the parable of the Good Samaritan in Luke 10:30-37) and a symbol of the Spirit of God (as used in anointing kings; see 1 Samuel 16:1-13). Thus the oil may have been a sign of the power of prayer, and it may have symbolized the setting apart of the sick person for God's special attention.

5:15 The prayer must be from the heart, sincere, with trust in and obedience to God behind it, and with no doubting, as in 1:5-8. The faith is the role of the elders who are praying, not the sick person's (nothing is said about his or her faith). It is possible that the sick person's faith is exercised in calling the elders.

Also, if there is need for confession, the elders will be able to minister to the individual. The process insures dependence of believers on each other.

Not the elders or the oil, but the Lord himself does the healing. Does this mean that every prayer for healing guarantees that God will make the sick person well? It must be emphasized here that the prayer offered is a prayer offered in faith—not only the faith that believes God can heal, but also the faith that expresses absolute confidence in God’s will. A true prayer of faith will acknowledge God’s sovereignty in his answer to that prayer. It is not always God’s will to heal those who are ill (see 2 Corinthians 12:7-9). A prayer for healing must be qualified with a recognition that God’s will is supreme.

Sin may or may not be the cause of the illness, but an opportunity for confession is given, and the elders are there to receive it. No demand of confession is given, but the opportunity is given that anyone who has committed sins will be forgiven. This condition is important because all too often we are prone to assume that sin is the cause of someone’s suffering. The Bible teaches that sin can cause sickness (see Mark 2:1-12; 1 Corinthians 5:5; 11:27-30), but it also notes clearly that this is not always the case (see John 9:2-3).

5:16 It is not God’s plan that his people be alone. Members of Christ’s body should be able to count on others for support and prayer, especially when they are sick or suffering. The elders should be on call to respond to the illness of any member, and the church should stay alert to pray for the healing of any who are sick. But we are often not only guilty of hesitating to lean on each other in our sicknesses and weaknesses. We are even more liable not to confess our sins to each other.

The recent emphasis on small groups within churches has risen largely from a need to recapture some of these basic features of life in the body of Christ that have been neglected. When Christians are really working to “share each other’s troubles and problems,” the world does take note, and we come closer to fulfilling “the law of Christ” (see Galatians 6:2). Loving your neighbor as yourself does include, above all else, praying for him or her.

The earnest prayer of a righteous person has great power and wonderful results because the person who is praying is righteous. The person is not sinless, but he or she has confessed known sins to God and is completely committed to him and trying to do his will. Again, we can say that the righteous people get what they want in prayer because they want what God wants.

The Christian’s most powerful resource is communication with God through prayer. It is the instrument of healing and forgiveness and is a mighty weapon for spiritual warfare. The results are often greater than we thought were possible. Some people see prayer as a last resort, to be tried when all else fails. Our priorities are the reverse of God's. Prayer should come first. God is pleased to use our prayers to accomplish his purposes and he delights in answering our needs, but he is never bound by our prayers. God's power is infinitely greater than ours, so it only makes sense to rely on it—especially because God encourages us to do so.

5:17-18 Prayer is indeed powerful—remember Elijah? The story is found in 1 Kings 17:1–18:46. Elijah had great power in prayer. A drought came as a sign to evil King Ahab of Israel that the idol Baal did not have power over the rain, God did. And when Elijah prayed earnestly that no rain would fall, none fell for the next three and a half years. Then he prayed for rain, and down it poured.

James uses Old Testament people to illustrate each of his major themes:

- The nature of faith is found in the lives of Abraham and Rahab (2:21-25).
- Perseverance is exemplified by Job (5:11).
- Effective prayer is exemplified by Elijah (5:17-18).

These lives are important to us. They are examples to be followed. When we choose all our models from contemporary people, we may eventually be disappointed by their failures. Other generations of believers cannot let us down. They made their mistakes, persevered, and are now testimonies that life can be lived for God.

RESTORE WANDERING BELIEVERS / 5:19-20

Behind this question about the identity of the wanderer is a pastoral concern. In practice, it makes no difference whether the wanderer was actually a believer or not—we are commanded to attempt to turn the person back to the faith (see Ezekiel 3:18-21; 33:9; 1 Timothy 4:16). If the wanderer should die while wandering, the pastor or group is left to wonder about the eternal state of that person. Families sometimes agonize over the fate of a loved one who has wandered away from the faith. Frankly, we cannot know. To determine what was really occurring within that person we would have to be God. If we have done what we could to reach out to wanderers while they were still living, we must then turn their eternal destiny over to God. James urges Christians to help backsliders return to God. By taking the initiative, praying for the person, and acting in love, we can meet the person where he or she is and encourage his or her return to God.

5:19 Anyone among you refers to a believer who has fallen away from the faith by becoming involved with idolatry or heresy. No one in the group is immune from wandering. The anyone could be us. To “wander” means a serious departure from the faith—otherwise known as “apostasy.” Truth, as used here, does not refer to peripheral doctrinal concerns, but to the central truth of the Christian faith—namely, that Jesus is the Son of God, the Lord and Savior who died for our sins and rose again from the dead. Choices and actions that lead us toward denying the lordship of the living Christ carry us away from the truth.

When someone wanders away, the church or Christian community ought to try to bring him back again, not for judgment, but for repentance and restoration. When a believer is aware of another believer’s wandering, that knowledge carries with it responsibility for action. All these images portray a community where people care deeply for each other, and wanderers are not allowed to slip through the cracks unnoticed. Are we willing to try to bring back someone who has wandered, or do we simply wring our hands while the person goes off into darkness?

5:20 The error of the wandering sinner is so serious as to lead to death—spiritual, eternal death—if he or she is not brought back (see 1 Corinthians 11:30; 1 John 5:16). But when the believer repents and returns to God, God will forgive, cover over, and forget that person’s sins (see Psalm 32:1; 1 Peter 4:8).

The context is somewhat unclear about the identity of the wanderer. Is it a person who is a believer wandering away, or is it a person in the group who has not truly believed and is wandering away? Christians disagree over whether or not it is possible for people to lose their salvation, but all agree that those who move away from their faith or who are not genuine in their profession are in serious trouble and need to repent. The point of this verse is clear, though: we are to bring the wanderer back—not debate whether or not the person would be lost if we didn’t.

What began with a challenge to endure hardship with joy now closes with an appeal to watch out for each other. Believers are to pursue their faith, together. It is God who saves and keeps, but he allows us to be involved in one another’s Christian life.

It is an unforgettable sight to witness the Christian welcome of someone who has strayed and returned, watching God’s forgiveness work through the body of Christ as believers accept the person who is repenting. From the view of eternity, it must really be like a cover being pulled over many sins.

The letter of James is Christianity with its sleeves rolled up. It is the working person’s practical guide to living the Christian faith. It spells out what it means to follow Jesus day by day. James emphasizes faith in action. Theories are for theologians, but James is interested in life! Right living is the evidence and result of faith. The church must serve with compassion, speak lovingly and truthfully, live in obedience to God's commands, and love one another. The body of believers ought to be an example of heaven's principles applied on earth, drawing people to Christ through love for God and one another. If we truly believe God's word, we will live it day by day. God's word is not merely something we read or think about, but something we do.

1 PETER

INTRODUCTION

Remember when the opposition began? At first, they were subtle—junior high friends decided that going to church was “stupid.” In the later teen years, you found that your Christian lifestyle contrasted sharply with that of most of your peers, and often they would make fun of your purity and stand for Christ. As you grew in age and experience, you discovered that the attacks increased, especially when you spoke up against wrongdoing, took time to help those in need, and shared your faith. Your strong witness by life and word cost you friends and threatened your job.

Regardless of your personal persecution, you probably have not come close to what first-century believers experienced. A quick perusal of Acts will reveal stonings, beatings, imprisonments, murderous plots, and executions—all for spreading the truth about Christ. Some of the most severe of the persecutions came at the hands of Nero. This Roman emperor became obsessed with eliminating Christians and their faith. The Roman historian Tacitus said, “Besides being put to death, [Christians] were made to serve as objects of amusement; they were clad in the hides of beasts and torn to death by dogs; others were crucified, others set on fire to serve to illuminate the night when daylight failed” (Annals 15.44). The price for following Christ was high.

First Peter was written to persecuted Christians, to those living in Rome and throughout the Roman province of Asia. This letter encourages believers to remain strong; it explains how to live during difficult times; it offers hope to all who suffer for the faith. First Peter speaks to believers in all ages—those in the first century and in our century. God tells us how to respond to our tough times, especially when we are persecuted for what we believe. Read 1 Peter and discover courage, strength, and hope.

AUTHOR

Peter: apostle of Christ, one of the original twelve disciples, outspoken leader, and courageous preacher.

We first meet Peter when his brother, Andrew, brings him to Jesus (John 1:40-42). The sons of John (John 1:42; 21:15-17) and probably from Bethsaida in Galilee (John 1:44), Peter and his brother were fishermen on the Sea of Galilee (Matthew 4:18; Mark 1:16) and partners of James and John (Luke 5:10). Peter and Andrew first followed John the Baptist. When John pointed out Jesus as the “Lamb of God” (John 1:29), Andrew accepted his teacher’s testimony and immediately left to get his brother, Simon, to introduce him to the Messiah. Jesus addressed Andrew’s brother as “Simon ” and then changed his name to “Peter,” meaning “rock” or “stone” (John 1:42).

This initial encounter seems to have had little effect on Peter because he returned to Capernaum to continue his vocation as a fisherman, perhaps awaiting further instructions. Subsequently, Jesus twice called Peter to follow him. The call first occurred on the Sea of Galilee, where the four business partners were fishing together. They left their nets to “fish for people” (Matthew 4:18-22). The second, confirming call occurred when Jesus selected the Twelve (Mark 3:13-19).

Almost immediately, Peter assumed the unofficial role of leader of the disciples. He regularly served as their spokesman and is named first in all the lists (see, for example, Matthew 14:28; 15:15; 18:21; 26:35, 40; Mark 8:29; 9:5; 10:28; John 6:68). More than likely, Peter’s leadership arose from his character and personality. Totally devoted to his Lord, Peter enthusiastically spoke out and took the lead.

Belonging to the inner circle of disciples and being a powerful force in the early church, Peter is mentioned in the New Testament more often than all of the other eleven put together. Peter was present when Jesus raised Jairus’s daughter from the dead. He also was privileged to be one of just four to hear Jesus’ discourse on the fall of Jerusalem and the end of the world (Mark 13:3ff). He and only two others (James and John) were at the Transfiguration (Matthew 17:1) and were very close to Jesus in Gethsemane (Mark 14:33). Peter and one other disciple (John) were sent to prepare for the Last Supper (Luke 22:8). Peter also was present when Christ gave the great commission (Matthew 28:16-20) and when he ascended into heaven (Luke 24:44-53).

Although Jesus had renamed him “rock,” at first Peter was anything but rock solid. Impulsive, he often spoke without thinking (see, for example, his rebuke of Christ in Matthew 16:22 and his comments after the Transfiguration in Matthew 17:4), and he jumped to defend Jesus with a sword (John 18:10). Despite his best intentions, Peter tended to respond quite poorly under pressure, falling asleep in the garden during Jesus’ most difficult hour (Matthew 26:40-41) and vehemently denying the Lord when accused of being his follower (Matthew 26:69-74).

Peter’s life provides strong testimony to the reality of the Resurrection and the power of the Holy Spirit. Consider the great contrast between his earlier pattern as leader of the disciples and his later actions as leader of the early church. Peter preached boldly and powerfully, at Pentecost (Acts 2) and beyond. Jailed and then warned by the Jewish religious leaders not to preach about Jesus, Peter did so anyway (Acts 4:13-20). Later, Peter was jailed again, this time by civil authorities. Herod already had executed James, and Peter would be next. But God miraculously released Peter, who continued to minister in Jesus' name (Acts 12:1-19).

Other significant events in the life and ministry of Peter include: leading the disciples through the process of choosing a successor to Judas Iscariot (Acts 1:15-26), condemning Ananias and Sapphira for lying to the Holy Spirit (Acts 5:1-11), denouncing Simon the Sorcerer (Acts 8:18-23), healing Aeneas and restoring Tabitha to life (Acts 9:34-40), baptizing the first Gentile Christians (Cornelius and his household, Acts 10), and participating significantly in the Council at Jerusalem (Acts 15:1-11).

At first, Peter ministered exclusively among the Jews (Acts 1:1–5:41). But that began to change when persecution against Christians intensified in Jerusalem. At this time, many Christians scattered throughout Judea and Samaria, but they preached the gospel as they went, and many Samaritans responded (Acts 8:4-8). Soon thereafter, Peter and John were sent to verify that, in fact, the conversions were real (Acts 8:14-25), and Peter's ministry began to expand. Not long afterward, on a journey throughout the country, teaching believers, healing the sick, and telling the Good News about God's salvation, Peter received a vision from God (Acts 9:32–10:16). Through this vision, Peter realized that Gentiles were no longer to be considered "unclean" and should be told about Christ. Thus, when invited by Roman servants to come to the home of Cornelius, the centurion, Peter agreed and traveled to Caesarea. There, in the home of this Roman soldier, Peter preached and then witnessed the power of God transform these uncircumcised Gentiles (Acts 10:22-48). Later, when Peter explained his actions, the apostles and others praised God (Acts 11:18). Peter learned from personal experience that God's message was for all the world. Later, Peter seems to have become an intermediary between the two main factions of the early church: Jewish Christianity, centered in Jerusalem, and the ministry to the Gentiles, championed by Paul (see Acts 15:6-11).

As described above, after the Ascension, Peter's early ministry was focused in Jerusalem. But then he seems to have traveled beyond, perhaps even to Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia (1:1), the areas mentioned as destinations for this epistle. Eventually, Peter traveled to Rome, where he ministered among the beleaguered believers. This must have occurred after Paul's first imprisonment (A.D. 59–62), for Paul's prison epistles make no mention of Peter. This letter probably was written around A.D. 64, just before the terrible persecution of Christians by Emperor Nero (A.D. 65–67). Strong tradition holds that Peter was executed in Rome by Nero in A.D. 67, crucified upside down, feeling that he was unworthy to die as Jesus had. Jesus' words to Peter in John 21:18-19 seem to imply a death by crucifixion, but no historical proof has been found to confirm this tradition.

By God's mercy, Peter became a fearless and outspoken servant of his risen Lord, eventually dying for his faith. God changed this man, and he can change you, too, into a rock-solid witness for Christ!

That Peter wrote this book bearing his name is attested to by its content. Reminiscences of personal acquaintance with Christ fill this letter (for example, compare 5:5 with John 13:3-5). The content of this epistle also seems to parallel Peter's speeches recorded in Acts. Compare, for example, 1:17 with Acts 10:34; 1:21 with Acts 2:32-36 and Acts 10:40; and 2:7-8 with Acts 4:10-11.

DATE AND SETTING

Written from Rome in about A.D. 64.

According to the unanimous testimony of the early church, Peter ministered in Rome until his martyrdom. Peter wrote this letter from Rome, around A.D. 64, just before the intense persecution of the church under Nero. Rome was the capital city of the vast and mighty Roman Empire, which stretched from Britain to Arabia. With a population of approximately one million, Rome was the diplomatic and trade center of the world and the largest city.

At first, Christianity was tolerated in Rome as a sect of Judaism. But in the last few years of Emperor Nero's reign (he ruled from A.D. 54 until his death in 68), he authorized capturing, torturing, and killing Christians. In A.D. 64, a large part of Rome was destroyed by fire, probably started at Nero's order. The emperor publicly accused the Christians in the city, giving him an excuse for terrible atrocities, including throwing believers to wild dogs in the Colosseum, as a spectator sport. During these terrible persecutions, believers were forced to choose between the emperor and Christ; those who chose Christ often died for their faith. Both Paul and Peter are believed to have been victims of Nero's reign of terror.

Certainly Peter would have seen the mounting persecution, leading him, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, to warn believers of "many trials" (1:6), beatings "for doing right" (2:20), suffering "for doing what is right" (3:14, 17), participating "with Christ in his suffering" (4:13), and suffering "according to God's will" (4:19). With all these warnings, Peter includes words of encouragement and hope (1:7-9; 4:12-19; 5:10-11) and instructions for how to live (1:13-21; 2:1-3, 11-25; 3:1-17; 4:1-11; 5:1-9).

AUDIENCE

Christians scattered throughout Asia Minor.

The opening sentence of 1 Peter identifies the audience as “God’s chosen people who are living as foreigners” in other lands. This phrase and the numerous Old Testament quotes have led many to believe that Peter was writing to Jewish Christians. This probably is not the case, however. Most likely, Peter was writing to Christians of all nationalities.

Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia (1:1) refer to formerly independent territories in northern Asia Minor (modern Turkey). Since 130 B.C., all of these territories had been under Roman control. The population was a mix of many races and cultures, including the native peoples, cultured Greeks, Orientals, and Jews. At the end of the first century A.D., the total population of these five huge provinces was approximately 8.5 million, one million of whom were Jews and eighty thousand, Christians. Luke explains in Acts that Paul did not minister in these northern provinces on any of his missionary journeys. On one occasion, he was forbidden by the Holy Spirit to travel there and directed, instead, to Troas and then to Macedonia (Acts 16:6-12). How this area was evangelized is unknown; perhaps it was through Peter, who may have traveled there with his wife (see 1 Corinthians 9:5) after the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15:1-29), or perhaps through the scattering of the believers.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To offer encouragement and hope to Christians scattered throughout northern Asia Minor.

Peter had suffered much for preaching the gospel of Christ (see Acts 5:17-42; 8:1; 12:1-19)—he was no stranger to persecution. Nor were the Jewish believers who had been ostracized by their unbelieving families and hounded by the Council. But this was a new experience for the Gentile Christians. Christianity was beginning to be considered a separate religion and not simply a Jewish sect. Thus Christians were no longer protected and were being persecuted by the state. This letter implies that these persecutions were just beginning on the local level. As a small minority, believers certainly must have felt like “foreigners” (1:1). Writing from Rome, Peter could see the change in Nero. Surely he could sense the growing threat and would know that more severe persecutions by the state would follow shortly. Peter wrote to encourage and comfort his beloved brothers and sisters and to prepare them for the persecution that was sure to come.

Peter’s letter overflows with feelings of triumph in adversity, looking forward to God’s glorious future. Even as they were suffering, believers could have the confident assurance of God’s work in their lives and of their ultimate salvation.

Peter provides a powerful example of an encourager. He was not writing from a secure location, removed from the hardships of Roman life. Peter lived at the center of the persecution; yet, as he had for decades, he continued to preach courageously about his risen Lord until he, too, became a victim of Nero's murderous schemes. Despite personal hardships, Peter, like Paul, wrote to encourage others, to build them up in their faith, and to give them direction and guidance. In your struggles, do you look inward or outward? Do you tend to feel sorry for yourself or to encourage others?

MESSAGE

Peter begins by thanking God for salvation (1:2-6). He explains to his readers that trials will refine their faith (1:7-9). They should believe in spite of their circumstances; for many in past ages believed in God's plan of salvation, even the prophets of old who wrote about it but didn't understand it. But now salvation has been revealed in Christ (1:10-13). In response to such a great salvation, Peter commands them to live holy lives (1:14-16), to reverently fear and trust God (1:17-21), to be honest and loving (2:1-3), and to become like Christ (2:1-3).

Jesus Christ, as "the living cornerstone" upon whom the church is to be built (2:4, 6), is also the stone that was rejected, causing those who are disobedient to stumble and fall (2:7-8). But the church, built upon this stone, is to be God's holy priesthood (2:9-10).

Next, Peter explains how believers should live during difficult times (2:11–4:11). Christians should be above reproach (2:12-17), imitating Christ in all their social roles—masters and servants, husbands and wives, church members and neighbors (2:18–3:17). Christ should be our model for obedience to God in the midst of great suffering (3:18–4:11). Peter then outlines the right attitude to have about persecution: Expect it (4:12), be thankful for the privilege of suffering for Christ (4:13-18), and trust God for deliverance (4:19). Next, Peter gives some special instructions: Elders should care for God's flock (5:1-4), younger men should be submissive to those who are older (5:5-6), and everyone should trust God and resist Satan (5:7-11). Peter concludes by introducing Silas and by sending personal greetings, possibly from the church in Rome, and from Mark (5:12-14).

The main themes in the book of 1 Peter include: Salvation, Persecution, Christian Living, God's Family, Family Life, and Judgment.

Salvation (1:1-5, 10-12, 18-20; 2:4, 6, 21-25; 3:18-22; 5:4). Salvation is a gracious gift from God. We are God's "elect" (1:1); that is, he chose us out of his love for us, sending Jesus to die in our place, to pay the penalty for our sin. (Seven times in five chapters, 1 Peter refers to believers being "elect" or “chosen.”) The Holy Spirit cleanses us from sin when we believe (1:2; 2:23-24; 3:18). Eternal life belongs to those who trust in Christ. God has promised it, so we can count on it (1:3-5; 5:4).

Peter reminded his readers of the reality of their relationship with Christ. He explained that their salvation was based, not on feelings or circumstances, but on the truth, goodness, and sovereignty of God. They were chosen by God and saved by grace. That truth is the basis of hope.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. No matter what we are going through—pain, persecution, loneliness—we can be confident in our relationship with God if we put our faith in Christ. Our safety, security, and identity rest in him. And think of it: If we experience joy in our relationship with Christ now, how much greater our joy will be when he returns and we see him face-to-face! God has a wonderful future for us; God has chosen us and we belong to him. Such a hope should motivate us to serve Christ with great commitment.

Persecution (1:6-9; 2:19-21; 3:14-17; 4:12-19; 5:10). The recipients of this letter were suffering because of their commitment to Christ. Peter realized this and knew that the persecutions would increase dramatically in the next few years, during Nero’s reign. So Peter wrote to offer faithful believers comfort and hope.

Christians should expect to be ridiculed and rejected for their faith; after all, Christ’s values and virtues contrast greatly with those of the world. Persecution should make believers stronger, however, because it can refine their faith. God’s message through Peter is that followers of Christ can face suffering victoriously, as the Lord did, if they rely on him.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Christians still suffer for what they believe. In some countries, Christians are punished or even killed for their faith. In other countries, they face ridicule and rejection at school, at work, in the neighborhood, and even at home. We should expect persecution, but we don’t have to be terrified by it. We know that God is with us in our suffering, giving us courage, comfort, and peace and strengthening our faith. We also know that one day we will live eternally with Christ. These truths should give us the confidence, patience, and hope to stand firm, even when persecuted.

Christian Living (1:13-25; 2:1-5, 9-21; 3:8-16; 4:1-11, 19; 5:1-12). As a distinct minority in a non-Christian world, Peter urged believers to be holy (1:15-16). This meant keeping their focus on Christ, obeying him, and living as citizens of God’s “holy nation” (2:9). It would involve submitting to authorities (2:13), respecting others (2:17), doing good (3:9-13; 4:19), sharing the Good News (3:15), keeping a clear conscience (3:16), being disciplined (4:7; 5:8), and being humble (5:1-6).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY.

We also live in a non-Christian society, one that is filled with pressures and temptations that threaten to conform us to the world's values and lifestyles. Instead of giving in, we should be "holy," standing out from the crowd because of our love, humility, and discipline—all evidence of our strong commitment to Christ. And we should "always be ready to explain" our faith (3:15), pointing family, friends, coworkers, and neighbors to Christ.

God's Family (1:14, 22; 2:4-10; 3:8; 5:12-14). Believers are privileged to belong to God's family, a community with Christ as the founder and foundation. Everyone in this community is related—all brothers and sisters, loved equally by God. The recipients of this letter were far from Peter, but they were his brothers and sisters in Christ. Although Peter was an apostle and a revered teacher and leader in the church, he was also their brother, a fellow member of God's royal family.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY.

Because Christ is the foundation of our family, we must be devoted, loyal, and faithful to him. By obeying our Lord, we show that we are his children. We may be "foreigners" in this world (1:1), but we are God's "very own possession" (2:9). This means that regardless of the rejection we feel in society, we can feel accepted and loved by our spiritual family. It also means that we should live differently from those who don't know the Lord and make a difference for Christ in the world.

Family Life (3:1-7). Peter encouraged the wives of unbelievers to submit to their husbands' authority as a means of winning them to Christ. He also urged all family members to treat each other with respect, displaying sympathy, love, compassion, and humility.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY.

The family is under attack today, by Satan and by a society that values living for oneself and for the moment. So families are falling apart, with soaring divorce rates and mothers and fathers deserting their spouses and children. Christians should model what the family can and should be. We must treat our family members lovingly, especially those who don't know the Lord. Although it isn't easy, willing service is the best way to influence loved ones. To gain the strength we need for self-discipline and submission, we should pray for God's help.

Judgment (1:17; 3:18-22; 4:7, 17-18; 5:4). God will judge with perfect justice. Everyone who has ever lived will face God, who will punish evildoers and those who have persecuted God's people. Those who have placed their trust in Christ and who love God will be rewarded with life forever in God's presence.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY.

Every person is accountable to God for what he or she has done with Christ and for how he or she has lived. Thus we must leave judgment of others to him. This means not hating or even resenting those who persecute us. Instead, we should pray for them, that they may come to know the Savior too. We also should realize that we will be held responsible for how we live each day. This truth should motivate us to obey God and do what is right.

OUTLINE OF 1 PETER

I. God's Great Blessings to His People (1:1–2:10)

II. The Conduct of God's People in the Midst of Suffering (2:11–4:19)

III. The Shepherding of God's People in the Midst of Suffering (5:1-14)

Peter addressed his letter to the churches located throughout Bithynia, Pontus, Asia, Galatia, and Cappadocia. Paul had evangelized many of these areas; other areas had churches that were begun by the Jews who were in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, heard Peter's powerful sermon, became Christians, and returned home with the gospel (see Acts 2:9-11).

1 PETER 1:1–2:3

GREETINGS FROM PETER / 1:1-2

The apostle Peter wrote this letter to encourage believers who would likely face trials and persecution under Emperor Nero. During most of the first century, Christians were not hunted down and killed throughout the Roman Empire. They could, however, expect social and economic persecution from three main sources: the Romans, the Jews, and their own families. All Christians would very likely be misunderstood; some would be harassed; a few would be tortured and even put to death. Peter may have been writing especially for new Christians and those planning to be baptized. He wanted to warn them about what lay ahead—they needed his encouraging words to help them face opposition.

1:1 In the style of ancient letters, Peter began by identifying himself. He was an apostle, the title Jesus had given to the twelve disciples (Luke 6:13). The title apostle designated one who had authority to set up and supervise churches and discipline them if necessary. Even more than a title of authority, “apostle” means one sent on a mission, like an envoy or ambassador. As an apostle of Jesus Christ, Peter wrote with authority because, like the Old Testament prophets, he wrote God’s very words. The recipients of this letter (including us) should remember Peter’s connection with Jesus, his powerful ministry, and his authority to speak. (For more information about Peter, see the Author section in the Introduction to 1 Peter.)

The recipients of this letter were God’s chosen people, that is, both Jewish and Gentile Christians. Although God initiated our calling, based totally on his wisdom, we who are called still must respond and choose to follow him. All believers have been called and chosen by God.

When people accept Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord, God transfers their citizenship from the world to heaven (Philippians 3:20). Thus, while they live on this earth, they are like foreigners in this world. The world becomes a “foreign land” to believers because their real home is heaven and they are only on earth temporarily.

The church began in Jerusalem, but before long it had spread across the Roman Empire and beyond. Peter wrote this letter to both Jewish and Gentile believers in churches scattered throughout various Roman provinces. Most likely, Peter planned for the letter to be circulated from one church to the next throughout each area. He may have separated the names of each province to indicate the circular route that the bearer of this letter would travel.

1:2 This verse mentions all three members of the Trinity—God the Father, God the Son (Jesus Christ), and God the Holy Spirit. All members of the Trinity work to bring about our salvation and provide a threefold assurance to believers. Although Christians are “foreigners” in this world (1:1), they take comfort in the fact that God chose them long ago.

God’s “choosing” of believers has generated fierce doctrinal differences among Christians; most of these differences come from theological and philosophical points of view about what the Bible means. God alone originates and accomplishes our salvation because of his grace. We do nothing to earn it. Being “chosen” does not remove the necessity for people to choose to follow him. The fact that God knows all events and decisions beforehand, even ordains them beforehand, does not mean that he forces the actions of his creatures, leaving them no choice. God took the initiative and chose people before they had done anything to deserve it. He had intimate knowledge of these future believers; he knew who would believe, and he knew them personally. These chosen ones were known by God the Father as a father knows his children, except that God knew about them from eternity past. God is not trapped in time—what he knows is from eternity past into eternity future.

God makes his choice effective by the presence of the Holy Spirit in those who believe, resulting in obedience. Only the Spirit can draw people to a saving relationship with God. The Spirit comes to the chosen people to make them holy, meaning that God sees his children as holy because they have been cleaned by his Son’s shed blood. But believers also are becoming holy as they learn to live for God. This is called “sanctification”—the process of Christian growth through which the Holy Spirit makes us like Christ. The obvious result is that the believers obeyed. The constant cleansing from sin available to us because of Christ’s sacrifice enables us to obey God faithfully.

God’s special favor refers to his grace—given to undeserving people. Peace refers to the peace that Christ made between sinners and God through his Son’s death on the cross. Peter wanted these believers, scattered as they were across the empire’s provinces, to be united in their experience of God’s favor and peace in their daily lives.

THE HOPE OF ETERNAL LIFE / 1:3-12

Even as these believers faced persecution, they could remember God’s grace and continue to live as God desired. Not all believers are persecuted for their faith, but everyone faces times of stress, discouragement, or despair. This section introduces the blessings of salvation (1:3-12). Peter’s words echo through the centuries, reminding us of God’s grace and sovereignty over all of life, encouraging us to glorify and live for him.

1:3 Peter launched into praise of God the Father, who had chosen and cleansed the believers (1:2). All honor goes to God. The Old Testament believers praised God, but the New Testament believers praised him with an entirely new name, one never used in the Old Testament: Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. God is “Father,” the first person of the Trinity. He did not exist before the Son, for the Son has always existed (John 1:1-3; 17:5, 24). God the Father sent the Son, and the Son responded in full obedience.

We find God’s mercy always at the center of any discussion of salvation. Only God’s mercy would allow him to have compassion for sinful and rebellious people. Salvation is given to us because of God’s boundless mercy alone. That salvation is called the privilege of being born again. Jesus used this concept of new birth when he told Nicodemus that he had to be “born again” in order to see God’s Kingdom (see John 3). In the new birth, we become dead to sin and alive to God with a fresh beginning. People can do no more to accomplish their “new birth” than they could do to accomplish their own natural birth. In his introductory comments, Peter thanked God for the new spiritual lives of the believers to whom he was writing.

Believers are born again not for this world, in which they are no more than foreigners, but for a wonderful expectation of life to come. That expectation is based on the conviction that God will keep his promises to raise us because Jesus Christ rose again from the dead. By rising from the dead, Christ made the necessary power available for our resurrection (1 Corinthians 15:22). Christ’s resurrection makes us certain that we too will be raised from the dead. Believers are “born again” from their sinful state into the life of grace, which, in the end, will become a life of glory. We shouldn’t be discouraged by earthly trials, for we have the Resurrection to be our backup.

1:4 The word translated inheritance is also used in the Old Testament to describe the inheritance to which the Jews had looked forward in the Promised Land of Canaan (Numbers 32:19; Deuteronomy 2:12; 19:8-10). Christians look forward to another inheritance—eternal life with God. Jesus Christ is God’s only Son; thus he is sole heir (Mark 12:7). However, as children of God, believers also become heirs with Christ (Romans 8:17) of this priceless inheritance.

Peter used three Greek words, each beginning with the same letter and ending with the same syllable in Greek, to describe this inheritance (aphthartos, amiantos, amarantos). This inheritance is pure—it won’t lose its glory or freshness. It is undefiled—it will never become unfit for us or polluted by sin. It is beyond the reach of change and decay—meaning it will never pass away, disappear, or come to ruin as the result of hostile forces. These words contrast this inheritance with all earthly, human possessions. Nothing in the natural order—catastrophe, sin, age, evil—can affect it. God has made it indestructible, existing for all eternity.

Believers have noncancelable and nontransferable reservations in heaven. The inheritance is kept in heaven for us. The word kept is in the perfect tense in Greek, expressing a past activity with results that continue in the present; God has been keeping and still keeps the inheritance there—prepared, reserved, certain, and waiting. No matter what harm might come to believers on earth, the inheritance awaits, for it is kept safe with God.

1:5 In these words, Peter answered concerns that might have arisen in the minds of persecuted believers: Will we be able to endure and remain faithful to Christ if persecution becomes more intense? What good is an inheritance kept in heaven if we are not kept safe?

Peter explained that, in spite of persecution and even violent death, God, in his mighty power, will protect them. The word translated protect is a military term used to refer to a garrison within a city (see also 2 Thessalonians 3:3; Jude 1:24). It's an inner area of protection. No matter how the world persecuted or killed believers' bodies, God was guarding their souls. Peter gave a double-locked security for believers. First, the inheritance is protected (1:4); second, the believers are protected to receive that inheritance because they were trusting him.

Believers have already received salvation through their acceptance of Jesus Christ as Savior, but the fullness of that salvation, its complete rewards and blessings, will be revealed on the last day—that is, the judgment day of Christ (see Romans 14:10; Revelation 20:11-15). What has started will be fully disclosed when he returns.

1:6 Because of the promises of the inheritance, believers can be truly glad—referring to deep, spiritual joy (see Luke 1:46-47; Acts 16:34; 1 Peter 4:13). This type of rejoicing remains, unhindered and unchanged by what happens in this present life. Believers would have to endure many trials. When Peter wrote of trials, he meant the response of an unbelieving world to people of faith. Christians became the target of persecution for four main reasons: (1) They refused to worship the emperor as a god and thus were viewed as atheists and traitors. (2) They refused to worship at pagan temples, so business for these moneymaking enterprises dropped wherever Christianity took hold. (3) They didn't support the Roman ideals of self, power, and conquest, and the Romans scorned the Christian ideal of self-sacrificing service. (4) They exposed and rejected the horrible immorality of pagan culture.

Grief and suffering do not happen without cause or reason. While it may never be clear to us, God must be trusted to carry out his purposes, even in times of trial. All believers face such trials when they let their lights shine into the darkness. We must accept trials as part of the refining process that burns away impurities and prepares us to meet Christ. Trials teach us patience (Romans 5:3-4; James 1:2-3) and help us grow to be the people God wants. In comparison to the wonderful joy ahead, the trials last only for a while. Because of this they could rejoice, even as they suffered grief.

1:7 While God may have different purposes in the trials that face his people, one overriding result of all trials is clear: they test people's faith, showing that it is strong and pure. To God, believers' faith is more precious than mere gold, the most valuable and durable substance of the time.

Genuine faith is indestructible for all eternity. However, it may take the fire of trials, struggles, and persecutions to purify it, removing impurities and defects. God values a fire-tested (or "stress-tested") faith. Through trials, God burns away our self-reliance and self-serving attitudes, so that our genuineness reflects his glory and brings praise to him.

How do trials prove the strength and purity of one's faith? A person living a comfortable life may find it very easy to be a believer. But to keep one's faith in the face of ridicule, slander, persecution, or even death proves the true value of that faith. Such faith results in praise and glory and honor bestowed upon the believers by God himself when Jesus Christ returns (is revealed) to judge the world and take believers home.

1:8 Peter had known Jesus Christ personally—talked with him, walked with him, questioned him, professed faith in him. Yet Peter understood that most of the believers to whom he wrote had not known Jesus in the flesh. He commended their love for him even though they had never seen him (see also John 20:29). And even though they could not see him, they put their trust in him. To trust him means "to put one's confidence in," "to depend upon."

We, like Peter's audience, have not ever seen Christ in the flesh, but one day our faith will be rewarded when Christ returns to take us home. On that day and for eternity, we shall see him face-to-face (Revelation 22:3-5). Until then, we live by faith, with hope and joy. This ought to give us glorious, inexpressible joy.

1:9 Believers express joy (1:8) because of their belief in and love for Jesus Christ. The reward for trusting Christ will be the salvation of their souls. Believers receive salvation when they accept Jesus Christ as Savior, yet salvation will not be complete until Jesus Christ returns and makes everything new. In the meantime, we continue growing in the Christian life and experiencing more and more of the blessings of salvation. As we continue to believe and rejoice, we also continue to grow toward maturity in Christ and to our promised salvation.

1:10-11 This salvation, now so clear to those who believe, had been a mystery to the Old Testament prophets who wrote about it through the inspiration of the Spirit of Christ, but wanted to know more about it. The prophets were amazed by the prophecies God gave them. They had many questions, and they wondered what was meant by Christ's suffering. Peter was saying, "How can you be discouraged? Don't you realize that you have seen the fulfillment of all the prophets' yearning?" Jesus once said to his listeners, "Many prophets and godly people have longed to see and hear what you have seen and heard, but they could not" (Matthew 13:17 ; see also Luke 10:23-24). The believers of Peter's day (as well as believers today) had the privilege of understanding the prophets' writings better than the prophets themselves had understood them. All of those prophets' predictions regarding the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ had been completely fulfilled. Other prophecies concerning the end times are being or are yet to be fulfilled.

1:12 The Spirit revealed to the prophets that the prophecies would not happen during their lifetime. The prophets had the great honor of having Christ's Spirit speak through them, but the privileges of our understanding are even greater and should move us to an even deeper commitment to Christ.

All the experiences regarding the coming salvation that the prophets had so wanted to see and hear have now been announced by those who preached the Good News. As the Spirit inspired the prophets, so he inspired the apostles and missionaries in the first century. This is all so wonderful that even the angels are watching these events unfold. Angels are spiritual beings created by God who help carry out his work on earth. Just as the prophets could not understand or experience the coming salvation and grace because it would occur after their lifetimes, neither can the angels understand or experience it because they are spiritual beings who do not need the blood of Christ to save them.

The word translated “watching” means to peek into a situation as an outsider. The angels watch (and often are sent to minister to) believers as they struggle and face ridicule or persecution. The angels know that God’s people are recipients of God’s grace and blessings and that one day they will be highly honored in the coming Kingdom.

A CALL TO HOLY LIVING / 1:13–2:3

Peter gave a bold challenge. The next section details the ethical responsibilities of those who have experienced the blessings of salvation described in 1:3-12. The promises God makes to believers and the hope we have should motivate us to holy living. This means being mentally alert, morally disciplined, and spiritually focused. This is hard work. Are you ready to meet Christ?

1:13 Because the prophets had foretold the great privileges of the gospel and, with even the angels, long to understand them better, believers should show the same kind of earnest and alert concern regarding the way they live.

To think clearly refers to spiritual and mental attitudes. To lead holy lives in an evil world, the believers would need a new mind-set. They also needed to monitor and restrain their sexual and material desires, anger, and words. Exercise self-control is also translated “discipline yourselves.” Peter wanted the believers to remember that as they lived in the world, they needed to keep full possession of their minds and bodies so as not to be enticed away from God.

Peter has described true faith in 1:1-13, and in 1:14 he begins a series of moral commands that stretch throughout the rest of his letter. In a few words, Peter explained how believers can reflect God’s character and priorities and follow God’s commands. As they look forward to the special blessings that will come, they will be encouraged to change their mind-sets to be in line with God’s plans for them, to change their lifestyles to glorify God, and to persevere during difficulties and persecutions.

1:14 All believers are God’s children. As such, we are to obey God. Believers ought not live in the same manner that they lived before they were saved. At that time, they didn’t know any better, but now they should not slip back into their old ways of doing evil. The evil desires still exist, but believers have a new goal for their lives. They must break with the past and depend on the power of the Holy Spirit to help them overcome evil desires and obey God.

1:15 God’s holiness means that he is completely separated from sin and evil. Holiness pervades his character—he is holy. He is the opposite of anything profane. Believers must be holy in everything they do—that is, totally devoted or dedicated to God, set aside for his special use and set apart from sin and its influence. Our holy God expects us to imitate him by following his high moral standards.

Believers should be set apart and different because of God's qualities in their lives. Our focus and priorities must be his. We have already been declared holy because of our faith in Christ, but we must work out that divine family likeness in our day-by-day walk, behavior, and conduct. We cannot become holy on our own, but God gives us his Holy Spirit to help us. We will not achieve perfect holiness in this life; Peter's words mean that all parts of our lives and character should be in the process of becoming conformed, both inwardly and outwardly, to God's holy standards.

1:16 To confirm his words in 1:15, Peter quoted the Old Testament Scriptures, which would be familiar to the Jewish Christians in his audience, “You must be holy because I am holy.” These words are from Leviticus 11:44-45; 19:2; 20:7. Originally this command applied to the Jews, God's chosen nation, but Peter applied them to the Christians, God's chosen people from all nations.

1:17 God was their loving Father to whom they could pray, yet he was also a strong disciplinarian and the impartial Judge of the entire universe. This judging could refer to God's future judgment of believers when they will be rewarded for how they have lived, but the present tense of the verb judges makes more sense if it is applied to God's present judgment and discipline on believers during their lives on earth.

When God judges, he has no favorites. Just as these believers constantly called on God for help because they knew he loved them, they should also be careful how they lived: Live in reverent fear of him during your time as foreigners here on earth. Reverent fear is not the fear of a slave for a ruthless master, but the healthy and fervent respect of a believer for the all-powerful God. Because God is the Judge of all the earth, believers dare not ignore him or treat him casually. We should not assume that our privileged status as God's children gives us freedom to do whatever we want. A good parent administers discipline without favoritism. We should not be spoiled children, but grateful children who love to show respect for our heavenly Father.

1:18-19 The word ransom was used when someone paid money to buy back a slave's freedom. In Old Testament times, a person's debts could result in that person's being sold as a slave. The next of kin could ransom the slave (buy his or her freedom), a transaction involving money or valuables of some kind. However, silver and gold can do nothing to change anyone's spiritual condition. No amount of money can buy our salvation. It has to be done God's way, not with money, but with the precious lifeblood of Christ, the sinless, spotless Lamb of God. That God paid a ransom to save us means that he paid the price to set sinners free from slavery to sin. Christ paid the debt we owed for violating the righteous demands of the law. Christ purchased our freedom, and it cost him his own life. Only the sacrificial death of Christ on the cross was effective atonement for our sins. The Old Testament saints sacrificed lambs in order to atone for their sins, but New Testament believers have had their sins covered by the blood of the sinless Savior.

1:20 Christ's sacrifice for the world's sins was not an afterthought, not something God decided to do when the world spun out of control. This plan was set in motion by the all-knowing, eternal God long before the world began. In eternity past, God chose his people (1:2) and planned that Christ would redeem them. Christ has always existed with God (John 1:1), but had been sent to the earth for all to see. The redemption God accomplished for believers through Christ—not understood even by the prophets who wrote about them (1:10-11)—should cause us to be even more concerned to live according to his high moral standards. Peter's words, he did this for you, provided an intensely personal note, encouraging his readers that Christ's coming and the entire plan of salvation are for individual believers, loved and chosen by God.

1:21 It is through Christ that believers have come to trust in God. The fact that God raised Christ from the dead and gave him great glory is the foundation for our faith and hope for two reasons: (1) through Christ's resurrection and glorification, God openly declares that he has accepted Christ as our righteous substitute, thereby giving us access to God; (2) through Christ's resurrection and glorification, believers can receive power from the Holy Spirit (John 16:5-15). The power that resurrected and glorified Christ is the same power that enables us to believe. Because Christ ransomed us, we must no longer fear God and face his judgment; instead, we set our faith and hope confidently in God, trusting in the one who planned our salvation from eternity past. As God raised Christ from the dead, we believe and expect that he will also raise us.

1:22 This is one of the strongest statements on brotherly love in the New Testament, for it virtually makes brotherly love the goal of our conversion. Peter expected that growth in purity and holiness would result in deeper love among Christians—not merely outward appearance or profession, but sincere love for Christian brothers and sisters. Despite our differences and disagreements, we can have sincere love for one another, and as we grow in holiness, we can learn to love each other intensely because of the Holy Spirit within us.

Such love is not possible in the world at large, for it doesn't understand the love that results when people are cleansed from their sins and have accepted the truth of the Good News. This experience brings together even very different believers on the common ground of forgiveness in Christ and requires them to love one another as Christ loved them (John 13:34-35).

1:23 Peter gave another reason to love others: Believers have a common ground in Christ. We have all been born again; we are sinners saved by grace. Our new life did not come from our earthly parents; that life will one day end in death. Our new life will last forever because it was given to us by the eternal, living word of God. God's word lives and endures forever, because God who gave it lives and endures from eternity past to eternity future. The powerful, living word of God himself, recorded in Scripture, brings new life to believers; the eternal word of God himself assures the permanence of that new life. It is only through hearing and/or reading these words that people can find eternal life, for the Scriptures tell the gospel message and make the way of salvation clear to those who seek it.

1:24-25 Quoting the prophet, Isaiah 40:6-8, Peter reminded believers that everything in this life—possessions, accomplishments, people—will eventually fade away and disappear. As the grass and wildflowers bloom for a season then wither and fall, so all of this life is transitory in nature; it will pass away. Only the word of the Lord will last forever. Peter's readers would face suffering and persecution, but that would be only temporary. The word of the Lord was the Good News that had been preached to them. That Good News is good for eternity.

2:1 As noted in 1:22, believers need to get rid of any attitude or hindrance that could threaten this love for brothers and sisters in Christ. Get rid of is also translated "put away" or "put off." The same phrase is used in other New Testament passages, always indicating removing one's former life of sin as one would take off a garment (see also Romans 13:12; Ephesians 4:22, 25; Colossians 3:8; James 1:21). The Greek tense indicates that this is a decisive act. Peter addressed this command to rid oneself of sin only to born-again Christians

(1:23) who, having a new God-given nature within them, have the ability to break with their past life of sin. While we cannot become completely sin-free in this life, no matter how hard we try to put aside sin, we are commanded to get rid of sin in order to become more like Christ.

Peter listed several types of sin to remove from our lives. The sins Peter listed here fight against love and cause dissension among believers. The first two sins mentioned refer to general categories. The last three sins refer to the specific acts that flow out of them.

- Malicious behavior means doing evil despite the good that has been received; the desire to harm other people. Malice may be hidden behind good actions.
- Deceit means deliberately tricking or misleading by lying (see also 3:10).
- Hypocrisy means that people say one thing but do another; playacting; presenting good motives that mask selfish desire.
- Jealousy means desiring something possessed by someone else. This causes discontent and resentment as believers make unhealthy comparisons to one another. It also makes them unable to be thankful for the good that comes to others.
- Backstabbing means destroying another's good reputation by lies, gossip, rumor-spreading, etc. Malice often manifests itself through backstabbing (slander).

2:2 As newborn babies crave milk, so born-again believers should crave (long for) pure spiritual milk that will nourish them and help them grow to maturity. This points to the word of God, which provides spiritual life to those who partake of it. Like milk, the essential nourishment for babies, God's word sustains life and gives growth. The purity of God's word means that there is no imperfection, no flaws, no dilutions, and that it will not deceive or lead people astray. (Note that "milk" is used in a positive context. This verse should not be compared to 1 Corinthians 3:2 and Hebrews 5:12-13, where the writers employed a similar metaphor but used milk—in contrast to meat—as depicting the diet of immature believers.)

By using the term baby, Peter was not implying that his readers were young believers; indeed, some of them had been Christians for as many as thirty years. Instead, he may have been picking up the reference to being "born again" in 1:23. Peter was saying that believers should always crave more and more of God's word in the same way that a baby cries for milk. Then, by taking that nourishment, believers can grow into the fullness of their salvation. Salvation is an ongoing experience from the time of the new birth until the time Christ returns. At that time, salvation will be completed (1:5). In the meantime, as we live on this earth, we must constantly partake of God's word so that we can "grow up" in our salvation. We must not remain spiritual babies, but become mature in Christ (2 Peter 3:18).

2:3 Peter picked up the beautiful invitation in Psalm 34:8 and placed it in the past tense for these believers: "Taste and see that the Lord is good" (see also Jeremiah 15:16). The believers had already taken that first step in following God by accepting his salvation, and had been given a taste of the Lord's kindness. As they lived out their Christian lives, growing to maturity in the faith, they were tasting more and more of the Lord's goodness. That should only serve to whet their appetites. The more we taste God's goodness, the more tasteless other worldly options will become. We must not fill our lives with cheap substitutes so that we lose our craving for the truth contained in God's word.

1 PETER 2:4-25

LIVING STONES FOR GOD'S HOUSE / 2:4-12

In describing the church as God's spiritual house, Peter drew on Old Testament texts that would be familiar to his Jewish Christian readers: Psalm 118:22; Isaiah 8:14; 28:16. They would have understood the living stones to be Israel; then Peter used the image of the "cornerstone" for Christ. Again Peter was demonstrating that Christ did not cancel the Jewish heritage but had fulfilled it. Peter encouraged his readers by emphasizing their true identity and unity in Christ. We too should strive to be usable, obedient elements in God's work.

2:4 Using a new metaphor here, Peter employed Old Testament imagery to describe believers' relationship with God. Believers can constantly come to (or approach) Christ. The words "come to" do not refer to initial salvation, but to constantly drawing near and coming into Christ's presence. In the Old Testament, only the priests had that privilege; under the new covenant, all believers can enter into God's presence at any time, with any need.

Peter described Christ as a living cornerstone; the "stone" imagery is taken from Psalm 118:22 and other Old Testament passages quoted in the following verses. Jesus had applied these words to himself when he spoke of being rejected by his own people (Matthew 21:42; Mark 12:10-11; Luke 20:17). Peter had quoted this verse in his speech on the day of Pentecost (Acts 4:11-12). Peter added the adjective "living." Christ lives and imparts life to those who believe in him. Also from Psalm 118:22 is the fact that Christ was rejected by the people. Although rejected by many, Christ is now the "cornerstone" of the church, the most important part. He is precious to God who chose him. Although chosen and precious to God, Christ had to suffer greatly in order to accomplish God's will—it was his "precious blood" (1:19) that redeemed us. Therefore, believers are also very precious to God. Peter encouraged these persecuted believers by telling them that they, like Christ, had been chosen by God.

2:5 Peter carried the imagery further, describing believers also as living stones because they are made alive by Christ, the living cornerstone. If these "stones" are "living," then what activities should they be doing? First of all, they should welcome being built into God's spiritual temple. Because God is spirit (John 4:24), he lives in a spiritual house among his people, no longer in any particular physical building.

Believers not only are the stones that make up God's spiritual house, but they also serve there as holy priests, who offer the spiritual sacrifices. This is a twofold metaphor. We are both the temple (see 1 Corinthians 6:19) and the priests who serve in it. Just as priests served in the temple, so believers are to be priests. Peter used words from Exodus 19:6, where God promised Israel that they would be “a kingdom of priests” and a “holy nation” if they remained obedient to God. God’s people, all who believe in Jesus Christ, have become this holy priesthood. The Old Testament priests entered God’s presence at specific times and only after carefully following ritual cleansing instructions; God’s people can enter God’s presence at any time, for they have been cleansed by the Holy Spirit (Hebrews 4:16).

The Old Testament priests offered animal sacrifices in the Temple; God’s people offer sacrifices too, but these are “spiritual sacrifices” (see Romans 12:1; Ephesians 5:2; Philippians 4:18; Hebrews 13:15-16). We see from Scripture that every part of our lives—our jobs, activities, recreation, attitudes, giving, outlook, goals—should be given as a spiritual sacrifice to God. When we learn to please God and follow his directions and guidance, all we do delights him. These sacrifices are “spiritual” because we can only give ourselves to God with the Holy Spirit’s help. Just as the aroma of the Old Testament sacrifices pleased God, so our service can be a sweet aroma to God, continually giving him delight.

2:6 To support his words in 2:4-5, Peter quoted from the Scriptures, citing several Old Testament passages. First, in Isaiah 28:16, God promised to establish a cornerstone, the first stone laid in a building, making the foundation stable and the walls plumb and square. That this stone would be laid in Jerusalem meant not only that Christ had lived in and around Jerusalem, but also that this new building (the Christian church and the new covenant) with Christ as the cornerstone would actually replace the old building (the Jerusalem Temple and the old covenant).

This cornerstone is a person, and anyone who believes in him will never be disappointed (see also Romans 9:33; 10:11). Christians will sometimes face disappointment in this life, but their trust in God is never misplaced. God will not let them down. These words greatly comforted believers facing persecution. As a building rests on its cornerstone, so believers rest on Christ. We can safely put our confidence in Christ because he will certainly give to us the eternal life he promises.

2:7 To you who believe addressed the Christians to whom Peter wrote as well as Christians today. Jesus Christ is indeed precious, meaning highly valued or esteemed. Not only is Christ precious to the Father (2:4), he is also precious to those who follow him.

While this is true, most scholars take issue with this translation of the Greek text, saying that this is an unlikely rendering of the Greek. They prefer that this phrase be translated, “Therefore the honor [or preciousness] is to you, the believers” or “This honor belongs to you who believe.” This would follow from Peter’s words in 2:6. It also contrasts the preciousness of believers, and the honor they will receive, with the dishonor and shame facing those who reject Christ. While believers receive preciousness and honor from God, unbelievers face a different result. They do not regard the Stone as precious and chosen; instead, they reject him. Jesus referred to these words when he spoke of being rejected by his own people (Matthew 21:42; Mark 12:10-11; Luke 20:17). In Matthew 21:42 and Acts 4:11, the builders were the Jewish religious leaders. Peter used “builders” to refer to all people across the ages who toss Christ aside like an unwanted stone, choosing to build the foundations of their lives on something else. However, they were mistaken to reject him because God took the rejected stone and made it the cornerstone of the church.

2:8 Quoting once again from the prophet Isaiah (Isaiah 8:14), Peter further explained that not only were the builders who rejected the stone humiliated that it later became the cornerstone, they also had stumbled and fallen over this stone. The word “stumbled” can mean tripping and falling, or it can mean taking offense at or rejecting something or someone. Peter explained that they stumble because they do not listen to God’s word or obey it—this disobedience refers not to slipups by one who tries to obey; rather it means outright rejection of the Word and the Messiah that the Word promised, and a rebellious stance toward God. Some stumble over Christ because they reject him or refuse to believe that he is who he claims to be. They have stumbled over the one person who could save them, and they have fallen into God’s hands for judgment.

Their stumbling and disobedience were planned by God. What does that mean? Some scholars take 1 Thessalonians 5:9 and Romans 9:22-23 to prove double predestination. This means that some are predestined to belief unto salvation, and others are predestined to disbelief unto damnation. It would be more natural here to take Peter’s point to be that God has predestined punishment for those who disbelieve, so that only the consequence of disbelief is ordained. The fact of predestination does not imply that all our choices are predetermined. Because God is not limited by time as we are, he “sees” past, present, and future at the same time. Parents sometimes “know” how their children will behave before the fact. We don’t conclude from these parents’ foreknowledge that they made their children act that way. God’s foreknowledge, insofar as we can understand it, means that God knows who will accept the offer of salvation and who will reject it.

To explain foreknowledge and predestination in any way that implies that every action and choice we make has been not only preknown, but even predetermined, seems to contradict those Scriptures that declare that our choices are real, that they matter, and that there are consequences to the choices we make. Those who choose to disobey will stumble and fall.

2:9 This verse contrasts the privilege and destiny of believers with that of unbelievers (described in 2:8). Believers are a chosen people, a distinct group from the rest of the world, unified by the Holy Spirit. Just as the nation of Israel had been God's chosen people, Christians have become God's people, not by physical birth into a certain race but by spiritual rebirth into God's family through Jesus Christ.

Believers also are a kingdom of priests, God's holy nation (Exodus 19:6). Being part of a "priesthood" is a high honor for believers. Christians speak of "the priesthood of all believers." In Old Testament times, people did not approach God directly. Instead, a priest would act as an intermediary between God and sinful human beings. With Christ's victory on the cross, that pattern changed. Now believers can come directly into God's presence without fear (Hebrews 4:16). Also, they have been given the responsibility of bringing others to him (2 Corinthians 5:18-21). United with Christ as members of his body, believers join in his priestly work of reconciling God and people. "Holy nation" refers to Christians as a people who are distinct from all the others because of their devotion to God.

Believers are God's very own possession. Similar language is found in Exodus 19:5 and Malachi 3:17. God's people are those who are faithful to him; thus this refers to Christians.

God's special people are to show others the goodness of God, for he called you out of the darkness into his wonderful light. Christians were redeemed with a special purpose—to glorify and praise the one who has called them out of the darkness of sin and of their hostile surroundings into the light of eternal life.

2:10 This verse is an adaptation of Hosea 1:9-10 and 2:23. Hosea, God's prophet, was describing God's rejection of Israel, followed by future restoration. Paul used these same verses from Hosea and applied them to the Gentile believers (Romans 9:25-26). Peter applied these verses to the New Testament church as a whole.

Just as Israel had been, at one time, rejected by God without any hope of forgiveness for their sins, so Christians had been, at one time, rejected by God without any hope of mercy. But believers are now the people of God because they have been chosen by him (2:9) and have received his mercy. “Mercy” means God’s compassionate treatment of us even though we deserve the full measure of his justice. God had no obligation to gather a people together to whom he would show mercy; not one of us deserves his slightest concern. God drawing a people unto himself and lavishing mercy on them gives overwhelming evidence of his great love. This mercy ought to affect the way every believer lives, as Peter will point out in the following verses.

2:11 Peter warned the believers to remember their status as foreigners and aliens in the world. These words are also used together in Genesis 23:4 and Psalm 39:12. The world is not the Christian’s true home; our real home is with Christ. We are passing through this world on the way to our home in heaven’s glory; therefore, we ought to remain as untouched as possible by this world’s rampant sin, keeping away from evil desires. Because we will not escape our sinful surroundings until Christ returns, and because we still have a sinful nature that wants us to act on its desires, we will not be able to remain completely free of sin and its effects. But we can keep away by controlling the desires right from the start.

Why must believers keep away from sinful desires? Because those desires fight against our very souls. Once we become believers, a battle has begun, for Satan is the enemy of Christ and his followers. The word “souls” refers to the inner, spiritual part of a person (see also 1:22). Desires come from deep within us; often our sinful desires never actually become sinful actions. Peter wrote that while believers know that their lives and actions must be changed by Christ, they also must have their inner lives transformed. Sinful desires may seem much less evil than sinful actions, but Peter explained that they too can hurt us as they war against our souls. Entertaining evil desires, even if those desires are never acted upon, takes our focus off of Christ and turns our hearts from heavenly to earthly desires. All evil actions begin with a single thought; therefore, Peter advised believers to kill sin right at its root.

2:12 This thought follows from 2:11 without a break in the Greek text—the believers were to have their inner selves under control so that their outer lives would be honoring to God. Believers are called to honor God by living honorably and morally upright in and in spite of an unholy world so that unbelieving neighbors will glorify God. Peter’s advice sounds like Jesus’ advice recorded in Matthew 5:16. If believers’ actions are honorable, even hostile people might end up praising God. Peter's readers were scattered among unbelieving Gentiles who were inclined to believe and spread vicious lies about Christians, accusing them of wrongdoing, blaming them without cause. Attractive, gracious, and upright behavior on the part of Christians could show these rumors to be false and could even win some of the unsaved critics to the Lord's side. Peter urged the believers not to be surprised when persecution and false accusations arose, and to live above reproach so that the accusations would have to be dropped.

RESPECTING PEOPLE IN AUTHORITY / 2:13-17

At this point in Peter's letter, the focus changes from theological to practical. Up to this point, Peter had explained that the believers were to live holy lives, revealing their status as God's chosen people. In this section, Peter offered practical advice for holy living in an unholy and often hostile world. As believers who have received God's mercy (2:10), we ought to live worthy of our calling. This begins the next major section of 1 Peter (2:11–3:12). It centers on the Christians' relationships to non-Christians. Because we are the community of God (2:4-10), we must live like it.

2:13-14 Peter commanded believers to accept all authority, meaning to submit (see 2:18–3:1). God is honored when we accept and respect those in authority over us. We do this for the Lord's sake, so that he is glorified by our orderly submission.

In telling his readers to accept the authority of the king, Peter was speaking of Emperor Nero, a notoriously cruel tyrant who ruled from A.D. 54–68. The emperor was the supreme ruler over all Roman provinces—including the areas to which Peter addressed this letter. The emperor Nero was considered the supreme authority by his subjects, even worshiped by them. The Christians should never worship the emperor, but they should obey his laws because he was an authority put in place by God (Romans 13:1-2). But Peter was not telling believers to compromise their Holy Spirit-directed consciences. Remember, Peter had told the high priest years before, "We must obey God rather than human authority" (Acts 5:29). At other times, God had approved disobedience to human authorities (see, for example, Exodus 1:17; Daniel 3:13-18; 6:10-24; Acts 4:18-20; Hebrews 11:23). In those cases, the government had called upon God's people to sin against God and God's people had to submit to the higher power—God himself. But in most aspects of daily life, it was desirable for Christians to live according to the law of their land, whether or not they agreed with the policies. Christians were not to rebel against Rome—Roman law was the only restraint against lawlessness. In addition, it wouldn't take much for an imperial edict to fall on a group who had become known for causing unrest within the empire. The Christians' quiet submission might allow them to continue to spread the gospel freely. If they were to be persecuted, it should be for obeying God, and not for breaking moral or civil laws. Peter himself would later be put to death for his faith during Emperor Nero's intense persecution of Christians.

The king (or emperor), with supreme authority, would delegate responsibility to representatives in the territories under the empire's control. These officials would carry out the emperor's commands, enforce the laws, and keep the peace in the provinces. They had been appointed to punish all who do wrong and to honor those who do right. While no government carries out these functions perfectly, most attempt to do so in order to maintain peace and safety for their citizens.

Today, one-third of all Christians live in freedom while the other two-thirds live under repressive governments. Scripture does not recommend one form of government over another. Rather, it simply asks Christians to accept the government under whose authority they find themselves and to cooperate with the rulers as far as the Holy Spirit-directed conscience will allow. Believers must do this "for the Lord's sake"—so that his Good News and his people will be respected.

2:15 Peter exhorted the believers to live good lives so that those who make foolish accusations against the believers would be silenced. The word silence is more literally "to muzzle"—in other words, to shut them up. This repeats the idea of 2:12. These unbelievers should finally have to admit that they could hold nothing against Christians except their faith.

2:16 Here Peter was outlining a paradox of the Christian life. Christians are free yet they are slaves. They can live as free people but must use their freedom to glorify God. We glorify God when we serve him faithfully. Believers are not free to do whatever they want or to use their freedom as an excuse to do evil. We cannot use freedom and forgiveness as a cloaking device for self-indulgence, adultery, or poor spending habits. Christ is our leader, and serving him provides our limits.

2:17 These four short sentences summarize how believers can live peacefully in the world. First, show respect for everyone. The word "respect" means to honor, value, or esteem. Believers should be especially conscious that God made all people in his image, whether or not they believe in Christ.

While believers are to “respect” everyone, they have an extra obligation to their Christian brothers and sisters. They are called to love them. The word for “love” is agapao, referring to volitional, self-sacrificial love. The believers of Peter’s day needed to stand together as a unified force against coming persecution. They needed to maintain the bond of love.

To fear God means to show deep respect, reverence, and awe. While believers are to respect and love God as well, they are also to fear him. Proper fear leads to obedience. They should show respect for the king, but they should “fear” God. When we honor the king, we should give the government its rights, what it owns, what it controls; but we may not give to the government those rights that belong to God alone.

SLAVES / 2:18-25

Believers who were servants were not set free from serving their masters, but they were set free from slavery to sin. While their masters might not be Christians, that did not allow the servants to be disrespectful or lazy. They needed to remember that their ultimate Master was God himself (Colossians 3:23-24). These people were not permanent slaves, but neither were they merely servants. Their positions were semipermanent. They did not have legal or economic freedom but often were paid for their services and could eventually hope to purchase their freedom. For more on slaves, see 1 Corinthians 7:21; Ephesians 6:5-8; 1 Timothy 6:1-2; Titus 2:9-10.

2:18 Peter had already commanded believers to accept authority (2:13). Here he specifically addressed Christians who were slaves in pagan homes. The Greek word means a household servant. Peter called these servants to accept the authority of their masters, meaning that they should cooperate, be loyal, and willingly obey.

Like Paul, Peter neither condemned nor condoned slavery. To attempt to rebel against the system would only bring the wrath of the powerful Roman Empire and would hurt the cause of the gospel. So the apostles suggested that the believers should live within the system, hoping to transform it by first transforming lives through salvation in Jesus Christ. Thus Peter commanded that the believing slaves simply serve well and show respect, not just to Christian masters or to those who were kind and reasonable, but also to masters who were harsh. It would take God’s grace for Christian slaves to loyally and obediently serve such a master. Peter encouraged loyalty and perseverance even in the face of unjust treatment.

2:19 Many of the readers of this letter, slaves who had become Christians, would have known all too well what it meant to patiently endure unfair treatment. It would please God if these believers trusted him as they endured “pain” (referring to mental, not physical, anguish) caused by unjust suffering. Being patient for the sake of their conscience means that when they suffered, they were remembering God’s care and love for them even as they suffered. They focused on the fact that they were suffering injustice as Christ had suffered injustice, and they knew that one day God would right all wrongs. This gave them the proper attitude, enabled them to persevere, and kept their practice from being mere passive acceptance.

2:20 While bearing the pain of unjust suffering is commendable before God, there is no special commendation for patiently bearing punishment that is deserved. The word for beaten means to strike with one’s fist (see also Mark 14:65). Christian slaves who patiently endured suffering when they had done nothing to deserve it would please God. However, if they suffered for doing wrong, then they would get no credit.

2:21 Why have believers been called (see also 1:15; 2:9) to suffering? Because such suffering was endured by Christ. Jesus had told Peter and the other disciples at the Last Supper: “A servant is not greater than the master. Since they persecuted me, naturally they will persecute you” (John 15:20). When we patiently suffer injustice, we are following our supreme example in Christ.

That the believers were to follow in his steps means to follow in Jesus’ complete peace and trust in God. Christ has given believers an example of how they are to face injustice and persecution. Peter set up Christ as the model for the believers to follow; his example would have greatly comforted these believers, who soon would be persecuted for their faith. They should face injustice from harsh masters or from other authorities with supreme dignity, trusting God’s control.

2:22 Peter quoted from Isaiah 53:9, Isaiah’s prophecy about the suffering of the coming Messiah. Christ’s suffering was completely unjust because he never sinned or deceived anyone; there was no good reason for his being condemned to death (even Pilate saw that—see John 19:4). From personal experience Peter knew that Jesus was perfect. He had lived and traveled with Jesus for three years. Intimate relationships often reveal the worst in people, but Peter had seen the truth of the prophet’s words. Christ was completely sinless in his life and in his words.

2:23 This is another allusion to Isaiah 53, this time verse 7: “He was oppressed and treated harshly, yet he never said a word. He was led as a lamb to the slaughter. And as a sheep is silent before the shearers, he did not open his mouth.” Jesus did not retaliate nor did he threaten. How tempting it must have been to expose the liars at his trial, to come down from the cross in a great display of power, or to blast his enemies with God’s wrath. He left his case in the hands of God, who always judges fairly. Jesus suffered patiently because he knew that God would have the final say. Jesus regarded God as sovereign, so he put the outcome of his life in God’s hands. Believers can entrust themselves and their suffering into God’s hands. Knowing that God will ultimately right all wrongs is a great comfort to believers who are suffering, and it helps them respond correctly in their sufferings.

2:24 This phrase also comes from Isaiah 53: He personally carried away our sins (from 53:12); you have been healed by his wounds (from 53:5). Only Christ himself, the sinless Son of God, could bear our sins on the cross. Christ took the death penalty for sin, dying in our place, so that we would not have to suffer the punishment that we deserve. In a transaction we cannot comprehend, God placed the sins of the world on Jesus Christ, so we can be dead to sin and live for what is right. Because all our wrongdoing is forgiven, we are reconciled to God. All who believe in Jesus Christ as Savior can have this new life and live in union with him. Our evil desires, our bondage to sin, and our love of sin died with Christ on the cross. This is called substitutionary atonement. Jesus died as our substitute; his wounds have healed ours.

2:25 This verse also echoes Isaiah: Once you were wandering like lost sheep (from 53:6). Sheep need the constant protection of a shepherd or they will wander away, following their noses and sometimes getting into great danger. People can be like that, wandering through life in whatever direction circumstances might take them. But that was in the past; now you have turned to your Shepherd, the Guardian of your souls. At conversion, each believer returns from going his or her own way (the way of sin). Peter described God as a “Shepherd” who tirelessly looks after the sheep, guiding and protecting them (see Psalm 23:1-4; Ezekiel 34:11-16; Luke 15:5-7; John 10:11-16). Whatever trials and difficulties they might face, the Shepherd would always be by their side, and the Guardian of their souls would protect and seal them for eternity.

1 PETER 3

WIVES / 3:1-6

In 2:11-25, Peter had explained that the believers needed to act in an exemplary manner before the unbelieving world. He told them to be subject to authority (2:13) and then described two areas of that authority: citizens to the government (2:13-17) and slaves to masters (2:18-20). In these verses he added wives to husbands (3:1-7). Anarchy results if there is no authority. As Christians, we should not rebel against authority, but work within the system and serve God.

3:1-2 The phrase in the same way (or “likewise,” homoios) most likely referred to 2:13, “Accept all authority.” The word homoios has a slightly different slant than the word kathos, another word that is translated “in the same way.” If Peter had used the word kathos, he would have meant that wives should serve their husbands in the same way that slaves serve their masters. However, the word homoios focuses the comparison in other areas. While wives are to serve their husbands “in the same way” as slaves serve their masters, Peter was not saying that wives were slaves. Instead, the wives’ service should have positive motives (“for the Lord’s sake,” 2:13) and should be consistent no matter what the attitude of the one in authority (“even if they are harsh,” 2:18). Christian wives were to accept the authority of their husbands in obedience to Christ to keep harmony in the family and to encourage unbelieving husbands to believe.

Submission of the wife to the husband is an often misunderstood concept, although it is taught in several places in the New Testament (see, for example, Ephesians 5:24; Colossians 3:18; 1 Peter 3:1, 5). It may be the least popular Christian teaching in society. These texts do not teach the general subjugation of all women under all men. The principle of submission does not require a woman to become a doormat. When a Christian wife interacted with an unbelieving husband, she needed to be submissive according to cultural norms in order to save her marriage and sometimes even her life. But she ought not participate in her husband’s pagan religion or submit to actions that dishonored God. However, when both wife and husband were Christians, the woman should respect the God-given authority of her husband, while the husband exercised his authority in a loving and gentle manner. For marriage and family relationships to run smoothly, there must be one appointed leader—and God has appointed the husband and father. The wife should willingly follow her husband’s leadership in Christ, acknowledging that this is his responsibility. Submission does not mean blind obedience, nor does it mean inferiority. A wife who accepts her husband's authority is accepting the relationship that God has designed and giving her husband leadership and responsibility.

In the first century, when a man became a Christian, he usually would bring his whole family into the church with him (see, for example, the story of the conversion of the Philippian jailer, Acts 16:29-34). By contrast, a woman who became a Christian usually came into the church alone. Under Roman law, the husband and father had absolute authority over all members of his household, including his wife. A wife who demanded her rights as a free woman in Christ could endanger her marriage and her life if her husband disapproved. Instead, she should live her new faith through pure, godly behavior. Peter reassured Christian women who were married to unbelievers that they need not preach to their husbands; their husbands would see their godly lives. At the very least, the men would then allow these wives to continue practicing their faith. At best, their husbands would become Christians too.

3:3-4 As today, society's focus was on outward beauty. Such beauty was achieved in fancy hairstyles, expensive jewelry, and beautiful clothes. But Peter contrasted putting beautiful "things" on the outside to make oneself beautiful, versus revealing the natural inner beauty that a Christian woman should have because of Christ (see 3:4).

This passage is teaching that women should not count on their beauty coming from outward adornments, not that women can't braid their hair or wear gold jewelry or nice clothes. (Paul wrote almost the exact words to the women in the Ephesian church; see 1 Timothy 2:9-10.) Christian women should not be obsessed by fashion or overly concerned with their outward appearance. On the other hand, neither should they be so unconcerned that they do not bother to care for themselves. Beauty and adornments have their place, but they must be kept in proper perspective. Christian women should let their beauty come from within, the unfading beauty of a gentle and quiet spirit. Their beauty should come from their personality, and the attitudes, thoughts, and motivations that are revealed in words and actions. For believers, this inner self has been transformed by the Holy Spirit. To be "gentle" means showing humility, consideration of others, not insisting on one's own rights, not being pushy or overly assertive (see also Galatians 5:23). To be "quiet" refers to the same attitude as that described by "gentle," also focusing on not causing dissensions with inappropriate words or gossip.

3:5-6 The holy women of the past were both holy and beautiful, not because they lived perfect lives and had perfect looks, but because they trusted God.

Another ancient writer understood this: “Charm is deceptive, and beauty does not last; but a woman who fears the Lord will be greatly praised” (Proverbs 31:30). These women trusted in God and knew how to submit to the authority God had established, by accepting the authority of their husbands (as described in 3:1-2 above).

Peter used one woman in particular as an example: Sarah, who obeyed her husband, Abraham, when she called him her master. Peter commended her attitude of obedience, hanging his argument on Sarah’s use of “master.” Sarah’s submission certainly wasn’t slavish. She insisted that Hagar and Ishmael (Abraham’s other wife and first son) be sent away. Abraham didn’t like it, but went along with her request. Apparently God approved of Sarah’s request as supported by his answer to Abraham, “Do just as Sarah says” (Genesis 21:10, 12).

Why did Peter use Sarah as an example? Sarah was considered the mother of God’s people (as Abraham was the father, according to God’s covenant promises, Genesis 12:1-3). Not only was Sarah an example to be followed because of her faithfulness to God and to her husband (she did submit to Abraham to have the child), but also because she was the mother of all believers—under the old covenant, the mother of the Jewish nation; under the new covenant, the mother of all who believe (see Galatians 4:22-26). Peter saw Christian women as true daughters of Sarah, and thus true daughters of God. So they should do what is right without fear of what your husbands might do. A Christian woman’s faith in God would help her not to be afraid. In context, this could refer to them not fearing the physical harm that might come to them from their husbands, not fearing the result of submitting to their husbands, or not fearing what might happen if they had to disobey their husbands because their husbands asked them to do wrong or evil acts. It could also refer to the theme of persecution throughout this letter, recommending that these women not be afraid of anything that might come upon them or their families. But in this context, their fear and hope in God (3:5) allowed them both to reverence (3:2) and not fear (3:6) their husbands.

HUSBANDS / 3:7

In 3:1-6, Peter taught Christian women to submit to the husband’s authority, but the Christian husband must use his authority with consideration and respect for his wife. He must not be a tyrant, faithless, unloving, or impatient. Likewise, the wife should not be rebellious, subversive, or contradicting.

3:7 Just as the wives were to accept authority, so the husbands in the same way were to give honor to their wives. That a husband should treat his wife with understanding implies more than just a kind attitude; it goes deeper, implying that his consideration of his wife is based on his knowledge of her needs, desires, gifts, and abilities. A husband who acts on his knowledge of his wife will greatly enrich her life, as well as his own. This is the explicit message of Paul in Ephesians 5:25-27.

While the wife may be weaker than the husband, she is his equal partner. In this context, being weaker refers to physical weakness, not to moral, spiritual, or intellectual inferiority. Peter used the term not to diminish women, but to build a case for respecting them. The men were not to bully their wives physically or sexually. Women had less authority in the marriage, so the husbands were encouraged to use their authority with respect for their wives. Their authority did not excuse abuse of power. While the woman may be “weaker,” she is also a “partner,” implying a side-by-side relationship of working together. A man who respects his wife will protect, honor, and help her. He will stay with her. He will respect her opinions, listen to her advice, be considerate of her needs, and relate to her both privately and publicly with love, courtesy, insight, and tact.

Some women have chafed under the biblical assertion that they are “weaker” and that they are to submit to their husbands. But these women need to remember that they are equal with men in God’s eyes. Even though God gave husbands authority in the marriage and family, wives are equal to their husbands in spiritual privileges and eternal relationships. Both men and women who are believers are partners in God’s gift of new life—eternal life. If husbands are not considerate and respectful to their wives, their prayers will not be heard. If men use their position to mistreat their wives, their relationship with God will suffer. A man should not expect to have a vital ministry in life or prayer if he is mistreating his wife in any way.

ALL CHRISTIANS / 3:8-12

Peter knew that the believers would soon face persecution. He reminded these believers that they would need unity, and love and support from one another. Peter also assured the believers that no matter what sufferings they might have to face, God would vindicate them and punish their enemies. Rather than fear our enemies, we are to quietly trust in God as the Lord of all.

3:8 In saying finally, Peter was summing up a series of exhortations concerning submission. Peter listed five building blocks for unity as Christians lived in their pagan culture. These blocks will build relationships among any group of believers.

1. Be of one mind refers to working together for the common goal of spreading the gospel, having common attitudes and ideas. Just as different notes form chords to make beautiful harmonies, so different people can live and work together for God.
2. Be full of sympathy means being willing to share in others' needs and being responsive to their feelings, having sensitivity and compassion toward others.
3. Loving one another means loving fellow Christians (brothers and sisters in Christ). The Greek word is philadelphos, referring not only to family love, but to the special love that should draw all Christians together.
4. To have tender hearts means to be conscious of others' needs but includes a drive to alleviate the need in some way. Believers ought to be deeply touched and moved by the hurts, pain, needs, and joys of fellow believers and then act to help them. They should be affectionate and sensitive, quick to give emotional support.
5. To have humble minds means having an honest estimate of oneself before God. Humility does not negate one's own worth or abilities, nor does it inflate them. Instead, a humble Christian can honestly view his or her characteristics and abilities with thankfulness to God. Humble people can encourage one another and rejoice in each other's successes.

3:9 After describing how Christians should act toward one another, Peter described how they should act toward those in the pagan culture—a culture that would soon (if it hadn't already) become very hostile toward them. While it would be most natural to repay evil for evil and to retaliate, Jesus had taught and exemplified otherwise (Matthew 5:39, 44). Believers were not to retaliate, but were to pay them back with a blessing. Believers' speech should always be characterized by blessings, never curses, but "blessing" refers to more than words of kindness. The spiritual sense of the word refers to believers offering the gospel to those who persecute them. This is what God wants them to do and he would bless them for it. Believers still may be persecuted, but they can depend on God's blessings, whether physical or spiritual.

3:10 Verses 10-12 are a quotation of Psalm 34:12-16. (Peter also quoted from this Psalm in 2:3.) The theme of Psalm 34 is that God hears and helps those who are afflicted or in trouble—a perfect psalm considering the theme of this letter.

The phrase, if you want a happy life and good days, may refer to people who trust God and who are (or want to be) enjoying their earthly lives no matter what the outward circumstances. These people have found contentment in God and can live “good days” no matter how bad their situations might become. The answer is found in living righteously, as suggested by both the psalmist and the apostle.

In order to do so, watch what you say. People who desire life and good days keep their tongues from speaking evil and their lips from telling lies. The word evil could refer to any type of speech that is displeasing to God; lies means to deliberately trick or mislead.

3:11 People’s words are connected to their actions. When believers turn away from evil, their God-honoring speech is then accompanied doing good. To live in peace means more than simply the absence of conflict. Effective peacemakers must work hard at peace. They build good relationships, knowing that peace is a by-product of commitment. They anticipate problems and deal with them before they occur. When conflicts arise, peacemakers bring them into the open and deal with them before they grow unmanageable.

3:12 God will watch over those who do right. Nothing happens to God’s people that he has not allowed for some purpose. Whatever happens, God’s people know that his promises of blessing—whether in this life or in the life to come—are certain.

Not only are the Lord’s eyes open and watching, but his ears are open to their prayers. He listens when his people call to him. He knows all their needs. He hears their prayers in suffering. These words would have been a great comfort to these suffering Christians. Not only were they seen, heard, and ultimately protected, but those who hurt them would be judged. Believers are not to retaliate; instead, they must trust that God will avenge the wrongs his people have suffered.

SUFFERING FOR DOING GOOD / 3:13-22

Up to this point in the letter, the theme of the persecution facing these young churches has been in the background. At this point, however, it becomes a prominent theme in this letter. After describing the attitudes and actions that should characterize God’s people (3:8-12), Peter began to explain how the believers should live in an evil world in the face of persecution.

3:13-14 Common sense tells people that if they do good, they will be protected from punishment or harm. It is usually much wiser for believers to do what is good and to follow the authorities and laws so that they won’t be persecuted unnecessarily. Peter was not indicating that if the believers behaved well, they would escape persecution and ill treatment. In fact, they might suffer for doing what is right. Persecution comes for a variety of reasons. Even though it may not seem like it from a worldly point of view, these believers who suffered for doing what was right, would be rewarded. If the believers were living righteously and continued to be persecuted, no one would be able to harm them spiritually or change God's promises to them. Alluding to Isaiah 8:12-13, Peter counseled the believers to not be afraid of persecution or worry about it. Evil people's threats were empty because they could not harm the eternal souls of God's people.

3:15 Instead of being afraid of people, believers are to focus on Christ himself. By acknowledging Christ as Lord and Savior, they would recognize his holiness and be able to rest in him. There would be no room in their hearts for fear. Instead, they can always be ready to explain the reason for their Christian hope. While Peter may have been thinking about believers speaking in a court, he seems also to have had in mind the everyday informal inquiries that might be directed at the believers—from either hostile or friendly neighbors.

Unbelievers can see that Christians have something different; only “hope” gives us strength and joy in hardships and persecutions. Unbelievers will ask about it; believers must be ready to tell them. All Christians must be ready and able to give a reasonable defense of their faith. They need not be apologists or theologians, but every Christian ought to be able to clearly explain his or her own reasons for being a Christian.

3:16 Believers must not be obnoxious, but share their faith in a gentle and respectful way. To keep one's conscience clear refers to one's personal integrity before God alone, as he or she lives consistently with their knowledge of God. Unbelievers also have consciences that ought to guard their morality and actions (Romans 2:14-15), but a Christian's conscience has been transformed by God. The Holy Spirit helps each believer know and understand God's will, and sensitizes his or her conscience to God's desires. All believers should keep clear consciences. To do that, believers can avoid willful disobedience. If we do disobey, we should stay in constant communication with God, repenting and asking forgiveness. Each time we deliberately ignore our conscience, we harden our heart. Over a period of time our capacity to tell right from wrong will diminish. As we walk with God, he will speak to us through our conscience, letting us know the difference between right and wrong.

Just by being Christians, these believers could find themselves facing persecution; they ought not supply their enemies with ammunition by also breaking laws or acting and speaking in an evil way. If the Christians' lives were above reproach, unbelievers would end up ashamed when they speak evil against them. They would realize that they had done nothing more than slander someone's good life.

3:17-18 Peter referred to the advice he had given servants in 2:19-20, suggesting that if Christians were to suffer, it should never be for doing wrong. If they had to suffer at all, they should suffer only for doing good. Their example is Christ. He never sinned, yet he suffered, died. Christ's suffering resulted in his death for sins. Although he seemed to have been defeated, he was raised to life in the Spirit. Christ's death was once for all time. His sacrifice was sufficient. No one else will have to die for people's sins; Christ will not have to die again.

3:19-20 The word so forms a break in thought here and refers back to "in the Spirit" in the previous verse. The meaning of preached to the spirits in prison is not completely clear, mainly because the word translated "spirits" (pneumata) can be used to refer to human spirits, angels, or demons (the singular pneuma is also used to refer to God's Holy Spirit). The passage further indicates that these "spirits in prison" are those who disobeyed long ago when God waited patiently while Noah was building his boat. Only eight people were saved from drowning in that terrible flood. This passage has been tackled by many scholars over the years and given a variety of interpretations. Three main questions arise: (1) Who were the "spirits" to whom Christ made his proclamation? (2) When did Christ make this proclamation? (3) What was the content of this proclamation? Following are the main interpretations of Peter's words:

1. Some explain that between Christ's crucifixion and resurrection, he went to the realm of the dead, to hell or hades. There he preached to "the spirits in prison"—meaning either all the people who lived before him who had died and gone to hell, or the fallen angels who had sinned by marrying human women before the Flood (a view highly dependent on apocryphal literature). The content of Christ's proclamation may have been to offer the sinful people a second chance at salvation (this is most unlikely because nowhere in Scripture does God offer a "second chance"), or to tell the sinful people and/or fallen angels that their condemnation was final and eternal. Still others say that Christ was preaching to all those who had repented before they died in the Flood. They had been "in prison" awaiting their release by Christ into heaven. They say that Christ, between his death and resurrection, announced salvation to God's faithful followers who had been waiting for their salvation during the whole Old Testament era.

2. During Noah's building of the ark (120 years), Christ's "spirit" was in Noah preaching to all the unbelieving people. First Peter 1:11 refers to the "Spirit of Christ" residing in the Old Testament prophets. This view takes Christ's reference to Noah literally and holds that the "spirits" were humans (rather than angels or demons). Christ spoke through Noah to the people for 120 years as Noah was building the ark (Genesis 6:3). During that time, God was waiting patiently for any to repent of their sins. But none did. These unbelievers on earth were the "spirits in prison" who were imprisoned by their sin, or they were the souls of the evil human race of that day that are now "in prison," hades (they died long ago in the Flood), awaiting God's final judgment at the end of the age. Those who consider this to be the correct meaning of Peter's words consider that Noah and his family were a righteous minority among a huge majority of evil people. Just as Noah faced unjust persecution, so Peter's readers were also facing unjust persecution. Just as Noah had no converts, they might not either. Just as Noah knew that judgment would come soon, so Peter's readers knew that God would soon judge the world. Ultimately, as Noah and his family were saved from the floodwaters, so those who believe will be saved from eternal death.
3. Between Christ's death and resurrection, or after Christ's ascension, he preached the triumph of his resurrection to the fallen angels. It is likely that Christ was simply making the announcement of his finished work on the cross and, by so doing, declaring his victory. The "prison" was an abyss near heaven, a kind of "storage place" for the evil angels. His declaration confirmed the testimonies of Enoch and Noah. By doing this, it confirmed the condemnation of those who had refused to believe, while assuring the salvation of Noah and believers. The spirits are fallen angels typified by those who instigated gross immorality in the days of Noah (Genesis 6:2). Many scholars favor this view because 2 Peter 2:4-5 and Jude 6 link the angels that sinned with the judgment of the Flood by God in the days of Noah. According to these verses in 2 Peter, these angels of God were cast into hell, literally Tartarus, a place of confinement prior to their judgment. Tartarus, therefore, is the prison mentioned here. Sometime after Christ was resurrected, he made a proclamation to these fallen angels. (See discussion of Tartarus in 2 Peter 2:4.)

Therefore, to answer the three key questions noted above: the fallen angels were the spirits; the time of the proclamation is not known for certain, but either it was between Jesus' death and resurrection or at the time of his ascension; the content of Christ's message was to proclaim his victory to the fallen angels. The passage shows that Christ's glorious reign extends over all the evil authorities and fallen angels that had wreaked havoc on the earth in Noah's day and were still doing so in Peter's time. Yet Peter offered his readers a vision: while the forces of evil could not yet be completely silenced (in fact, they actively continued to work against believers), the believers could rest assured that Christ had already won the battle.

3:21 Speaking of the water of the Flood led Peter to explain that Noah being saved from drowning is a picture of baptism. When dealing with symbols in the Bible, we must always ask, What is being symbolized? It was neither the ark nor the water that "saved" Noah, but the power of God conveyed in a promise. The Greek word for "picture" refers to a person, event, object, or act that anticipates or foreshadows a more perfect fulfillment of the essential idea. So the floodwaters convey some meaning and point toward baptism.

The Flood came as a judgment upon evil people, but for Noah it brought deliverance from their mockery and sin, ushering him into a new life. In baptism, believers identify with Jesus Christ, who separates us from the lost and gives us new life. Baptism is a sign of the new covenant, identifying the person baptized with the people of God, the Christian community. It is not the ceremony, the water, nor the removal of dirt from the body (referring not to physical cleansing but to a spiritual cleansing) that saves. The water of baptism does not "wash away sin" literally. Instead, baptism is the outward symbol of the inner transformation that happens in the hearts of those who believe (Romans 6:3-5; Galatians 3:27; Colossians 2:12). Baptism does not save anyone, but the belief it represents results in salvation. Its efficacy comes from the power of Jesus Christ's resurrection.

Baptism is also an appeal to God from a clean conscience. The Holy Spirit convicts the person's mind and heart of sin, calling for a response or pledge of faith. This pledge is confirmed outwardly and tangibly in baptism. This pledge toward God implies that baptism conveys believers' desire to please God and therefore ask God for help to live out the reality of that inner transformation in their daily lives through repentance and forgiveness.

3:22 Peter now entered into an exaltation of Christ and his victory over all opposition, whether attacks of Satan or the cruel treatment of the government. Peter himself had been an eyewitness. He saw Jesus' ascension (Acts 1:9). Jesus had gone to heaven, a place beyond the clouds, beyond our human sight. There Jesus is seated in the place of honor next to God. Christ has royal power and dignity as a result of his resurrection (Matthew 22:44; Mark 12:36; Acts 2:34; Romans 8:34; Colossians 3:1; Hebrews 1:13). Thus, angels and authorities and powers are bowing before him. In this context, these words refer to all spiritual beings in the universe, both good and evil. Everything in earth and heaven is already subject to Christ. One day in the future, when he comes to judge, his power and authority will be made known to everyone.

1 PETER 4

LIVING FOR GOD / 4:1-11

Peter wrote a great deal about the way believers' lives should differ from the ordinary pattern of the world. The use of their God-given abilities is one of those ways. God has given every person special skills or abilities. Each time these skills are used to serve others, God is glorified. How can you use your gifts and abilities to serve others and glorify God?

4:1 In 3:17-18, Peter explained that Christ had suffered and died for sins, once for all, and that believers should be ready to suffer. In 3:17, he explained that if they had to suffer, it should be for doing good, not for doing evil, in order to be a good witness to unbelievers. Here the point is slightly different. Believers ought to be ready to suffer as Christ suffered—not simply to be a good witness to others, but in order to stay away from sin.

The phrase arm yourselves is a military metaphor. With what were they to arm themselves? The same attitude that Christ had toward suffering. This does not mean that believers should actively seek martyrdom. Nonetheless, they should arm themselves for death if necessary. If believers suffer, it ought to be for living the Christian faith; they ought to suffer courageously, knowing that God will ultimately be victorious. Those who are armed with this intention have an unswerving resolve to do God's will in every situation; those so armed will be able to stand strong in the face of any persecution. They can persevere because of their personal relationship with Jesus Christ (see John 15:20-21).

Having died in Christ, Christians are one with him and are legally free from the penalty of sin. They are in union with Christ, so they regard themselves as dead to sin. Believers are no longer bound by sin's penalty; they must strive, in practice, to be free from its power. Suffering can be helpful in that area. Just as Christ's sufferings led to death and resurrection, so our suffering can help us stop sinning and enter more fully into a new life of service to God.

Christ's suffering made him victorious over Satan; believers' suffering, if they follow Christ's example, can strengthen their faith and solidify their obedient lifestyle. Believers ought to "arm" themselves with a resolve to be like Christ when they face suffering.

4:2 When believers have so armed themselves (4:1), their strengthened faith and resolve to obey will cause them to be anxious to do the will of God. This describes the difference between believers' lives without Christ and their new lives with him. Before conversion, they lived only to satisfy their evil desires; after conversion, they are concerned with living by God's will, not their own.

4:3 Peter urged the believers to no longer live as they had in the past. His list of evil activities resembles Paul's in Romans 13:13. These are examples of what does not please God: actions, activities, and attitudes that belong to the darkness. These have no place in believers' lives.

- Immorality is open and excessive indulgence in sexual sins.
- Lust is sinful human desire.
- Feasting and drunkenness refers to excessive eating and use of wine and strong drink.
- Wild parties (orgies) were often filled with sexual promiscuity. These were often associated with festivals of some pagan gods.
- Worship of idols refers to idolatrous acts. Peter culminated his list with these words, indicating that many of the above acts were associated with the worship of pagan gods.

4:4 When a person becomes a Christian, sometimes his or her lifestyle changes drastically. This was especially true for first-century believers who had come out of the morally corrupt pagan world. Many of Peter's readers were Jewish Christians, but, as 4:3 indicates, many also had come from a pagan background. Former Jews would have at least led a morally upright life, while former pagans had been involved in the activities that Peter had just listed (4:3). Christians no longer desire to join their pagan friends in the wicked things they do. These friends had sought pleasure by denying themselves nothing. Together, they did it all. When the Christians stopped, their friends not only are very surprised, but they also say evil things. This describes the reaction of people who love darkness when they become confronted by the light. A believer's refusal to participate in an activity is a silent condemnation of that activity. Unbelievers then react with hostility, often because they want to justify their actions or silence their own consciences.

4:5-6 Unbelievers who live immorally (4:3) and who say evil things about Christians (4:4) will one day have to face God. This gives believers great relief and confidence—they will receive justice. God will judge everyone, both the living and the dead. And judgment may come at any moment. That is why the Good News was preached even to those who have died. These words have caused debate among scholars, resulting in four main views:

1. Some tie this verse back to 3:18-20 and Christ's proclamation of salvation to the unbelievers who lived before he came. But an understanding of a "second chance" after death in this verse argues against everything else in Scripture, and would be unhelpful to Peter's readers who were being encouraged to persevere in suffering.
2. Others look back also to 3:18-20, but say that Christ was preaching salvation to those Old Testament people who had believed in God in the time before Christ preached on earth, offering them the gift he brought—eternal life.
3. Still others say that this verse refers to the gospel proclaimed by the apostles to those on the earth who were physically alive but spiritually dead.
4. Most likely, however, Peter was referring to those dead at that time of his writing who had heard and accepted the gospel. Many people in the early church had concerns about life after death. In Thessalonica, Christians worried that loved ones who died before Christ's return might never see Christ (1 Thessalonians 4:13-18). They wondered if those who died would be able to experience the promised eternal life. Peter explained that these believers, although their bodies were punished with death—that is, they died physically as everyone dies physically—will still one day live in the spirit as God does.

Peter's readers needed to be reminded that the dead (both the faithful and their oppressors) would be raised from the dead—the faithful to eternal reward, the unfaithful to eternal punishment. God's judgment will be perfectly fair, Peter pointed out, because even those dead from ages past had heard the gospel. The Good News was first announced when Jesus Christ preached on the earth, but it has been operating since before the creation of the world (Ephesians 1:4), and it eternally affects all people, the dead as well as the living.

4:7 This verse gives us the vertical component (how we relate to God) to help us overcome the pressure to sin. Verses 8 and 9 give the horizontal component (how we relate to other people). The fact that God is "ready to judge" (4:5) means that the end of the world is coming soon. These early Christians who faced persecution took great comfort in the fact that their suffering would one day end and that the evil ways of the wicked would be judged. The Lord is ready and waiting, desiring that the gospel should be preached to all the nations before he returns. Peter, like the other apostles, was always aware that Christ could return at any moment (see Romans 13:11-12; 1 Corinthians 7:29;

1 Thessalonians 4:13–5:3; 1 John 2:18). Likewise, believers today must always remember that Christ can come at any time.

The shortness of time remaining should motivate believers to be earnest and disciplined in their prayers. The meaning for today calls for self-discipline when we pray. Rather than merely a quick blessing on our food or a three-minute devotional, we should reserve extended times for sober, direct communication with God. Lack of prayer will render us unprepared for the end times:

4:8 Mutual love, support, and encouragement would also be a great defense. No Christian is an island; no one is alone. When believers experience deep love from the fellowship, they have the human network of support that can help them through any crisis. The same thought as love covers a multitude of sins is found in Proverbs 10:12: “Hatred stirs up quarrels, but love covers all offenses.” Peter may have been quoting from this or from a proverb of his day that was based loosely on this verse. This does not mean that love ignores, overlooks, or tries to hide sin. Instead, Peter probably was thinking back to his words in 4:1-2 that the believers should live the rest of their lives according to God’s will and not human desires. As believers, they should stop sinning. The “covering of sins,” then, is the ability that believers have to forgive one another because Christ has forgiven them. Love works as a shock absorber, cushioning and smoothing out the bumps and irritations caused by fellow believers.

4:9 To cheerfully share one’s home is different from social entertaining. Entertaining focuses on the host—the home must be spotless; the food must be well prepared and abundant; the host must appear relaxed and good-natured. Sharing the home, in contrast, focuses on the guests. Their needs—whether for a place to stay, nourishing food, a listening ear, or acceptance—are the primary concern. This can happen in a messy home. It can happen around a dinner table where the main dish is canned soup. Believers should not hesitate to share with those who need a meal or a place to stay just because they are too busy or not wealthy enough to entertain. Hospitality is a strong expression of love, which Peter already commanded the believers to show (4:8).

4:10 Each person has received one or more spiritual gifts from God—a talent or ability empowered by the Holy Spirit and able to be used in the ministry of the church. Spiritual gifts help God’s people to serve and love one another (4:8) and continue the work of spreading the gospel. Some of this great variety of gifts are listed in Romans 12:6-8; 1 Corinthians 12:4-11, 27-31; and Ephesians

4:11-12—these lists are different and are by no means exhaustive. When believers humbly recognize their partnership in the body of Christ, their gifts can be used effectively.

When believers use their gifts in humble service to others, God's generosity can flow through them. The gifts God gives believers are as varied and many-faceted as are the believers themselves. As God's grace varies in its dealings with people, so God's gifts (given because of his grace) are varied in their administration of his grace as Christ's body on earth. To manage them well means not to hide the gifts, but to use them as they were meant to be used—serving and building up the body of Christ.

4:11 Peter encouraged the believers to use their gifts (4:10). Men and women with gifts that required being a speaker must be responsible with what they said, speaking as though God himself were speaking through them. Likewise, those gifted with abilities that centered on helping others also have a responsibility—to serve not in their own strength but with all the strength and energy that God supplies. If believers serve in their own strength alone or in order to look good to others, they will begin to find serving a wearisome task. But to serve with God's strength is to be able to go above and beyond, and to do so for one purpose: God will be given glory in everything through Jesus Christ. When believers use their gifts as God directs (to help others and build up the church), others will see Jesus Christ in them and will glorify him for the help they have received.

SUFFERING FOR BEING A CHRISTIAN / 4:12-19

The early Christians must have wondered why they were targeted with such abuse and hatred when they were living peacefully and striving to do God's will. However, Jesus himself suffered, and he warned his followers that they too would face suffering. Peter offered this warning to his readers as well.

4:12-13 Christians ought not be surprised at the fiery trials they were going through. Like Christ, Christians should expect to face persecution. These were not something strange—persecution had followed the gospel from the time of Jesus' crucifixion. Believers should expect persecution and suffering because they are part of God's plan to perfect Christians. Even Christ was not spared from persecution (Romans 8:32). Instead of being bewildered by trials, Peter exhorted the believers to be very glad because when they suffered for their faith in Christ, they were becoming partners with Christ in his suffering. If we suffer, it shows our identification with Christ and it shows that our faith is genuine. Since Christ was persecuted, we also will be persecuted and, thereby, participate in his suffering. If we persevere, we will enjoy our future inheritance with him. Servants who know the suffering of Christ will have the wonderful joy of sharing his glory.

This does not mean that all suffering is the result of good Christian conduct. Sometimes a person will grumble, “He’s just picking on me because I’m a Christian,” when it’s obvious to everyone else that the person’s own unpleasant behavior is the cause of his or her problems. It may take careful thought or wise counsel to determine the real cause of our suffering. We can be assured, however, that whenever we suffer because of our loyalty to Christ, he will be with us all the way.

4:14 Peter offered a specific example of the type of suffering the believers might face. To be insulted means to face verbal abuse, to be reviled, ridiculed, or slandered. Not only will suffering believers find great joy when Christ returns (4:13), but the glorious Spirit of God (that is, the Holy Spirit) would come upon them. Christ will send his Spirit to strengthen those who are persecuted for their faith.

4:15 Peter has made the point that not all suffering results in blessing (2:20). If believers must suffer, it must be because of their faith, for that alone results in blessing. They ought not be counted among those who murder, steal, do evil, or meddle in other people’s matters. Such people deserve the punishment and suffering they receive, and there is no blessing in such suffering.

4:16 Peter reminded his readers that it was no shame to suffer for being a Christian. While believers ought not seek out suffering, neither should they try to avoid it. Instead, Peter admonished them to keep on doing what was right regardless of the suffering it might bring. In that suffering they could praise God for the privilege of being called by his wonderful name. As bearers of Christ’s name, Christians are his representatives on this earth; therefore, in everything they do, including what might seem like shameful suffering, they can glorify God.

4:17 This time for judgment refers both to final judgment and also to God’s refining discipline (Hebrews 12:7). In 1 Peter 1:17, Peter warned that God judges all people according to their deeds. He also disciplines and judges his own children in order to refine them, as Peter has explained in 1:6-7. This judgment purifies and strengthens believers, readying them for God’s Kingdom.

But for those who have never believed God's Good News, the judgment will be a terrible fate.

4:18 Reinforcing his rhetorical question in 4:17, Peter continued by quoting from Proverbs 11:31. If the righteous (believers) experience difficulty in their refining process, how much more horrible will be the great disaster experienced for eternity by the godless and sinners who chose to reject Christ.

The phrase barely saved means “with difficulty.” Peter was not introducing uncertainty to the believers’ salvation. Instead, he was talking about the difficult road believers must travel. It is not easy to be a Christian; we must count the cost.

4:19 With the word so, Peter drew a conclusion to his words in the previous verses. Peter consistently encouraged his readers that their suffering was all under God’s control. If they suffered for the faith, they were suffering according to God’s will. Their suffering was not because God had lost control; rather, all that happens to believers is according to his will. While it is difficult to accept that one’s suffering is part of God’s plan, we can find comfort in understanding that, as part of God’s will, suffering has a reason, a goal, and an end. For believers, suffering is a purifying process to draw us closer to God.

Thus, in times of suffering, believers must trust themselves to the God who made them. The word “trust” means to give over to someone for safekeeping. Jesus used the word on the cross (Luke 23:46). This also follows Christ’s example (2:23). If the believers trusted themselves to the one who created them, they would have nothing to fear.

Even in suffering, as Peter had admonished throughout his letter, the Christians must keep on doing what is right. Peter often recommended doing good works as a response to being persecuted (see 2:12, 15, 20; 3:1-2, 13, 17). Paul also recommended this response (Romans 12:14-18; Titus 3:1, 14). If the believers would “do good” even in the face of injustice, they would reveal that they truly had entrusted themselves to God, that they were suffering for their faith alone, which is commendable before God (2:20), and that their attitude toward suffering might draw others to faith as well (2:12).

God created the world, and he has faithfully ordered it and kept it since the creation. Because we know that God is faithful, we know that he will never fail us. If God can oversee the forces of nature, surely he can see us through the trials we face. We must never doubt his loving concern for us or his ability to rescue us.

1 PETER 5

ADVICE FOR ELDERS AND YOUNG MEN / 5:1-11

Peter wrote this letter just before Emperor Nero began cruelly persecuting Christians in Rome and throughout the empire. About thirty years earlier, Peter, fearing for his life, had three times denied even knowing Jesus (John 18:15-27). Since then, having learned how to stand firm in an evil world, Peter encouraged other Christians, who were facing pressure to deny their faith. Peter believed and lived what he wrote in this letter—later he was executed by the Romans for believing in and preaching Christ. In this section, Peter addressed three groups: elders, younger men, and the church as a whole. Those who stand for Christ will be persecuted because the world is ruled by Christ's greatest enemy. But just as the small group of early believers stood against persecution, so we must be willing to stand for our faith with the patience, endurance, and courage that Peter exhibited.

5:1 This continues the thought in 4:12-19. Since God's judgment will "begin first among God's own children" (4:17), then the elders of those congregations carry great responsibility. Elders were the appointed leaders in the churches (see Acts 14:23; 20:17; 1 Timothy 5:17, 19; Titus 1:5-6) and were to lead the churches by teaching sound doctrine, helping believers mature spiritually, and equipping believers to live for Jesus Christ despite opposition. Elders carried great responsibility, and they were expected to be good examples.

Peter appealed as a fellow elder, thereby identifying with the other church leaders, although he had authority as one of the apostles. Peter had been a witness to the sufferings of Christ. Actually he did not witness Jesus' crucifixion because he had denied and deserted Jesus; the word "witness" in this verse does not mean "eyewitness." Neither he nor all these elders had been eyewitnesses; however, they had all been called to "witness" (testify or bring news about) Christ's sufferings to those under their charge. As witnesses, they could also share in those sufferings, personally "witnessing" those sufferings in their own lives.

But they share in even more, for Peter, along with the other elders, as well as all believers, will share Christ's glory and honor when he returns. Peter and the believers shared in Christ's glory at present, and they would also share that glory when it would be revealed at the last day (the Second Coming).

5:2-3 Peter's command that the elders care for the flock of God echoed Jesus' words to Peter himself, “Take care of my sheep” (John 21:16). The same Greek word is used in both places, meaning “to shepherd,” “to tend,” or “to take care of,” “to pastor.” The “flock” is the believers; elders had charge over individual churches and thus over a certain part of God’s “flock.” Elders were to be like shepherds who lead, guide, and protect the sheep under their care. Believers would need good leaders as they faced persecution.

This passage describes three possible problems that elders might face and how they should respond:

*Wrong motivation. Watch over it willingly, not grudgingly. Elders should serve out of love for God. Peter called upon them to make God’s will their own, eagerly seeking to please God in it. Pastors and elders should serve willingly in churches today. Too often a slate of elders becomes hard to fill because of unwillingness by people in the congregation to serve.

*Wrong goals. Not for what you will get out of it, but because you are eager to serve God. In many of the churches, elders were paid for their services; however, that remuneration alone probably would not make an elder rich. This temptation to be greedy probably arose because the church’s finances (the money collected for the poor, etc.) usually were entrusted to the elder or overseer. The opportunity to abuse the trust was very real. Thus, both Peter and Paul explained that elders were to be paid adequately and were to be trustworthy with money (see 1 Timothy 3:8; 5:17-18; Titus 1:7, 11). Instead of money, elders were to focus on serving. The word for “eager” is very strong in the Greek, expressing great zeal and enthusiasm. Today pastors receive pay for serving, but pastors can fall prey to the greedy desire for money. Not having money can lead to as much preoccupation with funds as having a lot of money.

*Wrong methods. Don’t lord it over the people assigned to your care, but lead them by your good example. Elders lead by example, not force. “Lording it over” means “forcefully domineering or subduing.” Elders also must fight the temptation to abuse their authority and hurt the church under their care. The formula Jesus used was always that those who led were to be the best servants (Mark 10:42-45). The leaders were to be examples of humility and servanthood. Leaders must not bully or steamroll people.

5:4 Elders were to be shepherds of God’s flock, but they were answerable to the head Shepherd (also called “the good shepherd” in John 10:11, 14 and “great Shepherd” in Hebrews 13:20). The word comes refers to Christ’s second coming, when he will return to judge all people. At that time, the elders (along with all believers) will receive a reward, a never-ending share in Christ's glory and honor. This is a proper motivation for service in the face of suffering and temptation. All believers will be declared winners and will receive a wonderful, everlasting reward. This could be their source of strength and encouragement in times of trial.

5:5 As Peter had presented the best plan for household relationships, so here he described the best plan for church relationships. The younger men should accept the authority of the elders, meaning to submit to their decisions and to treat them respectfully (unless, of course, they lead people into sin). Finally, all the believers had a responsibility in the congregation: they should serve each other in humility. Humility means being able to put others' needs and desires ahead of one's own (see Philippians 2:3-4). Young people should follow the leadership of the older people (especially those who have been put in authority over them as elders). The elders, in turn, should lead by example. All should actively serve one another. No doubt Peter remembered how Christ served his disciples with humility as he washed their feet (see John 13:1-17).

Peter quoted from Proverbs 3:34 to make his point. The believers must deal with one another in humility because "God sets himself against the proud, but he shows favor to the humble" (see also James 4:6). Not only does pride keep people from listening to or following God, it also can keep older people from trying to understand young people and young people from listening to those who are older.

5:6 Because God sets himself against the proud and shows favor to the humble (5:5), Peter admonished the believers to humble themselves. This would be an act of the will; humility does not come naturally. But when the believers humbled themselves under the mighty power of God, they were actually submitting to his care and protection. They must humble themselves even in the face of persecution because God would honor them. Being "honored" refers to a reversal of past misfortunes and troubles, triumph over their oppressors, and participation in Christ's glory. The honoring may be in this life or in the next. In any case it will be in his good time; that is, in God's perfect time. Most likely, Peter was thinking of that last day, when the head Shepherd would appear (5:4) and all those who have faithfully followed would be exalted and given eternal glory.

5:7 This verse explains what it means for believers to humble themselves (5:6). It is not negative and reactive; believers are not abandoned to the arbitrary will of God. Rather, it is positive and active: Give all your worries and cares to God, for he cares about what happens to you. Peter explained that the believers who continued to carry their worries, anxieties, stresses, and daily struggles by themselves showed that they had not trusted God fully. It takes humility, however, to turn everything (literally, “throw your anxieties”) over to God and trust that he cares. God is not indifferent; he knows what he’s doing in our lives. Sometimes we think that struggles caused by our own sin and foolishness are not God’s concern. But when we turn to God in repentance, he will bear the weight even of those struggles. Letting God have your anxieties calls for action, not passivity. Don’t submit to circumstances, but to the Lord who controls circumstances. Peter wanted the believers facing persecution and suffering to remember to give their troubles to God and that he cared.

5:8 At the same time that believers can cast all their cares on God, they must still be careful and watch out. As soldiers wait and watch, so believers must be constantly alert for the enemy. All of the persecution facing believers ultimately comes down to one source: the Devil, your great enemy. The Devil has other names—Satan, Accuser, Beelzebub—but he is the source of all evil in the world. He hates God and is God’s archenemy; thus he also hates God’s people and is their enemy as well. While Satan has no power against God, he does what he can to harm God’s people. Peter described him as prowling around like a roaring lion, looking for some victim to devour. Lions attack sick, young, or straggling animals; they choose victims who are alone or not alert. Lions prowl quietly, watching and waiting, suddenly pouncing when their victims least suspect it.

Peter warned believers to be alert for Satan, especially in times of suffering and persecution, for he walks up and down the earth (Job 1:7) seeking whom he or his demons can attack and defeat. (For more on demons, see Mark 1:23-26 and Ephesians 6:12.) When believers feel alone, weak, helpless, and cut off from other believers, they can become so focused on their troubles that they forget to watch for danger. In those times, believers are especially vulnerable to Satan’s attacks, which come in various forms, often at a person’s weakest spot—temptation, fear, loneliness, worry, depression, persecution. Therefore, Peter and Paul urged the believers to always be alert for Satan’s tricks.

5:9 James wrote that if the believers resisted the Devil, he would flee from them (James 4:7). Once we have identified the Devil as our enemy, we need to understand who he is and how he operates in order to effectively take a firm stand against him. Satan is the leader of angelic beings who revolted against God and were banished from heaven. His primary purpose now is to separate people from God. Destined for destruction, Satan wants to take as much of creation with him as he possibly can. We desperately need God's grace because we are locked in mortal combat with a superior enemy; we need God's help to resist this enemy, Satan. The best way for believers to take a firm stand is to be strong in their faith. This means trusting in Christ, who has already defeated Satan and will ultimately destroy him. Paul described the "armor" that believers must wear in Ephesians 6:10-18.

These believers were encouraged also to remember that they were not alone in their suffering. Other Christians scattered all over the world were suffering for the faith; this fact should give them strength. All of this, of course, was under God's control and was accomplishing his purposes.

5:10-11 When we are suffering, we often feel as though our pain will never end. Peter gave these faithful Christians the wider perspective. In comparison with eternity, their suffering would last only a little while. This repeats what Peter said in 1:6. Some of Peter's readers would be strengthened and delivered in their own lifetimes. Others would be released from their suffering through death. After that time of suffering, God promises to restore (set right what has gone wrong, put in order, complete), support (by admonition and guidance), strengthen (give courage no matter what happens), and place them on a firm foundation (build on a "rock," therefore being unmovable). While their suffering will be only for a little while, their glory in Christ will be eternal. In life or in death, God's purposes will be accomplished and his promises to believers will be fulfilled because believers have been called into God's eternal glory. God called—this was his initiative. He will do as he promised because all power is his forever and ever.

PETER'S FINAL GREETINGS / 5:12-14

Many of the letters in our Bible close with the writer's personal greetings to friends and colleagues in the letter's destination. In this case, Peter's letter would be carried along to various churches, so Peter greeted no one in particular, but rather sent greetings from those with him in Rome. No doubt the letters of Peter, Paul, James, John, and Jude offered great comfort to the Christians scattered across the world. Believers realized a unity in Christ, a bond of love, and a common future together that could help them survive whatever the world might bring. The worldwide Christian family is a continual blessing to believers who find they have Christ in common, even if they live in different cultures.

5:12 Silas apparently served as the secretary to Peter, writing this letter as Peter dictated it. He may then have carried this letter to the churches of Asia Minor. More likely, he took it to the first church, from which it was sent along by messengers from one church to another, perhaps along the route implied in 1:1.

Silas was a faithful brother to Peter and to other church leaders as well. Silas was one of the men chosen to deliver the letter from the Jerusalem Council to the church in Antioch (Acts 15:22). He accompanied Paul on his second missionary journey (Acts 15:40–18:11), was mentioned by Paul in the salutation of his letters to the Thessalonians (1 Thessalonians 1:1; 2 Thessalonians 1:1), and ministered with Timothy in Corinth (2 Corinthians 1:19).

Peter described the reason for his brief letter—to encourage believers and to assure them that the grace of God would be with them, no matter what might happen. Grace would help them stand fast, and by standing fast, they would receive the reward of that grace—glory with Christ.

5:13 Peter was in Rome when he wrote this letter and was sending greetings from the church there. Mark, also called John Mark, was known to many of this letter's readers because he had traveled widely (Acts 12:25–13:13; 15:36–41) and was recognized as a leader in the church (Colossians 4:10; Philemon 24). Mark was probably with the disciples at the time of Jesus' arrest (Mark 14:51–52). Mark knew Peter well, and Peter looked on him as a son, a close associate in Christ's service. Tradition holds that Peter was Mark's main source of information when Mark wrote his Gospel. Paul had mentioned that Mark was with him at an earlier time in Rome (Colossians 4:10), so it is likely that he returned there at one time and was with Peter at the writing of this letter.

5:14 Peter wanted his readers to express their Christian love to one another, for they would need each other for strength in the days ahead. (Compare Paul's closing words in Romans 16:16; 1 Corinthians 16:20; 2 Corinthians 13:12; 1 Thessalonians 5:26.)

Thus, Peter ended as he began, with peace (1:2). Peter's final words, peace be to all, underscore what was most needed by the Christians: peace in the middle of turmoil. They could not count on worldly peace, for it was not to be. Instead, they would find peace within, by resting in God's grace. Only those who are in Christ can have such peace.

2 PETER

INTRODUCTION

Who taught you how to read? ride a bike? shoot a basketball? solve algebraic equations? repair an appliance? prepare a meal? understand the political process? draw closer to God?

Whether parents, coaches, professors, pastors, or friends, we hold our teachers in high regard. They have opened our eyes, provided counsel, broadened our horizons, solved mysteries, and filled our minds. We have benefited greatly from their wisdom and expertise. That's what makes false teachers so dangerous. Misusing their privileged position and betraying trust, for the sake of pride, reward, or ambition, they prey on the unsuspecting and lead many astray.

Knowing this powerful influence of teachers, the apostles and other church leaders continually warned against those who would twist the truth and lead believers astray. That was the purpose of 2 Peter. Written to strengthen the church to resist the internal challenge to their faith, this brief letter warns of false teachers who deny Christ and scoffers who mock his return. Believers are to beware and to keep their focus on Christ.

Our world is filled with cult leaders, religious scams, and others who would lead people astray. Estimates of the number of cults worldwide run as high as ten thousand. Some of these cults and many false teachers have infiltrated the church. Read 2 Peter and determine to grow in your faith and to reject every type of false teaching.

AUTHOR

Peter: apostle of Christ, one of the original twelve disciples, outspoken leader, and courageous preacher.

Second Peter has less external, historical evidence for its genuineness than any other New Testament book. That is because it is so short, contains very little new information, and is not addressed to a specific individual or church. But the writer identifies himself as Simon Peter and alludes, accurately, to events in Peter's life. These include the Transfiguration (1:16-18) and Jesus' prediction of Peter's death (1:12-14; see also John 21:18). Because the letter claims to have been written by the apostle and has been accepted by most of the church for many centuries as being the inspired Word of God and thus belonging in the canon of Scripture, we affirm that Peter is the author.

For more about Peter, see the Author section in the Introduction to the book of

1 Peter.

DATE AND SETTING

Written from Rome in about A.D. 67.

As was mentioned in the Introduction to 1 Peter, the traditional view is that Peter was executed by crucifixion in Rome by Nero in A.D. 67. Thus this letter would have been written just before his death.

At age sixteen, in A.D. 54, Nero became the fifth Roman emperor. At first, his reign was peaceful, giving promise of a bright future. At this time, Paul had appealed to Caesar in the trial in Caesarea (Acts 25:10-11) and, consequently, had been brought to Rome to present his case (A.D. 61). We presume that Paul eventually went to trial and was cleared of all charges, for he was freed to resume his ministry. He used his new freedom to travel extensively. During this time (A.D. 62–67) Peter likely came to Rome and wrote 1 Peter (approximately A.D. 64). There is no evidence that Peter and Paul were in Rome together except during the time just before both were executed.

After he married Poppaea, Emperor Nero became brutal and ruthless, killing his own mother, his chief advisers Seneca and Burrus, and many of the nobility, in order to seize their fortunes. The downward spiral continued, fueled by Nero's lust for attention and excitement. He sponsored wild chariot races, combat between gladiators, and the gory spectacle of prisoners torn apart by wild dogs. Seeing Nero's insane path and sensing the increased persecution of the church, Peter wrote his first epistle to warn believers and to encourage them to be strong and to have hope during their suffering.

In A.D. 64, fire destroyed a large part of Rome. Nero is thought to have ordered the fire himself to make room for a new palace. Deflecting blame from himself, he accused the Christians. This devout religious group made a convenient scapegoat because they were a small minority and because they were popularly thought to engage in many wicked practices, including their refusal to worship the emperor. Thus began the pursuit, capture, and imprisonment of believers, leading to torture and execution. In A.D. 67, Peter wrote his final words in 2 Peter, urging believers to reject false teachers and to hold fast to the truth. With death in sight, Peter reminded his readers of their great heritage and urged them to look forward to the day of the Lord. Soon thereafter, Peter fell victim to Nero's thirst for blood.

Eventually, during this time of intense persecution, Paul was arrested again and returned to Rome. In this prison experience, he was isolated and lonely, awaiting execution (2 Timothy 4:9-18). Paul was martyred in the spring of A.D. 68, just before Nero's death.

AUDIENCE

The church at large.

Peter hints at his intended audience in 3:1: “This is my second letter to you, dear friends, and in both of them I have tried to stimulate your wholesome thinking and refresh your memory.” It seems, therefore, that the “chosen people who are living as foreigners” in various places (1 Peter 1:1) also received this letter. However, a comparison of the opening of the first letter with the second seems to indicate that Peter was addressing a much wider group of believers. Though not specified, the intended recipients of this letter were Christians who had been taught the basics of the faith (1:12-13, 16).

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To warn Christians about false teachers and to urge them to grow in their faith and in their knowledge of Christ.

Peter knew that he was about to die at the order of Nero and at the hands of a Roman executioner (1:13-15), so he wrote to remind believers to be strong in their faith after his departure (1:3-11, 19-21; 3:1-7).

Peter also had heard of “false teachers” who were twisting the truth, teaching for their own financial gain, and leading believers astray. Evidently, these teachers were elevating themselves and their own ideas and interpretations (“clever lies” 2:3) above Christ (2:1). So Peter wrote to warn believers of these greedy men, exposing their heresies and predicting their punishment (2:1-22). Jude also warns of this heresy. (For more, see the Introduction to the book of Jude.)

This false teaching seems to be the idea that through knowledge a person can find his or her identity and relationship with God. Thus, the false teachers were claiming to have special wisdom and insight—the inside track to finding God. This was an early version of Gnosticism, a heresy that would hit the church full force in the second century. Full-blown Gnosticism emphasized that special knowledge provides the way to spirituality. This knowledge was attained through astrology and magic and was available only to those who had been initiated into the Gnostic system. Another Gnostic belief, that all matter is inherently evil and only the spiritual and nonmaterial is of itself good, led to the idea that God could not have created the world and would have no contact with it. Therefore they taught that God, in Christ, never could have become a human person. If matter is evil, how could God ever be united with a human body? Thus they denied either the humanity or the complete deity of Christ (in their view, he couldn’t have been both).

Peter concludes this brief letter by reminding his readers of the sure second coming of their Lord and urging them, in light of Christ's return, to guard their faith and to be ready (3:3-18).

MESSAGE

After a brief greeting (1:1), Peter gives the antidote for stagnancy and shortsightedness in the Christian life (1:2-11). Then he explains that his days are numbered (1:12-15) and that the believers should listen to his messages and the words of Scripture (1:16-21).

Next, Peter gives a blunt warning about false teachers (2:1-22). They will become prevalent in the last days (2:1-2), they will do or say anything for money (2:3), they will spurn the things of God (2:2, 10-11), they will do whatever they feel like doing (2:12-17), they will be proud and boastful (2:18-19), and they will be judged and punished by God (2:3-10, 20-22).

Peter concludes his brief letter by explaining why he has written it (3:1-18): to remind them of the words of the prophets and apostles that predicted the coming of false teachers, to give the reasons for the delay in Christ's return (3:1-13), and to encourage them to beware of heresies and to grow in their faith (3:14-18).

The main themes in the book of 2 Peter include: Diligence, False Teachers, and Christ's Return.

Diligence (1:5-11, 19-21; 3:14-18). With his last words to the faithful followers of Christ, Peter urges them to continue to grow in their goodness, knowledge, self-control, perseverance, godliness, kindness, and love (1:5-7). Real faith is demonstrated by faithful behavior. Peter knew that believers who are diligent in Christian growth won't backslide or be deceived by false teachers.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Just as babies and children need to grow and mature physically and mentally, so too Christians need to grow spiritually. Our growth began, by faith, at our spiritual birth. The spiritual maturation process continues by faith and culminates in love for others. To keep growing, we need to know God, stay close to him, and remember what we have learned from him. And we must faithfully obey him. How's your spiritual maturity? Are you growing in your faith?

False Teachers (2:1-22; 3:3-5, 17). Peter warned believers to beware of false teachers. These men were proud of their position, promoted sexual sin, and advised against keeping the Ten Commandments. Peter countered these teachers by exposing their lies (2:1-3, 10-11, 14, 18-19; 3:3, 16), predicting their eventual punishment (2:1, 3-10, 12-22; 3:16), and emphasizing the Spirit-inspired Scriptures as the ultimate authority (1:16-21; 3:2, 15-16).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Today, false teachers wrench Bible verses out of context, entice believers down doctrinal tangents, build large followings for their own power and profit, and exploit the gullible and weak. Christians need discernment in order to discover false teachers and courage to resist and refute their lies. God will give us what we need if we read, study, and apply his Word, the Bible. To reject error, we need to know the truth. How well grounded are you in the basic doctrines of the Christian faith? How well do you know your Bible?

Christ's Return (3:3-14). The day of the Lord will come. That's when Christ suddenly will return, to rescue his own from this evil world, to punish the ungodly—those who refuse to believe in Christ—and to create a new heaven and earth where believers will live forever. “Scoffers” mock the second coming of Christ (3:3-4), but God's people know that it is sure. No one knows when Christ will return; but when it happens, everyone will know. Christians take hope in this promise.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The cure for complacency, lawlessness, and heresy is found in the confident assurance that Christ will return. He has not come yet because God is still giving unbelievers time to repent of their sins and to turn to him. To be ready for Christ's return, Christians must stay strong in their faith, trusting God and resisting the pressures and temptations of the world. What should you do to be ready for Christ's return? What can you say to those who don't believe in the Second Coming because it hasn't happened yet?

OUTLINE OF 2 PETER

- I. Guidance for Growing Christians (1:1-21)
- II. Danger to Growing Christians (2:1-22)
- III. Hope for Growing Christians (3:1-18)

2 PETER 1

GREETINGS FROM PETER / 1:1-2

First Peter was written just before the time that the Roman emperor Nero began to persecute Christians. Second Peter was written two or three years later (between A.D. 66 and 68), after persecution had intensified. First Peter was a letter of encouragement to the Christians who were suffering, but 1 Peter focuses on the church's internal problems, especially on the false teachers who were causing people to doubt their faith and turn away from Christianity. Second Peter combats the heresies by denouncing the evil motives of the false teachers and reaffirming Christianity's truths: the authority of Scripture, the primacy of faith, and the certainty of Christ's return.

1:1 In contrast to 1 Peter 1:1, this letter begins with the name Simon Peter. The different form of the name may merely have to do with different writers who recorded Peter's words as he wrote the letter. Peter had been one of Jesus' twelve disciples and one of the three (with James and John) to whom Jesus had given special training. He often acted as spokesman for the disciples, sometimes being rebuked for not thinking before he spoke. The story of Peter's denial of Jesus and later restoration by him were well known to the early church. (For more about Peter, see the Author section in the Introduction to 1 and 1 Peter.)

Peter identified himself first as a slave, meaning one who is subject to the will and wholly at the disposal of his master. Peter used the term to express his absolute devotion and subjection to Jesus Christ. The title apostle designated his apostolic position as leader and one of the twelve original disciples (see Matthew 10:2; John 20:21-23). It also designated authority to set up and supervise churches and discipline them if necessary. Even more than a title of authority, "apostle" means one sent on a mission, like an envoy or an ambassador. Peter and the other apostles (including Paul, see Romans 1:1) had been chosen, called, and given the authority and responsibility to evangelize the world.

Peter wrote to believers who share the same precious faith he and the other apostles had; faith given to them by Jesus Christ, the God and Savior. Peter reassured these believers that their faith was equal to the faith of the apostles; it was just as precious and just as sure, for it was faith in God and in Jesus Christ who, by his death, made people right with God.

1:2 The first part of Peter's greeting here is identical to 1 Peter 1:2. He wished them God's special favor, unmerited by people but freely given by God, and peace, referring to the peace that Christ made between sinners and God. The persecuted and suffering believers may have been feeling very little favor and an absence of peace. But Peter reassured them that both favor and peace could be theirs.

Peter was concerned that the believers' faith remain sound and steadfast. Only by getting to know Jesus better and better could they remain faithful in the face of false teaching (a theme in this letter). But knowledge must not remain static; that is, believers must not have knowledge for the sake of knowledge. Their knowledge must lead to changed behavior (or "godliness"), as is explained in the next verse.

GROWING IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD / 1:3-11

Salvation does not depend on positive character qualities and good works; rather, it produces those qualities and works. A person who claims to be saved while remaining unchanged does not understand faith or what God has done for him or her. Faith in and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ that leads to growth in these qualities causes believers to make a difference in their world and persevere to the end.

1:3 Jesus' divine power, or the divine power that Jesus Christ shares with God, is the power well-known to believers, for it raised Christ from the dead. The word us refers to all believers—Peter, the other apostles, and all readers of this letter. Christ's power manifests itself in the lives of Christians, for that power gives believers everything we need for living a godly life. The power to grow doesn't come from within us, but from God. Because we don't have the resources to live as he requires, God gives us everything we need for godly living (to keep us from sin and to help us live for him). "Godly" means moral uprightness and honoring of God.

The phrase, he has called us to receive his own glory and goodness, explains what attracts people to Jesus in the first place. Jesus' glory (the impact of who he is, his splendor) and his goodness (also translated "moral excellence") draw sinful, seeking people to him. When they come to Christ, they have access to the knowledge they need in order to live for him. "Called" means that believers are chosen (see 1 Peter 1:2, 15; 2:9, 21; 3:9; 5:10 for more on "chosen"). They are called to salvation and to live for God.

1:4 Through Jesus' divine power, Christ also has given us all of his rich and wonderful promises. What are these promises? When Christ came, he made promises of the new messianic age. Peter referred to Christ's second coming (1:16; 3:4, 9-10, 12), the new heavens and earth (3:13), and the believers' welcome into Christ's Kingdom.

Christ will help his people escape the decadence all around them caused by evil desires. Many first-century false teachers emphasized a secret "knowledge" of God; such people were called Gnostics (from the Greek word for "knowledge"). Gnosticism undermined Christianity in several basic ways: (1) it insisted that important secret knowledge was hidden from most believers; (2) it taught that the body was evil; (3) it contended that Christ only seemed to be human but was not. While these false teachers spoke about secret knowledge, Peter wrote of "knowing" Jesus Christ. Pagan philosophers puzzled over "godliness" and "goodness," deciding that these were impossible; Peter used those words to explain that the one true God's divine power imparts godliness and goodness to those who believe in him. Philosophers also discussed at length how people could escape "decadence" in the world and instead share in the divine (divinity belonging to the spiritual world rather than the physical world). They concluded that people had to try to get away from the material world into the spiritual realm by keeping strict laws or refusing any type of pleasure. Peter used their language to explain that all their conclusions were incorrect; people escape decadence and share in the divine nature as God's gift through Christ's death and resurrection.

1:5 Because of God's great gift, their promised destiny, believers must make every effort to apply the benefits of these promises to their lives by working toward a standard of high moral living. While Christ gives the power and the divine nature, believers must make use of that power by making every effort to set aside their sinful desires and actively seek the qualities Peter described below (in addition to others, such as the fruit of the Spirit outlined in Galatians 5:22-23). As Christians make every effort, they will continue to become more and more like Christ.

Believers are to use God's power and every ounce of determination to produce the eight characteristics mentioned.

Faith is, of course, the first characteristic, for without it, Christians are no different from the pagans in the world around them. The faith Peter referred to is faith in Christ, faith that brings them into the family of God. While people might have some of the following characteristics by nature, those are worthless in eternity without being grounded in faith.

But Christians were not to stop at faith alone. Peter knew, like James, that faith without works is dead. The believers had work to do. Their faith was to produce a life of moral excellence. The word is also translated “virtue.” The Greek word is used only here, in 1:3 above, and in Philippians 4:8. In all cases, it signifies high moral standards that surpass those of pagans. While uncommon in the New Testament, this word was familiar to Greek moral philosophy. While the Greek philosophers discussed such excellence at length, Peter once again explained that true goodness could be found only in relationship with Christ. To their faith, believers were to add lifestyles that mirrored Christ’s (1:3). Their motive for such high standards? The shining moral quality of Christ’s life compels us to be our very best.

That life of moral excellence should lead to knowing God better. Knowledge was a word common in the Greek lists of virtues. Thus Peter included it here with a specifically Christian focus. “Knowledge” as used here refers not to the knowledge of God that leads to salvation; rather, here gnosis is that knowledge that leads to wisdom and discernment that enables believers to live godly lives (see Ephesians 5:17; Philippians 1:9; Hebrews 5:14).

1:6 Knowing God leads to self-control, a word used only here and in Acts 24:25 and Galatians 5:23 (as one of the fruits of the Spirit). Self-control refers to mastery over sinful human desires in every aspect of life. This was another highly prized virtue for the Greeks. Their focus, of course, was entirely on self-effort, but the problem was that self-effort always fails in the long run because it may control the body but does not affect inward desires. We know from Romans 8:13 and Galatians 5:22-23 that Christians have the Holy Spirit’s help to gain self-control.

The quality of self-control must then lead to patient endurance, the ability to steadfastly endure suffering or evil without giving up one’s faith. Endurance is not a stoic indifference to whatever fate allows; rather, it springs from faith in God’s goodness and control over all that happens in believers’ lives.

Such endurance leads to godliness. This is another word that is unusual to the New Testament, but common to Greek ethics lists of that day. Paul emphasized godliness in the Pastoral Epistles as being the virtue that should characterize the life and conduct of the believers (see 1 Timothy 6:6, 11; 2 Timothy 3:5; Titus 1:1; 2:12). Godliness was the primary word for “religion” and referred to a person’s correct attitudes toward God and people, usually referring to performing obligatory duties. Here in 1 Peter the word describes an awareness of God in all of life—a lifestyle that exemplifies Christ and is empowered by him (the same word is used in 1:3). Christians must have a right relationship with God and right relationships with fellow believers. The false teachers claimed such “godliness,” but were sadly lacking in reverence toward God and in good attitudes toward others.

1:7 If godliness includes right attitudes toward others, then godliness should lead to love for other Christians. In non-Christian circles, this word referred to affection between family members. Peter extended its meaning in this letter to include the family of believers. It is an especially intense love (see 1 Peter 1:22; Hebrews 10:24) that considers others as brothers and sisters.

Showing love for other believers should translate into genuine love for everyone. While Christians must exhibit love for other believers, their love must also go deeper than mere affection. That affection should grow into the kind of love that always puts others first, seeking their highest good. The Greek word agape refers to self-sacrificial love. It is the kind of love God demonstrated in saving us. Such love among believers allows for weaknesses and imperfections, deals with problems, affirms others, and has a strong commitment and loyalty. Such a bond will hold the believers together no matter what persecutions and suffering they may face.

1:8 The eight qualities mentioned above ought to be part of every believer's life, but they are not static. Believers don't merely "have" these qualities; instead, they grow in these qualities by practicing them in the rough-and-tumble of daily life. As these characteristics increase, they help believers become productive and useful in their knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. Our faith must go beyond what we believe; it must become a dynamic part of all we do, resulting in good fruit and spiritual maturity.

1:9 In contrast to believers who are increasing in the positive qualities Peter mentioned above, believers who fail to develop these virtues, who are not growing in these qualities, are blind or, at least, very shortsighted. Peter had harsh words for believers who refused to grow. The word for shortsighted can mean "to blink" or "to shut the eyes." Peter may also have meant that these believers were intentionally closing their eyes to Christ's light, thus causing spiritual blindness. That they have forgotten that God has cleansed them from their old life of sin pictures those who deliberately put out of their mind all that Christ had done in erasing the sins they committed before they were saved. A believer who is "forgetful" of this and refuses to grow becomes unfruitful for God.

1:10 Believers must work hard to prove that they really are among those God has called and chosen. The believers must determine to live for God no matter how difficult it might become and to grow in the virtues mentioned above. Their status as called and chosen was not in doubt because it was of God's initiative. The believers' behavior, however, would "prove" that call by their good qualities and good works. They were "proving" their call and election, not for God, but for themselves.

The believers to whom Peter wrote were in danger of turning to the doctrine of false teachers who were teaching that immoral living incurred no judgment. These false teachers said that once people were "saved," they could live any way they pleased. Peter countered this teaching, explaining that Christians must match their calling and election with holy living. If they did this, they would never stumble or fall away (see Colossians 1:22-23; 2 Timothy 2:12-13). The word "stumble" means more than merely to "trip." It means to come to grief or ruin, referring to the day of judgment, when sin takes the unbeliever and rebel into eternal damnation.

1:11 Those who live fruitful and productive lives for God, who do not disastrously stumble along the path to the eternal Kingdom (heaven) will find the gates open wide. All believers will experience a wonderful welcome into their true home, the eternal Kingdom of the Lord and Savior. Those who have been called and chosen, but have been unfruitful and have stumbled much along the way, will still reach the Kingdom and receive their salvation, but it will be, as Paul wrote in 1 Corinthians 3:15, "escaping through a wall of flames." Whether this welcome will be any different is unknown, but Peter encouraged his readers to stay true to the faith to ensure a rich welcome. Looking toward our future eternal life provides the motivation for right living now. We must be centered on heaven's priorities, not those of this world. We can face hardships and still be faithful to God because we know the bright future he has for us. How wonderful it is to contemplate that God wants, expects, and waits for us.

PAYING ATTENTION TO SCRIPTURE / 1:12-21

The times were difficult—persecution was increasing from without; false teachers were spewing evil doctrine from within. Peter encouraged the believers to continue to stand firm on the basics of their faith, to continue to remind themselves of these truths (even though they knew them already), and to reestablish themselves in the truth they had been taught.

1:12 Because of the glories awaiting the believers, Peter intended to keep on reminding them not to allow their salvation to become a license for immoral living, nor to rest content in the knowledge of the gospel without obeying it and applying it to their lives. He knew these believers were standing firm in the truth. Standing firm in the truth is a source of spiritual strength.

1:13-15 Peter would keep on reminding the believers and try to make these things clear to them so they would remember them long after he was gone. The phrase as long as I live emphasizes the transitory nature of this life on earth. Peter reminds us that the eternal realm matters, not the temporal. Peter knew that he would soon die. Many years before, Christ had prepared Peter for the kind of death Peter would face, although the only timing Peter knew was that he would be “old” (see John 21:18-19). At the writing of this letter, Peter knew that his death was at hand. Scholars have discussed whether Peter had received some kind of revelation so that he knew his death was coming, or whether Peter simply thought he would die because of the intense persecution in Rome and his being a prominent Christian figure in the church. In any case, Peter was martyred for the faith in about A.D. 68. According to some traditions, he was crucified upside down, at his own request, because he did not feel worthy to die in the same manner as his Master.

1:16 Peter explained that he and the other apostles (we), the original carriers of the gospel message, had not been making up clever stories when they spoke of the power of our Lord Jesus Christ and his coming again. Most likely, Peter was defending the gospel against accusations from false teachers that the Incarnation, Resurrection, and Second Coming were myths (see 3:4; 2 Timothy 2:17-18).

Peter had seen his majestic splendor with his own eyes. Peter was referring to the Transfiguration, where Jesus’ divine identity had been revealed to Peter and two other disciples, James and John (see Matthew 17:1-8; Mark 9:2-8; Luke 9:28-36). At the Transfiguration, the three disciples received a foretaste of what Christ would be like in glory and what eternity with him would be like. This was grounded in experience and fact, without embellishment or speculation. The believers must always remember that the truth they received was truth indeed, passed on by those who had lived with and learned from Jesus. Peter emphasized his authority as an eyewitness as well as the God-inspired authority of Scripture to prepare the way for his harsh words against the false teachers. If these wicked men were contradicting the apostles and the Bible, their message could not be from God. Peter’s affirmation that they were not making up clever stories denies the charge from some liberal scholars that the Gospels are merely myth. Peter and the apostles staked their lives on the truth of those narratives.

1:17 Peter wrote what only an eyewitness to this event could have written. At the Transfiguration, Jesus had received honor and glory from God the Father. The Transfiguration was a brief glimpse of Jesus' true glory. This was God's divine affirmation of everything Jesus had done and was about to do. The Transfiguration assured the disciples that their commitment was well placed and their eternity was secure. Jesus was truly the Messiah, the divine Son of God. On earth, Jesus appeared as a man, a poor carpenter from Nazareth turned itinerant preacher. But at the Transfiguration, Jesus' true identity was revealed with the glorious radiance that he had before coming to earth (John 17:5; Philippians 2:6) and that he will have when he returns in glory to establish his Kingdom (Revelation 1:14-15).

During the Transfiguration, a cloud appeared and enveloped the group on the mountain (Jesus, Elijah, Moses, Peter, James, and John). God's glorious, majestic voice called down from heaven and singled out Jesus from Moses and Elijah as the long-awaited Messiah who possessed divine authority. As he had done at Jesus' baptism (Mark 1:11), God gave verbal approval of his Son. The voice spoke to the three disciples, saying, "This is my beloved Son; I am fully pleased with him."

1:18 Not only had the three disciples (we ourselves refers to Peter, James, and John) seen Christ's honor and glory, but they also had heard about it as well—from God himself! Peter's testimony counters the heresy of the false teachers. They pointed to esoteric knowledge as the basis of salvation and holiness. Peter pointed to a heavenly origin of the voice, not earthly knowledge. The Transfiguration obviously had had a profound impact on Peter. As he prepared for his death, his last words of assurance to future believers focused on the reliability of the gospel. Peter knew that his eternal glory was sure, for he had seen it with his own eyes. Thus, he could assure all believers that they too would one day share in this glory.

1:19 As Peter reflected on the assurances of the Second Coming—what he and the other apostles had seen, heard, and experienced—he was reminded of another assurance (we here could still refer to the apostles, or more likely Peter may have meant that all believers in general also have this assurance). He added the prophets to the mixture of evidence, showing the error of the false teachers. What God had said on the mountain should give the believers even greater confidence in the message proclaimed by the prophets. These words could mean that the Transfiguration verified and validated all that the prophets had foreseen—God would come to earth as a human; Jesus Christ was that person, human but glorious, who would save people from their sins. More likely, these words could mean that if the people were having trouble believing Peter, then they could go back to the Old Testament Scriptures; there they would find the same truth.

They should also pay close attention to the Scriptures as one would pay attention to a light shining in a dark place. The Old Testament Scriptures verify the gospel, making even more certain its truth. The believers were encouraged to continue in this manner until the day Christ appears and his brilliant light shines in their hearts. Until the day comes when Christ returns to dispel all darkness, believers have Scripture as a light and the Holy Spirit to illuminate Scripture for us and guide us as we seek the truth. But when Christ is completely revealed, Scripture will no longer be needed.

1:20-21 Peter wrote here of revelation, the source of all Scripture. One's belief about revelation is foundational for faith. Christians must be able to rest on the infallibility of Scripture, or their faith is of no value. Hence Peter's words, above all, you must understand that no prophecy in Scripture ever came from the prophets themselves. Perhaps the false teachers were denying Scripture by denying its divine origin, saying that the words were merely the writers' interpretations, not God's words. Scripture (specifically the Old Testament prophecies) did not originate with any man nor was it interpreted by the prophets themselves as they delivered the message. Peter reaffirmed the divine origin of Old Testament prophecy, that the Holy Spirit moved the prophets to speak from God. Scripture did not come from the creative work of the prophets' own invention or interpretation. The same God who spoke to the disciples at the Transfiguration had spoken to the prophets, guiding them in their writings. God inspired the writers, so their message is authentic and reliable. God used the talents, education, and cultural background of each writer (they were not taking dictation); and God cooperated with the writers in such a way to ensure that the message he intended was faithfully communicated through the words they wrote. Through the Holy Spirit, God revealed his person and plan to certain believers, who wrote down his message for his people. The process of "inspiration" makes Scripture completely trustworthy because God was in control of its writing. The Bible's words are entirely accurate and authoritative for our faith and for our lives. Through knowledge of the Scriptures, believers would be able to recognize and stand firm against false teaching; through the knowledge of the Scriptures, believers would have all the tools and guidance they would need to live for God.

2 PETER 2

FALSE TEACHERS / 2:1-22

This chapter includes severe warnings against the false teachers who had infiltrated the church and threatened to turn young believers away from the truth. (It contains parallels to Jude 4-16. See the Introduction to 1 Peter for explanation.) Peter spared no words against these false teachers, explaining their evil characteristics and motives, the danger of their teaching, and the certainty of their fate. Believers today would do well to heed Peter's warnings against false teachers; the danger is great.

2:1 The end of chapter 1 leads into the topic of his letter. Peter had explained that God had worked through humans to give his words to people (1:21). At the same time, however, evil was at work. The true prophets spoke and wrote God's words, but there were also false prophets in Israel. In Old Testament times, false prophets contradicted the true prophets (see, for example, Deuteronomy 13:1-5; 1 Kings 18:19; 22:6ff.; Jeremiah 23:16-40; 28:1-17), telling people only what they wanted to hear. These "false prophets" did not speak God's words, and they brought messages to make the people and the kings feel good. Scripture explains that these false prophets would face God's judgment (Deuteronomy 18:20-22).

Coming from within the churches, the false teachers worked to teach their destructive heresies about God. How can we distinguish destructive heresies from "differences of opinion"? The term "heresy" applies to cardinal doctrines whose misinterpretation would be destructive to Christianity. "Differences of opinion" apply to issues that will never be fully solved. We've known the cardinal doctrines for fifteen hundred years (such as the deity of Christ, the Trinity, substitutionary atonement) while we will always "agree to disagree" on the others (Calvinism vs. Arminianism, infant baptism, roles of women in the church, etc.). These were destructive heresies because the teachers wanted to turn the believers against their Master who bought them through his shed blood on the cross. A teaching is destructive if it teaches anything but the truth about Jesus. Any deviation from the truth is no longer the truth. The word for "turn against" means to contradict, reject, or disavow. Thus, these heresies could have taken the form of (1) denying Christ's second coming, or (2) denying Christ's lordship by disobeying his teaching and practicing immorality. Some false teachers were belittling the significance of Jesus' life, death, and resurrection. Some claimed that Jesus could not be God. Others claimed that he could not have been a real human being. These teachers often allowed and even encouraged all kinds of wrong and immoral acts, especially sexual sin (see 2:10, 14).

Peter revealed the seriousness of denying Christ, for turning away from him would bring a swift and terrible end. This would not happen immediately—for many false teachers worked and prospered. When that certain destruction came, however, it would be swift and final.

The question arises, How could these false teachers, who had been believers and whom the Lord had “bought,” end up in eternal destruction? There are five main views about this question:

1. These false teachers had been believers, but had lost their salvation. The problem with this view is that it contradicts other Scriptures that say a person cannot lose his or her salvation (see John 3:16; 5:24; 10:28-29; Romans 8:28-39).
2. These false teachers had joined the Christian community and seemed to be part of it, but they later denounced Christ and tried to convince others to do the same.
3. These false teachers were “bought” in the sense of “created,” but not “saved.” The problem here is that a different word would have been used if Peter had meant this.
4. These false teachers only said that they were saved, “bought” by Christ’s blood. But they were lying. Possibly, but who can know?
5. These false teachers had been “bought” by the blood of Christ, as Christ’s blood is sufficient to save everyone who ever lived if everyone chose to believe. However, the false teachers never accepted Christ as their Savior and thus were never saved in the first place. Potentially Christ died for everyone, but only those who believe and follow will be saved.

Of the five views, the second and fifth are the most plausible.

2:2 Despite the certainty of their destruction, the false teachers, unfortunately, will be successful in two areas. First, many will follow their evil teaching and shameful immorality. Such practices were common in pagan societies and often were part of pagan religions. Popularity was certainly not the right criterion for the truth. Second, Christ and his true way will be slandered. They would discredit the Christian gospel taught by Jesus Christ, who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life (see John 14:6; see also Psalm 119:30). In his first letter, Peter had explained at length the importance of Christians living blamelessly before the unbelieving world (1 Peter 2:11-12; 3:13-15). Those who followed the false teachers into shameful living would malign the gospel before the world.

2:3 Peter spared no words in his condemnation of the false teachers. He exposed their prime motivation—greed. Only money, not truth, mattered to them (see also 1 Peter 5:2). Students ought to pay their teachers, but these false teachers were attempting to make more money by making up clever lies—distorting the truth and saying what people wanted to hear. The teaching that people can live as they please without fear of punishment would be very popular!

Their destruction may not arrive immediately, but when it comes, it will be swift and certain. The teachers may seem to get away with their exploitation for a while, but God had condemned them long ago. In 3:9, Peter explained to the believers that God’s promises were sure, no matter how long they had to wait for them. Perhaps the false teachers said that because God’s promises had not come about, they were nothing more than untrue stories “made up” by the disciples. Peter took their argument and explained that no matter how long it might take and no matter how successful the false teachers might seem to be, their condemnation and destruction were sure.

2:4 If some people still did not believe in future judgment and punishment, Peter gave examples of how God had judged evil in the past. He pointed out that God did not spare even the angels when they sinned. This could be a reference to the angels who rebelled along with Satan (Ezekiel 28:15) or to the sin of the angels described in Genesis 6:1-4 (see also Jude 1:6 and Revelation 12:7). More likely, it is the incident recorded in Genesis 6, because the following verses relate to incidents also taken from that portion of Genesis—the Flood and the judgment of Sodom and Gomorrah. If God did not even spare his angels, neither will he spare the false teachers.

The angels who sinned were thrown into hell. That phrase in Greek is one word (used only here in the New Testament), literally meaning “to cast into Tartarus.” In Greek mythology, Tartarus, located in the lowest part of the underworld, was the place of punishment of rebellious gods and the departed spirits of very evil people. These angels were imprisoned in this hell, in gloomy caves and darkness. This might also be the place of punishment set aside in the heavenly realm (1 Peter 3:19-20). The place of confinement cannot be identified, but it is totally in God’s control. These sinful angels will wait in hell, a place of punishment, until the judgment day, referring to their final doom (Matthew 25:41). False teachers will face the same judgment as the rebellious angels.

2:5 Another example of God's certain judgment of evil is the vast flood that destroyed the whole world of ungodly people. Peter referred to the Flood three times in his two letters (see 1 Peter 3:20; 1 Peter 2:5; 3:6). God did not spare the ancient world—for the great sinfulness of all mankind led him to destroy the entire rebellious civilization. Yet even as God was destroying all the sinful people in Noah's day, he powerfully protected Noah and his family of seven (Genesis 8:16). Noah had warned the world of God's righteous judgment, but no one believed him. God's punishment is not arbitrary. Those who deserve punishment will receive his punishment; those who trust in him will receive his grace. Peter's readers should understand the comparison—those who choose the wrong path face eternal consequences.

2:6 A third example of God's certain punishment of evil is the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. Genesis 18–19 describes the sinfulness of these cities and Abraham's effort to keep them from being destroyed. When not even ten righteous people could be found in the cities, God destroyed them by burning them to heaps of ashes and swept them off the face of the earth (Genesis 19:24-25). The cities do not even exist today. Archaeologists believe they may have been buried by the waters of the Dead Sea.

Peter explained that the horror of these cities' ending is an example of what will happen to ungodly people. Great will be the suffering of the ungodly; their ending will result in punishment, gloom, and banishment from the presence of God. In our day, God's punishment on the unrighteous seems less of a preaching and teaching priority. Do we, like the false teachers, think we have outgrown this clear doctrine of Scripture? We have a lot of emphasis on tolerance of others and the self-help benefits of the Bible, but we must not dilute God's clear words of warning. To turn away from God is to turn to ruin. From such ruin, there will be no escape. Don't neglect teaching about God's judgment.

2:7-8 Just as Noah had been protected from the Flood that destroyed the earth, so Lot, Abraham's nephew, had been rescued from Sodom and Gomorrah's destruction. Lot had chosen to settle near Sodom (Genesis 13:12-13), but was distressed by the wickedness he saw and heard day after day. Lot lived in Sodom and apparently was a man of some importance there, for when the angels went to take Lot from the city, they found him sitting in the gateway of the city, where city officials met.

Peter described Lot as a righteous man who was horrified by the evil in the city. Angel visitors rescued Lot and his family by taking them away from the city before it was destroyed. The Genesis account does not make Lot appear to have been very “righteous” at all. But for all his flaws, Lot stood out as a righteous man in an extremely evil society. When God chose to bring swift and complete judgment on the evil of these cities, he also graciously saved his own.

Just as God rescued Lot from Sodom, so he is able to rescue us from the temptations and trials we face in a wicked world. Lot was not sinless, but he put his trust in God and was spared when Sodom was destroyed. God will punish those who cause the temptations and trials, so we need never worry about justice being done.

2:9 These words were comforting to Peter’s readers and continue to be comforting to believers today. The Lord knows how to rescue godly people from their trials. Noah and Lot had stood the “trial,” staying true to God alone while surrounded by sin and hatred. The early Christians also lived in a hostile environment, often facing persecution. If they could stand firm, they would be rescued.

The examples cited above also show that God knows how to punish the wicked right up until the day of judgment. Peter’s wording refers back to 2:4, which speaks of the rebellious angels being “kept” until the “judgment.” Scholars have debated the meaning of this verse. Peter may have meant that the unrighteous (his focus was still the false teachers and their followers, 2:3) were under punishment in this life, will be punished after death, and will face destruction at that final day of judgment (2:3; Revelation 20:11-15). Others have taken Peter’s words to mean that sinners who have died are presently suffering as they await the final judgment. Finally, others place the words in the future tense—that the unrighteous are being kept now for a future judgment. The last interpretation seems most likely because Peter points to final deliverance for the righteous at the Lord’s return, so the false teachers’ destiny is set for them at the great judgment (Revelation 20:11-15).

2:10 The certainty of the punishment described in the previous verses is for all evil people, but he is especially hard on those who follow their own evil, lustful desires and who despise authority. This wording refers to sexual promiscuity, immorality, and even perverted sexual practices. “Authority” could refer to church leaders, angelic powers (as in the remainder of this verse, below), or to the false teachers’ denial of Christ. Most likely, the authority despised by the false teachers referred to all three; they didn’t want anyone over them. The false teachers lived as they pleased and laughed at the prospect of a Second Coming and judgment by God. Peter wanted to make it clear that people would not get away with such sin.

With pride and arrogance, they dared even to scoff at the glorious ones. (A similar passage is in Jude 1:8-10.) Scholars have considered these “glorious ones” to be church leaders, angels, or fallen angels. The most widely held opinion is that these “glorious ones” are the fallen angels—the guilty celestial beings who deserve condemnation—thus, they are the fallen angels also mentioned in 2:4. The false teachers “slandered” the spiritual realities they did not understand (2:12), perhaps by taking Satan’s power lightly and doubting the existence of supernatural evil powers. They lived immoral lives and, when rebuked for doing so and thus following Satan, they would simply laugh at the idea of Satan at all.

2:11 Peter pointed out the false teachers’ audacity in scoffing at the glorious ones (2:10) by explaining that even the good angels in heaven, though far greater in power and strength than evil angels, never speak out disrespectfully against the glorious ones. While not even the angels would accuse Satan on their own authority, the false teachers arrogantly did so, revealing their ignorance of God and of Satan. Their complete irreverence in the form of immoral living (thus mocking God’s laws) and slander of the evil angels (thus flaunting their self-attested authority) would result in severe punishment.

2:12 The false teachers arrogantly rebelled against God and spoke as though Satan’s influence meant nothing (see 2:11), laughing at powers they knew little about. All their supposed knowledge was worthless; they really understood nothing. Without mincing words, Peter further described these false teachers as unthinking animals, creatures of instinct. Like beasts, the false teachers would be destroyed.

2:13 These teachers had been so obvious in their sinfulness that it was shameful that any of the believers should follow them. While the false teachers tried to pass themselves off as superior teachers with great knowledge, they indulged in evil pleasures in broad daylight. Such acts would be done under cover of darkness. These men were so arrogant, however, that they did not even attempt to cover up their behavior, making them no longer fit to be with the Christians. Thus the false teachers were a disgrace and a stain among them, ruining the Christians’ gatherings by their very presence. The feast may refer to part of the celebration of the Lord’s Supper. In one of the greatest of hypocritical acts, they attended the sacred feasts designed to promote love and unity among believers, while at the same time they reveled in deceitfulness. These men were guilty of more than false teaching and promoting evil pleasures; they were guilty of leading others away from the truth. Destruction would be their reward.

2:14 Peter had no soft words for these false teachers, no excuses for their behavior. Their sinful words and actions came from deep within; their thoughts and motives were evil.

- They commit adultery with their eyes means that they could not look on women without lusting for them. They were turning church meetings into opportunities for sexual encounters.
- Their lust was never satisfied because they were bound in sin, acting like brute beasts that follow instinct without any rational faculties (2:12). These men were in bondage to sin and to the power of Satan (2:10).
- They made a game of luring unstable people into sin means that, like a fisherman baiting fish, the false teachers waited out their catch. They didn't waste time with the strong believers, but sought out those who were not firmly grounded in the faith, or had doubts, or were "outside" the fellowship for one reason or another. Pretending patience and interest, they could entice these people away from the faith and into their dangerous "net."
- They train themselves to be greedy means that the false teachers had exercised themselves (the Greek word for "trained" is the word from which we derive "gymnasium") in being greedy and in getting what they coveted. These men were really good at being greedy because, no matter how much they got, they always wanted more.

These teachers who were leading Christians away from the faith were filled with pride, immorality, sensuality, greed, lust, blasphemy, slander, and self-will. No wonder Peter called these men doomed and cursed. This was a common Hebrew phrase to describe those who would face certain destruction from the hand of God.

2:15-16 Peter once again looked to the Old Testament for an illustration to apply to these false teachers. They followed in the steps of another man who had led many astray. Numbers 22–24 tells the story of Balaam who was hired by a pagan king to curse Israel. He did what God told him to do for a time, but eventually his evil motives and desire for money won out (Numbers 25:1-3; 31:16). The false teachers were not interested in serving God; instead, they were using religion for financial gain and personal advancement (see also Jude 1:11 and commentary there).

Balaam claimed to do only what God told him, but the money was a strong temptation. Balaam probably thought that he could figure out a way to obey God, yet get the money anyway. On his way to see King Balak, three times Balaam's donkey saw the angel of the Lord standing in their path, ready to kill Balaam. Each time, the donkey stopped and refused to go forward. Each time, Balaam beat the donkey. Finally, the donkey rebuked him with a human voice. Balaam obeyed God and refused to curse the Israelites. Like Balaam, the false teachers' attitudes were akin to madness. Balaam at least listened to the donkey. The false teachers listened to no one. Like Balaam, the false teachers expected to get away with their sin, but they would receive their reward.

2:17 The false teachers' messages ended only in disappointment. Like a dried-up spring or clouds blown away, their messages were promising much but delivering nothing. Their fate had already been sealed in blackest darkness. The word darkness stood for the final fate of all wicked people. The false teachers would be forever cast from God's light into the darkness of hell itself.

2:18 The false teachers drew attention to themselves by their foolish boasting. They spoke often and loudly, but their words were ultimately empty. They had no substance, no truth. Instead, they lured back into sin those who had just escaped from such wicked living. By using lustful desire as their bait, the false teachers were able to draw new Christians away from the gospel truth. A salvation that is future only, that allows people to indulge every sinful desire and passion here on earth without punishment, can be enticing. Who would believe such a message? Not the strong followers of Christ, so the false teachers focused on new converts not yet firmly rooted in the faith or free of pagan associations and habits. To these young believers, the empty, boastful words sounded convincing.

2:19 The freedom the false teachers promised was freedom to live as one pleased. However, such freedom was empty, for the false teachers were not free. Instead, they were slaves to sin and corruption. They began to taste the freedom found in Christ, but they perverted it by resisting the rules of love their new Master gave. They tossed these aside, in the name of freedom, only to find themselves enslaved once again. Why? Because you are a slave to whatever controls you. Many believe that freedom means doing anything they want. But no one is ever completely free in that sense. The freedom Christ brings is freedom from sin, not freedom to do whatever we want. Too often freedom from rules, structure, or obedience leads to an addiction or preoccupation with the new pleasures freedom offers. But these actions can quickly enslave a person.

If people refuse to follow God, their only option is to follow their own sinful desires and become enslaved to what their bodies want. Only Christ can promise and deliver true freedom, for only those who submit their lives to Christ are set free from slavery to sin.

2:20-21 The false teachers had identified themselves as believers. But to then get tangled up with sin and become its slave again only made them worse off than before. The false teachers had learned about Christ and how to be saved, but then had rejected the truth, the only way out of sin, the only way of salvation. Like a person sinking in quicksand who refuses to grab the rope thrown to him or her, the one who turns away from Christ casts aside his or her only means of escape.

Indeed, Peter went even further: It would be better if they had never known the right way to live than to know it and then reject the holy commandments. Peter offered a comparison, not an option, between the two. He said ignorance is better than apostasy because the one who persists in self-delusion in fact refuses God's help and forgiveness. In the case of the false teachers, they not only violated it, but taught others to do so, giving them an even greater responsibility (see Jesus' words in Mark 9:42). A child who disobeys his parents out of ignorance of the rules is better off than a child who deliberately and willfully disobeys.

In the early church, apostasy was considered an especially horrible sin; to be baptized and then to turn from the faith amounted to committing the unforgivable sin, for it meant turning one's back on God, never to return. Thus Peter wrote these stunning words that they would have been better off never having known God's truth than deliberately blaspheming his grace, love, and forgiveness by rejecting them.

2:22 Those who knew the truth and turned away from it (2:20-21) were among the lowest of the low. To Jews, no creatures were lower than dogs and pigs. The first proverb is taken from Proverbs 26:11; the second probably was a well-known saying in the first century. The meaning of both proverbs is the same: those who return to evil after being cleansed are no better than a dog that throws up and returns to its vomit, or a pig that is washed and then returns to the mud. Those who make an outward profession of religion without a Spirit-controlled inner transformation will soon return to their old way of life.

2 PETER 3

THE DAY OF THE LORD IS COMING / 3:1-16

The previous chapter focused on denouncing the false teachers. This chapter returns to the faithful believers, offering them love and encouragement to remember God's words to them (3:1-2), to remember God's timing is different from their expectation so that they could counter the scoffers (3:8), to be faithful (3:14), and to stay away from false teaching (3:17).

3:1 Peter's purpose was to remind the believers that their lives ought to be characterized by wholesome thinking (meaning sincerity or purity of understanding). Plato had used this phrase to refer to pure reason uncontaminated by the senses. The thinking and intentions of God's people must be able to stand up under scrutiny and not be led astray by immoral desires (Philippians 4:8-9).

3:2 The way to maintain "wholesome thinking" (3:1) is to remember and understand Scripture. The holy prophets had written about the coming of the Messiah, and what he would command through his apostles. Most likely this refers to the law as upheld by Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount and propagated by the apostles (see 2:21).

The Holy Spirit unified the prophets and apostles in an unchanging message of hope and truth. The prophets had written of the Messiah, who would come to bring judgment and restore the Kingdom; those words had come to pass. The apostles had spoken and written that Jesus the Messiah would return to bring judgment. Thus believers should live expectantly, knowing that those words will also come to pass.

3:3 We, along with the first-century believers, ought to be prepared for anything because we have been warned what to watch for and how to live. Peter wrote that in the last days there will be scoffers. The "last days" began with Christ's resurrection and will continue until his return, when he will set up his Kingdom and judge all humanity. Jesus and the apostles warned that during that interim, including the time period we live in, scoffers will laugh at the truth (see 1 Timothy 4:1-2; 2 Timothy 3:1-9). Once again, Peter was referring to false teachers who deny Jesus Christ and thereby deny his second coming (3:4). These false teachers will laugh at the truth of God's word and instead do every evil thing they desire. Peter called the believers to remember the Scriptures and to live to please God; but the false teachers will scoff at the Scriptures and will live to please themselves and their sinful desires. Ironically, the very presence of these men who scoffed at prophecy was itself fulfillment of prophecy.

3:4 The false teachers' scoffing focused on Christ's second coming. Jesus had promised that he would come back (Mark 13:24-27), but many years had passed and nothing had happened. The scoffers based their argument on the fact that everything has remained exactly the same since the world was first created.

Many first-century Christians believed that Jesus would come in their lifetime. When Christians began to die without experiencing the Lord's return, some began to doubt. These were prime targets for the false teachers, who pointed out that perhaps it was all a lie and Christ was never going to return. The false teachers argued that ever since creation, the world has continued in a natural order, a system of cause-and-effect. They did not believe that God would intervene or allow anything out of the ordinary (such as miracles) to occur. Therefore, they scoffed at teachings about a Second Coming and the end of the world.

3:5-6 What these scoffers were forgetting in their argument (that the world had remained unchanged since creation) was that God made the heavens. The Creation disproves their "all things continue" argument because the creation of the earth was an imposed change on the formless void (Genesis 1:1-2). The very reason the world was continuing on in a stable, predictable pattern was because God, in his grace, had created it that way. However, this stability should not be taken for granted. The false teachers deliberately forgot that God also had destroyed the evil world with a mighty flood.

3:7 As God destroyed the earth before, he has also commanded that the heavens and the earth will be consumed by fire on the day of judgment. In Noah's day the earth was judged by water; at the Second Coming it will be judged by fire (see Isaiah 66:15-16; Malachi 4:1; Revelation 19:20; 20:10-15). Judgment has already been decided. Ungodly people will perish; it is only a matter of God's timing. Scholars have debated whether Peter was referring to a literal fiery destruction of the entire universe with new heavens and earth to follow, or to "fire of judgment." Second Peter is the only New Testament book that says the world will actually be destroyed by fire (3:10-11). The passages cited above refer primarily to the fire of God's judgment. If taken that way, the fire purifies the earth, burns up the Lord's enemies and the futile works of humanity, and makes the earth new for Christ's eternal reign. Peter's point was that destruction would come, and the godless (those who have not believed) will not escape.

3:8 Peter had made his point that Christ would certainly return and bring judgment, but the question still remained, "Why was the Lord delaying so long?" Peter offered two reasons in 3:8-9. First of all, the Lord does not count time as people do. He is above and outside of the sphere of time. God sees all of eternity past and eternity future. Indeed, to him a day is like a thousand years and a thousand years is like a day (Psalm 90:4). God may have seemed slow to these believers as they faced persecution every day and longed to be delivered. But God is not slow; he simply doesn't operate according to our timetable.

3:9 The second reason for the Lord being slow about his promise to return was his patience. He does not want anyone to perish, so he is giving more time for everyone to repent. He wants as many people as will to come to faith in him. God is not "slow" at all; rather, according to his timetable, he is being exceedingly patient, giving people time to turn to him. Love is the reason that he delays the destruction of the world.

Some have attempted to make this verse mean that ultimately everyone will be saved. But nowhere does Scripture teach universal salvation. This verse means that God, in his great compassion, does not desire that anyone should "perish" (referring to eternal destruction). He wants every person to turn to him and trust him. God is loving, but he also executes perfect justice. His perfect love causes him to be merciful to those who recognize their sin and turn back to him, but he cannot ignore those who willfully sin. Wicked people die both physically and spiritually. God takes no joy in their deaths; he would prefer that they turn to him and have eternal life. However, the promise of judgment and destruction show that God knows that many will not choose to follow him.

3:10 The day of the Lord is the day of Christ's return and of God's judgment on the earth. Peter repeated a warning used by Jesus Christ, that this day will come as unexpectedly as a thief (see also Matthew 24:42-44). Christ's second coming will be swift, sudden, unexpected, and terrible for those who do not believe in him. The day of the Lord will be a time of judgment and destruction. Again quoting words that he had heard Jesus say, Peter described the coming end (see Matthew 24:29; Luke 21:25). Peter described three aspects of the conflagration:

1. The heavens will pass away with a terrible noise describes the end of the earth's atmosphere and the sky above.
2. Everything in them will disappear in fire could mean that the celestial bodies will also be destroyed (the sun, moon, stars, and planets).
3. The earth and everything on it will be exposed to judgment is an extremely difficult phrase, which has given rise to numerous textual variants in various manuscripts. Some of the readings speak of the earth disappearing, others of it being burned up, and others of it being "exposed" so that all the works that people counted on in this earth in place of God will be revealed for their futility, and then they will all be annihilated. (See also Hebrews 1:10-12.)

When will these events occur? Some have placed them between the events of Revelation 20 (the thousand-year reign of Christ, Satan's doom, the final judgment) and Revelation 21 (new heaven and new earth, the descent of the new Jerusalem).

Peter explained that this earth will not last forever. As God intervened in the past to judge the earth by water, so one day he will intervene again. But in that day, the judgment will be by fire, and everything will be destroyed. Those who presume to take God's delay of this judgment to mean that they can do as they please will find themselves surprised upon his return. And when the destruction occurs, there will be no second chances and no escape for those who have chosen to disobey the Creator. However, in the following verses, Peter turned his attention to the believers, writing to them about how they should live in light of the coming judgment.

3:11-12 Peter's description of the coming destruction of the earth ought to cause Christians to carefully examine their lives so that they are holy and godly. Such lives would be in direct contrast to the unholy living and godlessness found in the world. Such lives, lived through faith in Jesus Christ, will continue on after the coming destruction. Because of that knowledge, the Christians need not fear that day; they could instead actually look forward to it.

Peter wrote that the believers can also actually hurry it along by continuing to live holy (dedicated to God and separated from evil) and godly (characterized by personal piety and worship) lives, praying (Matthew 6:10), and telling people about the gospel (Matthew 24:14). Christians are not called to sit and wait for the inevitable end; instead, our mission during our time on earth is to live for God and to tell the world the gospel message. Jesus had explained that, before his return, "the Good News must first be preached to every nation" (Mark 13:10).

As noted above, at the end God will set the heavens on fire and the elements will melt away in the flames (3:10). These will happen as a direct result of the coming of the day of God. The earth's destruction will not be the result of any natural winding-down of the universe, but the result of God's sovereign will, occurring according to his plan.

3:13 Believers look forward to the end of the earth only because it means the fulfillment of another of God's promises—his creation of the new heavens and new earth. God's purpose for people is not destruction but re-creation; not annihilation, but renewal. God will purify the heavens and earth with fire; then he will create them anew. All believers can joyously look forward to the restoration of God's good world (Romans 8:21). In a beautiful description of the new heavens and earth, believers are assured that it will be a world where everyone is right with God because God himself will live among his people (see Revelation 21:1-4, 22-27).

3:14 Because believers can trust God's promise to bring them into a new earth, and because they are waiting for these things to happen, they ought to live a pure and blameless life. To say it another way, only this powerful hope could entice us to live righteously. God's Kingdom will be characterized by peace with God; therefore, believers ought to practice peace with God now, in preparation for living in the Kingdom. We should not become lazy and complacent just because Christ has not yet returned. Instead, we should live in eager expectation of his coming. What would you like to be doing when Christ returns? That is how you should be living each day.

3:15-16 As the believers waited, perhaps impatiently, for the Lord's return, Peter reminded them that the Lord is waiting so that people have time to be saved. God's patience means salvation for many more who will have the chance to respond to the gospel message.

When reading the various letters of the New Testament, it is interesting to study the interrelationships among the writers. Peter was one of Jesus' twelve disciples. He later became the undisputed leader of the church in Jerusalem. Paul came along later, after he was converted on the Damascus road by a vision of Jesus Christ (Acts 9). Paul was also considered an apostle. Peter and Paul had great respect for each other as they worked in the ministries to which God had called them.

By the time of Peter's writing, Paul's letters already had a widespread reputation. Peter backed up his words with the believers' apparent knowledge that Paul had also written to them about this very topic. Peter recognized the value of Paul's letters in the growth of the church, for he described Paul as writing them with the wisdom God gave him. The teachings of the apostles were never distorted by the person or area of ministry. Whether the letter came from Paul or Peter, the message could be depended on to be the same, for it had come from God himself. Notice that Peter wrote of Paul's letters as if they were on a level with other parts of Scripture. Already the early church was considering Paul's letters to be inspired by God. Both Peter and Paul were aware that they were speaking God's word along with the Old Testament prophets (see 1 Thessalonians 2:13). In the early days of the church, the letters from the apostles were read to the believers and often passed along to other churches. Sometimes the letters were copied and then passed on. The believers regarded these writings to be as authoritative as the Old Testament Scriptures.

Some readers may have been put off by some of Paul's comments that were hard to understand. But the cure is not to listen to those who would twist the truth, but instead to continue to increase in the knowledge of Jesus. The better we know Jesus, the less attractive false teaching will be. The false teachers twisted all of Scripture to mean whatever they wanted. However, this would result in disaster.

PETER'S FINAL WORDS / 3:17-18

No matter where we are in our spiritual journey, no matter how mature we are, the sinful world always will challenge our faith. We still have much room for growth. If every day we find some way to draw closer to Christ, we will be prepared to stand for truth in any and all circumstances.

3:17 Peter wanted his readers to be warned ahead of time about the danger of false teachers, explaining the false teachers' tactics and future destruction. Being forewarned, the believers would not be carried away by the errors of the false teachers. To "be carried away" means to be led astray into error. The word pictures a person following along behind a crowd. The implication is that keeping company with false teachers or those who follow them will inevitably cause the believer to also be led astray and lose his secure footing.

3:18 Peter concluded this brief letter as he had begun, by urging his readers to grow (the verb is a present imperative, meaning "continue growing") in the special favor and knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ—to get to know Christ better and better.

Believers “grow in favor” as they understand that they are living by God’s grace alone—so everything they do is a result of that grace. Believers “grow in knowledge” as they search and study the Scriptures, pray, listen to sound teachers, and apply that knowledge to their daily lives. If they do these, they will not need to fear being influenced by false teachers. Christ is Lord, divine and omnipotent; he is Savior, the one who accomplished humanity’s salvation. To him be all glory and honor in this age and in the new eternal age to come. Amen, so be it.

1 JOHN

INTRODUCTION

With a flick of the wall switch, the light chases away shadows, reassuring the child that her monsters were only imaginary. Another switch turns on a powerful battery-powered beam and keeps the hiker on the trail after dark. Other lights warn, guide, illuminate, regulate, and decorate. Light—pure and bright—cuts through darkness, exposing reality and demanding attention. Those who walk in light see clearly and know where to go. But those who walk in darkness grope, stumble, and turn the wrong way.

In his Gospel, John proclaimed that Jesus, the “light of the world,” had come to illuminate truth and to lead men and women to God (John 1:4-9; 8:12). Here in this first letter, John urged all to forsake darkness and live in the light (1 John 1:5-7).

Do you yearn for direction in life? Follow the light.

Do you doubt and wonder what’s real? Turn on his light.

Do you stumble and fall? Walk in the light.

Read 1 John and know that your Light has come. Let it shine!

AUTHOR

The apostle John.

The similarities between the Gospel of John and these letters identified as 1, 2, and 3 John are so remarkable that it would be difficult to argue that these writings were done by two different people. The syntax, the vocabulary, and the thematic developments are so strikingly similar that even the inexperienced reader can tell that the letters were penned by the writer of the Gospel. Therefore, once the writer of John’s Gospel is identified, we can automatically identify the writer of the letters.

The author’s proclamation as an eyewitness is just as pronounced in the first letter as it is in the Gospel. In 1 John, the author claimed to be among those who heard, saw, and even touched the eternal Word made flesh (1:1-5). In other words, John lived and traveled with the man Jesus. As such, his testimony is firsthand; he was an eyewitness of the greatest person to enter human history. Surely no human knew Jesus better than John.

At the beginning of 2 and 3 John, this author identified himself as “the Elder.” This title probably pointed to John’s position at that time as the oldest living apostle and chief leader among the churches in the Roman province of Asia (otherwise known as Asia Minor). This is made clear in 1 John by the way he addressed the believers as his “dear children” (2:1, 18, 28; 3:7; 5:21).

For more about John, see the Author section in the Introduction to the Gospel of John.

DATE AND SETTING

Written in about A.D. 90 from Ephesus.

John and the other apostles were probably forced to leave Jerusalem by A.D. 70, if not earlier, due to mounting persecution. It is possible that John gathered with some of the Samaritan converts (see John 4:1-42; Acts 8:9-17) and some of John the Baptist’s followers in Palestine, where they continued to preach the word. Sometime thereafter (but probably no earlier than A.D. 70), they migrated to the Roman province of Asia and began a successful ministry among the Gentiles.

John wrote a Gospel for these Gentile believers somewhere around A.D. 80–85. Sometime thereafter, some of the members of the community left to form a rival group. John, therefore, wrote a letter (1 John) in order to deal with the crisis by encouraging the believers to remain in Christ and in the fellowship and by denouncing those who had left. First John was probably written around A.D. 85–90. Second John must have been written in the same time period because it dealt with the same issue, warning the believers not to receive the traveling teachers who were spreading the false teachings of those who had left the church. Third John has the same characteristics; John cautioned Gaius about Diotrephes, who had evidently been affected by the secessionists and had a negative attitude about John and his coworkers.

Although there are no references in the Gospel or the three letters concerning where they were written, according to the earliest traditions of the church, John wrote all four books from Ephesus.

AUDIENCE

The church in Ephesus and believers in nearby churches.

In recent years various scholars have tried to identify the original Johannine community—the group of believers for whom John wrote his Gospel and letters. That there was a special community of believers seems evident from the way John speaks to them and of them in his three letters. The apostle John and the believers knew each other well, and the believers accepted the teachings of the apostle as “the truth.” John encouraged them to stay in fellowship with him (and the other apostles); if they did so, they would enjoy true fellowship with the Father and the Son (see 1:1-4).

In the Gospel, this link between the believers, John, and Jesus is also made evident. Throughout the Gospel, John reveals that he had a special relationship with Jesus. Just as the Son was the one qualified to explain the Father to humankind because of his special relationship with the Father (John 1:18), so too John, who reclined on Jesus' chest, was qualified to explain Jesus' message to his readers because of his relationship with Jesus. Because of his relationship to Jesus, John's testimony to his community could be trusted.

A careful study of the letters seems to indicate that the readers were close to John—close enough to be considered his family. They depended on him for his eyewitness account about Jesus and for his insights about his personal relationship with Jesus. John's readers were believers of all ages who needed to be affirmed as a community in love, life, and truth.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To reassure Christians in their faith and to counter false teachings.

If it is true that John wrote these letters to certain local churches in Asia—especially to those around Ephesus—one of the reasons that prompted his first epistle was that a heretical faction had developed within the church, a faction that promoted heretical teachings concerning the person of Christ. Scholars have identified this heresy as Docetism generally and pointed specifically to Cerinthus as the perpetrator of the specific brand of Docetism.

The Docetists denied that Jesus had actually become flesh and blood; they denied that God had come in a human body (see 4:1-3). According to Irenaeus, Cerinthus “represented Jesus as having not been born of a virgin, but as being the son of Joseph and Mary according to the ordinary course of human generation, while he nevertheless was more righteous, prudent, and wise than other men. Moreover, after his baptism, Christ descended upon him in the form of a dove from the Supreme Ruler, and that then he proclaimed the unknown Father, and performed miracles. But at last Christ departed from Jesus, and that then Jesus suffered and rose again, while Christ remained impassable, inasmuch as he was a spiritual being” (Against Heresies, 3.4). John refuted the Cerinthian heresy in 5:5-8 (see the comments at that point in the commentary).

The heretical faction within the church (or churches) that John was addressing eventually left the fellowship. In so doing, they exposed the reality that they did not genuinely belong to God's family (2:18-19). But their false teachings still lingered in the minds of the faithful. So John wrote to clear the air of all the falsehoods and bring the believers back to the pure beginning of the gospel and to the basics of the Christian life. John urged his readers

- to have fellowship with God in the light

- to confess their sins
- to love God
- to love their fellow Christians
- to abide in Christ
- to purify themselves from worldly lusts
- to know God personally and experientially
- to appreciate the gift of eternal life
- to follow the Spirit of truth (and the anointing) in discerning false teachings
- to esteem Jesus Christ as the true God

Above all these items, John stressed how necessary it was for the early believers to maintain a proper relationship with those who had been with Jesus. In the prologue (1:1-4) to 1 John, he invites all the believers to participate in the one apostolic fellowship. Fellowship is a two-way, simultaneous experience: both with fellow believers and with God. This is to safeguard against pseudo-spirituality and extreme individualism. Throughout this first letter, John seems to have been addressing his comments to those who were claiming to have a relationship with God, yet had left the fellowship of believers and did not love the brothers and sisters in Christ.

Today, those who claim to follow Christ need a fresh dose of the message of 1 John, examining themselves in light of these basics of the Christian faith.

MESSAGE

John opens this letter by giving his credentials as an eyewitness of the Incarnation and by stating his reason for writing (1:1-4). He then presents God as “light,” symbolizing absolute purity and holiness (1:5-7), and he explains how believers can walk in the light and have fellowship with God (1:8-10). If they do sin, Christ is their defender (2:1-2). John urges them to obey Christ fully and to love all the members of God’s family (2:3-17). He warns his readers of “antichrists” and the Antichrist who will try to lead them away from the truth (2:18-29).

In the next section, John presents God as “love”—giving, dying, forgiving, and blessing (3:1–4:21). God is love, and because God loves us, he calls us his children and makes us like Christ (3:1-2). This truth should motivate us to live close to him (3:3-6). We can be sure of our family relationship with God when our life is filled with good works and love for others (3:7-24). Again, John warns of false teachers who twist the truth. We should reject these false teachers (4:1-6) as we continue to live in God’s love (4:7-21).

In the last section, John presents God as “life” (5:1-21). God’s life is in his Son. To have his Son is to have eternal life.

The main themes in the book of 1 John include: Sin, Love, Family of God, Truth and Error, and Assurance.

Sin (1:5-10; 2:1-2, 12-17; 3:4-9; 5:16-21). Even Christians sin. Sin requires God's forgiveness, and Christ's death provides it. Determining to live according to God's standards in the Bible shows that believers' lives are being transformed. Throughout this epistle, John calls into question all professed spirituality (for example, see 1:6, 8; 2:4, 6, 9). Talk is cheap; reality must be tested by one's relationship with the members of the church community. John urged the believers to know the truth and to live in it.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. We cannot deny our sin nature, maintain that we are above sinning, or minimize the consequences of sin in our relationship with God. We must resist the attraction of sin, yet we must confess when we do sin. Be honest with yourself and with God. Admit your sin to him and live in the freedom of his forgiveness.

Love (2:7-11; 3:10-11, 14-16, 23; 4:7-21; 5:1-3). In John's letters, all talk of one's living in God must be tested by how one lives with his or her companions in Christ. This leads to one of the primary themes in these letters: love for God must be exhibited in love for others. If we could ask John what is the one message he wanted us to get from these letters, he would probably say, "Love each other." This command did not originate from John; it came straight from the lips of Jesus (see John 13:34; 15:17). John repeated this command often (1 John 2:7; 3:11; 2 John 5-6), basing it on the premise that since "God is love," then all who claim to know God must exhibit that nature in their relationship with others. Jesus commands his followers to love others as he did. This love is evidence that they are truly saved. God is the creator of love; he cares that his children love each other.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. It is easy to talk about love and how much we love people, but love means putting others first. Love is action—showing others that we care—not just words. To show love, we must give sacrificially of our time and money to meet the needs of others. Look for tangible ways to express God's love to others, especially fellow believers. Instead of buying the latest fashions, buy meals or clothes for poor families; instead of pushing for recognition, encourage others and give them the credit; instead of remembering with resentment a past hurt, forgive and let it go. Love others for Christ.

Family of God (1:1-4; 2:18-21, 24-25, 28-29; 3:1-3, 10-20; 4:20-21). The one, unique fellowship between the Father and the Son began in eternity, was manifest in time through the incarnation of the Son, was introduced to the apostles, and then through the apostles was extended to each and every believer.

Those who entered this fellowship by believing in Christ became members of God's family—the Christian community, a community that was held together by their common experience of the Trinity and by their acknowledgment of the truth as defined by the apostles. God's life in his children enables them to love their fellow family members.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. How people treat others shows who their Father is. God's children love others, especially those in the family of faith. Some think they can live for God on their own; but God created us for fellowship. He wants us to love and care for our brothers and sisters in Christ. Live as a faithful member of God's family, becoming involved in a local church and reaching out in love to your brothers and sisters.

Truth and Error (2:4-6, 18-23, 26-27; 3:7-9; 4:1-6). False teachers were as present in the young church as false prophets had been in Old Testament Israel. John wanted believers to know the truth so they would be able to distinguish it from error. The word "antichrist" occurs only four times, all in John's epistles (1 John 2:18, 22; 4:3; 2 John 7). First John 2:18 refers also to "many antichrists." John assumed that his Christian readers knew about the Antichrist and had been taught to expect his coming (2:18-27). The presence of many antichrists, in fact, indicated that the end times had arrived. But John warned that a final Antichrist would yet make an appearance. He, like the others, would deny that Jesus is the Christ. According to 1 John, anyone who denies that Jesus is the Christ, that he is the unique Son of God, or that he has come in the flesh is the "Antichrist." The biblical term, however, principally refers to a particular person in whom that denial reaches its consummate expression and who will play a key role in the final stage of history.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. God is truth and light, so the more we get to know him, the better we can keep focused on the truth. Many people today claim to have "a message from God"—the truth. The key question to ask of each teacher and any teaching, however, is, "Does it really agree with the biblical teaching that Jesus Christ, God's Son, actually became man with a human body?" True teachers affirm God's word and teach that Jesus was fully God and fully man. Don't be led astray by any teaching that denies Christ's deity or humanity. Check the message; test the claims.

Assurance (2:3-6; 3:19-24; 5:1-15, 19-20). Several times in this letter, John assures readers that they can "know" or "be sure." They can know that they "belong to him" (2:3), that they are "living in the truth" (3:19), that God lives in them (3:24), and that God hears their prayers (5:15). God is in control of heaven and earth. Because his Word is true, believers can have assurance of eternal life and victory over sin. By faith, they can be certain of their eternal destiny with him.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Assurance of our relationship with God is a promise, but it is also a way of life. We build our confidence by trusting in God's word and in Christ's provision for our sin. Competing teachers can cause confusion, and tough times can bring doubts. Regardless of what is happening around us or to us, however, we can be assured of God's presence and love and of our eternal destination. If you have trusted in Christ as your Savior, you have eternal life. God lives in you, and you are on your way to experience heaven. Live with the assured confidence of the reality of God.

OUTLINE OF 1 JOHN

I. God Is Light (1:1–2:29)

II. God Is Love (3:1–4:21)

III. God Is Life (5:1-21)

1 JOHN 1:1–2:6

INTRODUCTION / 1:1-4

John's first letter opens as does his Gospel—with a prologue. When John began his Gospel, he recalled how he (and the other disciples, for whom he was a spokesman) had beheld the Son's glory, the glory as of a unique Son from the Father (John 1:14). Then John described Jesus as the one who was both God and the Son of God living near the heart of the Father (John 1:18). In both the Gospel and the letter, John revealed that he (with the apostles) had heard, seen, and even touched God in his bodily expression in Jesus Christ. The apostles realized that the Word of Life, who had been in face-to-face fellowship with the Father for all eternity, had entered into time to relate to them in a human body. They shared the Good News so that, across the world and down through the ages, we might also experience this fellowship.

1:1 This letter is attributed to John, one of Jesus' original twelve disciples. Along with Peter and James, he had a special relationship with Jesus. This letter was written between A.D. 85 and 90 from Ephesus, before John's exile to the island of Patmos (see Revelation 1:9). Jerusalem had been destroyed in A.D. 70, and Christians had been scattered throughout the empire.

Unlike the style of most letters at this time, this letter does not give the name of its writer at the beginning. Both 2 and 3 John begin with "the Elder" and follow with the name of the addressee. This letter, however, includes no author's name, except the understanding that this is an elder of the church writing to his "dear children" (2:1). (The Author section in the Introduction offers more information about this letter's authorship.) This unaddressed, unsigned letter was probably more of a written sermon or treatise sent to several of the churches in and around Ephesus that were under John's care. As the oldest living apostle, John was the "elder statesman" of Christianity; he had watched the church deal with conflict from within and persecution from without. Plentiful false teachers were accelerating the downward slide of many away from the Christian faith. John wrote this letter to put believers back on track.

God (the one who existed from the beginning) came into the world as a human in the person of Jesus Christ. John and the other apostles (we) had heard, seen, and touched him. When the Son entered into time, his fellowship with the Father also entered into time. Thus, to have heard Jesus was to have heard the Father speaking in the Son (John 14:10, 24), to have seen Jesus was to have seen the Father (John 14:8-10), and to have known Jesus was to have known him who was one with the Father (John 10:30, 38).

John called Jesus the Word of life. In his Gospel, John had written, “In the beginning the Word already existed. He was with God, and he was God” (John 1:1). As the “Word,” the Son of God fully conveys and communicates God. John’s use of the Word is a good title for the Son who both created the universe with God and then came to earth to be the perfect expression of God to humanity. Jesus, the Word, reveals God’s mind to human beings. Not only is Jesus Christ “the Word,” he is the Word of life—of spiritual life. People may be physically alive but spiritually dead. Jesus, however, as the express image of God himself, gives both spiritual life and eternal life to all who believe in him (1:2).

1:2 Divine, eternal life resided in Christ, so John described Jesus as this one who is life from God and repeated the fact that we have seen him. He, the other disciples, and thousands of other people had indeed “seen” Jesus. Jesus was more than just a human being. John’s work during the many years since Jesus’ ascension had been to testify and announce to everyone that Jesus is the one who is eternal life. Because Christ is eternal life, those who trust in him also have eternal life.

In Greek, the phrase, he was with the Father, suggests that the Word was face-to-face with the Father. This common Greek expression indicated a personal relationship. By using this expression, John was saying that the Word (the Son) and God (the Father) enjoyed an intimate, personal relationship from the beginning. In Jesus’ intercessory prayer, recorded in John 17, he revealed that the Father had loved him before the foundation of the world (John 17:24). The words then he was shown to us refer to the revelation of the Son of God in human form (see John 10:30; 14:7-10).

1:3 The plural pronoun we, used throughout the prologue, refers, at times, to John and the other apostles (for whom John was acting as spokesman) and also to John and any other believers who had seen Jesus Christ in bodily form. These people had actually seen and heard Jesus Christ; they told about it so that others may have fellowship with them, referring to the life (spiritual and eternal) that all Christians share in a living relationship or partnership. When the disciples were regenerated by the Holy Spirit, they actually entered into fellowship with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ. Having been brought into this living union, the apostles became the new initiators—introducing this fellowship to others and encouraging them to enter into fellowship with them.

As an eyewitness to Jesus' ministry, John was qualified to teach the truth about him. The readers of this letter had not seen and heard Jesus themselves, but they could trust that what John wrote was accurate. Believers today are like those second- and third-generation Christians. Though they have not personally seen, heard, or touched Jesus, they have the New Testament record of his eyewitnesses, and they can trust that these eyewitnesses spoke the truth about him.

1:4 Just as the proclamation of the Good News was for others to join the fellowship (1:3), so John was writing these things to encourage the readers' participation in both the fellowship and the joy that he (John) and the other believers were experiencing. Proclamation produces fellowship; fellowship produces joy. John's joy would be complete if his readers remained in the fellowship and did not wander off into false teaching. John, caretaker of the churches and "spiritual father" to many of the believers in and around Ephesus, would only be able to experience "complete joy" if his "children" were experiencing the blessings of fellowship with one another and with God.

In Galatians 5:22, joy is a fruit or by-product of the Holy Spirit's work in believers' lives. Joy also comes as the result of harmonious relationships among believers (Acts 13:52; Philippians 2:2).

LIVING IN THE LIGHT / 1:5–2:6

When Jesus was on earth, his divine life illuminated the inner lives of his followers. Everywhere he was present, he gave light. This light penetrated people—exposing their sin and revealing divine truth. No one could come into contact with Jesus without being enlightened.

1:5 John's message emphasized that God is light. Light enables people to do their work. It produces growth in crops; it reveals beauty and provides safety. Light represents what is good, pure, true, holy, and reliable. Light reveals; light shines. God is so completely "light" that there is no darkness in him at all. "Darkness" represents what is sinful and evil. God is untainted by any evil or sin. Thus, "God is light" means that God is perfectly holy and true and that he alone can guide people out of the darkness of sin.

1:6 While "light" has many connotations, this reference points specifically to God's purity. Therefore, those who claim to have fellowship with God are living in God's light, trying to live holy and pure lives for him. To claim to belong to God but then to go on living in spiritual darkness is hypocritical. In fact, John says that people are lying. Christ will expose and judge such deceit.

Here John was confronting the first of three claims (see also 1:8 and 1:10) of the false teachers: that people can have fellowship with God and still walk in sin. False teachers who thought that the physical body was evil or worthless taught one of two approaches to behavior: either they insisted on denying bodily desires through rigid discipline, or they approved of gratifying every physical lust because the body was going to be destroyed anyway. Here John was stating that no one can claim to be a Christian and still live in evil and immorality.

1:7 Those who claim to follow the Son must be living in the light of God's presence. They must be illumined by the truth of God's character. To "live in the light" requires constant contact with God and no tolerance for dishonesty, hypocrisy, or sin. Living in the light comes from continuous effort to take on Christ's qualities. This involves complete transformation from within.

Living in the light leads to fellowship with each other. This fellowship among believers results from each believer's having fellowship with God. True spirituality manifests itself in community fellowship. One cannot say that he or she communes with God and then refuse to commune with God's people. Such was the case with some of the false teachers of John's day, and this situation exists among false cults today. Often their followers and leaders claim to have special relationships with God, but they don't affiliate with other believers. They stay isolated and withdraw from everyone else. John's point is that the natural result of living in the light (in fellowship with God) should be joyful relationships with other Christians.

Another result of living in the light is that the blood of Jesus, his Son, cleanses us from every sin. John emphasized that the death of Christ saves people, not the false teachers' knowledge. The verb cleanses also means "purifies." Sin is not only forgiven, it is erased. How does Jesus' blood do that? In Old Testament times, believers would symbolically transfer their sins to an animal, which they then would sacrifice (see a description of this ceremony in Leviticus 4). The animal died in their place to pay for their sin and to allow them to continue living in God's favor. God graciously forgave them because of their faith in him and because they obeyed his commandments concerning the sacrifice. Those sacrifices anticipated the day when Christ would completely remove sin. Real cleansing from sin came with Jesus, the "Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world" (John 1:29).

Those who "live in the light," the true believers, will still find themselves at times in sin. Christians will not be made completely perfect until Jesus returns and brings them into his Kingdom. When they do sin, however, God has already made provision to deal with those sins through the blood of his Son. That provision allows God's people to continue to walk in the light—dealing with sin through confession and receiving his forgiveness so that fellowship with God and with others can remain unhindered.

1:8 John attacked the second claim of the false teachers (see also 1:6 and 1:10): that people could have no sin. The false teachers refused to take sin seriously. In saying that they had no sin, they may have been saying that they did not need Jesus' death on the cross. They may have considered that Jesus' death abolished all sin, including the ability to sin. Or, they may have been teaching the false notion that the spirit and body are completely separate and that whatever a person does in the body does not affect the spirit.

John explained that those who believe the possibility of human sinlessness are fooling themselves and refusing to accept the truth as expressed in God's word. The truth of God's word does not change: people are sinful. Though Jesus condemned sin once for all, Christians still sin.

1:9 Being God's people does not mean denying sin (1:8), but confessing it. Because all people are sinners, Jesus had to die. Because sin is not completely eradicated from the lives of those who believe in Jesus, God graciously gave his followers provision for the problem of sin. John explained it here in a nutshell: If we confess . . . he is faithful and just to forgive.

To confess our sins means to agree with God that an act or thought was wrong, to acknowledge this to God, to seek forgiveness, and to make a commitment to not let it happen again. Confession of sins is necessary for maintaining continual fellowship with God, which in turn will enable people to have good fellowship with members of the church community.

Confession is supposed to free people to enjoy fellowship with Christ. But some Christians do not understand how it works. They feel so guilty that they confess the same sins over and over; then they wonder if they might have forgotten something. Other Christians believe that God forgives them when they confess, but if they died with unconfessed sins, they would be forever lost. These Christians do not understand that God wants to forgive people. He allowed his beloved Son to die just so he could offer them pardon. When people come to Christ, he forgives all the sins they have committed or will ever commit. They don't need to confess the sins of the past all over again, and they don't need to fear that God will reject them if they don't keep their slate perfectly clean. Of course, believers should continue to confess their sins, but not because failure to do so will make them lose their salvation. Believers' relationship with Christ is secure. Instead, they should confess so that they can enjoy maximum fellowship and joy with him.

That God is faithful means he is dependable and keeps his promises. God promises forgiveness, even in the Old Testament (Jeremiah 31:34; Micah 7:19-20). God wants to forgive his people; he wants to maintain close fellowship with them. But this can only happen when the way to him is cleared of sin's debris—and that can only happen through confession.

That God is just means that he could not overlook people's sin. He could not decide to let people get away with sin or to make the penalty less severe. "The wages of sin is death" (Romans 6:23). Sacrifices had been offered for sin, and blood had been spilt from the beginning. This could not change because God does not change. Justice would have to be done in order to decisively deal with sin. But instead of making people pay for their sins, God took the punishment upon himself through his Son. In this way, justice was done, and the way was paved for God to forgive us and to cleanse us from every wrong. Those who confess their sins to God can trust in his forgiveness because they can trust in his character.

1:10 The false teachers not only denied that sin breaks people's fellowship with God (1:6) and that they had a sinful nature (1:8), but some even had the audacity to make a third claim—that they had not sinned. These false teachers thought that their superior knowledge had placed them out of the realm of sin, rendering them incapable of sinning. This claim went beyond telling a lie (1:6) or merely fooling themselves (1:8); this claim was calling God a liar. God says that all have sinned—otherwise he would not have needed to send his Son. To claim sinlessness treats the Cross with contempt and Christ's suffering as worthless. To do this, said John, shows that God's word has no place in our hearts.

John wanted his readers to understand that people who make such a denial of sinful acts do not have the Word of God permeating and changing their lives because the Word of God clearly states throughout that all people sin and all need a Savior (1 Kings 8:46; Psalm 14:3; Isaiah 53:6; 64:6; Romans 3:23; 6:23). People cannot be forgiven if they do not recognize their sin.

2:1 The first step for living in the light (1:5, 7) is to confess sin (1:9). The second step is to forsake all sin (2:1). John emphasized human sinfulness in chapter 1 in order to make his readers despise their sin and try to stay free from it. So that you will not sin means that you will try to stay free from sin by avoiding it, refusing it, but then also confessing it when it does happen. Christians will sin because they have not yet been made perfect. John fully understood this. He did not want his readers to take the inevitability of sinning as an excuse to sin. The tension between the phrases “so that you will not sin” and if you do sin forms a balance between a too harsh or too lenient view of sin. “Believers have no business sinning,” says John, “but when they do sin . . . God has provided a way for them to be cleansed.”

When believers sin and then come to the Father for forgiveness, there is someone to plead for them before the Father. This “one” is Jesus Christ, the one who pleases God completely. Christ’s righteousness contrasts with humanity’s sinfulness. Not only is Jesus the Judge’s Son, but he also has already paid the penalty. Because Jesus Christ fulfilled the law and paid sin’s penalty for all who believe, he can plead for them on the basis of justice as well as mercy. Believers cannot be punished because someone else has already taken the punishment for them.

2:2 When Jesus Christ speaks to the Father in people’s defense (2:1), he doesn’t falsely claim that they are innocent. Instead, he maintains that they are guilty of sin but then points out that he has already paid the penalty. Because Jesus Christ is the sacrifice for our sins (see also 4:10), he can stand before God as the believers’ mediator. His death satisfied the wrath of God against sin and paid the death penalty for it. He took away not only the sins of John and his fellow believers, but also the sins of all the world.

Christ’s atoning sacrifice is sufficient for the sins of every person in the world. While Christ’s death is sufficient for every sin of every person who ever lived or ever will live, it becomes effectual only for those who confess their sin, accept the sacrifice, and embrace Christ as Lord and Savior. John was not teaching universal salvation—that everyone was saved by Christ whether he or she believed or not. We know this from John’s statements in 2:19-23; obviously the antichrists had not found forgiveness and acceptance in Christ.

2:3-4 Up to this point in the letter, John has been warning against the false teachers and those who left the church to follow them. The people who remained in the church, John’s readers, may have been wondering, “How can we be sure that we belong to him?” In other words, “How can we know that we’re Christians?” This passage gives two ways to know: if you do what Christ says and live as Christ wants.

People can know that they belong to Jesus Christ if they are obeying his commandments. This letter lists several proofs for how people can know Christ and belong to him. Obedience provides one clear indication. This does not mean that believers must follow a list of rules without one slip, nor does it mean that people must demonstrate obedience before they can come to know God. Instead, obedience comes as the natural outworking of a person's faith and love for the Lord. True believers wholeheartedly accept and submit to God's will as he has revealed it in his Word. If a person claims to belong to God, but doesn't obey God's commandments, he or she is a liar. Since anyone can claim to know Christ, you can check his or her authenticity by seeing whether or not he or she obeys God's word.

2:5-6 Obedience is linked not merely with knowing God but with loving him. Those who obey God's word really do love him. By this obedience and love, believers can know that they live in him. Jesus portrayed in human terms absolute obedience to the Father. Anyone who wonders how to obey God can look at Jesus. Those who truly desire to live in God should live their lives as Christ did. To "live as Christ did" doesn't mean choosing twelve disciples, performing great miracles, and being crucified. People cannot merely copy Christ's life. Much of what Jesus did had to do with his identity as God's Son and his special role in dying for sin. Anyone's claim to live in Christ must be backed up by following his example of complete obedience to God and loving service to people.

1 JOHN 2:7-29

A NEW COMMANDMENT / 2:7-29

Genuine believers not only commit themselves to obeying God (2:3), but they also have deep and sincere love for fellow believers. The Christian principle of love is “new” because believers’ ability to love one another is motivated by their love for Christ, who first loved them.

2:7 The commandment to love one another is both old and new. For the Jews, the command to love others was as old as the Pentateuch (Leviticus 19:18), and as new as Jesus’ words (John 13:34). Thus, John knew that he was not writing a new commandment because it is an old one you have always had. However, Jesus called the commandment “new” because he interpreted it in a radically new way. The newness of Jesus’ command focused on the practice of love.

2:8 Yet this commandment to love is also new, because the new commandment to love departs from the old characteristics of the law with its emphasis on outward conformity to certain regulations.

The commandment to love one another is true in Christ and is true among the believers. The command to love first reached its truest and fullest expression in the life of the Lord Jesus Christ. He demonstrated true love by coming into the world and giving his life for all who believe. Thus the command should also be true in you—that is, in all who claim to follow Christ.

Although the true light is already shining and the darkness has not passed away completely, the darkness is disappearing slowly but surely. Thanks to the victory of Christ, the outcome of the conflict between light and darkness is a foregone conclusion. The conflict continues, however. But like the first rays of sun at dawn slowly but steadily piercing the darkness, so the true light experienced and shared by Christians is growing.

2:9 These next few verses highlight the absolute contrast drawn between light and darkness, love and hate, God and the world. The two contrasts cannot coexist. This verse teaches that a person who claims to be in the light (1:7) should then, by extension, also be filled with love (2:7-8). If that person makes this claim but hates a Christian brother or sister, then the claim to be in the light is false. That person is still in darkness. Living in love is living in the light, since the gospel both illuminates people’s minds and warms their hearts to love (see 4:20). Love should be the unifying force and the identifying mark of the Christian community. Love is the key to walking in the light, because believers cannot grow spiritually while they hate others.

2:10-11 As the opposite to 2:9, verse 10 explains that actions reveal faith: anyone who loves other Christians is walking in the light. There is nothing in such a person to make him or her, or anyone else, stumble. In contrast, people who claim to be Christians yet hate a Christian brother or sister are not grounded in the truth, as seen by their actions. They are walking in darkness. In the context of this letter, those who hated other Christians probably referred to the false teachers and their followers who had left the fellowship of the church and thereby had rejected John and the other true Christians. They claimed to love God, but they hated other children of God. “Believers” who hate are in darkness and not light, in sin and not in fellowship with God. They are lost, having been blinded by the darkness (see also 2 Peter 1:9). To hate, then, is to choose the darkness and to shut oneself off from the light. To hate is to separate oneself from the presence of God and from the fellowship of other believers.

2:12 The next three verses contain two sets of triplets that describe John’s readers as children (2:12), mature ones (2:13), and young (2:13). The term dear children refers not to age, but was a term of endearment that John used for all those to whom he was writing. Christ used the same words when speaking to his disciples (John 13:33). Many had come to Jesus through John’s ministry, so he called them his own “children.” These true followers had in common the fact that their sins were forgiven because of Jesus. They had accepted the fact of their sinfulness, had confessed their sins, and had been forgiven because of Jesus’ death on the cross.

2:13 Described as mature in their faith, these believers know Christ, the one who is from the beginning. They have longtime experience with their faith and have knowledge befitting their maturity. Described as young people, the term pictures action: you have won your battle with Satan. Christians must understand that they are in a war zone and that they are constantly at battle with the forces of Satan. In conquering the false teachers, they had defeated Satan (see 1 Timothy 4:1-2; 2 Timothy 2:24-26 for Paul’s view on how Satan enters into false teaching). The use of the past tense, “have won,” shows a battle won, although the war will not end until Jesus Christ returns. Because Christ has already defeated Satan, all Christians can go into the battle knowing that they are on the winning side (see Romans 8:31-39; Ephesians 6:10-18; Colossians 2:15).

2:14 This verse repeats the message of 2:13 to fathers and then amplifies the message to young people. The overlap of the advice can be seen here where John wrote to you, children, because you have known the Father. The phrase refers to experiential knowledge. All Christians ought to have personal knowledge of God the Father through Jesus Christ his Son; otherwise, they cannot be believers. The mature believers know Christ, the one who is from the beginning. They have grasped that Christ is eternal, thus are not swayed by the false teachers. To the young people, John wrote that they are strong with God's word living in them, and he repeated that they have won their battle with Satan. This strength is not the natural physical vigor of young people but the power of God's Word in them through the Holy Spirit.

2:15 Believers must love God (2:5) and love their brothers and sisters in Christ (2:10), but they must stop loving this evil world and all that it offers. John was writing to those in the church who had remained true to their faith. They had withstood false teaching and had remained unified together with other believers. But John warned against a secret spiritual danger that could still threaten them. The "world," as used here, refers to the realm of Satan's influence, the system made up of those who hate God and his will. Believers should love the people of the world enough to share God's message with them, but they should not love the morally corrupt system in place in the world. Satan controls this evil world. His world opposes God and his followers and tempts those followers away from God and into sin (see James 4:4).

John wanted to show his readers that to attempt to love both God and the world would be as impossible as trying to combine light and darkness (1:5). Therefore, when you love the world, you show that you do not have the love of the Father in you. These words do not mean that believers are to remove themselves from all contact with the sinful world (that would be virtually impossible), nor are they to stoically refrain from anything pleasurable. They do mean that when contact with the sinful world and its worldly pleasures specifically disagrees with God's word, then Christians are to turn away from "the world" in order to obey God.

2:16 John warned his readers against loving the world and all that it offers (2:15) because what the world offers is not from the Father. Jesus made clear this tension when he said, The "world" here, as in 2:15, is the present evil system that is ruled by Satan and opposed to God. This "world" has rebelled and fallen into sin. Nothing in this world system loves the Father or finds its source in him.

John placed what the world offers into three basic categories. These three categories are subjective, for they speak of attitudes of the heart. Believers may look perfectly clean and serene on the outside but harbor any or all of these attitudes inside. John feared that this might happen, so he was warning the believers to restrain such desires.

- The lust for physical pleasure. Jesus spoke of how adultery begins not with the act, but with the desire (Matthew 5:28). These words picture any kind of desire but especially the craze for sex. No doubt the people of ancient Ephesus understood this—the pagan religions of their city glorified sex. The world today has many similarities. Sex in all of its immoral and grotesque forms is splashed throughout movies, television, magazines, and computer screens. This appeals to the sinful nature. While this category seems to refer mostly to sexual lust, it could include any sort of selfish or greedy cravings simply to satisfy one's physical desires in rebellion against God.
- The lust for everything we see. Sins of craving and accumulating possessions (bowing to the god of materialism) could be placed in this category. While sex may also be included here, people's "eyes" can lust after many things. Believers must not become obsessed with what they see.
- Pride in our possessions. This refers to both the inward attitude and the outward boasting because of an obsession with one's status or possessions.

All three categories show selfishness and greed. Yet these sins, so subtle as to begin almost unnoticed within the heart, become the temptations that lead to the sin's outworkings in people's lives.

2:17 The people who live in rebellion to God with their transient, unfulfilling desires (2:16) are focusing on a world that is already fading away. The workaholic will die unfulfilled. The greedy politician will die in despair. The pleasure-mad partygoers will find their lives ruined by drugs or alcohol. Indulgence never satisfies; it only whets the appetite for more. Christians, however, understand that the world will not last forever and that no one lives on this planet forever. Because they are believers who do the will of God, however, they will live forever. To turn away from the sinful world and hold on to God means to hold on to the eternal. Those who trust in God have already begun a life everlasting.

2:18 The term last hour is used only here in the New Testament. It refers to the "last days" or the "end times"—the time between Christ's first and second comings (see Joel 2:28; Micah 4:1). The first-century readers of 1 Peter lived in the “last days,” and so do believers today. The word last also gives a sense of urgency. Christ will return soon.

You have heard (referring to the teachings from the apostles) that the Antichrist is coming. (Paul wrote about this in 2 Thessalonians 2:3-10.) John mentioned this not so that believers would try to identify the person, but so that they might be ready for anything that would threaten their faith.

Besides, as John went on, already such persons who could fit that description have come on the scene—already many such antichrists have appeared. From the earliest days of the church in and around Ephesus, false teachers had been a problem. When Paul bid his final farewell to the elders of the Ephesian church, he warned, “I know full well that false teachers, like vicious wolves, will come in among you” (Acts 20:29). These are merely precursors to the one Antichrist. Throughout history there have been individuals who epitomized evil and who were hostile to everything for which Christ stands. These antichrists have lived in every generation and will continue to work their evil. There are many cult leaders today who, through their teachings, draw people away from true faith. Then just before Christ’s second coming, a completely evil man will arise. He will be Satan’s tool, equipped with Satan’s power (2 Thessalonians 2:9). This man will be the Antichrist. These other “antichrists” are the false teachers who deny (1) that Jesus is the Christ (2:22), (2) that Jesus is God’s Son (2:23), and (3) that Jesus was God incarnate in human form (4:2; 2 John 1:7). They are liars and deceivers. Jesus warned about them in Matthew 24:24.

During this “last hour,” these antichrists—these false teachers who pretend to be Christians and who lure weak members away from Christ—will continue to be active, just as they were in John’s day. Believers must be grounded in God’s word. They must teach the truth clearly and carefully to the peripheral, weak members among them in the church so that they won’t fall prey to these teachers.

2:19 These false teachers, these antichrists, were not total strangers to the churches; they had been part of the church community, in fellowship with John and the other believers. Then these people left the churches and evidently became promoters of false teachings about Jesus (see 4:1; 2 John 7). When their teachings were not accepted by the Christians or by those in leadership, they left. John explained that they never really belonged among the Christians in the first place. When the false teachers left, they proved that they were never true believers. If they had been true believers, John stated, they would have stayed.

All who attend church may not be true believers. The true believers may not now be able to discern the false believers, but they may in time. It may happen when some leave the churches and the teachings of Christ, proving that they never belonged. Or it may not happen until the Day of Judgment when Christ will separate his true followers from those who never belonged.

2:20 John faced the false believers head-on by telling the true believers that the Holy Spirit has come upon them and they know the truth. The Holy Spirit has been given to believers by the Father and the Son and promised by Jesus (John 14:16-17; 15:26 16:13). When a person becomes a Christian, he or she receives the Holy Spirit (2 Corinthians 1:21-22). John compared the believers with the ones who had left the fellowship and thus proved that they never belonged there. They did not receive Jesus Christ as Savior, so they did not receive the Holy Spirit. They did not know the truth, even though they may have claimed special wisdom and insight. Christians can withstand false teachers' attacks by relying on the Holy Spirit's help (see 2:27).

2:21 Those with the Holy Spirit (2:20) not only know the truth about the Father and the Son but can also detect the difference between truth and falsehood. John wrote, not giving them further teaching; the false teachers were attempting to do that. Instead, he was reaffirming the truth that had already been taught to them and that they had believed.

2:22 The great truth is that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, who came in the flesh to die for sin. To deny this amounts to blatant heresy—John battled this as the central focus of the false teaching. A man named Cerinthus, an avowed enemy of the apostle John, said that Jesus is not the Christ. He spoke of “Jesus” and “the Christ” as two separate beings who were united only from the time of Jesus' baptism to the time of his crucifixion. Cerinthus taught that “the Christ” left Jesus at the Crucifixion. In other words, Jesus was no more than a mere man who, for a time, had been given divine power. Anyone who would teach this heresy, said John, is the great liar. Such people are antichrists, for they have denied the Father and the Son. They are believing a lie, and lies are from Satan (John 8:42-44).

2:23 Apparently, the antichrists in John's day were claiming faith in God while denying and opposing the Son. To do so, John firmly stated, is impossible. Because Jesus is God's Son and the Messiah, anyone who denies the Son doesn't have the Father either. Many cultists today call themselves Christians, but they deny the deity of Jesus Christ. Some churches, such as the Unitarian church, deny the unique status of Christ as the Son of God.

John reiterated that no one can claim to have special knowledge of God while denying Jesus Christ's deity and humanity. In both his Gospel and his letters, John made it very clear that the Father can be known only through the Son (John 3:11; 5:37; 6:46; 8:16, 29, 38; 16:32). Three times Jesus announced that he and the Father were one (John 10:30, 38; 14:9-10; 17:21). Denying Jesus means denying God, then the converse is also true: anyone who confesses the Son has the Father also. The disciples, however, found it difficult to conceptualize the Father about whom Jesus so often talked. During his last discourse with his disciples, Jesus again spoke of the Father. Exasperated, Philip blurted out, "Lord, show us the Father and we will be satisfied" (John 14:8). Jesus told Philip, "Anyone who has seen me has seen the Father!" The Son was and has always been the image of the invisible God (2 Corinthians 4:4; Colossians 1:15; Hebrews 1:3).

2:24-25 Many of these Christians had heard the gospel message from John himself. They knew that Christ was God's Son, that he had died for their sins, that he had been raised to give them new life, and that he would return and establish his Kingdom in its fullness. But their fellowship was being infiltrated by teachers who were denying these basic doctrines of the Christian faith, and some of the believers were in danger of succumbing to false arguments. John encouraged them to remain faithful to what they had been taught from the beginning—to hold on to the Christian truth that had changed their lives. If the believers resisted the lies of the antichrists, they would continue to live in fellowship with the Son and with the Father. By clinging to the truth about God the Father and Christ his Son, believers can be sure they will never be separated from fellowship with God. That fellowship will literally continue forever, for Jesus promised that his followers would be given eternal life. John recorded many of these promises in his Gospel (John 3:14-15, 36; 6:40, 47, 57; 17:2-3). The believers understood the character of the one who made these promises and could trust that he would fulfill them.

2:26 As in 2:12-14 and 2:21, John took pains to clarify his purpose in writing and to affirm the practical import of his teachings. The false teachers were trying to lead people into error, away from the basic gospel that had been taught in the beginning. John wrote as he did because the Christians needed to be aware of those who want to lead them astray. To move away from the basic teachings into various sidelines that contradict those basics is to be "led astray" into heresy. These false teachers not only left the faith and the fellowship, but they wanted to lead others astray as well.

2:27 The true believers had received the Holy Spirit and he lived within them. This means that believers can place their total trust in him, rely on him for guidance and strength, and live as he directs. It implies a personal, life-giving relationship. The same idea is in John 15:5, in Jesus' words about his being the vine and his followers the branches (see also 1 Peter 3:24; 4:15).

You don't need anyone to teach you means that Christians can tell the lying antichrists, "We do not need another teacher because the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of truth, teaches us, so we will continue in what he has taught us, and continue to live in Christ." This does not mean that Christians should turn away from the counsel of faithful ministers and attempt to make it on their own—in fact, that often will lead them astray. Instead, it means that Christians can discern truth and reject falsehood. The better believers know the truth, the more easily they will be able to identify a lie.

The fact that the Spirit teaches all things refers to the basic gospel truths essential for salvation. This does not mean that all believers will know and understand everything, nor does it mean that the Spirit will add new revelation to what has already been taught. Instead, through the Spirit, believers know enough to keep them from throwing away their faith in Christ and believing the lies of the false teachers.

2:28 John was so anxious for the believers' spiritual lives that he said over and over that they should continue to live in fellowship with Christ. Although believers already have fellowship with Christ through his indwelling Spirit, a time is coming when they will see him face-to-face in all his glory (3:2). Those who have continued in him will be full of courage and not shrink back from him in shame when he returns at his second coming. Persevering in their relationship with Christ ensures that believers will remain in the true faith. Continuing in the faith keeps them truly ready for Christ's return.

2:29 Believers know that God is always right. If a person's actions demonstrate his or her allegiance, then all who do what is right are his children. People do not become children of God by doing right; instead, doing right is a sign that people have already become God's children. Because true faith always results in good deeds, those who claim to have faith and who consistently do right are true believers. Good deeds cannot produce salvation (see Ephesians 2:8-9), but they are necessary proof that true faith is actually present (James 2:14-17).

1 JOHN 3

LIVING AS CHILDREN OF GOD / 3:1-10

Verse 1 tells Christians who they are—members of God’s family—his children. Verse 2 tells them who they are becoming—reflections of God. The rest of the chapter tells what believers have as they grow to resemble God: (1) victory over sin (3:4-9); (2) love for others (3:10-18); and (3) confidence before God (3:19-24).

3:1 John’s statement at the end of chapter 2 that believers are God’s children caused him to marvel at how very much God loves us that he would allow us to be called his children. Great as he is, God has brought believers into the loving, intimate relationship of children with their Father. John was emphasizing the assurance believers can have that they really are God’s children.

But being God’s children separates them from the world. The world does not desire to know God, and it even refused to recognize Christ as God’s Son (John 1:10; 15:18-19), so believers can hardly expect the world to understand their special relationship with God as his children.

3:2 Not sometime in the future, not when Christ returns, but already believers are God’s children. Yet God’s people have a future, as John further explained that we can’t even imagine what we will be like when Christ returns. Christians have been born into God’s family, and they presently enjoy God’s kindness and blessings through Christ. But in the future they will also fully share in his glory. Believers don’t yet know the specifics, but they do know that when he comes they will be like him. This hints of what this future glory will be like. Christ will be revealed and his people will be like him, for they will see him as he really is. The Greek word for “see” involves more than a merely physiological occurrence; it means “perceiving,” “recognizing,” even “appreciating.” In order for people to truly know each other—to see each other as they really are—they have to share similar experiences. Therefore, in order to see Jesus as he really is, Christians must experience the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings. This was Paul’s aspiration (see Philippians 3:7-14); it was also John’s, as expressed in the following verse.

3:3 Because Jesus Christ lived without sin (he was pure), believers will keep themselves pure. To be pure means to be morally and ethically free from the corruption of sin. This is an ongoing cleansing process, beginning at rebirth and continuing until the day Jesus returns. The more pure his people become, the clearer will be their view of Jesus, who is pure through and through. God also purifies Christians, but they must take steps to remain morally fit (see 1 Timothy 5:22; James 4:8; 1 Peter 1:22).

3:4 After defining purity, John next defined sin, presenting negatively the same truth he just expressed positively in 3:1-3. Since being born of God demands self-purification, then a life of sin, or a continual lack of purity, demonstrates that one cannot really be God's child. Sin cannot coexist with the new nature derived from the new birth. Sin is opposed to the law of God. Those who keep on sinning are active rebels against God.

There is a difference between committing a sin and continuing to sin. Even the most faithful believers sometimes commit sins, but they do not cherish a particular sin and choose to commit it. A believer who commits a sin repents, confesses, and finds forgiveness. Those who continue to sin, by contrast, will not repent of what they are doing. Thus, they never confess and never receive forgiveness. They live in opposition to God, no matter what religious claims they make.

3:5 Besides the fact that sin is rebellion against God, another reason that Christians should not sin is because Jesus came to take away their sins. In other words, to know of such a sacrifice and then to keep on sinning depreciates that sacrifice. The reason Jesus came to earth was to take away people's sins. This could only happen because there is no sin in him, so he could provide a suitable sacrifice. Under the Old Testament sacrifice system, Jews offered a lamb without blemish as a sacrifice for sin. Jesus is "the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world" (John 1:29). Because Jesus lived a perfect life and sacrificed himself for sin, people can be completely forgiven (2:2). Only he could bridge the gap between the sinless God and sinful people. Jesus died on the cross in our place, taking all our wrongdoing upon himself, saving us from the ultimate consequences of our sin—eternal judgment. Because Jesus still lives and still has no sin in him, it follows that he is totally opposed to sin. It also follows, then, that those who claim to be his people must be totally opposed to sin.

3:6 Those who continue to live in Christ won't sin. The Greek word behind "continue to live" is the same verb John used in his Gospel about the branches continuing to live in the vine (John 15:1-8). As a branch lives in the vine, it draws its life from the vine. As believers live in Christ, they are free from the power of sin. Living in sin and living in God are mutually exclusive, like darkness and light.

John was confronting various types of false teachers. Some taught that they were sinless, actually unable to sin. They claimed superiority over everyone else. These teachings are refuted in 1:8-10. To this group, John explained that while Christians should indeed be “sinless,” it was not the kind of sinlessness that the false teachers claimed to have. Experience bears out the fact that sin is still very much in every believer’s life (see 1:7; 2:1). Yet believers can stop living a life of sin through sensitivity to sin when it occurs, sincere repentance from sin, and acceptance of forgiveness from the one who already took the punishment.

Some claimed to have a special relationship with God despite their sinful conduct. They assumed that their behavior did not matter to God. These teachings are refuted in 1:5-7 and 2:1-6. To this second group of false teachers, John explained that sin was indeed very important to God. In fact, to keep sinning proves that they did not “live in God” at all: those who keep on sinning have never known him or understood who he is. Christians seek to remain “sinless” in God’s eyes by continually confessing sin to God and repenting of it. But they do not keep on sinning, meaning that they do not impose upon God’s forgiveness by taking it for granted in order to keep on living as they please. When they repent of sin, they truly desire to remain free of that sin.

3:7 Apparently, the false teachers who were denying the doctrine of Christ (2:22) were also claiming that they knew God, yet they were living unrighteous lives (see 1:6). John warned his dear children not to let anyone deceive them about this: When people do what is right, it is because they are righteous, even as Christ is righteous. Believers’ righteousness is given to them by Christ and naturally leads to doing righteous acts. In the same way, a tree that bears good fruit is a good tree. The fruit doesn’t make the tree good; it shows that it is good.

3:8 Satan is the founder of lawless rebellion against God. Therefore, when people keep on sinning, it shows they belong to the Devil. The Devil has been sinning since the beginning—even before the creation of the world. Since then, as the prince of this world, he has been both sinning and causing people to sin. The false teachers who spoke lies and sinned without remorse showed that they belonged to the Devil himself (see 2:22). Those who followed these teachers were aligning themselves with the Devil and thus fighting against Christ.

There is a cure for sin, however, because the Son of God came to destroy these works of the Devil. The Greek word behind “destroy” does not mean to annihilate; rather, it means “to break down” (see Ephesians 2:14), “to undo,” “to render ineffective.” Though it would have made more sense, humanly speaking, for Christ to have obliterated Satan, he didn’t. Instead, Christ came to undo Satan’s work and thereby free people from sin and all its awful consequences. John was therefore arguing that Christians cannot be involved in what Christ came to destroy.

3:9 At first glance, these words appear to completely contradict what John said earlier: “If we say we have no sin, we are only fooling ourselves” (1:8). This passage states that those who have been born into God’s family do not sin . . . they can’t keep on sinning, because they have been born of God. So, do Christians sin or don’t they?

Experience tells every Christian that sin still has its hold. For true believers, however, deep inside their spirits, they aspire not to sin. This aspiration comes from the life of God within them. When they were “born again,” a new life was born inside (2 Corinthians 5:17). Christians have this new life—God’s life is in them. They desire not to sin, and they fully renounce sin because sin is entirely incompatible with their new life. Although, at times, they may give in to sin, they are continually fighting against it. Sin is still active, but it no longer has complete control over them. The Holy Spirit works, through the Word of God, to set his people apart from sin—to make them holy and pure, as Christ is (3:3). (See also 5:18.)

3:10 John spoke in absolutes; he offered no middle ground: a person belongs either to God or to the Devil. The conclusion of the matter is that believers can tell who are children of God and who are children of the Devil. The way to tell the “pretenders” is to see whether they obey God’s commands (see also 2:3-5) and whether they love other Christians (see also 2:7-11).

LOVE ONE ANOTHER / 3:11-24

God’s children must be loving, yet many fail to love. So often today there is deep dislike among Christians. Churches struggle with issues that divide the members. All churches need to work on love and harmony. Jesus wanted his followers to be unified as a powerful witness to the reality of God’s love. Believers must help to unify their churches. They can pray for other Christians, avoid gossip, build others up, work together in humility, give their time and money, exalt Christ, and refuse to get involved in divisive matters.

3:11 This comes not as a command, as in the old system of the law, but as an announcement of something good. The message announced from God requires believers to love their brothers and sisters in God's family. The beginning refers to the time Jesus first told his disciples to love one another (see John 13:34-35; 15:17) and to the time John's audience first became believers (see also commentary on 2:7).

3:12 Cain and Abel were Adam and Eve's first two sons. Abel offered a sacrifice that pleased God, while Cain's sacrifice was unacceptable (Genesis 4:1-16; Hebrews 11:4). Cain brought grain and fruits for his offering, while Abel brought an animal from his flock. Abel's sacrifice (an animal substitute) was more acceptable to God, both because it was a blood sacrifice and, most important, because of Abel's attitude when he offered it. After Cain's sacrifice was rejected, God gave him the chance to right his wrong and try again. God even encouraged him to do so. But Cain refused, and his jealous anger drove him to murder. And why did he kill his brother? Because Cain had been doing what was evil, and his brother had been doing what was right. John's point was not that Cain murdered and became a child of the Devil; rather, because Cain belonged to the evil one, his anger and jealousy drove him to murder (see also John 8:44). John wanted his readers to understand the terrible results of refusing to love one another (3:11). Lack of love can lead to anger, jealousy, hatred—and, finally, even to murder.

3:13 After telling the disciples to love one another, John added, don't be surprised . . . if the world hates you (see also John 15:18-19). The world is hostile to God (2:15). Jesus wants his followers to be distinctive; he sets them apart from the world. Their very separation, however, arouses unbelievers' animosity. When people become Christians, sometimes their lives change drastically. This was especially true for first-century believers who had come out of the morally corrupt pagan world—John's readers lived in Ephesus. Former pagans would have been involved in many evil activities. After becoming believers, however, they no longer wanted to be involved in such things. As Cain did with Abel, unbelievers reacted in hostility, often because they wanted to justify their own actions or silence their consciences. When a person stands aside from certain activities, it makes the others think—and often they don't like that.

3:14 The world may hate Christians, but Christians must express love for one another. Love for fellow believers proves that a believer has passed from the realm of death to the sphere of eternal life (see John 5:24). Their love does not earn them eternal life; instead, their love is evidence that they already have eternal life (see also 2:10). Christians must ask whether they have this love; if they do, then they can be sure that they have eternal life and that this will be publicly revealed when Christ comes.

By contrast, a person who has no love is still dead. This is the condition of all people by nature. A person who does not have love shows that he or she has not passed from death to eternal life.

3:15 If a heart is empty of love, hate fills in the void (3:14). If a person hates someone, it is like wishing that the other were dead, and the Lord sees the inner desire as equal to the outward act that would result from it (see Matthew 5:21-22). Therefore, anyone who hates another Christian is really a murderer at heart.

3:16 To understand real love, believers need only to look at their Lord for the example. They can know what real love is because Christ gave up his life for all people. Christ's example shows believers that real love involves self-sacrifice, which, as 3:17-19 points out, must result in self-sacrificial actions.

Because Christ is the example, believers ought to give up their lives for their Christian brothers and sisters. They do this by becoming truly concerned about the needs of their Christian brothers and sisters and by unselfishly giving time, effort, prayer, and possessions to supply those needs. Such an attitude would result in actually dying for a brother or sister if this were ever necessary. Believers' own lives should not be more precious to them than God's own Son was to him.

3:17-18 These verses give an example of how believers can lay down their lives for others—to help those in need with their worldly goods. Seldom will believers be called upon to experience martyrdom for another. However, every day they will face needy people whom they ought to be willing to help if they have the resources to do so; most people have more than they need. This parallels James's teaching (James 2:14-17): Believers should be willing to help a brother or sister in need. Talk is cheap, so just saying we love each other is not enough. Faith not accompanied by love for others is worthless. Love should be shown by actions.

3:19-20 As Christians proceed in their lives with Christ, it will happen that their hearts will condemn them. Whatever the source—an overactive conscience, the realization that they don't love others enough, or even Satan's false accusations—they will feel the accusation. Whenever this happens, they can look at how they are living out their faith by their actions and thus can know that they are living in the truth. In this context, the basis for their assurance is the good works that they do. Believers can be confident in God's presence by reminding themselves that God's love has been active in their lives as they have helped others.

The ambiguity of the statement for God is greater than our hearts has prompted two interpretations. Some see it as consoling believers whose hearts (or consciences) condemn them of sin in general. They can hold on to the sign of sonship—God's love. Others think that the phrase intensifies John's warning. The condemning voice of conscience merely echoes the judgment of God, who knows each life. Thus, believers cannot gloss over or excuse their sins as insignificant. In both cases, by claiming God's forgiveness through Christ, believers can come confidently to God, recognizing that his grace and mercy are greater than their guilt. Because God knows everything, Christians can trust that he thoroughly understands and will forgive their sins and help them grow in the areas where they need it most.

Then what should believers do with the gnawing accusations of their consciences? They should not ignore them or rationalize their behavior, but they should set their hearts on God's love. When they feel guilty, they should remind themselves that God knows their motives as well as their actions. His voice of assurance is stronger than the accusing voice of conscience. God will not condemn his children, for whom his Son died (Romans 8:1; Hebrews 9:14-15).

3:21-22 John's readers knew Christ's commands and could test themselves by them. If their conscience is clear, they can come to God without fear and with bold confidence. When believers approach God, they can trust that they will receive whatever they request because they obey him and do the things that please him. This statement follows what Jesus said in his final discourse to his disciples, as recorded in John 15:7: "But if you stay joined to me and my words remain in you, you may ask any request you like, and it will be granted." When a believer is remaining in Christ and Christ's words are remaining in the believer, his or her prayers will be answered. This does not mean that all requests are granted; the context of John 15 suggests that the prayers should pertain to fruit bearing and glorifying the Father. The same holds true for John's statement, we will receive whatever we request. Believers' requests will be honored by God when they are focused on accomplishing God's will.

3:23 John has been expressing exactly what Jesus had said. This had also been his commandment—which is one commandment expressed in two parts. There are not two separate commands, but one, since faith and love cannot be separated. Believers must believe in the name of his Son, Jesus Christ and love one another. They cannot love one another without having faith in Christ or truly believe in him without having love for other believers.

3:24 God and the believers live in one another. The presence of the Spirit in each believer's life makes this possible. The Christian lives in the Spirit, and the Spirit lives in the Christian. The best analogy is a human being's relationship to air. People must live "in" the air so that the air can come into them.

The indwelling Spirit provides believers with the presence of the indwelling Christ. That the Holy Spirit lives in people means that Christ lives in them (see Romans 8:9-11). When Christ gave his Spirit to live in Christians, he gave himself to live in them (see John 14:16-20; 1 Corinthians 15:45; 2 Corinthians 3:17-18).

The mutual relationship—believers living in Christ as he lives in them—shows itself in Christians who keep these three essential commands: (1) believe in Christ, (2) love the brothers and sisters, and (3) live morally upright lives. The Spirit's presence is not only spiritual and mystical, but it is also practical. Believers' conduct verifies his presence.

1 JOHN 4

DISCERNING FALSE PROPHETS / 4:1-6

Those who have the Holy Spirit within (3:24) have the ability to discern the truth from error because the anointing of the Spirit teaches them about these things. The doctrinal test is outlined in this paragraph. Those who have the Spirit of God confess that Jesus, God's Son, has come in bodily form. In other words, they acknowledge the full reality of the Incarnation. False prophets who deny these basic truths are antichrists. In analyzing the wide spectrum of teachers and books on spirituality available today, the test should be: What do they teach about the person of Jesus Christ?

4:1 The test believers are to use is given in 4:2-3. The responsibility for testing the spirits rests not merely on scholars or church leaders but on every Christian. Do not believe everyone who claims to speak by the Spirit means that the believers should not believe everything they hear just because someone says it is a message from God. They should test the message to see if it is truly from the Lord. One way is to check to see if it matches God's word, the Bible. Other tests include the teachers' commitment to the body of believers (2:19), their lifestyles (3:23-24), and the fruit of their ministries (4:6). The most important test of all, however, is what they believe about Christ (4:2). Do they teach that Jesus is fully God and fully man? The first-century world was filled with many false prophets who were claiming to speak for God. The believers needed to apply these tests in order to discern truth from error.

The term "false prophets" is another name for the many antichrists (see 2:18-19). Whereas a true prophet is one who receives direct revelation from God, a false prophet only claims to have received direct revelation from God, but has not. The test is similar to that administered to false prophets in Deuteronomy 13:1-5; 18:15-22.

4:2 To know that a prophet has the Spirit of God, that is, if his message is truth from God, we must discover if he acknowledges that Jesus Christ became a human being. A true teacher of God believes that Jesus of Nazareth as revealed in the Gospels is the Messiah of God, God's only and unique incarnation of himself. A true teacher must also teach that Jesus became a man with a human body. God the Son is forever fully God and fully man, though in immortal, incorruptible flesh. A teacher who denies Jesus' full and true humanity proves that he is not from God.

4:3 The false prophets claimed to speak by the Spirit's inspiration. In this context, refusing to acknowledge Jesus means denying Jesus' true person as both God and man. Those who do that are not from God. Therefore, there is only one other source: the spirit operating in the false prophets is the spirit of the Antichrist (2:18), the spirit of deception (4:6). Pronouncements about false teachers, false messiahs, and the coming of the Antichrist should not have been news to Christians, for they had heard that these people were coming. Jesus had warned the disciples (Matthew 24:15, 24-26); the apostles, in turn, had warned the believers about false teaching (see 2 Thessalonians 2:3-12; 2 Peter 3:3-7).

The spirit of the Antichrist is already here refers to the hostile attitude of those who were denying that Christ had already been present. John does not seem to have been saying that the final Antichrist had come (see 2:18). As Paul wrote in 2 Thessalonians 2:7-8, the man of lawlessness has not yet been revealed, but his spirit is at work.

4:4 In contrast to those who are against God, John reassured his readers that they belong to God. Though these believers may have been feeling weak and confused, they had remained true to the faith and so had already won their fight with these false prophets. They had not been won over to the false point of view, nor had they abandoned the church. Christians don't have to overpower false teachers to conquer them; rather, they can overcome false teachers and their teachings by recognizing them and then refusing to follow them. These believers had already done this; they had not succumbed to the false teachers. They had done this by the power of God's Spirit within them, because the Spirit who lives in you is greater than the spirit who lives in the world (referring to the Devil who inspires false prophets in their work of deception, see also 1 Timothy 4:1).

Some Christians want to do this spiritual battle as individuals. They take the word you as "the Spirit who lives in me." But the pronoun is plural, thus referring to the community of believers. Believers do have personal assurance of the Holy Spirit's presence within. But they must not attempt to do battle against Satan alone. They need others for prayer, resources, advice, guidance, protection, healing, and more.

4:5 These people are the false prophets who belong to this world and not to God. In John's Gospel and letters, the term world describes the world system of beliefs and the community of those who stand in opposition to God (see 4:3). The false teachers, being a part of the world system, speak from the world's viewpoint and so find acceptance by the world that listens to them. False teachers are popular with the world because, like the false prophets of the Old Testament, they tell people what they want to hear. John warned that Christians who faithfully teach God's word will not win popularity contests in the world. People don't want to hear their sins denounced; they don't want to listen to demands that they change their behavior. A false teacher will be well received by non-Christians.

4:6 The we primarily refers to the apostles, who were the first true teachers of Christ, followed by many others who taught the truth of the gospel. The world gladly accepts and listens to false teachers, but the apostles found another audience—those who know God or were open to knowing God. The world, or those who do not belong to God, rejected the apostles' message.

This provides another way to determine who has the Spirit of truth or the spirit of deception. According to the Gospel of John (John 14:17, 26; 15:26; 16:13-15), the Spirit of truth is the Holy Spirit, who proceeds from God and teaches the truth about Christ (see also 1 Peter 2:20, 27). All who are indwelt by the Spirit of truth and anointed by the Spirit can know the truth; God did not reserve that truth for only a special few. The spirit of deception comes from Satan, the "father of lies" (John 8:44), and leads people into error. Believers can distinguish between these "spirits" by the character and message of the one speaking.

LOVING ONE ANOTHER / 4:7-21

This epistle continues with love as a major theme: Love among Christians demonstrates love for God and love from God, for God is love. That love was demonstrated unmistakably by Jesus. The response of the children of God, then, should be to love one another, to the end that God's love may be perfected (reach its designated goal) in them. In this paragraph, being born of God, loving God, and knowing God are inextricably intertwined.

4:7-8 John repeated his call to Christians to continue to love one another (see also 3:10-18, 23). God is the source of all love; therefore, love comes from God. Jesus Christ, sent from God the Father, embodied love and demonstrated that love in his life on earth. Such love does not come naturally for humans. We are not born with it, neither can we learn it. Believers receive God's love only through the Holy Spirit.

The phrase anyone who loves is born of God does not trivialize the relationship with God as given to anyone who simply knows how to "love." Only those who have experienced the new birth are able to have the love described here. Those who have received this gift are endowed with the nature of God and thereby become partakers of the divine love. Love for fellow Christians provides proof of spiritual birth and relationship with God.

In addition, John says, anyone who loves knows God. This speaks of an ongoing knowledge—“getting to know” God—a continual, growing, spiritual knowledge based on actual experience of God in believers’ lives. It follows, then, that a person who does not love other Christians has never known God. The Greek verb for “know” is in the aorist tense, thereby indicating that this person not only doesn’t know God now but has never known him.

The statement God is love ought not be turned around to say “Love is God” or watered down to “God is loving,” as if this were just one of God’s attributes. Rather, love is God’s very essence. It is not one of God’s many activities; instead, all of his activities are imbued with love. When he disciplines or teaches, for example, he does so with love. And conversely, because he loves, he disciplines and teaches. Because he is love, he can do nothing without love.

4:9 Believers must not only say that they love, love must be shown by their actions. This also follows God’s example, for he showed how much he loved us by sending his only Son to die for us. Those who believe can have eternal life through him. Jesus is God’s only Son. All believers are sons and daughters of God, but only Jesus has this special unique relationship (see John 1:18; 3:16). The great proof of God’s love, as well as the motive for our love, is that he sent his only Son, who is life, so that we could live through him.

4:10 Of all the different kinds of love, God’s love—agape love—is the truest. Greek has four words to depict four different kinds of love: (1) eros for sexual passion, (2) storge for family devotion, (3) philos for friendship, and (4) agape for loving-kindness. The fourth word was used exclusively by John to characterize God’s love. It speaks of compassion, regard, kindness, and unselfishness. This kind of love motivated God to send his Son to the world to die for undeserving sinners—that kind of love is real love.

Not that we loved God, but that he loved us. The love relationship was initiated by God; people had nothing to do with it. How could we? All people were totally dead to God—dead in trespasses and sins (see Ephesians 2:1). He loved us even though we were totally unworthy of his love. He loved us so much that he sent his Son as a sacrifice to take away our sins. By removing sin, God removed the barrier between him and his people (Romans 5:1-2; Ephesians 2:18) so that he could live within his people and they could live within him.

4:11 God's supreme love is the motive of believers' love for each other. Because believers are born of God, they should resemble their Father, who is love. As they grow in appreciation of God's love for them, their love for him and for other Christians will grow as well. The way God loves people—sacrificially, unselfishly, completely—provides the example for how believers should love each other.

4:12 No one has ever seen God reiterates what John wrote in the prologue to his Gospel (John 1:18), which recalls what God said to Moses in Exodus 33:20. Moses wanted to see God's glory, but he was not allowed to because, as God explained, no human can see God and live.

If no one has ever seen God, then how can people ever know him? Because of Christ's sacrifice, the Holy Spirit could enter believers' lives. Through the Holy Spirit, God lives in Christians. God can be "seen" through believers as they love each other. With the Holy Spirit within each believer's life, Christians can love one another (see 4:16). Their love reveals that God himself is present and that they are partaking of the divine nature (see 2 Peter 1:3-8). Believers' love for God grows stronger when they see its results in their loving actions toward each other. As their love develops toward maturity and completeness, his love is brought to full expression through his people. When believers love one another, the invisible God reveals himself to others through them, and his love is made complete.

4:13 After Jesus' resurrection, believers could live in him, that is, in God, because God has given us his Spirit. According to John 14:16-20, the disciples would begin to experience what it meant to live in God and have God live in them once Christ sent them the Holy Spirit. Thereafter, they would know that the Son is in the Father, they are in the Son, and the Son is in them (John 14:20). When people become Christians, they receive the Holy Spirit. God's presence in their lives is proof that they really belong to him.

4:14 In addition to the gift of the Holy Spirit to believers, another way believers can trust in this relationship with God is that the message came from those who had seen with their own eyes and now testify that the Father sent his Son to be the Savior of the world. We refers to the apostles and other eyewitnesses of Christ's life on earth (see 1:1-3). They were appointed by Christ to testify to others about their firsthand, eyewitness experiences (1:3). Therefore, Christians have two proofs of God's love for them: (1) the indwelling presence of God's Spirit and (2) the eyewitness testimonies of the apostles and those who knew Jesus.

4:15 When people proclaim that Jesus is the Son of God, they are declaring their belief that Jesus is God's one and only Son who came to earth as a human being, died on a cross, rose again, and returned to heaven. They also believe that his death on the cross won forgiveness for sin. Jesus Christ is not a mere human being, nor is he one among many deities. People who believe this about Jesus have God living in them, and they live in God. This mutual indwelling, experienced by the Father and Son (John 10:38; 14:10; 17:21), is a special privilege for believers (see John 14:20; 15:5; 17:21-24).

4:16 This time we refers to John and his readers, rather than just the apostles. These believers know (by experience) how much God loves them, and they have put their trust in him. Note the intimate connection of knowledge and faith. Believers know that God loves them—he shows his love in many ways (4:10). As they trust in this love and live in it day by day, they come to understand that God is love, and all who live in love live in God, and God lives in them. It is one thing to know and believe in God's love; it is quite another to actually appropriate God's love into a person's life so that the person "lives in love." As noted in 4:8, because God is love, his people ought to be experiencing his transcendent and glorious love on a daily basis because he "lives" in them.

4:17 Because of this mutual indwelling—God abiding in believers and they abiding in him—the believers' love grows more perfect. The word perfect does not mean "flawless," but "mature." This perfection happens as each believer's relationship with God, who is love, grows. His perfect love becomes free to work completely in and through them.

This perfect, mature love produces believers who will not be afraid on the day of judgment. On that day, God will require all people to account for their lives. Those who have followed him will live with him forever. Yet God's people don't have to wait until that day to find out if they "made it." They have that confidence now.

The sentence, we are like Christ here in this world, seems perplexing because it seems to mean that Christians are now completely like Christ, when experience says that they have a long way to go. So the statement must have something to do with believers' standing or position before God. Because of Jesus' death on the cross, God transfers Jesus' righteousness to believers (an act called justification, Romans 3:22-26), thereby enabling them to stand before God with confidence.

4:18 Because believers are becoming like God (4:17), they certainly need not fear his judgment. To be fearful is to lack confidence; to lack confidence is to show that God's love has not been perfected in that person. Believers ought not be afraid of the future, eternity, or God's judgment, because of God's love. They know that he loves them perfectly (Romans 8:38-39). They can resolve any fears first by focusing on God's immeasurable love and then by allowing him to love others through them. God's love will quiet fears and give confidence.

4:19 Believers' love, whether for God or for others, is based on God's love for them. God's love is the source, the initiator. People cannot love this way on their own; it happens as a result of his loving people first (see 4:9-10). God's love is far above all human love. Because believers abide in God and thus abide in love (4:16), God's love fills them and overflows from them. Such "otherworldly" love then becomes the characteristic of God's people. They can love as he loves. Such love overflows to others who experience God's love as well.

4:20-21 John, again, was probably quoting the spiritual elitists who boasted often of their relationship with God. This boast, I love God, can be tested by the person's love for the community of God. If that person hates another Christian, their love for God should be questioned. Such was the case with Diotrephes, who refused to have fellowship with John and his coworkers (see 3 John 9-10). In fact, John says that such a person is a liar. John explains, very logically, that if we don't love people we can see, how can we love God, whom we have not seen? If a believer does not love his or her Christian brothers and sisters, who are God's visible representatives, how can that person possibly love the invisible God? It is easy to claim to love God when that love doesn't cost anything more than weekly attendance at religious services. But the real test of a person's love for God is how that person treats the people right in front of him or her—family members and fellow believers. People cannot truly love God while neglecting to love their Christian brothers and sisters as well.

1 JOHN 5

FAITH IN THE SON OF GOD / 5:1-12

To discern whether a person is a true Christian, one needs to look at what that person truly believes about Jesus Christ. The true believer “believes that Jesus is the Christ.” The continuing activity of believing proves that a person is a child of God.

5:1 Belief that Jesus is the Christ proves that a person is a child of God. Those who believe this, then, love the Father, and by extension, love his children. Christians are a part of God’s family, with fellow believers as brothers and sisters. God determines who the other family members are. Believers are simply called to accept and love them because they love God.

5:2 Just as believers’ love for their brothers and sisters is the sign and test of their love for God, so their love for God (tested by obedience, 5:3) is the only basis of their love for Christian brothers and sisters. John was not contradicting what he had written in 4:20-21; rather, he was insisting that love for God and love for fellow believers cannot be separated.

5:3 Love for God and love for others (5:2) do not exist alone in a believer; they must be accompanied by obedience: loving God means keeping his commandments. This echoes what Jesus said to his disciples, as recorded in the Gospel of John (John 14:15, 21, 23-24, 31; 15:10). Jesus had one commandment for them: Love one another (John 13:34; 15:17). This one command is not difficult; in fact, it should delight the believer to love God through his or her obedience (Matthew 11:28-30).

5:4-5 Every child of God has the power that defeats this evil world (see 5:5; also John 16:33). Here and in 5:5, the word connotes military conquest. Faith, trusting Christ, provides the power source and the means to participate in the victory Christ won for them through his sacrifice and resurrection (see John 16:33). The collective power, given by God to believers, can overcome this opposition. The ones who believe that Jesus is the Son of God are the only ones who will win this battle against the world so permeated with false, anti-Christian teachings. By holding fast to their faith in Jesus as God’s Son, Christians will not be lured away to false teachings.

5:6 At his baptism and at his death, Jesus' identity as God's Son was clearly revealed (see John 1:29-34; 19:28-37). When John commented about water and blood, he was refuting the claims of Cerinthus that Jesus was "the Christ" only between his baptism and his death—that is, he was merely human until he was baptized, at which time "the Christ" then descended upon him but later left him before his death on the cross. But if Jesus died only as a man, he could not have taken upon himself the sins of the world, and Christianity would be an empty religion. Only an act of God could take away the punishment that sin deserves. The Holy Spirit gives us the testimony that this is true. The Spirit's primary role continues to be to reveal Christ to the believers and to affirm Christ's message.

5:7-8 These verses have to do with the three critical phases in Jesus' life where he was manifested as God incarnate, the Son of God in human form. This was made evident at his baptism (the water), his death (the blood), and his resurrection (the Spirit). At his baptism, Jesus was declared to be God's beloved Son (see Matthew 3:16-17). At his bloody crucifixion, Jesus was recognized by others as God's Son (see Mark 15:39). In his resurrection, Jesus was designated the Son of God in power (Romans 1:3-4). These three witnesses agree in one aspect: each event demonstrated that the man Jesus was the divine Son of God.

5:9 According to the Jewish law, the testimony of one person is not a valid witness. Truth or validity has to be established by two or three witnesses (Deuteronomy 17:6; 19:15). Since people believe human testimony when validated by two or three witnesses, John explained that surely they could believe the testimony that comes from God. The Gospels twice record God's clear declaration that Jesus is God's Son—at Jesus' baptism (Matthew 3:16-17) and at his transfiguration (Matthew 17:5). John said that if they believe testimony from people, then they can surely rely on the threefold witness of God (5:8). The three witnesses, described in 5:8, agree because God himself is behind them. All three form a single "testimony from God" that Jesus is the Christ.

5:10 When people believe in the Son of God, they know that everything the apostles taught about him is true. They know without any doubt because the Spirit who regenerated them gives them an inner witness to that reality (see Romans 8:16; Galatians 4:6). God's Spirit, alive in their spirit, witnesses to the fact that everything Jesus said and did was true. In fact, that is the primary function of the Spirit—to testify and reveal Jesus to every believer (see John 14:26; 15:26; 16:7-13).

Those who don't believe the testimony that God has given concerning his Son (5:7-9) should realize that by rejecting what God has so plainly said, they are calling God a liar. John was blasting the false teachers who claimed to know God but did not believe what God himself had said concerning his Son. This was logically impossible and amounted to calling God a liar.

5:11 This is what God has testified and what the false teachers refused to believe: God has given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. The divine, eternal life resides in Christ, who makes it available to all who believe in him. That Jesus is indeed God's Son has been established by testimony from God himself (5:7-9). Believers have eternal life in relationship to and in union with Jesus Christ, who is himself "life" (John 1:4; 14:6), and they have eternal life because of him (2 Timothy 1:10).

5:12 Human beings do not have life in themselves; they receive life from God. Through faith, believers have Christ within, so whoever has God's Son has life—eternal life—now. They possess a new nature and enjoy fellowship with God. Believers can be certain that they have eternal life. Because they have received life through the Son, they can be assured of having everlasting life in the future. For those who do not believe, however, the opposite is also true: whoever does not have his Son does not have life.

CONCLUSION / 5:13-21

The final nine verses of 1 Peter comprise its epilogue. The epilogue has two functions: to summarize the main body of the letter and to prompt readers to apply what they have read. John provided several specific ways in which the community of believers could act on what he had written.

5:13 Only those who believe in the deity of the Son of God can absorb what John has written in this letter and apply it. Above all else, John wanted his readers to have no more doubts about their faith, but instead to know they have eternal life. The letter, written to believers who had been unsettled in their faith by false teachers, encouraged them to continue in the faith and affirmed their possession of eternal life. John wanted his readers to know—to be sure—that they had eternal life. They could base their certainty on God's promise that he has given them eternal life through his Son.

5:14-15 Believers also can be confident that God will listen to their prayers. Confidence means boldness or freedom to speak to Christ (see Hebrews 4:16).

They will be answered whenever they ask him for anything in line with his will (see also John 14:13-14; 15:16; 16:21-24).

So how can believers pray that way? How do they know what is God's will? This happens as a part of their growth in their relationship with Jesus Christ. When people choose to place their will in line with God's will, the Holy Spirit in them will teach them to understand God's will more completely. The Holy Spirit reveals God's will as it is taught in the Bible. The Holy Spirit, in turn, helps them to pray in line with God's will (see Romans 8:26-27). Jesus himself was a model of this: he taught his followers to pray for God's will to be accomplished on earth (Matthew 6:10), and he chose God's will over his own in accepting the bitter cup—death on the cross (Matthew 26:39-42).

In communicating with God, therefore, believers do not demand what they want or think they need; rather, they discuss with God what he wants for them. When believers align their prayers to God's will, he is listening when they make their requests. And since they know that he hears their prayers, they can be certain that he will give them a definite answer. Praying in line with God's will is the key to getting what they ask for. They should not think that they can obtain anything they want in order to benefit themselves. Prayer in line with God's will is prayer for the benefit of God's Kingdom, as the next verses illustrate.

5:16-17 This example describes the kind of petition that God will answer. Because the believers have been called to love one another, it follows, then, that they ought to care enough to intercede with God in prayer if they see any Christian sinning in a way that does not lead to death. Intercessory prayer forms a vital part of the fellowship of the church (see John 20:23). The faithful prayers of believers in the church can help restore the wayward or backslidden Christian. Their prayers can affect the conviction of the Holy Spirit in the person's life, as well as restore such ones to a wholesome Christian life.

The question then arises: what is the difference between sin that doesn't lead to death and sin that leads to death? John's readers apparently understood the difference, since John did not elaborate further. Three theories have been given for how to interpret these words:

A specific sin. In Moses' law, some sins were punishable by death; others required a sacrifice for repentance and restoration (Leviticus 20; Numbers 18:22). This verse, then, could apply to a specific sin punishable by death. This interpretation leads to a differentiation, taught in the Roman Catholic church, between mortal sins (the seven sins leading to death) and venial sins (sins that are pardonable). The New Testament records instances of sins that caused the deaths of church members committing them (see, for example, Acts 5:1-11; 1 Corinthians 5:5; 11:30; 1 Timothy 1:20; James 5:15; Revelation 2:23). But John did not refer to physical death as much as to sin that leads to spiritual death.

Apostasy. Some have interpreted these words to indicate Christians who have rejected Christ and turned away from the faith. Their sin of apostasy will lead to their spiritual ruin (see discussion on 2:24). There are two versions of this argument. Some believe that Christians can turn away from the faith and that this is a prayer for them as they are starting to wander before they backslide too far. Others see this as a hypothetical situation. Believers ought to pray for people to be faithful so they will not be tempted to turn away. However, in response to both of these cases, John did not state that this person who was sinning is or ever was a believer.

Heretical denial of the faith. Because John was writing against false teachers who denied Jesus' deity and acted immorally, the "sin that leads to death" most likely refers to the attitude of continued rebellion against God and the unrepentant spirit that would never receive salvation. By rejecting the only way of salvation, the false teachers and their followers were putting themselves out of reach of prayer.

While every wrong is sin, that is, all unrighteousness is sin—including the sin committed by believers (1:7, 9; 3:4)—not all sin leads to death. The sin that ends in death includes both the act of deliberately denying that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and the state of spiritual death that deliberately rejects Christ, destroying faith and love. John did not forbid prayer for the one who rejects Christ, but neither did he encourage it.

5:18 Believers, those who are part of God's family, do not make a practice of sinning because God's Son holds them securely. Christians commit sins, of course, but they ask God to forgive them, and then they continue serving him. God has freed believers from their slavery to the evil one, and he keeps them safe from Satan's continued attacks. The rest of the world does not have the Christian's freedom to obey God. Unless unbelievers come to Christ in faith, they have no choice but to obey Satan. There is no middle ground; either people belong to God and obey him, or they live under Satan's control.

5:19 Believers can know their position with God and in eternity. They know they are children of God, and because of that, they have been freed from Satan's power. While the rest of the world is under the power and control of the evil one, Christians stand apart, separate from the world (non-Christian society) and from Satan, united together with God. Even those the world considers wise, great, and respectable are under Satan's domain (see 2:15-17; 3:1, 13; 4:3-5; 5:4-5).

5:20 Again, John reminded the believers of what they "know" to be true: they know that the Son of God has come. The false teachers had done their best to set Christ aside, to make him unimportant, and to have so-called "knowledge of God" without him. But John has been explaining throughout this letter that this is impossible. Jesus Christ is central to true Christian faith. Jesus came to earth, returned to heaven, and now is present through his Holy Spirit. The Son's purpose in coming to earth was to reveal God the Father and to enable the believers to know him experientially (see John 17:3). The Holy Spirit has given believers understanding so that they can know the true God. Just as the Holy Spirit teaches believers about Christ and points to him, so the Son teaches about and points to the Father.

To be in God is to be in his Son, Jesus Christ, for when believers are united to the Son, they are also united to the Father (see John 17:21-24). He is the only true God refers to Christ. The Father is the source of eternal life and Jesus Christ reveals that life (John 1:4; 14:6), so also he is eternal life. Only through his death and resurrection was eternal life made available to humanity.

5:21 The letter closes with a final affectionate caution. Given the context of this letter, anything that might take God's place, probably refers to false teachings that present false images of Jesus Christ. God's place can be taken by substitutes for the true faith, anything that robs Christ of his full deity and humanity, any human idea that claims to be more authoritative than the Bible, any loyalty that replaces God at the center of our lives. John was bluntly saying that to follow the false teachers would amount to turning away from God. The results would be the same.

In this letter, John presented a clear picture of Christ. What Christians think about Jesus Christ is central to their teaching, preaching, and living. Jesus is the God-man, fully God and fully human at the same time. He came to earth to die in the place of sinners, for their sins. Through faith in him, believers are given eternal life and the power to do his will. Every person must decide the answer to the most important question—who is Jesus Christ?

2 JOHN

INTRODUCTION

Truth is hard to find. Consider contemporary advertisements—we are barraged by spectacular claims, implicit and explicit, for a multitude of products. Consumers wonder where to spend their money. And listen to the political rhetoric in an election year—filled with promises, charges, and countercharges. Citizens hardly know which way to vote. Joining these voices are the proponents of a wide variety of philosophies and ideologies, all alleging truth.

First-century believers heard a similar cacophony, with false teachers preaching a false gospel and threatening to turn many away from the truth. So under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, John quickly wrote this strong letter, urging readers to focus on Christ, truly the Truth.

As you read 2 John, recommit to being a person of the Truth.

AUTHOR

The apostle John.

First, 2, and 3 John were written by the same author, for their tone, style, and thematic development are extremely similar. The grammar, style, and vocabulary of 2 John compare very closely to 1 John. In fact, eight of the thirteen verses of the second letter are almost identical to verses in 1 John.

Second and 3 John have been placed among the General Epistles by virtue of their association with 1 John, but they are not General Epistles. Second John was addressed to an individual or a specific local church, and 3 John was addressed to a specific individual, Gaius.

For more about John, see the Author section in the Introduction to the Gospel of John.

DATE AND SETTING

Written in approximately A.D. 90 from Ephesus.

Second John was written in a setting similar to that of 1 John. This church was being harassed by the heresies that were attacked in 1 John. The heresies were denounced, and the church was warned not to entertain the messengers of the heresy. This epistle was probably sent to one of the churches in a cluster of churches in Asia Minor that were the recipients of John's apostolic ministry (see following comments under "Audience").

The information concerning date of writing is inadequate to make any decision. The similarity to 1 John strongly suggests a similar era.

AUDIENCE

The “chosen lady and to her children” (1:1).

Some commentators think this was a specific woman (with her children). Other commentators believe that John was using this address as a surrogate for a particular local church (as perhaps Peter also did in 1 Peter 5:13). The nature of the epistle points to a corporate personality—the local church—rather than a private individual (see comments on 1:5-6, 8, 10, 12).

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To emphasize the basics of following Christ—truth and love—and to warn against false teachers.

The purpose of the letter is twofold. In the first place, the recipient was urged to live in the truth and to continue practicing Christian love. The second, and more compelling, reason was the warning against the deceivers who refused to acknowledge Christ and persuaded others to do the same. Love indeed has its limits when it comes to showing hospitality to those who refuse to acknowledge Christ as God’s Son come to earth in a human body. The deceivers were probably the same heretics identified in the first letter.

MESSAGE

The apostle John had seen Truth and Love firsthand—he had been with Jesus. So affected was this disciple that all of his writings, from the Gospel to the book of Revelation, are filled with this theme: Truth and love are vital to the Christian and are inseparable in the Christian life. Second John, his brief letter to a dear friend, is no different. John says to live in the truth and obey God (1:4), watch out for deceivers (1:7), and love God and each other (1:6). John’s second letter can be called a miniversion of 1 John. All the same major themes appear in 2 John that one reads in 1 John. In both letters, John wanted his readers to (1) live in the truth, (2) love one another, (3) be on guard against false teachers and adhere to the apostolic teachings—especially about Jesus, God’s Son come in the flesh—in the face of Gnostic infiltration into the church.

The main themes in the book of 2 John include: Truth, Love, and False Teachers.

Truth (1:1-5). Following God’s word, the Bible, is essential to Christian living because God is truth. Jesus said, “I am the way, the truth, and the life. No one can come to the Father except through me” (John 14:6). Christ’s true followers consistently obey his truth.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. To resist false teaching, we must focus on the truth—God’s holy Word and his Son, our Savior. To be loyal to Christ’s teaching, we must seek to know the Bible, but we must never twist its message to meet our own needs or for our own purposes, nor should we encourage those who misuse it. Keep focused on Christ. Stand for the truth.

Love (1:3-6). Christ commanded that his followers love one another (John 15:12-13). By loving each other they would be following his example; thus the world would know they were his disciples. Love is the most basic ingredient of true Christianity.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. To obey Christ fully, we must believe his command to love others. Helping, giving, and meeting needs put love into practice. Be committed to love, for Christ’s sake.

False Teachers (1:7-11). Believers must be wary of religious leaders who are not true to Christ’s teachings. These false teachers and preachers must not be given a platform to spread their false teachings.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. We must check any spiritual leader (pastor, elder, teacher, etc.) against God’s word. And we must reject and resist all who make Christ any less than fully God and fully man. Don’t encourage those who are opposed to Christ. Don’t associate with false teachers. Be aware of what is being taught in your church.

OUTLINE OF 2 JOHN

I. Watch Out for False Teachers (1:1-11)

II. John’s Final Words (1:12-13)

2 JOHN 1

GREETINGS / 1:1-3

In the first four verses of this short letter, the word “truth” appears five times. False teachings were beginning to infiltrate the church; this prompted John to counter these falsehoods with strong admonitions to the believers about knowing and living in the truth concerning Jesus Christ. In his letter called 1 John, John explained clearly to the believers how they could know that they were grounded in the truth and how they could discern whether teachers were true or false.

The obvious follow-up, then, was the question of how the believers should act toward the false teachers who had been causing so much trouble in their churches (the issue John addressed in 1 John). Both 2 and 3 John focus on “truth” and on refusing to give a hearing, hospitality, or any sort of encouragement to those who do not teach the truth.

1:1 In this informal letter, John did not stand on his authority as an apostle but spoke of himself as an Elder—one who watched over the believers with loving concern for their spiritual well-being. John had been one of Jesus’ twelve disciples. He wrote the Gospel of John, three letters, and the book of Revelation. He may have been the only remaining living member of the twelve disciples. The word Elder also refers to John’s age; he must have been an old man when he wrote this epistle. Obviously his readers recognized the author from this title alone. For more about John, see the Author section in the Introduction to the Gospel of John.

Most translators do not identify the recipient of this letter as an individual because the letter does not speak of the chosen lady with any particular details (in contrast to 3 John, which speaks specifically of Gaius, Diotrephes, and Demetrius). Most likely, therefore, the chosen lady refers to a local church. Verses 6, 12, and 13 also point to a corporate recipient (see comments there).

As a local church, the children are the members of the church. At this time, most churches were smaller groups of people that met in homes. Sometimes several house churches would meet in the city at the same time (see Philemon 1:2). John dearly loved these believers. In 1 John, he revealed his love by calling them his “dear children” (1 John 2:1, 12, 18, 28; 3:7, 18; 4:4; 5:21). The corporate love of all believers for one another comes through in John’s words whom I love in the truth, as does everyone else who knows God’s truth. John spoke of this corporate love also in his first letter (1 John 2:9-11; 3:10-20; 4:7-21; 5:1). Believers love one another, not because of common attraction or total compatibility, but because of the common truth they believe and share. Truth functions as the bond of believers' fellowship, but it also keeps out false teachers.

1:2 The truth that lives in us and will be in our hearts forever personifies “truth.” God gave the truth to people in Jesus Christ, the full expression and embodiment of truth (John 14:6; Ephesians 4:21). Thus, truth dwells in believers because Christ dwells in them as the Spirit of truth (John 14:15-17; 16:13). “Truth” therefore includes, but means more than, correct precepts or a set of orthodox teachings—truth centers in Jesus Christ. The truth is the reality of Jesus Christ, as opposed to the lies of the false teachers (see 1 John 2:21-23). People may choose to deny the truth and leave the fellowship, but that doesn't change the truth. Because Christ is eternal, truth is also eternal, not subject to change. Because Christ lives in believers, both he and his truth will be with them forever.

1:3 The words grace and peace were standard greetings in many letters of the day. Grace means God's undeserved favor shown to sinners whereby he saves them and gives them strength to live for him. John added the word mercy to his greeting. God reveals his mercy by forgiving and freeing people from sin, resulting in peace between them and God. Peace refers to the peace that Christ made between sinners and God through his death on the cross. Peace also refers to that inner assurance and tranquility that God places in the heart, producing confidence and contentment in Christ. Grace, mercy, and peace keep on coming like a spring-fed well that never runs dry.

The title God our Father points to the unique relationship Christians have with God. He is a father to them; they are his children. Jesus Christ is his Son, showing the unique relationship between God and Jesus. While all believers can call God their Father, only Jesus is the unique Son of God who is one with God himself.

Truth and love form a bridge into the remainder of the letter. John speaks more directly about truth in verses 2 and 4 and about love in verse 5. Truth and love always go hand in hand.

LIVE IN THE TRUTH / 1:4-11

Christianity had spread to many cities in the world. Sometimes there were several house churches in a city. True teachers and false teachers were proliferating. Because there were many false teachings about Jesus Christ in the days of the early church, the apostles had to describe which teachings about Jesus were true and which were false. Believers who adhered to the apostolic teachings—both in doctrine and in practice—were living in the truth.

1:4 John had only met some of the believers in the church and was glad to find them living in the truth. John was probably speaking of those he met at some place other than the local church itself. His joy at meeting them and then discovering that they were living in the truth prompted him to write this epistle. In identifying only “some” of the children, he was not necessarily excluding the others. Rather, he was speaking only of those he met. In both cases, the apostle rejoiced in the believers who had not allowed the false teachers to lead them away from the truth.

Living in the truth refers to the Christians conducting their lives as they had been commanded by the Father. The commandment to live in the truth came from the Father through the Son to the disciples (see John 15:15), who passed it on to the believers (Matthew 28:19-20). As John had explained in another letter, “And this is his commandment: We must believe in the name of his Son, Jesus Christ, and love one another, just as he commanded us” (1 John 3:23). To live in the truth, therefore, involves believing in Jesus Christ as God’s Son (faith) and loving others (action).

1:5 John urged the church to love one another. This was not a new commandment; the believers had heard this from the beginning. The Christians had been taught this commandment from the time they first heard the gospel preached (see John 13:35; 1 John 2:7; 3:11). The statement that Christians should love one another is a recurrent New Testament theme. Yet love for one’s neighbor is an old command, first appearing in the third book of Moses (Leviticus 19:18). Believers can show love in many ways: by avoiding prejudice and discrimination, by accepting people, by listening, helping, giving, serving, and by refusing to judge. Knowing God’s command is not enough. Those who claim to love God and believe in his Son must put their faith into practice by loving. (See also Matthew 22:37-39 and 1 John 2:7-10.)

1:6 Lest anyone wonder what John meant by the word “love,” he explained it here. Love does not focus on emotions or feelings; instead, love means doing what God has commanded. Love is expressed by obedience; obedience fulfills the command to love. The one command to love one another sums up all of God’s commands, and obedience to God’s commands is the sure test of love. John made the same proclamation in his first letter (see 1 John 3:11, 16-19).

Four times in verses 4-6 appears a form of the word “command.” Yet the commands are obeyed through love. John wanted his readers to know that he spoke as an Elder, as an apostle, and as a loving father to his children—with authority from God himself. The false teachers had no such authority, and their lifestyles did not exemplify love.

1:7 Here is the warning of this letter: Beware of the many deceivers (that is, the false teachers) who do not believe that Jesus Christ came to earth in a real body. John's first letter mentioned this heresy (see 1 John 4:2-3). Jesus had warned his disciples that false teachers would arise and lead many astray (Matthew 7:15; 24:11, 24). Jesus' words had come true, for many of these false teachers had gone out into the world. One group in particular, called the Docetists, denied Jesus' humanity and instead promoted the falsehood that he only seemed to have a human body. Believers, however, must hold on to what they believed—that Jesus is truly the Son of God who came to earth as a human. He is both fully human and fully God.

Every false teacher is against Christ—he or she is a deceiver and an antichrist (see 1 John 2:18-19; 4:3). These deceivers foreshadow the one final Antichrist who will embody all the deception of earlier anti-Christian systems and teachers. Many false teachers taught that the spirit is good and matter is evil; therefore, they reasoned that Jesus could not have been both God and man. In strong terms, John warned against this kind of teaching, and he warned Christians not to be deceived (1:8-9) and not to give encouragement or hospitality to the deceivers (1:10-11; see 1 John 2:26).

Many false teachers still promote an unbiblical understanding of Jesus. These teachers are dangerous because they distort the truth and undermine the foundations of the Christian faith. They use the right words, but they change the meanings. The way your teachers live shows a lot about what they believe about Christ. For more on testing teachers, see 1 John 4:1.

1:8 John was warning believers to watch out and not be deceived. Jesus warned his disciples that many would come with lies and would try to deceive the believers (Matthew 24:4-5, 24). John did not want these believers to follow the lies of the false teachers and thus lose the prize that the apostles (we) had worked to bring them—the gospel truth and the full reward for their loyal service. All who value the truth and persistently hold to it will win their full reward. Those who live for themselves and justify their self-centeredness by teaching false doctrines will lose that reward (see Matthew 7:21-23).

1:9 This verse explains the “loss” referred to in verse 8. John did not want the believers to lose what had been brought to them—the teaching of Christ. This may refer to teaching about Christ (that he is the Son of God, see 1:7) or to Christ's teachings about loving others (such as recorded in 1:6 above and in John 15:12-17). John may have had both in mind because both are fundamental to the Christian faith. To wander beyond these teachings literally means "leading forward" ("to go before" or "to run ahead"). This may be a sarcastic remark about the way in which the false teachers proudly claimed to be offering "advanced" teaching, but they had gone beyond the boundaries of true Christian belief and, in the process, had lost God himself. To turn away from the truth of Christ is to not have fellowship with God. In contrast, believers who continue in the teaching of Christ will find unbroken fellowship with both the Father and the Son. John had written previously, "Anyone who confesses the Son has the Father also" (1 John 2:23). To have Christ is to have God, for they are one (see John 1:18; 14:7, 9).

1:10-11 In the early days of the church, believers met in homes (see Romans 16:5; Colossians 4:15). The only way to deal with a teacher who arrives and does not teach the truth about Christ is to refuse to welcome him or encourage him in any way. If he was not teaching the truth, the believers must not even give him a hearing. In John's historical context, the command, don't invite him into your house, probably referred to a house meeting of the church, which would have been visited by various teachers traveling from local church to local church.

Listening to the false teachers, said John, would make a believer a partner in his evil work. Encouraging or helping false teachers, even if only to attempt to show "Christian kindness," identified believers with, and tacitly gave approval of, the false teachers. Believers cannot have a partnership both with God's children and also with antichrists who are God's enemies.

It may seem rude to turn people away, but how much better it is to be faithful to God than merely be courteous to people! John was not teaching that the church should not welcome unbelievers or even those who have been led astray by false teachers. He was teaching, however, that the door must be closed to those teachers who are dedicated to opposing the true teachings of God and who come to the church in order to "bring" their message. There is a difference between hospitality to strangers whom believers can win for Christ, and hospitality to those who are focused on winning believers away from Christ. Christians must trust God and discern the difference.

JOHN'S FINAL WORDS / 1:12-13

The letter closes with a promise of further communication in person, so as to give each other complete joy.

1:12 John's desire to talk with the believers—rather than write more—accounts for the brevity of the letter. John hoped to visit these believers personally and discuss the truths of the gospel more fully. As the apostle, Elder, and father in the faith, he desired to come to them as a true teacher. As he and the believers fellowshiped together, their joy would be complete. John also made that statement in his other letters (1 John 1:4; 3 John 1:13-14). John's joy was made full by his fellowship with other believers.

1:13 Since the sister, chosen by God is not named, John was probably referring to the sister church where he was staying while he wrote this letter. The children, then, referred to the church members. Believers in all churches all over the world have a common faith in Jesus Christ. Because of this, they share one another's joys and sorrows. While the believers in these churches may not have known one another, they sent greetings to these fellow Christians.

False teaching is serious business, and Christians dare not overlook it. It is so serious that John wrote this letter to warn against it. There are so many false teachings in the world that believers might be tempted to take many of them lightly. Instead, they should realize the dangers false teachings pose and actively refuse to give heresies any foothold in their lives or in their churches.

3 JOHN

INTRODUCTION

- Loyal . . . kind . . . friendly . . . reliable . . .
- Cynical . . . cheap . . . irresponsible . . . bitter . . .

Descriptive and definitive words come to mind when specific names are spoken. A certain man is described as generous, another as stingy. One woman is pictured as outgoing, another as reserved. People are known for their actions; over time, they build reputations, and adjectives accumulate on their personal resumes.

For example, little is known about Gaius or Demetrius, except that both men were generous and faithful. And Diotrephes barely makes a ripple in history, except that he is described as self-centered and mean-spirited.

Third John may be short, but it speaks much about the value of a good reputation. As you read this letter from the beloved apostle John, consider how you might be described and determine to be known as one who follows close to Christ.

AUTHOR

The apostle John.

For information about John, see the Author section in the Introduction to the Gospel of John.

DATE AND SETTING

Written in about A.D. 90 from Ephesus.

Third John was also written in a similar setting to 1 and 2 John. There is insufficient information to establish date or additional setting. The familiar terminology and writing style tie it closely to the other two letters.

AUDIENCE

Gaius, a prominent Christian in one of the churches known to John.

Third John was written to Gaius. Although the New Testament mentions several men with the name Gaius (Acts 19:29; 20:4; Romans 16:23; 1 Corinthians 1:14), it would be difficult to say that any one of these was the same as the Gaius in 3 John. At any rate, Gaius was commended for his Christian walk and hospitality and so was Demetrius, both of whom stand in sharp contrast to Diotrephes, “who loves to be the leader” (1:9).

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To commend a faithful believer, Gaius.

The problem faced in this situation was a certain Diotrephes, who was repudiating the authority of “the Elder” (John) and trying to frustrate his leadership. The letter is addressed to Gaius, who was still loyal to the elder. John commended Gaius and asked him to provide for the genuine missionaries who would be passing through.

MESSAGE

This is a personal letter from John to Gaius. For Gaius, hospitality was a habit, and his reputation for friendship and generosity, especially to traveling teachers and missionaries (1:5), had spread. To affirm and thank Gaius for his Christian lifestyle, and to encourage him in his faith, John wrote this personal note.

John’s format for this letter centers around three men: Gaius, the example of one who follows Christ and loves others (1:1-8); Diotrephes, the self-proclaimed church leader who does not reflect God’s values (1:9-11); and Demetrius, who also follows the truth (1:12). John encourages Gaius to practice hospitality, continue to walk in the truth, and do what is right.

The main themes in the book of 3 John include: Hospitality, Pride, and Faithfulness.

Hospitality (1:5-10). This letter encourages those who were kind to others, welcoming traveling Christian workers into their homes.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Faithful Christian teachers and missionaries need the support of the Christians among whom they minister. This loving support helps them financially and encourages them in the work to which God has called them. Extend hospitality to others whenever you can. This will make you a partner in their ministry.

Pride (1:9-11). Diotrephes is described as one “who loves to be the leader” (1:9). Self-centered and prideful, he not only refused to offer hospitality, but he also set himself up as a church boss, trying to undermine John and his authority. Pride disqualified Diotrephes from being a real leader in the church.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Self-centeredness continues to divide churches. All believers, especially Christian leaders, must avoid pride and its deleterious effects. Humbly use your gifts to serve God, not yourself. And be careful not to misuse your position of leadership.

Faithfulness (1:1-5, 12). Gaius and Demetrius were commended for their faithfulness to Christ and for their faithful work in the church. John held them up as examples of faithful, selfless servants.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Christian workers who serve faithfully should be acknowledged and encouraged so that they won't grow weary of serving. Look for ways to encourage faithful Christians. And determine to be one who is known as a faithful servant of Jesus Christ.

OUTLINE OF 3 JOHN

I. God's Children Live by the Standards of the Gospel (1:1-12)

II. John's Final Words (1:13-15)

3 JOHN 1

GREETINGS / 1:1-4

The main body of this letter has two purposes. The first paragraph (1:5-8) commends Gaius for his hospitality to the itinerant missionaries who are traveling and preaching the gospel message. The missionaries have spoken well of Gaius's love for the church.

The second paragraph (1:9-12) warns against the insubordination of a certain man named Diotrephes. His love of power and authority has led him not only to defy John's authority but also to convince others to follow his defiance or be excommunicated. He has refused to entertain the genuine itinerant preachers. Gaius is warned not to be influenced by Diotrephes's example.

1:1 The author of the second epistle identified himself in the same way. John the Elder was one of Jesus' original twelve disciples. In addition to this letter, he wrote two other letters, the Gospel of John, and the book of Revelation. For more about John, see the Author section in the Introduction to the Gospel of John. As in the previous letters, John did not focus on his apostolic authority but spoke of himself as an Elder who watched over the believers with loving concern. The word "elder" refers also to John's age; he must have been an old man when he wrote this epistle.

Gaius was a common name in the Roman Empire. Men named Gaius appear in the pages of the New Testament (Acts 19:29; 20:4; Romans 16:23; 1 Corinthians 1:14), but it is unclear if any of them are the same "Gaius" to whom John wrote this letter. John considered Gaius a dear friend (see 1:2, 5, 11). Perhaps Gaius had shared his home and hospitality with John at some time during John's travels. If so, John would have appreciated his actions because traveling preachers depended on hospitality to survive (see Matthew 10:11-16). The tenor of this letter indicates that Gaius occupied a position of leadership and responsibility in a local church. Gaius may have owed his conversion to John (see 1:4).

1:2 John was concerned for Gaius's physical (body) and spiritual (soul) well-being. While this was a conventional expression used in ancient letter writing, John's sincerity was revealed in his love for Gaius. John also may have been pointing out that concern for physical and spiritual go together. This was the opposite of the popular heresy that taught the separation of spirit and matter and that despised the physical life.

1:3 These brothers (fellow believers) were either emissaries sent by John to check on the situation in various churches under John's purview, or they were traveling teachers—the kind who promoted apostolic truth, as opposed to those who spread falsehoods. They reported back to John and told him about Gaius's faithfulness and that he was living in the truth. This truth was Gaius's loyalty to Christ and to the gospel; it marked his character and life.

1:4 John's children were his spiritual children, the members of the Christian communities he served. John wrote of his "children" because he was the spiritual father of many, probably including Gaius. John's joy came from hearing that the believers under his care were not straying from the gospel message but were living in the truth (see also 2 John 1:4). To live in the truth means living out the truth by expressing it in one's behavior. Gaius was doing this, and John had no greater joy than to see it happen in the life of one of his spiritual children. Apparently others in the church were doing the same as well.

CARING FOR THE LORD'S WORKERS / 1:5-12

Traveling teachers were probably sent from various churches to proclaim and teach the gospel. Because false teachers were infiltrating the churches, strong believers who taught the truth were very important. These traveling prophets, evangelists, and teachers were helped on their way by people like Gaius who housed and fed them. Finding good accommodations was very difficult for travelers who had no friends in the area. Inns were not very good places to stay. Hospitality from the believers was vital to the spread of the gospel. As noted in 2 John, however, the believers were not to show such hospitality to false teachers.

1:5 Gaius had been willing to open his home and take care of the traveling teachers who were passing through. He lovingly cared for these men who served the Lord, even when they were strangers to him. These teachers were partners in the truth (1:8) and deserved to be helped. John called this a good work.

Hospitality is a lost art in many churches today. Christians would do well to invite more people for meals—fellow church members, young people, traveling missionaries, visitors, and the needy. This is an active and much-appreciated way to show Christian love.

1:6-7 The traveling Christian workers whom Gaius had helped had mentioned his friendship and loving deeds in the church where John was present. Gaius's selfless kindness was held up as an example for others. John affirmed Gaius in his willingness to send the teachers on their way in a manner that pleases God, meaning that he helped them according to the custom of the times, which included providing rest, encouragement, and needed supplies as they continued their travels.

The reason these teachers deserved help from believers was that they are traveling for the Lord. These were not merely Christian tourists; these people were traveling with a purpose—to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. That they would accept nothing from those who are not Christians means that they did not ask for support from nonbelievers because they didn't want anyone questioning their motives for preaching.

1:8 When Christians support someone who is spreading the gospel, they are in a very real way partners with them for the truth. This is the other side of the principle in 2 John 1:10. Not everyone should go to the mission field; those who work for Christ at home are vital to the ministries of those who go and who need support. Believers can support missionaries by praying for them and by giving them money, hospitality, and time.

1:9 The brief letter referred to here was probably neither 1 or 2 John, but another letter that no longer exists. Apparently, John had previously sent a letter to the church (of which Gaius was a member), encouraging them to welcome and help the traveling teachers whom John was sending their way, and perhaps to give support to help them along their journey. But a man named Diotrephes had refused to acknowledge the apostle's authority. Diotrephes, who loves to be the leader, apparently refused to support these traveling preachers, thus snubbing John in the process. Diotrephes had an important position in the church but was blinded with pride and self-importance. He ignored the letter, perhaps even destroying it. This necessitated John's writing this letter to Gaius so his words would be heard.

1:10 John would deal with Diotrephes personally if he were able to go to Gaius's church. This verse explains some of what Diotrephes was doing. He apparently wanted to control the church. John denounced four errors of Diotrephes. First, he did not acknowledge the authority of other spiritual leaders (1:9). Second, he was saying wicked things about those leaders. The Greek word literally means "to talk nonsense." Third, he refused to welcome the traveling teachers. He regularly refused to give hospitality to the brothers sent from John. Fourth, he was putting out of the church those who disagreed with him.

Diotrephes was trying to dominate the church and lord it over all the members —telling them who to receive and who not to receive. Gaius had apparently not listened to Diotrephes but had continued to be hospitable. For this, John commended him. Not only was Gaius doing what was right, he was doing it in the face of persecution from those in his own church.

Sins such as pride, jealousy, and slander are still present in the church; thus when a leader makes a habit of encouraging sin and discouraging right actions, he or she must be stopped. If no one speaks up, great harm can come to the church. John was prepared to publicly expose Diotrephes before the whole church.

1:11 John encouraged Gaius to not be influenced by Diotrephes's bad example, but to instead follow only what is good—that is, to continue showing support and hospitality. Human beings are imitators by nature, but they must choose whom they will imitate. John encouraged Gaius to continue to follow what is good, for those who do good prove that they are God's children. To give in to Diotrephes would be giving in to evil, and those who do evil prove that they do not know God. True Christians are known by their actions. John wrote at length in his first letter about how believers must show love for one another. Those who do not love do not know God, for God is love (1 John 4:8, 16).

1:12 John here mentioned a man named Demetrius in a way that made him a complete opposite to Diotrephes. Nothing is known about Demetrius except that he may have carried this letter from John to Gaius. The book of Acts mentions an Ephesian silversmith named Demetrius who opposed Paul (Acts 19:24), but this is probably another man. When Demetrius arrived, Gaius certainly opened his home to him.

Everyone was speaking highly of Demetrius, even truth itself. The goodness of Demetrius's life was evident when it was compared to the gospel standard of truth, which involves real acts of love and hospitality. In addition to the testimony of everyone who knew Demetrius, and of the truth itself, John and his coworkers also gave him their commendations.

JOHN'S FINAL WORDS / 1:13-15

The letter closes with a promise of further, personal communication, followed by some greetings.

1:13-15 John had much to tell his readers, and modern readers wish that he had written more. But since John was anxious to deal with the situation in person, he limited his written words. He hoped to see them soon and talk face to face. John said much the same thing at the end of his other short letter (2 John 1:12).

May God's peace be with you forms a standard closing. Gaius would need the peace that Jesus gives in the days ahead (John 20:19-26), especially as he continued to refuse to acknowledge Diotrephes's leadership. The friends sending their greetings were other believers. John also asked Gaius to give his personal greetings to each of the friends there. John was thinking of them as individuals he knew and loved, not merely as a group. This statement shows that John knew many individuals in that particular Christian community.

JUDE

INTRODUCTION

Half-truths, statements taken out of context, misleading descriptions, words changed in meaning, and outright fabrications are designed to deceive, to hide the truth. Liars have many motives: to make a sale, to win an election, to hide wrongdoing, to enhance an image, to beat a rival, to cheat someone, to gain the favor of a coach, teacher, friend, parent, employer, or spouse. Whatever the reason, the real character of the liar is exposed when the truth is revealed.

In the early years of the church, liars arose—truth-twisters who deliberately rejected God’s word and the lordship of Christ and designed, instead, their own theology. The motive for these men was to gain power and money. Responding to this threat to the church, the apostles and other church leaders published warnings, urging Christians to be alert, to know the truth, and to reject the liars and their lies. That’s what motivated Jude to pen his short letter.

As you read Jude, think about the possible false teachers in your world and determine to “defend the truth” (1:3).

AUTHOR

Jude: son of Joseph, brother of James, and half-brother of Jesus.

Immediately the writer of this short letter identifies himself as “Jude, a slave of Jesus Christ and a brother of James” (1:1), so the question is which James and which Jude (a form of the Hebrew name Judah—Greek “Judas”—a common Jewish name). The most widely accepted answer is that Jude and James are the sons of Joseph mentioned in Matthew 13:55 and Mark 6:3 and, thus, the half-brothers of Jesus. Eventually, James had become the head of the church in Jerusalem (see Acts 12:17; 15:13-21; Galatians 1:18-19; 2:11-13). He also wrote the Bible book bearing his name (in about A.D. 47–49). The renown of James would explain why Jude described himself as “a brother of James” (1:1). This is an unusual description since at this time a person usually would describe himself as someone’s son rather than as someone’s brother.

Like James, Jude did not believe in Jesus at first. In fact, they had rejected him (Mark 3:21) and had ridiculed him (John 7:1-5). After Christ’s resurrection, however, Jesus “was seen by James” (1 Corinthians 15:7). Evidently, this is what convinced James that Jesus was, in fact, the Messiah, the Savior, God in the flesh. Perhaps Jude was with James at the time, or perhaps James led his brother to the Lord. Whatever the case, both men became vocal witnesses for Christ and leaders in the young church. Note also that both men begin their books by describing themselves not as equals or family but as slaves of Jesus Christ (James 1:1; Jude 1:1).

Little else is known of Jude. He, along with Mary and his other brothers, were in the upper room just before Pentecost (Acts 1:14), and he traveled with his wife as he performed missionary work (1 Corinthians 9:5).

DATE AND SETTING

Perhaps written from Palestine in about A.D. 65.

Jude's location and the date of his writing are unknown. As James' brother and active in the Jerusalem church, the most likely place would seem to be Palestine. But Paul implies that Jude and his wife may have served as traveling missionaries (1 Corinthians 9:5). If this is true, Jude could have been almost anywhere in the Roman Empire when he wrote this letter.

The similarity between Jude and 2 Peter indicates that they probably were written at about the same time, since they both addressed the same issue faced by the church, a pre-Gnostic heresy. Also, because neither 2 Peter nor Jude refers to the destruction of the Jerusalem Temple, both letters probably were written before A.D. 70.

AUDIENCE

Jewish Christians scattered throughout the world.

Little is known for sure about the intended readers of this letter except that it is addressed, "to all who are called to live in the love of God the Father and the care of Jesus Christ" (1:1). This description sounds as though Jude was writing to all believers and not a specific church or segment of the church. His appeal to Old Testament personalities and stories (for example, the Exodus, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, Moses, Cain, Balaam, Korah's rebellion, and Enoch) seems to indicate that his intended audience had a strong Jewish heritage. As a Jewish believer himself, Jude's tendency would have been to minister among Hebrew Christians, like his brother James, who specifically addressed his letter "to Jewish Christians" (James 1:1).

Some think that Jude was writing to the same audience for whom 2 Peter was intended, because of the heresy addressed by both letters. But there is no evidence for this. Evidently, these false teachers were becoming a problem for most of the churches. Paul addressed a similar problem in his letter to the Colossians.

It is likely, therefore, that Jude wrote this letter to Jewish Christians to whom he had ministered, in Palestine and elsewhere.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To warn believers about false teachers and their heresy.

Jude wrote that at first he had intended to write about defending the faith (1:3); however, the Holy Spirit compelled him to warn his fellow believers about the false teachers who had infiltrated their churches (1:4). These false teachers were ignoring the teachings of the apostles (1:17), ridiculing theology (1:10, 18), and twisting the message of God's grace in order to excuse their sexual immorality. Jude urged his readers to build themselves up in their understanding of God and his Word (1:20), pray (1:20), reject all false teaching (1:23), and focus on Christ (1:24-25).

MESSAGE

God's word and the gift of eternal life have infinite value and have been entrusted to Christ's faithful followers. There are many people who live in opposition to God and his followers. They twist God's truth, seeking to deceive and destroy the unwary. But God's truth must go forth, carried and defended by those who have committed their lives to God's Son. It is an important task, an awesome responsibility, and a profound privilege to have this commission. This was Jude's message to Christians everywhere. Opposition would come and godless teachers would arise, but Christians should "defend the truth" (1:3) by rejecting all falsehood and immorality (1:4-19), remembering God's mighty acts of rescue and punishment (1:5-11, 14-16) and the warnings of the apostles (1:17-19). His readers are to build up their own faith through prayer (1:20), keeping close to Christ (1:21), helping others (1:22-23), and hating sin (1:23). Then Jude concludes with a glorious benediction of praise to God (1:24-25).

The main themes in the book of Jude include: False Teachers and Apostasy.

False Teachers (1:4, 8, 10-19). Jude warned against false teachers and leaders who reject the lordship of Christ, undermine the faith of others, and lead people astray. He pointed out that these men had already infiltrated the church, making them even more dangerous. He also explained that these leaders and any who follow them will be severely punished by God.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. We must stoutly defend Christian truth, avoiding all compromise of the basics of the faith and rejecting all who would twist Scripture to fit their own immoral agenda. Make sure that you avoid leaders and teachers (even in the church) who change the Bible to suit their own purposes. Genuine servants of God will faithfully portray Christ in their words and conduct. Watch out for anyone who tries to make Jesus anything less than the King of kings and Lord of lords and who tries to make the Bible anything less than the inspired Word of God.

Apostasy (1:4-9, 10-11, 14-19, 22-25). Jude also warned against apostasy—turning away from Christ—presenting examples from the Old Testament of those who turned away and were punished. We must remember that God punishes all who rebel against him. We must be careful not to drift away from a firm commitment to Christ.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. People who do not seek to know the truth in God's word are susceptible to apostasy. Become a student of the Scriptures and keep your focus on Christ. Guard against any false teachings that would distract you or pull you away from God's truth.

OUTLINE OF JUDE

I. The Danger of False Teachers (1:1-16)

II. The Duty to Fight for God's Truth (1:17-25)

JUDE 1

GREETINGS FROM JUDE / 1:1-2

Jude's letter focuses on "apostasy"—when people turn away from God's truth and embrace false teachings. Jude reminded his readers of God's judgment on those who had left the faith in the past. This letter warns against false teachers—in this case, probably those who were promoting an early form of Gnosticism. Gnostics opposed two of the basic tenets of Christianity—the incarnation of Christ and the call to Christian ethics. Jude wrote to combat these false teachings and to encourage true doctrine and right conduct.

1:1 Jude was a common Jewish name. Scholars have various opinions about Jude's identity. (For a discussion of this, see the Author section in the Introduction to this book.) The overwhelming majority consider him to be a half brother of Jesus (Matthew 13:55; Mark 6:3). In his introduction, Jude identified himself as a brother of James. This James was not one of the apostles named James, but another of Jesus' half brothers (he is referred to in Galatians 1:19). Apparently, Jude held some authority (as revealed in this letter). He most likely traveled as a missionary (see 1 Corinthians 9:5) and naturally would have wanted to write a letter to his converts whose faith was being threatened by false teaching.

Oddly enough, Jude did not refer to himself as a brother of Jesus Christ. It would seem that this would have carried even more authority. Like James (see James 1:1), Jude simply identified himself as a slave of Jesus Christ. As believers, they focused on their spiritual relationship with their Lord and considered themselves privileged to be called his slaves.

Jude did not specify any destination for his letter. Instead, he addressed it to all who are called to live in the love of God the Father and the care of Jesus Christ. Being "called" also is referred to as "elected," "chosen," or "predestined." God's Spirit calls people out of darkness into the light of Christ, convinces them of their sinfulness, shows them what Christ can do for them, and then helps them to accept Christ. God's love prompted his call; his love will continue now and forever. God's love never changes. The believers across the ancient world, often facing persecution, could count on the fact that they were and always would be enfolded by God's love. In addition, believers are kept in Jesus care and will receive the certain rewards of Christ's promised blessing. At Christ's second coming, believers will be ready to receive their full salvation and to live eternally with him.

1:2 Mercy carries with it the Old Testament picture of God's loving-kindness or compassion. God's mercy helps believers day by day. Jude knew that the believers were facing difficult situations in the world—a society focused on selfish pleasure, ready to persecute believers at any provocation, with false teachers looking to tear the churches apart. Mercy helps believers in their times of need (Hebrews 4:16).

Peace refers to the peace that Christ made between us and God through his death on the cross. Only God can give true and lasting peace (John 14:27). The believers needed an abundance of inner peace and quiet confidence as they faced the turmoil in their world and as they stood up to the false teachers.

Love comes from God, for God himself is love (1 John 4:7-8). Believers who are grounded in God's love can resist the lies of the false teachers and remain solid in their stand against persecution and temptation. God will generously grant their requests and meet their needs.

THE DANGER OF FALSE TEACHERS / 1:3-16

Jude called the believers to action, to defend the faith, calling for hard work, diligent study, willingness to stand against society's desire to water down the gospel, speaking up for the truth and bearing the burden of interpreting the timeless truth to a changing society. The believers could not (and would never be able to) sit back and idly enjoy the mercy, peace, and love of their faith (1:2). Rather, their Christian faith must be defended against the onslaught of false teaching.

1:3 Although Jude's brief letter does not mention his intended readers, it addresses specific concerns about false teaching that was threatening the churches. Yet that was not Jude's original intention, as stated in verse 3, planning to write about the salvation we all share. However, an urgent concern caused him to write about something else—namely, false teaching. In this letter he wanted to urge the believers to defend the truth of the Good News. Jude probably intended that this letter to be circulated. Thus, he specified no particular church or area.

The Greek word translated defend occurs only here in the New Testament. Often it is used in secular literature to describe the intense struggle in an athletic contest. The truth refers to the entire body of beliefs taught by the apostles and held by the Christians (see Acts 2:42). This truth is unchanging, once for all time given to God's holy people. All Christians had been entrusted with the faith—to keep it pure and to teach it to others. Therefore, all Christians should stand ready to defend the faith as they would defend any prized possession.

1:4 Jude's compulsion to write this letter came because of some godless people (false teachers) who had wormed their way in among the believers; that is, they had entered the church. These may have been traveling teachers who had come and had established themselves in communities and churches with the sole aim of perverting the Christian gospel. (For example, in Galatians 2:4, Paul talked about the Judaizers who had infiltrated Christian groups.) These false teachers did not belong in the church and were no better than intruders among the believers.

Their teaching was dangerous because they were saying that God's forgiveness allows us to live immoral lives. The true gospel teaches that people are freed from sin by believing in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. This happens by God's forgiveness alone. However, the purpose of this forgiveness is to move people to holy living and service to God. The false teachers twisted God's grace, saying that forgiveness from sin means that people can live any way they please, fulfilling their sinful pleasures without inhibition. In their arrogance, these false teachers claimed that their privileged status within God's grace put them above moral law. Even today, some Christians minimize sin, believing that how they live has little to do with their faith. But what a person truly believes will be revealed by how he or she acts. Those who truly have faith will show it by their deep respect for God and their sincere desire to live according to the principles in his Word. Twisting God's grace to allow for flagrant sexual sin is a horrible perversion of the gospel. For doing this, the false teachers and their followers would pay dearly. In fact, their fate was determined long ago. This refers to previously written condemnation of anyone who is a false teacher or false prophet. God's true prophets had warned against false prophets (see, for example, Isaiah 44:25; Jeremiah 50:36). Jesus had warned his disciples that false teachers would come (Matthew 7:15; 24:11, 24; Luke 6:26). The apostles often denounced false teachers in their letters (see 2 Corinthians 11:5; Galatians 1:6-9; Philippians 3:2; Colossians 2:8, 16-19; 1 Timothy 1:3; 6:3; 2 Timothy 3:6; 2 Peter 2; 1 John 4:1). These false teachers would eventually receive their just reward.

There could be no other fate except condemnation, for these teachers had turned against the only Master and Lord, Jesus Christ. With their flagrant sexual sinning in the name of God's grace, these false teachers were denying Christ as their Master and Lord, replacing him with themselves and their appetites. While claiming to know God, their actions denied him (see Titus 1:16). They taught lies, and in so doing they denied the basics of the Christian faith (1 John 2:22). Such a denial also ends in judgment and destruction (see Matthew 10:33).

So how are believers today to discern false teaching? Heresies can be discovered through asking probing questions. We can guard against heresies by asking these questions about any religious group:

1. Does it stress man-made rules and taboos rather than God's grace?
2. Does it foster a critical spirit toward others, or does it exercise discipline discreetly and lovingly?
3. Does it stress formulas, secret knowledge, or special visions more than the Word of God?
4. Does it elevate self-righteousness, honoring those who keep the rules, rather than elevating Christ?
5. Does it neglect Christ's universal church, claiming to be an elite group?
6. Does it teach humiliation of the body as a means to spiritual growth rather than focusing on the growth of the whole person?
7. Does it disregard the family rather than holding it in high regard as the Bible does?

1:5 To prove that the determined fate (1:4) was certain to come upon the false teachers and all unbelievers, Jude wanted to remind the believers of three examples of God's punishment of sin and rebellion in the past (1:5-7). Such judgment also awaited the sin and rebellion of the false teachers.

First, Jude reminded his readers about God's people, Israel, who, although the whole nation was rescued out of slavery in Egypt, not everyone entered the Promised Land. The entire nation had received God's deliverance, seeing his incredible miracles in accomplishing their exodus. But when they arrived at the entrance to the Promised Land, many rebelled against God, refusing to believe that he could or would protect them. Their unbelief resulted in destruction. From the original group, only Caleb and Joshua (and their families) were allowed to enter Canaan because God destroyed every one of those who did not remain faithful (see Hebrews 3:16-19).

Jude used Israel's experience on the threshold of the Promised Land to explain that even some among God's people can turn away. The false teachers had come from the ranks of the believers. While not truly followers of Christ, they were saying and doing many of the right things, even as they were teaching their wrong doctrines. They understood that they could find deliverance from bondage to sin (like bondage to Egypt), yet they were choosing sin over salvation. The obvious result, Jude wrote, would be that they, like the disobedient Israelites, would be destroyed.

1:6 This second example of God's punishment of disobedience describes certain angels, not those who live in heaven and glorify God, but those who did not stay within the limits of authority God gave them but left the place where they belonged. Once pure, holy, and living in God's presence, they gave in to pride and joined Satan to rebel against God. They left their positions of authority and their dwelling with God, resulting in eventual doom. Peter explained that God "did not spare even the angels when they sinned" (2 Peter 2:4). Scholars differ as to which rebellion Jude referred. This could refer either to the angels who rebelled with Satan (Ezekiel 28:15), or more likely to the sin of the "sons of God" described in Genesis 6:1-4 (an interpretation given in the book of Enoch in the Apocrypha, when angels came to earth and took women as sexual partners; see also Revelation 12:7). Though not in the Bible, Jewish theology at this time held that some fallen angels (demons) were held in chains and some were free to roam this world to oppress people. For more on the book of Enoch, see verse 14. Jude's readers apparently understood his meaning, as well as the implication that if God did not spare his angels, neither would he spare the false teachers. Pride and lust had led to civil war and to the angels' fall. The false teachers' pride and lust would lead to judgment and destruction.

As for these disobedient angels, God has kept them chained in prisons of darkness, waiting for the day of judgment. These angels were imprisoned in Tartarus (see comments on 1 Peter 3:19-20; 2 Peter 2:4). Some scholars describe the "chains" as metaphors for the confinement of "darkness"; others take them to be literal chains in a dark pit somewhere in this earthly sphere. Most likely this place of punishment is in a heavenly realm that is set aside for punishment (see comments on 1 Peter 3:19). These sinful angels will be "kept" in a place of punishment until the great day of judgment, when they will face their final doom (Matthew 25:41).

1:7 Finally, as a third example of God's judgment of disobedience, Jude pointed out that Sodom and Gomorrah and their neighboring towns were destroyed by fire. The inhabitants were so full of sin that God wiped the cities off the face of the earth. The people were following their own sinful natures, indulging in sexual immorality and pursuing sexual perversion. God "rained down fire and burning sulfur" (Genesis 19:24) as punishment. So complete was God's judgment and destruction that the cities no longer exist today. Archaeologists believe they may be under the waters of the Dead Sea.

The destruction of these cities served as a warning of the eternal fire that will punish all who are evil. The fire that rained on the evil cities pictures the fire that awaits unrepentant sinners. Many people don't want to believe that God will punish people with “eternal fire” for rejecting him. But this is clearly taught in Scripture. Sinners who don’t seek forgiveness from God will face eternal darkness. Jude warned all who rebel against, ignore, or reject God.

1:8 The false teachers used dreams and visions for sources of their authority. Drawing from his three analogies above, Jude indicted the false teachers in three areas:

1. They live immoral lives. Like the citizens of Sodom and Gomorrah, they follow wherever their sinful desires lead them, even into homosexuality. These people taught that Christian freedom placed believers above moral rules. No one living in such a way should attempt to speak for God. By doing so, these false teachers brought great judgment on themselves.
2. They defy authority. This “authority” could refer to church leaders, angelic powers (as below), or the Lord himself. Most likely, the false teachers rejected the authority of all of these. They lived to please themselves and dismissed the prospect of a Second Coming and judgment by God.
3. They would scoff at the power of the glorious ones. In light of the comparable verse in 2 Peter 2:11, the celestial beings mentioned here most likely are the fallen angels—the guilty celestial beings who deserve condemnation. The false teachers “slandered” the spiritual realities they did not understand, perhaps by taking Satan’s power too lightly. Thus, the statement in verse 9 that the archangel Michael did not dare to slander Satan himself shows the arrogance of these false teachers.

Jude was emphasizing that the false teachers were immoral, insubordinate, and irreverent. Jude hardly needed to say more. The believers had no reason for listening to or following such people.

1:9 Michael is one of the mightiest of the angels, sometimes called an archangel, reflecting the ranking of angels that was part of Jewish tradition. In Daniel 10:13, 21 and 12:1, Michael is also referred to as a mighty angel. This incident is not recorded in Scripture. The Bible merely states that Moses died and no one knows where his grave is (Deuteronomy 34:5-6). The background for this dispute over Moses’ body can be found in an ancient book titled, “The Assumption of Moses.” The story, obviously known to the early believers, explains that Michael had been sent to bury Moses’ body. According to “The Assumption of Moses,” when Michael prepared to do his task, he began arguing with Satan about Moses’ body. Satan is a fallen angel. He is real, not symbolic, and is constantly fighting against those who follow and obey God. The story explains that Satan said Moses' body rightfully belonged to him because Moses had committed murder (see Exodus 2:12). While Michael had every reason to expose Satan's lies, he did not dare accuse Satan of blasphemy. Michael, instead of using his own authority, left the matter in his Master's hands, saying simply, "The Lord rebuke you." He did not rely on his own power and authority.

Jude wanted the believers to understand that if even the mightiest angels are careful about how they address other powers, even evil ones, how much more should mere people watch their words when speaking of celestial powers, good or evil. If even a powerful angel of God did not dare to speak a judgment on God's behalf, then neither should the false teachers claim to speak for God when they knew nothing about him.

1:10 In contrast to Michael's refusal to slander even Satan himself (1:9), the false teachers scoffed at celestial power (1:8) and mocked and cursed the things they do not understand. Many of these false teachers claimed to possess a superior, secret knowledge that gave them authority. They considered themselves to be the only ones to truly "understand" God. Yet by their slander, they revealed not superior knowledge, but profound ignorance. In fact, for all their pride, they were no better than animals. They could really do no more than whatever their instincts tell them—that is, how to fulfill their sexual desires. While claiming superior knowledge and status, these false teachers had only the most basic knowledge—how to fulfill their lust. They had no understanding beyond that of the animals; their status was not above the rest of humanity, but was, in reality, below it.

Their refusal to heed God's voice left them enslaved to sin and their sinful passions. The only things these men truly understood were the passions and lusts that enslaved them. Even though they claimed to be able to indulge themselves without retribution, eventually they would bring about their own destruction.

1:11 Jude reminded his readers of three classic examples of men who had lived as they pleased and had been punished for doing so. These stories illustrate attitudes that are typical of false teachers—pride, selfishness, jealousy, greed, lust for power, and disregard of God's will.

Cain murdered his brother out of vengeful jealousy (Genesis 4:1-16). There are various interpretations of Cain's example—that he killed his brother. Jude may have been referring to Cain's desire to devise another way of worship rather than the way God intended (Hebrews 11:4), to Cain's intense envy of his brother, or to Cain's selfish, evil heart that led him to murder (1 John 3:12). Just as Cain murdered his brother, so the false teachers "murder" people's souls. Just as Cain did not care about his brother, murdering him out of envy, so the false teachers did not care about their followers, willingly leading them along the pathway to destruction. Like Cain, the false teachers were defying God's authority and acting out of sinful passion.

Balaam prophesied out of greed, not out of obedience to God's command (Numbers 22–24; see also 2 Peter 2:15-16). The false teachers were following in the steps of Balaam, a man who had led many astray. A pagan king had hired Balaam, a prophet, to curse Israel. At first, Balaam obeyed God; eventually, however, his evil motives and desire for money won out. Like Balaam, the false teachers were not interested in serving God; they will do anything for money, using religion only for financial gain and personal advancement.

Korah rebelled against God's divinely appointed leaders, wanting the power for himself (Numbers 16:1-35). By leading a revolt against God's divinely appointed leaders, Korah was actually revolting against God. The punishment was literally earthshaking when the earth split apart and swallowed those who rebelled with their households and possessions. Like Korah, the false teachers had revolted against the divinely appointed leadership of the apostles and church leaders, setting themselves up in opposition.

Through these three Old Testament pictures, Jude painted these false teachers. They were without love (like Cain), greedy for money (like Balaam), and insubordinate to God-appointed authorities (like Korah). God's punishment on them is certain.

1:12-13 When the Lord's Supper was celebrated in the early church, believers would eat a full meal before sharing the bread and wine of communion. The meal was called a fellowship meal (or love feast); it was designed to be a sacred time of fellowship to prepare one's heart for the Lord's Supper. However, the false teachers were joining these meals and ruining the Christians' gatherings by their very presence. The false teachers were like dangerous reefs along a shoreline, ready to shipwreck the believers. Jude spared no words in describing the danger of these false teachers' involvement with the believers. In the worst sort of hypocrisy, these intruders who had stolen in among the believers (1:4) were participating in the love feast while at the same time living and speaking in opposition to Christ.

They were shameless in their selfishness. They cared nothing for the believers, their celebration, or the God the believers worshiped. Instead of looking after others' needs, the false teachers' only concern was their own needs.

In four vivid word pictures taken from nature, Jude further described the false teachers. First, they are like clouds blowing over dry land without giving rain—all show but no substance. Like waterless clouds, they were promising rain but floated on by, producing nothing. While they might claim superior knowledge, the false teachers had nothing of substance to assuage anyone's spiritual thirst.

Second, the false teachers are like trees without fruit at harvesttime. A fruitless tree in autumn may refer to a sterile tree, which was as good as dead because it produced no fruit. A tree pulled out by the roots was completely dead. Jude compared the false teachers to trees promising fruit but giving none. They were “once dead” because they had never taken root (they were never believers), and they had never borne spiritual fruit in their lives. They were doubly dead because just as fruitless trees are uprooted and burned, so the false teachers would face eternal punishment.

Third, the false teachers are like wild waves of the sea, churning up the dirty foam of their shameful deeds. Like the wild waves that make lots of noise as they restlessly thrash about, the false teachers restlessly and loudly were spewing their teaching. Jude used the image recorded in Isaiah 57:20. As debris and filth caught in the foam are cast up on the shore, so the false teachers' shameful actions would be cast up for all to see.

Fourth, the false teachers were wandering stars, heading for everlasting gloom and darkness. For centuries, the fixed stars in the heavens have guided seafarers and navigators in travels around the earth. But wandering (or shooting) stars offer no guidance and no light. They appear bright for a few moments but shoot across the sky and disappear into darkness. The false teachers were as useless as wandering stars because they offered no direction and no light. Their teachings might seem “bright” for a while, but these teachers would find that their eternal judgment and punishment are certain; they have reservations that cannot be changed or canceled.

1:14-15 We know a little about Enoch from the Old Testament (Genesis 5:21-24). He was in the lineage of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:37). The apocryphal book called Enoch describes Enoch as living seven generations after Adam. He was the seventh in order because Adam was counted as the “first” in the Jewish way of recording generations. During the period between the writing of the Old and

New Testaments, Enoch had become a popular figure in Jewish writing. He was thought to be a figure of the Messiah and was considered to have had expert knowledge about the heavens (see Hebrews 11:5).

Jude was quoting from a prophecy in the book of Enoch (1 Enoch 1:9), written in the time between the Testaments (second century B.C.) and familiar to the early Christians. While this book did not become a part of the canon of Scripture, Jude considered this prophecy to be correct and authoritative, and he quoted words that were familiar to his readers and affirmed by other Scriptures. This prophecy clinched Jude's argument of future judgment. Enoch had prophesied that the Lord would return in great glory, bringing with him thousands of his holy ones. Scripture also describes Jesus returning to earth with many angels ("holy ones")—see Deuteronomy 33:2; Daniel 7:10; Zechariah 14:5; Matthew 16:27; 24:30-31; 25:31; Hebrews 12:22.

Jude continued to quote from Enoch's prophecy, saying that the Lord would return to earth and bring the people of the world to judgment, and convict the ungodly of all the evil things they have done in rebellion and of all the insults that godless sinners have spoken against him. These false teachers' character, actions, and words will result in a guilty conviction on the day when the Lord returns.

1:16 Jude explained four areas of evil things done in rebellion (1:15). First, as grumblers and complainers they constantly found fault in everyone and everything, except in themselves. When people stray from God, they may become habitual complainers, unable to see God or good in anything (see Exodus 16-17; Numbers 14-17; 1 Corinthians 10:10).

Second, they did whatever evil they felt like doing. This has already been made clear by Jude's words in 1:4, 8, 10-13, 15. Without regard for God's laws or even for basic morality, these men shamelessly indulged their lusts, acting on their passions and desires. Their only god was self, and they worshiped that god wholeheartedly.

Third, they were loudmouthed braggarts. This means they were boastful men, swollen with pride. They had denied Christ and spoken against him (1:15); these bombastic words might have been their erroneous doctrines spoken loudly with the hopes of impressing others and making a name for themselves.

Fourth, these false teachers would flatter others to get favors in return. Flattery is phony, and the false teachers used it as a cover-up for their real intentions. Instead of loving people, they used them, using flattery if necessary to get what they wanted.

Jude could hardly have said worse about anyone. Sparing no words for these false teachers, he laid their attitudes, words, and actions out for all to see. He meant for the Christians to take this irrefutable evidence and decide for themselves about these men.

A CALL TO REMAIN FAITHFUL / 1:17-23

The audience to whom Jude wrote was vulnerable to heresies and to temptations toward immoral living. Jude encouraged the believers to remain firm in their faith and trust in God's promises for their future. This was vital because they were living during a time of increased disloyalty to the faith. We too are living in the last days, much closer to the end than were the original readers of this letter. We, too, are vulnerable to doctrinal error. We too are tempted to give in to sin. Although there is much false teaching around us, we need not be afraid or give up in despair—God can keep us from falling, and he guarantees that if we remain faithful, he will bring us into his presence and give us everlasting joy.

1:17-18 In addition to examples from the Old Testament of God's punishment of sin (1:5-7) and citations from prophecy about the Second Coming (1:14-15), Jude appealed to the believers to remember what the apostles had said regarding false teachers. The words of the apostles were already being considered authoritative and on the level with Scripture. The words quoted here, “in the last times there would be scoffers whose purpose in life is to enjoy themselves in every evil way imaginable,” parallel 2 Peter 3:3. The “last times” began with Christ's resurrection and will continue until his return, when he will set up his Kingdom and judge all humanity. Jesus and the apostles forewarned all believers that during that interim, including the time period in which we live, “scoffers” will come. To “scoff” means to show contempt for something by one's actions and language, to mock. These false teachers scoffed at the truth and taught their own lies. They despised all morality and religion. Jesus had warned against the deception of false teachers (Mark 13:21-23), as had Paul (Acts 20:28-31; 2 Thessalonians 2:1-12; 1 Timothy 4:1; 2 Timothy 3:1-5), Peter (2 Peter 2:1–3:7), and John (1 John 2:22; 4:1-3; 2 John). Because Jesus and the apostles had warned against false teachers, the church must also be prepared.

1:19 These false teachers should have been easy to spot. They were not godly ministers; rather, they lived by natural instinct—living to please themselves and their sinful desires. They did not have God's Spirit living in them. They set themselves above all other Christians because of their imagined superior knowledge and understanding of their “freedom” in Christ. Those allegedly enlightened enough to join them regarded themselves as distinct and superior from others in the church. Thus, Jude condemned these false teachers for creating divisions.

Ironically, the very presence of these false teachers who scoffed at the apostles' teachings and at the prophecies of the Second Coming was a fulfillment of prophecy. The apostles had indicated that these false teachers would be abundant in "the last days" (see 1 Timothy 4:1-2; 1 John 2:18-26). Their presence only further assured the believers that Christ would soon return.

1:20 The believers could stand against the false teachers if they followed Jude's advice in four areas. First, they must build on the firm foundation of their faith, standing strong and unified (see also 1 Corinthians 3:9-17; Ephesians 2:20-22). They could do this by staying close to other believers and by continuing in worship, including taking the Lord's Supper.

Second, Jude encouraged the believers to continue to pray in the power and strength of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit prays on behalf of believers (Romans 8:26-27; Galatians 4:6; Ephesians 6:18), opens their minds to Jesus (John 14:26), and teaches believers more about their Lord (John 15:26). Prayer is the lifeline that connects all Christians to their Savior. Believers must never stop praying.

1:21 Third, believers should live in such a way that God's love could bless them. This means that the believers must stay close to God and his people, not listening to false teachers who would try to pull them away (John 15:9-10). Obedience is the key. The false teachers had flouted obedience and thus had stepped out of God's love.

Fourth, the believers should patiently wait for the eternal life promised by the Lord Jesus Christ. The promises will come true. Christ will return and bring his people into eternal glory with him. While believers have already received his mercy, they must wait for the consummation of that mercy when their salvation will be made complete (2 Peter 3:11-12, 14). Believers wait in confident expectation. God's promises are not "ifs" but "whens." They must know, beyond any doubt, that their Savior will soon return for them.

1:22-23 Although the false teachers were hopelessly entrenched in their sin and Satan's grip, the believers had a responsibility to those who had fallen prey to false teaching.

The first group consists of those believers who have listened to the false teachers and have begun to doubt God's truth. They still have reservations, so they have not yet joined the false teachers. These people are not to be ridiculed; rather, they are to be shown mercy and carefully drawn back into the church by providing them with the true teaching of the gospel. Believers who are well taught in the faith can show mercy to those whose faith is wavering by quietly and calmly talking with them, explaining the false teachers' error, and reminding them of the truth they had originally received.

The second group has gone beyond doubting. Agreeing with the false teachers, they are on the road to destruction. They need someone to literally step in their path and rescue them from the flames of judgment. The "flames" refer to the eternal punishment awaiting the false teachers (1:4). If we saw someone about to be burned by fire, we would quickly grab that person and pull him or her out of harm's way. That's the attitude the true believers are to have toward those sliding toward false teaching. We need to grab them and pull them away before it is too late. We need ministers and teachers who know how to refute false teaching and defend Christianity so that they can rescue the misinformed.

The third group refers to those already in the false teachers' camps—those who have already joined them. These people also need mercy, but believers must be careful so as not to be contaminated by their sins. While believers might try to rescue those deceived people, they must do so without allowing themselves to become contaminated by the false teaching. This will be a difficult task, one to be undertaken with healthy fear and respect for the spiritual warfare when God's power meets head-on with Satan's power. Believers have God on their side, but they must remember not to attempt anything in their own power lest they too fall prey to the false teachers' lies.

A PRAYER OF PRAISE / 1:24-25

As the letter began, so it ended—with assurance. In this great doxology, Jude stressed the mighty power of God to keep us securely in him.

1:24 God is able to keep believers from falling prey to false teachers. Although false teachers were widespread and dangerous, although it would be dangerous to attempt to rescue slipping fellow Christians, the believers should not retreat or be afraid. Instead, they should trust God and remain rooted and grounded in him. God can be trusted to bring all believers into his glorious presence. We should praise him for this great promise. The believers could trust that God would do as he promised and one day bring them to himself. But that will not be a day of punishment (as it will be for the false teachers). Rather, it will be a day of joy, for God will present his people innocent of sin and with great joy. When Christ appears, and we are given our new bodies, we will be like him (1 John 3:2). Coming into Christ's presence will be a time of "great joy" for God and for all believers.

1:25 Contemplating the great joy awaiting all believers and the fulfillment of God's promises of eternal glory, Jude praised God with a beautiful doxology. Jude had originally intended to write about the salvation all believers shared (1:3); he got his chance here. This one final verse captures the focus and goal of believers' salvation and faith. Christianity is not a series of made-up ideas or free-floating thoughts; it is faith in a person—not just any person, but God who became our Savior, through Jesus Christ. To this God alone the believers should ascribe

- glory—God's powerful radiance, his greatness, his complete moral superiority and splendor
- majesty—God's transcendent greatness
- power—God's self-contained might, his control over the world
- authority—God's sovereignty over all physical and moral laws in the entire universe

These qualities reside in God alone. Jesus Christ is our Lord, meaning that he too has all glory, majesty, power, and authority as God himself. This was true before the ages began, and it is true in the present day. And it will continue to be true forevermore.

REVELATION

INTRODUCTION

Hollywood studios produce spectacular displays for movie-theater entertainment. With computer-generated images and other high-tech tricks, movies present special effects that seem almost beyond comprehension. Aliens and dinosaurs come to life; explorers travel faster than light; animals and trees dance, sing, and talk. Viewers marvel at the show, then return to reality as the credits roll.

That's great entertainment. But we know it's not real. Now flip to the back of your Bible, to the last book—Revelation. As you read, you soon will become immersed in a fantastic display of sights, sounds, colors, and images. If you feel overwhelmed and amazed, think of what the original witness to these events, John, must have felt as vision after vision assaulted his senses. No adjectives can adequately describe this multimedia show. Trumpets, thrones, lightening, thunder, lampstands, awful creatures, millions of majestic angels, a mighty chorus, fiery horses, plagues, terrible bowls . . . one scene follows another, moving steadily and decisively toward the ultimate finale.

This is a story of martyrs and battles, of demons and angels, of things to come. Revelation reveals God and his plan for the future. And it's true.

AUTHOR

John the apostle, son of Zebedee and Salome, and younger brother of James.

In a book filled with obscure images and vague allusions, one thing comes through loud and clear: the name of the author. At the very beginning, Revelation identifies its source: "This is a revelation from Jesus Christ . . . sent to God's servant John" (1:1). The statement asserts that Jesus Christ himself gave this revelation to a man named John.

The early church fathers—including Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, and Hippolytus—uniformly identified this John as the apostle of the same name, the one who abandoned his father's fishing nets to follow Jesus (Matthew 4:21-22). It is clear from the Gospels that the apostle John was very close to Jesus. Jesus singled out Peter, James, and John to accompany him to Jairus's home to witness the resurrection of Jairus's daughter (Mark 5:37-43). Then, on two separate occasions, Jesus asked the three men to go away with him to a secluded place to spend time in prayer. At the first of these occasions, John witnessed the dazzling transfiguration of Jesus as he was joined by two heavenly guests, Moses and Elijah (Luke 9:28-31). The second occasion came during that agonizing night Jesus spent in the Garden of Gethsemane before his arrest (Matthew 26:36-38). John also helped make preparations for the Last Supper (Luke 22:8). What a great privilege to have been such a close confidant of the Lord Jesus himself!

Apparently, John's proximity to the Master made him quite bold. He didn't shrink from asking Jesus if he could sit in a place of honor in the coming Kingdom (Mark 10:35-37). John even offered to call down fire from heaven to wipe out a Samaritan village that had rejected Jesus (Luke 9:54-55). In each case, Jesus reined in the misplaced enthusiasm of this "Son of Thunder" (see Mark 3:17). Yet John's clear loyalty to his Lord and Savior should be admired. His love for Jesus motivated him to stay close in the darkest hour. On the day of Jesus' crucifixion, John stood at the foot of the cross, where Jesus entrusted him with the care of Jesus' earthly mother (John 19:26-27). No wonder John humbly described himself as the disciple Jesus loved (John 13:23; 19:26; 20:2; 21:20-24).

It is certainly understandable, therefore, that Jesus would appear to this beloved apostle at a later date, to entrust him with a very special message for the church (Revelation 1:9-19). So, near the end of his life, John received a vision from Christ, which he recorded for the benefit of the seven churches in Asia and for Christians everywhere, throughout history.

Although much evidence affirms the apostle John as Revelation's author, a few scholars aren't convinced. Dionysius, a fourth-century bishop of Alexandria, was the first known doubter of this apostle's authorship of Revelation. Dionysius pointed out the following:

- Revelation has a completely different structure than John's other writings—including the Gospel of John, 1 John, 2 John, and 3 John.
 - None of John's writings allude to Revelation.
 - The rough and inaccurate Greek of Revelation sharply contrasts with the polished and faultless Greek of John's Gospel and letters.
- Dionysius cautiously suggested that a prophet named John, who lived in Ephesus in the first century, had written this book.
- The differences in Greek style between Revelation and John's writings are real but can be easily explained. The primary difference comes from the fact that John was writing apocalyptic literature—that is, he was recording the images he saw while he was seeing them. This style of writing, if left uncorrected, would account for its poor grammar and awkward syntax. The subject matter of Revelation also accounts for the difference in style. John's other writings are instructional or historical, while Revelation is the record of an extraordinary vision—a vision that couldn't be expressed with the precise syntax of the Greek language.

Although Bible scholars cannot assert with certainty that the “John” of Revelation is the apostle John, no other viable alternative has been offered. The evidence for Dionysius's “John of Ephesus” is slim. Thus, we have no substantial reasons to doubt that the apostle John was the one who witnessed the remarkable visions recorded in this book, appropriately titled “Revelation.”

For more on John the apostle, see the Author section in the Introduction to the Gospel of John.

DATE AND SETTING

Written around A.D. 90–95 from the island of Patmos.

Readers don't have to guess or research where Revelation was written. The text clearly names the location as the island of Patmos: “I am John, your brother. In Jesus we are partners in suffering and in the Kingdom and in patient endurance. I was exiled to the island of Patmos for preaching the word of God and speaking about Jesus” (1:9). Patmos, with its rugged volcanic hills, lies about fifty-five kilometers off the southwest coast of Asia Minor and is only twelve kilometers long and seven kilometers wide.

John had been sent to that barren and rocky island off the coast of present-day Turkey because he had fearlessly proclaimed the gospel. John had been banished to Patmos as the Roman authorities continued moving against the church. Threatened by John's powerful ministry, they viewed John as a dangerous leader of the Christian sect. During this exile, while John was separated from his Christian brothers and sisters, the risen Jesus appeared to him in a spectacular vision.

Although the place of John's vision is identified in the text, the exact time is not. Most of the evidence seems to point to Emperor Domitian's reign, around A.D. 90–95. The early church father Irenaeus made this case. Modern scholars agree with Irenaeus, believing that after writing Revelation, John was released from Patmos, whereupon he returned to Ephesus, where he had been ministering before his exile. Then, several years later, around A.D. 100, John died. This progression of events fits well with the evidence in Revelation itself. The writer described himself as a brother and companion of the believers in Ephesus and nearby cities (1:9-11)—an appropriate statement for a leader of the Ephesian church.

The letters to the seven churches in Asia Minor in 2–3 speak of a spiritual decline—something that certainly could have occurred during the forty or so years after their foundings. The church of Laodicea is described as rich in 3:17. Since the city was completely destroyed by an earthquake in A.D. 60–61, it would have been difficult to say this of Laodicea much before A.D. 90.

Some believe that Revelation was written during Nero's reign, between the years A.D. 54 and 68, the time of Nero's greatest persecution of the Christians. The best argument for this date is that the apostle John may have written the description of the New Jerusalem (21:1-27) before the destruction of the old city in A.D. 70. Another explanation for an early date is that the number 666 works as a possible cryptic reference to Nero. When the words "Nero Caesar" are transcribed into Hebrew, the numeric value of the Hebrew letters can be calculated as 666. Another argument is that the persecution that Nero instigated against Christians could be coincidental with the persecution in the book of Revelation.

In the last analysis, however, the evidence seems to support the early church tradition that the apostle John wrote Revelation on the island of Patmos around A.D. 90–95.

AUDIENCE

The churches in Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea and believers everywhere.

Although Revelation touches on all of human history, it is specifically addressed to seven churches located in what today is southwestern Turkey. Reliable historical sources from the second century A.D. describe the apostle John as ministering in Ephesus around A.D. 70–100, so he would have been intimately familiar with the strengths and weaknesses of the churches he was addressing.

Before John worked in Ephesus, Paul had labored there. Paul had founded the Ephesian church on his second missionary journey. At that time Paul had been on his way to Jerusalem, so he had left mature Christians—Aquila and Priscilla—to carry on the work (Acts 18:19-21, 24-26). On his third missionary journey, Paul stayed in Ephesus for three full years, making it a center for evangelistic activity for the present-day region of Turkey. The city was ideally suited for this strategic purpose because it was located at the intersection of two major overland routes: the coastal road running north to Troas and the western road that headed toward Laodicea. In addition, Ephesus sat on the Cayster River and, therefore, had easy access to the shipping traffic in the Aegean Sea. Because of this central and strategic location, Ephesus had become a commercial and cultural hub of the region. Another attraction in Ephesus was a great temple to Artemis, the fertility goddess. Visitors flocked to this temple every year (Acts 19:23-27). Paul envisioned Ephesus as the center of Christianity, rather than paganism, in the region.

In the lecture hall of Tyrannus, Paul organized an evangelism school to train teachers and preachers in the gospel message (Acts 19:9-10). For three years Paul stayed in Ephesus. (The “two years” of Acts 19:10 only account for part of Paul’s stay there.) Most likely, during this time all the churches addressed in Revelation were founded. These churches—Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea—were located on a circular postal route in southwestern Asia Minor (present-day Turkey).

PURPOSE

To reveal the full identity of Christ and to give warning and hope to believers.

Because of the description in Revelation of Christian martyrs and a beast who demands worship (13:1-8), many readers of Revelation have assumed that the cities to which the apostle John wrote were being severely persecuted. Indeed, these communities were experiencing some persecution. John himself had been exiled to Patmos for preaching the gospel (1:9), and Antipas in Pergamum had been put to death for his adherence to Christ (2:13). Nero was the first Roman emperor to persecute Christians. Yet his persecution of Christians was local and not Empire-wide. Nero blamed the Christians in Rome for the devastating fire that had destroyed much of the city.

It wasn’t until the reign of Domitian (A.D. 81–96) that refusing to worship the Roman emperor became a punishable offense throughout the Empire. Before that time, emperor worship had been spreading throughout the Roman Empire but hadn’t been enforced. But even with the decree that all should worship him as “God and Lord,” there isn’t much evidence from Domitian’s reign of widespread persecution of Christians. Most of the persecution of Christians in the first century consisted of local challenges to specific groups of believers. Out of the seven churches addressed in Revelation, John encouraged only three (Smyrna, Pergamum, and Philadelphia) to endure suffering and persecution.

This book seems to be more concerned about false teaching, sexual immorality, divisions within congregations, lack of love for God and others, and complacency toward the things of God. The greatest threat to these churches was internal, not external—the spread of false teaching and spiritual compromise (2:14-16, 20-22; 3:4, 15-17). So Revelation wasn’t necessarily addressed to a persecuted minority. Instead, it was a wake-up call to a complacent, compromising church.

Revelation highlights the unseen realities that these congregations were ignoring. Vivid and terrifying visions illustrate a furious battle between good and evil—a battle of which the eventual outcome has been already determined.

Ultimately, God will win! The only question was whether the members of these churches would be on God's side or on Satan's side. The answer to this question was a matter of life and death.

Understanding Apocalyptic Literature. To understand Revelation, we must recognize that John, the author, wrote in a specific genre—apocalyptic literature. From 200 B.C. to A.D. 100, certain groups of Jews and Christians used this writing style to describe the end of the world and God's judgment. Apocalyptic literature uses fantastic imagery to remind readers of the invisible, supernatural battle occurring behind the events of human history. Within the Bible, in addition to Revelation, the clearest examples of apocalyptic literature are Daniel 10–12 and Mark 13. Outside of Scripture, there are The Assumption of Moses, The Apocalypses of Ezra, The Shepherd of Hermas, and Baruch. Non-canonical apocalypses usually name no author but are written as though prominent Old Testament figures, such as Moses or Ezra, were seeing the future. There are three key characteristics of apocalyptic literature.

1. All apocalyptic literature claims to be a revelation from God. The Greek word for “apocalypse” (apokalupsis) actually means “revelation.” Thus, in the book of Revelation, God gives a glimpse into the future. Revelation consists of four visions, each introduced by an invitation to see what the future holds (1:11; 4:1; 17:1; 21:9). In these visions world history is portrayed as a great war between God and Satan. In the end God defeats Satan and emerges as the winner of this great struggle. As you read Revelation, keep in mind the big picture—the cosmic warfare between good and evil.
2. Apocalypses are symbolic. Mysterious imagery, numerology, cosmic journeys, supernatural beings, and strange beasts fill the pages of apocalyptic works. This type of literature attempts to describe invisible, supernatural events in human terms. By their very nature, these images go beyond what is known, as apocalyptic writers point to supernatural realities through striking symbols. At this point it is important to note that in order to understand the symbols in Revelation, we must consider their meaning to the first-century readers and not impose contemporary events and people on the text. Apocalyptic writers never intended for the symbols to be interpreted as literal photographs of the future. Instead, they wanted their graphic and disturbing images to symbolize events, beings, or traits in the supernatural realm. For example, 1:16 describes Christ as having a sharp, double-edged sword in his mouth. By comparing this image to Hebrews 4:12-13 (which describes the Word of God as a double-edged sword that penetrates the soul and judges every thought), it becomes clear that this sword is a symbol for Christ's words. Christ's words are so full of truth that they can cleanly separate good from evil, truth from falsehood. Christ with his words of truth will be the ultimate Judge of all people.

3. Apocalyptic literature highlights God's supernatural intervention in history—the times when God decisively acts in ways that transcend natural laws. Revelation doesn't try to encourage people to discover God's workings within the natural laws that people take for granted. Instead, the visions in this book picture God acting purposefully to end the way things have always been. Revelation describes God defeating evil in this world once and for all and establishing peace and justice forever. In the end God will interrupt the natural world so dramatically that the earth and sky will flee from his presence (20:11). God will replace the old world with a radically new one (21:1). On the new earth, for example, neither sun nor moon will be needed (21:23).

Though most of this book is apocalyptic, not all of it is. Revelation also contains straightforward prophecy (1:3; 22:7, 10, 18-19) and seven letters of admonition from Jesus Christ (1:4–3:22). As prophecy, it focuses on believers' responsibilities in this world and their relationships to an eternal future spent with God. As an epistle to seven churches, it gives advice and encouragement to believers in seven separate churches. This is the only book in the Bible that promises a blessing to those who listen to its words and do what it says (1:3).

Revelation is a hybrid of apocalypse and prophecy written within the framework of an ancient Greek letter. The purpose of this letter was to inspire believers to overcome all obstacles by steadfastly holding on to their faith (2:7, 17, 25-26; 3:5, 11-12, 21). Despite the many strange images and mysterious symbols, the central message of Revelation is clear: God controls all of history, and Christ will return to earth to judge it and to reward those who have joined his side in the fight against evil and who have remained faithful to him (22:7, 12-13, 20).

Interpreting Revelation. Revelation is a book of symbols. Every symbol in this book was understandable by people in the first century. This was a first-century book, written to the believers of the first-century church; yet it also has significance for Christians two thousand years later. The questions to ask when reading the book are, What was God saying to John's original readers? What would they have understood from John's words? Why did God use a particular symbol to get across his message?

Revelation is a book about the future and about the present. It offers future hope to all believers, especially those who have suffered for their faith, by proclaiming Christ's total triumph over evil and the reality of eternal life with him. It also gives present guidance as it teaches us about Jesus Christ and how we should live for him now. Through graphic pictures, we learn that Jesus Christ is coming again, that evil will be judged, and that the dead will be raised to judgment, resulting in eternal life or eternal destruction.

Revelation is one of the most mysterious books of the Bible. For centuries people have debated various aspects of the book—for example, the timing of the rapture of the church, the nature of the millennial reign of Christ, and the timing of Christ's return (before, in the middle of, or after the Great Tribulation). And debates have raged over the identity of the Beast, the number 666, and the Great Prostitute. Unfortunately, these debates have fueled such great controversy that Christians have been divided, and churches have even split over these issues.

Every Christian who approaches this book must realize that if these questions have been debated over centuries, then God probably made them not clear on purpose. Churches and seminaries have made their interpretations of these debated issues part of their doctrinal statements. But they must understand that other Christians who disagree with their positions are doing only that—disagreeing. The positions regarding postmillennialism versus premillennialism do not make a difference as to whether one is a believer or not. The cardinal doctrine is whether a person believes that Christ, the Savior and King, will indeed one day return for his people and whether one has trusted in him as personal Savior. From there, the timing of Christ's return or when the church will be raptured are merely issues for discussion—not fundamental doctrines that affect a person's salvation.

Believers should study Revelation carefully, always realizing that whatever position they eventually take will meet with disagreement from other sincere Christians. Believers must have respect for those who, on the basis of the biblical evidence and their own studies, accept a different position. We must recognize and condemn heresy, teaching that directly contradicts Scripture, such as someone giving a date for Christ's return when Christ has clearly said no one can know the date. But when Scripture is not clear on certain issues, and especially when those issues have been debated throughout church history without agreement, then believers should lovingly accept people who disagree.

Historically, Christians have taken four main approaches to interpret Revelation.

1. One approach is to understand the book as describing the events immediately preceding and following Christ's second coming. Christians who interpret Revelation this way are called “futurists.” These believers insist that the judgments of the seals, trumpets, and bowls (see 5:1–16:21) are future events that will occur at the end of history.

Typically, futurists insist that the key to interpreting Revelation can be found in the description of the sealed scroll, which only the Lamb, Jesus, is worthy to open (5:1-14). Each time the Lamb opens one of the scroll’s seven seals, the earth experiences a cataclysmic event. Thus, futurists believe that the descriptions of famine, war, and devastation in the central chapters of Revelation depict the final days of human history. According to this view, the Beast of Revelation 13 is the Antichrist, who will appear in the end times to deceive people.

2. Many of the Reformers—Luther, Calvin, and others—interpreted Revelation much differently. They understood this mysterious book as a prophetic survey of church history. Joachim of Fiore (1135–1202) was the first person to interpret Revelation this way; he considered that the book prophesies the events of Western history from the early church until his own time. In this approach, called the “historicist” view, each one of the seven churches in Revelation 2–3 represents a certain stage of church history, from the early church to the church of the Middle Ages to, perhaps, even the modern-day church. According to this view, therefore, the Beast of Revelation would represent a specific person or institution in history. The historicist view doesn’t enjoy much favor today because there hasn’t been any agreement on the specific historical events that Revelation describes.
3. Other scholars believe that Revelation simply describes events confined to the apostle John’s day. This is called the “preterist” view (“preterist” means “past action”). According to this perspective, for example, the Beast in Revelation 13 represents the Roman Empire because Revelation’s original readers would have readily identified the Roman Empire as the primary opponent of the church.
4. Another group of interpreters understands Revelation as being primarily “symbolic.” They believe that through symbols Revelation presents timeless truths that were relevant to the original readers and are relevant to readers today. According to the symbolic view, Revelation essentially describes a battle between good and evil that occurs throughout world history. Proponents of the symbolic perspective assert that Revelation’s fundamental message can be understood by everyone—a person born in the Roman Empire in the first century, someone living in New Zealand in the nineteenth century, or someone living in America today. An extreme symbolic approach would spiritualize the entire book, asserting that Revelation predicts no specific historical events. The Beast, according to the symbolic view, would represent the power of all those who oppose Christ and who have opposed him throughout all of world history.

Whenever you hear someone talking about his or her view of Revelation, remember these four basic interpretative approaches. Some preachers and Bible teachers use more than one.

This commentary often presents several interpretations of a specific passage. Yet the basic approach of this commentary is to treat Revelation as a prophetic book, as the book itself claims to be (1:3; 22:7-21). Thus, this commentary will attempt to show how Revelation unveils the future and the end of human history. This commentary, however, will also describe what Revelation would have meant to its original readers in ancient Asia Minor.

In the final analysis, the central idea, on which all four basic interpretations agree, is that Christ will return some time in the future. This return will be a welcome sight to his people, for at that time Christ will defeat evil, judge evildoers, and reward the righteous. As you read Revelation, look beyond the symbols and interpretations to your sovereign God and to your Savior, Jesus Christ. And take hope—his victory is sure!

A QUICK JOURNEY THROUGH REVELATION

Revelation is a complex book that has baffled interpreters for centuries. We can avoid a great deal of confusion by understanding the literary structure of this book. This approach will allow us to understand the individual scenes within the overall structure of Revelation and keep us from getting unnecessarily bogged down in the details of each vision. John gives hints throughout the book to indicate a change of scene, a change of subject, or a flashback to an earlier scene.

John begins by relating the circumstances that led to the writing of this book (1:1-20), then relates special messages given him by Jesus for the seven churches of Asia Minor (2:1–3:22).

Suddenly caught up into heaven, John sees a vision of God Almighty on his throne. All of Christ's followers and the heavenly angels are worshiping God (4:1-11). John watches as God gives a scroll with seven seals to the worthy Lamb, Jesus Christ (5:1-14). The Lamb begins to open the seals one by one. As each seal is opened, a new vision appears.

As the first four seals are opened, riders appear on horses of various colors; war, famine, disease, and death are in their paths (6:1-8). As the fifth seal is opened, John sees those in heaven who have been martyred for their faith in Christ (6:9-11).

A set of contrasting images appears at the opening of the sixth seal. On one side, there is a huge earthquake, stars fall from the sky, and the sky rolls up like a scroll (6:12-17). On the other side, multitudes are before the great throne, worshiping and praising God and the Lamb (7:1-17).

Next, the seventh seal is opened (8:1-5), unveiling a series of God's judgments announced by seven angels with seven trumpets. The first four angels bring hail, fire, a burning mountain, and a falling star, and the sun and the moon are darkened (8:6-13). The fifth trumpet announces the coming of locusts with the power to sting (9:1-12). The sixth trumpet heralds the coming of an army of warriors on horses (9:13-21). In 10:1-11, John is given a little scroll to eat. Following this, John is commanded to measure the temple of God (11:1-2). He sees two witnesses, who proclaim God's judgment on the earth for three and a half years (11:3-14).

Finally, the seventh trumpet sounds, calling the rival forces of good and evil to a decisive battle. On one side is Satan and his forces; on the other side stands Jesus Christ with his forces (11:15-14:5). During this battle God reveals the absolute futility of Satan, who knows his time is short (12:12) and who, though he desires power and wants to rule, can only parody God and Christ. For example, the fatal wound that heals (13:3, 12) is an imitation of the Resurrection, and the mark of the Beast (13:16-18) imitates God's seal (7:3-4). In the midst of this call to battle, John sees three angels announcing the final judgment (14:6-13). Two angels begin to reap this harvest of judgment on the earth (14:14-20). Following on the heels of these two angels are seven more angels, who pour out God's judgment on the earth from seven bowls (15:1-16:21). One of these seven angels reveals to John a vision of a great prostitute called Babylon riding a scarlet beast (17:1-18). After the defeat of Babylon (18:1-24), a great multitude in heaven shouts praise to God for his mighty victory (19:1-10).

The last three and a half chapters of Revelation catalogue the events that complete Christ's victory over the enemy: the judgment of the rebellious nations, the Beast, and the false prophet (19:11-21); Satan's one-thousand-year imprisonment (20:1-10); the final judgment (20:11-15); and the creation of a new earth and a new Jerusalem (21:1-22:6). An angel then gives concluding instructions concerning the visions John has seen and what to do once he has written them all down (22:7-11).

Revelation concludes with the promise of Christ's return, an offer to drink of the water of life that flows through the great street of the new Jerusalem, and a warning to those who read the book (22:12-21). John finishes by praying, "Amen. Come, Lord Jesus" (22:20).

This book, and thus the whole Bible, ends with a message of warning and hope for men and women of every generation. Christ is victorious, and all evil has been conquered. As you read Revelation, marvel at God's grace in the salvation of the saints and his power over the evil forces of Satan, and take hope in the reality of his ultimate victory.

MESSAGE

The main themes of the book of Revelation are: God's Sovereignty, Christ's Return, God's Faithful People, Judgment, and Hope.

God's sovereignty (5:1-14; 11:15-18; 20:1–22:21). The sovereignty of God is a foundational theological truth. It asserts that God totally controls what happens in the world, the universe, and human life. Nothing occurs outside of God's direct or permissive will. Although this truth permeates all of Scripture, it is most clear in Revelation, where the culmination of history, the final judgment of all people, and the vindication of the righteous are vividly pictured. God is sovereign, greater than any power in the universe. God is incomparable, far above and beyond any religion, government, or leader, including Satan. God controls history for the purpose of uniting true believers in loving fellowship with him.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Assaulted with negative news from across the world and in our own communities, we can feel powerless and hopeless. Often it seems as though the forces of evil control life and will triumph. Revelation teaches the opposite. Though Satan's power may temporarily increase, we must not be led astray. God is all-powerful. He is in control and will bring his true family safely into eternal life. Because God cares for us, we can trust him with every aspect of our lives.

Christ's return (19:11-16; 20:4-6; 21:1-7; 22:6-21). When Christ came to earth as a man, he came as a perfect "Lamb," without blemish or spot, fulfilling God's requirement of a perfect sacrifice for sin. When Christ returns, he will come as the triumphant "Lion," the rightful ruler and conqueror. Christ will defeat Satan, settle accounts with all those who have rejected him, and usher his faithful followers into eternity. Because finite humans are limited by time and space, it can seem as though Christ will never return—twenty centuries have passed since his first coming. Yet to God those years are but a flicker as his plan unfolds in his eternal present. The clear message of Revelation is that Christ's coming is sure—he will return. And he could come at any moment. What a triumphant and glorious day that will be!

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. For centuries struggling and suffering Christians have been given hope and strength to endure by having the knowledge that their Savior could return at any time. We know that God's timing is perfect. Thus, Christ will return at just the right moment (Ephesians 1:10). At that time, he will come as King and Judge. Since no one knows when Christ will appear (Matthew 24:36), we must always be ready. This means keeping our faith strong and living as God wants us to live.

God's faithful people (14:1-5; 20:4-6; 21:3-4). Soon after Revelation was written, the church came under tremendous pressure from without and from within. Believers were pressured by the government, with threats of violent persecution, to renounce their faith in Christ and to worship the emperor. At the same time, a number of heresies threatened to negatively influence believers and divide the church. John wrote to encourage believers to resist the demands to worship the Roman emperor and to be devoted only to Christ. Revelation identifies the faithful people and explains how they should live until Christ returns.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Christians today still face pressures to compromise or reject their faith. In many countries persecution is as violent as it was in ancient Rome. In more affluent and civilized areas, believers face more subtle pressure to worship "Caesar." And heresies have never been in short supply. God's message in Revelation is clear: stay focused on Christ and his Word; stay faithful and true to your calling. Regardless of the sources and strength of pressure and persecution, we must be faithful. Victory is sure for those who resist temptation and who make loyalty to Christ their top priority.

Judgment (6:10-17; 11:15-19; 15:1-16:21; 18:1-20:15; 22:10-15). As first-century believers looked at their world, they must have wondered at the seeming triumph of evil. The church was being persecuted, the government was corrupt, and pagan morality was the norm. Revelation clearly shows that God is just; eventually all evildoers will be punished. One day God's anger toward sin will be fully and completely unleashed. At that time Satan will be defeated with all of his agents, and false religion will be destroyed. God will reward the faithful with eternal life, and all who refuse to believe in him will face eternal punishment.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Because human nature is still sinful and because Satan still lives and works in the world, evil and injustice are prevalent. Living as a distinct minority in faith and morality, Christians can become discouraged and feel defeated. But the strong message of Revelation is that evil and injustice will not prevail forever; God's final judgment will put an end to them. We can take hope in this sure promise from God. But we also should spread this truth to others: no one who rejects Christ will escape God's punishment.

Hope (1:3, 7-8; 2:7, 11, 17, 26-29; 3:8-13, 20-22; 4:1-11; 7:9-17; 14:13; 19:1-10; 20:4-6; 21:1-22:7, 22:17-21). Surrounded by enemies, overwhelmed by pain and grief, or confronted by seemingly insurmountable obstacles, a person can lose hope. The first-century believers must have struggled with maintaining a hopeful perspective during those dark days of persecution and depravation. In contrast, Revelation presents the promise that one day God will create a new heaven and a new earth. All believers will live with him forever in perfect peace and security. Regardless of their present troubles, believers can look ahead with hope, trusting in their loving God.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Today people still struggle with discouragement, doubt, and defeat. Depression has become epidemic as men and women feel that they are trapped in hopeless circumstances. Even Christians can lose hope in the midst of trials. But the message of Revelation still rings hope through the night. We know that what God has promised will come true. And each day the Lord's appearing is one day closer. When we have confidence in this truth and in our ultimate destination, we can follow Christ with unwavering dedication, no matter what we must face.

OUTLINE OF REVELATION

I. Letters to the Churches (1:1–3:22)

II. Message for the Church (4:1–22:21)

- A. Worshiping God in heaven
- B. Opening the seven seals
- C. Sounding the seven trumpets
- D. Observing the great conflict
- E. Pouring out the seven plagues
- F. Seizing the final victory
- G. Making all things new

REVELATION 1

PROLOGUE / 1:1-3

The book of Revelation unveils Christ's full identity and God's plan for the end of the world, and it focuses on Jesus Christ, his second coming, his victory over evil, and the establishment of his Kingdom. As you read and study Revelation, don't focus so much on the timetable of the events or the details of John's imagery that you miss the main message—the infinite love, power, and justice of the Lord Jesus Christ.

1:1 The word revelation is the Greek word apokalupsis, from which the word “apocalypse” is derived. A “revelation” exposes what was formerly hidden or secret. The revelation recorded in this book will give believers information that had been formerly veiled but would now be disclosed.

Readers need to understand some characteristics of apocalyptic literature in the Bible. The Bible's apocalyptic sections are revelations from God. Revelation is God's giving his people a peek into the future. Apocalyptic literature emphasizes God's supernatural acts. Revelation highlights God's power by focusing on the end times, when God will interrupt human history and defeat evil once and for all. Apocalyptic literature is symbolic. It attempts to describe supernatural actions with graphic symbols of real events, things, or traits. For example, Christ is described in Revelation 5:6 as having “seven horns and seven eyes.” The number seven represents perfection. A horn symbolizes power. So “seven horns” speak of Jesus' extraordinary power, and “seven eyes” speak of his ability to see all things.

This book is the revelation from Jesus Christ. God gave the revelation of his plan to Jesus Christ (see also John 1:18; 5:19-23; 12:49; 17:8). Jesus Christ, in turn, sent his angel, who revealed it to John (see also 22:16). The angel will explain various scenes to John, acting as a guide. John, God's servant, then passed the message along to the churches—God's other servants. The phrase, the events that will happen soon, means imminence. Today's readers know that nearly two thousand years have passed since the time this was proclaimed. We must remember that God is timeless (2 Peter 3:8). In God's eyes the future is just around the corner, even though it may seem far away to us. No one knows when these events will happen, so believers should live at all times as though Christ will come in the next moment.

According to tradition, John, the author, was the only one of Jesus' original twelve disciples who was still alive at this time (that is, if the date of A.D. 90–95 is accepted; see the Introduction). John wrote the Gospel of John and the letters of 1, 2, and 3 John.

Jesus gave his message to John in a vision, allowing him to see and record certain future events so that they could be an encouragement to all believers. The vision includes many signs and symbols that convey the essence of what is to happen. What John saw, in most cases, was indescribable, so he used illustrations to show what it was like. Readers of this symbolic language don't have to understand every detail—John himself didn't. Instead, we must realize that John's imagery reveals that Christ is indeed the glorious and victorious Lord of all. Some of Revelation's original readers were being severely persecuted because of their faith. The awesome and sometimes frightening pictures of Jesus' ultimate victory over evil were intended to encourage them to persevere.

For information on the four main ways to interpret Revelation, see the Introduction, "Understanding Apocalyptic Literature."

1:2 John saw the vision and then faithfully reported the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ. Revelation, according to John, is God's word—not simply John's narration of what he saw. It is an eternal message. The words of this book describe the promises and actions of God that have come true through Jesus. Revelation, as difficult as it may be to understand, should not be neglected. It should be read and studied, for it is the word of God and the testimony of Christ to all believers, from the first century to today.

1:3 This promise that God blesses the reader and listeners sets John's writing apart from other Jewish apocalyptic literature and points out that these words were inspired by God. This is the first of seven beatitudes in Revelation (see also 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7, 14).

Who is blessed? The one who reads this prophecy to the church. The public reading of Scripture was common in Jewish heritage (see, for example, Nehemiah 8:2-3; Luke 4:16; Acts 13:15). Christians also read Scripture aloud in public because copies of the Gospels and the letters of the apostles were not available to every believer. In addition to the reader, God blesses all who listen to it and obey what it says. "Listen" and "obey" are important terms and major themes of the book. The blessed ones are those who come to church to listen to God's word and then obey it so that it changes their lives (Ephesians 4:13).

Revelation is a book of "prophecy" that is both prediction (foretelling future events) and proclamation (preaching about who God is and what he will do). Prophecy is more than telling the future. Behind the predictions are important principles about God's character and promises. These words will bless the hearers because through them they can get to know God better and be able to trust him more completely.

JOHN'S GREETING TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES / 1:4-8

John began to address the recipients of this letter, a letter that would be sent along the roads through the various cities with the churches to whom John was writing. After this brief greeting comes a doxology of praise to God.

1:4-5a Jesus told John to write to the seven churches that knew and trusted John and had read his earlier letters (see 1:9, 11). These were literal churches in literal cities. The letter was addressed so that it could be read and passed on in a systematic fashion, following the main Roman road clockwise around the province of Asia (now called Turkey).

These were not the only churches in Asia at the time. For example, Troas (Acts 20:5ff), Colosse (Colossians 1:2), and Hierapolis (Colossians 4:13) also had churches. Why did the Lord direct John to write to these seven in particular? It is possible that the number seven, as with the other sevens in the book, signifies completeness. While the seven churches were actual churches, they also represented all churches throughout the ages.

The Trinity—the Father (the one who is, who always was, and who is still to come), the Holy Spirit (the sevenfold Spirit), and the Son (Jesus Christ)—is the source of all truth (John 14:6-17; 1 John 2:27; Revelation 19:11).

All of time is encompassed in the “Father”—he is, was, and will be. This title is used only in Revelation (see also 11:17; 16:5). God is eternally present and therefore able to help his people in any age, in any situation. The “sevenfold Spirit” has been identified by some to mean the seven angelic beings or messengers for the churches (see a further discussion at 1:20). Others have interpreted this to refer to those angels that accompany Christ at his return (Luke 9:26; 1 Timothy 5:21). But the reference to the Trinity here gives more weight to the interpretation that the sevenfold Spirit is the Holy Spirit.

Jesus is seen in all his sovereignty. He is the faithful witness of the truth from God, who sent him to earth to die for sins. He died and was the first to rise from the dead never to die again (see also Colossians 1:18). He is also portrayed as the commander of all the rulers of the world—an all-powerful King, victorious in battle, glorious in peace. When he returns, he will be recognized for who he really is. Then, “at the name of Jesus every knee will bow, in heaven and on earth and under the earth, and every tongue will confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father” (Philippians 2:10-11).

1:5b-6 This doxology concludes the prologue to this book. John was writing to believers experiencing persecution; yet he assured them that Jesus not only continuously cared for and loved them but also had set them free, no matter how they might feel. Jesus had set them free from their sins by shedding his blood, that is, through his death on the cross. Through that blood, he had made his people his kingdom and his priests who serve before God his Father. Israel had been called to be “a kingdom of priests “ (Exodus 19:6). This saying describes Christians as the continuation of the Old Testament people of God—his kingdom and priests (see also Hebrews 13:15; 1 Peter 2:5, 9). Together, believers make up a Kingdom of which Christ is their King; individually they are priests because each has direct access to God because of the sacrifice of Christ on the cross. Their whole purpose, of course, is to serve God.

1:7 The book of Revelation describes that day when he will return to earth. That Jesus will come with the clouds of heaven summarizes the message of Revelation. Jesus’ second coming will be visible and victorious. Everyone will see him arrive (Mark 13:26), and they will know it is Jesus. When Christ returns, he will conquer evil and will judge all people according to their deeds (Revelation 20:11-15). Even those who pierced him will see him, probably referring to the Jews who were responsible for his death (see Acts 2:22-23; 3:14-15). John saw Jesus’ death with his own eyes, and he never forgot the horror of it (see John 19:34-35). However, all people across the ages who have rejected Christ have themselves “pierced” him with their indifference to his sacrifice on their behalf. All the nations of the earth—both Jews and Gentiles—will weep because of him. They will mourn because they know they will be facing God and his judgment and will be destroyed.

1:8 Alpha and Omega are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet. The Lord God is the beginning and the end. God the Father is the eternal Lord and Ruler of the past, present, and future (see also 4:8; Isaiah 44:6; 48:12-15). God is sovereign over history and is in control of everything. The one who is, who always was, and who is still to come is also described in 1:4. The phrase the Almighty One comes out of the Old Testament and conveys military imagery, referring to God as a mighty warrior. The military imagery helped the people in the churches to whom this book was written understand that they had the ultimate Warrior fighting on their side. God rules over all.

VISION OF THE SON OF MAN / 1:9-20

John again gave his name as the author of the letter and described his whereabouts and why he was there. Next he explained his commissioning to write this letter to the churches. Then he described his vision of the exalted Christ, leaving no mistake as to Christ's true identity. The vision has much in common with Isaiah 6 and Ezekiel 1.

1:9 Although John was an apostle and an elder of the church, he described himself as their brother in Christ because he and the persecuted believers were partners in suffering as persecution against believers began to escalate at the end of the century. They were partners in God's coming Kingdom because they were already its citizens. And they were partners in patient endurance as they awaited the arrival of God's coming Kingdom.

John had paid for his faithfulness of preaching the word of God and speaking about Jesus by being exiled to the island of Patmos, a small rocky island about ten miles long and six miles wide in the Aegean Sea, about fifty miles offshore from the city of Ephesus on the Asia Minor seacoast (see map). The Romans used Patmos for banishing political prisoners. Although John was away from the churches and unable to travel, his exile did not stop what God would do through John, nor did it stop God's message from getting to his churches.

1:10-11 On the Lord's Day (Sunday), John was worshiping in the Spirit, which refers to a visionary experience given to John by the Holy Spirit. In this vision John heard a voice that sounded like a trumpet blast. The trumpet heralds the return of Christ (1 Corinthians 15; 1 Thessalonians 4). The voice commanded John to write down what he would see in the visions. John's record then became this book, which he would send to the seven churches. The contents of specific messages to these churches are in chapters 2 and 3.

1:12-14 The seven gold lampstands are the seven churches in Asia to whom this letter is addressed (Revelation 1:11, 20). (See also Zechariah 4:1-10 for his vision of seven lamps.) Jesus, the Son of Man, stands among them. No matter what the churches face, Jesus is in control and protects them with his all-encompassing love and reassuring power. The long robe pictures Jesus as a leader. The gold sash across his chest reveals him as the high priest who goes into God's presence to obtain forgiveness of sin for those who have believed in him. In the first century, wearing a sash, especially across the chest, indicated leadership and authority. Hebrews 2:17 identifies Jesus as the final high priest. His snowy white hair indicates his wisdom and divine nature (see also Daniel 7:9). His blazing eyes symbolize judgment of all evil (see Daniel 10:6) and deep insight, not only over the churches and the believers but over the entire course of history (see also 2:18; 19:12).

1:15 The feet like bronze picture an exalted person with great power (also from Daniel). Bronze usually symbolized the might of Rome—bronze shields and breastplates were used by the Roman army. Again, this is a picture of an all-powerful Victor (see also Ezekiel 1:13, 27; 8:2; and Daniel 10:6). The voice like mighty ocean waves (see also 19:6) evokes the image of a huge waterfall roaring over a high cliff. Thus, the voice is powerful and awesome. When this man speaks with authority, nothing else can be heard.

1:16 In his right hand, Christ holds seven stars, explained in 1:20 as “the angels of the seven churches” to whom this letter is addressed (1:11). That Christ is holding the stars implies his protection of these churches as he walks among them.

There are two swords in Revelation. Chapter 19 has the “great sword.” The sword here is the sharp two-edged sword. This type of sword, invented by the Romans, represents invincible might. The double-edged sword was light and sharp on both edges. These swords gave such a great advantage in hand-to-hand combat that the Roman army was called “the short swords.” It made them virtually invincible. This sword is coming from Jesus’ mouth, symbolizing the power and force of his message. Jesus’ words of judgment are as sharp as swords; he is completely invincible.

This shining brilliance of his face probably describes Christ’s entire being. The same sort of picture is described in the Transfiguration, an event that John himself had witnessed (10:1; Matthew 17:2).

1:17-18 John’s response to the awesome sight of the glorious Son of Man was to fall at his feet as dead. Most likely this was not a trance; rather, it was in response to having seen a spectacular vision. The message given by this glorious figure—Christ—is the same one that had been given to the women at the tomb (Matthew 28:5): “Don’t be afraid!” For those who believe, there is no need to fear. This Christ is the First and the Last—essentially the same as the Alpha and the Omega (see also Isaiah 44:6). Christ is the living one—not a dead idol but alive and always with his people, every moment, in control of all things. He is the same one who was resurrected. He died; that is, he experienced physical death on the cross. But now he is alive forever and ever. Because Jesus rose from the dead, he can promise the same for his people.

Jesus holds the keys of death and the grave, which give him complete control over that domain. Christ alone has absolute authority over people's lives and deaths. He alone can free people from the ultimate enemy, death. Believers need not fear death because Christ holds the keys (see Luke 16:23).

1:19 The command to write down what John had seen is repeated (see also 1:11). The phrase what you have seen is a general statement referring to both the things that are now happening and the things that will happen later. The vision that will unfold in the following chapters will include present and future events intertwined—events that both are and will be. Every future revelation has relevance for the present—the churches to whom this letter was written. The revelation also applies to churches and believers even today, two thousand years later.

1:20 Christ explains that the seven stars are the angels of the seven churches. But just who are the “angels of the seven churches”? Because the Greek word angeloi can mean angels or messengers, some believe that they are angels designated to guard the churches; others believe that they are elders or pastors of the churches. The case for angels as the correct interpretation comes from the fact that every other use of “angels” in Revelation refers to heavenly beings. However, because the seven letters in Revelation 2–3 contain reprimands against the messengers, and angels are not ever considered to be heads of churches, it is doubtful that these angels are heavenly messengers. If these are earthly leaders or messengers, they are accountable to God for the churches they represent.

The seven gold lampstands among which Christ had been standing (1:13) represent the seven churches to whom this letter would be circulated (1:11). The churches may have been facing difficulties and persecution, but they must never forget that Christ was standing among them, totally in control.

REVELATION 2

THE MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH IN EPHEBUS / 2:1-7

The first letter is addressed to the church in Ephesus—the crossroads of civilization—considered to be a city of great political importance. Aquila, Priscilla, and Paul had planted the church in Ephesus (see Acts 19); Timothy had ministered there (1 Timothy 1:3); John, the writer of this letter, was closely associated with the church. The carrier of this letter to the churches would have landed at the port of Ephesus and begun his journey by visiting the church there.

The basic problem with the church in Ephesus is that even though church members had stood fast against evil and false teaching, they had left their love—their basic love for Christ and for one another.

2:1 Ephesus was a center of land and sea trade, for three major land-trade routes converged in the city, and a large port sat on its coast on the Aegean Sea. Along with Alexandria in Egypt and Antioch in Syria, Ephesus was one of the three most influential cities in the eastern part of the Roman Empire. Paul had ministered in Ephesus for three years and had warned the Ephesian believers that false teachers would come and try to draw people away from the faith (see Acts 20:29-31). False teachers did indeed cause problems in the Ephesian church, but the church resisted them, as we can see from Paul's letters to Timothy, who stayed in Ephesus when Paul left for Macedonia. John spent much of his ministry in this city and knew that these believers had resisted false teaching (2:2).

Although John was writing, the words are clearly from Christ, the one who holds the seven stars in his right hand and walks among the seven gold lampstands (1:13, 16). Christ controls the churches. Christ is described differently in every letter, mainly because each description is tied to the problems of the specific church. Ephesus, the mother church of all the other churches, was filled with pride. That Christ held these churches in his hand shows that he was in control over the churches. Ephesus had become a large, proud church, and Christ's message would remind them that he alone is the head of the body of believers.

2:2-3 Christ commended the church at Ephesus for hard work, patient endurance, intolerance of evil people, examining the claims of false apostles, and how they patiently suffered. All of these characteristics show a church busy with good works and suffering willingly for the cause of Christ. The Ephesian believers knew evil when they saw it and did not tolerate it. False teachers had been a problem in the Ephesian church, just as the apostle Paul had anticipated (Acts 20:29-30). The message to the church in Ephesus shows that false teachers had indeed come in among the believers, but Christ commended them for discovering and weeding out the liars.

2:4 Despite the commendations, Christ had something against this church—they did not love Christ or each other as much as they had at first. The Ephesians, though commended for their zeal in protecting the faith, had fallen into caring more about orthodoxy than love.

Every church should have pure faith and root out heresy. But these good efforts should spring from their love for Jesus Christ and for other believers. Both Jesus and John stressed love for one another as an authentic proof of the gospel (John 13:34; 1 John 3:18-19). In the battle to maintain sound teaching and moral and doctrinal purity, it is possible to lose a charitable spirit.

2:5 Paul had once commended the church at Ephesus for its love for God and for others (Ephesians 1:15). But the church had fallen away from that first love. Jesus called this church back to love. They needed to turn back to Christ and work as they did at first—love as they had originally loved, with enthusiasm and devotion.

If they refused to repent, however, Christ said that he would come and remove the church's lampstand from its place, meaning the church would cease to be a church. Just as the seven-branched candlestick in the Temple gave light for the priests to see, the churches were to give light to their surrounding communities. But Jesus warned them that their lights could go out. In fact, Jesus himself would extinguish any light that did not fulfill its purpose. The church had to repent of its sins.

2:6 Christ added a further commendation to this church in Ephesus—he credited them for hating the deeds of the immoral Nicolaitans, which Christ also hated. The Nicolaitans were believers who had compromised their faith in order to enjoy some of the sinful practices of Ephesian society, including idolatry and sexual immorality. The Nicolaitans had amalgamated some Greek, some Christian, and some Jewish practices to form a sort of civil religion. It may have been that they were willing to worship in the imperial cult, worshiping the emperor, justifying it as a civil duty. They were probably advocates of freedom and compromise, but the Ephesian church had taken a strong stand against these heretics.

2:7 Each of the seven letters ends with the exhortation, Anyone who is willing to hear should listen to the Spirit and understand what the Spirit is saying to the churches. The words of the Spirit are the words of Christ. Note that all the letters were to be read to all the churches. Those who “hear” what is read should then “listen to the Spirit” in order to understand what the Spirit is saying and to know what should be done. Those who listen and do what the Spirit leads them to do will be victorious. These who are victorious will remain faithful to Christ no matter what the cost.

Those victorious ones will eat from the tree of life in the paradise of God. The Garden of Eden contained the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil (see Genesis 2:9). Eating from the tree of life brought eternal life with God; eating from the tree of knowledge brought the ability to discern good and evil and, therefore, to choose evil. When Adam and Eve ate from the tree of knowledge, they disobeyed God’s command. So they were excluded from Eden and barred from eating from the tree of life. Eventually, evil will be destroyed, and believers will be brought into a restored paradise. In the new earth, everyone will eat from the tree of life and will live forever (22:2, 19). Eating from the tree of life pictures the gift of eternal life. In paradise God will restore the perfect fellowship that existed in the Garden of Eden before sin entered and ruined the relationship between people and God.

THE MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH IN SMYRNA / 2:8-11

The port city of Smyrna lay thirty-five miles up the coast, north of Ephesus. It also had an excellent harbor on the Aegean Sea and rivaled Ephesus in the export business. This is the only one of the seven cities that is still in existence; its modern name is Izmir. The church in Smyrna was one of the two churches that received no rebukes from Christ.

2:8 Smyrna, like Ephesus, was a proud and beautiful city. Smyrna also had earned the right to be self-governing. It had a large library, stadium, and the largest public theater in Asia. The city had become a center for the cult of emperor worship. Smyrna received permission (over several other cities who requested) to build a temple to the emperor Tiberius in 23 B.C. Under the emperor Domitian (who ruled from A.D. 81 to 96), emperor worship was required for all Roman citizens. Those who refused could receive the death penalty. Once a year, all citizens were required to burn incense on an altar to Caesar, after which they would receive a certificate proving that they had done their civil duty. While this was more an act of political loyalty than a religious act, the citizen had to say, while burning the incense, “Caesar is lord.” Many Christians considered this act blasphemous and refused to do it.

In addition to being a center for the imperial cult, Smyrna also had a large Jewish population that actively opposed the Christians. Thus, the church in this city struggled against two hostile forces: a Gentile population that was loyal to Rome and supported emperor worship and a large Jewish population strongly opposed to Christianity. Persecution and suffering were inevitable in that kind of environment.

The description of Christ given to this small church on the verge of being snuffed out by persecution is that Christ is the First and the Last, who died and is alive (see 1:17-18). Although this church was almost dead due to persecution, Christ was reminding them that he was sovereign and eternal. No matter what they faced, Christ already knew about it; as the “First and the Last,” nothing could take him by surprise. Christ identified himself as the one who died and came back to life again. Even if believers have to suffer to the point of death, Christ, the one who “came to life again,” would raise them to eternal life with him.

2:9 The church in Smyrna was suffering because of persecution, and believers faced poverty even in this wealthy city. This probably refers to material poverty because Christ immediately assured them that despite their poverty, they were rich—referring to their heavenly riches (see James 2:5). These Christians’ poverty may have come from sanctions against them as part of the persecution they faced.

Much of the persecution seems to have been coming from the Jews who, as noted above, were actively opposing Christianity. They may have claimed to have descended from Abraham, but true Jews (God’s people) are those who have accepted Jesus as Messiah and Savior (Galatians 3:29). Because these Jews had rejected the Messiah, they were, in reality, no more than a synagogue of Satan (John 8:31-47). These Jews were serving Satan’s purposes, not God’s, when they gathered to worship, because they hated and persecuted the true people of God, the Christians.

2:10 Christ told the believers in Smyrna, who had already been facing persecution and suffering, that they ought not to be afraid of what they were about to suffer. More was coming, yet they should remember that although the Jews and Roman authorities were carrying out the persecution, behind any actions against them was the Devil himself. Satan would cause some of the believers to be thrown into prison and even be killed. The persecution would continue for ten days—probably symbolizing that although persecution would be intense, it would be relatively short and have a definite beginning and end. God was in complete control. The church was challenged to remain faithful to Christ even when facing death and they would receive the crown of life. Smyrna was famous for its athletic games. Each champion would receive a crown, a victory wreath. In ancient Rome this was the most sought-after prize. To have gained this wreath meant that one had done special acts for Rome and would be considered a patron of the Empire. This can be compared to being knighted in England. In contrast, those who have suffered for their faith will receive “the crown of life” in God’s Kingdom.

2:11 Whoever is victorious—that is, whoever stands strong for the faith despite persecution and suffering—will not be hurt by the second death. The Greek negative is emphatic—they will not in any way be hurt. Believers and unbelievers alike experience physical death. The first death for those in Smyrna might well be martyrdom. But even then they would be victorious because they would not face the second death. All people will be resurrected, but believers will be resurrected to eternal life with God, while unbelievers will be resurrected to be punished with a second death—eternal separation from God (see also 20:14; 21:8, 27; 22:15).

THE MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH IN PERGAMUM / 2:12-17

After leaving Smyrna, a letter carrier traveled along the coast of the Aegean Sea for about forty miles. Then the road turned northeast along the Caicus River. About ten miles inland stood the impressive city of Pergamum, built on a hill one thousand feet above the surrounding countryside, creating a natural fortress. Rivaling Ephesus as the leading city in the region, Pergamum had become the capital of the province of Asia and the center of Asian culture. It was proud of its links with Rome.

The problem in Pergamum was leniency toward those in the church who were compromising their faith with the idol worship and sexual immorality of pagan worship. Compromise can be good and is often needed, but the church must never compromise the basic tenets of the Christian faith.

2:12 Pergamum, a sophisticated city and center of Greek culture and education, boasted a 200,000-volume library that was second only to the famous library in Alexandria in Egypt. According to legend, when Pergamum tried to lure away from Alexandria one of its librarians, the king in Alexandria stopped exporting papyrus to Pergamum. This embargo resulted in Pergamum’s development of what became known as parchment, a writing material made from animal skins. Pergamum was the center of four of the most important gods of the day—Zeus, Athene, Dionysus, and Asclepius. The city's chief god was Asclepius, whose symbol was a serpent and who was considered the god of healing. People came to Pergamum from all over the world to seek healing from this god.

The city was also a center for the imperial cult. While Smyrna had built temples to the emperor, Pergamum was the first city to receive permission to build a temple dedicated to a governing emperor, Augustus, whose temple was built in 29 B.C.

The proconsul of Pergamum had been granted the rare power known as “the right of the sword,” meaning that he could perform executions. To the church in this city, Christ described himself as the one who has a sharp two-edged sword (1:16). Just as the sword was a symbol of Rome's authority and judgment, Jesus' sharp, double-edged sword represents God's ultimate authority and judgment. Only Christ has ultimate power over life and death.

2:13 As the center for four idolatrous cults, Pergamum was called the city of the great throne of Satan. Idolatry is satanic. Surrounded by the worship of idols and of the Roman emperor as god, the church at Pergamum refused to renounce its faith. The believers refused to deny Christ, even after Satan's worshipers had killed one of their members. It was not easy to be a Christian in Pergamum.

2:14-15 Despite commending believers for holding fast to the faith (2:13), Christ had a few complaints against this church in Pergamum. Apparently, some in the church were tolerating those who were teaching or practicing what Christ opposed. Christ described the church as tolerating some believers who were like Balaam, who showed Balak how to trip up the people of Israel. Balaam had done that, in a roundabout way, by influencing some in Israel to worship idols by eating food offered to idols and by committing sexual sin.

The complete story of Balak and Balaam is recorded in Numbers 22–25. In brief, Balak was a king who feared the large number of Israelites traveling through his country, so he hired Balaam, a sorcerer, and told him to pronounce a curse on them. Balaam had refused at first, but an offer of money had changed his mind. Numbers 25:1-3 describes the Israelite men getting involved with pagan women and then worshiping the gods of Moab. While these verses do not mention Balaam, Numbers 31:16 explains that Balaam knew he could undermine Israel's worship and power by sending the Moabite women to entice the men of Israel. Balaam's influence caused great disaster for Israel, and he has earned the station as one who led people astray (see 2 Peter 2:15; Jude 1:11).

The church in Pergamum had stood strong against persecution, but what Satan could not accomplish from without he was trying to do from within—through Balaam-like deceit. Christ rebuked the church for tolerating those who, like Balaam, were undermining people's faith. Apparently some in the church were corrupting others in their attempt to justify idol worship—perhaps by joining in with civic ceremonies where idols were worshiped. Eating food offered to idols probably refers to these people's taking part in pagan feasts. Sexual sin may also be understood as being part of certain pagan festivities.

The church also had some Nicolaitans among them—people who follow the same teaching and commit the same sins as those who were like Balaam. These two groups were essentially the same in their practices. The Nicolaitans are described in 2:6 as those whose actions Christ hates. The believers in Ephesus had recognized the error of these people, but apparently the believers in Pergamum were being deceived by it. The Nicolaitans were Christians who had compromised their faith in order to enjoy the sinful pleasures of their society. But such compromise could only dilute their faith; thus, Christ said it could not be tolerated.

2:16 The church should get rid of those who were attempting to compromise where there could be no compromise. A church who tolerates such people will find that Christ will come suddenly and fight against them with the sword of his mouth. This sword represents God's judgment against rebellious nations (19:15, 21) and all forms of sin. If the church did not repent of its sin and deal with the compromisers, then God would come and do it—and that would be disastrous.

2:17 This closing calls upon readers to listen to the Spirit and understand. Those who are victorious (faithful against compromise) will be given a reward that here includes three symbols: hidden manna, a white stone, and a new name.

Being able to eat of the manna that has been hidden away in heaven suggests spiritual nourishment that faithful believers will receive for keeping their churches doctrinally pure. On the journey toward the promised land, God provided manna from heaven to the Israelites for their physical nourishment (Exodus 16:13-18). The hidden manna symbolizes the promises and blessings that will come with the arrival of the Messiah. Jesus, the bread of life (John 6:51), provides spiritual nourishment that satisfies our deepest hunger. Those who were refusing to revel in the pagan feasts of Pergamum were promised the manna that would satisfy hunger and bring blessing.

It is unclear what the white stone represents or what the new name on each stone will be. Because these stones seem to relate to the hidden manna, they may be symbols of the believer's eternal nourishment, or eternal life. Small stones served many purposes in ancient times. Some were given to the poor to help them obtain food, like food stamps. Some were used as invitations to a banquet. The invited person would bring along the stone in order to be admitted. Each stone would have an invited person's name on it. For those who refused to go to the pagan banquets, a place was reserved at the Messiah's banquet in heaven. The stones may be significant because each will bear the new name of every person who truly believes in Christ. Alternately, the new name may be Christ's name as it will be fully revealed (19:12). Or perhaps, because a person's name represented his or her character, it may be that the new name signifies the believer's transformed life and character because of Christ's saving work. The new name may be the evidence that a person has been accepted by God and declared worthy to receive eternal life. In any case, we know that God will give believers new names and new hearts.

THE MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH IN THYATIRA / 2:18-29

A letter carrier, upon leaving Pergamum, would travel southeast about forty miles, over a range of small hills, and finally into the fertile plain of Lycus. There he would find Thyatira, a city known for its manufacturing. The problem in Thyatira was a woman, called Jezebel, who was teaching compromise with the pagan world. Christ condemned such teaching. There can be no compromise with evil. Believers must be discerning in order to see evil for what it is.

2:18 Thyatira was a working person's town, a center for manufacturing. The city was filled with many trade guilds for commerce such as cloth making, dyeing, leatherworking, bronzeworking, and pottery making. Lydia, Paul's first convert in Philippi, was a merchant from Thyatira (Acts 16:14). The city was not important as a center for any temples to particular gods, although Apollo was worshiped as a guardian of the city. This was combined with the required worship of the emperor, considered an incarnation of Apollo and thus a son of Zeus himself. Besides Apollo, each guild appears to have had its own patron deity with its own festivals.

Christ's description of himself as the speaker to this church is that he is the Son of God. This sets him against Apollo and the emperor, who were said to be sons of the chief god, Zeus. This title is used nowhere else in Revelation. This Son of God has eyes like flames of fire and feet like polished bronze (see 1:14-15; see also Daniel 10:6). The blazing eyes indicate the penetrating power of his vision; the feet of bronze indicate strength for executing judgment.

2:19 The believers in Thyatira were commended for their good deeds. Christ sees all good deeds. He knew of the believers' love for one another (love that the Ephesian church had lost—2:4-5), their faith, their service, and their patient endurance. Christ was pleased to see their constant improvement in all these things.

2:20 Thyatira had the opposite problem that Ephesus had. Whereas the Ephesian church had been good at dealing with false teachers but had lacked love, the church in Thyatira had lots of love but had become tolerant of false teachers. And, as was happening in Pergamum, the church in Thyatira was tolerating false teaching that was attempting to compromise with the pagan society.

In this case, the problem was Jezebel, who calls herself a prophet, a woman from among the believers, who claimed to have the gift of prophecy. She may indeed have had unusual gifts, but she was using her influence to teach positions that were contrary to God's word, misleading the believers. Like Balaam, she was leading the people into worship of idols and sexual sin (2:14-15), probably by teaching that immorality was not a serious matter for believers. Her name may have been Jezebel, or John may have used the name Jezebel to symbolize the kind of evil she was promoting. Jezebel, a pagan Philistine queen of Israel, was considered the most evil woman who ever lived. She had led Israel's king, Ahab, into Baal worship and eventually had spread that idolatry throughout all of Israel (see 1 Kings 16:31-33; 19:1-2; 21:1-15; 2 Kings 9:7-10, 30-37). "Jezebel" was being tolerated in the Thyatiran church—perhaps her manner was so manipulative and persuasive that many did not notice, or perhaps no one realized the severe danger into which she was placing the entire church.

Most of the people in the city were tradesmen, so they belonged to various guilds. These guilds (such as potters, tentmakers, etc.) each had an area in the city and a guild hall, which functioned as a center for the guild's religious and civic activities. Usually the guild would hold a banquet at the hall once a week, and these banquets would often be centered on idolatry—featuring meat sacrificed to idols and, most likely, some form of sexual license as part of the revelry. Jezebel was probably encouraging the believers, mostly tradespeople themselves, to continue to take part in their guilds' activities as their civic duty. A refusal to join the guilds and take part in their activities would mean certain economic hardship. Jezebel suggested a way of compromise. Christ was pleased neither with this woman's teaching nor with the fact that the church tolerated her.

2:21-22 God in his mercy had given Jezebel time to repent of her wicked ways, but she would not turn away from her immorality. Consequently, God was going to punish her with sickness and suffering. The reference to those who commit adultery with her may refer to both involvement in sexual immorality and in idolatry by way of her teaching. Those involved would also be punished unless they turned away from all their evil deeds.

2:23 The phrase I will strike her children dead most likely refers to Jezebel's followers, her spiritual "children," those whom she had convinced to compromise with the pagan world. God wanted the church to deal with Jezebel. This judgment would be an example so that all the churches would know that God can see the thoughts and intentions of every person. No matter how a person appears on the outside, God alone knows what is going on in that person's heart. No one can hide from Christ; he knows what is in every person's heart and mind. Those who work against Christ will be found out and will receive whatever they deserve.

2:24-25 Many in the church in Thyatira had not followed Jezebel and had seen through her deception. After the church would repent and get rid of Jezebel and her false teaching, Christ would not place any other responsibilities on them other than simply to hold tightly to what they had until his return. All they needed was their pure faith, not the depths of Satan that Jezebel had been teaching.

This teaching of deeper truths probably involved so-called secret insights that were guaranteed to promote deeper spiritual life. Jezebel may have considered her insights to be deeper knowledge of God, but Christ explained that these "truths" were really the teachings of Satan. Christ condemned her teaching.

2:26-27 Christ says that those who are victorious (over Jezebel, etc.) and who obey to the very end will rule over Christ's enemies and reign with him as he judges evil. The promised authority over all the nations fulfills Psalm 2, a messianic psalm describing how God will hand the nations of the world over to Christ (Psalm 2:8-9). Christ applies this psalm to the readers by showing that the future reign of the Messiah will be shared with those who remain faithful (see 1:6; 3:21; 20:6; 1 Corinthians 6:2).

The iron rod and smashed clay pots symbolize total judgment (see Isaiah 30:12-14; Jeremiah 19:11). This warning was being given to the cults. Believers dare not take a light view of heresy, because heresy will destroy people for eternity. Those who stay true, however, will rule with Christ. This promise must have been a great encouragement to the believers in Thyatira who were facing difficulties because of their faith in Christ.

2:28 Those who are victorious in Thyatira were promised the same authority that Christ had received from the Father; they would also receive the morning star. Christ is called the morning star in 2:28; 22:16; and 2 Peter 1:19. A morning star appears just before dawn, when the night is coldest and darkest. When the world is at its bleakest point, Christ will burst onto the scene, exposing evil with his light of truth and bringing his promised reward. The morning star may also picture the authority given to the saints because of their faithfulness (see Numbers 24:17).

2:29 The conclusion that marks each of these messages to the churches implores everyone to listen and understand what the Spirit is saying to the churches. All these letters would be read to all the churches. The message included in each letter was for more than just the church to whom it had been written. The others churches should listen and hear, as should churches of the present day. We, too, are called to listen and understand what the Spirit is saying to us.

REVELATION 3

THE MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH IN SARDIS / 3:1-6

The letter carrier continued south from Thyatira for about thirty miles to reach the city of Sardis. The problem in this church was not heresy but spiritual death. Despite its reputation for being active, Sardis was infested with sin. The church's deeds were evil, and its clothes were soiled. The Spirit had no words of commendation for this church that looked so good on the outside but was so corrupt on the inside.

3:1 The wealthy city of Sardis had been one of the most powerful cities in the ancient world due to heavy trade among the Aegean islands. Gold and silver coins were first minted at Sardis. The city also claimed to have discovered the art of dyeing wool. Sardis was also known for its impressive necropolis, or cemetery, with hundreds of burial mounds. Sardis had declined, however, by the time of the Roman Empire. Sardis had requested the honor of building a temple to Caesar, but they were refused, and the honor went to Smyrna instead. The wealth of the city eventually led to moral decadence. The city had become lethargic, its past splendor a decaying memory.

Christ had no words of commendation for this church. It seems to have been untroubled by heresy from within or persecution from without. Yet this church had compromised with its pagan surroundings.

Christ described himself as the one who has the sevenfold Spirit of God and the seven stars (see 1:4, 16). The “sevenfold Spirit of God” is another name for the Holy Spirit. The seven stars are the messengers, or leaders, of the churches (see 2:1). Knowing this church's deeds, Christ had no good words to say. The believers may have had a reputation for being alive, but they were dead. Like the city itself, the church in Sardis may have been trying to live on past glory. They had compromised with the surrounding society to the point that they had become lethargic. They were as good as asleep, so Jesus told them to wake up and repent.

3:2 The following verses record five commands focusing on watchfulness. The city had been sacked twice because the watchmen on the walls had not seen the enemies scaling the cliffs. Thinking that they were impregnable on the mountaintop led to a deadly complacency. What had happened to the city was happening to the church, and it needed to wake up. The situation was not completely hopeless—if they caught themselves in time, they could strengthen what little remains even though it, too, was at the point of death.

Christ knew all their deeds, and condemned them as far from right in the sight of God. The church may have looked impressive from the outside, but there was no spiritual motivation or power behind its deeds. In letters to the other churches, Christ commended deeds of love, faithfulness, obedience, and perseverance. Sardis, however, had none of these qualities.

3:3 Christ commanded the church at Sardis to obey the Christian truth they had believed at first about Christ. They needed to return to the apostolic teaching that had changed their lives and once again make it their central focus. These believers had slipped away from that teaching into compromise with the world. If they refused, Christ would come unexpected as a thief, as unexpected as the soldiers who had climbed the walls to capture the city. The soldiers had brought destruction; Christ would bring punishment, giving them what they deserved. In this context, the phrase refers not to the Second Coming (1 Thessalonians 5:2; 2 Peter 3:10) but to judgment.

3:4-5 Not every believer in Sardis was being condemned for complacency and compromise with the world. Christ pointed out that some had not soiled their garments with evil deeds. These believers were being faithful. It must have been encouraging to those few who had been attempting to live for Christ in this dead church that Christ was commending them as worthy of his name. Christ promises a threefold reward for these faithful few.

To be clothed in white means to be set apart for God, cleansed from sin, and made morally and spiritually pure. Revelation mentions white robes several times. (3:18; 4:4; 6:11; 7:9, 13; 19:14). The white of these garments symbolizes the purity that comes when one has been “washed” in Christ’s blood. Only those who have allowed Christ to cleanse them from their sins and clothe them in white will be able to reign with him (2:27).

The Book of Life refers to the heavenly registry of those who have accepted salvation in Christ. This expression appears elsewhere in the Bible. The picture of God’s “book” first appears in Exodus 32:32-33. Also, the psalmist had cried out against his enemies, “Erase their names from the Book of Life; don’t let them be counted among the righteous” (Psalm 69:28). Daniel had prophesied, “At that time every one of your people whose name is written in the book will be rescued” (Daniel 12:1). This “book” symbolizes God’s knowledge of who belongs to him. At that time cities had registry books, so having one’s name removed meant losing citizenship. A city would also erase a person’s name from the registry when he or she died. For the citizens of heaven, however, death is not a cause for one's name to be removed; instead, it is the way of entrance.

Some have suggested that Christ's statement that he will "never erase" certain names leaves open the possibility that he might erase some name, and may imply that people can lose their salvation. In other words, can a name be written in the book and then later erased? It would be shaky to base one's theology of salvation on this symbol, so it is best to take Christ's statement at face value. Those who remain faithful to him are promised future honor and eternal life—they are guaranteed citizenship in heaven.

Christ will announce to the hosts of heaven that the believers belong to him. Christ had stated, "If anyone acknowledges me publicly here on earth, I will openly acknowledge that person before my Father in heaven" (Matthew 10:32). Believers can have no greater reward than to stand in heaven with Christ and have him announce, "They are mine."

3:6 Again Christ emphasizes the importance for the readers of Revelation to listen and understand. The message in this letter is also for you.

THE MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA / 3:7-13

About twenty-five miles southeast of Sardis on a high plateau sat the city of Philadelphia. The city was also about one hundred miles due east of Smyrna (another city on the letter carrier's route). Christ had no words of rebuke for this church. Though small and struggling, the church in Philadelphia had stayed true to Christ, and he told them simply to hold on to what they had.

3:7 Philadelphia had been founded by the citizens of Pergamum in a frontier area as a gateway to the central plateau of Asia Minor. In Philadelphia merged trade routes leading to Mysia, Lydia, and Phrygia. Rome's imperial postal route also went through Philadelphia, earning the city the name Gateway to the East. Plains to the north were suitable for growing grapes, so Philadelphia's economy was based on agriculture and industry. The earthquake of ^{A.D.}17 that had destroyed Sardis had also been particularly devastating to Philadelphia because the city was near a fault line, and it had suffered many aftershocks. This kept the people worried, causing most of them to live outside the city limits.

Philadelphia was a small church in a difficult area with no prestige and no wealth, discouraged because it hadn't grown. But Christ had no words of rebuke for this small, seemingly insignificant church, and he described himself to the church in Philadelphia as the one who is holy and true. This title was a familiar title for God (see Isaiah 40:25; Habakkuk 3:3; Mark 1:24; John 6:69).

For Christ to hold the key of David means that he has the authority to open the door to his future Kingdom. This alludes to an event recorded in Isaiah 22:15-25 when the official position of secretary of state in Judah was taken from Shebna and given to Eliakim. God through Isaiah said to Eliakim: “I will give him the key to the house of David—the highest position in the royal court. He will open doors, and no one will be able to shut them; he will close doors, and no one will be able to open them” (Isaiah 22:22). Christ holds absolute power and authority over entrance into his future Kingdom. After the door is opened, no one can shut it—salvation is assured. Once it is shut, no one can open it—judgment is certain.

3:8 The church may have been small (you have little strength) and may have had little impact upon the city, but it had obeyed and had not denied God. They had been faithful in a difficult area. The phrase, I have opened a door for you that no one can shut, may mean that the church had a prime location for missionary activity—they had an open door that no one could shut. The meaning, however, may refer to the Jewish believers who had been excommunicated from the synagogue for their faith in Christ (see 3:9). While the door to the synagogue may have been closed to them, Christ had opened the door to eternal life. No one could keep them out if they trusted in Christ.

3:9 Apparently there was significant conflict between the Christians and the Jews in Philadelphia. As in the letter to the church in Smyrna (2:9), Christ referred to those who called themselves Jews but who were really liars and those who belong to Satan. These people, descended from Abraham and Jews by birth, vehemently opposed and persecuted the Christians for their belief that Jesus was the Messiah. Because of their opposition, Christ considered them as belonging to Satan. True Jews (God’s people) have accepted Jesus as Messiah and Savior (see Romans 2:28-29; Galatians 3:29; 6:16). These Jews who had rejected the Messiah truly belonged to Satan, not to God. They had shut the Christians out of their synagogues, but Christ says that he will force these people to come and bow down at the feet of his faithful people. Then they will acknowledge that the Christians are indeed the ones whom Christ loves. At Christ’s return, true believers will be vindicated.

3:10 The believers had endured patiently, as Christ had commanded, so Christ promised to protect them from the great time of testing that will come upon the whole world to test those who belong to this world. Some believe that this protection from “the great time of testing” means there will be a future time of great tribulation from which true believers will be spared. This is a key verse for those who subscribe to the pre-Tribulation-Rapture theory—that believers will be kept from this time of testing because they will not be on the earth then, having been taken to heaven in what is called the “Rapture” (based on 1 Corinthians 15:51-53; 1 Thessalonians 4:15-17). Others believe that the verse refers to times of great distress in general, the church’s suffering through the ages. Others interpret the protection to mean that the church will go through the time of tribulation and that God will keep them strong during it, providing spiritual protection from the forces of evil (7:3). The verb “protect” is the same Greek verb in the Lord’s prayer (“Deliver us from the evil one,” Matthew 6:13). As Jesus said before his death, “I’m not asking you to take them out of the world, but to keep them safe from the evil one” (John 17:15).

This “great time of testing” is also described as the Great Tribulation or Day of the Lord, mentioned also in Daniel 12:2; Mark 13:19; and 2 Thessalonians 2:1-12. All the judgments recorded in the remainder of the book of Revelation take place during this time of tribulation. While believers may have to face difficulty and suffering, they will certainly be protected from God’s wrath and judgment.

3:11 For the churches in Ephesus (2:5), Pergamum (2:16), and Sardis (3:3), Christ’s coming would be a time for them to fear if they did not repent, for he would come as their judge. To the church in Philadelphia, however, Christ’s words I am coming quickly would not be threatening. Rather, they would be a promise to the believers of his imminent return. The word “quickly” should be taken as “soon” or “without warning” (see 1:1, 3). In the meantime, they should hold on to what they have, referring to obedience and refusal to deny Christ (3:8). Their reward would be a crown—referring to the wreath awarded to winners of athletic contests (see 1 Corinthians 9:25; 2 Timothy 4:8). Philadelphia was known for its games and festivals, so the picture of the eternal crown awaiting believers was especially meaningful (see also 2:10).

3:12 The believers who are victorious and remain faithful to the end receive the promise to become pillars in the Temple of God. The word “pillars” symbolizes permanence and stability. Philadelphia was constantly threatened by earthquakes. Often experiencing tremors, the people would evacuate the city and stay in temporary dwellings in the rural areas. Sometimes the pillars would be the only part of a building left standing after an earthquake. This permanence is further stressed in the next phrase, they will never have to leave it.

Christ also gives these victorious believers three further promises. He will write God’s name on them, they will be citizens in the new Jerusalem, and they will have Christ's new name inscribed upon them. This "new name" of Christ has not been revealed, but those who are victorious and persevere will have this new name inscribed upon them. For more on the new Jerusalem, see 21:2.

This threefold promise pictures believers belonging to God, having citizenship in heaven, and having a special relationship with Christ. The new Jerusalem is the future dwelling of the people of God (21:2). They will be citizens in God's future Kingdom. Everything will be new, pure, and secure.

3:13 This closing is the same as for the letters to the other churches: all should listen to the Spirit and understand what is being said.

THE MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH IN LAODICEA / 3:14-22

At the end of the route was Laodicea, about forty-five miles southeast of Philadelphia. The problem in this church was self-sufficiency, which caused believers to forget their need of pure love and faith in the Savior.

3:14 Laodicea was the wealthiest of the seven cities. The city was known for its banks, its manufacture of a rare black wool, and a medical school that produced eye salve. Laodicea lay at the juncture of two major trade routes between Rome and the Orient. The main road from Ephesus on the coast into Asia ran through Laodicea, as did the route from the capital of the province in Pergamum to the Mediterranean coast. The city had a poor water supply. A six-mile long aqueduct brought water to the city from the south, so by the time it reached the city, the water was lukewarm. The city was a center for the imperial cult as well as for the worship of Asclepius (god of healing) and Zeus (chief of the gods). The city also had a fairly large Jewish population.

The church may have been founded by Epaphras (see Colossians 4:12). It is not known whether Paul ever visited the city, although he did write them a letter, and the letter to the Colossians was read by the Laodicians (Colossians 4:16).

To this church, Christ is described as the Amen—the faithful and true witness. The word "amen" signals an acknowledgment of something true and binding. Christ was true and faithful, but the Laodiceans were not. They were rich and powerful, but they were not "faithful and true."

3:15-16 This allusion to the Laodicean water supply is a fitting metaphor for the activities of this church. Laodicea had always had a problem with its water supply. The city of Hierapolis, to the northwest, was famous for its hot mineral springs. An aqueduct had been built to bring water to the city from the hot springs. But by the time the water reached the city, it was neither hot nor refreshingly cool—only lukewarm and filled with minerals (impure), so it tasted terrible. According to Christ, these believers were neither hot nor cold; instead, they were merely lukewarm, as bland as the tepid water that came into the city.

Many have thought that this cold and hot refers to spirituality—and that Christ would rather have “cold” people (without faith at all, or without any sort of growth) than “lukewarm” believers (who believe some). They take the word “cold” to be negative and “hot” to be positive, with “lukewarm” in between. Instead, both “cold” and “hot” should be taken as positive. Christ wished that the church had cold, refreshing purity or hot, therapeutic value, but it had neither.

3:17 Laodicea was a wealthy city, and apparently the church was also a wealthy church. It is unclear whether the Laodiceans were claiming spiritual or material wealth. They may have been materially rich and assuming that riches were a sign of God’s blessing on them. With their wealth came an attitude of self-sufficiency—feeling that they did not need a thing. They were materially secure and felt spiritually safe—with no need for further growth. Unfortunately, that attitude made them blind to their own true condition—wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked. Contrast this with the church in Smyrna; they were poor, but Christ called them rich (2:9). The Laodicean believers may have been wealthy, but spiritually they were impoverished. While the city prided itself on extreme financial wealth, a productive textile industry, and the special healing eye salve, the church’s true spiritual condition left it poor, naked, and blind (see 3:18).

3:18 Laodicea was known for its great wealth, but Christ told the Laodiceans to buy their gold from him; then they would have real spiritual treasures (see 1 Timothy 6). They had fool’s gold in their bank accounts, gold from this world with no spiritual or eternal value. Only with Christ’s gold would they be rich.

The city was proud of its cloth and dyeing industries. They had developed a black wool that had become famous all over the Roman Empire and was bringing huge prices. Although they had wealth in their clothing, they were naked before God. They were self-centered. But Christ told them to purchase white garments (his righteousness) from him so they would not be shamed by their nakedness. Laodicea prided itself on a precious eye salve that healed many eye problems, but its people were spiritually blind. Christ told them to get ointment from him to heal their eyes so they could see the truth (John 9:39). Christ was showing the Laodiceans that true value is not in material possessions but in a right relationship with God. Their possessions and achievements were valueless compared with the everlasting future of Christ’s Kingdom.

3:19 There was a second chance for this church; Christ offered them the opportunity to repent. His correction and discipline would come because of his love for the church (Proverbs 3:12). Christ will spit out those who disobey (3:16), but he will discipline those he loves. Because of such mercy, believers should willingly repent, realizing their need for Christ in every part of their lives and ministry. Then they will be effective for him.

3:20 The Laodicean church was complacent and rich. They felt self-satisfied, but they didn't have Christ's presence among them. Christ knocked at the door of their hearts, but they were so busy enjoying worldly pleasures that they didn't notice him trying to enter. The pleasures of this world—money, security, material possessions—can be dangerous because their temporary satisfaction can make people—even believers—indifferent to God's offer of lasting satisfaction.

Many have taken this verse as a help in evangelism, picturing Christ wanting to enter an individual's heart. The context is actually Christ speaking to an entire church. The people in the church in Laodicea needed to accept Christ for the first time, for some of them had never made that commitment. Others needed to return to wholehearted faith in him. Christ is knocking on their door, desiring that the Laodicean church remember its need for him and open the door. He would come in and share a meal with the believers, picturing table fellowship. In Oriental fashion, this "eating" referred to the main meal of the day in which intimate friends would share together. Such a meal portrays the kind of fellowship that will exist in the coming Kingdom of the Messiah (19:9; Isaiah 25:6-8; Luke 22:30). The church needed to repent of its self-sufficiency and compromise and return to Christ.

3:21 This promise that everyone who is victorious will sit with Christ on his throne refers to the heavenly Kingdom (see also 1:6, 9; 2:26-27). Believers' reign with Christ is mentioned in several places in Scripture (see, for example, Matthew 19:28; Luke 22:28-30; Romans 8:17; 2 Timothy 2:12). This promise is certain because Christ won that right for believers through his own victory on the cross. Victorious over sin and death when he rose again, he sat with his Father on his throne (see Mark 16:19).

3:22 At the end of each message to these churches, believers were urged to listen and take to heart what had been written to them. Although a different message was addressed to each church, all the messages contain warnings and principles for everyone. Which letter speaks most directly to your church? Which has the greatest bearing on your own spiritual condition at this time?

How will you respond?

REVELATION 4

WORSHIPING GOD IN HEAVEN / 4:1-11

The book now shifts from the seven churches in Asia to the future of the worldwide church. John saw the course of coming events similar to the way Daniel and Ezekiel had seen them. Many of these passages contain clear spiritual teachings, but others seem beyond our ability to understand. The clear teaching of this book is that God will defeat all evil in the end. Meanwhile, we must live in obedience to Jesus Christ, the coming Conqueror and Judge.

Revelation 4–5 provide glimpses into Christ’s glory. Chapter 4 is John’s vision into the throne room of heaven. God is on the throne, orchestrating all the events that John recorded. The world is under his control, and he will carry out his plans as Christ initiates the final battle with the forces of evil.

4:1 After writing the letters to the seven churches, John looked and saw a door standing open in heaven (see also Ezekiel 1:1). It is God who opens the door, so this is God revealing these visions to John and to us. This first voice that sounded like a trumpet was the voice of Christ (see 1:10-11). The voice spoke again and told John to “come up here.” From there, Christ would show John what must happen—that is, after the time of the letters to the churches in chapters 2 and 3. These would be visions of the end of the world and the beginning of Christ’s Kingdom.

Some who subscribe to the pre-Tribulation theory see a veiled reference to the rapture of the church in the words of Christ to “come up.” But the text indicates that John alone was commanded to be transported in the Spirit to heaven. The Rapture is not mentioned specifically in the book of Revelation. For more on the Rapture, see 1 Thessalonians 4:13-17.

4:2-3 Four times in the book of Revelation, John wrote that he was in the Spirit (1:10; 4:2; 17:3; 21:10). This expression means that the Holy Spirit was giving him a vision—showing him situations and events that he could not have seen with mere human eyesight. All true prophecy comes from God through the Holy Spirit (1:10; 2 Peter 1:20-21).

John saw a throne in heaven and someone sitting on it (compare with 1 Kings 22:19; Isaiah 6:1; Ezekiel 1:1). The throne of God is mentioned forty times in the book of Revelation. The throne symbolizes God’s absolute authority. For the first-century readers, the most powerful throne in the world would have been Caesar’s throne. Caesar sat on the most glorious throne in the world and had control of one-half of the gross national product of the Roman Empire. His glory and wealth, however, were nothing compared to God's. God's throne was as brilliant as gemstones. Jasper and carnelian were semiprecious stones. Caesar's pomp and splendor were nothing compared to the glow of an emerald that circled God's throne like a rainbow. The stones symbolize great wealth—God owns all the riches of the entire world. These gemstones were the most pure elements known at that time—and God transcends even these. John did not describe this person on the throne, other than to mention the brilliant light around him. God alone is sovereign; Caesar is not a god. Only God is God.

4:4 Surrounding God's throne were twenty-four thrones with twenty-four elders sitting on them. John did not identify these twenty-four elders. Evidently, the worship they were providing was more significant than who they were. Scholars have proposed several possibilities for the identity of these twenty-four elders:

- Because there were twelve tribes of Israel in the Old Testament and twelve apostles in the New Testament, the twenty-four elders (twelve plus twelve) in this vision represent all the redeemed of God for all time (both before and after Christ's death and resurrection). They symbolize all those—both Jews and Gentiles—who are now part of God's family. The twenty-four elders show us that all the redeemed of the Lord are worshiping him.
- The twenty-four elders are the heavenly counterpart of the twenty-four priestly ranks who served the Temple (1 Chronicles 23:6; 24:7-18).
- Most likely, the elders are an angelic group providing this worship, and the reference to twenty-four remains speculative. Their continuous praise supports this view, and the fact that they serve with, but are distinguished from, the four living creatures (4:11; 5:9-10; 11:17-18; 19:4). The twenty-four elders are beings who live in heaven and worship God at his throne (see also 14:3). Though they are crowned and dressed in white, they clearly do not represent the church. These leaders sing of human believers, not about themselves (5:9). In view of their actions, such as worshiping and offering bowls of incense, they seem to be a special order of angels.

4:5 In Revelation, lightning and thunder are associated with significant events in heaven. Lightning and thunder had filled the sky at Mount Sinai when God had given the people his laws (Exodus 19:16). The Old Testament often uses such imagery to reflect God's power and majesty (see Psalm 77:18). In Revelation, thunder and lightning always form part of the scene in God's throne room and highlight a significant coming event—for example, they mark the seventh seal (8:5), the seventh trumpet (11:19), and the seventh bowl (16:18).

The seven lampstands represent the Holy Spirit (see also comments on 1:4 and Ezekiel 1:13; Zechariah 4:2-6). The seven spirits of God is another name for the Holy Spirit.

4:6 Glass was very rare in New Testament times, and crystal-clear glass was virtually impossible to find. The sea of glass serves as the magnificent floor of God's throne room and highlights both the magnificence and holiness of God. It is probably not a literal "sea"; rather, it is a metaphor for the scene. No earthly ruler can compare with the awesomeness of God. See also Job 37:18 and Ezekiel 1:22.

The four living beings are angelic beings of high order, serving as part of the worship and government in heaven (see Isaiah 6:1-4; Ezekiel 1:5-25). Isaiah 6:2 refers to these beings as "seraphim." The seraphim surround God's throne, lead others in worship, and proclaim God's holiness. The eyes picture knowledge and alertness. They see and scrutinize everything. These are powerful figures, as noted by the wings (4:8). These four living beings also appear throughout Revelation (see also 5:6, 8, 14; 6:1; 7:11; 14:3; 15:7; 19:4).

4:7 The Old Testament prophet Ezekiel saw four similar beings in one of his visions (Ezekiel 1:5-10; 10:14). In his vision, however, each had four faces. In John's vision, each has only one face. In Ezekiel's vision, God called Ezekiel to be a prophet. God showed Ezekiel that the coming destruction of Jerusalem was punishment for Judah's sins. Ezekiel prophesied during the time when the Babylonians sacked Jerusalem. In John's vision, the living beings will show to John the final destruction of the world as punishment for sin. The appearance of these creatures symbolizes the highest expression of God's attributes. The animal-like appearances of these four creatures include majesty and power (the lion), faithfulness (the ox), intelligence (the human), and sovereignty (the eagle).

4:8 A further description of these four living beings indicates that each had six wings, indicating power and swiftness (see Isaiah 6:2). The eyes all around are mentioned again (4:6) and indicate complete knowledge—that is, they could perceive and understand everything that was happening. Their continuous praises to God reveal constant worship.

The four living beings sing about God's holiness. The repetition three times of the word holy means ultimate holiness (see also Isaiah 6:3). Lord God Almighty pictures the ultimate, divine Warrior (see commentary on 1:8).

Churches of all ages facing persecution gain great comfort knowing that no matter what happens on earth, God is almighty. Those who are victorious will one day join in praise with the angels. The phrase who always was, who is, and who is still to come describes God's transcendence over time—he is eternal (see also commentary on 1:4).

4:9-10a The actions of these living beings picture complete worship and submission to God. The one who lives forever and ever emphasizes God's eternality (see 5:14; 10:6; 15:7). God is far more worthy of worship than any person because he lives forever (see Psalms 45:6; 102:27). His throne symbolizes his power and authority (see also 4:2-3). As the living beings praise God, the twenty-four elders fall down and worship. That they "fall down" refers to lying prostrate in a position of submission and adoration. Their worship means giving God all glory and honor and thanks.

4:10b-11 These verses are the second hymn sung in Revelation (see 4:8), a hymn of praise to God for his work in creation. The point of this chapter is summed up in this verse: All creatures in heaven and earth will praise and honor God because he is the Creator and Sustainer of everything. No king or emperor can make such a claim. No Roman emperor could ever be acknowledged for creating heaven and earth. This role belongs to God alone (14:7; 21:5; Romans 8:18-25).

The phrase you are worthy was used to herald the entrance of an emperor when he came in his triumphal procession. Later, the emperor Domitian added the phrase "our Lord and God" as a reference to himself, thereby promoting the cult of emperor worship. Christians, however, are to acknowledge only one Lord and God.

Earthly honor and power is to be laid before the throne, just as the living beings lay their crowns before the throne. This demonstrates that all authority and honor belong to God. He delegates his authority to others, but it belongs to him.

REVELATION 5

THE LAMB OPENS THE SCROLL / 5:1-14

Revelation 5 continues the glimpse into heaven begun in chapter 4. The scene in Revelation 5 shows that only the Lamb, Jesus Christ, is worthy to open the scroll, which reveals the events of future history. Jesus, not Satan, holds the future. Jesus Christ is in control; he alone is worthy to set into motion the events of the last days of history. Verses 9, 12, and 13 contain three hymns. The first two worship the Lamb; the third one worships God and the Lamb.

5:1 The phrase the one who was sitting on the throne refers to 4:2-3, where John had been taken to the throne room of heaven. This one on the throne is God himself. In his right hand God is holding a scroll. In John's day some books were written on scrolls—pieces of papyrus or vellum up to thirty feet long, rolled up and sealed with clay or wax. Other books were written in codex form—much like our modern book. The seven seals indicate the importance of the scroll's contents, and they guaranteed the secrecy of the document. The book had writing on both sides. John does not tell us the exact contents of the book, but it seems that, from what follows in chapters 5–8, it is none other than the content of the rest of the book of Revelation. As each seal is broken, another part of the book is revealed. The final seal, the seventh one, opens the way to the seven trumpets, and so on through the rest of Revelation.

5:2-3 As God was holding the scroll, a strong angel asked, “Who is worthy to break the seals on this scroll and unroll it?” The identity of this angel is unknown. The question, shouted with a loud voice, went out across all of creation to find someone worthy to bring history to its appointed end. But no one in heaven or on earth or under the earth could be found who had the authority and purity to open the scroll and read it. This emphasizes the sovereignty and centrality of Christ. He alone was able to open the scroll.

5:4-5 John wept that no one could be found who was worthy to open the scroll and read it. John wept because he knew that the unopened scroll would mean that the closing scene of history could not begin; thus, evil would continue unabated on the earth, and there would be no future for God's people. But one of the elders (4:4, 10) told John not to weep any longer, because someone was worthy to open the scroll—the Lion of the tribe of Judah. This phrase comes from the prophecy that Jacob gave to his son Judah in Genesis 49:9-10. This is considered to be a prophecy of the Messiah, born in the line of Judah, who would be the only one whom all nations would one day obey. From Judah's line had been born King David, hence the phrase, heir to David's throne, which alludes to Isaiah 11:1-5. Christ, the Messiah, is the fulfillment of God's promise that a descendant of David would rule forever (2 Samuel 7:16; see also Romans 15:12).

The Messiah, Jesus Christ, has conquered. Christ proved himself worthy by living a perfect life of obedience to God, dying on the cross to pay the penalty for the sins of the world, and rising from the dead to demonstrate his power and authority over evil and death. Only Christ conquered sin, death, hell, and Satan himself, so only he can open the scroll and break its seven seals, setting in motion the forces that will bring about the final destruction of all evil.

5:6 One of the elders called John to look at the Lion (5:5), but when John looked, he saw a Lamb. Christ the Lamb was the perfect sacrifice for the sins of all mankind; therefore, only he can save his people from the terrible events that will be revealed by the scroll. This is a beautiful picture: the Lion of the tribe of Judah became a slain Lamb, who is here seen as a conquering Lamb at the center of the throne of God.

This Lamb is different from a dead Passover lamb, however. This Lamb is standing upright, conquering and triumphant, like a strong ram. This Lamb has seven horns and seven eyes, symbolizing perfect (the number seven) power and wisdom. The horns symbolize strength and power (see 1 Kings 22:11; Zechariah 1:18). Although Christ is a sacrificial lamb, he is not weak. The eyes are further described as the seven spirits of God that are sent out into every part of the earth, most likely referring to the Holy Spirit (see 1:4; Zechariah 4:2-10; John 14:26; 15:26; 16:7-15).

5:7-8 Christ stepped forward and took the scroll from his Father, who was seated on the throne. Christ was worthy to take the scroll because of his sacrifice on the cross, by which salvation was won for all who believe. In this vision the time had come for God to unleash the final acts of history before setting up his Kingdom. Christ would open the scroll and begin the process that would bring about the end of this fallen world.

As Christ took the scroll, the four living beings and the twenty-four elders fell down before the Lamb. This pictures all of the heavenly beings worshiping the Son, just as they had done for the one on the throne (4:10), thereby acknowledging Christ's deity. The harp that each held would be used as music for the "new song" they would sing (5:9; see also Psalm 33:2-3). The gold bowls filled with incense are described as the prayers of God's people (see Psalm 141:2). These prayers from the believers on earth were for God to bring his justice to the earth, as later chapters will describe (see 6:10; 8:3-4). The administration of God's righteous justice will mean deliverance for God's faithful people and punishment on those who have rejected God and persecuted his people.

5:9-10 The remainder of this chapter contains three hymns of praise. This first new song was sung by the twenty-four elders and the four living creatures (they refers to 5:7-8). In 5:11-12, the singing group will grow to include countless angels in heaven. Finally, in 5:13, "every creature in heaven and on earth and under the earth" begins to sing. This is a celebration of salvation. Jesus' worthiness comes from his self-sacrifice. Because he is worthy, he is able to take the scroll and break its seals and open it.

The song of the twenty-four elders and the four living creatures praises Christ's work. (See Psalm 96 for a similar song.) The fact that the Lamb was killed refers to Christ's death on the cross as recorded in the Gospels. Through his blood shed on the cross, he ransomed his people. A "ransom" was the price paid to release a slave from bondage. Through his death Jesus would redeem his people from the bondage of sin and death. The disciples thought that as long as Jesus was alive, he could save them. But Jesus revealed that only his death would save them and all those who trust in him.

God has ransomed people from every tribe, language, people, and nation. God's message of salvation and eternal life is not limited to a specific culture, race, or country. Anyone who comes to God in repentance and faith is accepted by him and will be part of his Kingdom. We must not allow prejudice or bias to keep us from sharing Christ with others. Christ welcomes all people into his Kingdom.

5:11-12 The worship that had begun with the four living beings and twenty-four elders here spreads to all of heaven with all of the angels. In 5:13-14, all creation will join in the praise. The phrase thousands and millions pictures a countless number of angels—the entire angelic host. Daniel saw a similar vision (Daniel 7:10). The angels sang a hymn of praise. This sevenfold praise may have been a chant that was antiphonal to the elders' hymn of 5:9-10. Each word describes a quality of God that was bestowed upon Christ, making him worthy.

5:13-14 Finally, the choir grew to every creature in heaven and on earth and under the earth and in the sea. They sang both to the one sitting on the throne as well as to the Lamb—both God and his Son. In response to the song of creation, the four living beings said, “Amen!” in agreement. The twenty-four elders responded by falling and worshiping the one on the throne (God) and the Lamb (Christ). Everything created, both in heaven and in earth, will one day worship God and his Son (Philippians 2:10-11).

REVELATION 6

THE LAMB BREAKS THE FIRST SIX SEALS / 6:1-17

This is the first of three seven-part judgments. In chapter 5, a scroll with seven seals had been handed to Christ, who is the only one worthy to break the seals and open the scroll, setting into motion the events of the end of the world (5:1-5). In chapter 6, the scroll is opened as each seal is broken. This scroll is not completely opened until the seventh seal is broken (8:1). The contents of the scroll reveal mankind's depravity and portray God's authority over the events of human history.

Each of the judgments (seals, trumpets, bowls) includes seven parts. The first four judgments involve natural disasters on the earth; the last three are cosmic disasters. There are three views about how to understand this series of judgments—seals, trumpets, bowls:

Recapitulation View. According to this view, the three sets of judgments repeat each other (are cyclical); they present three ways of viewing the same judgments. Because the trumpets and the bowls have the same order, many have concluded that the three sets are repetitive. In addition, in all three sets, the first four of the seven judgments are very similar, as are the last three of each set of seven. Exact repetition, however, occurs only in the trumpets and bowls.

Consecutive View. This view holds that judgments will follow in the order described in Revelation: first the seals, then the trumpets, then the bowls—in other words, Revelation is describing twenty-one separate events. Thus, chapters 6–16 in Revelation would be chronological.

Progressive Intensification View. The key to this view is understanding the results of the judgments. The seals destroy one-fourth of the earth; the trumpets destroy one-third; the bowls affect everything. The picture seems to be one of progressive intensity, with each of these sets of judgments ending in the same place—that is, the end of history.

These views are helpful as you consider and study the book of Revelation. While many will feel very strongly about one view or another, only God knows the truth. He left much of Revelation unclear to his people for a reason, perhaps so we'll study it and be watchful and morally alert. One truth is sure: as God prepares to end history and usher in his Kingdom, he will bring judgments.

The horses represent God's judgment of people's sin and rebellion. God is directing human history—even using his enemies to accomplish his purposes. The four horses provide a foretaste of the final judgments yet to come. Some view this chapter as a parallel to Jesus' words about the end times (see Matthew 24:4-8; Mark 13:5-13; Luke 21:8-19). The imagery of colored horses and riders comes from Zechariah 1:8-17; 6:1-8. In Zechariah, the colors of the horses have no special significance; in Revelation, the colors of the horses do have symbolic meaning, as described below. In Zechariah, the horses and riders went out to patrol the earth; in Revelation, they are sent out to bring disaster.

6:1-2 The Lamb, Christ, broke open the first seal and with that came the first of four riders on horseback. One of the four living beings called loudly, “Come!” probably beckoning the rider on the horse. A white horse with a rider holding a bow had a crown placed on his head and he rode out to win many battles.

This is the only rider who didn't bring catastrophe (the others initiated warfare, famine, and death); this rider went out to gain the victory. There is much debate over who or what this horseman represents. Some have suggested that this rider symbolizes the proclamation of the Good News of Christ. They see the white horse as being “good” and therefore the rider on a good mission. Others believe that the rider on the white horse is Christ himself, for Christ later appears on a white horse (19:11). Jesus is closely associated with the color white in Revelation (see 1:14; 6:11; 14:14).

The fact that this white horse and its rider precede three other horsemen who wreak havoc on the earth, however, suggests that the white horseman might represent the lust for conquest. When mankind is bent on conquest, the result is warfare, famine, and death. The color white could correspond, then, to conquest. Most likely, the rider on the white horse represents sinful mankind's desire for conquest; when this occurs, many suffer.

6:3-4 At the breaking of the second seal, a rider on a red horse appeared. He was given a mighty sword and was sent out to remove peace from the earth. The picture here is of warfare. Throughout history, conquest has led to warfare and civil war. The rider on the white horse went out to “win many battles,” and in his wake came warfare. The color of this horse, red, symbolizes great bloodshed upon the earth.

6:5-6 Christ broke the third seal and a black horse arrived. This rider was holding a pair of scales for weighing food. The words of the four living beings regarding the amount of food for a day's pay pictures wartime inflation. First-century readers would have interpreted this amount as twelve to fifteen times what they were used to paying. What a person would earn in a day would buy only enough food to feed that person, no one else, not even his or her family. This then would lead to widespread famine, another devastating result of warfare. Following on the heels of the red horse of warfare, therefore, comes a black horse, which represents the sorrow and desolation of warfare that leaves people without money or food. The phrase, “Don’t waste the olive oil and wine,” could be a warning to conserve two staples.

6:7-8 The Lamb broke the fourth seal, and the fourth living being called a rider on a pale green horse. The rider’s name was Death. Following close behind was the Grave. The drive for conquest (white horse), had led to warfare and bloodshed (red horse), which had brought famine and pestilence (black horse), resulting in death and the grave (pale green horse). The color indicates the color of a corpse. The four riders were given power over one-fourth of the earth to kill people with the sword and famine and disease and wild animals. Death by wild beasts would be expected when millions of people have died through war, famine, and plague. The number of one-fourth of the earth, working from present-day numbers, would mean over a billion people would die in this first wave of judgment were it to happen today. Nothing that cataclysmic has occurred in all of history.

6:9 After the four horses have ridden off, the Lamb broke the fifth seal. It reveals an altar in heaven, under which are the souls of all who had been martyred for faithfully proclaiming the word of God. They had been killed for standing up for Christ and for his word (see also 13:15; 18:24; 20:4). The altar represents the altar of sacrifice in the Temple, where animals would be sacrificed to atone for sins. Instead of the animals’ blood at the base of the altar, John saw the souls of martyrs who had died for preaching the gospel. The word for “souls” (psyche) refers to the persons or to their lives. These martyrs were told that still more would lose their lives for believing in Christ (6:11). In the face of warfare, famine, persecution, and death, Christians need to stand firmly for what they believe. Only those who endure to the end will be rewarded by God (14:12; Mark 13:13).

6:10-11 The souls of the martyrs beneath the altar were calling out for vengeance for their deaths, asking God how long it would be before he would judge the earth and avenge their blood. This is an imprecatory prayer—a prayer for vengeance against God’s enemies. Just as David had written psalms that called for vengeance against his enemies (for example, Psalms 35; 94:3), so these martyrs asked for vengeance and vindication against the people who belong to this world (see also 3:10; 8:13; 11:10; 13:8, 12; 17:2, 8). These words may sound harsh when used in prayer, but the martyrs were calling for God's justice, and they were leaving the vengeance to God. God promises to help the persecuted and to bring judgment on unrepentant sinners.

The martyrs were told to rest a little longer until the full number of the servants of Jesus had been martyred. God is not waiting until a certain number are killed; rather, he is waiting for the appointed time to arrive. He promises, however, that those who suffer and die for their faith will not be forgotten. In fact, they will be rewarded and honored by God. Today, oppressed people may wish for justice immediately, as these martyrs did, but they must be patient. God works according to his own timetable, and he promises to act. No suffering for the sake of God's Kingdom, however, is wasted. God will vindicate his people, but he will do it in his time, not ours.

The white robe that each martyr was wearing, as throughout the book of Revelation, symbolizes purity (see also 3:4; 7:11). White robes were worn for special ceremonies in Greek cities.

6:12-14 The sixth seal changed the scene back to the physical world. The first five judgments had been directed toward specific areas, but this judgment was over the whole world. The entire population would be afraid when the earth itself trembled. With the opening of the sixth seal, there was a great earthquake, followed by other cosmic disturbances. To properly understand these events, we must go beyond the literal meaning. These word pictures were common to many of John's readers and stood for the coming "day of the Lord" or "day of judgment." The earthquake in Scripture always pictures God's presence (see Exodus 19:18; Isaiah 2:19-21; Haggai 2:6). The color of the sun is that of cloth worn in times of mourning. The moon will appear red due to whatever in the atmosphere caused the sun to be darkened. The stars falling to earth could refer to a terrifying meteor shower with meteors striking the earth (see also Joel 2:30-31; Mark 13:21-25). The disappearance of mountains and islands will probably result from the great earthquake (see Hebrews 12:26-27).

Finally, the sky will roll up like a scroll (see also Isaiah 34:4). Those who interpret this book as chronological will consider this to be the end of the first round of judgments. Those who picture the book as cyclical, or as showing varying intensity with all the judgments ending at the return of Christ, see the rolling up of the sky as the time when Christ opens heaven and returns to earth (19:11).

6:15-17 As the earthquake moved the mountains and the sky was filled with terrifying signs, everyone on the earth, from the rich and powerful to the citizens, to the slaves, all hid from God. They recognized that the end of the world had come and they hoped to hide from the face of the one who sits on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb. The people were so terrified of the one seated on the throne that they would prefer that an avalanche fall on them rather than have to face God. The evil people on the earth dread God more than they dread death. They do not realize that even death cannot help them to escape their judgment by God.

REVELATION 7

GOD'S PEOPLE WILL BE PRESERVED / 7:1-8

The sixth seal had been opened, and the people of the earth had tried to hide from God, asking who would be able to survive God's judgment (6:17). Just when destruction seemed sure, four angels held back the four winds of judgment until God's people were sealed as his own. This sealing occurred in this interlude between the sixth and seventh seals. An interlude also comes between the sixth and seventh trumpets (10:1–11:13) but not between the sixth and seventh bowls (16:12-21). The faithful believers would be kept safe. This chapter contains two pictures: first, the sealing of the 144,000; second, the great multitude worshipping before God's throne.

7:1 John saw four angels who were standing at the four corners of the earth (referring to the whole earth, the four points of the compass). The sudden silence and the angels holding back the four winds from blowing upon the earth picture God's protection from harm; they contrast the peace and security of the believers with the terror of those hiding in the rocks (6:16). The winds described here picture harmful winds as agents of God bringing destruction (see Daniel 7:2). The four angels hold back the winds so that not a leaf rustled in the trees, and the sea became as smooth as glass. This scene contrasts with the earthquakes and meteor showers that had just occurred (6:12-13).

7:2-3 Another angel came from the east who had the seal of the living God. In ancient days, a king would push his signet ring into wax on a scroll or document as a seal to mark his ownership and to protect its contents. God places his own seal on his followers, identifying them as his own and guaranteeing his protection over their souls. Here, God's seal was placed on the foreheads of his servants. This seal would be counterfeited by Satan in 13:16 (a seal known as "the mark of the beast"). These two marks would separate the people into two distinct categories—those owned by God and those owned by Satan. Ezekiel 9:4-7 records God sending a divine messenger through Jerusalem to mark the foreheads of those who still worshiped the one true God. Here, the seal that the angel put on the believers' foreheads was the name of the Lamb and his Father's name (see 14:1).

Pretribulationists believe that Christians will have been raptured—removed from this world to meet the Lord in the air—just before the tribulation begins. They believe that this seal means that many others will become believers during the time of tribulation—these new believers will receive this seal. According to this verse, the only believers who will suffer through this terrible evil and persecution will be those who become Christians during the tribulation, perhaps because they had witnessed the rapture of true believers. Both those who think that the Christians will be raptured before the tribulation, as well as those who think they will remain on earth throughout, agree that the seal put on believers' foreheads will protect them (see 3:10).

7:4-8 The number of those who were sealed is 144,000. This does not mean that only 144,000 people alive on the earth at that time will be saved. Most likely, it is a symbolic number: 12 x 12 x 1,000, symbolizing completeness. A similar multiple appears in 21:16, when John was measuring the new Jerusalem (see also 14:1).

Some believe that the tribes of Israel refers specifically to Jews—that there will be a great revival among the Jews and that many will be saved. Some say that there will be exactly 144,000 Jews saved—perhaps to be evangelists for the rest of the great multitude (7:9). This list differs slightly from the lists of the twelve tribes that occur in various places in the Old Testament. Some reasons for the differences could be: (1) Judah is mentioned first because Judah is both the tribe of David and of Jesus the Messiah (Genesis 49:8-12; Matthew 1:1). (2) Levi had no tribal allotment because of the Levites' work for God in the Temple (Deuteronomy 18:1), but here the tribe is given a place as a reward for faithfulness. (3) Dan is not mentioned because it was known for rebellion and idolatry—traits unacceptable for God's followers (Genesis 49:17). (4) The two tribes representing Joseph (usually called Ephraim and Manasseh, after Joseph's sons) are here called Joseph and Manasseh because of Ephraim's rebellion. See Genesis 49 for the story of the beginning of these twelve tribes.

Most likely, however, this listing of the twelve tribes is symbolic of all of God's true followers—the "true Israel," which is the church (Romans 2:29; 9:6; Galatians 3:29; 6:16; 1 Peter 2:9). All of God's followers will be brought safely to him; not one will be overlooked or forgotten. When persecution begins, the faithful will have already been sealed (marked by God), and they will remain true to him until the end.

PRAISE FROM THE GREAT MULTITUDE / 7:9-17

This "vast crowd" is the redeemed multitude, the great international family of God, offering praise to him. These are the ones who have been protected, redeemed, and purified.

7:9-10 In 7:4, John had heard the number of those sealed; here, he saw a vast crowd, too great to count. This fulfilled God's promise to Abraham that he would have descendants too numerous to count (Genesis 15:5; 32:12; Romans 9:6-8; Galatians 3:29).

Who is this great multitude? In 7:14, they are described as those who have come "out of the great tribulation." Some interpreters identify them as the martyrs described in 6:9, but they may also be the same group as the 144,000 just mentioned (7:4-8), for that may be a symbolic number indicating all believers who had been sealed. In other words, John may have seen the final state of the believers who survive the tribulation. This interpretation seems to be supported by 7:15-17, where the believers are described as serving God day and night—thereby picturing eternity. This scene provides great comfort to all believers facing persecution. Those who will face the great tribulation have a guaranteed future with God.

The angels, elders, and living beings of chapters 4 and 5 were joined by a huge crowd of people. No distinctions of race, ethnic background, or gender exist in this worshiping community. These were the redeemed people—those who had accepted Christ's sacrifice on their behalf and had experienced God's forgiveness. They sing about salvation. These were clothed in white, symbolizing their purity because of the salvation they had received (3:4-5; 4:4; 19:14). The martyrs in 6:11 had been given white robes—thus, some think this crowd that has come through the tribulation is those who have been martyred for their faith. They were holding palm branches in their hands, symbolizing the joy of this occasion, as they stood before God and the Lamb (see also John 12:13).

7:11-12 The angels, the elders, and the four living beings had stood before the throne in John's earlier vision. For more information about the elders, see the commentary on 4:4. For more information on the four living beings, see the commentary on 4:6-7.

After the redeemed sang their song (7:9-10), these worshiped God and sang to him seven words of praise because of the salvation he had given to all the redeemed. Jesus said, "There is joy in the presence of God's angels when even one sinner repents" (Luke 15:10). Imagine the great joy of the angels in heaven when they stand with this countless crowd of believers who had repented of sin and accepted the salvation of the Lamb.

7:13-14 One of the twenty-four elders turned to John and anticipated his question regarding the identity of this great crowd in white robes, "Where do they come from?” These people have come out of the great tribulation. They have persevered, standing true for Christ. Some may have been martyred, but probably not all of them. They have been redeemed, for they have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb and made them white. It is difficult to imagine how blood could make any cloth white, but the blood of Jesus Christ is the world’s greatest purifier because it removes the stain of sin (Hebrews 9:14). White symbolizes sinless perfection or holiness, which can be given to people only by the death of the sinless Lamb of God on their behalf. This is a picture of how believers are saved through faith (see Isaiah 1:18; Romans 3:21-26).

For explanation on the various views of the great tribulation, see commentary on 7:2-3 above.

7:15-17 According to 7:1-8, the believers receive a seal to protect them through a time of great tribulation and suffering; in 7:9-17, John receives a glimpse into the future—the believers finally with God in heaven. All who have been faithful through the ages were singing before God’s throne. Their tribulations and sorrows were over: no more tears for sin, for all sins were forgiven; no more tears for suffering, for all suffering was over; no more tears for death, for all believers had been resurrected to die no more.

The phrase day and night means continuous, unceasing service to God—that “service” refers to worship and praise (22:3-5). The Temple is not limited to some particular building in heaven, nor is it a reference to the Temple in Jerusalem; instead, all of heaven is God’s sanctuary. God will satisfy every need. That they will never again be hungry or thirsty, and fully protected from the scorching noontime heat echoes Isaiah’s prophecy (see Isaiah 49:10). God’s care extends to every part of life—he will wipe away all their tears. These are the blessings that God will provide to his people.

REVELATION 8

THE LAMB BREAKS THE SEVENTH SEAL / 8:1-5

Chapter 7 was an interlude. At the end of chapter 6, the sixth seal had been opened (6:12). Here at the beginning of chapter 8, the Lamb opens the seventh and last seal.

8:1-2 The Lamb broke the seventh seal, which was the last on the scroll (5:1). When the seal was opened, there was silence throughout heaven for about half an hour (see Habakkuk 2:20; Zechariah 2:13). This is the silence of breathless expectancy, as all of heaven waited for the hand of God to move. When the seventh seal was opened, the seven trumpet judgments were revealed. In the same way, the seventh trumpet will announce the seven bowl judgments in 11:15 and 16:1-21.

Seven angels were given seven trumpets. The trumpet judgments, like the seal judgments, are only partial. God's final and complete judgment had not yet come. The Lamb had opened the seven seals to set in motion events of judgment, but angels had been given the power to execute the trumpet and bowl judgments.

Throughout the Old Testament, trumpets had a variety of meanings and purposes. Moses was instructed to make two silver trumpets that would call the people together, move the tribes forward on their journey, sound an alarm, or signify the feast days (Numbers 10:3, 5-6, 9-10). The trumpets herald the arrival of the day of God's wrath.

Apparently, the events of 8:3-5 occur immediately following this time of silence.

8:3-4 Then John saw another angel, not one of the seven, who had a gold incense burner and came to the altar (also mentioned in 6:9). The angel was given a great quantity of incense, which was used to mix with the prayers of God's people. The angel acted in the role of a priest, presenting the prayers of the saints to God. The incense symbolized the offered prayers, and the angel was merely the agent. The smoke of the incense, mixed with the prayers of the saints, ascended up to God (see Exodus 30:7-9). These prayers are most likely prayers for justice and deliverance, as described in 6:10. God brings judgment in response to the prayers of his people. One of the reasons for the trumpet judgments is God's answer to the prayers of the saints.

8:5 Then the angel filled the incense burner with fire from the altar and threw it upon the earth. Ezekiel described a similar scene (Ezekiel 10:2-7), thereby picturing judgment on the city of Jerusalem as God's glory departed. The fire from the altar being thrown to the earth symbolizes the prayers of the saints on earth being answered. God was about to act on their behalf. The thunder, lightning, and earthquake are the beginning of his answer to their prayers. These indicate that God is about to take action and answer (Exodus 19:16-19).

THE FIRST FOUR TRUMPETS / 8:6-13

The seven trumpet judgments call forth a series of God's plagues on his enemies. These judgments affected every part of the world. Unlike the bowl judgments described in chapter 16, the first six trumpets were targeted on just a third of the cosmos and were intended to produce repentance (9:20-21).

The trumpet and the bowl judgments symbolically reenacted the plagues of Egypt recorded in Exodus 7–12. The plagues had two purposes:

- They were directed against the gods of Egypt. Every plague was directed at a force that the Egyptians thought was on their side because they worshiped that force. For example, the Egyptians worshiped the sun, so God sent a plague of darkness (Exodus 10:21-29); they worshiped the Nile River, so God sent a plague to turn the sacred river to blood (7:14-24). The first purpose of the plagues against Egypt was to prove the powerlessness of the Egyptian gods.
- The plagues were oriented to the cycle of nature. The Egyptians worshiped many gods representing the various forces of nature so that nature would feed and take care of them. The second purpose of the plagues was to show the Egyptians that God controlled nature and that Egypt's gods controlled nothing. In the trumpet and bowl judgments, the world that these people are worshiping will turn against them. Through these judgments, God will once again bring punishment upon those who oppress his people, just as he did in Egypt.

The plagues showed the helplessness of the people of Egypt, who worshiped false gods. In the same way, through these trumpet and bowl judgments, God will show the people of this world their helplessness and hopelessness without him.

8:6 Returning to the action of 8:2, the seven angels who had been given the seven trumpets got ready to blow their mighty blasts. The picture is of these mighty angels raising the trumpets to their lips and then awaiting the signal to blow at the appropriate time. The trumpet blasts have three purposes: (1) to warn that judgment is certain, (2) to call the forces of good and evil to battle, and (3) to announce the return of the King, the Messiah.

8:7 At the beginning of chapter 7, an angel had called for the angels holding back the four winds to not hurt “the land or the sea or the trees” until God’s servants had been sealed (7:1-3). But after they had been sealed, God’s fury was unleashed upon the earth.

The first angel blew his trumpet, and hail and fire mixed with blood were thrown down upon the earth. This compares to the seventh plague on Egypt when hailstorms killed anything that was outside (people and animals) and destroyed much vegetation (Exodus 9:13-35). Some have suggested that this could refer to volcanic activity; others say that this is a violent storm, with the fire representing lightning and the blood referring to the color of the sky. (see also Ezekiel 38:22; Joel 2:31; Luke 21:25-26).

The result is that one-third of the earth was set on fire, along with one-third of the trees and all the grass. Since only one-third of the earth was destroyed by these trumpet judgments, this was only a partial judgment from God. His full wrath was yet to be unleashed. The purpose of this judgment was to warn people to repent.

8:8-9 When the second angel blew his trumpet, one-third of the sea was destroyed. The great mountain of fire was thrown into the sea, causing the disruption. Some suggest that this refers to a falling meteor or asteroid that, upon impact in the sea, disrupts the ecology of the sea and creates a tidal wave. The water is described as becoming blood, with the result that one-third of all things living in the sea died. This compares to the first plague when the Nile River was turned to blood (Exodus 7:14-24). This plague on the sea somehow also affected one-third of all the ships on the sea because they were destroyed. Perhaps this occurred from a tidal wave caused by the “great mountain of fire” that had been thrown into the sea.

For an economy centered around the sea for its trade and food, as was Rome’s, this would be especially terrifying. Because travel by land was slow, Rome depended on the sea for most of its transport of goods. The key cities in the Roman Empire were the ports on the Mediterranean Sea. Rome’s navy insured the safety of travel on the Mediterranean. But they could do nothing against God’s judgment.

8:10-11 When the third angel blew his trumpet, the results affected all the inland waters—one-third of the rivers and the springs of water. This occurred when a great flaming star fell out of the sky. This may be a comet. It is named Bitterness, picturing the bitterness of sorrow and death. This reversed the miracle that God had performed for his people in the wilderness at Marah—turning the bitter water sweet so that it would be drinkable (Exodus 15:22-25). Here, sweet water was turned bitter, making it undrinkable and causing many people to die.

This also compares to the first plague against Egypt when the water was turned to blood and made undrinkable (Exodus 7:24). This judgment affects one-third of all the fresh water on the earth—horrible, but still not total and final judgment.

8:12 The fourth angel blew his trumpet and the celestial bodies were affected. The picture is of the sun and stars losing some of their light, but more than that, one-third of the day was dark and one-third of the night with no moonlight. This compares to the ninth plague of darkness that descended upon Egypt (Exodus 10:21-29). During a portion of the day and a portion of the night, there was absolute darkness on the earth. (See also Isaiah 13:10; Joel 2:2; Amos 5:18; Mark 13:24.) The darkness of the fourth trumpet judgment set the stage for the last three trumpets that would bring demonic activity on the earth.

8:13 This verse provides a transition from the four trumpet blasts that caused havoc on nature to the three coming blasts that would let loose demonic forces to attack people on the earth.

Habakkuk used the image of eagles to symbolize swiftness and destruction (see Habakkuk 1:8). The picture is of a strong, powerful bird, here called an eagle (also a carrion bird), flying over all the earth, warning of the terrors yet to come. While the first four trumpet judgments were horrible, the eagle is saying that worse was yet to come. There is one “terror” for each remaining trumpet blast.

While both believers and unbelievers experience the terrors described in 8:7-12, all who belong to this world refers to the unbelievers who will meet spiritual harm through the next three trumpet judgments. God has guaranteed believers protection from spiritual harm (7:2-3; 9:4).

REVELATION 9

THE FIFTH TRUMPET BRINGS THE FIRST TERROR / 9:1-12

Revelation 9 records the fifth and sixth trumpet judgments—the first two “terrors” (8:13). The first four trumpet judgments had brought disaster upon nature; with the fifth and sixth, demons were sent to attack the people of the earth and torment them. Ironically, the demonic forces destroyed their own worshipers. They were sent against those who did not have the seal of God and had, therefore, chosen to side with Satan (9:4).

9:1-2 The first “terror” occurred when the fifth angel blew his trumpet. John saw a star that had fallen to earth from the sky. There is much debate as to the identity of this star, whether the “star” is Satan, a fallen angel, Christ, or a good angel. Some scholars point to 9:11 and identify this angel with the “angel from the bottomless pit,” thus, a demon (see also 12:4, 9; Isaiah 14:12; Luke 10:18). If the star is a demon, he loosed evil forces upon the inhabitants of the earth. The evil forces, however, were only allowed to harm those who belonged to them, not the sealed believers (9:4). Most likely, this “star” is a good angel, because he was given the key to the shaft of the bottomless pit, and that key, normally, would be held by Christ (1:18), and because in 20:1 an angel came down from heaven with this key. If it is a good angel, then he was simply obeying God’s directions to let loose calamity upon the earth. Most importantly, this angel is under God’s control and authority.

The bottomless pit, is the eternal destination of the wicked and the abode of the demonic forces (see Luke 8:31; 2 Peter 2:4; Jude 1:6; also referred to in 9:11; 11:7; 17:8; 20:1-3). It is full of smoke and fire, for when it was opened, smoke poured out as though from a huge furnace. There is so much smoke upon the opening of this pit that the sunlight and air were darkened.

9:3-6 Out of the billowing smoke come locusts. God had also sent a plague of locusts on Egypt (Exodus 10:1-20). This locust plague, however, fulfilled the words of the prophet Joel, who described a locust plague as a foreshadowing God’s coming judgment (Joel 1:6–2:11). In the Old Testament, locusts symbolized destruction because they destroyed all vegetation (Deuteronomy 28:42; 1 Kings 8:37; Psalm 78:46). In what is called a plague, millions of locusts (grasshoppers) travel in a column many feet deep and miles in length. So many destroy everything in an area—grass, trees, and crops. This locust infestation spells destruction on agricultural societies. In the 1950s, locusts devoured several hundred thousand square miles of vegetation in the Middle East.

Here, however, these locusts were told not to hurt the grass or plants or trees. This is a very different kind of “locust” plague, for they looked like horses (9:7; Joel 2:4) and they were given power to sting like scorpions. These “locusts” were terrifying. In fact, they were demons—evil spirits ruled by Satan who tempt people to sin. They did not attack vegetation but, instead, attacked all the people who did not have the seal of God on their foreheads (7:3). This invasion of demons tortured people who did not believe in God. Believers, however, were protected from this (3:10; 7:3-4). The demons were not allowed to kill people but to cause agony like the pain of scorpion stings. These would be so painful that people will seek death, but would be unable to do so. God would not allow them to escape punishment by dying—instead, they would have to suffer. The demons could only torment people for five months—the lifespan of a locust, as well as the length of the harvesttime on earth during which locusts plagues could come. The limitations placed on the demons show that they are under God’s authority.

9:7-10 This description is very similar to what locusts actually look like upon close observation (see Joel 2:4), but these locusts are exaggerated and much bigger than life—supernatural locusts. That they had human faces probably indicates that these were not mere insects but were intelligent beings. These locusts were not just out for food but were sent to make war against their own followers. Their teeth were like the teeth of a lion is also a description found in Joel’s prophecy (Joel 1:6). These locusts had armor made of iron, making them invincible. No one would be able to fight against them. Their wings had the roaring sound of an army of chariots rushing into battle. This was the most fearsome sound of warfare in the ancient world. No one could stand against war chariots (see also Joel 2:5).

9:11 This army of locusts had a king. He was the angel from the bottomless pit. Most likely, this was not the same angel who unlocked the pit in 9:1 but a different angel, an emissary of Satan (see commentary on 9:1).

This angel’s name is given in both Hebrew (Abaddon) and in Greek (Apollyon), both meaning “Exterminator” or “Destroyer.” The Greek name may relate to the god Apollo, who was believed to be the leader of all the gods and was adopted as the patron god of the emperor. One of the symbols of Apollo was a locust. Roman emperors, such as Domitian, liked to portray themselves as the incarnate Apollo. Ironically, John may have linked this leader from hell (the locust king) with the emperor. Most likely, this is a powerful demon, similar to a commander in the hierarchy of demons, but not Satan himself.

9:12 In the Old Testament, the word terror always refers to coming judgment. Though carried out by demonic powers, these events are actually divine judgments. Satan is at the mercy of God's power. At this point, two more terrors are coming.

THE SIXTH TRUMPET BRINGS THE SECOND TERROR / 9:13-21

The sixth angel will set into motion the sixth trumpet judgment and the second "terror" that must be sent on the earth. According to 6:9, the altar was where the souls of all who had been martyred were waiting for God's punishment to be executed on their enemies. Their prayers called for vengeance, and God was releasing it in these "terrors" (8:13).

9:13-16 When the sixth angel blew his trumpet, a voice came from the four horns of the gold altar. It is unknown whether this was the voice of God or of another angel. The "horns" refer to the altar in the Temple and its four projections, one at each corner (see Exodus 27:2).

This angel would release the four angels who are bound at the great Euphrates River. The word "angels" here means fallen angels or demons, for in Scripture, God's angels are never bound. These four unidentified demons would be exceedingly evil and destructive. They were held back by God and would be released at a specific time, doing only what God allowed them to do. They had been prepared for this very moment.

The four "angels" (demons) command an army of 200 million mounted troops, sent out to kill one-third of all the people on the earth. This affects only those who did not have the seal of God on their foreheads (9:4, 20). As with the torture inflicted during the sixth trumpet, these demons were attacking their own followers.

This could correspond to the plague in Egypt of the death of the firstborn sons. In that final plague, the angel of death came and killed the firstborn sons of the Egyptian families but passed over the homes of the Israelites (Exodus 11). Many men died in Egypt that night, but that will not compare to the terror that will come upon the earth when these demonic mounted troops arrive. In 6:7-8, one-fourth of mankind had been killed; here, one-third more was killed. Thus, over one-half of the people in the world would have been killed by God's great judgments. Even more would have been killed if God had not set limits on the destruction.

In John's day, two hundred million mounted troops in an army was inconceivable. In the censuses taken in the Roman Empire, the number of people in the entire Empire totaled around two hundred million. So for the people of that day, that meant one demonic horseman for every person in the Empire. At the height of World War II, all soldiers on both sides numbered about seventy million. The math itself should have shocked the people into realizing that this is more than a natural disaster. But so hardened are the surviving two-thirds of earth's inhabitants that they remained unrepentant (9:21).

9:17-19 John saw this army of two hundred million as horses and riders with brightly colored armor. They were released to kill with three plagues. This sort of destruction had fallen on the evil cities of Sodom and Gomorrah (see Genesis 19:24). Sulfur, or brimstone, was found near regions with volcanic activity and, in the Bible, it represents the wrath of God (see 14:10; Isaiah 30:33; 34:9). Many interpreters see modern canons or tanks in this picture. John reminds us that these figures were in my vision and, most likely, are symbolic representations of demonic hordes, not descriptions of actual human armies. The figure of the horse is more like the description of the Leviathan in Job 41:19-21.

The entire picture in this vision is horrifying. There is much symbolism in these descriptions. The main point to remember is that God released these demonic hordes to kill their own followers. This should warn those who refuse to repent.

9:20-21 This outpouring of judgment upon the earth was a final attempt by God to bring people to repentance. They had a chance to turn from their evil deeds but, unfortunately, they did not. They saw what was occurring but still refused to turn to God, desiring instead to continue to worship demons and idols.

Idolatry is demonic; it is worship of Satan (1 Corinthians 10:20). Demons hate the very people who worship them, torturing and killing them, yet people still prefer those demons over God. They did not repent and turn to God. For example, in the occult today, people worship demons. Their practices include sacrifices of babies, murder, mutilation, and sacrifices of animals. These people are worshipping very destructive powers. With the popularity of the occult in books and movies, the church must strongly teach about the destructive and hateful power of demons.

This is why there has to be eternal punishment. God does everything he can do to draw people to himself, but these people want to continue in their idol worship and live out what that worship leads to—murders, witchcraft, immorality, and thefts. They have chosen their side and so must remain there. God does not want anyone to perish (2 Peter 3:9); however, when God's call is consistently rejected, then judgment must fall.

REVELATION 10

THE ANGEL AND THE SMALL SCROLL / 10:1-11

Chapter 10 introduces an interlude between the sixth and seventh trumpets, much as chapter 7 was an interlude between the sixth and seventh seals. This interlude extends from 10:1–11:14. No corresponding interlude exists between the sixth and seventh bowl judgments, for at that time, the end will have come and there will be no time for further warning.

As noted earlier, the Scripture does not state whether these events follow in sequence, are cyclical, or are merely intensifying with each set of seven judgments. God has chosen not to explain these visions totally. This book reveals God's judgment upon evil and his bringing of his own to be with him forever. When and how that all happens is for us to discuss and study in order to be morally and spiritually prepared. Believers should not allow their different beliefs regarding the end times to distract them from the hope in Christ's return.

10:1 John then saw another mighty angel coming down from heaven. Some have suggested that this angel was actually Christ because of the divine imagery surrounding this angel's appearance. While this description sounds much like the description of Christ in 1:13-16, most likely, it is not Christ, for he is never called an "angel" anywhere else in Revelation. Also, he would not speak with an oath, as described in 10:6. Others suggest that this is the same angel as described in Daniel 12:7. This angel is a very powerful, high-ranking angel who has come down from heaven to announce the final judgments on the earth. The cloud usually described the presence of God in the Old Testament (Exodus 13:21; 40:34; 1 Chronicles 5:13-14). The rainbow had been a promise to Noah that God would not destroy the earth again with a flood (Genesis 9:8-17). The angel's face shone like the sun, much like the face of Christ at the Transfiguration (Matthew 17:2). The feet like pillars of fire could recall the pillar of fire in the wilderness (Exodus 14:20).

10:2 This powerful archangel was carrying a small scroll that he had unrolled. Two scrolls appear in Revelation. The first contains a revelation of judgments against evil and was unrolled by the Lamb (chapters 5 and 6). The contents of the second little scroll are not indicated, but it also may contain a revelation of judgment.

So large and powerful was the angel that he stood with his right foot on the sea and his left foot on the land. Many of John's readers may have immediately pictured the Colossus of Rhodes, a statue built in Rhodes, an island between Crete and Turkey. The magnificent statue of Apollo, the sun god, was one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. It stood about 105 feet high—one foot was on the island and the other foot was on the mainland. It was the greatest statue ever built in the ancient world. Ships would sail in the waterway between the statue's legs. It was destroyed by an earthquake in 227 B.C.

This angel standing on the sea and on the land indicates that his words would affect all creation, not just a limited part, as did the seal and trumpet judgments. The seventh trumpet (11:15) would usher in the seven bowl judgments, which would bring an end to the present world. When this universal judgment comes, God's truth would prevail.

10:3-4 The shout of this mighty angel sounded to John like the roar of a lion. When the angel spoke, the seven thunders answered. This is a picture of the awesome sight of God on Mount Sinai (Exodus 19:19). This thunderous reply was spoken by God and must have been understandable, for John began to write down what was said. He was stopped from doing so, however, by another voice that told him to keep these words secret (see also Daniel 12:4).

10:5-7 The angel lifted his right hand to heaven (see also Daniel 12:7) and swore an oath in the name of the one who lives forever and ever—referring to God (1:4). This description highlights the truth that God is eternal and controls all of time—what a comfort for persecuted believers. The oath declares that God will wait no longer. With the sounding of the seventh trumpet, God would bring about the end of history—God's mysterious plan will be fulfilled. "Mystery" is a key word in the New Testament. The word is almost synonymous with the word "revelation." In the Bible, the word "mystery" refers to a divine secret. All of time has been pointing forward to this moment. All prophecy will be fulfilled—everything will occur just as God had announced to his servants the prophets. From the very beginning, God had promised that, despite the peoples' sin, he would one day defeat evil. From the moment Adam sinned, all of history has been pointing toward this blowing of the final trumpet.

The time of final judgment has come. God would stop giving warnings and offers of repentance. All restraint would be removed, and the Antichrist would be revealed (2 Thessalonians 2:3). The forces of God and Satan would meet in final confrontation, as foretold by Daniel (Daniel 12:1).

10:8-9 The voice from heaven told John to go to the magnificent angel and take the unrolled scroll. So John obeyed. When he took it, the angel told him to eat the scroll.

Some think that this scroll is the word of God, but that is probably too general. More likely, the scroll represents the revelations of God as given to John in this book. Like the prophet Ezekiel, John would eat this scroll that would taste like honey (see also Psalm 119:103; Jeremiah 15:16) but would make his stomach sour (Ezekiel 2:9–3:3). This could mean that the scroll was full of words of comfort, as well as gloom. Through the command to eat this scroll, God was confirming John’s prophetic role, as he did with Ezekiel. Receiving the word of God can be a pleasant experience, but it often results in the unpleasant task of speaking judgment on evil. Believers know that victory is sure, but they are pained by the difficulties they must endure and by many people’s stubborn refusal to repent.

10:10-11 John took and ate the little scroll, and it did just as the angel had said—tasted sweet but made his stomach sour. Then the angel gave John another command, “You must prophesy again about many peoples, nations, languages, and kings” (see also 7:9). John would prophesy about a world that had turned from God. There would be no distinctions among people—the message would be for all. The only distinction left would be those who had the mark of the beast and those who had been sealed by God. The following chapters contain these prophecies.

REVELATION 11

THE TWO WITNESSES / 11:1-14

This section contains many elements that have stimulated much discussion among interpreters. There is no authoritative way to determine if the statements should be taken literally, or if they figuratively represent forces at work in the future. If they refer to literal events, we will not know until they happen. If they are figurative, we must have some idea to what the figures correspond. Two prophets, or witnesses, arrived and gave messages from God. The beast entered the vision and began his evil attacks.

11:1 In 10:8-10, John had become a participant in his vision—taking the little scroll from the angel and eating it. In this chapter, John again was participating, for he was given a measuring stick and told to go and measure the Temple of God and the altar, and count the number of worshipers. Prophets often were asked to perform symbolic actions in order to dramatize their message to the people (see, for example, Isaiah 20:2-4; Ezekiel 4). John's action recorded here is much like Ezekiel's in Ezekiel 40–42.

There are two main interpretations of the Temple that John was told to measure. (1) The Temple, the altar, and the worshipers are literal and focus on the Jews and their place in these final days. (2) The Temple, altar, and the worshipers are symbolic and refer to the “true Israel,” the church, consisting of all believers in Christ.

Those who believe that this is a reference to the Jews have two slightly different views. Some understand the Temple to be a real, physical rebuilt Jewish Temple in Jerusalem. This view envisions the Antichrist permitting the rebuilding of the Temple in Jerusalem and the restoration of Jewish worship. After three and a half years, however, the Antichrist will break his treaty with the Jews and destroy the city. Then Christ will return to deliver the Jewish people. Others who also consider this section to refer to the Jews believe that the Temple and the city of Jerusalem are not to be taken literally. Instead, they say, John was predicting the eventual salvation of the Jewish people (see also Romans 11:26). The Temple, altar, and worshipers represent the believing Jews, while the outer courtyard represents the unbelieving Jews.

The second way of interpreting this passage is that it refers not just to the Jews but to all believers. In this view, the Temple is a symbol of the church (all true believers—whether Jews or Gentiles).

Some who believe that the believers have already been raptured (taken to heaven) by this time will say that this action is primarily focused on the Jews, as a way to draw them to Christ before the end. Those who believe that the Christians are still on the earth understand this to refer to God's protection of his people, similar to his sealing them in 7:3 (see also 1 Corinthians 3:16-17; 2 Corinthians 6:16; Ephesians 2:19-22; Revelation 2:4-10).

John measured the Temple and the altar and then counted the worshipers, showing that God was building walls of protection around his people to spare them from spiritual harm, although they could face physical harm (see 13:7). John was told not to measure "the outer courtyard" for that area had been "turned over to the nations" (11:2); however, the Temple would be a place of safety reserved for all those who had remained faithful to God. Similarly, an angel would measure the new Jerusalem in 21:15-17. The measurements symbolically show the perfection of this new home for God's people. Its inhabitants are protected from all evil.

Ezekiel had been told to describe the Temple in his vision to the people in Israel "so they will be ashamed of all their sins" (Ezekiel 43:10). The basic law of the Temple is "holiness" (Ezekiel 43:12), and the description was meant to contrast God's holiness against idol worship. John's measuring of the Temple differentiates God's people from those who worshiped the beast.

We simply do not know if this scene is in heaven or on earth, so we must ask what God, through his Spirit, wishes us to grasp from John's actions. Most likely, this Temple refers to all believers. As Peter wrote, "And now God is building you, as living stones, into his spiritual Temple" (1 Peter 2:5). While there may be a special role for faithful Jews in the future, we simply do not know what it will be. The measuring most likely means that God will protect his people (see 11:19).

11:2 The outer courtyard of the Temple that had been standing in Jerusalem was also called the Court of the Gentiles. It was set aside as a place of worship for Gentiles who had converted to Judaism and the worship of the one true God. In this case, as the area where John did no measurements, the outer courtyard represents those who would not be spiritually protected from the punishments to come.

This courtyard had been turned over to the nations who will trample the holy city for 42 months. This statement could refer to Jesus' words about a time of great apostasy (Mark 13) and the coming of the Antichrist, who will rule over the nations, trample the holy city, and set himself up as god (see also 2 Thessalonians 2:3-4). During this time, many will turn to the worship of evil. God's true and faithful people, however, will be protected from spiritual harm (see 3:10). The entire city, including the Temple, will be trampled, so God's people will face persecution and death, but they will come safely to heaven.

The outer courtyard had been turned over "to the nations." The word "nations" has also been translated "Gentiles." The Greek word, ethne, is used several times in Revelation and never means "Gentiles" as opposed to Jews. Instead, it stands for peoples of the earth—groups of people such as believers (2:26; 21:24, 26) or those in rebellion against God (11:18; 14:8; 19:15). In this case, the "nations" are those in rebellion against God. They "trample the holy city," causing spiritual apostasy and physical suffering.

Some literally interpret the "holy city" as Jerusalem (see Nehemiah 11:1; Isaiah 48:2; 52:1; Daniel 9:24; Matthew 27:53 where Jerusalem is referred to as "the holy city.") and believe that one day the Jews' Temple will be rebuilt in the "holy city," Jerusalem. Others see the "holy city" as a symbolic reference to the Jews. If these references to the Temple, courtyard, and holy city refer just to Jews, then this would be the only place in Revelation where it occurs. Thus, this has caused many to interpret this as another reference to believers, with the holy city as the church. The Antichrist's forces would attack and persecute the Christians. But God placed a time limit on this persecution; it would last only for 42 months.

The expression "42 months" occurs only here and in 13:5, although its equivalent can be found in other places. In 11:3 and 12:6, it is "1,260 days" (42 months x 30 days for each month). In 12:14, it is "time, times, and half a time" (a year, two years, and half a year), equaling three and a half years. This "three and a half years" is half of seven years, an important length of time in Daniel's prophecy.

In his vision, Daniel saw a king who "will defy the Most High and wear down the holy people of the Most High . . . they will be placed under his control for a time, times, and half a time" (Daniel 7:25). This king would make a seven-year treaty, "but after half this time, he will put an end to the sacrifices and offerings. Then as a climax to all his terrible deeds, he will set up a sacrilegious object that causes desecration" (Daniel 9:27). Finally, at the end of his prophecy, Daniel asked when the vision would be accomplished. The answer: "It will go on for a time, times, and half a time. When the shattering of the holy people has finally come to an end, all these things will have happened" (Daniel 12:7). And the angel added, "From the time the daily sacrifice is taken away and the sacrilegious object that causes desecration is set up to be worshiped, there will be 1,290 days" (Daniel 12:11).

In Daniel, the trampling and the setting up of a "sacrilegious object" in the Temple has been interpreted as (1) the desecration of the Temple by Antiochus

IV Epiphanes in 168-167 ^{B.C.} (see Daniel 11:31); (2) the destruction of the Temple by the Roman general Titus in ^{A.D.} 70 when one million Jews were killed; or (3) the future reign of the Antichrist (see Matthew 24:15; Revelation 13:5-7). As with so much of Bible prophecy, Daniel may have been seeing all those events rolled into one. Jesus, when speaking of the future, had said, “The time will come when you see what Daniel the prophet spoke about: the sacrilegious object that causes desecration standing in the holy place. . . . That will be a time of greater horror than anything the world has ever seen or will ever see again. In fact, unless that time of calamity is shortened, the entire human race will be destroyed. But it will be shortened for the sake of God’s chosen ones. Jerusalem will be conquered and trampled down by the Gentiles until the age of the Gentiles comes to an end” (Matthew 24:15, 21-22; Luke 21:24).

Daniel’s prediction had come true when Antiochus Epiphanes had sacrificed a pig to Zeus on the sacred Temple altar. Jesus’ words also were remembered when General Titus placed an idol on the site of the burned Temple after destroying Jerusalem. Yet both Daniel and Jesus were describing more than current events; they were also foreseeing the end times. The Antichrist will also become like a god and will be worshiped by the peoples of the earth (Revelation 13). There will not be the danger of the “entire human race” being destroyed, as Jesus had said, until the events recorded here in Revelation occur.

In Revelation, the three and a half years are equivalent to the length of time the holy city will trampled (11:2), the two witnesses prophesy (11:3), the woman is protected from the Dragon (12:6, 14), and the Antichrist (the “beast”) reigns (13:5-7). That these time periods are the same length may or may not mean that they will occur at the same time. They all may be simultaneous. Another explanation is that the first three and a half years of that seven-year period involve the preaching of the two witnesses and the protection of the woman in the wilderness (a symbol explained in chapter 12), while the second three and a half years is the time of the Antichrist’s (the “beast”) reign and the trampling of the holy city.

Another question involves whether these are actual calendar years or symbolic lengths of time. The answer is unknown, although John used numbers as symbolic in other places in Revelation (see 2:10; 4:4; 7:4). The numbers here could be symbolic but still describe distinct periods of time. In Revelation, however, the number seven symbolizes perfection and completeness, so it is possible that the seven years simply refers to the completion of time, God’s perfect timing. The main point is that God has set time limits and is in complete control of all of the events that will occur at the end of history. His plan will be completed; the plans of evil will be thwarted.

11:3 Despite the fact that the holy city will be trampled and God's people will suffer under the Antichrist, God will give power to two witnesses. During this time of tribulation, the merciful God will still offer people a chance to hear and respond to the truth.

There are two views about the identity of the two witnesses. The first view is that these witnesses are two men sent to prophesy to the Jews. In this regard, various names of Old Testament saints have been suggested (Enoch and Elijah, because both had been taken to heaven without dying; or Moses and Elijah, because both did similar miracles). Moses and Elijah also appeared with Christ at his transfiguration (see Matthew 17:1-7). Jewish tradition anticipates that Moses and Elijah will return before the end (see Deuteronomy 18:15-18; Malachi 4:5-6). The other view is that the two witnesses symbolize the witnessing church.

These two witnesses are described as clothed in sackcloth, the ancient garb of the prophets of God (Isaiah 20:2; Daniel 9:3; Zechariah 13:4). Wearing sackcloth was a sign of mourning (Isaiah 37:1-2; Jeremiah 4:8; 6:26; Jonah 3:5-8). These prophets were in mourning for what was happening to God's people and the evil that runs rampant in the world. These witnesses will prophesy during those 1,260 days, that is, during the same time period of 42 months (42 x 30 days per month) that the holy city is being trampled (11:2).

11:4 John described these two prophets as two olive trees. This picture is in Zechariah 4:14. Zechariah saw a vision of a lampstand and two olive trees. In the context of Zechariah, these two anointed ones may have referred to Joshua and Zerubbabel who had the special task of completing the rebuilding of God's Temple in Jerusalem after its destruction by the Babylonians (Zechariah 4:6-10; 8:11-14). Zechariah's vision had been given to encourage and strengthen Joshua and Zerubbabel in their difficult task, for the people who were rebuilding the Temple had been facing much opposition. Surely it must have encouraged them to hear from God's prophet that God was on their side. Like Joshua and Zechariah, the two witnesses stood before the Lord, doing his work despite great opposition.

John also described the two witnesses as two lampstands. There is much debate about what the "lampstands" symbolize. Many think they symbolize the church because the churches to whom John wrote are called "lampstands" (1:12-13, 20). The two witnesses may symbolize Jews and Christians joined in the church, or they could be the martyrs (two churches were especially being persecuted as reported in the letters in chapters 2 and 3—the churches at Smyrna and Philadelphia).

Oil and light often symbolize spiritual revival, and the two witnesses will speak God's message and spark a revival among the people on the earth. Some take this to mean that there will be a great harvest among the Jews who will become believers through the testimony of these two prophets. In any case, the power and authority of the prophets (or the church as a whole) to witness comes from God alone—not by might or by power, but by his Spirit (Zechariah 4:6).

11:5 These two witnesses, here called prophets, were divinely protected so that they could give the testimony that God had called them to give. If anyone tries to harm them, fire flashes from their mouths and consumes their enemies. Their ability to do this was a judgment from God against those who would stop them from delivering their message. Note, Elijah had called down fire from heaven (1 Kings 18:36-38; 2 Kings 1:10-14). It is unknown what aspects of this description are literal and which are symbolic. But the point is that no one will be able to stop these two prophets until God's appointed time (see 11:7).

11:6 Like Elijah, these prophets have power to shut the skies so that no rain will fall. Elijah had done the same, as recorded in 1 Kings 17:1, 7. These prophets would stop the rain from falling for as long as they prophesy—meaning 1,260 days (11:3) or three and a half years, the same amount of time that Elijah had kept the rain from falling (James 5:17; also Luke 4:25).

Like Moses, these prophets also have the power to turn the rivers and oceans into blood, and to send every kind of plague upon the earth as often as they wish (Exodus 7–11). With the devastation already caused by the seals and the trumpets, the additional horror of a drought and no drinkable water would bring great suffering to those left on the earth. Through these difficulties, God would call people to turn to him. This would be their last and only hope. They must believe the message of these prophets from God.

11:7 At the end of the 1,260 days (three and a half years), the two witnesses would complete their testimony. God had given them that amount of time to preach the message of salvation, but then God would remove their supernatural protection and powers and would allow the beast that comes up out of the bottomless pit to conquer and kill them.

Who is this “beast”? In Revelation, the word “beast” refers to the Antichrist. This is the first of 36 references to this person in this book. He is also mentioned in other places in the Bible. Daniel described the beast as a “little horn,” who would speak arrogantly (Daniel 7:8-27). The Antichrist would blasphemously set himself against God by persecuting believers and defiling the Lord's holy place (Daniel 9:27; 11:20-39). Jesus also predicted a sacrilegious figure who would terrorize God's people (Mark 13:14, 20). Paul wrote of a man of lawlessness who would seek to dethrone God and use Satan's power to deceive people (2 Thessalonians 2:3-4, 9-10). John is the only biblical writer to use the term "Antichrist," described as an opponent of Christ (1 John 2:18, 22; 4:3; 2 John 7).

This vision presents a figure who fulfills these earlier prophecies. Abruptly introduced here, more details are given in coming chapters. This man of evil, known as the beast, would be dedicated to opposing God. Using Satan's power (12:9), the beast would gain control over the world, force people to worship him, establish the wicked kingdom of Babylon, and persecute those who refuse to worship him (13:16-17).

Some individuals in history stand out as so evil that people of their time have considered them to be the Antichrist of Scripture—people like Caligula, Nero, Stalin, and Hitler. The Bible teaches, however, that many antichrists will appear, but one will stand out (1 John 2:18). People who have been completely "against Christ" have done their evil in this world, but one will come who will be even more wicked and powerful. He will be the Antichrist, the beast, as first mentioned here in 11:7. This beast will come out of a great rebellion against God and then will be revealed (2 Thessalonians 2:3, 7). While postmillennialists typically interpret these passages as having already been fulfilled, most other Christians believe that these prophecies refer to a figure in the future, the Antichrist, who will arise at the very end of history to oppose God.

The beast would attack and kill the two witnesses. Up to this point, the witnesses had been supernaturally protected from harm for 1,260 days. But then God would allow them to be killed by the Antichrist. Just as the "little horn" was "waging war against the holy people and was defeating them" (Daniel 7:21), so the Antichrist would kill God's representatives. Whether these two witnesses are two literal individuals or represent groups of people, the Antichrist would be allowed to attack, overpower, and kill them.

11:8 After the beast would kill them, he would refuse even to give them a burial, preferring to desecrate their bodies by allowing them to lie in the main street of Jerusalem. In the eastern world, to be deprived of burial is an act of great indignity.

John wrote that the city is called "Sodom" and "Egypt," but more exactly, it would be the place where their Lord was crucified. Some commentators believe that the city where the witnesses will be killed is Jerusalem, figuratively called Sodom and Egypt because of the sin and idolatry there. Sodom represents the epitome of sexual sin and idolatry; Egypt represents the height of persecution and hatred of God's people. Both Sodom and Egypt had been destroyed by God's power (Genesis 19:24-25; Exodus 12:31-33; 14:27-28). If this is literally the city of Jerusalem, this once great city and capital of Israel would become enemy territory, a place of immorality and persecution of God's people.

11:9-10 The bodies of the two witnesses would not be buried but left in the street (11:8) for three and a half days. That time period corresponds to the three and a half years of their ministry (1,260 days; 11:3). For the mid-Tribulation position, these three and a half days are the Great Tribulation. Refusing to bury the bodies was the greatest dishonor that could be given. In fact, the people are so happy about the deaths of these men that they give presents to each other to celebrate the deaths of the prophets who had tormented them. The words of these prophets had pricked people's consciences, and they did not want to hear the message. The ability of the prophets to inflict physical affliction in the form of drought, plagues, and spoiled water supply (11:6) had also been a torment to the people who had blamed the prophets for those troubles. The world today rejoices when God's spokesmen for truth and morality are silenced or suffer setbacks.

11:11-12 Because God always controls events and timing, these two witnesses remained dead for only three and a half days (see 11:9). Their bodies had been left out for all to see, but suddenly, the spirit of life from God entered them, and they stood up. Later, the Antichrist would copy this resurrection (13:3).

Obviously, the merriment surrounding their death stopped, and terror struck all who were staring at them. Next, a voice from heaven said, "Come up here!" Then the two witnesses rose to heaven in a cloud.

Mid-tribulationists base much of their view on these verses. They believe that the church will be raptured after three and a half years of the tribulation, at the sounding of the seventh trumpet (which occurs in 11:15; see also 1 Corinthians 15:52). According to this view, the church will face persecution for the first three and a half years of the seven-year tribulation period (Daniel 7:25; 9:27). In the second half of the tribulation, the Antichrist and those who chose to follow him will be the target of God's wrath. Mid-tribulationists also believe that the book of Revelation is chronological, so that this rapture will occur halfway through the years of tribulation. Mid-tribulationists see the two witnesses as representing the believers being raptured at the mid-point of the tribulation, calling the two witnesses to "come up." That they go up to heaven in a cloud compares to 1 Thessalonians 4:16-17.

Those who believe that the book of Revelation is cyclical (that is, the visions are repetitions of one another, intensifying as they go) may see this as the rapture of the church. They would say, however, that the rapture will occur at the end of the tribulation rather than in the middle, for this event occurs just before the last trumpet.

The two witnesses ascend to heaven in full view of their enemies who had been gleeful over their deaths. The main point is that God alone possesses authority over life and death and that only those who believe in him will be taken to be with him forever.

11:13 As part of the vindication of his two witnesses, God sent a terrible earthquake immediately after the ascension of the two witnesses—an earthquake that destroyed a tenth of the city. Ezekiel had prophesied of an earthquake that would precede the end of history (Ezekiel 38:19-20). Zechariah also had seen the Mount of Olives split in two (Zechariah 14:3-5).

In this earthquake, seven thousand people were killed. The survivors were terrified, but they gave glory to the God of heaven (see 14:6-7). It is possible that these survivors were converted by the miraculous acts they had just seen, or that this glory they gave to God was no more than forced homage. That is, they may have recognized that God is all-powerful but may not have repented of their sins.

11:14 The flying eagle had warned of three “terrors” (8:13). The first terror was recorded in 9:1-12; the second terror in 9:13-21 and 11:1-13. The third terror is coming quickly. Most likely, 11:18 hints at a third terror that will include the battle of Armageddon—the final battle between God and Satan. This will begin when the angel sounds the seventh trumpet.

THE SEVENTH TRUMPET BRINGS THE THIRD TERROR / 11:15-19

The first six trumpets had been blown in 8:6–9:21, then there was an interlude, just as there had been an interlude between the sixth and seventh seals (see 6:1–8:5). In addition, the fifth trumpet had brought in what was considered the first of three “terrors” (see 8:13), the sixth trumpet ushered in the second terror, and the seventh trumpet would bring the third terror.

11:15 The seventh angel blew his trumpet, in essence announcing the arrival of the King. There was now no turning back. The coming judgments were no longer partial but complete in their destruction. God unleashed his full wrath on the evil world that refused to turn to him (9:20-21). When his wrath would begin, there would be no escape.

The song of triumph by the heavenly hosts introduces the great themes of the following chapters. The end times had begun. When Christ first came, he brought in the Kingdom, yet his fulfilled Kingdom was still to come. The Kingdom is with God's people spiritually but has not been fulfilled historically. This verse refers to that final consummation. This is a worship pageant, portraying in heaven what will be unfolded on earth.

11:16-17 The twenty-four elders are mentioned again as sitting on their thrones before God and then falling on their faces in worship. These elders give thanks to God. This is much like the song they had sung in 4:8 and 4:11. There, however, they had referred to God as “the one who always was, who is, and who is still to come.” Here, God is and was, but no longer “is to come” because he had come and fulfilled history. He had taken his great power, meaning he had unleashed his power against evil, and had begun to reign. (For more information on these elders, see commentary at 4:4 and 7:11.)

11:18 The nations of the world were angry, but Christ's wrath would subdue them; he would destroy all who have caused destruction on the earth (see also Psalm 2:1-2, 4-5). Not only did Christ bring wrath, he also brought judgment and rewards. The judgment is described in chapter 20. No one will escape judgment, for Christ will even judge the dead. All believers (God's servants—the prophets and the holy people) will be rewarded according to their deeds. Throughout Revelation, the prophets are held in high esteem, separate from the rest of the believers, although joined with them as those who reverence God (see also 16:6; 18:20, 24; 22:6, 9). Unbelievers will be brought from the grave to face judgment and punishment for their sins. For more on judgment and rewards, see commentary in chapter 20.

11:19 Most likely, this was not a physical Temple sitting in the clouds, for the point is made later that there would be no Temple in the new Jerusalem (21:22). John had already seen God's throne and the altar in heaven (4:2; 6:9; 8:3). What John was seeing is the place where God dwells and the Ark of his covenant, which had always symbolized God's presence and faithfulness among his people. God's promises would be fulfilled and his purposes completed.

In this vision of God's open Temple, John saw heavenly worship before God himself. There would be no sin to act as a barrier between God and his people. In addition, the Ark of his covenant symbolized God's presence with his people. That John saw the Ark also assured the readers of God's presence and protection in their coming trials.

The flashes of lightning, thunder, hailstorm, and earthquake indicate God's signature on these events. These events occur here, at the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and they also occurred at the opening of the seventh seal (8:5). This will occur again at the pouring out of the seventh bowl (16:18-21).

REVELATION 12:1-17

THE WOMAN AND THE DRAGON / 12:1-17

The seventh trumpet (11:15) ushers in the bowl judgments (15:1–16:21), but in the intervening chapters (12–14), an interlude, John saw several signs regarding the cosmic warfare in Revelation—the conflict between God and Satan. He saw the source of all sin, evil, persecution, and suffering on the earth, and he understood why the great battle between the forces of God and Satan must soon take place. In these chapters the nature of evil is exposed, and Satan is revealed in all his wickedness.

In 12:1-6, the reader is given a description of the scene; the rest of the chapter (12:7-17) amplifies various parts of that basic scene. The picture of warfare between good and evil—between God and Satan—is found in 12:1-6. The next three sections—12:7-12; 12:13-17; and chapter 13—expand the story of 12:1-6. Much like a symphony where the first movement sets the theme and the rest of the movements supply variations on the theme, so the first six verses set the theme and the next three “movements” supply the variations. The scenes focus on three characters—the dragon, the woman, and the child. The first scene records the birth of the child (12:1-6), the second highlights the expulsion of the dragon from heaven (12:7-12), and the third shows the dragon attacking the woman and her children (12:13-17). Not many of these details can be traced to specific people or events but are used to depict God’s victory over evil and our need to trust in him.

12:1 The woman here represents much more than a woman. Pictured as a superhuman figure, she was clothed with the sun and had the moon under her feet. She was also wearing a victor’s crown, a crown of twelve stars.

In the Old Testament, the nation of Israel is pictured as the wife of God (Isaiah 54:5-6; Jeremiah 3:6-8; 31:32; Ezekiel 16:32; Hosea 2:16). This woman represents the faithful people in Israel who had been waiting for the Messiah who would be born from among them (Isaiah 9:6-7; Micah 5:2). They had recognized and had accepted the Messiah when he had come. Later in the chapter, this woman will represent all believers—Jews and Gentiles.

12:2 God had set apart the Jews for himself (Romans 9:4-5), and that nation had given birth to the Messiah, who would “rule all nations with an iron rod” (12:5; see also Psalm 2:9). In this part of the vision, John saw that this woman, Israel, was pregnant and awaiting delivery of the Messiah (see also Isaiah 26:17-18; 54:1; 66:7-12; Hosea 13:13; Micah 4:9-10; 5:2-3; Matthew 24:8). When Mary gave birth to a tiny baby in Bethlehem, the entire universe took notice, for this event held cosmic significance.

This picture also symbolizes the nation of Israel agonizing for centuries as it awaited the coming Messiah, the deliverer, who would destroy evil and usher in God's eternal Kingdom.

12:3 John saw a large red dragon, who was Satan (12:9). Satan was originally created for God's glory. But Satan arrogantly rebelled against God because he desired to be like God instead of giving glory to God (1 Timothy 3:6; Jude 6). After Adam and Eve's sin in the Garden of Eden, God had promised to destroy Satan and his demons and reestablish his own Kingdom. Speaking to the serpent, God had said, "You and the woman will be enemies, and your offspring and her offspring will be enemies. He will crush your head, and you will strike his heel" (Genesis 3:15). The offspring who ultimately crushes Satan's head is God's promised Savior, Jesus Christ. Jesus demonstrated his power over Satan through his miracles and exorcisms (Matthew 12:28-29). Hearing of his disciples' success on their first mission to spread his word, Jesus had said, "I saw Satan falling from heaven as a flash of lightning. And I have given you authority over all the power of the enemy" (Luke 10:18-19). Jesus' sacrificial death on the cross and his resurrection sealed his victory over Satan (Colossians 2:15; see also John 12:31; 16:11).

Although a great battle had been won, the war was not over. Since Eden, Satan has been the avowed enemy of God and his people, as pictured in John's vision. In the end, Satan will fight against God's people and will wage a final war against God. At that time, Satan will be decisively defeated.

This dragon is pictured as having seven heads and ten horns, with seven crowns on his heads. These are not supernatural, heavenly crowns, as the crown of twelve stars on the woman's head (12:1); instead, these heads and crowns symbolize nations over which Satan has control. Throughout Revelation, the number seven signifies completeness, so the seven heads and seven crowns could picture the totality of Satan's control over the earth. The dragon has authority only in this world. The "ten horns" allude to Daniel 7:7 and 24. The ten horns, or ten kings, are also mentioned in Revelation 17:12. The huge statue in Nebuchadnezzar's vision also had ten toes (Daniel 2:41-42). It is unclear whether these ten kings will be actual kings and nations or even the exact number ten, but Revelation 17:12-14 says they will make war against Christ. As the King of kings, Christ will conquer them.

12:4 This verse describes the fall of Satan (see details on 12:7-9). John saw a vision of the dragon standing before the woman waiting to devour the baby. This reminds us of the slaughter of the young boys in Bethlehem by Herod (Matthew 2:16). Herod was Satan's emissary, used by Satan to attempt to kill the child Jesus.

12:5 The woman gave birth to a boy. This boy child is Jesus, born to a devout Jew named Mary (Luke 1:26-33), born to the entire nation of Israel. But this boy would not be killed by Satan, for he would be born to rule all nations with an iron rod (see Psalm 2:6-9). As a shepherd defends his flock, so Christ will defend his church against those who attempt to destroy it. The iron rod pictures Jesus as the ultimate warrior. His life on earth is not pictured in this story, for John immediately saw the child snatched away from the dragon and caught up to God and to his throne. Jesus came to earth, accomplished his work, and then returned to heaven. This is the Ascension (Acts 1:9). Satan may have fought Jesus, but nothing stopped him from doing what he had been sent to earth to do.

12:6 The wilderness represents a place of spiritual refuge and protection from Satan, probably not meant to be literal because this chapter is mostly symbolic. In this place prepared by God, he cared for her for 1,260 days—the same number noted for the trampling of the holy city (11:2), the ministry of the two witnesses (11:3), and the rule of the beast (13:5). God would care for his people during the entire time when evil would be in control in the world. In the wilderness, God's people would be hounded by the people on the earth (those who would follow the beast), but God would watch over them. Many would be martyred, but God would care for them. The word translated care is literally "nourish." The woman will be provided with food miraculously, just as Elijah was cared for in the wilderness by God (1 Kings 17:2-4). God also provided manna in the wilderness for his people (Exodus 16:4).

Some think that this woman pictures the Jewish believers only. Others suggest that she symbolizes all believers, the true Israel. Depending on one's view of when the believers will be taken to heaven (before, in the middle of, or after this time of Great Tribulation), these symbols may be identified in different ways. Because God has chosen not to make it clear, it is best to simply understand that God is promising spiritual protection for his people who are still on the earth during this difficult time.

12:7-9 This is the first expansion on the pictures described in 12:1-6. What John saw next fills in for the readers more detail of what was described in 12:4

regarding Satan's expulsion from heaven.

Satan's expulsion from heaven began as a war in heaven between Michael and the angels of God and the dragon (Satan) and his angels. Michael is a high-ranking angel (called an archangel). Throughout Jewish literature, Michael is named as the one who comes to the aid of God's people. He was seen as one of their protectors (see also Daniel 10:13, 21; 12:1; Jude 1:9). Notice that the battle here was not between God and Satan or between Christ and Satan but between Michael and Satan. Warfare raged, and the dragon lost the battle. As a result, Satan and his minions were forced out of heaven. Having lost their place, they are already vanquished foes. Satan was thrown down to the earth, and he went about his work of deceiving the whole world—his final revolt before his destruction (20:10).

Here, the great dragon is identified as the ancient serpent called the Devil, or Satan. The Devil is not a symbol or legend; he is very real. The Devil, God's enemy, constantly tries to hinder God's work, but he is limited by God's power and can do only what he is permitted to do (Job 1:6–2:6). The name Satan means “accuser” (12:10). He actively looks for people to accuse and attack (1 Peter 5:8–9). Satan likes to pursue believers who are vulnerable in their faith, who are spiritually weak, or who are isolated from other believers (1 Peter 5:8).

Some consider this verse to describe warfare in the ancient past, but others think that Satan's fall to earth took place at Jesus' resurrection or ascension and that the 1,260 days (12:6) are a symbolic way of referring to the time between Christ's first and second comings. Still others say that Satan's defeat will occur in the middle of a literal seven-year Tribulation period, following the rapture of the church and preceding the second coming of Christ and the beginning of Christ's one-thousand-year reign. Regardless of the interpretation, God's clear teaching is that Christ is victorious—Satan has already been defeated because of Christ's death on the cross (12:10–12). Even though God permits the Devil to do his work in this world, God is still in control. And Jesus has complete power over Satan; he defeated Satan when he died and rose again. One day Satan will be bound forever, never again to do his evil work (20:10).

Satan fell to the earth with “all his angels”—referring to demons. This world is their prison, where, as the enemies of God, they work against God's people. Satan is not omnipresent—he cannot be everywhere at once, so his demons work for him. Demons are fallen angels, sinful spiritual beings who have Satan as their leader (Matthew 25:41; Luke 11:15). Revelation highlights three evil powers who will oppose God's people during the end times: Satan, pictured as a dragon (Revelation 12:9); the beast, better known as the Antichrist (13:1–10); and the false prophet (13:11; 16:13). Demons serve as agents of this evil trinity.

They seduce people, will establish the notorious kingdom of Babylon, and will lead a worldwide offensive against God's people (16:1-14).

12:10-12 Verses 10-12 comprise a hymn of praise to God for the defeat of Satan when he was thrown out of heaven. Despite Satan's power on this earth, he is and always will be a vanquished foe. A voice proclaims the victory of God's Kingdom and Christ's authority: Salvation means deliverance—not just spiritual salvation from sin, but freedom from the clutches of Satan. This had occurred because of God's power (strength exerted for believers) and Kingdom (his rule in believers' lives), and because of the authority of his Son. Both the Father and the Son have given this deliverance.

There is a promise that Satan is ultimately and forever defeated because of the blood of the Lamb and because of their testimony. The critical blow to Satan had come when the Lamb, Jesus Christ, had shed his blood for sinful humanity. The victory had been won by sacrifice—Christ's death to pay the penalty for sin. Those who accept this sacrifice become victors along with the Lamb. They confirm their loyalty to the Lamb through their testimony—some even to the point of death. The martyrs who were not afraid to die revealed their ultimate victory in that final act of faith. When a believer dies, Satan may think he has gained a victory. In reality, however, he has lost. In fact, he loses every time a believer dies. The victory of the saints is the heart of Revelation. In each of the letters to the seven churches (chapters 2–3), Christ had promised that those who are victorious will receive great reward.

Those in heaven will rejoice. But those left on earth will face terror. The reason? The Devil has come down to you in great anger, and he knows that he has little time. Knowing that his doom is sealed and that he will ultimately be defeated, Satan, in great anger, lashes out, attempting to take as many people with him as he can, as well as causing suffering and pain to those who are on God's side. Although the Devil is very powerful, as can be seen by the condition of our world, he is always under God's control. That is, he can only do what God permits him to do. One of the reasons God allows Satan to work evil and bring temptation is so that the false believers will be weeded out from Christ's true believers. Knowing that the last great confrontation with Jesus was near, Satan was desperately trying to recruit as great an enemy force as possible for this final battle.

12:13 Verses 7-12 describe the war in heaven and expand on verse 4; verses 13-17 describe the war on earth, expanding on verse 6. The dragon realized that he had been thrown down to the earth and was angry. He had lost the war in heaven (12:8), lost access to God and, thus, no longer was allowed to accuse the believers (12:10-11). He could not attack the child because the child had been taken up to heaven (12:5), and knew that his time was short (12:12). In his attempt to bring as many people with him, and in his anger at God's people, the dragon pursued the woman who had given birth to the child. The word "pursued" is the same word translated "persecute." Satan is stalking and killing God's people, hoping to do as much damage as possible. The woman symbolizes God's people. It is unclear if this refers to the Jews or to all believers. But those on earth at this time who believe in Jesus will be hounded by Satan. His anger at Christ will be redirected at Christ's people.

12:14 This verse repeats 12:6. The text says that the woman was given two wings like those of a great eagle, picturing divine protection and deliverance (see also Exodus 19:4; Deuteronomy 32:10-11; Psalm 91:4; Isaiah 40:31). Eagles were the largest birds known in Palestine. These great wings allowed her to fly to a place prepared for her in the wilderness, a place of safety, where she would be cared for and protected. God had prepared this safe place, as noted in 12:6.

The 1,260 days mentioned in 12:6 correspond to the time, times, and half a time mentioned here. "Time" means one year; "times" means two years; and "half a time" means half a year. This equals three and a half years, or 42 months (see 11:2), or 1,260 days (42 months x 30 days per month). Thus, the woman would be protected during the time of persecution. This could refer to the time period of the trampling of the holy city (11:2) or to the time when the Antichrist reigns (13:5), or to both, depending on how these time periods fall. The point is that God has prepared a place of spiritual protection for his people during the time when Satan will rampage across the earth. Many will die, but that will be their greatest victory over Satan. The time of that rampage has an end because God will bring an end to Satan and all evil.

12:15-16 The dragon spewed water from its mouth, hoping to drown the woman. A flood is a common Old Testament picture of overwhelming evil (see Psalms 18:4; 32:6; 69:1-2; 124:2-5; Nahum 1:8). This is a flood of lies and deceit in an attempt to drown the woman in sin. This could refer to the river of lies that will threaten Christians in the last days (see 13:14; Matthew 24:24; 2 Thessalonians 2:9-11).

Next, John saw that the earth helped her by opening its mouth and swallowing the river so that the flood could not hurt the woman. God used the earth to protect his people. God delivered Israel from Pharaoh by parting the Red Sea; once again, God supernaturally intervenes on behalf of his people (see Exodus 14:21-22; see also Isaiah 26:20; 42:15; 43:2; 50:2).

12:17 If the woman represents faithful Jews, then the phrase, the rest of her children, could refer to all believers—the entire church—all who keep God’s commandments and confess that they belong to Jesus. If the woman represents all believers (both Jew and Gentile), then “the rest of her children” could refer to all who come to Christ through the testimony of God’s people or to those specifically chosen for martyrdom. Because Satan could not bring down the group (the Jewish believers or the church at large), he waged war against individuals. “The rest of her children” could also refer to all of God’s people after the first child, Jesus. All believers are considered to be Jesus’ family (Romans 8:29; Hebrews 2:11).

REVELATION 12:18–13:18

THE BEAST OUT OF THE SEA / 12:18–13:10

Chapter 13 introduces Satan's (the dragon's) two evil accomplices: (1) the beast out of the sea (the Antichrist, 13:1-10) and (2) the beast out of the earth (the false prophet, 13:11-18). Together, the three evil beings form an unholy trinity in direct opposition to the Holy Trinity of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit.

12:18 The beast was foreshadowed in 11:7 as the one who would attack the two witnesses. He was described there as the beast from the bottomless pit. At this point, John would see the beast arrive. The dragon (the subject of chapter 12) was waiting on the shore of the sea, ready to call out one who would help him pursue God's people.

13:1 The beast rose up out of the sea to do the dragon's (Satan's) bidding. John described the beast as horrible to look at, for it had seven heads and ten horns, with ten crowns on its horns. Much like the description of the dragon in 12:3, this could simply be a picture of the dragon's authority over the beast. It may also be that the ten horns represent national leaders who followed the beast; their crowns symbolized their authority, but they actually belonged to the beast—who belonged to Satan. Initially, this beast was identified with Rome because the Roman Empire, in its early days, encouraged an evil lifestyle, persecuted believers, and opposed God and his followers. But the beast also symbolizes the Antichrist—not Satan, but someone under Satan's power and control who would be able to draw the whole world to himself.

On each head the beast had names that blasphemed God. Some have suggested that these refer to the divine names that had been given to various Roman emperors. Whether referring to the Roman emperors or not, these blasphemous names signified the beast's challenge of God's sovereignty and his setting himself up as god.

13:2 This Antichrist seems like a combination of the four beasts that Daniel had seen centuries earlier in a vision (Daniel 7:4-8), combining the characteristics of a leopard, a bear, and a lion. In Daniel's vision, the lion with eagle's wings represented Babylon with her swift conquests (statues of winged lions have been recovered from Babylon's ruins). The bear that ravaged the lion was Medo-Persia. The three ribs in its mouth represented the conquests of three major enemies. The leopard was Greece, its wings picturing the swiftness of Alexander the Great's campaign as he conquered much of the civilized world in four years (334-330 B.C.). The leopard's four heads were the four divisions of the Greek Empire after Alexander's death. The fourth beast pointed to both Rome and the end times. Many Bible scholars believe that the ten horns on the fourth beast correspond to the ten kings who will reign shortly before God sets up his everlasting Kingdom (see also Revelation 13:1). These ten kings had still not come to power at the time of John's vision recorded in the book of Revelation (17:12). The little horn is a future human ruler or the antichrist (see also 2 Thessalonians 2:3-4). God was illustrating the final end of all worldly kingdoms in contrast to his eternal Kingdom.

In combining these four beasts, John's vision reveals the epitome of evil power. The dragon (Satan) gave the beast (the Antichrist) his own power and throne and great authority. Those same words are used in the hymns in Revelation sung to God. So Satan attempted to again make a false copy, by giving his beast his power, throne, and authority. As the dragon (12:17) was in opposition to God, so the beast from the sea was against Christ and may be seen as Satan's false messiah. The Antichrist will appropriate the powers of government and religion in himself. As a political figure, the Antichrist will become so powerful that opposing him will be futile. All nations on earth will serve him. Opposition against the Antichrist's rule will be brutally suppressed. Only those who are branded with the beast's mark, showing their loyalty to him, will be able to participate in the world's economy.

13:3 Using spectacular miracles, the Antichrist persuaded the world to accept his false teachings. The beast seduced the world by imitating Christ's resurrection when he recovered from a fatal wound. People will follow him because they will be awed by his power and miracles. Paul had written, "This evil man will come to do the work of Satan with counterfeit power and signs and miracles. He will use every kind of wicked deception to fool those who are on their way to destruction because they refuse to believe the truth that would save them" (2 Thessalonians 2:9-10).

13:4 The ultimate goal of the dragon was, of course, to draw people away from Christ and to himself. He wanted people's worship. Thus, the people who were astounded by the beast worshiped the dragon for giving the beast such power, in addition to worshipping the beast. Worshipping anything other than Christ is worshipping Satan. The people explained, "Who is able to fight against the beast?" Some scholars think the beast will actually bring world peace so that no one can fight against him. But that peace will be based on domination and without real substance; thus, it will be shallow and short-lived.

13:5-6 The Antichrist was allowed to speak great blasphemies against God, exalting himself as God. This compares to the “little horn” that Daniel had seen, “The little horn had . . . a mouth that was boasting arrogantly” (Daniel 7:8). He blasphemed God by placing himself in God’s position. The Antichrist slandered God’s name and all who live in heaven, who are his temple (God’s people). Such pride and blasphemy are the heart of this world. The Antichrist will be the archenemy of all who side with Christ.

Whether one subscribes to the pre-Tribulation or post-Tribulation theory, the text is clear that there will be believers on earth during the Tribulation. Those who believe that the Christians will have been taken before this time think that the believers on earth will be those who will become Christians during this time of tribulation. Those who believe the church will not be taken until after the Tribulation would assert that all believers on the earth at this time will face this persecution.

The Antichrist will unite all nations and all religions under his authority. Even so, the power given to the beast will be limited by God. He will allow the beast to exercise authority only for a short time—forty-two months. This is the same time period as noted in 11:2 for the trampling of the holy city, in 11:3 for the ministry of the two witnesses (stated as 1,260 days), and in 12:6 and 12:14 for the protection of the woman (God’s people). (For more information on that time period, see commentary on 11:2.) Even while the beast is in power, God is still in control (11:15; 12:10-12).

13:7-8 The Antichrist was responsible for unleashing the Tribulation, the most intense period of persecution God’s people would ever experience (Mark 13:14, 20). The beast would be allowed (by God) to wage war against God’s holy people and to overcome them (see also 12:17; Daniel 7:21). The phrase, “wage war” does not refer to a military campaign (at least not yet), but to harassing God’s people. The Antichrist would “overcome” believers, but he could only do so physically, as part of this world. In reality, those who died for the faith are the ultimate overcomers, for they have participated in Christ’s death (12:11). The Antichrist could not harm God’s holy people spiritually. The Antichrist would establish worldwide dominance—given by God—to rule over every tribe and people and language and nation. He would demand to be worshiped as God (13:8). And many will worship him. But only those whose names were not written in the Book of Life. As noted in 3:5, the Book of Life is a register in heaven of those who have trusted in Christ for their salvation (see also 17:8; 20:12, 15; 21:27). Only the people whose names are written in this register will be accepted into heaven. Despite the horrors of this time of tribulation, not one believer will be lost, for their names are in the book. Two types of people exist—those whose names are in the book and those whose names are not in the book.

The Book of Life belongs to the Lamb who was killed before the world was made. This refers to God's plan from eternity past to have his Son redeem mankind from sin.

13:9-10 This phrase, anyone who is willing to hear should listen and understand, also appears at the end of all the letters to the seven churches. It warns readers that they had better listen.

These verses come from Jeremiah 15:2. Here they describe how believers should act during this time of tribulation by the beast (see 14:12). They understand that God is in control. He already has it all in his plan—some who are destined for prison will be arrested and taken away. Some who are destined for death will be killed. Their job, at this point, would be to show endurance and faith. God has the battle under control; this time of persecution would only draw closer the time of Christ's glorious return. See 1 Peter 2:19-24 for more on suffering patiently.

THE BEAST OUT OF THE EARTH / 13:11-18

The first beast had come out of the sea (13:1), but this second beast came out of the earth. Later identified as the false prophet (16:13; 19:20; 20:10), he was a counterfeit of the Holy Spirit. This beast completed the unholy trinity with the dragon (Satan) and the beast from the sea (the Antichrist). The false prophet would be in charge of the worldwide worship of the first beast.

13:11 There is a further imitation of Christ, the Lamb of God, in that the false prophet has two horns like those of a lamb (5:6). Perhaps his very similarity to Christ will be part of his deceptiveness. He may appear good, helpful, and caring—an “angel of light” (2 Corinthians 11:14). The beast looked like a lamb but spoke like a dragon. The source of his words was Satan himself—the dragon.

As with their interpretation of the first beast, scholars are divided about the beast from the earth. The different thoughts are that the second beast represents either (1) a movement or power, or (2) an individual who, at the end times, will arise along with the Antichrist to take control of the world. Those who believe that this beast represents a movement or power point to the first beast as representing the worldwide anti-God system, with the second beast representing false teachers who cause people to stray.

13:12 The first beast's authority came from Satan; the second beast exercised all the authority of the first beast. This second beast's job was to make all the earth and those who belong to this world to worship the first beast. The false prophet was in position when the Antichrist was killed and came back to life. Then the false prophet made everyone worship the Antichrist.

13:13-15 The second beast was also empowered to do astounding miracles, such as making fire flash down from heaven. Again, in copycat style, this was the same miracle that the two witnesses for God could perform (11:5), which is a reference to a miracle of Elijah recorded in 1 Kings 18:36-38. Ironically, Elijah had performed that miracle so that God could show who was a true prophet and who was not. Christ had warned, "False messiahs and false prophets will rise up and perform miraculous signs and wonders so as to deceive, if possible, even God's chosen ones" (Mark 13:22). This miracle and others deceived all the people who belong to this world.

As with all worship that is not of the one true God, this worship of the beast is idolatry. The false prophet ordered the people of the world to make a great statue of the first beast. This brings to mind the great statue that Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had built to himself and then had required everyone to worship (Daniel 3:1-11).

The false prophet was permitted (by God) to give life to this statue so that it could speak. The statue seemed to live and supposedly spoke to its worshipers. This, again, convinced many on this earth. The God of the Christians seemed to be mysteriously silent and invisible, but this god could be seen and he spoke audibly. No wonder many followed. And no wonder the believers needed to be warned so that they would not be swayed from the truth.

The heart of the false prophet's power is in the next words, anyone refusing to worship the statue must die. Christianity had become a capital offense—for only those who followed Christ were unwilling to worship the beast's image. This was universal persecution.

13:16-17 The false prophet went further in the worship of the beast by requiring everyone, no matter their age or social status, to be given a mark on the right hand or on the forehead. The mark is described as the name of the beast or the number representing his name (13:18). This mark of the beast was designed to mock the seal that God had already placed on his followers (7:2-3).

Just as God had marked his people to save them, so Satan's beast marked his people to save them from the persecution that he would inflict upon God's followers. Identifying this particular mark is not as important as identifying the purpose of the mark. Those who accepted it showed their allegiance to Satan, their willingness to operate within the economic system he promoted, and their rebellion against God. To refuse the mark meant to commit oneself entirely to God, preferring death to compromising one's faith in Christ.

People will have to worship the beast in order to receive the mark and to be able to buy or sell anything. Clearly those who refuse the mark (the Christians) will be set up for economic ruin, homelessness, and hunger. In the end times, no one will be able to buy or sell anything without the mark of the beast.

13:18 The meaning of this number has been discussed more than that of any other part of the book of Revelation. The three sixes have been said to represent many things including the unholy trinity of Satan, the first beast, and the false prophet (16:13).

Wisdom is needed to understand this. Throughout church history, people have assigned numerical values to the letters of names to try to identify the beast. The first readers of this book probably applied the number to the Emperor Nero, a man symbolizing all the evils of the Roman Empire. (The Greek letters of Nero's name represent numbers that total 666.) The number continues to be linked with various world leaders, institutions, and types of economic transactions.

Because the book of Revelation is filled with symbolism, this number probably is also symbolic. The number seven is used in the book as a symbol of God's perfection. Conversely, the number six symbolizes human imperfection. So 666, then, symbolizes the number of a man—all human beings and their continued imperfection. Three sixes together—666—implies a trinity of imperfection—a parody of the number seven. The number symbolizes the worldwide dominion and complete evil of this unholy trinity designed to undo Christ's work and overthrow him.

REVELATION 14

THE LAMB AND THE 144,000 / 14:1-5

Chapter 13 describes the onslaught of evil that will occur when Satan and his helpers control the world. Chapter 14 gives a glimpse into eternity to show believers what awaits them if they endure. Their suffering will not be meaningless; it will only be a prelude into eternity with God. This chapter explains what will happen to those who refuse to receive the mark of the beast, and what will happen eventually to the beast and his servants.

14:1 The battle was still occurring on the earth—believers were being persecuted and killed for their faith, unable to buy or sell anything because they had refused to worship the beast (13:15-17). To encourage John, God revealed what would await believers in heaven, reminding him that believers have been sealed by God.

The Lamb is Jesus the Messiah, and Mount Zion is probably the heavenly Jerusalem. This scene contrasts with the dragon standing on the edge of the sea and the evil world empire (13:1). “Mount Zion,” here, may refer to the earthly location where Christ will begin his millennial reign, or it may refer to the church, the heavenly Mount Zion (Hebrews 12:22). Chapter 21 will describe that new city—the New Jerusalem. This scene pictures the ultimate victory of Christ and his followers. The battle may be raging on earth, but the war has already been won.

Standing with the Lamb are 144,000 who had his name and his Father’s name written on their foreheads. This contrasts with the reference in 13:16 to the unbelievers on earth who had received the mark of the beast on their foreheads.

This group of 144,000 represents the same spiritual reality as the group of 144,000 in 7:4, the number symbolizing completeness (see commentary on 7:4). The 144,000 mentioned in 7:4 had been sealed against the difficulties to come on earth. That is, all those who have been or will be saved are protected spiritually and sealed for heaven. In this passage, all those who had been sealed and promised heaven were standing with Christ. In other words, no believers will be lost, forgotten, or misplaced. Everyone who has been sealed with God’s seal will one day be with Christ. All believers throughout history will be with Christ. The promise is certain. The number will be complete.

14:2 John heard a sound from heaven. He described it as the roaring of a great waterfall or the rolling of mighty thunder. Many different voices had spoken to John in his vision. Thus far, he has described them as sounding like “thunder” or a “waterfall.” Here he also described the sound as many harpists playing together. This scene of great rejoicing in heaven includes victorious singing and instrumental music. This was not an angelic choir singing, but the 144,000 who had been redeemed (14:3).

14:3 The 144,000 who had been sealed by God and brought to their reward in heaven sang a wonderful new song in front of the throne of God and before the four living beings and the twenty-four elders (see commentary on 4:4 and 4:6). The angel choir had sung a “new song” in 5:9, but the new song mentioned here could only be sung by the people who had been redeemed from the earth—purchased by the blood of the Lamb (see also 7:14; 12:11; 19:13). The angels, creatures, and elders could not sing it, for they had not experienced redemption from sin so they could not learn the song. The redeemed sang a glorious song of praise to the Lamb, who was standing with them, and the hosts of heaven were the audience. Only because of his sacrifice were they able to be in heaven.

14:4-5 They refers to the 144,000, the true believers whose robes had been washed and made white in Christ’s blood (7:14) through his death. They are described as spiritually undefiled, pure as virgins, meaning that they had not been involved with the pagan world system. In the Old Testament, idolatry was often portrayed as spiritual adultery (Jeremiah 3:6; Hosea 2:5). These believers were spiritually pure; they had remained faithful to Christ. They are pictured as the pure bride of Christ (see also 21:9).

They were following the Lamb wherever he goes, indicating that they had followed him exclusively—referring to following Christ’s instructions and his example. They have been purchased from among people means that Christ had bought them with his blood (5:9; 7:14; 12:11; 19:13). The price of people’s sin was paid on the cross—a free gift. But only those who accept that gift are saved. The phrase, a special offering to God and to the Lamb refers to the act of dedicating the first part of the harvest as holy to God (Exodus 23:19; see also James 1:18). These believers had been dedicated solely and completely to God. They belonged to no one else—and never would.

No falsehood was found in these believers’ mouths—they are blameless. These believers, bought by Christ’s blood and redeemed, had also been made perfect in the presence of the Lamb. In contrast to the evil world that loves “to live a lie” (22:15), these people were blameless because of their faith in Christ.

THE THREE ANGELS / 14:6-13

In this section, three angels contrast the destiny of believers with that of unbelievers. This is a transition between the picture of the coming triumph of God's people and the pouring out of the seven bowl judgments upon the earth. God will judge evil.

14:6-7 Another angel flew and announced a message to the people of the earth (as did the eagle in 8:13). This angel was carrying the everlasting Good News to preach to the people who belong to this world. The angel's message called people to fear God and give glory to him because the time has come when he will sit as judge. Even in these final moments of judgment, God gave the people the opportunity to repent.

The message is proclaimed to everyone—every nation, tribe, language, and people; therefore, no one can have the excuse that they did not know the gospel message. As Paul said in Romans, “They have no excuse whatsoever for not knowing God” (Romans 1:20). This is a key theme of Revelation—whenever there has been a time of judgment, there has been a preceding time of warning, when people are given the opportunity to repent. However, those who refuse want nothing to do with God; their punishment is justified.

14:8 A second angel followed the first angel, shouting that Babylon is fallen (see also Isaiah 21:9; Jeremiah 51:8). In the Old Testament, Babylon was the name of both an evil city and an immoral empire—a world center for idol worship. Outside that city, Nebuchadnezzar had built a great statue to himself and had required everyone to worship it (Daniel 3:1-6; compare Revelation 13:14-15). King Nebuchadnezzar had reached the apex of power and pride, only to find himself judged by God (Daniel 4:28-33). The Babylonians had ransacked Jerusalem and had taken many of the people of Judah into captivity (see 2 Kings 24 and 1 Chronicles 36). Just as Babylon had been Judah's worst enemy, the Roman Empire was the worst enemy of the early Christians. John, who probably did not dare speak openly against Rome, was applying the name “Babylon” to this enemy of God's people (Rome)—and, by extension, to all of God's enemies of all times. “Babylon” is the name given to the civilization that was seduced by the beast (see also 17:1-9). This world system is filled with idolatry, corruption, and sexual sin (18:2-3, 7), a wellspring of ungodly religion, government, and economics.

The angel's words here are a prediction: the actual fall of the city would not occur until the judgment of the last bowl (16:19). God would judge this evil power because she seduced the nations of the world and made them drink the wine of her passionate immorality (see also 17:2). This draws from the prophecy of Jeremiah (Jeremiah 51:7). This pictures the godlessness and sinfulness of those who have been lured away from God into a world system that fulfills their lusts and passions but ultimately destroys them. Ultimately, God will destroy this evil and judge the people.

14:9-11 A third angel followed the first two, shouting a warning to anyone who worships the beast and his statue (13:14), or accepts his mark on the forehead or the hand, so that they can continue to function in the world (13:16-18).

In chapter 13, the believers were told how difficult it would be for them if they refused the mark of the beast. In these verses, an angel explained to the nonbelievers what would happen to them if they do receive the mark of the beast. Their eventual judgment would be much worse and the consequences eternal. While those who belong to God would suffer and be killed, they would have a glorious eternity awaiting them (14:1-5). Those who worship the beast and accept his mark, however, would be choosing to operate according to the Antichrist's world economic system and would ultimately face God's judgment. To get what the world values, these people would have turned away from God and violated Christian principles.

Thus, they must drink the wine of God's wrath. The Old Testament often pictures God's anger as being in a cup, ready to be poured out (see Job 21:20; Psalm 75:8; Isaiah 51:17; Jeremiah 25:15-38). This cup of wrath is undiluted. God's wrath will be in its strongest form. The full extent of his anger, undiluted by mercy and grace, would soon be poured out on those who had adamantly refused to turn from sin and receive his salvation.

Their future torment will be with fire and burning sulfur—a picture taken from the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Genesis 19:24). Fire and sulfur are used as instruments of torture in 19:20; 20:10; and 21:8. The actual picture may be symbolic, but there is no doubt as to the horror and finality of this judgment, for the smoke of their torment rises forever and ever. In contrast to the redeemed who could “rest from all their toils and trials” (14:13), the unbelievers would have no relief day or night from their torment. Having chosen the side of the beast, they would suffer for it. Jesus described eternal punishment as “unquenchable fires” (Mark 9:44). For more on eternal punishment, see commentary at 20:10.

14:12 A similar statement is in 13:10 regarding the difficulties that believers will face under the Antichrist. This verse follows the promise of God's punishment for the wicked as an encouragement to God's holy people to endure persecution patiently and remain firm to the end. This news about God's ultimate triumph should encourage God's people to remain faithful through every trial and persecution, even death. The result of refusing to worship the Antichrist will be temporal; but the result of turning from Christ will be eternal.

14:13 The angels had spoken, and John heard another voice from heaven. This time John was commanded to write this down, emphasizing its importance to the readers. The voice pronounced the second of seven beatitudes in Revelation: Blessed are those who die in the Lord from now on. (The first beatitude is in 1:3.) Believers would face persecution and death at the hands of the Antichrist and his worldwide power and influence. The phrase “from now on” doesn't mean that some martyrs for the faith would not be blessed; in fact, those already dead are waiting for the final vindication (6:9-11).

Those who die in the Lord are blessed indeed, for they will rest from all their toils and trials. The torment of unbelievers will leave them with “no relief day or night” (14:11), but the believers who go to be with Christ will have “rest.” This “rest” does not mean that heaven will be one big easy chair. The “toils” and “trials” refer to the difficulties of remaining steadfast in the faith in the evil world. Their “rest” is the cessation of persecution. In addition, their good deeds follow them. The unbelievers may have done some “good deeds” during their time on earth, but those deeds will not save them. In the end, those good deeds will be destroyed. But God remembers believers' good deeds; indeed, they are the basis for the rewards he will give (1 Corinthians 3:13-15; Ephesians 6:8).

THE HARVEST OF THE EARTH / 14:14-20

The final verses of this chapter give two visions of final judgment. Verses 14-16 describe the harvest of the earth compared to a grain harvest. Verses 17-20 picture the horror of this final judgment of God upon sin.

14:14 John sees the Son of Man, Christ. In the vision, Christ may be waiting for the angelic messenger to announce the time of the harvest, just as other angels have announced the judgments. He wore a gold crown on his head and had a sharp sickle in his hand—waiting for the announcement that the harvest of the earth was to begin.

14:15-16 An angel came from the Temple—referring to the presence of God—bringing with him the command to use the sickle. The phrase the crop is ripe on the earth takes the Old Testament picture of divine judgment as a “harvest” (see Jeremiah 51:33; Hosea 6:11; Joel 3:13). One of Jesus’ parables also describes the end times as a harvest, “Let both grow together until the harvest. Then I will tell the harvesters to sort out the weeds and burn them and to put the wheat in the barn” (Matthew 13:30).

Without any further detail, the one sitting on the cloud swung his sickle over the earth, and the whole earth was harvested. There is some debate about who was being harvested—God’s people or the sinners. Some scholars have suggested that 14:14-16 pictures the harvesting of God’s people, while 14:17-18 pictures the harvest of sinners. Most likely, however, as Jesus’ parable seems to indicate, 14:14-16 indicates the harvest of all people. This is a general picture of the final judgment, with the elect being taken to heaven and the unbelievers being sent to eternal punishment, as recorded in the following verses.

14:17-18 Another angel arrived from the Temple in heaven, also from the presence of God (14:15). This angel also had a sharp sickle. This is probably a third picture of the same reality of coming judgment. First was the cup of unmixed wine to be poured out (14:10), second was the grain harvest (14:15-16), and third was the grape harvest (14:17-20). This third image stresses the violent nature of this final judgment. The Old Testament also pictures divine judgment as a grape harvest (see Isaiah 63:1-6; Lamentations 1:15; Joel 3:13). Revelation 19:15 describes the return of the victorious Christ, “He trod the winepress of the fierce wrath of almighty God”).

The angel who has power to destroy the world with fire could refer to the angel who had authority over the fire on the altar (8:3-5). The altar is connected both with the souls of the martyrs (6:9) and the prayers of the saints (8:3), both of which play a part in bringing about this final drama of ultimate judgment.

The angel with the sickle is told to gather the clusters of grapes from the vines of the earth, for they are fully ripe for judgment. While the previous picture of the harvest in 14:14-16 may have pictured both the bringing of the righteous to heaven and the destruction of the wicked, this picture is only of the judgment of the wicked. The clusters of grapes probably have no special symbolism other than indicating that the time for harvest had come. They were “ripe for judgment,” which means there would be no more waiting.

14:19-20 Obeying the command (14:18), the angel swung his sickle across the earth and loaded the grapes (picturing the unbelievers who will receive punishment) into the great winepress of God’s wrath. A “winepress” was a large vat or trough where grapes would be collected and then smashed. The juice would flow out of a duct that led into a large holding vat. The unbelievers are collected and trodden in the winepress outside the city, possibly referring to Jerusalem. Since Jesus was crucified outside the walls of Jerusalem, this great scene of judgment is pictured there (see also Joel 3:12-14; Zechariah 14:1-4; John 19:20; Hebrews 13:12).

The grisly detail of the blood flowing out pictures the ultimate horror of this judgment. The distance of 180 miles is approximately the north-south length of Palestine. The hyperbole is meant to show the total and complete destruction of the wicked.

REVELATION 15:1-4

THE SONG OF MOSES AND OF THE LAMB / 15:1-4

John was describing not two separate songs but one song celebrating deliverance and victory. They had been delivered from the power of the Antichrist, but they were in heaven because they had been delivered from sin through the death of the Lamb. Each line comes from a phrase in the Psalms or Prophets.

15:1 This next event that John saw in heaven was seven angels who were holding the seven last plagues. These plagues were in golden bowls, given to these angels by one of the four living creatures (15:6-7). The seven last plagues are also called the seven bowl judgments. They actually begin in the next chapter. These plagues would end the reign of terror by the Antichrist, the reign of Satan, and evil itself, bringing God's wrath to completion.

15:2 John saw what seemed to be a crystal sea mixed with fire. This is similar to the "sea of glass" described in 4:6, located before the throne of God. Here it was mixed with fire to represent wrath and judgment. Those who stood beside it had been victorious over the beast (the Antichrist, 13:1ff), and his statue (13:14), and the number representing his name (13:18). They had refused to receive the mark of the beast, had refused to worship his image, and thus had faced persecution, difficulty, and perhaps even martyrdom. This is the complete group of all believers (see also 14:1-5). They were holding harps, preparing for a song of worship and praise (see also 5:8).

15:3-4 The song of Moses had celebrated Israel's deliverance from Egypt and the defeat of the Egyptian army at the Red Sea (Exodus 15). The song would be sung in the afternoon service each Sabbath as a reminder to the Jews of God's deliverance and sovereignty. The song of the Lamb here celebrated the ultimate deliverance of God's people from the power of Satan.

The song glorifies God and his ultimate victory over all the world. That all nations will come and worship him does not mean that eventually everyone will be saved. The thought is very much like that recorded in Philippians 2:10, "every knee will bow"; it means that whether in grateful worship or defeated submission, eventually all nations will give the honor to Christ that is his due (see commentary at 14:6-7).

REVELATION 15:5–16:21

THE SEVEN BOWLS OF THE SEVEN PLAGUES / 15:5–16:21

Seven angels were given seven bowls from which they would pour out the seven “bowl judgments,” the last plagues to be visited upon the earth. Unlike the previous plagues from the seals, which had destroyed one-fourth of the earth (chapters 6–8), and the trumpets, which had destroyed another third of the earth (chapters 8–11), these plagues were directed only against the Antichrist’s followers but affected the entire earth. These judgments were complete and final, culminating in the abolition of all evil and the end of the world. These would bring about the end of the Antichrist’s reign.

15:5-6 The Temple in heaven, God’s Tabernacle is a Greek translation for the Hebrew “Tent of Meeting” (see Numbers 17:7; 18:2). The imagery recalls the Exodus in the wilderness when the Ark of his covenant (the symbol of God’s presence among his people) resided in the Tabernacle. The Tabernacle was a portable place of worship that the Israelites would carry with them as they journeyed through the wilderness. Later, when they settled in the Promised Land, a permanent structure was built—the Temple. Both words, Tabernacle and Temple, refer to the place of God’s residence among his people.

John again saw this “tabernacle” thrown wide open (see also 11:19). The seven angels who come out were clothed in spotless white linen with gold belts across their chests (see also Daniel 10:5). Their garments, reminiscent of the high priest’s clothing (and of Christ’s—1:13), show that they were free from corruption, immorality, and injustice. They had come out from God’s presence to do God’s bidding. These angels would be in charge of the seven plagues—that is, the bowls with the plagues—just as seven angels had blown the seven trumpets (8:6).

15:7-8 In what appears to be a solemn ceremony, one of the four living beings (see commentary at 4:6) handed each of the seven angels a gold bowl filled with the terrible wrath of God. When these bowls would be poured out, there would be no escape, and the judgment would be complete. The smoke that filled the Temple is the manifestation of God’s glory and power (see also Exodus 19:18; 40:34-35; 1 Kings 8:10-11; Isaiah 6:4).

God’s glory filled the Temple, appearing like smoke, and God set in motion the final phase of judgment. The fact that no one would be able to enter the Temple until the seven angels had completed pouring out the seven plagues indicates that the time for intercession had passed. No one could come before God to stay his hand. It seems that even the time of worship and praise was suspended as God brought about this final act of history. It is as if heaven was waiting.

16:1 A mighty voice shouted from the Temple. Isaiah had heard a similar voice, “What is that terrible noise from the Temple? It is the voice of the Lord taking vengeance against his enemies” (Isaiah 66:6). This was probably the voice of God commanding the angels, “Go your ways and empty out the seven bowls of God’s wrath on the earth.”

16:2 The outpouring of these bowls occurred in rapid succession, one right after the other, but the effects of each seem to have lingered. For example, the malignant sores that people get here still affect them during the fifth plague (16:10-11), along with the sunburns they received during the fourth plague.

When the first angel poured out his bowl, everyone broke out in horrible sores. This compares with another of the plagues on Egypt—the plague of boils (Exodus 9:10-11). These sores affected everyone who had the mark of the beast (13:16) and who worshiped his statue (13:14-15). God’s wrath was only upon the unbelievers.

Those who subscribe to the pre-Tribulation theory assert that because the believers have already been raptured, those who become believers after the rapture will still be on the earth but will be protected from these plagues. Those who subscribe to the mid-Tribulation theory say that just before these universal plagues hit, the believers are raptured so that the only people left on the earth at this point will be unbelievers. Those who subscribe to the post-Tribulation theory say that the believers are still on the earth going through this difficulty. But even as these plagues hit, the believers will be protected by the seal of Christ they have received (7:3) and the promise of protection (3:10).

16:3 The second angel poured out his bowl. This time the sea became like the blood of a corpse, killing everything in it. During the second trumpet, a third of the water of the sea had become blood, killing a third of the sea creatures (8:8-9). This time, the entire sea turned to blood (see also Exodus 7:20-21).

16:4 The third angel poured out his bowl of God’s wrath, and this time the rivers and springs—the inland waters—also turned to blood. During the third trumpet judgment, one-third of the rivers and springs were turned bitter so that they were undrinkable (8:10-11). In this bowl judgment, all the inland waters were affected, leaving people with nothing to drink. Water, a basic necessity for human life, was gone.

16:5-6 The horror of the plague of blood upon all water led to a pause in heaven, during which time the angel who had authority over all water explained the logic and justice of the plague. Ironically, those who had shed believers' blood were left with blood to drink. They are punished with the methods of their own crimes. The holy people and the prophets had been killed, their blood poured out on the earth. So the just reward for the murderers was to give them blood to drink. God's judgment reflects his righteous and just nature.

16:7 This second voice confirmed what the angel had said (16:5). The personification of the altar acclaiming God shows that everyone and everything will praise God, acknowledging his righteousness and perfect justice. The "altar" could refer to the souls under the altar—the martyrs—who had been waiting for this day to arrive (6:9-11).

16:8-9 After a brief interlude, the fourth angel poured out his bowl on the sun. This intensified the sun's heat so that it scorched people with its fire. The fourth trumpet had caused the sun and the moon to stop giving light for portions of the day (8:12). This fourth bowl was much more serious. This is a picture of a solar explosion that reaches out and scorches the earth with fire. Fire is a common theme for judgment in the Bible (see, for example, Deuteronomy 28:22; Luke 16:24; 1 Corinthians 3:13; 2 Peter 3:7).

The people on earth were burned by this blast of heat. They knew that these judgments had come from God, and they cursed him for sending them. But still they refused to recognize God's authority and repent of their sins. The contrast with those protected is unmistakable: "These are the ones coming out of the great tribulation. . . . they will be fully protected from the scorching noontime heat" (7:14, 16).

The reason for the phrase they did not repent is to show the complete depravity of the people left on the earth. They had totally and irrevocably rejected God. They cursed (literally, blasphemed) his name. They had taken on the character of the beast (13:6) and had committed the unforgivable sin by rejecting God with absolute finality.

16:10-11 The fifth, sixth, and seventh bowls deal with Armageddon. The fifth angel poured out his bowl on the throne of the beast. This bowl was directed on the controller of the inhabitants of the earth—the beast, the Antichrist, who had been placed into power by Satan (see chapter 13). His “throne” was merely an imitation of God’s great throne in heaven (4:2-11).

When the fifth bowl was poured out, the Antichrist’s kingdom was plunged into darkness. This was not like the partial darkness that had occurred during the fourth trumpet (8:12). This was total and complete darkness—like the plague visited upon Egypt (Exodus 10:23). Some take this “darkness” to refer to the total depravity and evil that comes from the leadership of the Antichrist. Others see it as a scientific phenomenon that after the flaring up of the sun (as described in the fourth bowl), the sun virtually burns itself out and is dark. Whether physical or merely spiritual, this “darkness” caused great anguish among the people of the earth; they were in abject fear of this total physical and / or spiritual darkness. They were also still suffering pains and sores—probably from the boils in the first bowl (16:2) and the burns of the fourth bowl (16:8).

But the same phrase is repeated from 16:9: they cursed the God of heaven and they refused to repent. These people knew that God exists (none of them were atheists), but they decided that they hated him.

16:12 When the sixth angel poured out his bowl, the great Euphrates River was dried up. In comparison, the sixth trumpet also mentions the Euphrates River and describes an invading army of demons (9:14-21). The Euphrates River was a natural protective boundary between the Roman Empire and the empires to the east. If the Euphrates River dried up, nothing could hold back invading armies. The kings from the east have been identified in many ways. In 16:14, the kings from the east are joined by “the rulers of the world,” drawn together to the battlefield, a coalition that would bring its armies to the final battle against God Almighty and his hosts.

16:13-14 These three evil spirits confirm that these kings were the combined forces of evil coming to the final battle. One evil spirit came from the mouth of the dragon (12:3-9), a second out of the mouth of the beast (13:1-10), and the third out of the mouth of the false prophet (13:11-18). The evil trinity spawned three evil spirits that looked like frogs. Frogs were unclean animals in Jewish kosher law (Leviticus 11:10-11, 41). These were the miracle-working demons.

Demons are fallen angels who had joined Satan in his rebellion against God and now are evil spirits under Satan’s control (possibly described in 12:7-9). During these last days, the demons will be set loose to perform their destruction, ironically, on those who have rejected Christ and are on the side of Satan (see also commentary on 9:3). The demonic forces will come together to this final battle. These evil spirits will cause all the rulers of the world to gather for battle against the Lord. The imagery of the demons coming out of the mouths of the three evil rulers signifies the verbal enticements and propaganda that will draw many people to their evil cause.

In this vision, the battle is now set for that great judgment day of God Almighty—God already knows that the demons are coming, and this is part of the plan. The final outcome has already been decided. Throughout the Bible, the phrase “day of the Lord” is used in two different ways: (1) it can mean the end times (beginning with Christ’s birth and continuing into the present); (2) it can mean the final judgment day at the end of time. In Scripture, the phrase is always used in connection with an extraordinary happening, whether a present event (such as a locust plague in Joel 1:15), a near future event, or the final period of history when God will defeat all the forces of evil. The final day of the Lord is pictured as a time when God will intervene directly and dramatically in world affairs. Predicted and discussed often in the Old Testament (Isaiah 13:6-12; Ezekiel 38–39; Joel 2:11, 28-32; 3:2; Zephaniah 1:14-18; 14:1-21), the day of the Lord will include both punishment and blessing. God will triumph completely. Christ will judge sin and set up his eternal Kingdom. The day of the final battle pictured in this text will be the time when the entire system of human opposition to God will be destroyed.

16:15 This is the third of seven beatitudes in Revelation—blessed are all who are watching for me (see also 1:3; 14:13). This is a warning to the Christian, spoken by the Lord. Jesus will come as unexpectedly as a thief (see also Matthew 24:42-44; Luke 12:39-40; 1 Thessalonians 5:2, 4; 2 Peter 3:10). The teaching of the unexpectedness of Christ’s return occurs throughout the New Testament. Believers who are still on the earth must be on their guard, watching, morally and spiritually prepared, with their robes ready. The word “robes” refers to purification attained by the cleansing of Christ’s blood (7:9-14). Christ had also given this warning to the churches at Sardis (3:2-4) and Laodicea (3:18). The warning is that believers should not be swayed by the miraculous signs performed by the demons of the evil trinity. They must persevere, remain true to the faith, and wait with readiness. That way they will not need to walk naked and ashamed. Just as the robes refer to purity through Christ’s blood, to be “naked” means having one’s sinfulness exposed for all to see. This, of course, would lead to shame. For more on being rightfully clothed, see Colossians 3:12-17.

16:16 The evil spirits (16:13) gathered all the rulers and their armies (the kings of the east in 16:12, and the kings of the whole world in 16:14) to a place called Armageddon in Hebrew. Some archaeologists have located this battlefield near the city of Megiddo (southeast of the modern port of Haifa), which guarded a large plain in northern Israel. This is a strategic location near a prominent international highway leading north from Egypt through Israel, along the coast, and on to Babylon. Megiddo overlooks the entire plain southward toward Galilee and westward toward the mountains of Gilboa. Over 200 battles have been fought in this area (see, for example, Judges 5:19; 2 Kings 9:27). While this may be the location of the battle, the actual meaning of Armageddon is unknown. The word har in Hebrew means “mountain,” but there is no mountain in the area of Megiddo. “Mountain” may have been used to describe God’s presence—for he often would meet with people on mountains (Exodus 19:3, 11-23; 24:12; 1 Kings 19:11; Ezekiel 40:2; Matthew 17:1). The Aramaic meaning of the word “Armageddon” is “mount of the assembly”; thus, this may refer to the assembly of the kings who come to fight. John’s unusual use of the explanation “in Hebrew” to a group of readers who for the most part probably did not know Hebrew probably alerts them to the symbolic nature of what he was writing (see also 9:11).

Although the actual location is uncertain, we are told what will happen. This will truly be a “world war,” except that the entire world will be on the same side. They will assemble to fight together against God. The armies of the east will march to Armageddon by crossing the dried-up Euphrates River (16:12). But the Lord will appear, and the earth will shake.

Some Christians believe that the battle of Armageddon will be a spiritual rather than a physical conflict. Others believe that the battle is being fought now.

Dispensational premillennialists believe that the battle of Armageddon begins when the king of the north and the king of the south converge on Israel to attack the Antichrist and his troops. After these armies are defeated, the kings of the east invade Israel (16:16). Then Christ will intervene and demonstrate his power by destroying all remaining foes (19:19-21).

Amillennialists and historic premillennialists believe that evil and destruction will increase in the last days. Christians will be present on earth during this period of Tribulation. Both amillennialists and historic premillennialists believe that the vision of Armageddon in Revelation figuratively portrays the final rebellion against God. As a result, they pay more attention to Christ’s second coming than to the battle itself.

Postmillennialists believe that evangelists and Christians who try to spread God’s word will always face obstacles. Postmillennialists don’t believe that wickedness and persecution will significantly increase as the world draws to a close. Instead, because they think the church is gradually transforming society, they believe that Armageddon is a picture of Christ's victory over evil forces throughout church history. God's word will triumph over all opposition and establish the millennial Kingdom.

While interpretations differ, all believers agree that Jesus has already defeated both Satan and death (1:18; Matthew 12:25-29). At some point, Christ will decisively demonstrate his power over Satan and his evil forces.

16:17-18 This verse echoes 11:15-19, where we saw the seventh trumpet sounding, followed by voices in heaven shouting that Christ's Kingdom had come (11:15). Then there was lightning, thunder, a hailstorm, and an earthquake (11:19; see also 4:5; 8:5). Here, when the seventh angel poured out his bowl, he did so into the air, which was followed by a mighty shout that came from the throne of the Temple. It announced that it is finished. This also was followed by thunder, lightning, and an earthquake (the hailstorm is described in 16:21). The earthquake would be greater than ever before in human history.

History was finished; the end had come—proleptically speaking. With the bowl, God's wrath was completed. The reason for the creation of mankind was coming to fruition.

16:19-20 In Revelation, the phrase the great city of Babylon refers both to an evil city and an immoral empire, a world center for idol worship. Just as Babylon had been an enemy of the Jews (by conquering Jerusalem and taking many of the people into captivity, 2 Kings 25), so Rome was the enemy of the Christians. The name Babylon, the “great city,” is used to describe the focal point of anti-Christian activity. John's readers would immediately have identified this great city as Rome, and they would have been correct. Yet they did not know, nor did John, that many years would pass before this event occurred, nor did they know that both Babylon and Rome were models of the future and the ultimate collapse of the entire world system that would reject God. The great city's division into three pieces symbolizes its complete destruction. This foreshadows what John would describe in more detail in chapters 17 and 18.

Not only that, but also cities around the world fell into heaps of rubble. So great is this earthquake that every city in the world will be destroyed—New York, Chicago, Mexico City, Hong Kong, Paris, London, Tokyo, Sydney—all will be flattened by this worldwide earthquake. This will indeed be an earthquake “greater than ever before in human history” (16:18) for places that had never had earthquakes will be destroyed.

In 14:8, an angel had described the fall of Babylon, and in 14:9, another angel spoke of the Beast's followers drinking the undiluted wine of God's wrath. This is a further description of God giving the city the cup that was filled with the wine of his fierce wrath. Babylon had seduced the nations (see 17:2) and so deserved punishment.

The earthquake will be so severe that every island will disappear. The earth will have such an upheaval that it will flatten the mountains so that they cannot even be found (see also 6:12-14). Other earthquakes have occurred in Revelation, but this will be the last and worst.

16:21 Along with the lightning, the thunder, and the earthquake, there was a hailstorm so severe that huge hailstones fell from heaven onto the people on earth. The Old Testament records God using hail to punish Israel's enemies (Joshua 10:11), and Ezekiel described a hailstorm (Ezekiel 38:18-22). Even golf-ball sized hail will cause severe damage. Imagine the horrible destruction and death caused by these seventy-five-pound hailstones. The cities had already been destroyed by the earthquake, but anything left standing was smashed by the hail. But still, the people on earth cursed God. After each of these three final plagues, the inhabitants of the earth continued to blaspheme God (16:9, 11, 21).

REVELATION 17

THE GREAT PROSTITUTE / 17:1-18

The destruction of Babylon mentioned in 16:17-21 is now described in greater detail (see the commentary at 16:19-20). Verses 1-6 describe John's vision of the prostitute and the scarlet beast; the remainder of the chapter describes the interpretation of the symbols.

17:1-2 One of the angels who had poured out the bowls came to John and spoke to him. The angel wanted to show John what those seven bowls had been directed against. The angel would show John the judgment that is going to come on the great prostitute. The "great prostitute" is also called "Babylon" in 17:5 and "the great city that rules over the kings of the earth" in 17:18. To the early Christians, this great prostitute represented the early Roman Empire with its many gods and the blood of Christian martyrs on its hands.

Rome was the capital city of the vast and mighty Roman Empire, an empire that stretched from Britain to Arabia. In John's day, Rome was the largest city in the world, with a population of approximately one million. But for all its power, it was exceedingly immoral. Christians ran afoul of Roman society and values and thus found themselves severely persecuted. With Rome's backdrop of paganism and persecution, it is no wonder that Rome was seen as the epitome of evil. Like Babylon, Rome became a symbol of paganism and opposition to Christianity.

But the prostitute represents far more than just the Roman Empire. This "great prostitute," Babylon, symbolizes any economic, political, or military system that is hostile to God (see 17:5) and an eventual worldwide system that will encompass more evil than has been seen thus far in the world. Babylon had been a huge empire in its day; Rome was even larger as the Caesars took over many countries and gained their allegiance. In the end, the Antichrist will set up a final worldwide empire that will encompass all the nations and will be immoral and completely anti-God. At this time will occur the great apostasy—many will turn away from God, leave the churches, and follow the beast. The prostitute sits on many waters, described in 17:15 as "masses of people of every nation and language." The great prostitute, therefore, represents all the forces in the end who will come together to oppose God.

The great prostitute, rather than being described as any particular city of any particular time period, exists where there is satanic deception and resistance to God. This was true in many ancient kingdoms, such as Babylon, Egypt, Tyre, Nineveh, and Rome. The “prostitute” represents the seductiveness of any governmental system that uses immoral means to gain its own pleasure, prosperity, and advantage. This worldwide kingdom of the beast will draw in all the rulers of the world. The immorality and drunkenness describe the actions of people who have completely turned away from the true God and have been lured into evil and idolatry.

17:3 John was taken in spirit into the wilderness where he would see this great prostitute. Four times in Revelation, John is described as being “in the spirit” or carried away in the spirit (1:10; 4:2; 17:3; 21:10). This means that the Holy Spirit transformed and elevated John’s mind and spirit so that he could see prophetic visions. These could have been in the form of a trance or an ecstatic experience.

John saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast. This woman is, of course, the great prostitute described in 17:1. Most likely, this “scarlet beast” is Satan, for he is described in 12:3 as a “large red dragon,” but this beast is also identified as the beast out of the sea (13:1). All three have the same source—and all are described as having seven heads and ten horns (as noted in 12:3; 13:1). These heads and horns are further described by John in verses 9-18.

The beast from the sea is further described as having names on each head that blasphemed God. This scarlet beast also was written all over with blasphemies against God. This beast—the Antichrist controlled by Satan—is the supreme enemy of the church and God’s people. The woman represents the world system of evil; the beast represents the power supporting that world system. The blasphemous names are probably the names the beast takes upon himself in calling himself God.

17:4 This woman, the great prostitute, was dressed in purple and scarlet clothing, signifying royalty and luxury. The purple and scarlet dyes were extremely expensive in the first century; no common person ever wore purple or scarlet. She was also wearing beautiful jewelry made of gold and precious gems and pearls, signifying wealth and materialism.

The woman was holding a gold goblet full of obscenities and the impurities of her immorality. In a sense, that was her inner person—she was extremely immoral. She was a prostitute—beautifully clothed but obscene and impure. Her veneer could not hide what was in her goblet.

17:5 The further description of the woman on the beast focuses on the mysterious name that was written on her forehead. The “mysterious name” shows that the true source and nature of evil is being revealed. The title Babylon the Great describes an entire world system that will be the culmination of all evil, leading people away from God (see commentary on 17:1-2). This woman is a picture of Babylon, which had taken God's people into captivity; she also is a picture of Rome with its luxury and decadence. But she is far more than just one particular city or empire in history. She is actually the "mother" of them all. She is the source of all evil, the source of all rebellion against God throughout history, of which various nations have taken part. She is the Mother of All Prostitutes and Obscenities in the World. For all her great finery (17:4), she is no more than a prostitute rebelling against God.

17:6 The woman riding the beast was drunk, certainly a pastime in the city of Rome and in the cult worship. However, this woman was drunk with the blood of God's holy people. She had gorged herself with this drink—meaning that she lived to hurt and to slaughter the people of God. This was her reason for being. This world power had the authority of the beast "to wage war against God's holy people and to overcome them" (13:7). The woman had become intoxicated with the slaughter of God's followers. John's reaction at the sight was total amazement. The woman and beast present a horrifying picture of the true nature of evil.

17:7-8 The angel asked why John was so amazed. This is the true nature of evil, so perhaps believers should not be surprised at its sheer ugliness. The angel said that he would explain to John the mystery of this woman and of the beast. The remainder of this chapter interprets the beast; chapter 18 explains more about the prostitute.

The beast, as noted in 17:3, signifies the Antichrist and his power source, Satan. In a parody of the description of Christ (4:8), Satan is referred to as one who had exercised his power (was alive), was bound when Christ died on the cross (isn't now), and then will have a time at the end of history during which to exercise great authority on the earth and to go into battle with God at Armageddon (will soon come) before he is finally destroyed. This also could describe the beast in 13:3 who had recovered from a fatal wound. The beast was alive, then dead, and then came back to life. The beast's resurrection symbolizes the persistence of evil. His source is the bottomless pit—the abode of the demonic forces, the eternal destination of the wicked, the place of the beast's final eternal destruction (see 9:1, 11; 11:7; 20:1-3; Luke 8:31; 2 Peter 2:4; Jude 1:6).

This resurgence of evil power will convince many to join forces with the beast. They will be so astonished by his resurrection (a copy of Christ's true resurrection) that they will follow him. These people, whose names were not written in the Book of Life, received the beast's mark (13:16).

17:9-10 Many scholars think that, in this explanation, the angel was referring to Rome, the city famous for its seven hills. Rome symbolized all evil in the world—any person, religion, group, government, or structure that opposed Christ. John was writing during a time of persecution of believers, with Rome at the focal point. His original readers may have immediately associated the “seven hills” with Rome. Certainly, Rome portrays the power and corruption that those final evil days will encompass. In addition, because the hills also represent seven kings, some have linked the seven kings with seven of Rome's emperors counting from Tiberius to Domitian (however, three emperors are omitted from their list). All of those attempts are problematic, for there are arbitrary omissions that must be made in order to make them fit with the formula given: five kings have already fallen, the sixth now reigns, and the seventh is yet to come, but his reign will be brief.

Others connect the seven kings to seven world kingdoms. The first five would be Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, and Greece (they had already fallen), the one that is would be Rome (present tense for John's day), and the one yet to come would be the final kingdom of the Antichrist (although this theory has its problems at 17:11). While this fits fairly well, it again depends on arbitrary omissions in order to make the numbers work.

It is also possible that the number seven is used here as it is everywhere else in Revelation as symbolic of completeness (seven seals, seven trumpets, seven bowls). The seven heads could indicate complete blasphemy, with the seven kings referring to the complete number of kings who will rule until the end, with the end coming when the complete number has been reached (similar to the complete number of the martyrs in 6:11). The question then arises why John included the numeric formula. Some scholars point to an ancient seal showing the seven-headed monster of chaos being killed. In the seal, four of the heads are dead, but the creature is still living with three active heads. But it obviously faces imminent death. John could be describing the evil as being progressively destroyed. The battle has been fought and won in the past; the battle is presently being fought; and the battle will continue to be fought until the beast is completely defeated. John's numeric formula also could simply mean that he is declaring the imminent end of history. Time is passing (five sevenths have passed) and has a definite end point which is all in God's plan.

Whatever the interpretation, Rome was indeed a preview of that final thrust of evil and hatred of all who love God. While God has chosen to keep this vague, believers ought to be careful about attempting to decipher what God has chosen not to make clear. It is far more important to realize that, even as the power of evil gains control of the whole world, God is in charge.

17:11 The seven heads are seven hills, which are interpreted as seven kings, but here an eighth king is introduced, who was alive and then died. This eighth king is the scarlet beast himself—identified elsewhere as Satan or the Antichrist (see commentary at 17:3). As the seventh seal leads into the first trumpet, and the seventh trumpet into the first bowl, so the seven kings lead into the final king who actually embodies all of them. This eighth king, then, is the Antichrist himself. He is not simply another evil ruler; he is evil itself. He will become a human being—a leader, a king. But again, God’s sovereignty shows itself—the Antichrist will go to his doom.

17:12 With this verse, John returned to the future in his vision, describing the Antichrist and what would occur during his rule. The ten horns are ten kings who will be the Antichrist’s minions and will rule under him (see also Daniel 7:7, 24). The ten horns represent kings of nations yet to arise. Some have suggested that these ten kings who have not yet risen to power are ten future kings who will reign over the world under the Antichrist or even the ten nations of the European Common Market. The number ten may be literal, or, more likely, it symbolizes the totality of the powers on earth that will serve the Antichrist and war against Christ. Rome will be followed by other powers. Rome is a good example of how the Antichrist’s system will work, demanding complete allegiance, and ruling by raw power, oppression, and slavery. Whoever the ten kings are, they will give their power to the Antichrist and will make war against the Lamb. Their authority will have been given by Satan and simply allowed by God. But their authority will only last one brief moment. The beast was given authority for forty-two months (13:5), but these kings will have only a moment, highlighting the brevity of their time of power.

John’s readers would have understood the authority given to these kings by the beast as similar to the authority the emperors gave to local governors or kings. When Rome conquered a country, the empire allowed local kings, such as Herod the Great in Palestine, to continue to rule as long as they gave allegiance to the Empire.

17:13-14 These “ten kings” (which may be an actual or symbolic number) will give their power and authority to the beast. These human kings will allow themselves to be completely possessed by Satan (or his demons). The beast will have one job for these kings—to wage war against the Lamb.

The outcome, however, is guaranteed: the Lamb will defeat them. The outcome of the war has already been determined. Even as Satan will seem to gain the upper hand in the final days, the end is already known. Christ will win because he is Lord over all lords and King over all kings (see 19:16; Deuteronomy 10:17; Daniel 2:47). He is above all the kings of the earth; he is the final authority.

17:15 The angel continued his description of the vision that John was seeing (17:7). The prostitute is described as sitting “on many waters” (17:1). The great prostitute is called “Babylon” (17:5) and the imagery of the waters comes from Jeremiah’s prophecy to Babylon, whose water source was the Euphrates River, “You are a city rich with water, a great center of commerce, but your end has come” (Jeremiah 51:13). Although Babylon and Rome are in view, again this great prostitute represents a far-reaching, anti-God power that will encompass the world. The angel explained that the waters represent masses of people of every nation and language. The Antichrist will influence (or even possess) the leaders across the world, but his influence will extend to all people. The “masses” also will be overtaken by the great prostitute and will be enamored by her. In doing so, they will become hostile to God. The leaders and the people will be joined in their adoration of the Antichrist.

17:16 This verse describes the nature and outcome of evil. In a dramatic turn of events, the beast on whom the prostitute rides will turn on her and destroy her. In fact, the beast has hated the prostitute all along. This is how evil operates. Destructive by its very nature, it turns on itself. The beast and the ten kings (Satan and the leaders) will end up destroying what they have made. The very evil of the culture they have created will leave it in shambles. They will bring that culture to ruin. Despite the great beauty and luxury of the prostitute’s clothing and jewels (17:4), the beast will strip her naked. She will be completely destroyed—her flesh eaten and her remains burned. The horror of her demise parallels the penalty in the Old Testament for prostitution (Leviticus 21:9), the end of the wicked queen Jezebel (2 Kings 9:30-37), and the fate of the allegorical Oholibah, who represented the apostate Israelites in Ezekiel’s prophecy (Ezekiel 23:11-35).

17:17 In an ironic twist, John wrote that God has put into the minds of the ten kings a plan that will carry out his purposes. (17:13). God will bring about the destruction of the great prostitute (17:16) by allowing the evil to run its course. Even as Satan overruns the world and finally destroys his own kingdom and followers, God still rules. All of these events will be completely under God's control. His words will be fulfilled. God's plans will happen just as he says. God even uses people opposed to him as tools to carry out his will.

17:18 The angel explains John's vision further, describing the woman (the "great prostitute" in 17:1, 3) as the great city that rules over the kings of the earth. As noted in the commentary on 17:1, John's original readers would have identified this immediately with Rome—the capital of an empire that had spread across much of the known world, a city filled with immorality and idolatry and famous for its active persecution of Christians. The vision surely represents that, but it also means far more. Like Rome, and Babylon before her, this "woman" is the worldwide system of power and influence that will be completely rebellious against God and subservient to the Antichrist. Babylon and Rome were forerunners of what will be far bigger and more horrible than anything John or his readers could have imagined.

REVELATION 18

THE FALL OF BABYLON / 18:1-24

Chapter 17 describes the “great prostitute,” called “Babylon the Great,” (17:5) and why she would need to be destroyed (17:1). This section describes that destruction—how it occurred and its effect upon the inhabitants of the world. First, an angel proclaimed judgment on the great city (18:1-8). The rulers of the world lament the destruction of the city (18:9-10), as do the merchants who have become rich through trade (18:11-16), the ship owners, and the captains of the merchant ships (18:18-20).

18:1 John saw another angel who had great authority. This angel was so glorious that the earth grew bright with his splendor—he was like the sun, reflecting the glory of God himself from whose presence the angel had come. This angel would be bringing the final message of destruction upon the evil world system of the Antichrist.

18:2 As described in the commentary in 17:1, the name Babylon was immediately assumed by John’s readers to be Rome. While they would have been correct, the symbol goes far beyond Rome to a world-encompassing system of religion and economics that will be under the control of the Antichrist and completely against God and his people.

The glorious angel shouted that the great city is fallen. The hideout of demons and evil spirits is literally a prison or watchtower, like a haunt, from which the evil beings watch over the desolate ruins. This is an image of desperate desolation. Buzzards are carrion birds found in desolate places. The Old Testament records many prophecies against the ancient city of Babylon, which are appropriate parallels to the total destruction described by John for this metaphorical “Babylon” to come (see Isaiah 13:19-22; 21:2, 9; 47:8-11; Jeremiah 50:13, 39). The angel announced that the formerly great, luxurious city had become a total wasteland, filled with everything evil and unclean. It is a haunt of evil spirits.

18:3 The reason that Babylon fell is described here—all the nations have drunk the wine of her passionate immorality (see also 17:2). Babylon personifies everything that is evil—sexual immorality, idolatry, greed, and oppression. The people of the world have turned completely away from God and have enjoyed the seductiveness of what she was offering through her immorality and idolatry. The Old Testament uses adultery to describe spiritual apostasy (see, for example, Jeremiah 3:2; Hosea 4:10). In the last days, apostasy will reach a pinnacle in the worship of the beast (13:15).

The rulers of the world have committed adultery with her, meaning that they have committed shameful sins—giving up what is most important for what is gratifying. This “adultery” probably refers to both sinful alliances and the total abandoning of God’s morality. Also, the merchants throughout the world have grown rich as a result of her luxurious living. They were seduced by the great riches that could be gained by their relationship with her. Isaiah 47:8 describes the great luxury of Babylon and God’s judgment of it. Their luxury led to pride and self-sufficiency. Part of this adultery was in taking the mark of the beast because these merchants could not buy or sell without it (13:17).

18:4-5 Jeremiah had prophesied regarding the ancient city of Babylon, “Flee from Babylon! Save yourselves! Don’t get trapped in her punishment! It is the Lord’s time for vengeance; he will fully repay her” (Jeremiah 51:6). So another voice warned about this future evil system and called to God’s people not to take part in her sins. Just as God had brought vengeance upon the ancient city because of her cruelty to others, so God is ready to judge the crimes of all nations who have fought God and persecuted his people—resulting in sins that are piled as high as heaven. God remembers, and he will punish. As an answer to all the questions of why wicked people prosper, God points out here that he knows it all and will punish it all.

God’s people are called to separate themselves—to “come away”—from evil for two reasons: (1) not to share in society’s sins, and (2) not to eventually share in that society’s punishment by God. Believers must always be aware that they must not compromise with a godless society. To compromise will mean facing punishment. Although “come out” can refer to a physical separation from the places of evil, it always refers to a spiritual, mental, and emotional separation from the sins that plague the current society. The church must always stand firm on the foundations of the faith, never swaying at the whims of society.

18:6-7 The people of Babylon had lived in luxury and pleasure. The city had boasted of being a queen who will not experience sorrow. Isaiah had prophesied of Babylon, “You are a pleasure-crazy kingdom, living at ease and feeling secure, bragging as if you were the greatest in the world! You say, ‘I’m self-sufficient and not accountable to anyone! I will never be a widow or lose my children’” (Isaiah 47:8).

Rome also had great luxury and pride, as have other powerful kingdoms. In the end, this great kingdom would receive what it had meted out. The Roman law, lex talionis, was that a person's punishment should match his or her crime. During this judgment, however, the angel asked God to give her a double penalty for all her evil deeds.

Jeremiah had written of ancient Babylon, "May Babylon be repaid for all the violence she did to us. May the people of Babylonia be paid in full for all the blood they have spilled" (Jeremiah 51:34-35).

18:8 For all of Babylon's self-sufficiency, pride, and power (18:6), the ugliness of her evil will eventually overtake her. The most beautiful, powerful, and evil city in the world will not be able to stand when the holy God intervenes and allows the evil to run its course to destruction. In a single day (possibly figurative, but signifying a very short time), she will face death, mourning, and famine—all that she had been able to avoid thus far through her wealth and power.

In the end, the city will be consumed by fire, unable to escape the destruction, unable to stop the raging fire as it sweeps and destroys. Jeremiah had prophesied of ancient Babylon, "The wide walls of Babylon will be leveled to the ground, and her high gates will be burned. The builders from many lands have worked in vain, for their work will be destroyed by fire!" (Jeremiah 51:58).

18:9-10 Those who control various parts of the economic system will mourn at Babylon's fall. Verses 9-20 are a funeral dirge for the fall of Babylon, sung by three different groups: the rulers of the world (18:9-10), the merchants (18:11-16), and the ship owners (18:17-20). These have all grown rich because of the evil economy represented by Babylon. The fall of the evil world system will affect all who enjoyed and depended on it. No one will remain unaffected by Babylon's fall.

First, the rulers who had given their power to the beast had committed immoral acts with her. As a reward for their subservience, these kings enjoyed her great luxury. But when the city is destroyed, they will be terrified by her great torment and will stand at a distance. Most likely, the destruction is so great that they don't want to be caught up in it. They do not attempt to rescue the city because they realize it is futile. These rulers will be terrified because, without Babylon, they will be nothing. They are terrified for Babylon, but more important, they are terrified for themselves.

18:11-13 The next group to join the funeral dirge are the merchants (18:11-16). These people weep and mourn because there is no one left to buy their goods.

The collapse of the economy will mean the end of their trade and income.

This list of various merchandise illustrates the extreme materialism of this society. Few of these goods are necessities—most are luxuries, including precious metals, jewels, and cloth, aromatic perfumes, and foods. Even people had become no more than commodities—human lives were the slaves who would have been sold to Babylon.

Rome was a city of great luxury and extravagance. The Roman emperors were known for their sumptuous lifestyles, clothing, and banquets. This list of exotic commodities describes the breadth of the trade that usually would come into the port of Rome. Much of the list is identical to the types of trade mentioned in Ezekiel 27:12-22, describing a former maritime trade power, the city of Tyre. Rome's luxury and extravagance led to decadence that eventually destroyed her. In the end, Tyre also had been destroyed, "The merchants of the nations shake their heads at the sight of you, for you have come to a horrible end and will be no more" (Ezekiel 27:36).

18:14 The fancy things refer to all the exotic imports that would come into cities like Tyre and Rome. People love these things, but when Babylon is destroyed, all will be gone forever. The luxury and splendor of this world will not last.

18:15-17a Like the kings of the world (18:9-10), the merchants will also be terrified at the torment of the great city. They too will weep and cry. The description of the beautiful city matches the description of the great prostitute in 17:4. These merchants will be terrified at the swiftness and totality of the great city's destruction. With the economy collapsed, there will no longer be a market for the exotic and pricey goods that the merchants had traded and from which they had grown wealthy.

18:17b-19 The third group to join the funeral dirge will be the shipowners and captains of the merchant ships and their crews—all who earn their living from the sea. The vast amount of trade was carried on, at least partially, by ships arriving from far distant lands. As the merchants had become rich on the commodities, those who ran the ships had become rich delivering them. With the fall of the great city, their services will no longer be required. There will be no one to buy and nothing to trade. As the city goes up in smoke, they will throw dust on their heads to show their great sorrow. Ezekiel had written of Tyre, "All the oarsmen abandon their ships; the sailors and helmsmen come to stand on the shore. They weep bitterly as they throw dust on their heads and roll in ashes” (Ezekiel 27:29-30). In one moment, everything they know goes up in smoke.

18:20 In contrast to the weeping and mourning of the people at the fall of Babylon, the heavens will rejoice. The call to rejoice is extended to the holy people of God and apostles and prophets—the people who have been persecuted and killed because they refused to join Babylon’s system and worship the beast (17:6). Babylon’s fall will be God’s judgment on behalf of his people.

18:21 This boulder as large as a great millstone would be a stone about fifteen to twenty feet wide, a foot thick, and weighing thousands of pounds—heavier than any human being could even move. But a mighty angel picked it up and threw it into the ocean. As a huge boulder, hurtled through the air, sinks to the bottom of the sea, so would Babylon disappear forever.

Jeremiah had given a similar prophecy to the city of Babylon (Jeremiah 51:60-64). Babylon, Rome, and the future focal point of the Antichrist’s reign will have great glory and power and then will disappear like a rock beneath the waves. All that the people had lived for—their great luxuries and power—will become a millstone around their necks and will drag them to the bottom of the sea.

18:22-23 The mighty city, thrown like a boulder into the sea, will be destroyed and silenced. This city had been filled with music. There had been busy industry in its humming economy. The milling of grain had provided plenty of food. People had enjoyed life, and there had been wedding celebrations. But when it all collapses, all that will be no more. There will be complete darkness, without a single lamp. This will be total and utter destruction.

Why will this happen? Because her merchants, who were the greatest in the world, deceived the nations with her sorceries. The word “sorceries” probably does not refer to black magic, although that was certainly practiced in the Roman Empire and will certainly be a part of any worship of Satan. Instead, it pictures the “spell” under which Rome, and this flourishing economy, puts its people. They are so enamored by the greatness of their culture that they believe it will last forever. They willingly worship the beast in order to partake in what they perceive as the peace and joy that they think the beast has brought (13:14-17).

18:24 This is the great sin of Babylon, of Rome, and of the Antichrist’s kingdom. The inhabitants of the world enjoy the great prosperity that the beast’s economy brings them. However, in the streets of that great city, the blood of the prophets was spilled. Babylon was the one who slaughtered God's people all over the world. Certainly this was true of Rome, for being a Christian in the Roman Empire was tantamount to treason. The emperors considered themselves to be gods, and, of all their peoples, it was the Christians who refused to worship them. Persecution under the emperors Nero and Domitian reached the heights of horror.

REVELATION 19

SONGS OF VICTORY IN HEAVEN / 19:1-10

These first five verses of chapter 19 describe the end of the destruction of Babylon the Great (chapters 17–18). In contrast to the funeral dirges of the kings, merchants, and seamen (18:9-19), the crowd in heaven sings a great song of praise. This vast crowd in heaven begins praising God for his victory (19:1-3). Then the twenty-four elders join the chorus (19:4). Finally, the great choir of heaven once again praises God—the wedding of the Lamb has come (19:6-8). In Matthew 25:1-13, Christ had compared the coming of his Kingdom to a wedding for which his people must be prepared.

19:1-3 This is the only place in the New Testament where the word hallelujah is found, and it occurs in verses 1, 3, 4, and 6. The word is derived from a combination of two Hebrew words, halal and Jah, meaning “Praise Yahweh” or “Praise God.” The word can be found in the Old Testament, especially in Psalms 113–118, known as the Hallelujah psalms.

The song in Revelation praises God for his just and true judgments (see also 15:3; 16:5, 7). He is praised for avenging the murders of his people. The punishment of the evil adversaries of God and his people is cause for praise in heaven. God has punished the great prostitute who corrupted the earth with her immorality, and he has avenged the murder of his servants. The identity of this “great prostitute” is explained in the commentary on 17:1. Her corruption of the earth is described in chapters 17–18. The beast and his kingdom will be judged for deceiving the nations and for killing God’s servants. The “great prostitute,” the evil city, has been destroyed and the smoke from that city ascends forever and forever (see also 9:2; 14:11; 18:9, 18). Babylon’s destruction will be final. She will never rise again.

19:4 The identity of the twenty-four elders and the four living beings is explained in 4:4 and 4:6. These joined with the vast crowd (19:1) in praise to God, who was sitting on the throne. They fell down in worship, indicating a position of total humility and subservience to God (see also 4:10; 5:14; 7:11; 11:16). They cried out Amen, affirming what God had done.

19:5 The closing of this song of praise was given by a voice located near the throne. This was not God’s voice, because the words “praise our God” would not have come from God. The voice came from one of the heavenly beings and called upon all of God's servants, from the least to the greatest, all who fear him, to praise him. "Fear" refers to reverence for God. These are all of God's redeemed people called to join in praise to the God who had saved them from the end brought by Satan and evil—the burning fires of Babylon.

19:6-8 The multitude was singing, rejoicing, exulting, and giving glory to God in a time of celebration like nothing ever seen before, for it will celebrate the wedding feast of the Lamb, referring to Christ. This next great vision, the bride getting ready for her wedding, contrasts with the "great prostitute" of 17:1. His bride has prepared herself—the bride is the new Jerusalem (21:2, 9-10), the church, the believers, those redeemed by Christ's blood. This is the culmination of human history—the judgment of the wicked and the wedding of the Lamb and his bride, the church.

In the Old Testament, the figure of a wedding banquet, with the bride as God's people Israel, pictured God's eternal love and protection over them (Isaiah 24:6-8; 54:5-7; 61:10; 62:5; Hosea 2:19). In some of his parables about the Kingdom of God, Jesus used the imagery of a wedding banquet (Matthew 22:2-14; 25:1-13; Luke 14:15-24). John the Baptist spoke of Jesus as the bridegroom (John 3:29), and Jesus described himself that way (Matthew 9:15; Luke 5:34-35). Other New Testament writers described God's people—all believers, both Jews and Gentiles—as Christ's bride (2 Corinthians 11:2; Ephesians 5:23-32).

The bride's clothing stands in sharp contrast to the gaudy clothing of the great prostitute (17:4). The bride was permitted to wear the finest white linen. In John's day, linen was expensive—only the very wealthy wore clothing made with linen. Here the bride of Christ, the believers, were wearing the finest, explained as representing the good deeds done by the people of God (see also 3:4-5, 18; 4:4; 6:11; 7:9, 14; 15:6; 19:14). These "righteous acts" were not religious deeds done by believers so that they could be saved; instead, the acts reflected the fact that the saints had been saved in order to do good works (Ephesians 2:10).

The bride wore this clothing that had been purchased for her by the blood of Christ; she made herself "ready" through her faithfulness to Christ until the day of the "wedding," when she would be joined with him.

19:9 This verse includes the fourth of seven beatitudes in Revelation (see also 1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 20:6; 22:7; 22:14). Each beatitude describes the "blessedness" of those who have remained faithful to Christ. In this case, the believers were "blessed" because they had been invited to the wedding feast of the Lamb. At this banquet will be all those who have trusted Christ for salvation; they will come from every nation. Jesus had stated, “I tell you this, that many Gentiles will come from all over the world and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob at the feast in the Kingdom of Heaven” (Matthew 8:11).

In the parable of the wedding feast (Matthew 22), Jesus described a king who prepared a great banquet and, while many guests had been invited, at the time of the banquet they all refused to come. They had taken on other commitments that they decided were more important. So the king filled his banquet hall with others who did come when invited. The point is that God has invited people to join him at this great feast. Blessed are those who have accepted the invitation to the marriage supper.

As an assurance to the readers of the absolute truth of the wedding banquet of Christ in which they would take part, the angel told John, “These are true words that come from God.” God’s true words stand forever.

19:10 Whether John had mistaken this heavenly being for Christ, or whether he was simply overcome with the emotion of the promise he had just foreseen, John fell down at the angel’s feet to worship him. But the angel stopped him, “No, don’t worship me.” The Bible forbids worship of angels, for, as the angel said, “I am a servant of God, just like you and the other believers who testify of their faith in Jesus.” The powerful angelic beings thus far described in Revelation—despite their amazing strength and glory—were simply faithful servants of God, as are all believers who tell about their faith in Jesus.

These servants of Christ had testified of their faith in Jesus, and the angel said that the essence of prophecy is to give a clear witness for Jesus. “Clear witness” also means “testimony” (1:9; 6:9; 12:11, 17; 17:6; 20:4). All believers are, in a sense, prophets because they testify of their faith. For many of the believers mentioned here, it had meant testifying to their own deaths. The word “prophecy” means more than seeing and foretelling the future, although in some cases that is true (especially in the Old Testament prophets and in John’s case here). The main purpose of prophecy is to communicate God’s message.

THE RIDER ON THE WHITE HORSE / 19:11-21

The vision shifts again. Heaven opened and Jesus appeared, this time not as a Lamb but as a warrior on a white horse (symbolizing victory). Jesus had come first as a Lamb to be a sacrifice for sin, but he will return as a Conqueror and King to execute judgment (2 Thessalonians 1:7-10). Jesus’ first coming brought forgiveness; his second will bring judgment. The battle lines had been drawn between God and evil, and the world was waiting for the King to ride onto the field.

19:11-12 This verse describes the second coming of Christ—the moment God’s people had been waiting for (see Mark 14:62; Luke 24:30). Christ’s return will be unmistakable. Heaven will be opened, as Christ, on a white horse, makes his entrance. The white horse symbolizes victory. (Some think this is the same rider as mentioned in 6:2, who was also on a white horse. They suggest that the rider symbolized Christ and the spread of the Good News across the world. See commentary at 6:2 for more information.)

This rider is named Faithful and True, who judges fairly and then goes to war. The order of words indicates that the warfare is a result of God’s judgment on the inhabitants of the earth who have completely rejected him. Although Jesus is called “Faithful and True,” “Word of God” (19:13), and “King of kings and Lord of lords” (19:16), these verses imply that no name can do him justice. He is greater than any description or expression the human mind can devise.

His eyes were bright like flames of fire (see also 1:14; 2:18). Christ’s many crowns symbolize his ultimate authority. He has a name written on him, and only he knew what it meant. Although many possibilities have been proposed, most likely this is a name that the believers were not meant to know, at least not yet.

19:13 The believers who had come out of the Great Tribulation had “washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb and made them white” (7:14). Christ himself, when he rides to the earth on the white horse, will be clothed with a robe dipped in blood. Some suggest that this is the blood of the martyrs; some think it is the blood of Christ’s enemies (referring to a similar passage in Isaiah 63:1-6); others think that this is the Lamb’s own blood which, ultimately, brings about this final day of victory. Another name is given for Christ, the Word of God. Jesus is the final word of God, the voice of God himself, the revealer of God.

19:14 Accompanying Christ are the armies of heaven, referring to all believers who have been taken to heaven (in the Rapture, which will have occurred at some point prior to this although believers are divided as to when this will happen). Here the believers will be returning to earth with Christ as part of his vast army. They will be dressed in pure white linen, as noted also in 19:8. Some suggest that this army will be angels because Christ had spoken of returning with his angels (Matthew 24:30-31). Most likely, however, this army will be believers because 17:14 says that the victory will come through the Lamb “and his people.”

The believers will come with Christ on white horses. They will not come to fight, however, for there will not need to be a battle. Christ will conquer with his potent word (19:15).

19:15 Christ is described as having a sharp sword coming from his mouth. This is also seen in 1:16 and 2:12. The word for “sword” used here, however, is not the small two-edged sword but a mighty sword that is four or five feet long. This was the sword used by cavalry soldiers. Christ’s words of judgment are as sharp as swords. With that sword, he struck down the nations. Isaiah had prophesied of Christ, “He will rule against the wicked and destroy them with the breath of his mouth” (Isaiah 11:4).

The picture of Christ ruling with an iron rod (or scepter) describes him beating down the nations (see also 2:27). This is not a king’s scepter that is merely symbolic of power; instead, it is a club with which he will destroy them. The psalmist had written of the Messiah, “You will break [the nations] with an iron rod and smash them like clay pots” (Psalm 2:9).

Lastly, Christ is pictured as treading the winepress of the fierce wrath of almighty God. The winepress image appeared in 14:19-20; it describes God’s great wrath against those who had rejected him. Here, God’s fierce anger is directed at all of sin personified. At this point, God will totally destroy sin and evil. A winepress is a large vat where grapes are collected and then crushed. It is often used in the Bible to symbolize judgment (Isaiah 63:3-6; Lamentations 1:15; Joel 3:12-13).

19:16 Most of the world will be worshiping the beast, the Antichrist, whom they believe has all power and authority. Then suddenly out of heaven Christ and his army will appear. On his robe and thigh (easily seen, for he is on a horse) was written this title: King of kings and Lord of lords. This title indicates God’s sovereignty. It is used elsewhere in Scripture, always indicating God’s absolute sovereignty over all other kings and lords (see 17:14; Deuteronomy 10:17; Daniel 2:47; 1 Timothy 6:15).

19:17-18 John saw another angel; this one described as standing in the sun and calling out to the vultures—birds of carrion. This will be the most gruesome single act of carnage ever in the history of mankind; the entire army will come to do battle and, with the word of Christ, they will be totally annihilated. Their flesh will be left for the birds to eat, for there will be no one left to bury the dead. A previous description of this battle included how “the blood flowed from the winepress in a stream about 180 miles long and as high as a horse’s bridle” (14:20). This great banquet is a grim contrast to the wedding feast of the Lamb

(19:9). Both will be provided by God—but one will be a celebration, the other will be devastation.

The angel called the birds together before the battle. Again, the picture is clear of the certainty of the final outcome. Ezekiel had written God’s words to him in a prophecy of this final battle, “And now, son of man, call all the birds and wild animals,” says the Sovereign Lord. “Say to them, ‘Gather together for my great sacrificial feast. Come from far and near to the mountains of Israel, and there eat the flesh and drink the blood. . . . Feast at my banquet table—feast on horses, riders, and valiant warriors’” (Ezekiel 39:17, 20).

19:19 This beast is the same one that had risen out of the sea (chapter 13; see commentary there). The kings of the earth refer to the “ten horns” that John had seen on the beast (see 13:1), and, most likely, their number symbolizes all the kings of the earth who pledge allegiance to the Antichrist. At the pouring out of the sixth bowl of God’s wrath, “miracle-working demons caused all the rulers of the world to gather for battle against the Lord . . . to a place called Armageddon” (16:14-16). Chapter 16 gave a preview of what was to come and how; chapter 19 describes the event itself. Here, verse 19 tells of the assembly for the battle of Armageddon. (For further information on this battle and the various viewpoints regarding it, see commentary at 16:16.)

The beast and the kings of the earth and their armies gathered to fight against the one sitting on the horse (Christ) and his army (the redeemed). The battle lines had been drawn, and the greatest confrontation in the history of the world was about to begin.

19:20 The two armies sat facing each other—the beast and all the kings of the earth versus the rider on the white horse and his redeemed people. Suddenly, the battle was over. There was no fight, for, in a second, the end had come. There was no need for a battle because the victory had been won centuries earlier when the rider on the white horse, Christ, had died on a cross. At that time, Satan had been defeated; here at Armageddon, he is finally stripped of all his power. Satan’s beast (the Antichrist, described in 13:1-10) was captured, along with his false prophet who had deceived all who had accepted the mark of the beast. This is described in 13:11-18.

The beast and the false prophet were captured and thrown alive into the lake of fire that burns with sulfur. This is the final destination of all evil. At this point, however, only these two evil beings received this punishment. This lake is different from the bottomless pit referred to in 9:1; it is mentioned in 14:10-11 and 19:3. There are several statements concerning both spiritual powers and people being thrown into the lake of fire. Here, the Antichrist and the false prophet were thrown into the fiery lake. Next, their leader, Satan himself, will be thrown into that lake (20:10), and finally death and the grave (20:14). Afterward, everyone whose name is not recorded in the Book of Life will be thrown into the lake of fire (20:15).

19:21 With the two leaders captured (the Beast and the false prophet), the army was left to be destroyed. Christ, with the sharp sword of his mouth (19:15), kills the entire army of rebellious kings and soldiers in one fell swoop. His sword of judgment falls and destroys everything. The vultures, who had been called ahead of time by the angel (19:17-18), gorged themselves on the dead bodies. With no one left on the planet to bury these dead, they were abandoned to the carrion birds to devour.

REVELATION 20

THE THOUSAND YEARS / 20:1-6

Chapter 20 has probably engendered more argument, discussion, and books than any other section of Revelation. Much of how a person understands this chapter will depend on the approach taken in the other sections of the book. There are three main views of the Millennium that differ over: (1) whether the millennial reign of Christ is an earthly historical reign of peace or a spiritual reign in the hearts of God's people; (2) whether this millennial reign is a literal one thousand years or another length of time.

Whether the one thousand years is a literal or figurative number, most likely, the Millennium will occur in history; it will probably be an earthly reign of Christ that follows his second coming.

20:1 The end of chapter 19 describes the Beast, the false prophet, and all their followers thrown into the lake of fire. This vision at the beginning of chapter 20 describes Christ's dealings with Satan. An angel came from heaven with the key to the bottomless pit and a heavy chain in his hand. In 9:1-12, an angel had arrived with the key to the bottomless pit and had released the locusts as part of the fifth trumpet judgment. This may be the same angel.

20:2-3 Several names are used here for the same being—the dragon, the old serpent, the Devil, and Satan (see also 12:9 for another list of these names). The angel seized Satan, bound him, and threw him into the bottomless pit, locking the door. Satan was put away and could not get out until God would decide to let him out. God's sovereignty is emphasized again.

This describes a different situation than that in 12:7-13. Chapter 12 describes Satan's fall from heaven and his freedom to roam the earth (12:17). Chapter 20 describes Satan being removed from the earth for a time in order that he could not deceive the nations anymore. God did not bind the dragon as punishment—that would occur later (20:10)—but to stop him from deceiving the nations. But who are "the nations"? It appears that, at the battle of Armageddon (16:14-16; 19:19), only the beast, the false prophets, the kings of the nations, and their armies were destroyed. The battle at Armageddon did not kill the entire population of the earth. Therefore, some unbelievers would still be alive (the believers would be with Christ, for they had been part of his army, 19:14). Satan will be bound for a thousand years. Whether symbolic or literal, this time period of Satan's imprisonment matches the time period of Christ's reign (20:4-6).

Those who propose that this Millennium time period is not limited to a thousand years (the amillennialists) and believe that it is the time between the first and second comings of Christ interpret this binding as referring to Satan being kept from working in the lives of believers and from stopping the gospel's advance. Others explain, however, that the word "nations" is always used in Revelation to describe unbelievers. It seems clear, therefore, that Satan will be bound and locked away from deceiving the unbelievers (still alive after Armageddon), while Christ rules during this period. The words describing how Satan is locked and sealed away indicate that his activity on earth will be completely stopped for this period of time. During this time, the unbelievers will experience true justice and God's perfect rule over the earth.

Why is there a millennium? Why doesn't God go straight from Armageddon to eternity? Why this interim and then another final battle—Gog and Magog? We don't know, but it appears that unbelievers on earth are given the opportunity to experience what the rule of God is like. However, as shown in the following verses, even though unbelievers will experience the reign of Christ, they will continue to rebel against God even without Satan's deceptive influence. And the moment that Satan is let out of the prison, these people will flock after Satan and go to war against Christ. This will prove their absolute depravity, their true allegiance, and the necessity of the final punishment in the lake of fire.

20:4-6 Satan has been bound and thrown into the bottomless pit so that for a thousand years he will not be able to deceive the nations. Here Revelation describes who will take part in that thousand-year reign of Christ, free from the influence of evil.

First, John saw thrones. The people sitting on the thrones had been given the authority to judge. Who are those sitting on the thrones? The Scripture does not identify them specifically. Many interpreters believe that these are those who had been martyred for their faith, but the problem with this theory is that the martyrs are not mentioned until the last part of the verse. Some suggest that this is only the twenty-four elders (4:4) or that this forms an angelic court of some kind. In Matthew 19:28, the apostles are promised that they will judge from twelve thrones. First Corinthians 6:2-3 says that the saints will judge the world. What we can determine is that this is a court in heaven composed of those whom God wants to assist in judgment (see also Daniel 7:26).

Next, he saw the souls of those who had been beheaded for their testimony about Jesus, for proclaiming the word of God. Then a problem arises with the translation. Between the sentence describing the martyrs and the sentence that says they had not worshiped the beast or his statue, nor accepted his mark, the Greek includes the words “and who,” which can be taken as a further description of the martyrs, or as a description of an entirely different group. If the latter is the case, John saw the martyrs, whom he had described in 6:9-11, as well as others who were martyred during the Great Tribulation. Then he saw a separate group who had not worshiped the beast.

If “those who had not worshiped the beast” is merely a further description of the martyrs, then it appears that only the martyrs came to life again, and they reigned with Christ for a thousand years—a reward for their ultimate faithfulness to Christ by giving up their lives. This first resurrection could be a resurrection only of the martyrs. If so, then the rest of the believers along with the unbelievers are described as the rest of the dead who do not come back to life until the thousand years are over. At this point, God will separate the unbelievers from the believers, sending the former to the lake of fire and granting the latter eternal life. However, some commentators think that all believers partake of the “first resurrection” because all believers have been freed from the second death—that is, the lake of fire. The phrase “come back to life” refers to a physical resurrection of their bodies. These believers will have new bodies, as described in 1 Corinthians 15:51-53.

Those who do not believe in a literal thousand-year reign of Christ say that this first resurrection is spiritual (in believers’ hearts at salvation), and that the Millennium is their spiritual reign with Christ on earth between his first and second comings. During this time, believers are priests of God because Christ reigns in their hearts. In this view, the second resurrection is the bodily resurrection of all people for judgment. Others believe that the first resurrection occurs after Satan is set aside. It is a physical resurrection of believers who then reign with Christ on the earth for a literal 1,000 years. The second resurrection will occur at the end of this Millennium when God will judge unbelievers who have died.

These believers are “blessed,” the fifth of seven beatitudes in Revelation (1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 22:7, 14).

THE DEFEAT OF SATAN / 20:7-10

At Armageddon, the beast and the false prophet had been thrown into the lake of fire. Then Satan was locked away for a thousand years. Upon his release, he immediately goes on the offensive against Christ and his people. But his end will be like his followers—he too will be cast into the lake of fire.

20:7-8 Satan had been locked up for a thousand years so that he could no longer deceive the nations (20:2-3). But at the end of that thousand years, Satan will be let out of his prison (this is planned by God, see 2:3). Immediately, Satan will deceive the nations from every corner of the earth. The unbelievers still on the earth after the battle of Armageddon will have lived through the thousand-year reign of Christ, but as soon as Satan is set free, they will be deceived and ready for battle. This reaction demonstrates that Satan will not repent. It also shows that people rebel against God no matter how long or how many chances they are given to repent. The source of rebellion against God comes not from the environment or even from Satan himself but from within the human heart.

The names Gog and Magog symbolize all the nations of the earth that join together to battle God. Noah's son, Japheth, had a son named Magog (Genesis 10:2). Ezekiel presented Gog, of the land of Magog, as a leader of forces against Israel (Ezekiel 38–39). This comparison is used in Revelation, as is so much other Old Testament prophecy, because of the similarity of evil forces battling against God's people and God's cataclysmic victory. Whether symbolic or literal, Gog represents the aggregate military might of all the forces opposed to God. Many say that the battle Ezekiel described will occur at the end of human history, but there are many differences between the events described in Ezekiel and the final battle of Revelation 20. Regardless of when this battle will occur, the message is clear: God will deliver his people. No enemy will be able to stand against his mighty power.

20:9 This vast army of people, led by Satan himself, went up on the broad plain of the earth and surrounded God's people and the beloved city. The unbelievers attacked the believers. "Beloved city" probably refers to Jerusalem, but it may be a way of describing God's people. These people will be surrounded by this great evil army.

Before a battle can even ensue, however, fire from heaven came down on the attacking armies and consumed them (see also Ezekiel 38:22; 39:6). God totally destroyed this entire army. All of Satan's followers were destroyed in an instant.

20:10 The Devil, Satan, the one who had been let free and had betrayed all the nations, received his just punishment. He was thrown into the lake of fire that burns with sulfur, joining the beast and the false prophet (19:20). The evil trinity was gone forever (for more on the beast and the false prophet, see chapter 13). Satan's power is not eternal—he will meet his doom. He began his evil work in mankind at the beginning (Genesis 3:1-6) and continues it today, but he will be destroyed and never a threat to anyone again (for more information on the lake of burning sulfur, see commentary at 19:3 and 19:20). Those in that place will face torment day and night forever and ever.

The description of the torment in this lake of burning sulfur has caused a debate regarding the true nature of this place. Some believe in a doctrine of “annihilationism”—meaning that after death, the wicked are utterly obliterated and consumed through God’s judgment. Their “torment” is knowing that they will never come to life again. This view is based on the fact that much of the biblical imagery of hell—a consuming fire, destruction, and perishing—may imply eternal death. Another view is that this lake of burning sulfur (and its implication of the fires of hell) may be symbolic of a certain kind of horror that will be appropriate punishment. The exact nature of this lake of fire is unknown, but certainly it is not a place one would desire to go. (For more information on the lake of fire, see commentary at 14:9-11.)

THE FINAL JUDGMENT / 20:11-15

At the judgment, the books will be opened. These books contain the recorded deeds of everyone, good or evil. Everyone’s life will be reviewed and evaluated. No one is saved by deeds, but deeds are seen as clear evidence of a person’s actual relationship with God. Jesus will look at how we have handled gifts, opportunities, and responsibilities. God’s gracious gift of salvation does not free us from the requirement of faithful obedience and service. Each of us must serve Christ in the best way we know and live each day knowing the books will be opened.

20:11 Next, John saw a great white throne with someone sitting on it. He did not identify the one on the throne. Throughout Revelation, it is God who is pictured as sitting on a throne (see, for example, 4:2; 7:10; 19:4). Daniel had a similar vision (Daniel 7:9-10). Some suggest that the one sitting on the great white throne is Jesus, citing several verses (Matthew 25:31; John 5:22; 2 Corinthians 5:10). Most likely, the little verse that solves the mystery is found in Jesus’ statement, “The Father and I are one” (John 10:20); thus, the one throne is occupied by the Father and the Son as one.

With the appearance of this one on the throne, the earth and sky fled from his presence, but they found no place to hide. This poetic imagery could describe the dissolution of everything material and corrupt in the presence of God as Judge; it could also depict the end of the old earth and old heavens—in preparation for the creation of the new (21:1). (See also Isaiah 51:6; Matthew 24:35; 2 Peter 3:10-12.)

20:12-13 The dead, both great and small probably refers to all people—believers and non-believers. No one will escape God’s scrutiny. Why they are called “the dead” is uncertain. Some suggest that this is only the judgment of unbelievers because they would be the ones still dead who would take part in the second resurrection (20:5). However, it most likely stands for everyone, for God “will judge everyone, both the living and the dead” (1 Peter 4:5). Christ described the judgment of all people (Matthew 25:31-33, 46).

This is the great and final judgment, the place where the books will be opened, including the Book of Life. As noted in 3:5, this is the heavenly registry of those who have accepted Christ’s gift of salvation. All people will be judged according to the things written in the books, according to what they had done. The idea of judgment by works is a theme throughout the Old and New Testaments (Psalm 62:12; Jeremiah 17:10; Daniel 7:10; Romans 2:6; 14:10-12; 1 Corinthians 3:12-15; 2 Corinthians 5:10; 1 Peter 1:17). No one will be forgotten at this final gathering.

Believers will be judged—not to see if they merit eternal life, for their names will already be in the Book of Life. This will be a judgment for rewards. Believers’ works cannot save them, but their deeds are important to God. The deeds with which believers build their lives do matter (1 Corinthians 3:11-15). Unbelievers also will be judged according to their works, but, of course, no works, no matter how good, will be able to save them.

20:14-15 And death and the grave were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death—the lake of fire. And anyone whose name was not found in the Book of Life was thrown into the lake of fire. God’s judgment is complete. As Paul said, “The last enemy to be destroyed is death” (1 Corinthians 15:26). Isaiah had foreseen this day: “He will swallow up death forever” (Isaiah 25:8). The lake of fire is the ultimate destination of everything wicked—Satan, the beast, the false prophet, the demons, death, Hades, and anyone whose name was not written in the book of life. This is the second death. They died the first time physically; this time their death was spiritual. The lake of fire was prepared by God for the Devil and his angels (Matthew 25:41). Those who refuse to believe in Christ will share the Devil’s judgment. (For more on the “lake of fire” see commentary at 19:3; 19:20; 20:10.)

REVELATION 21:1–22:6

THE NEW JERUSALEM / 21:1–22:6

John watched as this gigantic city descended to the new earth created by God. The city was a 1,400-mile square with 200-foot high walls. Made of pure gold, it was decorated with all kinds of beautiful gems. Its gates opened in every direction, as evidence of the church's success in proclaiming Christ to every nation (5:9; 21:13). At the very center of this city was God, the enthroned Lamb. The light from his throne illumined the entire city. From his throne, a crystal-clear river of life was flowing. At the river's bank, the tree of life was flourishing, producing twelve different kinds of fruit for the healing of the nations. "Nothing evil will be allowed to enter" (21:27), for this is where God will reign!

21:1 John sees a new heaven and a new earth, for the old heaven and the old earth had disappeared. The earth and sky had fled from God's presence (see 20:11), and this new heaven and earth had taken their place. When sin entered the human race, it and all creation were corrupted (Romans 8:20-22). All of this "newness" is not merely physical but also spiritual and moral. Everything will be "new" because "God is now among his people" (21:3).

That the sea was also gone could refer to evil being gone, for the sea was associated with evil (the beast had come out of the sea, 13:1). This could mean that there will be no oceans in the new earth. It probably means, however, that all evil will be forever banished (21:4).

The Old Testament prophets had predicted that God would create a brand-new earth and heaven. Isaiah described this (Isaiah 65:17-19) as had Peter (2 Peter 3:12-13).

21:2 In addition to a new heaven and a new earth is a new city. The holy city, the new Jerusalem descends out of heaven from God. The "new Jerusalem" is where God lives among his people. At the end of time, God will come down to his new heaven and new earth to be with his renewed people. The church in Philadelphia was promised "all who are victorious . . . will be citizens in the city of my God—the new Jerusalem that comes down from heaven from my God" (3:12).

That this city is called "the new Jerusalem" indicates a relationship to the "old Jerusalem," the capital of Israel. As the old creation had been corrupted by sin, so the old Jerusalem had been the city where prophets were killed and where Christ himself was crucified. Jesus had lamented over the city (Matthew 23:37). Yet throughout the Old Testament are rich promises for the future restoration of Israel—God’s people. This new Jerusalem will be God’s dwelling place among his people (see commentary at 21:3).

God’s people, all believers, will live in this magnificent city, described as a beautiful bride prepared for her husband—pure and radiant, ready to join the one she loves (see also 21:9). In 19:7-9, God’s people, the church, are described as a bride making herself ready for the marriage feast (see commentary there); here, the new Jerusalem is also described as a bride. Whether Jerusalem is an actual city, or symbolic of the community of God’s people, is unknown. But we are certain that there will be relationships in the new Jerusalem—first between God and his people, and second among God’s people.

21:3 A loud shout from the throne (not from God, but probably an angel near the throne) announced the words all of creation had been waiting to hear: “Look, the home of God is now among his people! . . . God himself will be with them.” What had been foreshadowed in God’s presence in the Tabernacle (Exodus 40:34-35), in the Temple (1 Kings 8:10-11), and in the bodily presence of God himself in Jesus (John 1:14) will become a reality in the new Jerusalem. As God had walked with Adam and Eve in the Garden (Genesis 3:8), so he will live with his people. This desire to be in the presence of God should be our strongest desire here on earth and the focus of all our worship.

21:4 The utter joy of living in God’s presence is indescribable; Revelation explains what will not be there. There will be no more death or sorrow or crying or pain. All that has caused sadness and suffering will be taken away. All sin that has been the source of sorrow will be gone. Isaiah had seen a future day of no more sorrow and sighing (Isaiah 35:10). There can be no evil in God’s glorious presence; therefore, the old world and its evils are gone forever. The “old world” where Satan ran free and sin ran rampant will be replaced by God’s world.

21:5 This time, God himself, the one sitting on the throne, spoke (see also 1:8). His words describe the reality of what was happening: “Look, I am making all things new!” God is the Creator. The Bible begins with the majestic story of God creating the universe, and it concludes with his creating a new heaven and a new earth. This is a tremendous hope and encouragement for believers. God told John to write this so that believers across the generations, awaiting this glorious future, can be encouraged to know that these words are trustworthy and true.

Because God has spoken, believers can know of the absolute certainty that these events will one day occur. God's word never changes.

21:6 Just as God finished the work of creation (Genesis 2:1-3) and Jesus finished the work of redemption (John 19:30), so they will finish the entire plan of salvation by inviting the redeemed into a new creation and proclaim, "It is finished!"

God said, "I am the Alpha and the Omega—the Beginning and the End." This repeats 1:8 (see also 1:17; 2:8), where Christ had said this to John. Alpha and Omega are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet. God is sovereign over history and in control of everything.

God promised that he would give the springs of the water of life without charge to all who are thirsty. This water is also described in 22:1, and it symbolizes eternal life. Jesus had told the Samaritan woman about this water (John 4:13-14), as well as all who would believe in him (John 7:37-38). Water pictures the reward of those who have been "victorious" (21:7). They will no longer have any needs, for their needs will be completely met by God throughout all eternity.

21:7-8 Verses 7 and 8 form an interlude; they are directed to the readers who must make a choice whether they will be part of the victorious ones who will inherit all these blessings (21:7) or the cowards who turn away from God and face their doom (21:8). Because they stubbornly refused to drink from the water of life and receive salvation in Christ, their doom will be the second death—the lake of fire. The "first death" is physical death. But all the dead will be raised to be judged, and those who are sent away to punishment will face the "second death," which is spiritual.

John described the beast's followers. This list is not meant to be exhaustive, but is representative of all sin and rebellion against God. Those who refuse to believe, no matter how good or moral they are, will join those whose sins are more blatant, as recorded in this list. All unbelievers will face the same punishment. This is a warning to those who may be Christians in name only to be certain of their salvation. Which will they choose? The water of life, or the fire of the second death? Those who can endure the testing of evil and remain faithful will be rewarded by God.

21:9 The remainder of the chapter is a stunning description of the new city of God. The vision is symbolic and shows that the believers' new home with God will defy description. They will not be disappointed by it in any way. One of the seven angels told John that he would show him the bride, the wife of the Lamb—referring to the church (the believers, 19:7-8) and the new Jerusalem (21:2) all rolled into one in this awesome vision. (For more on the imagery of the bride as the wife of the Lamb, see commentary at 19:7-8 and 21:2.) In contrast to the great prostitute, who symbolizes the evil system and the people who rebelled against God, the bride represents those who remained faithful to Christ and now are prepared to join him.

21:10-11 John was again in spirit—this time carried away to a great, high mountain. From that vantage point, the angel showed John the holy city, Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God.

This is a further description of what John had written in 21:2—this time describing the city itself. Verses 10-14 describe the beauty of this city: These descriptions are not meant to be taken literally, but the fact that this is a symbolic vision does not diminish the glory of what John was attempting to describe. Often John drew upon Old Testament imagery (as from Ezekiel’s prophecies) in his attempt to describe the indescribable. As with the imagery of the bride, this city pictures the future, glorious dwelling place of the believers. John has already described eternal life in the new heaven and new earth (21:3-6); here he described heaven’s physical characteristics—absolute and incomparable beauty.

This city had no lights in it; instead, it radiated with the glory of God. John did not have electric or neon lights as a reference point, so he used the picture of a clear jewel, perhaps cut with many facets, radiating and reflecting light. Jasper had been used earlier in describing the appearance of God himself (4:3) and is used again in 21:11, 18-19.

21:12-13 Next, John described the walls of the city. In John’s day, most cities had walls around them, so in this part of the vision John described what would be the ideal city to his audience. There were twelve gates, three on each side of the city. The names of the twelve tribes of Israel were written on the gates. Ezekiel had seen a similar vision (see Ezekiel 48:30-34). Each gate was guarded by an angel, once again describing for John’s audience the ideal city with high walls (and watchmen at every gate).

21:14 The great, high wall of the city had twelve foundation stones. Ancient city walls would have huge stones as their foundations. This city had only twelve foundation stones—these were indeed huge stones. While the gates had the names of the twelve tribes, these stones had the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. Jesus told the apostles that they would rule the twelve tribes

(Matthew 19:28; Luke 22:30). The term “twelve apostles” could refer to the original twelve disciples, but other believers had been called “apostles” (such as Paul and Barnabas). It is more important to understand the symbolism that the church rests on the work of the apostles—the first followers of Jesus. Paul had written, “We are [God’s] house, built on the foundation of the apostles and the prophets. And the cornerstone is Christ Jesus himself. We who believe are carefully joined together, becoming a holy temple for the Lord” (Ephesians 2:20-21).

21:15-17 The angel had a gold measuring stick to measure the city, its gates, and its wall. The city’s measurements are symbolic of a place that will hold all God’s people. These measurements are all multiples of 12, the number for God’s people: there were 12 tribes in Israel and 12 apostles who started the church. In Greek, the measurements are 144 (12 x 12) cubits (216 feet) thick; there are 12 layers in the walls, and 12 gates in the city; and the height, length, and breadth are all the same: 12,000 stadia (1,400 miles). The new Jerusalem is a perfect cube, the same shape as the Most Holy Place in the Temple (1 Kings 6:20). This act of measuring shows its completeness as noted in 11:1 and in Ezekiel 40–41.

21:18 That the wall was made of jasper and that God himself is described as appearing like jasper (4:3) indicates that everything in the city would radiate the presence of God. This holy city, in the shape of a perfect cube, is reminiscent of the Most Holy Place in the Tabernacle and in the Temple. In Solomon’s Temple, the Most Holy Place was splendid, with its interior overlaid with pure gold (1 Kings 6:21-22). So this entire city is pure gold, as clear as glass. Its clearness indicates its lack of impurity; nothing will impede its ability to transmit God’s glory.

21:19-20 The foundation stones of the wall were inlaid with twelve gems. The significance of each stone has been debated. Some have suggested that this imagery comes from the breastplate of the high priest, which had twelve precious stones on it (Exodus 28:17-20), even though the identifications of the stones are different. This is the most likely source of the imagery, indicating that what had once been the high priest’s privilege alone had become part of the very foundation of the city of God, made available to all people. The high priest would enter the Most Holy Place (again, this is the same shape as the city—a cube) only once each year on the Day of Atonement to make a sacrifice for the sins of the entire nation. The Most Holy Place was the place of God’s presence. In the new Jerusalem, all of God’s people will constantly be in his presence.

Nothing will ever again separate them from him.

The names of the various stones indicate jewels of various colors—all of them rare and beautiful. The picture John gives of this city indicates beauty beyond description.

21:21 Each of the twelve gates (21:11) was made from a single pearl. Pearls were very valuable in ancient times (see Matthew 13:45-46), so a pearl large enough to make a gate for this great city would be beyond imagining. In addition, the main street was pure gold, as clear as glass, just like the rest of the city (21:18). Again the emphasis is on its purity and transparency in order to radiate the glory of God.

21:22 This beautiful city, like any other city in the ancient world, would be expected to have a temple—a central place of worship. Many ancient cities would have several temples for the various gods the people worshiped. The focal point of worship in Jerusalem was God's Temple. That Temple, the center of God's presence among his people, was the primary place of worship. In the new Jerusalem, however, no temple could be seen because God's presence would be everywhere. He would be worshiped throughout the city. The Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are its temple. Their presence would be enough.

21:23 God had remade the heavens (21:1). Perhaps, when he did so, he didn't recreate a sun or a moon. The new city has no need of sun or moon for the radiance of God's glory is its light. Isaiah had also foreseen this (Isaiah 60:19-21). John, in his Gospel, had recorded Jesus' statement, "I am the light of the world" (John 8:12).

21:24-25 Elsewhere in Revelation, the word nations referred to the nations of the earth that joined the Antichrist (see 11:2, 18; 18:3, 23; 19:15). Here, however, the term refers to God's people. This shows the culmination of the conversion offered to all nations (5:9; 11:18; 14:6-7). This does not mean universal salvation, as some have suggested, but that God has chosen from every tribe, nation, people, and language who will come to be part of his great city. The city will be lit by the glory of God and the Lamb (21:23), and the people will walk in its light. All people on earth, even the rulers of the world who experienced power and glory in this world, will simply bring their glory to God's throne, casting down their crowns before him. Their splendor will be nothing compared to what they will experience in eternity.

The city's gates will never close. This does not imply that outside of the new Jerusalem, unsaved people are still roaming around. Instead, this pictures a city with open gates on a new earth where believers will dwell throughout. Ancient cities shut their gates at night for security purposes. However, since there is no night, and since all evil will have been eradicated, these gates will stay open constantly. Revelation seems to picture great activity coming and going from the city.

21:26-27 In contrast to the worldly nations' trade with evil Babylon (chapter 18), the nations (again describing God's people) will bring their glory and honor into the city. John again made the point that nothing evil will be allowed to enter. This does not indicate that evil would still be present in some realm outside the great city. All evil will be gone. Instead, in 20:7-8, John was warning his contemporary readers that they would not be in this glorious place unless their names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life. (For more on the Book of Life, see 3:5 and 20:12-15.)

22:1-2 This section describes what could be called the "new Eden." What the first Garden of Eden was supposed to be is fulfilled here. What Adam and Eve would have had if they had not fallen is what is given to God's people. Adam and Eve lost Paradise; here, God has remade it.

The angel showed John a pure river with the water of life, clear as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb, coursing down the center of the main street. The water of life is a symbol of eternal life. Jesus used this same image with the Samaritan woman (John 4:7-14). It pictures fullness of life with God and the eternal blessings that come when people believe in him and allow him to satisfy their spiritual thirst (see 22:17). The Garden of Eden also had a river running through it that watered it (2:10). In both the Old and New Testaments, water pictures salvation and the refreshment of the Holy Spirit. Ezekiel's vision also had a river with trees growing along it (Ezekiel 47:1-12). God in Christ, who is the water of life (John 7:37-38), is the source of this constant stream of blessing and refreshment for his people. This river flows down the middle of the main street of the city and is accessible to everyone.

This tree of life can be compared to the tree of life in the Garden of Eden (Genesis 2:9; see also Ezekiel 47:12.) After Adam and Eve sinned, they were forbidden to eat from the tree of life. But because of the forgiveness of sin through the blood of Jesus, there will be no evil or sin in the new Jerusalem. Believers will be able to eat freely from the tree of life when sin's control is destroyed and eternity with God is secure. This tree (one tree or many trees) grows on each side of the river and bears twelve crops of fruit, with a new crop every month. Adam and Eve had been cut off from the tree of life because of their sin (Genesis 3:22-24); now the tree has fruit available for everyone—fresh fruit, not just once a year with a dry time in between, but new fruit every month.

In addition to the fruit, the leaves of the tree were used for medicine to heal the nations. Why would the nations need to be healed if all evil has been eliminated? John was alluding to Ezekiel 47:12, where water flowing from the temple produced trees with healing leaves. He was not implying that there would be illness in the new earth; he was emphasizing that the water of life would produce health and strength wherever it would go. God's people in his Kingdom will have no physical or spiritual needs. All the hurts of the nations will have been healed.

22:3-4 The phrase no longer will anything be cursed could mean that nothing accursed will be in God's presence. This would fulfill Zechariah 14:11. More likely, this refers to God lifting the curse that had been placed in Eden (Genesis 3:17-18). The phrase the throne of God and of the Lamb indicates the oneness of God and the Lamb, as well as God's presence right among his people and they will see his face. The face of God had not been seen by anyone since Adam and Eve sinned. Even Moses, the great lawgiver who went up on the mountain to meet with God, had only been able to see God from the back (Exodus 33:20). Here in heaven, however, God's people will see him face-to-face (1 John 3:2). To be able to see God's face suggests intimate personal relationship.

In addition, God's people will have his name written on their foreheads. This points out God's ownership. God's people had been "sealed" (7:3), and this seal previously had been described as being in the form of the Father's name (14:1). The point is that this is the same group—God will bring his own safely to his eternal Kingdom.

22:5 The point that there will be no night was noted in 21:25. This indicates that there will be no more evil, no more darkness, and no more time (for God had created day and night, along with the sun and the moon, to mark the passage of time—Genesis 1:14-15). The people in the city will not need lamps or sun—for the Lord God will shine on them, as was also noted in 21:23 (see commentary there).

The result of the entire book of Revelation is in this verse: God's people, those who have been redeemed by the blood of Jesus, will reign forever and ever (see also Daniel 7:18, 28). Eternal life is ours now and forever.

22:6 John referred to the angel (as opposed to “an” angel), so this is probably the same angel who had shown him the heavenly city (21:9; 22:1). The revelation closes with an angel explaining that what John has written is trustworthy and true. Throughout the ages, God had been telling his prophets what the future holds, and he did so again in this prophecy to John. Revelation describes what will happen soon (see also 1:1). The word “soon” means imminent—and implies certainty.

REVELATION 22:7-21

JESUS IS COMING / 22:7-21

These verses form the epilogue to this book. An angel expressed the authenticity of the prophecy, and at the very end, Jesus warned that the end would indeed come soon.

22:7 From Jesus himself come the words of assurance: “Look, I am coming soon!” The word “soon” (taxu) means that his coming will be quick and without delay. It may not be “soon” according to human timing (after all, John wrote this two thousand years ago), but it is certain to occur; it is imminent. Jesus clearly told his followers, “So be prepared, because you don’t know what day your Lord is coming. You also must be ready all the time. For the Son of Man will come when least expected” (Matthew 24:42, 44).

Then follows the sixth of seven beatitudes in the book: “Blessed are those who obey the prophecy written in this scroll.” (The other beatitudes are found in 1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:14; see the chart at 14:13.) Like the beatitude at 1:3, the one listed here promises a blessing to those who obey God by heeding the warnings of this prophecy.

22:8-9 Next, John signed his name, so to speak, as the one who saw and heard all these things. John did not imagine what he had written; he had actually seen and heard everything he had recorded. He understood that he had been given an awesome privilege. Once again overwhelmed, John wrote that he fell down to worship the angel who had given him the inspired glimpse of the future. But again (as at 19:10), the angel prohibited John’s worship, telling him to worship God. God alone is worthy of worship and adoration. He is above all creation, even the angels.

22:10 The angel told John what to do after his vision had ended. Instead of sealing up what he had written, as Daniel had been commanded to do (Daniel 12:4-12), John was told, “Do not seal up the prophetic words you have written, for the time is near.” John’s prophecy was to be left open so that all could read and understand. This message was needed immediately by the churches of John’s day, as well as believers across the years until Christ’s return. Daniel’s message had been sealed because it was not a message for Daniel’s time. But the book of Revelation was a message for John’s time and is relevant today. As Christ’s return approaches, there is an increased polarization between God's followers and Satan's followers. We must read the book of Revelation, hear its message, and be prepared for Christ's certain return.

22:11 The angel was not recommending evil living in this verse. Instead, this note follows on the heels of the angel's words that "the time is near" (22:10). Indeed, it may be so near that there would be no time for people to alter their lifestyles. The angel is showing how our choices lead to consequences. Like a train running down a track, the consequences will ultimately come for the choices we make. God is always calling people to repent, but when Christ returns, the opportunity will have passed. This is a call to the readers to make up their minds now and live for God. People will reap the consequences for the kinds of lives they have led; those who have done wrong and who have been vile will face that in eternity, and those who have done good and have been holy will be rewarded accordingly, as noted in 22:12.

22:12-13 Christ here spoke, reiterating that he would be coming soon (22:7). He would bring a reward that would be given to his people, according to their deeds. (For more on these rewards, see commentary at 20:12-13.) Our reward will be a place in God's Kingdom (see Matthew 25:34-40; Mark 9:47; 10:29-30), not on the basis of merit (good deeds) but because of God's gracious promise to people of faith (Luke 12:31-32). The believer's true reward is God's presence and power through the Holy Spirit. Later, in eternity, believers will be rewarded for their faith and service. No act of mercy will be forgotten; no true believer will be abandoned. (For more on rewards, see Matthew 16:27; 19:27-30; Luke 6:23, 35; 1 Corinthians 3:8, 13-15; 9:25; James 1:12.)

Although all God's people will be saved and will enjoy the reward of eternity with him, a number of rewards seem to be given to individuals, according to what they have done. God will look at each individual's heart; thus, it may be that a quiet saint praying daily beside her bed will receive even greater reward than a flamboyant, well-known preacher. It may be that the woman who used her gifts to the fullest extent will be rewarded more greatly than the one who believed but was too afraid to reach her potential. God will not bestow his rewards in ways that we humans might. Each believer's job is to serve God to his or her fullest potential with a heart that is right with him.

Next, Christ repeated the words he had spoken at the beginning of the Revelation: "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End" (see 1:8, 17 and commentary there). The Creator began and will end time itself.

22:14 This verse includes the seventh and final beatitude in Revelation (the others were in 1:3; 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7; see the chart at 14:13): Blessed are those who wash their robes. This picture symbolizes those who seek to purify themselves from a sinful way of life. These people had been dirty with sin, but Christ had cleansed them through his death on the cross. They had accepted his salvation by “washing their robes.” The verb in 7:14 was aorist, indicating an action in a specific time in the past. Here, the verb is present tense, indicating continuous action. This verse is a call to the believers to strive daily to remain faithful and ready for Christ’s return. They do not need to be saved over and over; but they should continue to “wash their robes” and so remain clean and ready.

Those who do so can enter through the gates of the city and eat the fruit from the tree of life. Entering the city indicates joining the redeemed people in eternity (the “city” is described in 21:10-27). In Eden, Adam and Eve had been barred from any access to the tree of life because of their sin (Genesis 3:22-24). In the new earth, God’s people will eat from the tree of life because their sins have been removed by Christ’s death and resurrection. Those who eat the fruit of this tree will live forever.

22:15 Verse 14 describes those who will live in the Kingdom of God for eternity; those who cannot be there are described in this verse. This is not meant to be an exhaustive list of sins, nor does it indicate that, somehow, sinners will surround the holy city. Instead, as in 21:8, this symbol pictures that those who have washed their robes and have been cleansed of sin will be in the city, but these others will not be in the city; instead, they will be in the lake of fire, as described in 20:15 and 21:8. They are characterized as dogs—a term used in Scripture for something impure or unclean. The emphasis is that nothing evil and no sinner will be in God’s presence to corrupt or harm any of the faithful.

22:16 Jesus again spoke (as he had previously, 22:12-13), describing himself as the ultimate fulfillment of everything that had been promised. Christ had sent his angel to show John all that would come to pass (see 1:1), so that the message could be given to the churches (all churches, but especially those mentioned in chapters 2–3 who would receive this letter).

Jesus is both David’s source and the heir to his throne. As the Creator of all, he existed long before David. As a human, however, Jesus was one of David’s direct descendants (see Isaiah 11:1-5; Matthew 1:1-17). As the Messiah, he is the bright morning star, the light of salvation to all (see 2:28; 2 Peter 1:19). In Numbers 24:17, Balaam declared, “I see him, but not in the present time. I perceive him, but far in the distant future. A star will rise from Jacob; a scepter will emerge from Israel.” The “star” may have referred both to King David and David’s greater descendant, Jesus Christ. As the morning star is the first star to be seen in the darkness before the dawn, so Christ, the morning star, promises that the night of tribulation will soon be over and the new Kingdom is about to dawn.

22:17 Both the Holy Spirit and the bride, the church, extend the invitation to all the world to come to Jesus and experience the joys of salvation in Christ. Everyone who hears the message is invited to come. Everyone who is thirsty is invited to come and drink the water of life without charge. This evil world is desperately thirsty for living water, and many are dying of thirst. But it’s still not too late. One day it will be too late, as Revelation has clearly shown, but the invitation is still being offered.

22:18-19 This warning is given to anyone who might purposefully distort the message in this book. Moses gave a similar warning (Deuteronomy 4:1-4). People must handle the Bible with care and great respect, so that its message is not distorted. No human explanation or interpretation of God’s word should be elevated to the same authority as the text itself.

This warning is given to everyone who hears the prophetic words of this book—not just future scribes who might recopy the text, but everyone who even hears the revelation must be careful not to add or remove anything. To do so carries a severe warning that God will remove that person’s share in the tree of life and in the holy city that are described in this book. Many have taken this verse to refer to the Bible in its entirety, but it is actually focused on this book of Revelation. Yet all of God’s word should be handled with such care. It is a serious matter to tamper with God’s word, carrying a punishment with eternal consequences.

22:20-21 Jesus testified to the truth of this entire revelation to John in 22:7, 12, 16; then he added one final message, “Yes, I am coming soon!” No one knows the day or the hour, but Jesus is coming soon and unexpectedly. This is good news to those who trust him, but a terrible message for those who have rejected him and stand under judgment. Soon means at any moment, and his people must be ready for him, always prepared for his return.

John ended by saying, Amen, let it be so. With him, God’s people across the world say, Come, Lord Jesus! Then John pronounced a benediction on those who had read or listened to the words of this book: The grace of the Lord Jesus be with you all. People need that grace in order to become God's children; God's children need that grace daily as they seek to be overcomers for him. In the end, his grace, and nothing else, brings his people to be with him forever.

Harmony of the Gospels

All four books in the Bible that tell the story of Jesus Christ—Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John—stand alone, emphasizing a unique aspect of Jesus’ life. But when these are blended into one complete account, or harmonized, we gain new insights about the life of Christ.

This harmony combines the four Gospels into a single chronological account of Christ’s life on earth. It includes every chapter and verse of each Gospel, leaving nothing out.

The harmony is divided into 250 events. The title of each event is identical to the title found in the corresponding Gospel. Parallel passages found in more than one Gospel have identical titles, helping you to identify them quickly.

Each of the 250 events in the harmony is numbered. The number of the event corresponds to the number next to the title in the Bible text. When reading one of the Gospel accounts, you will notice, at times, that some numbers are missing or out of sequence. The easiest way to locate these events is to refer to the harmony.

In addition, if you are looking for a particular event in the life of Christ, the harmony can help you locate it more rapidly than paging through all four Gospels. Each of the 250 events has a distinctive title keyed to the main emphasis of the passage to help you locate and remember the events.

This harmony will help you to better visualize the travels of Jesus, study the four Gospels comparatively, and appreciate the unity of their message.

I. BIRTH AND PREPARATION OF JESUS CHRIST

1. Luke’s purpose in writing		Luke 1:1-4
2. God became a human		John 1:1-18
3. The record of Jesus’ ancestors	Matt. 1:1-17	Luke 3:23-38
4. An angel promises the birth of John to Zechariah		Luke 1:5-25
5. An angel promises the birth of Jesus to Mary		Luke 1:26-38
6. Mary visits Elizabeth		Luke 1:39-56

7. John the Baptist is born				Luke 1:57-80
8. An angel appears to Joseph	Matt. 1:18-25
9. Jesus is born in Bethlehem				Luke 2:1-7
10. Shepherds visit Jesus				Luke 2:8-20
11. Mary and Joseph bring Jesus to the Temple				Luke 2:21-40
12. Visitors arrive from eastern lands	Matt. 2:1-12
13. The escape to Egypt	Matt. 2:13-18
14. The return to Nazareth	Matt. 2:19-23
15. Jesus speaks with the religious teachers				Luke 2:41-52
16. John the Baptist prepares the way for Jesus	Matt. 3:1-12	Mark 1:1-8		Luke 3:1-18
17. John baptizes Jesus	Matt. 3:13-17	Mark 1:9-11		Luke 3:21-22
18. Satan tempts Jesus in the wilderness	Matt. 4:1-11	Mark 1:12-13		Luke 4:1-13
19. John the Baptist declares his mission				John 1:19-28
20. John the Baptist proclaims Jesus as the Messiah				John 1:29-34
21. The first disciples follow Jesus				John 1:35-51
22. Jesus turns water into wine				John 2:1-12
II. MESSAGE AND MINISTRY OF JESUS CHRIST
23. Jesus clears the Temple				John 2:13-22
24. Nicodemus visits Jesus at night				John 2:21-

				3:21
25. John the Baptist tells more about Jesus				John 3:22-36
26. Herod puts John in prison			Luke	3:19-20
27. Jesus talks to a woman at the well				John 4:1-26
28. Jesus tells about the spiritual harvest				John 4:27-38
29. Many Samaritans believe in Jesus				John 4:39-42
30. Jesus preaches in Galilee	Matt. 4:12-17	Mark 1:14-15	Luke 4:14-15	John 4:43-45
31. Jesus heals a government official's son				John 4:46-54
32. Jesus is rejected at Nazareth			Luke	4:16-30
33. Four fishermen follow Jesus	Matt. 4:18-22	Mark 1:16-20
34. Jesus teaches with great authority		Mark 1:21-28	Luke 4:31-37
35. Jesus heals Peter's mother-in-law and many others	Matt. 8:14-17	Mark 1:29-34	Luke 4:38-41
36. Jesus preaches throughout Galilee	Matt. 4:23-25	Mark 1:35-39	Luke 4:42-44
37. Jesus provides a miraculous catch of fish			Luke 5:1-11
38. Jesus heals a man with leprosy	Matt. 8:1-4	Mark 1:40-45	Luke 5:12-16
39. Jesus heals a paralyzed man	Matt. 9:1-8	Mark 2:1-12	Luke 5:17-26
40. Jesus eats with sinners at Matthew's (Levi's) house	Matt. 9:9-13	Mark 2:13-17	Luke 5:27-32
41. Religious leaders ask Jesus about fasting	Matt. 9:14-17	Mark 2:18-22	Luke 5:33-39
42. Jesus heals a lame man by a pool				John 5:1-15

43. Jesus claims to be the Son of God			John 5:16-30
44. Jesus supports his claim			John 5:31-47
45. The disciples pick wheat on the Sabbath	Matt. 12:1-8	Mark 2:23-28	Luke 6:1-5
46. Jesus heals a man's hand on the Sabbath	Matt. 12:9-14	Mark 3:1-6	Luke 6:6-11
47. Large crowds follow Jesus	Matt. 12:15-21	Mark 3:7-12
48. Jesus chooses the twelve disciples		Mark 3:13-19	Luke 6:12-16
49. Jesus gives the Beatitudes	Matt. 5:1-12		Luke 6:17-26
50. Jesus teaches about salt and light	Matt. 5:13-16
51. Jesus teaches about the law	Matt. 5:17-20
52. Jesus teaches about anger	Matt. 5:21-26
53. Jesus teaches about lust	Matt. 5:27-30
54. Jesus teaches about divorce	Matt. 5:31-32
55. Jesus teaches about vows	Matt. 5:33-37
56. Jesus teaches about revenge	Matt. 5:38-42
57. Jesus teaches about loving enemies	Matt. 5:43-48		Luke 6:27-36
58. Jesus teaches about giving to the needy	Matt. 6:1-4
59. Jesus teaches about prayer	Matt. 6:5-15

60. Jesus teaches about fasting	Matt. 6:16-18
61. Jesus teaches about money	Matt. 6:19-24
62. Jesus teaches about worry	Matt. 6:25-34
63. Jesus teaches about judging others	Matt. 7:1-6	Mark 6:37-42
64. Jesus teaches about asking, seeking, knocking	Matt. 7:7-12
65. Jesus teaches about the way to heaven	Matt. 7:13-14
66. Jesus teaches about fruit in people's lives	Matt. 7:15-20		Luke 6:43-45
67. Jesus teaches about building on a solid foundation	Matt. 7:21-29		Luke 6:46-49
68. A Roman officer demonstrates faith	Matt. 8:5-13		Luke 7:1-10
69. Jesus raises a widow's son from the dead			Luke 7:11-17
70. Jesus eases John's doubt	Matt. 11:1-19		Luke 7:18-35
71. Jesus promises rest for the soul	Matt. 11:20-30
72. A sinful woman anoints Jesus' feet			Luke 7:36-50
73. Women accompany Jesus and the disciples			Luke 8:1-3
74. Religious leaders accuse Jesus of getting his power from Satan	Matt. 12:22-37	Mark 3:20-30
75. Religious leaders ask Jesus for a miraculous sign	Matt. 12:38-45
76. Jesus describes his true family	Matt. 12:46	Mark 3:21-35	Luke 8:10-21

	12:40-50	3:31-33	8:19-21
77. Jesus tells the parable of the four soils	Matt. 13:1-9	Mark 4:1-9	Luke 8:4-8
78. Jesus explains the parable of the four soils	Matt. 13:10-23	Mark 4:10-25	Luke 8:9-18
79. Jesus tells the parable of the growing seed		Mark 4:26-29
80. Jesus tells the parable of the weeds	Matt. 13:24-30
81. Jesus tells the parable of the mustard seed	Matt. 13:31-32	Mark 4:30-34
82. Jesus tells the parable of the yeast	Matt. 13:33-35
83. Jesus explains the parable of the weeds	Matt. 13:36-43
84. Jesus tells the parable of the hidden treasure	Matt. 13:44
85. Jesus tells the parable of the pearl merchant	Matt. 13:45-46
86. Jesus tells the parable of the fishing net	Matt. 13:47-52
87. Jesus calms the storm	Matt. 8:23-27	Mark 4:35-41	Luke 8:22-25
88. Jesus sends demons into a herd of pigs	Matt. 8:28-34	Mark 5:1-20	Luke 8:26-39
89. Jesus heals a bleeding woman and restores a girl to life	Matt. 9:18-26	Mark 5:21-43	Luke 8:40-56
90. Jesus heals the blind and mute	Matt. 9:27-34

91. The people of Nazareth refuse to believe	Matt. 13:53-58	Mark 6:1-6
92. Jesus urges the disciples to pray for workers	Matt. 9:35-38
93. Jesus sends out the twelve disciples	Matt. 10:1-15	Mark 6:7-13	Luke 9:1-6
94. Jesus prepares the disciples for persecution	Matt. 10:16-42
95. Herod kills John the Baptist	Matt. 14:1-12	Mark 6:14-29	Luke 9:7-9
96. Jesus feeds five thousand	Matt. 14:13-21	Mark 6:30-44	Luke 9:10-17	John 6:1-15
97. Jesus walks on water	Matt. 14:22-33	Mark 6:45-52		John 6:16-21
98. Jesus heals all who touch him	Matt. 14:34-36	Mark 6:53-56
99. Jesus is the true bread from heaven				John 6:22-40
100. The people disagree that Jesus is from heaven				John 6:41-59
101. Many disciples desert Jesus				John 6:60-71
102. Jesus teaches about inner purity	Matt. 15:1-20	Mark 7:1-23
103. Jesus sends a demon out of a girl	Matt. 15:21-28	Mark 7:24-30
104. Jesus heals many people	Matt. 15:29-31	Mark 7:31-37
105. Jesus feeds four thousand	Matt. 15:32-	Mark 8:1-10

106. Leaders demand a miraculous sign	Matt. 16:1-4	Mark 8:11-13
107. Jesus warns against wrong teaching	Matt. 16:5-12	Mark 8:14-21
108. Jesus restores sight to a blind man		Mark 8:22-26
109. Peter says Jesus is the Messiah	Matt. 16:13-20	Mark 8:27-30	Luke 9:18-20
110. Jesus predicts his death the first time	Matt. 16:21-28	Mark 8:31— 9:1	Luke 9:21-27
111. Jesus is transfigured on the mountain	Matt. 17:1-13	Mark 9:2-13	Luke 9:28-36
112. Jesus heals a demon-possessed boy	Matt. 17:14-21	Mark 9:14-29	Luke 9:37-43
113. Jesus predicts his death the second time	Matt. 17:22-23	Mark 9:30-32	Luke 9:44-45
114. Peter finds the coin in the fish's mouth	Matt. 17:24-27
115. The disciples argue about who would be the greatest	Matt. 18:1-6	Mark 9:33-37	Luke 9:46-48
116. The disciples forbid another to use Jesus' name		Mark 9:38-41	Luke 9:49-50
117. Jesus warns against temptation	Matt. 18:7-9	Mark 9:42-50
118. Jesus warns against looking down on others	Matt. 18:10-14
119. Jesus teaches how to treat a believer who sins	Matt. 18:15-20

120. Jesus tells the parable of the unforgiving debtor	Matt. 18:21-35
121. Jesus' brothers ridicule him		John 7:1-9
122. Jesus teaches about the cost of following him	Matt. 8:18-22	Luke 9:51-62
123. Jesus teaches openly at the Temple		John 7:10-31
124. Religious leaders attempt to arrest Jesus		John 7:32-52
125. Jesus forgives an adulterous woman		John 7:53—8:11
126. Jesus is the light of the world		John 8:12-20
127. Jesus warns of coming judgment		John 8:21-30
128. Jesus speaks about God's true children		John 8:31-47
129. Jesus states he is eternal		John 8:48-59
130. Jesus sends out seventy-two messengers		Luke 10:1-16
131. The seventy-two messengers return		Luke 10:17-24
132. Jesus tells the parable of the Good Samaritan		Luke 10:25-37
133. Jesus visits Mary and Martha		Luke 10:38-42
134. Jesus teaches his disciples about prayer		Luke 11:1-13
135. Jesus answers hostile accusations		Luke 11:14-28
136. Jesus warns against unbelief		Luke

136. Jesus warns against unbelief	Luke 11:29-32
137. Jesus teaches about the light within	Luke 11:33-36
138. Jesus criticizes the religious leaders	Luke 11:37-54
139. Jesus speaks against hypocrisy	Luke 12:1-12
140. Jesus tells the parable of the rich fool	Luke 12:13-21
141. Jesus warns about worry	Luke 12:22-34
142. Jesus warns about preparing for his coming	Luke 12:35-48
143. Jesus warns about coming division	Luke 12:49-53
144. Jesus warns about the future crisis	Luke 12:54-59
145. Jesus calls the people to repent	Luke 13:1-9
146. Jesus heals the crippled woman	Luke 13:10-17
147. Jesus teaches about the Kingdom of God	Luke 13:18-21
148. Jesus heals the man who was born blind		John 9:1-12
149. Religious leaders question the blind man		John 9:13-24

150. Jesus teaches about spiritual blindness	John 9:35-41
151. Jesus is the good shepherd	John 10:1-21
152. Religious leaders surround Jesus at the Temple	John 10:22-42
153. Jesus teaches about entering the Kingdom	Luke 13:22-30
154. Jesus grieves over Jerusalem	Luke 13:31-35
155. Jesus heals a man with swollen limbs	Luke 14:1-6
156. Jesus teaches about seeking honor	Luke 14:7-14
157. Jesus tells the parable of the great banquet	Luke 14:15-24
158. Jesus teaches about the cost of being a disciple	Luke 14:25-35
159. Jesus tells the parable of the lost sheep	Luke 15:1-7
160. Jesus tells the parable of the lost coin	Luke 15:8-10
161. Jesus tells the parable of the lost son	Luke 15:11-32
162. Jesus tells the parable of the shrewd manager	Luke 16:1-18
163. Jesus tells about the rich man and the beggar	Luke 16:19-31
164. Jesus tells about forgiveness and faith	Luke 17:1-10

165. Lazarus becomes ill and dies				John 11:1-16
166. Jesus comforts Mary and Martha				John 11:17-37
167. Jesus raises Lazarus from the dead				John 11:38-44
168. Religious leaders plot to kill Jesus				John 11:45-57
169. Jesus heals ten men with leprosy			Luke 17:11-19
170. Jesus teaches about the coming of the Kingdom of God			Luke 17:20-37
171. Jesus tells the parable of the persistent widow			Luke 18:1-8
172. Jesus tells the parable of two men who prayed			Luke 18:9-14
173. Jesus teaches about marriage and divorce	Matt. 19:1-12	Mark 10:1-12
174. Jesus blesses the children	Matt. 19:13-15	Mark 10:13-16	Luke 18:15-17
175. Jesus speaks to the rich young man	Matt. 19:16-30	Mark 10:17-31	Luke 18:18-30
176. Jesus tells the parable of the vineyard workers	Matt. 20:1-16
177. Jesus predicts his death the third time	Matt. 20:17-19	Mark 10:32-34	Luke 18:31-34
178. Jesus teaches about serving others	Matt. 20:20-28	Mark 10:35-45
179. Jesus heals a blind beggar	Matt. 20:29-34	Mark 10:46-52	Luke 18:35-42

	34		43
180. Jesus brings salvation to Zacchaeus's home			Luke 19:1-10
181. Jesus tells the parable of the king's ten servants			Luke 19:11-27
182. A woman anoints Jesus with perfume	Matt. 26:6-13	Mark 14:3-9		John 12:1-11
183. Jesus rides into Jerusalem on a donkey colt	Matt. 21:1-11	Mark 11:1-11	Luke 19:28-44	John 12:12-19
184. Jesus clears the Temple again	Matt. 21:12-17	Mark 11:12-19	Luke 19:45-48
185. Jesus explains why he must die				John 12:20-36
186. Most of the people do not believe in Jesus				John 12:37-43
187. Jesus summarizes his message				John 12:44-50
188. Jesus says the disciples can pray for anything	Matt. 21:18-22	Mark 11:20-26
189. Religious leaders challenge Jesus' authority	Matt. 21:23-27	Mark 11:27-33	Luke 20:1-8
190. Jesus tells the parable of the two sons	Matt. 21:28-32
191. Jesus tells the parable of the evil farmers	Matt. 21:33-46	Mark 12:1-12	Luke 20:9-19
192. Jesus tells the parable of the wedding feast	Matt. 22:1-14
193. Religious leaders question Jesus about paying taxes	Matt. 22:15-22	Mark 12:13-17	Luke 20:20-26

194. Religious leaders question Jesus about the resurrection	Matt. 22:23-33	Mark 12:18-27	Luke 20:27-40
195. Religious leaders question Jesus about the greatest commandment	Matt. 22:34-40	Mark 12:28-34
196. Religious leaders cannot answer Jesus' question	Matt. 22:41-46	Mark 12:35-37	Luke 20:41-44
197. Jesus warns against the religious leaders	Matt. 23:1-12	Mark 12:38-40	Luke 20:45-47
198. Jesus condemns the religious leaders	Matt. 23:13-36
199. Jesus grieves over Jerusalem again	Matt. 23:37-39
200. A poor widow gives all she has		Mark 12:41-44	Luke 21:1-4
201. Jesus tells about the future	Matt. 24:1-25	Mark 13:1-23	Luke 21:5-24
202. Jesus tells about his return	Matt. 24:26-35	Mark 13:24-31	Luke 21:25-33
203. Jesus tells about remaining watchful	Matt. 24:36-51	Mark 13:32-37	Luke 21:34-38
204. Jesus tells the parable of the ten bridesmaids	Matt. 25:1-13
205. Jesus tells the parable of the loaned money	Matt. 25:14-30
206. Jesus tells about the final judgment	Matt. 25:31-46

III. DEATH AND RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST

207. Religious leaders plot to kill Jesus	Matt. 26:1-5	Mark 14:1-2	Luke 22:1-2
208. Judas agrees to betray Jesus	Matt. 26:14-16	Mark 14:10-11	Luke 22:3-6
209. Disciples prepare for the Passover	Matt. 26:17-19	Mark 14:12-16	Luke 22:7-13
210. Jesus washes the disciples' feet				John 13:1-20
211. Jesus and the disciples share the Last Supper	Matt. 26:20-30	Mark 14:17-26	Luke 22:14-30	John 13:21-30
212. Jesus predicts Peter's denial			Luke 22:31-38	John 13:31-38
213. Jesus is the way to the Father				John 14:1-14
214. Jesus promises the Holy Spirit				John 14:15-31
215. Jesus teaches about the vine and the branches				John 15:1-17
216. Jesus warns about the world's hatred				John 15:18—16:4
217. Jesus teaches about the Holy Spirit				John 16:5-15
218. Jesus teaches about using his name in prayer				John 16:16-33
219. Jesus prays for himself				John 17:1-5
220. Jesus prays for his disciples				John 17:6-19
221. Jesus prays for future believers				John 17:20-26
222. Jesus again predicts Peter's denial	Matt. 26:31	Mark 14:27-31

	26:31-35	14:27-31
223. Jesus agonizes in the garden	Matt. 26:36-46	Mark 14:32-42	Luke 22:39-46
224. Jesus is betrayed and arrested	Matt. 26:47-56	Mark 14:43-52	Luke 22:47-53	John 18:1-11
225. Annas questions Jesus				John 18:12-24
226. Caiaphas questions Jesus	Matt. 26:57-68	Mark 14:53-65
227. Peter denies knowing Jesus	Matt. 26:69-75	Mark 14:66-72	Luke 22:54-65	John 18:25-27
228. The council of religious leaders condemns Jesus	Matt. 27:1-2	Mark 15:1	Luke 22:66-71
229. Judas hangs himself	Matt. 27:3-10
230. Jesus' trial before Pilate	Matt. 27:11-14	Mark 15:2-5	Luke 23:1-5	John 18:28-37
231. Jesus stands trial before Herod			Luke 23:6-12
232. Pilate hands Jesus over to be crucified	Matt. 27:15-26	Mark 15:6-15	Luke 23:13-25	John 18:38—19:16
233. Roman soldiers mock Jesus	Matt. 27:27-31	Mark 15:16-20
234. Jesus is led away to be crucified	Matt. 27:32-34	Mark 15:21-24	Luke 23:26-31	John 19:17
235. Jesus is placed on the cross	Matt. 27:35-	Mark 15:25-32	Luke 23:32-	John 19:18-27

	44		43
236. Jesus dies on the cross	Matt. 27:45- 56	Mark 15:33-41	Luke 23:44- 49	John 19:28-37
237. Jesus is laid in the tomb	Matt. 27:57- 61	Mark 15:42-47	Luke 23:50- 56	John 19:38-42
238. Guards are posted at the tomb	Matt. 27:62- 66
239. Jesus rises from the dead	Matt. 28:1-7	Mark 16:1-8	Luke 24:1-12	John 20:1- 10
240. Jesus appears to Mary Magdalene		Mark 16:9-11		John 20:11-18
241. Jesus appears to the women	Matt. 28:8-10
242. Religious leaders bribe the guards	Matt. 28:11- 15
243. Jesus appears to two believers traveling on the road		Mark 16:12-13	Luke 24:13- 34
244. Jesus appears to his disciples			Luke 24:35- 43	John 20:19-23
245. Jesus appears to the disciples including Thomas		Mark 16:14		John 20:24-31
246. Jesus appears to seven disciples				John 21:15-25
247. Jesus challenges Peter				John 21:15-25
248. Jesus gives the Great Commission	Matt. 28:16- 20	Mark 16:15-18
249. Jesus appears to the disciples in Jerusalem			Luke 24:44- 49

250. Jesus ascends into heaven

Mark	Luke
16:19-20	24:50-
	53

Bibliography

- Adamson, James B. The Epistle of James. The New International Commentary on the New Testament. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976.
- Adels, Jill Haak. The Wisdom of the Saints. New York: Oxford University Press, 1987.
- Aune, David E. Revelation 1–5. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1997.
- _____. Revelation 6–16. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1998.
- _____. Revelation 17–22. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1998.
- Barclay, William, trans. The Gospel of John. Vols. 1 and 2. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1975.
- _____. The Letter to the Romans. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1975.
- _____. The Letters of James and Peter. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1961.
- _____. The Letters to Timothy, Titus, and Philemon. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1975.
- Barker, Glenn W. “1, 2, 3 John.” In The Expositor’s Bible Commentary. Vol. 12. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1981.
- Barrett, C. K. Commentary of the Epistle to the Romans. New York: Harper and Row, 1957.
- _____. The First Epistle to the Corinthians. New York: Harper & Row, 1968.
- _____. The Gospel According to St. John. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press, 1978.
- _____. The Second Epistle to the Corinthians. Black’s New Testament Commentary. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1973.
- Barth, Marcus. Ephesians: Introduction, Translation, and Commentary on Chapters 1–3. The Anchor Bible. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday & Company, Inc., 1974.
- _____. Ephesians: Introduction, Translation, and Commentary on Chapters 4–6. The Anchor Bible. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday & Company, Inc., 1974.
- Bauckham, Richard J. Jude, 2 Peter. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1983.
- Bauer, Walter, William F. Arndt, Wilbur F. Gingrich, and Frederick Danker. A

- Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature*. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1979.
- Beasley-Murray, George R. John. Word Biblical Commentary. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1987.
- Beers, V. Gilbert. The Victor Handbook of Bible Knowledge. Wheaton, Ill.: Victor Books, 1981.
- Belleville, Linda L. Second Corinthians. The IVP New Testament Commentary Series. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1996.
- Blanchard, John. Gathered Gold. Hertfordshire, England: Evangelical Press, 1984.
- _____. More Gathered Gold. Hertfordshire, England: Evangelical Press, 1986.
- Blum, Edwin A. "1 and 2 Peter, Jude." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 12. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelein. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1981.
- Bock, Darrell L. Luke. The IVP New Testament Commentary Series. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1994.
- _____. Luke. Vol. 1. Baker Exegetical Commentary on the New Testament. Grand Rapids: Baker Books, 1994.
- _____. Luke. Vol. 2. Baker Exegetical Commentary on the New Testament. Grand Rapids: Baker Books, 1996.
- Boice, James Montgomery. "Galatians." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 10. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelein. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1976.
- Bowman, John W. The Letter of James. The Layman's Bible Commentary Series. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1962.
- Brown, Raymond E. The Community of the Beloved Disciples. New York: Paulist Press, 1979.
- _____. The Gospel According to John. The Anchor Bible Commentary. New York: Doubleday, 1966.
- Bruce, F. F. The Acts of the Apostles. 3d ed. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990.
- _____. The Book of Acts. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976.
- _____. Commentary on Galatians. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982.
- _____. The Epistle of Paul to the Romans. New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1985.
- _____. The Epistle to the Hebrews. New International Commentary on the New Testament. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1964.
- _____. The Epistles of John: Introduction, Exposition, and Notes. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1970.
- _____. The Epistles to the Colossians, to Philemon, and to the Ephesians. New International Commentary on the New Testament. Grand Rapids:

- Eerdmans, 1984.
- _____. The Gospel of John. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983.
- _____. Philippians. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1989.
- _____. 1 and 2 Thessalonians. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1982.
- Burdick, Donald W. "James." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 12. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1981.
- Burton, Ernest DeWitt. A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Epistle to the Galatians. The International Critical Commentary. Edinburgh, Scotland: T. & T. Clark, 1921.
- Calvin, John. Acts. Crossway Classic Commentaries. Edited by Alister McGrath and J. I. Packer. Wheaton, Ill.: Crossway Books, 1995.
- _____. Commentary on the Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans. Reprint, Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1947.
- Carson, D. A. The Gospel According to John. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991.
- Christensen, Chuck, and Winnie Christensen. God in Action: Mark's View of Jesus. Wheaton, Ill.: Harold Shaw Publishers, 1972.
- Clowney, Edmund P. The Message of 1 Peter: The Way of the Cross. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1988.
- Cole, R. Alan. Galatians. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- _____. The Gospel According to St. Mark: An Introduction and Commentary. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- Comfort, Philip W. I Am the Way: A Spiritual Journey through the Gospel of John. Grand Rapids: Baker, 1994.
- Culpepper, R. Allen. The Johannine School. Missoula, Mont.: Scholars Press, 1975.
- Davids, Peter H. James. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1989.
- De Dietrich, Suzanne. Matthew. The Layman's Bible Commentary Series. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1982.
- Donfried, K. P., ed. The Romans Debate. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1991.
- Douglas, J. D., ed. The New Greek-English Interlinear New Testament. Translated by Robert K. Brown and Philip W. Comfort. Wheaton, Ill.: Tyndale House Publishers, 1990.
- Douglas, J. D., and Philip W. Comfort, eds. New Commentary on the Whole

- Bible: New Testament*. Wheaton, Ill.: Tyndale House Publishers, 1990.
- Dunn, James D. G. Romans 1–8. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1988.
- Earle, Ralph. “1 Timothy.” In The Expositor’s Bible Commentary. Vol. 11. Edited by Frank E. Gaebeline. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1978.
- _____. “2 Timothy.” In The Expositor’s Bible Commentary. Vol. 11. Edited by Frank E. Gaebeline. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1978.
- Edwards, James R. Romans. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1992.
- English, Donald. “The Message of Mark, The Mystery of Faith.” In The Bible Speaks Today. Edited by John R. W. Stott. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1992.
- Erickson, Millard J. Christian Theology. Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, 1985.
- Evans, Craig A. Luke. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Edited by W. Ward Gasque. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1990.
- Fee, Gordon D. The First Epistle to the Corinthians. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987.
- _____. God’s Empowering Presence: The Holy Spirit in the Letters of Paul. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1994.
- _____. 1 and 2 Timothy, Titus. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1988.
- Ferguson, S. B., D. F. Wright, and J. I. Packer, eds. New Dictionary of Theology. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1988.
- Filson, Floyd V. The Gospel According to John. The Layman’s Bible Commentary Series. Edited by Balmer H. Kelly. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1963.
- Foreman, Kenneth J. Romans, 1 Corinthians, 2 Corinthians. The Layman’s Bible Commentary Series. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1961.
- Foulkes, Francis. The Letter of Paul to the Ephesians. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- France, R. T. The Gospel According to Matthew: An Introduction and Commentary. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1985.
- Gaebeline, Frank E., ed. The Expositor’s Bible Commentary. Vol. 8. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1984.
- Green, Joel B., and Scot McKnight, eds. Dictionary of Jesus and the Gospels. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1992.
- Green, Michael. The Second General Epistle of Peter and the General Epistle of

- Jude*. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- Grudem, Wayne. First Peter. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- Guelich, Robert A. Mark 1–8:26. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1989.
- Guthrie, Donald. Hebrews. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- _____. New Testament Introduction: Hebrews to Revelation. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1962.
- _____. The Pastoral Epistles. Rev. ed. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990.
- Gutzke, Manford George. Plain Talk on John. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1968.
- Hagner, Donald A. Hebrews. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1990.
- _____. Matthew 1–13. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1993.
- _____. Matthew 14–28. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1995.
- Harris, Murray. “2 Corinthians.” In The Expositor’s Bible Commentary. Vol. 10. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1976.
- Harrison, Everett. Acts: The Expanding Church. Chicago: Moody Press, 1975.
- _____. “Romans.” In The Expositor’s Bible Commentary. Vol. 10. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1976.
- Hawthorne, Gerald F. Philippians. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1983.
- Hawthorne, Gerald F., Ralph Martin, and Daniel Reid, eds. Dictionary of Paul and His Letters. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1993.
- Hiebert, D. Edmond. “Titus.” In The Expositor’s Bible Commentary. Vol. 11. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1978.
- Hughes, Philip E. Paul’s Second Epistle to the Corinthians. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1962.
- Hughes, R. Kent. James: Faith That Works. Wheaton, Ill.: Crossway Books, 1991.
- _____. Romans: Righteousness from Heaven. Wheaton, Ill.: Crossway Books, 1991.
- Hughes, Robert B., and J. Carl Laney. New Bible Companion. Wheaton, Ill.: Tyndale House Publishers, 1990.
- Hunter, Archibald M. Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians. The

- Layman's Bible Commentary Series. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1982.
- Hurtado, Larry W. Mark. New International Biblical Commentary Series: New Testament. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1989.
- Jackman, David. The Message of John's Letters. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1988.
- Jensen, Irving L. 1 and 2 Timothy and Titus: A Self-Study Guide. Chicago: Moody Press, 1973.
- Johnson, Alan F. Romans: The Freedom Letter. Vols. 1 and 2. Everyman's Bible Commentary Series. Chicago: Moody Press, 1985.
- _____. "Revelation." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 12. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelein. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1996.
- Kelley, J. N. D. A Commentary on the Epistles of Peter and of Jude. Black's New Testament Commentary. London: Adam and Charles Black, 1977.
- _____. A Commentary on the Pastoral Epistles. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1960.
- Kent, Homer A., Jr. Light in the Darkness. Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, 1974.
- _____. "Philippians." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 11. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelein. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1978.
- _____. The Pastoral Epistles. Chicago: Moody Press, 1986.
- Knight, George W. III. The Pastoral Epistles. New International Greek Testament Commentary Series. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1992.
- Kruse, Colin. Second Corinthians. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987.
- Lane, William. The Gospel According to Mark. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1979.
- _____. Hebrews 1–8. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1991.
- _____. Hebrews 9–13. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1991.
- Lea, Thomas D., and Hayne P. Griffin Jr. 1, 2 Timothy, Titus. The New American Commentary. Nashville: Broadman, 1992.
- Liefeld, Walter. "Luke." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 8. Edited by Frank Gaebelein. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1984.
- Lightfoot, J. B. The Epistle of St. Paul to the Galatians. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1980.
- Longenecker, Richard. "Acts." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 9. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelein. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1981.
- _____. Galatians. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1990.
- Love, Julian Price. 1 John, 2 John, 3 John, Jude, Revelation. The Layman's

- Bible Commentary. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1960.
- Luther, Martin. Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans. Grand Rapids: Kregel Publications, 1954.
- _____. A Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians. London: James Clarke & Co. Ltd., 1953.
- Mare, W. Harold. "1 Corinthians." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 10. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelein. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1976.
- Marshall, I. Howard. Acts. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1986.
- _____. The Epistles of John. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978.
- _____. 1 Peter. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1991.
- Martin, Ralph P. Colossians and Philemon. Greenwood, S.C.: The Attic Press, Inc., 1974.
- _____. James. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1988.
- _____. Philippians. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987.
- _____. Second Corinthians. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1986.
- Martin, Ralph P., and Peter H. Davids, eds. Dictionary of the Later New Testament and Its Developments. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1997.
- Metzger, Bruce. A Textual Commentary on the Greek New Testament. New York: United Bible Societies, 1971.
- Meyer, F. B. Devotional Commentary. Wheaton, Ill.: Tyndale House Publishers, 1989.
- Michaels, J. Ramsey. John. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1989.
- _____. 1 Peter. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1988.
- Miller, Donald G. Luke. The Layman's Bible Commentary Series. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1959.
- Moo, Douglas. James. Rev. ed. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- _____. Romans 1–8. Wycliffe Exegetical Commentary Series. Chicago: Moody Press, 1991.
- Morgan, G. Campbell. The Gospel According to Mark. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1927.
- Morris, Leon. The First and Second Epistles to the Thessalonians. New International Commentary on the New Testament. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991.

- _____. First Corinthians. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- _____. The Gospel According to John. New International Commentary on the New Testament. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1971.
- _____. The Gospel According to Matthew. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1992.
- _____. "Hebrews." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 12. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1981.
- _____. Luke. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- _____. Revelation. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987.
- _____. 1 and 2 Thessalonians. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1984.
- Mounce, Robert H. Matthew. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Edited by W. Ward Gasque. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1991.
- _____. The Book of Revelation. New International Commentary on the New Testament. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977.
- Newman, Barclay, and Eugene Nida. A Translator's Handbook on the Gospel of John. New York: United Bible Societies, 1980.
- Nicoll, W. Robertson, ed. The Expositor's Greek New Testament. Vol. 1. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1961.
- Nolland, John. Luke 1–9:20. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1989.
- _____. Luke 9:21–18:34. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1993.
- _____. Luke 18:35–24:53. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1993.
- O'Brien, Peter T. Colossians, Philemon. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Waco, Tex.: Word, 1982.
- Ogilvie, Lloyd J., ed. The Communicator's Commentary: Matthew. Dallas: Word, 1982.
- Osborne, June, and Chris Sugden. Luke. Bible Study Commentary. Fort Washington, Pa.: Christian Literature Crusade, 1987.
- Patzia, Arthur G. Ephesians, Colossians, Philemon. New International Biblical Commentary Series. Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson Publishers, 1990.
- Polhill, John B. Acts. New American Commentary. Vol. 26. Nashville: Broadman, 1992.
- Robertson, A. T. Word Pictures in the Greek New Testament. Nashville: Broadman, 1932.

- Rolston, Holmes. 1 Thessalonians, 2 Thessalonians, 1 Timothy, 2 Timothy, Titus, Philemon. The Layman's Bible Commentary. Atlanta: John Knox Press, 1961.
- Rupprecht, Arthur A. "Philemon." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 11. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1978.
- Ryrie, Charles. The Acts of the Apostles. Chicago: Moody Press, 1961.
- Sanday, William, and Arthur C. Headlam. A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1964.
- Schnackenburg, Rudolph. The Gospel According to St. John. Translated by Kevin Smyth. New York: Crossroad Publishing Company, 1982.
- Smalley, Stephen S. 1, 2, 3 John. Word Biblical Commentary Series. Dallas: Word, 1984.
- Stott, John R. W. The Gospel and the End of Time. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1991.
- _____. The Letters of John. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- _____. The Message of 2 Timothy. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1973.
- _____. Only One Way: The Message of Galatians. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1968.
- Tasker, R. V. G. The General Epistle of James. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. London: Tyndale Press, 1956.
- _____. The Gospel According to St. John: An Introduction and Commentary. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- Tenney, Merrill C. Galatians: The Charter of Christian Liberty. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1957.
- _____. "The Gospel of John." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 9. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1981.
- _____. New Testament Survey. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976.
- Thomas, Robert L. "1 and 2 Thessalonians." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 11. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1978.
- Turner, George Allen. The New and Living Way. Minneapolis: Bethany Fellowship, 1975.
- Vaughn, Curtis. "Colossians." In The Expositor's Bible Commentary. Vol. 11. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelin. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1978.
- Vine, W. E. The Epistles of John. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1970.
- _____. Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words. Old Tappan, N.J.: Fleming H. Revell, 1966.

- Wall, Robert W. Colossians and Philemon. The IVP New Testament Commentary Series. Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 1993.
- Walvoord, John F., and Roy B. Zuck, eds. Bible Knowledge Commentary: New Testament. Wheaton, Ill.: Victor Books, 1983.
- Ward, Ronald A. Commentary on 1 and 2 Timothy and Titus. Dallas: Word, 1974.
- Westcott, B.F. The Epistles of St. John: The Greek Text with Notes and Essays. London: MacMillan, 1883.
- _____. Gospel According to St. John. 1881. Reprint, Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1973.
- Westcott, B. F., and F. J. A. Hort. Introduction to the New Testament in the Original Greek, with “Notes on Select Readings.” New York: Harper and Brothers, 1882.
- Wood, A. Skevington. “Ephesians.” In The Expositor’s Bible Commentary. Vol. 11. Edited by Frank E. Gaebelein. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1978.
- Wright, N. T. Colossians and Philemon. Tyndale New Testament Commentaries. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988.
- Wuest, Kenneth S. Mark in the Greek New Testament for the English Reader. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1965.
- _____. Wuest’s Word Studies: Romans. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1955.
- Yarbrough, Robert W. John. Chicago: Moody Press, 1991.

Table of Contents

Copyright

Contents

Introduction

Matthew

Matthew 1

Matthew 2

Matthew 3

Matthew 4

Matthew 5

Matthew 6

Matthew 7

Matthew 8

Matthew 9

Matthew 10

Matthew 11

Matthew 12

Matthew 13

Matthew 14

Matthew 15

Matthew 16

Matthew 17

Matthew 18

Matthew 19

Matthew 20

Matthew 21

Matthew 22

Matthew 23

Matthew 24

Matthew 25

Matthew 26

Matthew 27

Matthew 28

Mark

Mark 1

Mark 2

Mark 3
Mark 4
Mark 5
Mark 6
Mark 7
Mark 8:1–9:1
Mark 9:2-50
Mark 10
Mark 11
Mark 12
Mark 13
Mark 14
Mark 15
Mark 16

Luke

Luke 1
Luke 2
Luke 3
Luke 4
Luke 5
Luke 6
Luke 7
Luke 8
Luke 9
Luke 10
Luke 11
Luke 12
Luke 13
Luke 14
Luke 15
Luke 16
Luke 17
Luke 18
Luke 19
Luke 20
Luke 21
Luke 22
Luke 23
Luke 24

John

John 1

John 2

John 3

John 4

John 5

John 6

John 7:1-52

John 7:53–8:59

John 9

John 10

John 11

John 12

John 13

John 14

John 15:1–16:4

John 16:5-33

John 17

John 18:1-37

John 18:38—19:42

John 20

John 21

Acts

Acts 1

Acts 2

Acts 3

Acts 4

Acts 5

Acts 6

Acts 7

Acts 8

Acts 9

Acts 10

Acts 11

Acts 12

Acts 13

Acts 14

Acts 15

Acts 16

Acts 17

Acts 18

Acts 19

Acts 20

Acts 21:1–22:29

Acts 22:30–23:35

Acts 24

Acts 25:1-22

Acts 25:23–26:32

Acts 27

Acts 28

Romans

Romans 1

Romans 2

Romans 3

Romans 4

Romans 5

Romans 6

Romans 7

Romans 8

Romans 9:1–10:4

Romans 10:5-21

Romans 11

Romans 12

Romans 13

Romans 14

Romans 15

Romans 16

1 Corinthians

1 Corinthians 1

1 Corinthians 2

1 Corinthians 3

1 Corinthians 4

1 Corinthians 5

1 Corinthians 6

1 Corinthians 7

1 Corinthians 8

1 Corinthians 9

1 Corinthians 10:1–11:1

1 Corinthians 11:2-34

1 Corinthians 12

1 Corinthians 13

1 Corinthians 14

1 Corinthians 15

1 Corinthians 16

2 Corinthians

2 Corinthians 1:1–2:4

2 Corinthians 2:5-11

2 Corinthians 2:12–3:18

2 Corinthians 4

2 Corinthians 5:1–6:2

2 Corinthians 6:3–7:1

2 Corinthians 7:2-16

2 Corinthians 8

2 Corinthians 9

2 Corinthians 10

2 Corinthians 11

2 Corinthians 12

2 Corinthians 13

Galatians

Galatians 1

Galatians 2

Galatians 3:1–4:7

Galatians 4:8-31

Galatians 5

Galatians 6

Ephesians

Ephesians 1

Ephesians 2

Ephesians 3

Ephesians 4

Ephesians 5

Ephesians 6

Philippians

Philippians 1

Philippians 2

Philippians 3:1–4:1

Philippians 4:2-23

Colossians

Colossians 1:1-23

Colossians 1:24–2:23

Colossians 3:1–4:1

Colossians 4:2-18

1 Thessalonians

1 Thessalonians 1

1 Thessalonians 2:1-16

1 Thessalonians 2:17–3:13

1 Thessalonians 4:1-12

1 Thessalonians 4:13–5:28

2 Thessalonians

2 Thessalonians 1

2 Thessalonians 2

2 Thessalonians 3

1 Timothy

1 Timothy 1

1 Timothy 2

1 Timothy 3

1 Timothy 4:1–5:2

1 Timothy 5:3–6:2a

1 Timothy 6:2b-21

2 Timothy

2 Timothy 1

2 Timothy 2

2 Timothy 3:1–4:5

2 Timothy 4:6-22

Titus

Titus 1

Titus 2

Titus 3

Philemon

Philemon 1

Hebrews

Hebrews 1

Hebrews 2

Hebrews 3

Hebrews 4:1-13

Hebrews 4:14–5:10

Hebrews 5:11–6:20

Hebrews 7

Hebrews 8

Hebrews 9

Hebrews 10

Hebrews 11

Hebrews 12

Hebrews 13

James

James 1

James 2

James 3

James 4

James 5

1 Peter

1 Peter 1:1–2:3

1 Peter 2:4-25

1 Peter 3

1 Peter 4

1 Peter 5

2 Peter

2 Peter 1

2 Peter 2

2 Peter 3

1 John

1 John 1:1–2:6

1 John 2:7-29

1 John 3

1 John 4

1 John 5

2 John

2 John 1

3 John

3 John 1

Jude

Jude 1

Revelation

Revelation 1

Revelation 2

Revelation 3
Revelation 4
Revelation 5
Revelation 6
Revelation 7
Revelation 8
Revelation 9
Revelation 10
Revelation 11
Revelation 12:1-17
Revelation 12:18–13:18
Revelation 14
Revelation 15:1-4
Revelation 15:5–16:21
Revelation 17
Revelation 18
Revelation 19
Revelation 20
Revelation 21:1–22:6
Revelation 22:7-21
Harmony of the Gospels
Bibliography