Introduction

This Life Application New Testament Commentary is designed as a helpful tool for anyone who desires to study God's word more deeply. Developed by the team that produced the best-selling Life Application Bible, this commentary seeks to help the reader not only understand Scripture, but also understand what it means in his or her life.

After developing the Life Application Bible, we desired to do a further and deeper exposition of every verse in the New Testament. Because of space limitations in any Bible, however, we decided to develop a series of commentaries on each New Testament book. This comprehensive commentary currently exists in the form of a set of seventeen books. These commentaries are comprehensive verse-by-verse studies of the entire New Testament. Each verse entry explains the text, ties the text to the overall themes of the Bible, and applies the verse to daily life through application notes written especially for the commentary. Charts, book introductions, and section introductions round out this readable series of commentaries.

We believe that many people would now benefit if that material were at their fingertips in one helpful volume. This is what you hold in your hands—a condensed version of the seventeen-volume Life Application Commentary series, giving you pertinent information on every verse in the New Testament. This volume also includes a harmony of the Gospels feature. Through its unique and simple numbering system, you can read any Gospel account and view it in relation to the entire life of Christ. These numbers are in italics and are found at the end of the chapter subheadings.

So how is this commentary different from other New Testament commentaries? First, you will quickly discover its readability. It is written with you in mind.

- the reader who wants to understand God's word more deeply
- the teacher who wants that extra bit of application to help students take God's word with them during the rest of the week
- the small group leader who desires to have pertinent and interesting information to share with the group in the study
- the pastor who knows the vital importance of application in his or her sermons

Second, you will find that each entry is clear, easy to follow, and gives information that you can use. You will find material that you can remember and share with others, and you will learn information that reveals the dynamic power of God's word in people's lives today. Does God's word apply to you—your students, your small group members, your congregation—today? Of course! And this commentary helps guide you to see that application.

Why is application so important? God urges us to apply his word. Isaiah wrote, "Will not even one of you apply these lessons from the past?" (Isaiah 42:23), and Paul wrote, "We are confident in the Lord that you are practicing the things we commanded you, and that you always will" (2 Thessalonians 3:4). Applying God's word is a vital part of our relationship with Him; it is the evidence that we are obeying him.

Application is not just accumulating knowledge. Many other commentaries will do a good job giving facts and figures—knowledge. However, history is filled with people who knew lots of facts and figures from the Bible but did not know Jesus Christ personally. Those facts and figures did not change their lives. In addition, application is not just trying to make the passage relevant. Making the Bible relevant only helps us to see that the same lessons that were true in Bible times are true today; it does not show us how to implement God's word in the problems and pressures we face everyday.

Application begins by knowing the facts—understanding the timeless truths of God's word—and understanding the Bible's relevance. But application is more than that. Application focuses on the truth of God's word, shows us what to do about what is being read, and motivates us to respond to what God is teaching. Application is putting into practice what we learn. Application is deeply personal—unique for each individual. It makes a relevant truth a personal truth. Application involves developing a strategy and action plan to live our lives in harmony with the Bible. It is the biblical "how to" of life.

So enjoy your Bible. Enjoy the journey of discovering God's plan of salvation. Enjoy this Life Application New Testament Commentary. Use it to help you learn more; allow it to challenge you to change your life.

We especially want to thank Dr. Grant Osborne, Professor of New Testament at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, for serving as General Editor of the commentary series. We also want to thank Dr. Philip Comfort who brought his Bible knowledge and expertise to this project. Special thanks also goes also to: David Veerman, Neil Wilson, Greg Asimakouopoulos, Dr. Mark Fackler, Jonathan Farrar, Christopher Hudson, Kent Keller, Dr. J. Richard Love, and Len Woods for their invaluable contributions to this project.

MATTHEW

INTRODUCTION

Predictions, projections, and best guesses—everyone likes to state what they think the future will hold. Meteorologists forecast the daily weather, sports journalists predict the outcome of a championship series, pollsters project the probable winner of an election, news commentators declare the direction of the nation, and futurists explain what the world will be like a few decades hence. In addition, our daily conversations are sprinkled with future talk: “Who do you think will win?” “What are your retirement plans?” “What will your son do after graduation?”

Often these amateur prophecies are not fulfilled exactly as stated: Partly sunny turns into a downpour, the underdog becomes an upset victor, a technological breakthrough changes the way we live, and an unexpected event alters our plans.

With biblical prophets, the story reads quite differently. Inspired by God, each of their predictions would come true, in exact detail.

The Gospel of Matthew provides amazing examples of the power and accuracy of God’s prophets who had foretold the coming of the Messiah. From his humble birth by a virgin (see Isaiah 7:14) in Bethlehem (see Micah 5:2), to his crucifixion (see Psalm 22:14, 16-17) with criminals (see Isaiah 53:12), to his resurrection from the dead (see Psalm 16:10), Jesus did what the prophets had predicted—he fulfilled every prophecy and fit every description of the Jewish Savior.

As you read this Gospel, follow the dramatic story, predicted in detail centuries before, of Jesus, the Messiah, King of kings and Lord of lords . . . and your Savior too.

AUTHOR

Matthew (Levi): former tax collector and one of the original twelve disciples

Although the text of this Gospel names no author, the early church nearly unanimously ascribed authorship to Matthew the apostle. A hint of Matthew’s authorship comes from the references to taxes. For example, 17:24-27 describes the incident when the Temple tax collectors asked Peter whether Jesus paid taxes. This incident is found only in Matthew, and it is the kind of story that a former tax collector would include.

The content of this Gospel certainly points to a Jewish author, thereby pointing to Matthew as a leading candidate. The following evidence indicates that this book was written by a Jew primarily to a Jewish audience.

The vocabulary and style of writing. The term “Kingdom of Heaven,” a distinctly Jewish description, appears in no other Gospel. The phrase “Son of Man” refers to the prophecy in Daniel 7:13 and would have been understood and appreciated by Jewish readers. In addition, Jerusalem is called the “holy city” (27:53) and the “city of the great King” (5:35), and the Jewish people are called “God’s lost sheep” (10:6; 15:24).

The highlighted topics. This book has much to say about the law, religious defilement, keeping the Sabbath, the Kingdom, Jerusalem, the Temple, David, the Messiah, fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies, and Moses. All of these would be pertinent topics for Jewish readers.

The genealogy. Jesus’ ancestry is traced from a Jewish perspective, from Abraham (the father of the Jewish nation), through David (the greatest king of Israel), to Jesus.

Old Testament references. This Gospel is saturated with citations from the Old Testament Scriptures. Fifty-three of these references are quotations and seventy-six are allusions. Usually these references are used to prove a point, especially regarding Jesus as the Messiah who fulfills Old Testament prophecies.

Jewish customs. The book refers to a number of Jewish customs and leaves them unexplained—for example, the reference to ceremonial cleansing (15:2). The author knew that Jewish readers would understand these customs and need no explanations.

Emphasis on Peter. This Gospel tells much about Peter’s calling, his interaction with Jesus, and his denial. Peter was known as the apostle to the Jews because that is where he concentrated his ministry.

Matthew makes few appearances in Scripture. We first meet him when Jesus calls him to be an apostle: “As Jesus was going down the road, he saw Matthew sitting at his tax-collection booth. ‘Come, be my disciple,’ Jesus said to him. So Matthew got up and followed him” (9:9). In the parallel accounts in Mark 2:14-17 and Luke 5:27-32, Matthew is called Levi.

As a “tax collector,” Matthew worked for the hated Roman government, having paid Rome for the right to collect taxes from his own people; thus, he would have been seen as a collaborator with the enemy. In addition, to make their living tax collectors were allowed to add their commission to the taxes. Many were quite wealthy, having increased their personal worth at the expense of their countrymen. Thus, tax collectors were viewed as dishonest swindlers. Zacchaeus, another tax collector, came to Christ through a dramatic confrontation (Luke 19:1-9). Scholars surmise that Matthew may have collected tolls and customs from those crossing the Sea of Galilee at Capernaum. When Jesus called him, Matthew immediately left this lucrative tax-collection career and followed the Lord.

Soon after this dramatic calling, Matthew hosted a dinner for Jesus and the other disciples. The dinner guests also included “tax collectors and many other notorious sinners” (9:10). Evidently, Matthew wanted to introduce Jesus to his friends and associates. This disturbed the Pharisees and teachers of religious law (the religious establishment), who wondered why Jesus would associate with such undesirables. Jesus answered that he had come “to call sinners, not those who think they are already good enough” (9:13).

Matthew is next mentioned in the list of the twelve disciples, where he is called “Matthew (the tax collector)” (10:3; see also Mark 3:18 and Luke 6:15). The only other reference to Matthew is in another list of the disciples in Acts 1:13. After Jesus’ ascension into heaven, the disciples gathered regularly with others for prayer. At one of these gatherings, they chose a man to take the place of Judas among the Twelve. After this incident, the Bible records nothing more about Matthew, and nothing is known for sure about him. Tradition holds that he preached the gospel for eight years throughout Judea and then traveled to Persia, Parthia, and Ethiopia, where he died as a martyr in about A.D. 62.

DATE AND SETTING

Probably written from Antioch (in Syria) in about A.D. 60

Jerusalem was totally destroyed in A.D. 70 by the Romans. That there is no mention in Matthew of this terrible event having already occurred (24:1-22 is a prediction by Jesus of this event) indicates that the Gospel must have been written before that time. However, it could not have been written much earlier if, as many scholars believe, Mark was the first Gospel to be written and Matthew and Luke relied on his writings and compared their records to his (see Luke 1:1-4). In this case, Mark would have written his account in approximately A.D. 55–60, with Matthew and Luke following soon thereafter in approximately A.D. 60.

The place of writing is also unknown. The Jewish orientation of this Gospel suggests that it was written in Palestine. However, many surmise that Matthew wrote from Antioch. For example, Ignatius chose Antioch, a Gentile city, over Palestine because Matthew wrote in Greek instead of Hebrew. Furthermore, many of the original disciples had migrated to Antioch (Acts 11:19-27), and the great concern in the book for Gentiles tends to confirm this as the city.

It is difficult to determine if the Gospel was originally written in Greek, or written in Aramaic and then translated into Greek. Some scholars point out that because the book contains several untranslated Aramaic terms, it is unlikely that it was originally written in Aramaic (otherwise those terms would have been translated or explained).

AUDIENCE

Greek-speaking Jews who believed in Jesus as Messiah

Matthew mentions no specific audience. It seems clear, however, that his primary audience was Jewish because, as stated above, the book has a distinctly Jewish flavor. Note especially the scores of references to words, statements, and stories in the Old Testament. Throughout the Gospel, Matthew carefully pointed to Old Testament prophecies that had found fulfillment in statements, circumstances, and actions surrounding Jesus.

It seems, however, that the Jews to whom this book was written were expected to understand Greek because Matthew may have written originally in Greek, the common language of commerce, and not in Hebrew or Aramaic. Matthew did not take time to explain Jewish customs (for example, ceremonial cleansing and Passover), for these would have been understood by a Jewish audience. But he did stop to interpret words like “Immanuel” (1:23), “Golgotha” (27:33), and Christ’s prayer on the cross, which was in Aramaic (27:46). This also indicates that the primary language of these readers probably was Greek.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To prove that Jesus is the Messiah, the eternal King

Neither Matthew nor the other Gospels gives any indication of a special occasion or specific incident that motivated Matthew to write. Early church fathers, Irenaeus (fl. c. 175–195) and Origen (c. 185–251), said that Matthew had been written for converts from Judaism, Jews who had embraced Jesus as their Messiah. Actually, until the dramatic conversion of Cornelius through Peter (Acts 10) and the missionary journeys of Paul (Acts 13–28), nearly all of the converts to Christianity were Jews. These new believers needed confirmation that Jesus had indeed met the messianic requirements and had fulfilled the ancient prophecies. Matthew’s Gospel gave that confirmation.

In addition to encouragement and assurance of Jesus’ true identity, Matthew’s account helped believers to refute unbelieving Jews who would argue against them and persecute them. Matthew showed how Christ’s death and resurrection fulfilled the promises made to Abraham and David.

While Luke and John clearly gave their purpose for writing (see Luke 1:4 and John 20:31), Matthew has no such purpose statement. But the very first verse provides a strong hint of the focus of the content of this book: “This is a record of the ancestors of Jesus the Messiah, a descendant of King David and of Abraham.” Jesus is immediately identified with the royal line of David and with Abraham, the father of all Jews. Matthew's Jewish readers would have immediately caught the significance of these references to their great and revered ancestors.

Matthew's style and method indicate his aim. Throughout his Gospel, he presents the various incidents in the life of Jesus as fulfillments of messianic prophecies, providing a cumulative demonstration that Jesus was the Messiah foretold in the Old Testament. Matthew, the Hebrew tax collector, knew how Jews thought and felt; he wrote for the Hebrew mind.

Matthew also wrote to explain Jesus' Kingdom program. The first-century believers who had left all to follow Christ must have wondered what would become of them and what would happen in the future. So Matthew explained how and why Jesus was rejected by Israel and God's program following that rejection.

MESSAGE

Matthew begins his account by giving Jesus' genealogy. He then tells of Jesus' birth and early years, including the family's escape to Egypt from the murderous Herod and their return to Nazareth. Following Jesus' baptism by John (3:16-17) and his defeat of Satan in the wilderness, Jesus begins his public ministry by calling his first disciples and giving the Sermon on the Mount (chapters 5-7). Matthew shows Christ's authority by reporting his miracles of healing the sick and the demon-possessed, and even raising the dead.

Despite opposition from the Pharisees and others in the religious establishment (chapters 12-15), Jesus continued to teach concerning the Kingdom of Heaven (chapters 16-20). During this time, Jesus spoke with his disciples about his imminent death and resurrection (16:21) and revealed his true identity to Peter, James, and John (17:1-5). Near the end of his ministry, Jesus entered Jerusalem in a triumphant procession (21:1-11). But soon opposition mounted, and Jesus knew that his death was near. So he taught his disciples about the future—what they could expect before his return (chapter 24) and how to live until then (chapter 25).

In Matthew's finale (chapters 26-28), he focuses on Jesus' final days on earth—the Last Supper, his prayer in Gethsemane, the betrayal by Judas, the flight of the disciples, Peter's denial, the trials before Caiaphas and Pilate, Jesus' final words on the cross, and his burial in a borrowed tomb. But the story does not end there, for the Messiah rose from the dead—conquering death and then telling his followers to continue his work by making disciples in all nations.

The main themes in the Gospel of Matthew include: Jesus Christ the King, The Messiah, Kingdom of God, Jesus' Teachings, and Resurrection.

Jesus Christ the King (1:1–2:12; 8:1–10:42; 11:20–12:13; 14:13–36; 15:21–28, 32–39; 17:1–13; 21:12–17, 23–27; 27:37; 28:16–20). Jesus is revealed as the King of kings: He was conceived by the Holy Spirit and born of a virgin (1:18–25); as a baby, he received gifts and worship from the kings of the east (2:1–12); he was endorsed and affirmed by God the Father (3:16–17); he defeated Satan (4:1–11); he taught with authority (7:28–29); he demonstrated his power over sickness (8:1–13), death (9:23–26), nature (8:23–27), and demons (8:28–34); he triumphed over death (28:1–10). These dramatic and profound incidents show Jesus’ true identity.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Jesus cannot be equated with any person or power. He is, above all, the supreme ruler of time and eternity, heaven and earth, humans and angels. He lives today, sitting at the right hand of the Father, and he will return as the Judge of all the earth (25:31–46). Too often we live as though Jesus were merely an impressive historical figure, or we treat him as just a traveling companion on our journey through life. Instead, we should give him his rightful place as king of our lives, our sovereign ruler to whom we give our total devotion and obedience.

Who sits on the throne of your life? Submit to your Lord and King.

The Messiah (2:14–15, 21–23; 3:1–4:11; 4:13–16; 12:15–21; 13:13–15; 16:1–4, 13–20; 20:29–21:11; 22:41–46; 24:1–35; 26:1; 27:66). Jesus fulfilled the inspired predictions of the prophets concerning the Messiah, the one for whom the Jews had been waiting for centuries. Yet tragically, they didn’t recognize their Messiah when he came because they were expecting a conquering king, one who would deliver them from Roman oppression. If they had read deeper, they would have realized that the “Son of Man” must first suffer and die (17:22–23) as the “suffering Servant” (Isaiah 53) before returning in power and glory. They would have realized that the true purpose of God’s anointed deliverer was to free people from sin’s oppression, not merely to defeat the Romans and rule an earthly empire.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Because Jesus fulfilled the prophecies recorded in the Old Testament, we can see that the Bible is true and reliable. Because Jesus was sent by God, we can know that we can trust him with our lives. It is worth everything we have to acknowledge Jesus as Lord and give ourselves to him because he came to be our Messiah and our Savior. Jesus knows us totally and loves us perfectly. He became one of us to bring us to God. Now that’s Good News!

Do you understand and feel Christ’s love? He wants only the best for you. Trust him.

Kingdom of God (4:17, 23–25; 5:17–20; 9:35; 11:1–19; 12:22–37; 13:10–52; 16:24–27; 18:1–6; 19:13–20:16; 20:20–28; 21:28–22:14; 24:36–25:46). Jesus came to earth, as God in the flesh, the Messiah, to begin his Kingdom. This Kingdom, however, is not earthly, determined by geography, military might, political power, or financial influence. God's Kingdom is a kingdom of the heart, and his subjects include all who submit to him and acknowledge Christ as their sovereign Lord. Eventually, God's full Kingdom will be realized at Christ's return when he comes to annihilate the forces of evil and gather his loyal subjects to himself.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Because Christ's Kingdom is first a kingdom of the heart, we enter the Kingdom through heartfelt faith in Christ as God's Son and our Savior, trusting in him alone to save us from sin and to change our life. Once we belong to him, we must do the work of his Kingdom, living for him and spreading the Good News about Christ to others. And we must always be prepared for his return.

If Jesus were to return today, would you be ready? Live with the expectation that Christ might return at any moment.

Jesus' Teachings (5:1-9; 12:38-58; 15:1-20, 29-31; 16:5-12; 17:14-21, 24-27; 18:7-12; 21:18-22; 22:15-22, 34-40; 23:1-39; 28:20). Jesus was a master teacher, teaching with authority and reaching people at their point of need. Jesus taught the people through sermons, illustrations, parables, and personal example. Through these teachings, he revealed the true ingredients of faith, how to be fruitful, and how to guard against hypocrisy. Those who were listening and were open and ready understood Jesus and gladly received and responded to the truth.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. We can know what God is like by looking at Jesus (see John 14:6-10). And we can know how God wants us to live by listening carefully to what Jesus taught. His teachings show us how to live for him right now and how to prepare for life in his eternal Kingdom. Jesus lived what he taught, providing the perfect example for us to follow.

Take a close look at Jesus and check out his teachings: "Anyone who is willing to hear should listen and understand!" (11:15).

Resurrection (16:21-23; 17:22-23; 20:17-19; 22:23-33; 28:1-15). When Jesus rose from the dead, conquering sin and death, he rose in power as the true King. With this incredible victory, the most important event in history, Jesus proved that he truly was the Son of God and that what he lived and taught was true. He also established his credentials as King with power and authority over evil. Jesus does not lie in a grave in Palestine. He is alive!

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Christ's resurrection shows that not even death could stop God's plan of offering eternal life. Jesus is true and alive; we serve a risen Savior! The Resurrection also gives hope to all who believe in Jesus; we know that we will live with him and that one day we will experience a resurrection like his. No matter how bleak the outlook or difficult and painful our situation, we can hope in him. In the meantime, our role is to tell his story to all the earth so that everyone may share in his victory. This world is dying and passing away, but Jesus is alive and people can live forever.

What can you do to remember the Resurrection? To whom can you tell this glorious news?

Jesus' earthly story begins in the town of Bethlehem in the Roman province of Judea (2:1). A threat to kill the infant king led Joseph to take his family to Egypt (2:14). When they returned God led them to settle in Nazareth in Galilee (2:22-23). At about age thirty, Jesus was baptized in the Jordan River and was tempted by Satan in the Judean wilderness (3:13; 4:1). Jesus set up his base of operations in Capernaum (4:12-13) and from there ministered throughout Israel, telling parables, teaching about the Kingdom, and healing the sick. He traveled to the region of the Gadarenes and healed two demon-possessed men (8:28ff); fed over five thousand people with five loaves and two fish on the shores of Galilee near Bethsaida (14:15ff); healed the sick in Gennesaret (14:34ff); ministered to the Gentiles in Tyre and Sidon (15:21ff); visited Caesarea Philippi, where Peter declared him as the Messiah (16:13ff); and taught in Perea, across the Jordan (19:1). As he set out on his last visit to Jerusalem, he told the disciples what would happen to him there (20:17ff). He spent some time in Jericho (20:29) and then stayed in Bethany at night as he went back and forth into Jerusalem during his last week (21:17ff). In Jerusalem he was crucified, but he rose again.

THE RECORD OF JESUS' ANCESTORS / 1:1-17 / 3

More than 400 years had passed since the last Old Testament prophecies, and faithful Jews all over the world were still waiting for the Messiah (Luke 3:15). Under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, Matthew wrote this book to Jews to present Jesus as King and Messiah, the promised descendant of David who would reign forever (Isaiah 11:1-5). The Gospel of Matthew links the Old and New Testaments, containing many references to show how Jesus fulfilled Old Testament prophecies. Jesus was a Jew, lived among the Jews, and followed their laws (insofar as they were truly God's laws), and he fulfilled the Old Testament Scriptures as he did so.

1:1 A record of the ancestors of Jesus the Messiah. The first seventeen verses of Matthew's Gospel present Jesus' ancestry. Because a person's family line proved his or her standing as one of God's chosen people, Matthew began by showing that Jesus was a descendant of King David and of Abraham, fulfilling Old Testament prophecies about the Messiah's line ("father of" can also mean "ancestor of"). Matthew traced the genealogy back to Abraham, through Joseph. Matthew's genealogy gives Jesus' legal (or royal) lineage through Joseph, a descendant of King David (see also 2 Samuel 7:16; Isaiah 9:6-7; Revelation 22:16).

1:2 Abraham was the father of Isaac. The phrase was the father of can also mean "was the ancestor of." Thus, there need not be a direct father-son relationship between all those listed in a genealogy. In ancient times, genealogies were often arranged to aid memorizing. Thus Matthew recorded his genealogy in three sets of fourteen generations (see 1:17). Abraham was called by God, received God's covenant promises, and believed that God would keep his promises (Genesis 15:6). His story is told in Genesis 11–25. Abraham was the father of Isaac. Abraham and Sarah wondered if God would ever send them the promised son, but God always keeps his promises. See Genesis 21–22.

Isaac was the father of Jacob. These three men—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—are often named together as the "patriarchs," fathers of the nation and receivers of God's covenant (see Genesis 50:24; Exodus 3:16; 33:1; Numbers 32:11; Luke 13:28; Acts 3:13; 7:32).

Jacob was the father of Judah and his brothers. Jacob had twelve sons by his wives Rachel and Leah, who became the twelve tribes of Israel (see Genesis 49:1-28). Matthew, desiring to trace Jesus' royal lineage, made special note of Judah because the royal line was to continue through him (Genesis 49:10).

1:3 Perez and Zerah (their mother was Tamar). An interesting sidelight appears in this verse. One might expect a genealogy to avoid mention of less reputable ancestors, but Judah's sons were born by Tamar, who had prostituted herself to her father-in-law. The story of Judah and Tamar is told in Genesis 38. While Judah was the father of Perez and Zerah, he was not married to their mother Tamar. Perez and Zerah were twins (see also 1 Chronicles 2:4). The line tracing Perez to King David is also recorded in Ruth 4:12, 18-22.

Hezron . . . Ram. Not much is known about Hezron and Ram. Hezron is mentioned in Genesis 46:12 and 1 Chronicles 2:5. Ram (or Aram) is mentioned in 1 Chronicles 2:9.

1:4 Amminadab and Nahshon are mentioned in Exodus 6:23—Amminadab's daughter and Nahshon's sister, Elisheba, married Aaron who became Israel's high priest. See also Numbers 1:7; 2:3; 7:12-17. Salmon is mentioned again only in the genealogy in Ruth 4:18-21. These men are also listed in 1 Chronicles 2:10-11.

1:5 Boaz (his mother was Rahab) . . . Obed (his mother was Ruth) . . . Jesse. Rahab is the woman of Jericho who hid Israel's spies and eventually was saved by them when the Israelites destroyed Jericho. Rahab was a prostitute (Joshua 2:1) who came to believe in Israel's God. Rahab is included in the Hall of Faith in Hebrews 11. There is a chronological problem in making Rahab the actual mother of Boaz, however. As with the phrase "father of," those listed as mothers in a genealogy may be ancestors rather than actual mothers.

The book of Ruth tells the story of Boaz and a young woman named Ruth, who had come to Israel from the nearby nation of Moab. Boaz married Ruth, and they became the parents of Obed (Ruth 4:13-17). Obed later became the father of Jesse (Ruth 4:21-22). See also 1 Chronicles 2:12.

1:6 Jesse had several sons, one of whom had been anointed by the prophet Samuel to be the next king of Israel after King Saul (see 1 Samuel 16:5-13). The story of King David is told in 1 and 2 Samuel, with the transfer of his throne to his son Solomon recorded in 1 Kings 1.

Solomon (his mother was Bathsheba, the widow of Uriah). The story, recorded in 2 Samuel 11, describes how Solomon was born to David and Bathsheba, and how David had Uriah murdered. God was very displeased with David's evil actions, and the first child born to David and Bathsheba died (2 Samuel 11:27–12:23). The next child born was Solomon, who later ruled Israel during a reign that would later be described as the golden age of the nation. His God-given wisdom became known worldwide, and he wrote many of the proverbs in the book of Proverbs, as well as Ecclesiastes and Song of Songs. His story is told in 1 Kings 1–11 and 2 Chronicles 1–10.

1:7 Solomon's evil son Rehoboam split the kingdom because of a prideful and ill-advised decision (see 1 Kings 12:1-24). Two kingdoms emerged: the southern kingdom, called Judah, was ruled by Rehoboam; the northern kingdom, called Israel, was ruled by Jeroboam. Rehoboam's son, Abijah (also called Abijam), was also an evil king (1 Kings 15:3-4). Asaph is also called Asa, who was a godly king (1 Kings 15:11).

1:8 Good King Asaph (Asa) was the father of another good king, Jehoshaphat (1 Kings 22:43). However, Jehoshaphat's son Jehoram (also called Joram) was evil (2 Kings 8:18). Jehoram's son Uzziah (also called Azariah) provides an example of how this phrase did not always mean actual "father of." According to the same genealogy in 1 Chronicles 3:10-14, Matthew omitted three names between Jehoram and Uzziah: these three kings were Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah. Probably Matthew did not include these names in order to keep his pattern of three sets of fourteen generations in this genealogy.

1:9 Jotham walked steadfastly before the Lord (2 Chronicles 27:6), but his good influence did not extend to his son, for Ahaz was evil, to the point of sacrificing his son in the fire (2 Kings 16:3-4). Following the exceedingly evil reign of Ahaz came the prosperous reign of the good king Hezekiah (2 Kings 18:5).

1:10 Manasseh. Hezekiah obeyed God, but his son, Manasseh, was the most evil king who reigned over the southern kingdom (2 Chronicles 33:9). At the end of his life, however, Manasseh repented of his horrible sins (2 Chronicles 33:13). Unfortunately, Manasseh's son Amos (also called Amon) assumed too much of his father's character. Amos did evil, worshiping and offering sacrifices to idols (2 Chronicles 33:22-23). Once again, God had mercy on the nation and Amos's son, Josiah, attempted to undo all his father's evil deeds (2 Kings 23:25).

1:11 Jehoiachin and his brothers (born at the time of the exile to Babylon). Matthew omitted another name from the lineage. Josiah was actually the father of Jehoiakim who was deported to Babylon when he rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar. After Jehoiakim was taken away, his son Jehoiachin (also called Jeconiah) reigned in Jerusalem. Jehoiachin reigned for only three months before Nebuchadnezzar laid siege to Jerusalem, causing the city to surrender. The phrase and his brothers refers to Jehoiachin's brother Zedekiah whom Nebuchadnezzar placed on the throne of Jerusalem as a puppet ruler. Zedekiah made the grave mistake of also rebelling against Nebuchadnezzar, and this brought down the final wrath of Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar conquered Judah completely, destroying Jerusalem, including its beautiful Temple. The entire nation of Judah was taken into exile to Babylon (2 Kings 24:16–25:21). This occurred in 586 B.C.

1:12 After the Babylonian exile: Jehoiachin was the father of Shealtiel. In this final grouping, Jehoiachin is listed as the father of Shealtiel, agreeing with 1 Chronicles 3:17. In saying that Shealtiel was the father of Zerubbabel, Matthew departed from the genealogy in 1 Chronicles 3:19 which lists Pedaias as Zerubbabel's father. However, Matthew agrees with several other scriptures that list Shealtiel as Zerubbabel's father (Ezra 3:2; 5:2; Nehemiah 12:1; Haggai 1:1; 2:2, 23. Zerubbabel figured prominently in Judah's history after the exile. When the people of Judah were finally allowed to return to their nation, Zerubbabel became their governor (Haggai 1:1) and began work on God's Temple (Ezra 5:2). God greatly blessed his servant Zerubbabel, reaffirming and guaranteeing his promise of a Messiah through David's line (Haggai 2:23).

1:13-15 Abiud . . . Eliakim . . . Azor . . . Zadok . . . Akim . . . Eliud . . . Eleazar . . . Matthan . . . Jacob. Nothing is known from Scripture about any of these men. In the Messiah's line ordinary people were included, who had never been listed in any genealogies and had never had their stories told throughout the generations.

1:16 The royal line continued through Joseph who, though he was not Jesus' father, was the husband of Mary. Mary was the mother of Jesus, who is called the Messiah. Matthew had completed his goal in listing this genealogy—showing, beyond any doubt, that Jesus was a descendant of David, thus fulfilling God's promises.

1:17 Fourteen generations from Abraham to King David, and fourteen from David's time to the Babylonian exile, and fourteen from the Babylonian exile to the Messiah. The Gospel breaks Israel's history into three sets of fourteen generations, but there were probably more generations than those listed here. Genealogies often compressed history, meaning that not every generation of ancestors was specifically listed.

A problem also seems to arise in comparing Matthew's genealogy with Luke's (recorded in Luke 3:23-37). Matthew's differences can be explained by his omitting names in order to achieve his symmetry of three sets of fourteen generations. Also, most likely Luke was tracing Jesus' natural human ancestry through Joseph, while Matthew was focusing on the legal and royal names to emphasize the succession of the throne of David and Jesus' arrival as the promised King. Matthew stressed Israelite history. Luke's longer genealogy traces Jesus' ancestry through David's son Nathan, not through Solomon, as Matthew did. Matthew also includes the names of four women, which Luke does not.

AN ANGEL APPEARS TO JOSEPH / 1:18-25 / 8

In this section, Matthew relates the story behind Jesus' birth. Although God's actions were beyond their comprehension, and although they may have faced misunderstanding and questioning looks from those around them, Mary and Joseph willingly followed God's guidance. How willing are we to do what God wants, no matter what? Can we follow God's guidance without question?

1:18 Now this is how Jesus the Messiah was born. In 1:16, Matthew had stated that Mary was Jesus' mother, but he did not name Joseph as his father. This needed some explanation, for, taken at face value, it sounded immoral. Jesus' mother, Mary, was engaged to be married to Joseph. Modern readers need to understand the traditions involved in ancient Jewish marriages. First, the two families would agree to the union and negotiate the betrothal. Next, a public announcement would be made and the couple was "pledged." Though the couple was not officially married, their relationship could be broken only through death or divorce. Sexual relations were not yet permitted. This second step lasted for a year. During that time, the couple would live separately, with their parents. This waiting period would demonstrate the bride's purity. If she were found to be pregnant during that time, the marriage could be annulled.

Because Mary and Joseph were pledged to be married, they had not yet had sexual relations, but while she was still a virgin, she became pregnant by the Holy Spirit. Mary was pledged and pregnant, and Joseph knew that the child was not his own. Mary's apparent unfaithfulness carried a severe social stigma. According to Jewish civil law, Joseph had the right to divorce her. The law also explained that the penalty for unchastity was death by stoning (Deuteronomy 22:23-24), although this was rarely carried out at this time. Removing any doubt of Mary's purity, Matthew explained that Mary was pregnant by the Holy Spirit. During Old Testament times, the Spirit acted on God's initiative (for example, Genesis 1:2). Thus, the divine initiative in Jesus' conception was made clear. Luke 1:26-38 records this part of the story.

1:19 Joseph, her fiancé, being a just man, decided to break the engagement quietly, so as not to disgrace her publicly. Being a just man, Joseph did not want to go against God's laws. To marry Mary would have been an admission of guilt when he was not guilty. To have a public divorce would have disgraced Mary, and apparently Joseph's compassion would not allow him to do that. Therefore, he chose the option, also lawful, to have a private divorce before two witnesses (Numbers 5:11-31) and break the engagement quietly.

1:20 An angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream. "Joseph, son of David," the angel said, "do not be afraid to go ahead with your marriage to Mary. For the child within her has been conceived by the Holy Spirit." As Joseph began to move forward on his decided course of action, God intervened. The conception of Jesus Christ was a supernatural event, so God sent angels to help certain people understand the significance of what was happening (see 2:13, 19; Luke 1:11, 26; 2:9). In this case, an angel appeared to [Joseph] in a dream. Dreams function in the Bible as a means to convey God's message to people.

Angels are spiritual beings, created by God, who help carry out his work on earth. They bring God's messages to people (Luke 1:26), protect God's people (Daniel 6:22), offer encouragement (Genesis 16:7), give guidance (Exodus 14:19), carry out punishment (2 Samuel 24:16), patrol the earth (Zechariah 1:9-14), and fight the forces of evil (2 Kings 6:16-18; Revelation 20:1-2). The angel who appeared to Joseph was one of God's messengers, sent to set Joseph straight in his dealings with Mary.

The angel called Joseph son of David, signifying that Joseph had a special role in a special event. The angel explained that Joseph was to take Mary as his wife, for the child was to be in the royal line of David. Joseph was not to be afraid to take Mary as his wife—no matter what the social repercussions might be. Mary had committed no sin. God himself had caused this pregnancy, and the child would be very special—God's Son.

1:21 "And she will have a son, and you are to name him Jesus, for he will save his people from their sins." Jesus is the Greek form of "Joshua." The name means "the Lord saves." The baby Jesus would be born to save his people from their sins. From the very start, the book explains to its Jewish audience that Jesus would not save the people from Rome or from tyranny, nor would he set up an earthly kingdom. Instead, Jesus would save people from sin.

1:22-23 All of this happened to fulfill the Lord's message through his prophet. Throughout his Gospel, Matthew quoted or alluded to Old Testament Scripture to show how Jesus fulfilled it. Jesus was to be called Immanuel (meaning, God is with us) as predicted in Isaiah 7:14. Jesus was God in the flesh; thus God was literally “with us.” The point was not that Jesus would ever bear the name “Immanuel,” but rather this name described Jesus’ role—to bring God’s presence to people. Jesus Christ, who was himself God (John 1:1), brought God to earth in his human body—living, eating, teaching, healing, dying.

1:24 When Joseph woke up, he did what the angel of the Lord commanded. Although he knew that taking Mary as his wife might be humiliating, Joseph chose to obey the angel’s command to marry her. He did not hesitate. The decision was no longer difficult, for he simply did what he knew God wanted him to do.

Apparently, Joseph broke with tradition and brought Mary home to be his wife, even though the customary one-year waiting period had not passed. However, Joseph did as God commanded and “completed” their marriage by taking Mary to live with him. No matter what the social stigma, no matter what the local gossips thought about this move, Joseph knew he was following God’s command in marrying and caring for Mary during her pregnancy.

1:25 But she remained a virgin until her son was born. To end any doubts about the conception and birth of Jesus while Mary was still a virgin, Matthew explained that Mary remained a virgin until her son was born. These words also set aside the notion that Mary lived her whole life as a virgin; after Jesus’ birth, Joseph and Mary consummated their marriage and Jesus had several half brothers (12:46). Two of Jesus’ half brothers figured in the early church—James, leader of the church in Jerusalem, and Jude, writer of the book that bears his name.

Traditionally, baby boys were circumcised and named eight days after birth. Luke records that “eight days later, when the baby was circumcised, he was named Jesus” (Luke 2:21). Joseph did everything that God had told him through the angel (1:21), naming the baby his God-given name: Jesus.

VISITORS ARRIVE FROM EASTERN LANDS / 2:1-12 / 12

Matthew did not record the details of Jesus' birth, as did Luke in the well-known chapter 2 of his Gospel. Only Matthew, however, records the visit of the wise men. These men traveled thousands of miles to see the king of the Jews. When they finally found him, they responded with joy, worship, and gifts. This is so different from the approach people often take today. Some expect God to come looking for us, to explain himself, prove who he is, and give us gifts. But the truly wise still seek and worship Jesus today for who he is, not for what they can get.

2:1 Jesus was born in the town of Bethlehem in Judea, during the reign of King Herod. The tiny town of Bethlehem is about five miles south of Jerusalem. The prophet Micah had prophesied that the Messiah would be born there (Micah 5:2). To distinguish this Bethlehem from other towns with the same name, Matthew added in Judea. The land of Israel was divided into four political districts and several lesser territories. Judea (also called Judah) was to the south, Samaria in the middle, Galilee to the north, and Idumea to the southeast. Jerusalem was also in Judea and was the seat of government for King Herod. While many Herods are mentioned in the Bible, this was Herod the Great, who ruled from 37 to 4 B.C.

About that time some wise men from eastern lands arrived in Jerusalem. Not much is known about these wise men. Also called Magi, they may have been from the priestly caste in Persia; they were not kings. Tradition says they were men of high position from Parthia, near the site of ancient Babylon (the book of Daniel refers to the wise men of Babylon; see Daniel 2:12, 18; 4:6, 18). The traditional view that there were three wise men comes from the three gifts presented to Jesus (2:11), but the Bible does not say how many wise men came.

2:2 “Where is the newborn king of the Jews? We have seen his star as it arose, and we have come to worship him.” The wise men said they had seen Jesus' star. In the Old Testament, through a man named Balaam, God had referred to “a star” rising from Jacob (Numbers 24:17). How did these wise men know that the star represented the Messiah, the one who was the newborn king of the Jews? (1) They could have been Jews who remained in Babylon after the Exile and knew the Old Testament predictions of the Messiah's coming. (2) They may have been eastern astrologers who studied Old Testament manuscripts. Because of the Jewish exile centuries earlier, a large Jewish population still existed there, and they would have had copies of the Old Testament. (3) They may have had a special message from God directing them to the Messiah.

Matthew made a significant point in highlighting the worship of these wise men, which stood in contrast to the Jewish religious leaders who knew the Holy Scriptures and did not need to travel far to find their Messiah. The Jewish leaders directed the wise men to Bethlehem, but they did not go themselves (2:4-6).

2:3 Herod was deeply disturbed. The wise men's news deeply disturbed Herod because he knew that the Jewish people expected the Messiah to come soon (Luke 3:15). Most Jews expected the Messiah to be a great military and political deliverer, like Judas Maccabees or even Alexander the Great. Herod the Great was obviously disturbed for several reasons:

- Herod was not the rightful heir to the throne of David; he reigned by appointment from Rome. Many Jews hated Herod as a usurper. If this baby really was a rightful heir to the throne, Herod could face trouble from the Jews.
- Herod was ruthless, and because of his many enemies, he was suspicious that someone would try to overthrow him.
- Herod didn't want the Jews, a religious people, to unite around a religious figure.
- If these wise men were of Jewish descent and from Parthia (the most powerful region next to Rome), they would have welcomed a Jewish king who could swing the balance of power away from Rome.

That all of Jerusalem was troubled along with King Herod indicates that the leaders and laypeople also felt concern over word of a child born in the Jewish royal line, the line of David. Any who knew Herod's ruthlessness may have feared his aroused suspicions.

2:4 Herod needed some advice from the experts, so he called a meeting of the leading priests and teachers of religious law. The leading priests were mostly Sadducees, while the teachers of religious law (sometimes called "scribes") were mostly Pharisees. These two groups did not get along because of vast differences in their beliefs about the law. The Sadducees believed only the Pentateuch (the first five books of the Old Testament) to be God's word; the Pharisees and teachers of the law were the professional interpreters of the law, the legal specialists of Jesus' day. Among these men Herod hoped to find someone who could explain where the Messiah would be born.

2:5-6 The prophet Micah had given the exact location of the Messiah's birth seven centuries earlier (Micah 5:2). Matthew often quoted Old Testament prophets to show how perfectly Jesus fulfilled the prophecies about the Messiah. The Jewish religious leaders understood that the Messiah would be born in Bethlehem of Judah. This fact was well known to all Jews (John 7:41-42). Ironically, when Jesus was born, these same religious leaders became his greatest enemies. When the Messiah for whom they had been waiting finally came, they wouldn't recognize him.

2:7 Herod called the wise men back to him in order to answer their question (2:2). However, he also needed to know the age of this "king." Herod deduced that if he knew the exact time when they first saw the star, he would know the child's age. Since the star had appeared two years earlier, Herod soon ordered the killing of all boys two years old and under (see 2:16).

2:8 Herod sent the wise men to Bethlehem and said, "Search carefully for the child. And when you find him, come back and tell me so that I can go and worship him, too!" Herod would not let rumor of a future king go unchecked. But Herod did not want to worship Jesus; he planned to kill him.

2:9 Having been told that the child was to be born in Bethlehem, the wise men went their way. Once again the star appeared to them as they traveled toward Bethlehem. Then, the star stopped over the place where the child was. Matthew does not tell us what the star looked like, how it moved, or how the wise men found the child from the movement and stopping of the star. But Matthew made his point that God had purposely sent this star to guide these men to his Son.

2:10 When they saw the star, they were filled with joy! The star's movement had been visible to these men who studied the sky and watched the stars. They had followed this star across thousands of miles. They had not found the child in the palace in Jerusalem as they had expected. So they had wearily continued on their way, only to once again follow the moving star. No wonder that when they saw that the star had stopped, they were filled with joy.

2:11 Jesus was probably one or two years old (a child) when the wise men found him. By this time, Mary and Joseph were living in a house. The wise men gave expensive gifts because these were worthy presents for a future king. Gold was a gift for a king (Psalm 72:15). Frankincense, a glittering, odorous gum obtained from the bark of certain trees, was a gift for deity (Isaiah 60:6). Myrrh, a valued spice and perfume (Psalm 45:8), also came from trees and was used in embalming; thus, it was a gift for a person who was going to die (Mark 15:23; John 19:39). These gifts certainly would have provided the financial resources for Joseph and Mary's trip to Egypt and back (2:13-23).

These wise men, astrologers from the east, fell down and worshiped the young king of the Jews, indicating a further fulfillment of prophecy (Psalm 72:10-19).

2:12 They went home another way, because God had warned them in a dream not to return to Herod. Going back through Jerusalem would make it impossible to avoid Herod; so the wise men went out of Bethlehem in another direction. In this story, God reveals his care for his Son as the hostile world already was attempting to take the young child's life. In the Gospel of Matthew, divine intervention is a major theme. Matthew shows how God superintended Jesus' life in order to accomplish the divine plan.

THE ESCAPE TO EGYPT / 2:13-18 / 13

Even before the tiny baby could speak, the worldly powers, led by Satan himself, were moving against him. Herod, a ruthless king who had killed three of his own sons to secure his power, was afraid of losing that power, so he embarked on a plan to kill the tiny child who had been born "king of the Jews." In his madness, Herod murdered innocent children, hoping to kill this one child. Herod stained his hands with blood, but he did not harm Jesus. No one can thwart God's plans.

2:13-15 An angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream. This was the second dream or vision that Joseph received from God (see 1:20-21). An angel of the Lord warned Joseph that Herod is going to try to kill the child. The angel told Joseph exactly what to do: Get up and flee to Egypt with the child and his mother. Joseph obeyed that night, taking Jesus and Mary on the seventy-five mile journey to Egypt, escaping from Bethlehem under cover of darkness. The angel instructed Joseph, "Stay there until I tell you to return" (see 2:20). Going to Egypt was not unusual. Egypt had been a place of refuge for Israelites during times of political upheaval (1 Kings 11:40; 2 Kings 25:26). There were colonies of Jews in several major Egyptian cities. Egypt was a Roman province, but outside Herod's jurisdiction. They stayed there until Herod's death. This fulfilled what the Lord had spoken through the prophet: "I called my Son out of Egypt." Joseph followed the angel's instructions and remained in Egypt until the death of Herod (see 2:19-20). Thus, Jesus was kept safe. Even more important, however, this event fulfilled the prophecy of Hosea 11:1.

2:16 Herod was furious when he learned that the wise men had outwitted him. When this king became infuriated, his anger knew no bounds. History documents the terrible acts of this evil man. At this point, all Herod knew was that a future king, still a child, lived in Bethlehem. After the wise men explained that the star first appeared to them about two years earlier (2:7), Herod deduced that the child would not be more than two years old. So he sent soldiers to kill all the boys in and around Bethlehem who were two years old and under.

2:17-18 Matthew saw that the grieving of the mothers in Bethlehem fulfilled the prophecy of Jeremiah in Jeremiah 31:15. Rachel was one of the wives of Jacob, one of the great men of God in the Old Testament. From Jacob's twelve sons had come the twelve tribes of Israel. Rachel was the symbolic mother of the nation; she had been buried near Bethlehem (Genesis 35:19). The Jeremiah passage describes Rachel, the "mother" of the nation, weeping and mourning unrestrained . . . refusing to be comforted because her children had been taken away into captivity. Ramah was a staging point of deportation (Jeremiah 40:1). The mothers in Bethlehem also wept and mourned for the little boys killed by the soldiers. Matthew compared the grief of the mothers at the time of the Exile to the grief of the mothers of the slaughtered children.

THE RETURN TO NAZARETH / 2:19-23 / 14

God carefully protected his Son's life, guiding Joseph as he took the child away from Israel when he was in danger, and then as he returned to Israel when it was once again safe. God was working out his plan of salvation for our sakes. Believers ought to read this story with awe as they watch God working behind the scenes to protect the life of Jesus Christ on this earth.

2:19-21 The angel of the Lord had promised that Joseph would be told when it would be safe for him and his family to return to Israel (2:13). The angel instructed Joseph to "get up and take the child and his mother back to the land of Israel, because those who were trying to kill the child are dead." So Joseph returned immediately to Israel with Jesus and his mother. How long they had been in Egypt is unknown. But when the angel commanded them to return to Israel, Joseph did not hesitate.

2:22 Herod had divided his kingdom into three parts, one for each son. Archelaus received Judea, Samaria, and Idumea, ruling over Judea. Archelaus, a violent man, began his reign by slaughtering three thousand influential people. He proved to be such a poor ruler that he was deposed in A.D. 6. Joseph had heard about Archelaus and was afraid to go back to Bethlehem, which was in the district of Judea. Once again, God guided Joseph, warning him in a dream not to go into the region of this evil ruler, but to go to Galilee.

2:23 Joseph returned to his hometown of Nazareth (Luke 2:4), a town in southern Galilee near the crossroads of great caravan trade routes. The Roman garrison in charge of Galilee was housed there.

The Old Testament does not record the specific statement He will be called a Nazarene. Matthew may have been referring to Isaiah 11:1 where the Hebrew word for “branch” (netser) is similar to the word for “Nazarene.” Others say he may have been referring to a prophecy unrecorded in the Bible or to a combination of prophecies. Matthew painted a picture of Jesus as the true Messiah announced by God through the prophets. Jesus, the Messiah, had unexpectedly humble beginnings and would be despised by those to whom he came, just as the Old Testament had predicted.

JOHN THE BAPTIST PREPARES THE WAY FOR JESUS / 3:1-12 / 16

When John “began preaching” (3:1), the people were excited. They considered John to be a great prophet, and they were sure that the eagerly awaited age of the Messiah had come. John spoke like the prophets of old, saying that the people must turn from their sin to avoid punishment and turn to God to experience his mercy and approval. This is a message for all times and places, but John spoke it with particular urgency because he was preparing the people for the coming Messiah and for his Kingdom. How much urgency do you feel for those who still need to hear the message?

3:1 In those days John the Baptist began preaching in the Judean wilderness. In these few words, Matthew summed up the story that Luke would record in greater detail (see Luke 1:5-25, 39-45, 57-80). John began preaching a message of repentance. The word translated “preaching” comes from the Greek word meaning “to be a herald, to proclaim.” Matthew described John as a herald proclaiming news of the coming King, the Messiah. The title “the Baptist” distinguished this John from many other men with the same name; baptism was an important part of his ministry (3:6).

John’s mother, Elizabeth, was a cousin to Jesus’ mother, Mary. Thus, Jesus and John the Baptist were distant cousins. It is likely that they knew of each other, but John probably did not know that Jesus was the Messiah until he baptized Jesus (see 3:16-17).

3:2 “Turn from your sins and turn to God, because the Kingdom of Heaven is near.” John the Baptist’s preaching focused specifically on one message—preparing hearts for the coming Messiah. Preparation could only occur through repentance. John called the people to repent—to turn away from sins and turn to God. To be truly repentant, people must do both. John preached that the people could not say they believed and then live any way they wanted (see 3:7-8). Sin is wrong, and people need to change both their attitude and their conduct.

Why did they need this radical repentance? Because the Kingdom of Heaven was near. The phrase indicates a present reality and a future hope. Today Jesus Christ reigns in the hearts of believers, but the Kingdom of Heaven will not be fully realized until all evil in the world is judged and removed. Christ came to earth first as a Suffering Servant; he will come again as King and Judge to rule victoriously over all the earth.

3:3 Isaiah had spoken of John when he said, “He is a voice shouting in the wilderness: ‘Prepare a pathway for the Lord’s coming! Make a straight road for him!’” Isaiah was one of the greatest prophets of the Old Testament and one of the most quoted in the New. Isaiah recorded God’s promise to bring the exiles home from Babylon. He also wrote about the coming of the Messiah and the person who would announce his coming, John the Baptist (Isaiah 40:3). Like Isaiah, John was a prophet who urged people to confess their sins and live for God.

The word prepare refers to making something ready; the word pathway could also be translated “road.” The picture could come from the ancient Middle Eastern custom of sending servants ahead of a king to level and clear the roads to make them passable for his journey. The people in Israel needed to prepare their minds to eagerly anticipate their King and Messiah.

3:4 John’s clothes were woven from camel hair, and he wore a leather belt. John dressed much like the prophet Elijah (2 Kings 1:8), also considered a messenger preparing the way for God (see Malachi 3:1; 4:5). John’s striking appearance reinforced his striking message, distinguishing him from the religious leaders, whose flowing robes reflected their great pride in their position (12:38-39). Having separated himself from the evil and hypocrisy of his day, John lived differently from other people to show that his message was new. His diet, locusts and wild honey, was common for survival in the desert regions.

3:5 People from Jerusalem and from every section of Judea and from all over the Jordan Valley went out to the wilderness to hear him preach. John attracted so many people because he was the first true prophet in four hundred years. His blasting of both Herod and the religious leaders was a daring act that fascinated common people. But John also had strong words for the others in his audience; they, too, were sinners and needed to repent. His message was powerful and true.

3:6 They confessed their sins. Confession is more than simply acknowledging one’s own sinfulness; it is agreeing with God’s verdict on sin and expressing the desire to get rid of sin and live for God. Confessing means more than verbal response, affirmation, or praise; it means agreeing to change to a life of obedience and service. After this, John baptized them in the Jordan River. When you wash dirty hands, the results are immediately visible. But repentance happens inside, with a cleansing that isn’t seen right away. So John used a symbolic action that people could see: baptism. For baptism, John needed water, and he used the Jordan River.

3:7 John gladly baptized the many repentant people who came to him, confessing their sins and desiring to live for God. But when John saw many Pharisees and Sadducees, he exploded in anger at the hypocrisy of these religious leaders. The Pharisees separated themselves from anything non-Jewish and carefully followed both the Old Testament laws and the oral traditions handed down through the centuries. The Sadducees believed the Pentateuch alone (Genesis–Deuteronomy) to be God’s word. John denounced them. “You brood of snakes!” he exclaimed. John had criticized the Pharisees for being legalistic and hypocritical, for following the letter of the law while ignoring its true intent. He had criticized the Sadducees for using religion to advance their political position. He obviously doubted the genuineness of their desire to be baptized. John called them a brood of snakes (Jesus also used this term—see 12:34; 23:33), thereby conveying how dangerous and cunning they were and suggesting that they were offspring of Satan (see Genesis 3; John 8:44). His question stung with sarcasm, “Who warned you to flee God’s coming judgment?” The religious leaders had always applied the coming judgment to judgment on the Gentiles; John applied it to the religious leaders. The reason for John’s harshness is revealed in his words that follow.

3:8 True repentance is seen by the actions and character it produces. The Pharisees and Sadducees thought they had a corner on righteousness, but the way they lived revealed their true character. So John said, “Prove by the way you live that you have really turned from your sins and turned to God.” John the Baptist called people to more than words or ritual; he told them to change their behavior. If we have really turned from our sins and turned to God, our words and religious activities must back up what we say. God judges our words by the actions that accompany them. Do your actions match your words?

3:9 John continued: “Don’t just say, ‘We’re safe—we’re the descendants of Abraham.’ That proves nothing.” Somewhere over the years, the Jews erroneously decided that the promise given to the patriarchs was guaranteed to all their descendants, no matter how they acted or what they believed. John explained to them, however, that relying on Abraham as their ancestor would not qualify them for God’s Kingdom. John probably pointed at stones in the riverbed and said, “God can change these stones here into children of Abraham.” The apostle Paul would later explain this to the Romans: “Not everyone born into a Jewish family is truly a Jew! Just the fact that they are descendants of Abraham doesn't make them truly Abraham's children. . . . It is the children of the promise who are considered to be Abraham's children" (Romans 9:6-8).

3:10 "Even now the ax of God's judgment is poised, ready to sever your roots. Yes, every tree that does not produce good fruit will be chopped down and thrown into the fire." God's message hasn't changed since the Old Testament; people will be judged for their unproductive lives. Just as a fruit tree is expected to bear fruit, God's people should produce a crop of good deeds (3:8). John compared people who claim they believe God but do not live for him to unproductive trees that will be cut down. The ax is lying at the root of the trees, poised and ready to cut down those trees that do not bear good fruit. Not only will the trees be chopped down, but they will be thrown into the fire, signifying complete destruction. God has no use for people who call themselves Christians but do nothing about it.

3:11 "I baptize with water those who turn from their sins and turn to God." John explained that baptism demonstrated repentance. This was the beginning of a spiritual process. Baptism was an "outward" sign of commitment. To be effective, it had to be accompanied by an "inward" change of attitude leading to a changed life. John's baptism did not give salvation; it prepared a person to welcome the coming Messiah and receive his message and his baptism.

John knew that the Messiah would be coming after him. Although John was the first genuine prophet in four hundred years, Jesus the Messiah would be infinitely greater than he—"so much greater that I am not even worthy to be his slave." John was pointing out how insignificant he was compared to the one who would come. John the Baptist said, "He must become greater and greater, and I must become less and less" (John 3:30). What John began, Jesus finished. What John prepared, Jesus fulfilled.

John's statement, "He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire," revealed the identity of the one who is more powerful than John himself. All believers, those who would later come to Jesus Christ for salvation, would receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit and the fire of purification (one article precedes these words, indicating that they were not two separate baptisms but one and the same). The experience would not necessarily be like that recorded in Acts 2, but the outcome would be the same. This baptism would purify and refine each believer.

3:12 "He is ready to separate the chaff from the grain with his winnowing fork. Then he will clean up the threshing area, storing the grain in his barn but burning the chaff with never-ending fire.” Threshing was the process of separating the grains of wheat from the useless outer shell called chaff. This was normally done in a large area called a threshing floor, often on a hill, where the wind could blow away the lighter chaff when the farmer tossed the beaten wheat into the air. A winnowing fork is a pitchfork used to toss wheat in the air in order to separate wheat from chaff. Wheat is gathered; chaff is burned. John spoke of repentance, but he also spoke of judgment upon those who refused to repent.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS / 3:13-17 / 17

The beautiful story of Jesus’ baptism by John in the waters of the Jordan River reveals a God of love, who came to earth as a human being to identify with human beings. If Jesus was going to offer salvation to sinners, he needed to identify with sinners. He did this by submitting to John’s baptism for repentance and forgiveness of sins. God’s Son came to earth to bring salvation to those who believe. Have you believed in Jesus and made him Lord of your life?

3:13 Galilee was the name of the northern region of Palestine. At this time, Jesus was probably about thirty years old (Luke 3:23). He traveled the long distance on foot to meet John the Baptist and be baptized by him.

3:14-15 But John didn’t want to baptize him. “I am the one who needs to be baptized by you,” he said, “so why are you coming to me?” John did not think that Jesus needed to be baptized for repentance. But Jesus said, “It must be done, because we must do everything that is right.” Jesus had come to be baptized because it would be the proper way for him to obey God in every aspect of life. Jesus didn’t need to admit sin—he was sinless (John 8:46; 2 Corinthians 5:21; Hebrews 4:15; 1 John 3:5). Jesus was baptized: (1) to confess sin on behalf of the nation; (2) to accomplish God’s mission and advance God’s work in the world; (3) to inaugurate his public ministry to bring the message of salvation to all people; (4) to show support for John’s ministry; (5) to identify with the penitent people of God, thus with humanness and sin; (6) to give us an example to follow. Jesus, the perfect man, accepted baptism in obedient service to the Father, and God showed his approval.

3:16 After his baptism, as Jesus came up out of the water, the heavens were opened and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and settling on him. The opening of the heavens presented God’s intervention into humanity via the human presence of God in Jesus Christ. It was as if the heavens rolled back to reveal the invisible throne of God (Isaiah 63:19–64:2). The action of the Spirit of God descending like a dove was a sign that Jesus was the Messiah and that the age of the Spirit predicted by the prophets was formally beginning (Isaiah 61:1). The descending of the Spirit signified God’s workings in the world; therefore, the arrival of the Messiah would have been marked by the descending of the Spirit, in this case, in the form of a dove. This was his royal anointing (see Isaiah 11:2; 42:1).

3:17 And a voice from heaven said, “This is my beloved Son.” While all believers would eventually be called “sons of God” (or “children of God”), Jesus Christ has a different, unique relationship with God; he is the one unique Son of God. The phrase, “I am fully pleased with him,” means that the Father takes great delight, pleasure, and satisfaction in the Son. This echoed two Old Testament passages (Psalm 2:7; Isaiah 42:1). The voice from the throne of heaven described Jesus’ status both as the Servant who would suffer and die and as the King who would reign forever.

In 3:16-17, all three persons of the Trinity are present and active. The doctrine of the Trinity, which was developed much later in church history, teaches that God is three persons and yet one in essence. God the Father speaks; God the Son is baptized; God the Holy Spirit descends on Jesus. God is one, yet in three persons at the same time. This is one of God’s incomprehensible mysteries. Other Bible references that speak of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are Matthew 28:19; John 15:26; 1 Corinthians 12:4-13; 2 Corinthians 13:14; Ephesians 2:18; 1 Thessalonians 1:2-5; and 1 Peter 1:2.

SATAN TEMPTS JESUS IN THE WILDERNESS / 4:1-11 / 18

From Jesus' temptation we can learn that following our Lord can bring dangerous and intense spiritual battles. Our spiritual victories may not always be visible to the watching world. We must use the power of God to face temptation and not try to withstand it in our own strength.

4:1 The same Holy Spirit who had sent Jesus to be baptized led him out into the wilderness . . . to be tempted there by the Devil. Jesus took the offensive against the enemy, Satan, by going into the wilderness to face temptation. "Devil" in Greek means "accuser"; in Hebrew, the word "Satan" means the same (4:10). Satan is a fallen archangel. He is a real created being, not symbolic, and is constantly fighting against those who follow and obey God.

The word "tempted" means "to put to the test to see what good or evil, strengths or weaknesses, exist in a person." The Devil's temptations focused on three crucial areas: (1) physical needs and desires, (2) possessions and power, and (3) pride (see 1 John 2:15-16 for a similar list). This temptation by the Devil shows us that Jesus was human, and it gave Jesus the opportunity to reaffirm God's plan for his ministry. It also gives us an example to follow when we are tempted.

4:2 For forty days and forty nights he ate nothing and became very hungry. Fasting was used as a spiritual discipline for prayer and a time of preparation for great tasks that lay ahead. At the end of this forty-day fast, Jesus obviously was famished. His status as God's Son did not make this fast any easier; his physical body suffered the severe hunger and pain of going without sustenance. The three temptations recorded here occurred when Jesus was at his most physically weakened state.

4:3 The Devil phrased his temptation by saying, "If you are the Son of God." The word "if" did not imply doubt; both Jesus and Satan knew the truth. Instead, Satan tempted Jesus with his own power. Because Jesus was the Son of God, then he certainly could change stones into loaves of bread in order to satisfy his hunger. "God's Son has no reason to be hungry," Satan suggested. He wanted Jesus to use his power and position to meet his own needs.

4:4 But Jesus told him, "No! The Scriptures say, 'People need more than bread for their life; they must feed on every word of God.’” Jesus answered with words from Deuteronomy 8:3. In all three quotes from Deuteronomy (Matthew 4:4, 7, 10), the context shows that Israel failed each test each time. Jesus conveyed to Satan that while the test may have caused Israel to fail, it would not work with Jesus. To truly accomplish his mission, Jesus had to be completely humbled. Making himself bread would have shown that he had not quite set aside all his powers, had not humbled himself, and had not identified completely with the human race. But Jesus refused, showing that he would use his powers only in submission to God’s plan.

4:5-6 The next temptation was set in Jerusalem, the religious and political seat of Palestine. The Temple was the religious center of the Jewish nation and the place where the people expected the Messiah to arrive (Malachi 3:1). The Temple was the tallest building in the area, and this highest point was probably the corner wall that jutted out of the hillside. This time, Satan used Scripture to try to convince Jesus to sin. Satan quoted words from Psalm 91:11-12: “If you are the Son of God, jump off! For the Scriptures say, ‘He orders his angels to protect you. And they will hold you with their hands to keep you from striking your foot on a stone.’” Satan wanted Jesus to test his relationship with God to see if God’s promise of protection would prove true. Satan was quoting Scripture out of context, making it sound as though God protects anyone, even if they attempt to defy natural law. In context, the psalm promises God’s protection for those who, while being in his will and serving him, find themselves in danger. It does not promise protection for artificially created crises in which Christians call to God in order to test his love and care.

4:7 Jesus responded from Deuteronomy 6:16, “The Scriptures also say, ‘Do not test the Lord your God.’” In this passage, Moses was referring to an incident during Israel’s wilderness wanderings, recorded in Exodus 17:1-7. The people were thirsty and ready to mutiny against Moses and return to Egypt if he did not provide them with water. God supplied the water, but only after the people had “tested the LORD by saying, ‘Is the LORD going to take care of us or not?’”

Jesus could have jumped from the Temple; God could have sent angels to bring him safely to the ground. But it would have been a ridiculous test of God’s power, and it would have been out of God’s will. Jesus knew that his Father could protect him; he also understood that all his actions were to be focused on fulfilling his Father’s mission, even if it meant suffering and death (which, of course, it did).

4:8-9 Next the Devil took him to the peak of a very high mountain and showed him the nations of the world and all their glory. “I will give it all to you,” he said, “if you will only kneel down and worship me.” This experience was probably visionary. The nations of the world are under Satan’s dominion (John 12:31). Satan knew that one day Jesus Christ would rule over the earth (see Philippians 2:9-11). His temptation was, “Why wait? I can give this to you now!” Satan tempted Jesus to take the world as an earthly kingdom right then, without carrying out his plan to save the world from sin. For Jesus, that meant obtaining his promised dominion over the world without experiencing the suffering and death of the cross. Satan offered a painless shortcut. But Satan didn’t understand that suffering and death were a part of God’s plan that Jesus had chosen to obey.

4:10 Jesus dismissed Satan with the words, “Get out of here.” For Jesus to take a shortcut to the goal—ruling the world by worshiping Satan (4:9)—would be to break the first commandment, “You must worship the Lord your God; serve only him” (Deuteronomy 6:4-5). Jesus would take the path of submission to God. Only by doing so would he be able to accomplish his mission of bringing salvation to the world.

4:11 Since Jesus was superior to Satan, Satan had to do as Jesus commanded. So the Devil went away. This would only be the first of many encounters that Jesus would have with Satan’s power. That angels came and cared for Jesus in no way lessens the intensity of the temptations that Jesus faced. They may have brought him food, but they also attended to his spiritual needs.

JESUS PREACHES IN GALILEE / 4:12-17 / 30

Jesus moved from Nazareth, his hometown, to Capernaum, on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee. This became Jesus’ home base during his ministry in Galilee. Matthew explained how Jesus’ move had been prophesied in Scripture. Jesus’ actions, words, and movements showed his obedience to God’s will and fulfilled the Scriptures about him. Matthew continued to assure his Jewish readers that Jesus’ life fulfilled Scripture and that Jesus truly was the promised Messiah.

4:12-13 When Jesus heard that John had been arrested, he left Judea and returned to Galilee. But instead of going to Nazareth, he went to Capernaum, beside the Sea of Galilee. Matthew mentioned the arrest of John the Baptist as merely a signal for the ministry of Jesus into Galilee, his home region. He moved from Nazareth (where his family had settled, 2:23) to Capernaum. The region of Zebulun and Naphtali originally belonged to two of the twelve tribes of Israel. They had been allotted this territory and had settled it during the conquest of Canaan under Joshua (see Joshua 19:10-16, 32-39).

4:14-16 This fulfilled Isaiah's prophecy: "In the land of Zebulun and of Naphtali, beside the sea, beyond the Jordan River—in Galilee where so many Gentiles live—the people who sat in darkness have seen a great light. And for those who lived in the land where death casts its shadow, a light has shined." Matthew continued to show how all of Jesus' life, even his travel, followed God's plans and fulfilled Scripture. Some Jewish readers may have wondered why Jesus' ministry was not focused in Jerusalem and the Temple. However, Matthew explained that Jesus' move to the region of Galilee fulfilled Isaiah 9:1-2. Isaiah had prophesied that the Messiah would be a light to the land of Zebulun and Naphtali. These words foreshadow Jesus' mission: He came to preach salvation by grace to the entire world.

4:17 Jesus started his ministry with the same message that people had heard from John the Baptist: "Turn from your sins and turn to God." Becoming a follower of Christ begins with repentance, turning away from our self-centeredness and self-control. The next step is to turn the right way, to Christ.

The Old Testament prophets often spoke of the future Kingdom, ruled by a descendant of King David, that would be established on earth and exist for eternity. Thus, when Jesus said, "The Kingdom of Heaven is near," the Jews understood him to mean that the Messiah had come to inaugurate his long-awaited earthly kingdom. This caused great excitement among the people. The problem arose, however, in misunderstanding the nature of this Kingdom and in timing its arrival. The Kingdom of Heaven began when God entered history as a human being. But the culmination of the Kingdom of Heaven will not be fully realized until all evil in the world has been judged and removed. Christ came to earth first as the Suffering Servant. When he returns, he will come as King and Judge to rule over all the earth. The Kingdom begun with Jesus' birth would not overthrow Roman oppression and usher in universal peace. The Kingdom of Heaven that began quietly in Palestine was God's rule in people's hearts. Thus, the Kingdom was as "near" as people's willingness to make Jesus King over their lives.

FOUR FISHERMEN FOLLOW JESUS / 4:18-22 / 33

One day as Jesus was walking beside the Sea of Galilee, he saw two sets of brothers who were fishing. Jesus told these men—Peter, Andrew, James, and John—to leave their fishing business and “fish for people”—to bring others to God. Jesus was calling them away from their financially productive trade to be productive spiritually. All of Christ’s followers need to fish for souls.

4:18 Located 650 feet below sea level, the Sea of Galilee is a large lake—150 feet deep and surrounded by hills. Fishing was the main industry for the approximately thirty towns surrounding the Sea of Galilee during Jesus’ day.

Jesus saw two brothers—Simon, also called Peter, and Andrew. Jesus did not approach Simon (whom we know as Peter) and Andrew as strangers. We know from the Gospel of John (1:35-49) that they had had previous contact. Jesus was walking on the beach with a purpose—to find certain fishermen whom he wanted to call to follow him. Jesus found them fishing with a net, for they were commercial fishermen. Using nets was the most common method of fishing. A circular net (ten to fifteen feet in diameter) would be thrown into the sea. Then it would be drawn up, and the catch hoisted into the boat.

4:19 Jesus called out to them, “Come, be my disciples, and I will show you how to fish for people!” Jesus told Simon (Peter) and Andrew to leave their fishing business and to follow him. Jesus was asking these men to become his disciples and to begin fishing for people. These disciples were adept at catching fish, but they would need special training before they would be able to fish for people’s souls. Jesus was calling them away from their trade to help others believe the Good News.

4:20 After their previous meeting with Jesus, Simon Peter and Andrew had returned to fishing. But when Jesus called them to follow him as disciples, they left their nets at once and went with him. These men already knew Jesus, so when Jesus called them, they were willing to follow him. When Jesus calls, people must be willing to realign previous plans and goals, sometimes leaving something important in order to follow Jesus.

4:21-22 Not far down the beach were two other brothers, James and John. Their father, Zebedee, owned a fishing business where they worked with Peter and Andrew (Luke 5:10). James and John were sitting in a boat . . . mending their nets. The weight of a good catch of fish and the constant strain on the nets meant that fishermen had to spend a lot of time keeping their nets repaired and in good shape.

John and Andrew had met Jesus previously (John 1:35-39). James probably knew about Jesus from his brother. When Jesus called them, they immediately followed him, leaving the boat and their father behind.

JESUS PREACHES THROUGHOUT GALILEE / 4:23-25 / 36

Jesus became well known very quickly. Certainly his acclaimed ability to heal diseases caused people to bring sick family and friends to him. Some simply followed him from place to place to hear him speak and see his miracles. Some who followed also came to believe in him, accepting the Good News about the Kingdom.

4:23 Jesus traveled throughout Galilee teaching in the synagogues, preaching everywhere the Good News about the Kingdom. And he healed people who had every kind of sickness and disease. Jesus was teaching, preaching, and healing—the three main aspects of his ministry. “Teaching” shows Jesus’ concern that people learn; “preaching” shows his concern for commitment; and “healing” shows his concern for physical wholeness. Jesus’ healing miracles authenticated his teaching and preaching; they proved that he truly was from God.

When Jesus arrived in a town, he first went to the synagogue. Most towns that had ten or more Jewish families had a synagogue. The building served as a religious gathering place on the Sabbath and as a school during the week. The leader of the synagogue was an administrator who often invited rabbis to teach and preach. Jesus had opportunity to share the Good News of the Kingdom to the Jews who came to the synagogues. The “Good News” was that the Kingdom of Heaven had arrived.

4:24 News about him spread far beyond the borders of Galilee. Those who heard him told family and friends, who told others, so that the news spread throughout all Syria. “Syria” may refer to the area to the north of Galilee, indicating that Jesus’ fame had spread beyond the borders of Palestine. Jesus cured everyone—whatever their illness and pain, or if they were possessed by demons, or were epileptics, or were paralyzed—he healed them all. Why did Jesus perform physical healings? As Creator, Jesus wanted people to have health and wholeness rather than illness. The healings also showed Jesus’ compassion for suffering people and revealed that the Kingdom had arrived in power and presence.

4:25 Large crowds followed him wherever he went—people from Galilee, the Ten Towns, Jerusalem, from all over Judea, and from east of the Jordan River. The Ten Towns refers to a league of ten Gentile cities east of the Sea of Galilee that had joined together for trade and mutual defense. The city of Jerusalem was in the region of Judea. The region east of the Jordan River most likely refers also to Gentile territory. The news about Jesus was out; Jews and Gentiles were coming long distances to hear him.

JESUS GIVES THE BEATITUDES / 5:1-12 / 49

Matthew 5–7 is called the Sermon on the Mount because Jesus gave it on a hillside near Capernaum. This sermon probably covered several days of preaching, if not more. In it, Jesus revealed his attitude toward the law of Moses, explaining that he requires faithful and sincere obedience, not ceremonial religion. The Sermon on the Mount challenged the teachings of the proud and legalistic religious leaders of the day. It called people back to the messages of the Old Testament prophets who, like Jesus, had taught that God wants heartfelt obedience, not mere legalistic observance of laws and rituals.

The most well-known portion of the Sermon on the Mount is known as the Beatitudes (5:3-10). These are a series of blessings promised to those who exhibit the attributes of God's Kingdom. The Beatitudes

- present a code of ethics for the disciples and a standard of conduct for all believers,
- contrast Kingdom values (what is eternal) with worldly values (what is temporary),
- contrast the superficial “faith” of the Pharisees with the real faith that Christ wants, and
- show how the future Kingdom will fulfill Old Testament expectations.

5:1-2 Jesus often presented his teaching up on a mountainside. His disciples came to him, and he sat down to teach them. The crowds were gathering, seated on the slopes below him. Jesus most likely gave these teachings primarily to the twelve disciples, but the crowds were present and listening. Much of what Jesus said referred to the ideas that had been promoted by the religious leaders of the day. The disciples, the closest associates of this popular man, might easily have been tempted to feel important, proud, and possessive. However, Jesus told them that instead of fame and fortune, they could expect mourning, hunger, and persecution. Jesus also assured his disciples that they would receive rewards, but perhaps not in this life.

5:3 The Beatitudes describe how Christ's followers should live. Each beatitude tells how to be blessed. To be blessed means more than happiness; it means to be favored and approved by God. According to worldly standards, the types of people whom Jesus described don't seem to be particularly blessed by God. But God's way of living usually contradicts the world's. Jesus explained that "God blesses those who realize their need for him, for the Kingdom of Heaven is given to them." Only those who humbly depend on God are admitted into the Kingdom of Heaven. The final consummation of all these rewards, and of the Kingdom itself, lies in the future. However, believers can already share in the Kingdom (as far as it has been revealed) by living out Jesus' words.

5:4 In another seeming contradiction in terms, Jesus explained that "God blesses those who mourn, for they will be comforted." Tied with the beatitude in verse 3, this means that humility (realization of one's unworthiness before God) also requires sorrow for sins. Whether Jesus' followers mourn for sin or in suffering, God's promise is sure that they will be comforted. Only God can take away sorrow for sin; only God can forgive and erase it. Only God can give comfort to those who suffer for his sake because they know their reward in the Kingdom.

5:5 "God blesses those who are gentle and lowly, for the whole earth will belong to them." The words translated gentle and lowly convey humility and trust in God. Gentle and lowly people do not look down on themselves, but they do not think too highly of themselves either. Ironically, it will not be the arrogant and wealthy people who get everything. Instead, the whole earth will belong to the gentle. Jesus used "earth" to refer to the future inheritance of the Kingdom. According to Revelation 21–22, believers will enjoy a new heaven and a new earth. God will one day freely give his true disciples what they did not grasp for themselves on earth.

5:6 "God blesses those who are hungry and thirsty for justice, for they will receive it in full." The words hungry and thirsty picture intense longings that people desire to satisfy—necessities that they cannot live without. Those who have an intense longing for justice (righteousness) are blessed. Most likely, this refers to personal justice—being so filled with God that the person completely does God's will. Justice refers to total discipleship and complete obedience. It may also refer to justice for the entire world—an end to the sin and evil that fill it. In both cases, God's promise is sure; they will receive it in full. He will completely satisfy spiritual hunger and thirst.

5:7 "God blesses those who are merciful, for they will be shown mercy." Merciful people realize that, because they received mercy from God, they must extend mercy to others. Mercy implies generosity, forgiveness, and compassion, and a desire to remove the wrong as well as alleviate the suffering. This promise does not guarantee mercy from people. The believers' comfort comes in the knowledge that, no matter how the world treats them, God will show them mercy both now and when he returns.

5:8 “God blesses those whose hearts are pure, for they will see God.” People characterized as pure in heart are morally pure, honest, and sincere. They are people of integrity and single-minded commitment to God. Because of their sincere devotion to Christ, they will see God here and now through the eyes of faith (Hebrews 11:27), and finally face-to-face (1 John 3:2).

5:9 “God blesses those who work for peace, for they will be called the children of God.” God calls his children to be peacemakers. This involves action, not just passive compliance. Peacemakers actively work for peace, to cause reconciliation, to end bitterness and strife. This peace is not appeasement but dealing with and solving problems to maintain peace. Arrogant, selfish people do not concern themselves with peacemaking. Peacemakers will be called the children of God because they reflect their Father's character.

5:10 “God blesses those who are persecuted because they live for God, for the Kingdom of Heaven is theirs.” Persecution should not surprise Christians. People who put others before themselves will seldom receive applause and honors. Often, they will be persecuted instead. Because they live for God, they stand out from the world and become marks for enemy attacks. The world is under Satan's control, and believers belong to the opposing army. The reward for these believers will be the Kingdom of Heaven. God will make up for the suffering that his children have undergone because of their loyalty to him.

5:11 “God blesses you when you are mocked and persecuted and lied about because you are my followers.” Jesus was telling his disciples that they shouldn't be surprised when people mock them, persecute them, and lie about them. Jesus would face such treatment. Later, he explained to his followers that they should expect nothing different (10:18; 24:9; John 15:20).

5:12 Jesus described the way the disciples should respond to persecution: “Be happy about it! Be very glad!” This refers to deep, spiritual joy that is unhindered and unchanged by what happens in this present life. A person with righteous character can rejoice and be glad because of the promise: a great reward awaits you in heaven. The persecution will pale in comparison to the great reward.

Besides that, the disciples had good company: the ancient prophets were persecuted, too. Jesus placed his disciples in a long line of God's followers who lived righteously and spoke truthfully—only to suffer for it. Jesus explained that to live and speak for God in the face of unjust persecution, as the ancient prophets did, would bring great reward in heaven.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT SALT AND LIGHT / 5:13-16 / 50

In these verses, Jesus explained to his disciples the true nature of their calling. They would be salt in a dreary world, light in a dark and evil world. But they would do this only because of the one who came as “the light of the world.” This handful of men brought salt that we can taste and light that we can see even today. We, in turn, must pass “salt” and “light” along to others.

5:13 Jesus' questions, “But what good is salt if it has lost its flavor? Can you make it useful again?” did not expect an answer, for once salt has deteriorated, it cannot be used as a preservative. As salt preserves and brings out the best flavor of food, so believers should be the salt of the earth and affect others positively. Jesus told his disciples that if they wanted to make a difference in the world, they would have to be different from the world. God would hold them accountable to maintain their “saltiness” (that is, their usefulness). We must be different if we want to make a difference.

5:14 “You are the light of the world.” As salt makes a difference in people's food, so light makes a difference in their surroundings. Jesus would later explain, “I am the light of the world. If you follow me, you won't be stumbling through darkness, but will have the light of life” (John 8:12). Christ's disciples must live for Christ, shining like a city on a mountain, glowing in the night for all to see. They are like lights in a dark world, showing clearly what Christ is like. Because Jesus is the light of the world, his followers must reflect his light.

5:15 “Don't hide your light under a basket! Instead, put it on a stand and let it shine for all.” People place lights on stands for them to spread their warm glow. The disciples should continue to reflect the light of their Master, the light of the world. They must not try to conceal their light any more than they would light a lamp and then hide it. Being Christ's disciples means spreading the light to everyone with whom we have contact.

5:16 “In the same way” that a light shines from a stand, Christ's disciples must let their light shine before others by letting their “good deeds shine out for all to see, so that everyone will praise your heavenly Father.” Jesus made it clear that there would be no mistaking the source of a believer’s good works. The believer’s light shines not for himself but to reflect the light back to the Father and so direct people to him.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE LAW / 5:17-20 / 51

God gave moral and ceremonial laws to help people love him with all their hearts and minds. By Jesus’ time, however, religious leaders had turned God’s laws into a confusing mass of rules. When Jesus talked about a new way to understand the law, he was trying to bring people back to its original purpose. Jesus did not speak against the law itself but against the abuses and excesses to which it had been subjected.

5:17 Jesus did not come as a rabbi with a brand new teaching; he came as the promised Messiah with a message heard from the beginning of time. “Don’t misunderstand why I have come. I did not come to abolish the law of Moses or the writings of the prophets. No, I came to fulfill them.” Jesus completes and transcends the law. The Old Testament law is not rescinded but now must be reinterpreted and reapplied in light of Jesus. God does not change his mind. Jesus’ coming had been part of God’s plan from Creation (see Genesis 3:15).

5:18 Jesus used the words “I assure you” several times in his speaking. They signal that what he said next is of vital importance. In these words, Jesus ascribed the highest authority to God’s law. Not only did Jesus fulfill the law, but until heaven and earth disappear (meaning until the end of the age) the law will not change. Not the smallest detail, not the least stroke of a pen, will be set aside from God’s law. Jesus’ statement certifies the absolute authority of every word and letter of Scripture. Everything prophesied in God’s law will remain until its purpose is achieved. Everything will be accomplished.

5:19 Jesus will fulfill and accomplish the entire Law and the Prophets (5:17-18), so his followers must also keep even the smallest commandment included in the Law and the Prophets. In addition, if teachers influence others to break even the smallest law, they will be called least in the Kingdom of Heaven. Because the Law and the Prophets point forward to Jesus and his teaching, anyone who obeys God’s laws and teaches them will be great in the Kingdom of Heaven. Those who treated any part of the law as “small,” and therefore breakable, would themselves be called “least” and, presumably, be excluded. Jesus explained to his disciples, the men who would be responsible to carry on his message, that they must live carefully and teach carefully, not taking God's word lightly. Jesus' followers must respect and obey God's word if they want to accomplish great things for him.

5:20 Jesus expected his followers to obey God better than the teachers of religious law and the Pharisees, a seemingly impossible task. The teachers of religious law were teachers and lawyers in Jewish courts. The Pharisees were exacting and scrupulous in their attempts to follow God's law, as well as hundreds of traditional laws. How could Jesus reasonably call his followers to a greater righteousness than theirs?

Jesus was not placing impossible demands on his followers in order for them to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. Jesus was speaking about the attitude of the heart. The Pharisees were content to obey the laws outwardly without humbly looking to God to change their hearts (or attitudes). Jesus was saying, therefore, that the quality of our righteousness should exceed that of the teachers of the law and the Pharisees, who looked pious, but were far from the Kingdom of God. True followers of God know that they cannot do anything to become righteous enough to enter the Kingdom of Heaven, so they count on God to work his righteousness within them.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT ANGER / 5:21-26 / 52

In the following verses, Jesus will say, six times, "You have heard . . . but I say." With these words Jesus showed the true intent of God's law. To keep the law as God intended, the people could not get by with lip service and with obeying the letter of the law alone. Jesus' teaching reached to the application of the law, into people's motives and attitudes.

5:21 "You have heard that the law of Moses says, 'Do not murder. If you commit murder, you are subject to judgment.'" Jesus was quoting from the Ten Commandments, called the law of Moses. The Pharisees were teaching that the command against murder, found in Exodus 20:13, referred just to taking another person's life. Murderers were subject to judgment (i.e., execution; see Exodus 21:12; Leviticus 24:17) through certain legal proceedings, also described in the law.

5:22 "But I say, if you are angry with someone, you are subject to judgment!" Jesus taught that his followers should not even become angry enough to murder, for then they would already have committed murder in their heart. “Anger,” here, refers to a seething, brooding bitterness that always threatens to leap out of control, leading to violence, emotional hurt, increased mental stress, spiritual damage, and, yes, even murder. Anger keeps us from developing a spirit pleasing to God. Jesus added, “If you say to your friend, ‘You idiot,’ you are in danger of being brought before the court.” To stoop to insulting or calling a fellow believer a derogatory name makes one liable to prosecution. Angry words and name-calling reveal a heart far from God. “And if you curse someone, you are in danger of the fires of hell.”

In the Bible, three words are used in connection with eternal punishment: (1) Sheol, or “the grave,” is used in the Old Testament to mean the place of the dead, generally thought to be under the earth. (See Job 24:19; Psalm 16:10; Isaiah 38:10.) (2) Hades is the Greek word for the underworld, the realm of the dead. It is the word used in the New Testament for Sheol. (See Matthew 16:18; Revelation 1:18; 20:13-14.) (3) Gehenna, or hell, was named after the Valley of Hinnom near Jerusalem where children had been sacrificed by fire to the pagan gods. (See 2 Kings 23:10; 2 Chronicles 28:3.)

5:23-24 “So if you are standing before the altar in the Temple, offering a sacrifice to God, and you suddenly remember that someone has something against you, leave your sacrifice there beside the altar. Go and be reconciled to that person. Then come and offer your sacrifice to God.” At certain times of the year, Jews brought sacrifices to be offered at the altar in the Temple in Jerusalem. The Jews brought their gifts as a matter of course, as part of keeping God’s law. But Jesus explained that those who come into God’s presence to worship must come with pure hearts, not hindered by broken relationships that they had the power to mend. Jesus explained that if the worshiper remembered someone’s anger against him or her, that person should leave the gift and go immediately to be reconciled to the offended brother or sister. Then he should come back to worship and offer his or her gift.

5:25-26 “Come to terms quickly with your enemy before it is too late and you are dragged into court, handed over to an officer, and thrown in jail. I assure you that you won’t be free again until you have paid the last penny.” In Jesus’ day, a person who couldn’t pay a debt would be thrown into prison. Debts were repaid by selling property or going into contract as an indentured servant. If a person had no way to earn money to pay back the debt, the debtor could very well die in prison. Jesus recommended that his followers take immediate action to settle matters before the angry person handed them over to the judge. Under Roman law, the plaintiff went with the defendant to court. On the way, they could settle matters however they wished. But once a legal verdict was reached, it could not be changed.

It is practical advice to resolve our differences with our enemies before their anger causes more trouble. In a broader sense, these verses advise us to get things right with our brothers and sisters before we have to stand before God.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT LUST / 5:27-30 / 53

In his teaching about lust, Jesus literally got to the heart of the matter by explaining that sin begins in the heart. With strong language, Jesus described how his followers must rid themselves of sin. While we cannot be sinless until we finally are with Christ, we must keep a watch on our thoughts, motives, and temptations in the meantime. When we find a destructive habit or thought pattern, we need to get rid of it.

5:27-28 Again Jesus quoted one of the Ten Commandments, “Do not commit adultery” (Exodus 20:14). According to the Old Testament law, a person must not have sex with someone other than his or her spouse. Jesus said, “But I say, anyone who even looks at a woman with lust in his eye has already committed adultery with her in his heart.” Even the desire to have sex with someone other than your spouse is mental adultery and thus is sin. Jesus emphasized that if the act is wrong, then so is the desire to do the act. The word lust denotes the desire for an illicit relationship. To be faithful to your spouse with your body but not your mind is to break the trust so vital to a strong marriage. Jesus was condemning the deliberate and repeated filling of one’s mind with fantasies that would be evil, if acted out.

5:29-30 When Jesus said to get rid of your eye or your hand, he was speaking figuratively. He didn’t mean literally to gouge out an eye, because even a blind person can lust. But if that were the only choice, it would be better to go into eternal life with one eye or hand than to go to hell physically intact. This strong language describes how Jesus’ followers should renounce anything that would cause them to sin or turn away from the faith. Believers must get rid of any relationship, practice, or activity that leads to sin. The reason? Jesus explained that “It is better for you to lose one part of your body than for your whole body to be thrown into hell.” This is radical discipleship. While none of us will ever be completely free from sin until we get a new glorified body, God wants an attitude that renounces sin instead of one that holds on to it.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT DIVORCE / 5:31-32 / 54

Divorce is as hurtful and destructive today as in Jesus' day. God intends marriage to be a lifetime commitment (Genesis 2:24). People should never consider divorce an option for solving problems or a way out of a relationship that seems dead. In these verses, Jesus was also attacking those who purposefully abused the marriage contract, using divorce to satisfy their lustful desire to marry someone else. Make sure your actions today help your marriage grow stronger rather than tear it apart.

5:31 Jesus again pointed out a law from the Old Testament that his listeners knew well. The law of Moses, in Deuteronomy 24:1-4, said that a man can divorce his wife by merely giving her a letter of divorce. The subject of divorce was hotly debated among the Jews at this time. Some religious leaders took this to mean that a man could divorce his wife for almost any reason. In a culture where husbands viewed their wives as "property," divorce was fairly easy to obtain. However, other leaders said that divorce could be granted only in cases of adultery.

5:32 "But I say that a man who divorces his wife, unless she has been unfaithful, causes her to commit adultery." The religious leaders permitted easy divorce, as well as remarriage after divorce. But Jesus said that the sacred union of marriage should not be broken and that to remarry after divorce was committing adultery. However, Jesus here gave one exception regarding divorce: "marital unfaithfulness." For a man to divorce his wife because she has been unfaithful was simply a recognition that his union with her had been ended by her sexual union with another. It would be possible, then, that adultery would be an exception to the prohibition against remarriage. This does not mean that divorce should automatically occur when a spouse commits adultery. The word translated "unfaithfulness" implies a sexually immoral lifestyle, not a confessed and repented act of adultery. Those who discover that their spouse has been unfaithful should first make every effort to forgive, reconcile, and restore their relationship.

However, Jesus would not stand for men tossing aside their wives. Marriage is so sanctified in God's eyes that anyone who marries a divorced woman commits adultery. Notice that while the divorced woman would become an adulteress, the man who divorced his wife would be at fault—he causes her to become an adulteress. Jesus will explain his strong words in 19:3-12 on the grounds that God originally intended marriage to be for life.

God created marriage to be a sacred and permanent union and partnership between a man and a woman. When the husband and wife both enter this union with that understanding and commitment, they can provide security for each other, a stable home for their children, and strength to weather life's storms and stresses.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT VOWS / 5:33-37 / 55

In Jesus' day, people commonly made oaths, or vows. Although God's law took these vows very seriously, many of the religious leaders had invented legal maneuvers to get around keeping their vows. Jesus told his followers not to use vows—their word alone should be enough. Are you known as a person of your word?

5:33 “Again, you have heard that the law of Moses says, ‘Do not break your vows; you must carry out the vows you have made to the Lord.’” Jesus did not refer to any specific commandment, but he summed up Old Testament teachings on the subject of vows (see Exodus 20:7; Leviticus 19:12; Numbers 30:2; Deuteronomy 5:11; 6:13; 23:21-23). When a person made a vow, it bound him or her to keep it, whether it was a vow to another person or a vow made to the Lord.

5:34-36 However, Jesus told his followers, “Don’t make any vows!” The religious leaders had designed an elaborate system indicating how binding a vow was depending on how the vow had been made. The leaders said that if they swore by heaven or by the earth or by Jerusalem, they could get out of their vow without penalty because they did not make the vow in God's name. Jesus explained that a vow is a vow. A promise is binding before God, no matter what words are used. Jesus added, “Don’t even swear, ‘By my head!’ for you can’t turn one hair white or black.” Even the hairs on people's heads belong to God, so a person cannot get around a vow by swearing by his head. Jesus' followers ought to be so well known for their honesty and truthfulness that they do not need to make vows.

5:37 Jesus emphasized that his followers should just say a simple, “Yes, I will,” or “No, I won’t.” When they say yes they mean yes, and when they say no they mean no. “Your word is enough.” People need vows only when telling lies is a possibility. “To strengthen your promise with a vow shows that something is wrong.” Keeping promises builds trust and makes committed human relationships possible.

When people hurt us, often our first reaction is to get even. Instead, Jesus said we should do good to those who wrong us! Instead of keeping score, we should love and forgive. This is not natural; it is supernatural. Only God can give us the strength to love as he does.

5:38 “You have heard that the law of Moses says, ‘If an eye is injured, injure the eye of the person who did it. If a tooth gets knocked out, knock out the tooth of the person who did it.’” This example came from God’s law as recorded by Moses in Exodus 21:23-25; Leviticus 24:19-20; and Deuteronomy 19:21. While the law sounds severe to us, in its time it set guidelines against what may have been escalating personal vendettas among people. The principle of retribution gave judges a formula for dealing with crime. That is, “Make the punishment fit the crime.” The law limited vengeance and helped the court administer punishment that was neither too strict nor too lenient.

5:39 “But I say, don’t resist an evil person!” Jesus focused on the attitudes of his followers when dealing with evil individuals. The world advocates getting even, looking out for oneself, and protecting one’s “personal rights.” Jesus’ followers, however, were to hold loosely to their “rights,” preferring to forgo those rights for the sake of bearing witness to the gospel and the Kingdom. Being willing to set aside one’s personal rights, however, does not mean that believers have to sit passively while evil goes unhindered.

To be slapped on the right cheek was literally a blow from the back of someone’s hand, an act that even today shows the greatest possible contempt. According to Jewish law, the one who slapped another faced punishment and a heavy fine. Thus, the law was on the side of the victim. Jesus said not to take the legal channels, however, but to offer the other cheek for a slap as well. Jesus did not ask his followers to do what he would never do; he received such treatment and did as he had commanded (26:67; see also Isaiah 50:6; 1 Peter 2:23). Jesus wanted his followers to have an unselfish attitude that willingly follows the way of the cross instead of the way of personal rights. They should entrust themselves to God who will one day set all things right.

To many Jews, these statements were offensive. Any Messiah who would turn the other cheek was not the military leader to revolt against Rome. Because the Jews were under Roman oppression, they wanted retaliation against their enemies, whom they hated. But Jesus suggested a new, radical response to injustice: Instead of demanding rights, give them up freely! According to Jesus, it is more important to give justice and mercy than to receive it.

5:40 “If you are ordered to court and your shirt is taken from you, give your coat, too.” The coat (or cloak) was a valuable possession. Making clothing was difficult and time-consuming. As a result, coats were expensive, and most people owned only one. A coat could be used as a blanket, a sack to carry things in, a pad to sit on, a pledge for a debt, and, of course, clothing. The shirt was an inner garment worn next to the skin. Jesus said to let the person take both. Again Jesus focused on the attitude expected of his followers. They should hold their possessions very loosely.

5:41 “If a soldier demands that you carry his gear for a mile, carry it two miles.” This alludes to the forced labor that soldiers could demand of ordinary citizens to carry their loads a certain distance (a mile was the term for one thousand paces). The Jews hated this law because it forced them to show their subjection to Rome. Yet Jesus said to take the load and carry it two miles. Jesus called for a serving attitude (as he himself exemplified throughout his life and especially at the cross). Jesus’ words probably shocked his hearers. Most of the Jews, expecting a military Messiah, would never have expected to hear Jesus issue a command of nonretaliation and cooperation with the hated Roman Empire. By these words, Jesus was revealing that his followers belong to another Kingdom. They need not attempt to fight against Rome, which would not serve God’s plan. Instead, they should work on behalf of God’s Kingdom. If doing so meant walking an extra mile carrying a Roman soldier’s load, then that was what they should do.

5:42 “Give to those who ask, and don’t turn away from those who want to borrow.” Jesus’ followers should have a generous spirit. Because they loosely hold on to their personal rights and possessions, they can freely give when the need arises and won’t turn away from the one who wants to borrow. Jesus’ followers must willingly put others’ needs before their own.

By telling us not to retaliate against personal injustices (5:38-42), Jesus keeps us from taking the law into our own hands. This also keeps our focus on him and not on our own rights. By loving and praying for our enemies, we prove our relationship to our Father, show his love in an unlovely world, and overcome evil with good.

5:43-44 “You have heard that the law of Moses says, ‘Love your neighbor’ and hate your enemy.” The Pharisees interpreted Leviticus 19:18 as teaching that they should love only those who love in return. The neighbor refers to someone of the same nationality and faith. While no Bible verse explicitly says “hate your enemy,” the Pharisees may have reinterpreted some of the Old Testament passages about hatred for God’s enemies (see, for example, Psalm 139:19-22 and 140:9-11). But Jesus explained, “But I say, love your enemies! Pray for those who persecute you!” If you can do that, you truly show that Jesus is Lord of your life. Jesus explained to his disciples that they must live by a higher standard than what the world expects—a standard that is impossible to reach on mere human strength alone. People who have experienced God’s love understand what it means to be loved undeservedly. Only with the help of God’s Spirit can his people love and pray for those who seek to do them harm (see Romans 12:14-21).

5:45 “In that way you will be acting as true children of your Father in heaven.” The Father in heaven shows indiscriminating love to all people, giving his sunlight to both the evil and the good, and sending rain on the just and on the unjust as well. Therefore, his children (those who believe in him) must reflect his character and show indiscriminating love for both friends and enemies. God’s love reaches out to all people. God’s people must do the same.

5:46-47 “If you love only those who love you, what good is that?” Jesus has been explaining the much higher standards that are expected of his followers, standards higher than what the world or even their religion accepted. Why the command to love enemies? Because that will mark Jesus’ followers as different, with hearts and minds turned over to God alone, who can help them do just that. Anybody can love those who love them—that comes naturally, even for corrupt tax collectors. In the same way, “If you are kind only to your friends, how are you different from anyone else? Even pagans do that.” Those disciples who live for Christ and are radically different from the world will receive their reward.

5:48 “But you are to be perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect.” The word translated perfect can also be translated “mature” or “full-grown.” Jesus’ followers can be perfect if their behavior is appropriate for their maturity level—perfect yet with much room to grow. The perfection Jesus required of his followers did not include strict and flawless obedience to minute laws. It called, instead, for an understanding of how the law pointed to the heavenly Father who is himself perfect. Those who loved God and desired to follow him would keep his law as he required. They did this, not because they were already perfect, but because they were striving to be perfect, to reflect their Father's character.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT GIVING TO THE NEEDY / 6:1-4 / 58

It's easier to do what is right when we gain recognition and praise. To be sure our motives are not selfish, we should do our good deeds quietly or in secret, with no thought of reward. Jesus says we should check our motives in generosity, prayer, and fasting. Check the motives behind your next good deed by asking, "Would I still do this if no one would ever know that I did it?"

6:1 "Don't do your good deeds publicly, to be admired." At first reading, these words seem to contradict what Jesus had just told his disciples in 5:14-16, "Let your good deeds shine out for all to see." In 5:16, however, Jesus gave his disciples the correct motive for their deeds: that people might praise God. Jesus warned that doing good deeds just to be admired means that you will lose the reward from your Father in heaven. God rewards good deeds done for his glory alone.

6:2 "When you give a gift to someone in need, don't shout about it as the hypocrites do." The first "good deed" Jesus used as an example was giving to the needy. The Jewish law commanded giving to those in need (Deuteronomy 15:10-11). Jesus expected his followers to do likewise, following God's law. However, Jesus' followers were to have a different motive for their giving than did the hypocrites. "Hypocrite" was the Greek word for "actor," one who wore a mask and pretended to be someone he or she wasn't. The term, as used here, describes people who do good deeds for appearance only, to be praised by others—not out of compassion or other good motives. (Many of the religious leaders did just this; later Jesus calls the Pharisees hypocrites, see 23:13-29.) The phrase blowing trumpets in the synagogues and streets probably is not literal, but it pictures people calling attention to themselves. These empty acts and whatever human praise is received are all the reward they will ever get. God will reward those who are sincere in their faith and whose motive in all their good deeds is to glorify him.

6:3-4 The phrase "don't tell your left hand what your right hand is doing" teaches that motives for giving to God and to others must be pure. The hyperbole emphasizes the total lack of ostentation. No one should call attention to the act. It is easy to give with mixed motives, to do something for someone if it will benefit us in return. Jesus advised, however, that giving must be done in secret.

Jesus' words do not forbid record keeping, receipting, or reporting procedures used in good stewardship. But he condemned practices to impress others. Those who give in secret will receive a reward from the Father, a reward of greater value because it will be perfect and eternal.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT PRAYER / 6:5-15 / 59

A second act of piety Jesus addressed was prayer. Some people, especially the religious leaders, wanted others to think they were very holy—and public prayer was one way to get attention. There is a place for public prayer, but to pray only where others will notice you indicates that your real intention is to please people, not God.

6:5 These praying hypocrites had motives other than piously observing the exact daily prayer times. When they prayed publicly on street corners and in the synagogues where everyone could see them, they were not praying at all. Jesus taught that we find the essence of prayer not in public but in private communication with God. For these hypocrites, people's praise is all the reward they will ever get.

6:6 The prayer life of Jesus' followers would be radically different from that of the hypocritical religious leaders. Jesus did not condemn public prayer. Jesus' point, however, was that people who prayed more in public than in private should consider their motives. If they really wanted to fellowship with God, Jesus suggested this: "When you pray, go away by yourself, shut the door behind you, and pray to your Father secretly." Private prayer enables believers to pour out their hearts to God, express their true feelings, and listen in the quietness for God's answer.

6:7-8 While Jesus encouraged persistent prayer (Luke 18:1-8) and soon would give a pattern for prayer (see 6:9-13), he condemned the shallow repetition of words by those who did not have a personal relationship with the Father. Jesus told his followers, "Don't babble on and on as people of other religions do." The believers did not pray to idols of wood or stone; they prayed to the one living and true God. God doesn't need our prayers; but he wants our prayers and knows that we need them. Prayer develops the trust that says, "Father, you know best."

6:9 Jesus said, "Pray like this." His pattern was: praise God (6:9), intercede for his work in the world (6:10), ask for provision of individual daily needs (6:11), and request help in daily struggles (6:12-13). This pattern helps believers understand the nature and purpose of their personal prayers in their relationship with their Father.

The phrase Our Father in heaven indicates that God is majestic and holy; he transcends everything on earth. But he is also personal and loving. The first line of this model prayer is a statement of praise and a commitment to honor God's holy name. Christians, who bear the holy name of Christ, must be responsible to honor him in every aspect of their lives. When we pray for God's name to be honored, we pray that this world will honor his name, and we look forward to Christ's return when that will be a reality.

6:10 The desire that God's Kingdom come soon refers to God's spiritual reign, not Israel's freedom from Rome. God announced his Kingdom in the covenant with Abraham (8:11; Luke 13:28), and pious Jews were still waiting for it. Jesus' followers recognize that the Kingdom began with his coming to earth. Matthew's readers understood the Kingdom to be present in believers' hearts as Christ reigned there (Luke 17:21). To look forward to God's coming Kingdom is to pray that more and more people will enter it. This prayer also reaffirms belief that one day all evil will be destroyed, that God will establish the new heaven and earth, and that his glory will be known to all the nations (Psalm 110:1; Revelation 21:1).

Praying may your will be done does not imply resignation to fate; rather, it is a prayer that God's perfect purpose will be accomplished in this world (on earth) as it already is in heaven.

6:11 Verses 11 and 12 are requests for personal needs. We must trust God daily to provide what he knows we need. The word today suggests that we should not worry about what God already knows we need (6:8). Believers must trust God for provision and not worry. That God gives daily food does not negate people's responsibility to work. Instead, it acknowledges that God is Sustainer and Provider.

6:12 "Forgive us our sins, just as we have forgiven those who have sinned against us." A believer who understands the greatness of the forgiveness that he or she has received can willingly extend such forgiveness to others for their wrongs. The flip side of this thought reveals the selfishness of a person who seeks God's forgiveness yet willfully refuses to forgive others. Jesus expands on this in 6:14-15.

6:13 The Greek word translated temptation does not mean “enticement to do evil” but “testing.” Sometimes God allows his people to be “tested” by temptation. But this testing is never without a purpose: God is always working to refine his people, teach them to depend on him, and strengthen their character to be more like him. How he does this differs in every person’s life. The prayer, then, is that we not yield to temptation.

Jesus wanted his followers to place their trust in God during trying times and to pray for deliverance from the evil one and his deceit. All Christians struggle with temptation. Believers who pray these words realize their sinful nature and their need to depend on God in the face of temptation.

6:14-15 Jesus gave a startling warning about forgiveness: “If you refuse to forgive others, your Father will not forgive your sins” (see also 6:12). Living in relationship with God requires constant repentance of the sins that plague us. Because believers must come to God constantly for confession and forgiveness, refusing to forgive others reveals a lack of appreciation for the mercy received from God. All people are on common ground as sinners in need of God’s forgiveness. If we don’t forgive others, we are in fact denying and rejecting God’s forgiveness of us (see Ephesians 4:32; Colossians 3:13). Later, Jesus told a parable depicting such a situation (18:23-35).

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT FASTING / 6:16-18 / 60

Jesus addresses the third act of piety—fasting. People fast (go without food) so that they can spend more time in prayer. This act is both noble and difficult. The purpose of fasting is to provide time for prayer, to teach self-discipline, to remind God’s people that they can live with a lot less, and to help them appreciate what God has given.

6:16 Fasting was mandatory for the Jewish people once a year, on the Day of Atonement (Leviticus 23:32); however, people could fast individually or in groups while praying for certain requests (see, for example, Esther 4:16). Fasting could have great spiritual value, but some hypocrites, such as the Pharisees, had turned it into a way to gain public approval. During a fast, they made themselves look pale and disheveled so people would admire them. The Pharisees negated the purpose of their fasting by making sure others knew that they were fasting. Public recognition would be their only reward.

6:17-18 When you fast, Jesus said, go about your normal daily routine; don’t make a show of it. Then no one but God will suspect you are fasting. Jesus commended acts of self-sacrifice done quietly and sincerely. He wanted people to adopt spiritual disciplines for the right reasons, not from a selfish desire for praise. As with the other disciplines, the reward would come from God, not from people.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT MONEY / 6:19-24 / 61

Jesus had been teaching about how his followers should live differently from those in the current religious establishment. The section about money focuses on true discipleship and how wealth is often the most common distraction from such discipleship. Our attitude toward money is often the pulse of the heart of our discipleship.

6:19 Jesus' followers do not concern themselves with amassing possessions and wealth; they refuse to store up treasures here on earth. Those treasures by their very nature cannot be secure, and death would cause a person to lose them.

6:20-21 How does a person store his treasures in heaven? Storing treasures in heaven includes, but is not limited to, tithing our money. It is also accomplished through bringing others to Christ and all acts of obedience to God. That "treasure" is the eternal value of whatever we accomplish on earth. Acts of obedience to God, laid up in heaven, are not susceptible to decay, destruction, or theft. Nothing can affect or change them; they are eternal.

The final sentence points out the significance of Jesus' words: "Wherever your treasure is, there your heart and thoughts will also be." Wherever our focus lies, whatever occupies our thoughts and our time—that is our "treasure." Jesus contrasted heavenly values with earthly values when he explained that our first loyalty should be to those things that do not fade, cannot be stolen or used up, and never wear out. He calls for a decision that allows us to live contentedly with whatever we have because we have chosen what is eternal and lasting.

6:22-23 Jesus described the "spiritual vision" his disciples should have, requiring us to see clearly what God wants us to do and to see the world from his point of view. Your eye is a lamp for your body means that through the eyes the body receives light, allowing it to move. In the Old Testament, the "eye" denoted the direction of a person's life. A pure eye focuses on God and lets sunshine into a person's soul, so that he can serve God wholeheartedly. An evil eye represents materialism, greed, and covetousness. Such a person may think he has light; in reality, he shuts out the light and is in spiritual darkness. This could mean a sort of "double vision"—trying to focus on God and earthly possessions. It will lead to gloom in life and darkness in eternity. How deep that darkness will be for those who see the light but are not focused on God. In these words, Jesus was calling his followers to undivided loyalty—eyes fixed and focused on him.

6:24 Continuing the theme of his disciples having undivided loyalty, Jesus explained that no one can serve two masters. All human beings face the inescapable choice about whom they will serve. They can choose to serve themselves—to pursue money and selfish pleasures—or they can choose to serve God. Either we store our treasures with God (6:20-21), we focus our “eyes” on him (6:22-23), and we serve him alone—or else we do not serve him at all.

Jesus continued to highlight Kingdom priorities—the attitude toward life that his disciples should exemplify. They need not be overly concerned about food or clothing because they know that God will care for them. Worrying about food and clothing should never take priority over serving God. When we worry over lack of food or inadequate clothing, we immobilize ourselves and focus on the worry.

6:25 The command don’t worry about everyday life does not imply complete lack of concern, nor does it call people to be unwilling to work and supply their own needs. Food, drink, and clothes are less important than the life and body that they supply. Because God sustains our lives and gives us our bodies, we can trust him to provide the food and clothing he knows we need. Worry immobilizes us, but trust in God moves us to action. We work for our money to supply food and clothing, but we must always remember that these ultimately come from God’s hands. When the need arises, we need not worry, for we know that our God will supply.

6:26 The birds need food, and the heavenly Father knows it. They are dependent upon God’s daily provision because they cannot plant or harvest or put food in barns. They work—they hunt for it and then bring it back to their families—but they don’t worry. If God cares for the birds, making sure that the natural order of his creation supplies food for them, how much more will he care for a hungry human being? People are far more valuable to him than the birds. Jesus was teaching total dependence upon God as opposed to humanity’s self-sufficiency. All that we have ultimately comes from God’s hand. Jesus was not prohibiting his followers from sowing, reaping, and gathering food (that is, working for it); but he was prohibiting worrying about having enough food.

6:27 Many of us would do well to ask ourselves this question every morning: “Can all your worries add a single moment to your life?” Daily we face new challenges, concerns, problems, and choices. Will we worry, or will we pray? Will worrying be of any help whatsoever? Worry may damage our health, cause the object of our worry to consume our thoughts, disrupt our productivity, negatively affect the way we treat others, and reduce our ability to trust in God. Worry may, in reality, take time away from our span of life rather than adding to it. It accomplishes nothing.

6:28-30 Sitting on the grassy hillside, Jesus may have gestured to the lilies, probably referring generally to the bountiful flowers in Israel, and pointed out that those lovely flowers don’t have to work or make their clothing. As in 6:26, Jesus was not condoning laziness while waiting for God to supply. Instead, he wanted his disciples to place their lives and needs in God’s hands, refusing to worry over basic needs. To worry about your clothes shows little faith in God’s ability to supply. God “clothes” the flowers and grass of the field that are here today and gone tomorrow. If his creation clothes the earth with beauty and color so rich that even King Solomon in all his glory could not match it, then he will surely care for you.

6:31-32 Because God provides food and clothing not only for birds and flowers but even more for his precious human creation, don’t worry. Do not spend energy fretting over having enough food or drink or clothing. Worry has no place in the lives of Jesus’ disciples because their heavenly Father already knows all their needs.

6:33 Jesus’ followers must settle the question of priorities and make the Kingdom of God their primary concern. To do that, we must consistently honor and represent the Kingdom. Then the way we deal with family, friends, work, leisure, etc., will all be transformed. What is most important to you? People, objects, goals, money, pleasure, and other desires all compete for priority. Any of these can quickly bump God out of first place if you don’t actively choose to give him first place in every area of life. Strangely enough, when you get your priorities right, Jesus promised that God will give you all you need from day to day if you live for him. When Jesus’ followers seek his Kingdom first, God takes care of their needs.

6:34 Because God cares for his people's needs, Jesus says, “Don't worry about tomorrow.” In an appeal to common sense, Jesus explained that what we worry about happening tomorrow may not happen, so we will have wasted time and energy worrying. We need to reserve that energy because today's trouble is enough for today. We only add to today's burdens when we worry about the future. All the anxieties about tomorrow will not change the outcome, for tomorrow will bring its own worries. The burdens of today are enough, so let God take care of them. We must trust God for today without worrying about tomorrow.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT JUDGING OTHERS / 7:1-6 / 63

Jesus' words about judging may be the most-often-misquoted text from the Bible. People frequently apply it as if it were a flat command against all moral judgment. In fact, people use it to judge what they consider a judgmental attitude on the part of another. Jesus, however, gave these words as one negative application of the Golden Rule. That is, we should not treat others as we do not want to be treated. We should seek to measure ourselves and others by the same standards.

7:1-2 The command “Stop judging others” does not refer to judging in a court of law, nor is it a blanket statement against critical thinking. Believers should be discerning and make certain judgments. For example, Jesus said to expose false teachers (7:15-23) and to admonish others in order to help them (18:15). Paul taught that we should exercise church discipline (1 Corinthians 5:1-5). But followers of Christ should not be critical or condemning in their attitudes toward others. A judgmental, critical spirit differs radically from love. Believers' special position with Christ does not give them license to take God's place as judge. Those who judge in that manner will find themselves judged likewise by God. As God will have mercy on the merciful (5:7) and forgive those who forgive (6:14-15), he will condemn those who condemn: “Whatever measure you use in judging others, it will be used to measure how you are judged.” Jesus said it was unacceptable to excuse personal sin while holding others accountable for similar behavior. When you perceive a fault in others, your first impulse may be to confront or reject that person. But ask yourself first if your awareness of the failure mirrors your own life. Your effort to help will be in vain if the person can point out the same fault in you. Practice your own remedy before you ask them to do it.

7:3-5 The word speck is also translated “splinter”; log is also translated “plank” or “beam.” Many have taken this metaphor to mean that Christians should never correct anyone—one's personal sins before God are too great to even consider dealing with others' sins. However, Jesus' point was that while we all have sin in our lives (some as small as a speck; some as large as a log), we are responsible to both deal with our own sin and then help others. Jesus revealed incredible understanding of human nature. How easy it is for us to overlook our own sins yet easily spot sin in others. How true that the sin we most clearly see in others is also present in us. Believers should first deal with their own sins, but they also must correct and guide erring brothers and sisters (see Galatians 6:1; James 5:19-20).

7:6 While believers were not to judge others (7:1-5), Jesus warned against a complete lack of discernment about people's attitudes toward the gospel—what is holy. These unholy people are those who, when presented with the gospel, treat it with scorn and contempt. The futility of teaching the gospel to people who do not want to listen is as futile as giving pearls to swine. Such people will only tear apart what we say. Pigs do not realize the value of pearls; all they know is that they cannot eat them, so they spit them out and then trample them into the mud. Contemptuous, evil people cannot grasp the value of the gospel, so they scornfully cast it away. We should not stop giving God's word to unbelievers, but we should be wise and discerning so as not to bring scorn to God's message.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT ASKING, LOOKING, KNOCKING / 7:7-12 / 64

Beginning in chapter 5, the Sermon on the Mount has thus far explained to Jesus' followers the lifestyle and life attitudes that he expected from them. Some may have heard and thought the demands to be impossible. Here Jesus gave the answer to those thoughts and questions—ask, look, knock. The ability to live for God is only a prayer away.

7:7-8 Jesus' followers can keep on asking, keep on looking, and keep on knocking, indicating the importance of persistent, consistent prayer in their lives. Only through prayer can believers stay in contact with God, know what he wants them to do, and then have the strength to do God's will in all areas of life. God will answer believers who persistently ask, look, and knock. Believers, however, must not take Jesus' words as a blank check; prayer is not a magical way to obtain whatever we want. Jesus had already explained some conditions on this promise: His followers were to show mercy and forgiveness to others (5:7; 6:12), avoid praying in order to get attention (6:5-6), and be willing to persevere in prayer. Our requests must be in harmony with God's will ("your will be done," 6:10), accepting his will above our desires.

7:9-11 If sinful people would not think of giving a child a stone that looked like a loaf of bread or a dangerous snake instead of a fish, then how much more will a holy God acknowledge and answer our requests? In these words, Jesus revealed the heart of God the Father. God is not selfish, begrudging, or stingy;

his followers don't have to beg or grovel when they come with their requests. He is a loving Father who understands, cares, comforts, and willingly gives good gifts to those who ask him. If humans can be kind, imagine how kind God can be.

7:12 This is commonly known as the Golden Rule: Do for others what you would like them to do for you. Many religions teach a negative version of this statement. Confucius said, "What you do not want done to yourself, do not do to others." By stating this positively, Jesus made the statement even more significant. It may be easy to refrain from harming others, but it is much more difficult to take the initiative in doing something good for them. This is the key to the radical discipleship that Jesus wants. The Golden Rule is the foundation of active goodness and mercy—the kind of love God shows to us every day. This rule sums up all that is taught in the law and the prophets. When we follow the Golden Rule, we keep the rest of God's commands.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE WAY TO HEAVEN / 7:13-14 / 65

In the closing verses of the Sermon on the Mount, four different contrasts represent four warnings that focus on future final judgment. Jesus was speaking about the Kingdom of Heaven and describing clearly that some will enter it and some will not. The basis for a person's final destination begins with that person's decisions about Jesus himself.

7:13-14 People are presented with two ways, represented by two gates—one gate is narrow, the other is wide. Jesus commanded his followers to enter God's Kingdom only through the narrow gate. This gateway is small, and the road is narrow, but it alone leads to life—eternal life. Through the wide gate, however, the highway to hell is broad and it is the easy way. There is plenty of room for many people to wander in and continue in whatever direction they wish. This road leads to hell.

The gateway leading to life is small not because it is difficult to become a Christian but because there is only one way and only a few decide to walk that road. Believing in Jesus is the only way to eternal life because he alone died for our sins and made us right before God.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT FRUIT IN PEOPLE'S LIVES / 7:15-20 / 66

Jesus warned against false teachers. Many powerful speakers claim to have important ideas for Christians to hear. There are literally hundreds of cults vying to recruit new members. Add to the list those who present special angles on church doctrine coming from big and small denominations—there’s a dazzling array of choices. Jesus wanted his followers to be able to separate the good (teaching that leads to Christ), the bad (off-center but benign ideas tacked on to the gospel), and the ugly (false teaching).

7:15 The Old Testament frequently mentions false prophets (see 2 Kings 3:13; Isaiah 44:25; Jeremiah 23:16; Ezekiel 13:2-3; Micah 3:5; Zechariah 13:2). False prophets claimed to receive messages from God, but they prophesied only what the king and the people wanted to hear. False teachers are just as common today. Jesus says to beware of those whose words sound religious but who are motivated by money, fame, or power. These false prophets will come in among the believers like wolves who are disguised as harmless sheep. Jesus warned his followers that false prophets would come (see also 24:11; Mark 13:22-23). Very shortly, these words began to come true. False teachers infiltrated the early churches just as the gospel message was spreading (see Acts 20:29; 2 Corinthians 11:11-15; 2 Timothy 2:14-19; 2 Peter 2:1-3, 17-22; 1 John 2:18, 22; 4:1-6). While Jesus did not elaborate on the form of their false teaching, it follows from the context that they would teach a way of salvation that did not include a narrow gate and a hard road (7:13-14). Indeed, many of the false teachers about whom Peter, John, and Paul later warned were teaching such a message. Jesus’ followers would need the ability to discern true sheep from wolves in sheep’s clothing. How could they do this? Jesus explained how in the following verses.

7:16-18 Fruit is a metaphor for both character and conduct. Jesus’ followers would be able to detect false prophets by the way they act. In the Old Testament there were tests for a true prophet. The law found in Deuteronomy 13:1-5 required a prophet to be put to death if he promoted rebellion against God. Deuteronomy 18:14-22 taught the Jews to reject a prophet who contradicted previous revelations from God or whose message failed to come true. The evil character and conduct of these false teachers would reveal that they were no more than wolves in sheep’s clothing. No matter what a person claims to be, his or her true character will eventually reveal itself. Fruit is good or bad depending on the health of the tree. Healthy trees bear good fruit, and unhealthy trees bear bad fruit. Jesus’ followers would be able to discern false teachers because in their teaching they minimize Christ and glorify themselves. False prophets would not speak the truth; God’s true prophets would not speak falsely. Jesus warned that prophets and teachers are like trees: Examine them and their “fruit” closely.

7:19 A person's mere profession of faith will be meaningless at the final judgment. Any who claim Christ's name but do not produce good fruit will be like worthless trees to be chopped down and thrown into the fire. In fact, some will have professed faith, only to face judgment in the end (as explained in the following verses, 7:21-23).

7:20 Repeating from 7:16 the method of discerning false prophets, Jesus explained that the way to identify a tree or a person is by the kind of fruit that is produced. Good teachers consistently exhibit good behavior and high moral character as they attempt to live out the truths of Scripture. This does not mean we should throw out Sunday school teachers, pastors, and others who are less than perfect. Every one of us is subject to sin, and we must show the same mercy to others that we need for ourselves. When Jesus spoke about bad trees, he meant teachers who deliberately teach false doctrine. We must examine the teachers' motives, the direction they are taking, and the results they are seeking. Those who should not be teaching will be recognizable by their fruit.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT BUILDING ON A SOLID FOUNDATION / 7:21-29 / 67

Jesus is more concerned about our "walk" than our "talk." He wants his followers to do right, not just say the right words. Your house (which represents your life) will withstand the storms of life only if you do what is right instead of just talking about it.

7:21 Jesus called himself Lord and referred to God as my Father in heaven, thereby thinly veiling his claim to be the Messiah. Jesus revealed his part in the coming final judgment in these words. Because people's "fruit" reveals who they really are (7:20), then it follows that simply calling Jesus "Lord" is not enough: Not all people who sound religious are really godly. It is much easier to profess Christianity than to possess it. Those who will enter the Kingdom of Heaven are only those who obey.

7:22-23 On judgment day only a person's relationship with Christ—acceptance of him as Savior and obedience to him—will matter. That day will be the final day of reckoning when God will settle all accounts, judging sin and rewarding faith. Notice that Jesus placed himself as judge—many will tell me.

Jesus exposed those people who sounded religious and did religious deeds but had no personal relationship with him. False prophets will be able to prophesy (referring not just to telling the future, but to teaching), cast out demons, and perform miracles. Claims to great power, invoking the name of Christ, and powerful deeds will be no guarantee for heaven. Jesus will send away those who do not know him personally. They may have done impressive deeds, but Jesus will say, “I never knew you. Go away.” In other words, “I never had a personal relationship with you, and I never went with you to do these deeds you claim. You can have no part in my Kingdom.”

7:24-25 Jesus’ true followers not only hear his words, but act on them, allowing his message to make a difference in their lives. In this teaching, Jesus explained that a true follower, by acting on his words, is like a person who builds a house on solid rock. The one who builds “on rock” is a hearing, responding disciple, not a phony, superficial one. Practicing obedience builds on the solid foundation of Jesus’ words to weather the storms of life: through rain, floodwaters, and winds their foundations on solid rock will be unaffected.

7:26-27 In contrast to the wise person (7:24), the foolish person hears Jesus’ teaching and ignores it. While both people build houses, and while those houses may even look identical, only one house will stand the test. Only the person who hears and does God’s word will receive God’s reward. The house built on sand will collapse. When the storms came, the person turned away, life crumbled, and the end was a mighty crash—final judgment, destruction (7:13-14), and separation from God (7:22-23). As character is revealed by fruit (7:20), so faith is revealed by storms. The wise person, seeking to act upon God’s word, builds to withstand anything. It will be the foundation, not the house, that will determine what happens on the day of judgment.

7:28-29 The words after Jesus finished speaking signal the end of Jesus’ teaching on discipleship and a return to the narrative in Matthew. Jesus had completely amazed the crowds by his teaching. He was unlike the teachers of religious law, for they often quoted from well-known rabbis in order to give their words more authority. But Jesus didn’t have that need. Because Jesus was the Son of God, he knew exactly what the Scriptures said and meant. He was the ultimate authority. He didn’t need to quote anyone because he was the original Word (John 1:1). The people had never heard such teaching.

JESUS HEALS A MAN WITH LEPROSY / 8:1-4 / 38

Matthew arranged the following accounts topically, not chronologically. Mark and Luke recorded some of the following events, but placed them in different locations, probably in the chronological sequence of events. The following section features a series of miracles that demonstrated the power of the Kingdom in action. This first miracle involved a man who had been estranged from the Jews because of a dreaded disease.

8:1 Whenever we see Jesus, we usually see large crowds following him. The people were astonished at Jesus' authority in his teaching (7:28-29), so they followed him to see and hear more.

8:2 Leprosy, like AIDS today, was a terrifying disease because there was no known cure. In Jesus' day, the Greek word for "leprosy" was used for a variety of similar skin diseases, and some forms were contagious. If a person contracted the contagious type, a priest declared him a leper and banished him from his home and city. This also excluded him from participating in any social or religious activities (according to the law in Leviticus 13–14). The leper went to live in a community with other lepers until he either got better or died. This was the only way the people knew to contain the spread of the contagious forms of leprosy.

This man took a great risk when he approached Jesus. His kneeling reveals his desperation, humility, and recognition of Jesus' authority. His words to Jesus reveal his faith. If his disease were to disappear, a priest could declare him well, but only Jesus could make him well. The words "if you want to" reveal the man's faith in Jesus' authority in this matter of healing; Jesus' ability was never in question. This man wanted to be clean—a huge request. The man wanted to become a person again, to be reunited with his family and community. He knew Jesus could do it.

8:3 Matthew revealed Jesus' heart of compassion. All people shunned lepers, but Jesus touched this man covered with a dreaded, contagious disease. That Jesus' touch precedes his pronouncement of healing indicates his sovereignty over the Jewish law not to touch a leper (Leviticus 5:3; 13:1-46; Numbers 5:2). In touching the leper, Jesus became "unclean." He did not worry about becoming ritually unclean when there was a genuine need.

When Jesus answered the man, “I want to,” he showed his willingness and ability to meet this social outcast’s most basic need. With the words “Be healed” the leprosy immediately disappeared. The words and the touch were simple but effective, thereby revealing Jesus’ divine authority over sickness.

8:4 The law required a priest to examine a healed leper (Leviticus 14). Then the healed leper was to give an offering at the Temple. Jesus adhered to these laws by sending the man to the priest, thereby demonstrating high regard for the law of Moses. Jesus also told him, “Don’t talk to anyone along the way.” The warning was an earnest and forceful admonition. Jesus’ mission was to preach the Good News of the Kingdom of God, and he did not want the crowds descending on him to see miracles or to benefit from his power. Such people would not be receptive to hear and to respond to the gospel.

Some think that the word anyone refers to the priests. Jesus would show the religious authorities that he was not anti-law, but the only one who could truly fulfill the law. If the priest declared that the healing had taken place but refused to accept the person and power of Christ who had done it, that priest would be condemned by the evidence. However, Jesus may have intended the testimony to be a positive one to the people who witnessed the healing. Mark records that the man disobeyed Jesus’ warning (see Mark 1:45).

This event is also recorded in Luke 7:1-10. This miracle occurred to a person who, because of his race and occupation, was not close to the Jewish faith. In this story and the previous one (the healed leper), Jesus willingly dealt with people the Jews shunned.

8:5-6 Capernaum, located on the northwestern shore of the Sea of Galilee, was the largest of the many fishing towns surrounding the lake. Jesus had recently moved to Capernaum from Nazareth (4:12-13). Capernaum was a thriving town with great wealth as well as great sin and decadence. Near a major trade route, it housed a contingent of Roman soldiers. The city was filled with heathen influences from all over the Roman Empire. This was a needy place for Jesus to challenge both Jews and non-Jews with the gospel of God’s Kingdom.

This Roman officer (also called a centurion) had control over one hundred soldiers. The Jews hated Roman soldiers for their oppression, control, and ridicule; the Jews considered them “unclean” because they were despised Gentiles. This Roman officer was apparently different from many other soldiers who despised the Jews. He may have been a “God-fearer” who worshiped the God of Israel but was not circumcised (see Acts 2:5; 10:2). He had apparently heard about Jesus' healing powers. He may have known about the healing of the Roman official's son (which probably occurred earlier, see John 4:46-54). While this soldier's concern about a servant may seem unusual, the Jewish historian Josephus wrote that Roman soldiers had many servants who actually trained and fought with them. So this servant may have been his personal attendant with whom he felt a close bond. This officer made an appeal on behalf of his servant who had become paralyzed and racked with pain, and was near death (Luke 7:2). The centurion, a military authority, addressed Jesus as Lord, showing respect for Jesus' authority in this area of healing (see also 8:2).

8:7 Jesus said, "I will come and heal him." Jews generally did not enter Gentile homes because it made them ceremonially "unclean." However, as Jesus had willingly touched a leper (which was against the law) to heal him, so Jesus would willingly enter a Gentile home if needed. For Jesus, doing good always transcended both Levitical regulations and Sabbath tradition.

8:8-9 The officer protested that he was not worthy to have Jesus come to his home. Luke 7:7 seems to show that he was thinking more of his own moral unworthiness. He saw that Jesus' authority was greater than his own and that Jesus need not personally visit his home. The officer understood that Jesus only needed to say the word to heal the servant. He understood the power of Jesus' words.

The officer carried a certain amount of authority and so was accustomed to being obeyed. He may have applied his understanding of military orders to Jesus—realizing that Jesus' power and authority came from God. When Jesus spoke, God spoke. Whatever he understood, the officer had absolutely no doubt that Jesus could merely speak the word and heal the servant.

8:10 This man's genuine faith amazed Jesus. He said to those gathered around him (the disciples, as well as other onlookers and followers) that he had not found faith such as that in all the land of Israel. In other words, this Gentile's faith put to shame the stagnant piety that had blinded many of the Jewish religious leaders. Without the benefit of growing up to memorize the Old Testament Scriptures and to learn from esteemed Jewish leaders, this Gentile had understood the need to depend totally on Jesus' power. He knew, without a doubt, that Jesus could do what seemed impossible. Such faith both astonished and pleased Jesus.

8:11-12 Most Jews looked forward to the day when the Jews that had been scattered all over the world would return to Jerusalem to enjoy the company of the Messiah and the patriarchs in a great banquet (Psalm 107:3; Isaiah 25:6; 43:5-6). It was predicted that some Gentiles would also return to witness this great event and to partake of it vicariously (Isaiah 2:2-3). But Jesus speaks of the Gentiles coming from all over the world to sit down at this feast with the patriarchs. A Jew who would sit at a table with a Gentile would become defiled; yet Jesus pictured Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob sitting down with Gentiles at this banquet of celebration in the Kingdom of Heaven. In addition, Jesus explained that while many Jews believed that their lineage in the Jewish race assured their reservations at the banquet, this simply was not the case (see also John the Baptist's words in 3:7-10). In fact, some Jews, instead of having assured seats at the banquet, would find themselves cast into outer darkness. The "darkness" is a place where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth—a common biblical description of hell.

The Gospel of Matthew emphasizes this universal theme—Jesus' message is for everyone. The Old Testament prophets knew this (see Isaiah 56:3, 6-8; 66:12, 19; Malachi 1:11), but many New Testament Jewish leaders chose to ignore it. Each individual has to choose to accept or reject the gospel, and no one can become part of God's Kingdom on the basis of heritage or connections. Having a Christian family is a wonderful blessing, but it won't guarantee our eternal life. Each person must decide to believe in and follow Christ.

8:13 Jesus then told the officer to return home; Jesus would grant his request. When Jesus spoke the word, the young servant was healed that same hour, meaning immediately.

JESUS HEALS PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW AND MANY OTHERS / 8:14-17 / 35

Jesus' compassion reached out to a third category of people viewed as "second-class citizens"—women.

8:14-15 Peter's mother-in-law was in bed with a high fever. A malaria-type fever was common to this region because of marshes near the mouth of the Jordan River. We don't know for sure what this fever signified, but the Greek word for "fever" in the noun form is also the word for "fire"; thus, she was burning with a severe fever. Jesus went to the mother-in-law's bedside and touched her hand. For a rabbi to touch a woman who was not his spouse was against Pharisaic regulations; for him to touch a person with a fever was prohibited by Jewish law. Jesus did both in order to heal a sick person, as well as to show his authority. Jesus' touch on the woman's hand brought complete healing. In fact, she got up and prepared a meal for him. Matthew recorded this detail to show that her healing was instant and complete. She didn't need time to recuperate from her illness; she was immediately well enough to serve her guests.

8:16 The people came to Jesus on Saturday evening after sunset. According to Mark 1:21 and Luke 4:31, the day had been the Sabbath, the Jews' day of worship and rest, lasting from sunset Friday to sunset Saturday. Jewish law prohibited traveling and carrying burdens on the Sabbath, so they waited until evening, after the sun went down. When the Sabbath ended, the people searched for Jesus. A steady stream of sick and demon-possessed people were being carried to Jesus and he healed them all.

8:17 Matthew pointed to Jesus' fulfillment of prophecy, quoting from Isaiah 53:4. Jesus has authority over all evil powers and all earthly disease. He also has power and authority to conquer sin. Sickness is not always the punishment for sin. Rather, sickness can best be seen as a real and constant possibility of life in a fallen world. Physical healing in a fallen world is always temporary. In the future, when God removes all sin, there will be no more sickness and death. Jesus' healing miracles were a taste of what all believers will one day experience in God's Kingdom.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE COST OF FOLLOWING HIM / 8:18-22 / 122

This crossing of the lake didn't actually occur after the events just recounted; the storm occurred after the second period in Capernaum according to Mark 4:35-41. The testing of the followers is recorded in Luke 9:57-62 as being after Peter's confession. Matthew grouped the events thematically to show Jesus' impact on people.

Following Jesus is not always easy or comfortable. Often it involves great cost and sacrifice, with no earthly rewards or security. Jesus did not have a place to call home. You may find that following Christ costs you popularity, friendships, leisure time, or treasured habits. While the cost of following Christ is high, the value of being Christ's disciple is even higher.

8:18 Jesus healed many people in Capernaum, and his ministry attracted a lot of attention. Crowds continued to gather around him, but Jesus had ministry to do in other places as well. So he instructed his disciples to cross to the other side of the lake, to the eastern shore.

8:19-20 This teacher of religious law addressed Jesus as teacher (or “rabbi”) and explained that he wanted to follow Jesus wherever he went. A rabbi’s disciples “followed” him by observing the rabbi in his daily tasks, as well as sitting under and living by his teachings.

Jesus’ words to the scribe about having no home were more like a challenge than a rebuke or invitation. Jesus focused on the requirements of true discipleship. He wanted true followers who understood the cost of following him. To be Jesus’ disciple, a person must willingly put aside worldly security. In the context of Jesus’ present ministry, to follow him meant to be constantly on the move, bringing his message to people in many places.

Here, for the first time, Matthew recorded Jesus calling himself Son of Man. This was an Old Testament name for the Messiah and was Jesus’ favorite designation for himself. The expression occurs eighty-one times in the Gospels, always said by Jesus (twice others said it, but they were quoting Jesus). Calling himself the Son of Man, Jesus was pointing to himself as the Messiah (see Daniel 7:13).

8:21-22 The teacher wanted to follow Jesus, but Jesus reminded him of the cost of discipleship (8:19-20) and tested his level of commitment. This man apparently wanted to follow Jesus, but he wanted to first return home to bury his father. In ancient cultures, this was a sacred responsibility. It is possible that this disciple was not asking permission to go to his father’s funeral, but rather to put off following Jesus until after his father had died. Perhaps he was the firstborn son and wanted to be sure to claim his inheritance. Perhaps he did not want to face his father’s wrath if he left the family business to follow an itinerant preacher. Whether his concern was fulfilling a duty, financial security, family approval, or something else, he did not want to commit himself to Jesus just yet. Jesus sensed this reluctance and challenged him to consider that his commitment had to be without reservation. Jesus was not advising that children disregard family responsibilities. Rather, Jesus was responding to this disciple’s qualifying use of first. Jesus must always come “first,” then all other human loyalties.

Jesus’ response is part of the radical discipleship theme: Let those who are spiritually dead care for their own dead. In other words, let those who have not responded to the call to commitment stay home and handle responsibilities such as burying the dead. While to us this may sound heartless, it was not without precedent. A high priest and those who had taken the Nazirite vow were required by the law to avoid the corpse of even a parent (Leviticus 21:11; Numbers 6:6). A later Jewish precedent says that a student of the Torah should not stop his study to bury the dead. Jesus placed commitment to God even above these precedents. His direct challenge forces us to ask ourselves about our priorities in following him. We must not put off the decision to follow Jesus, even though other loyalties compete for our attention.

This miracle shows Jesus' power over the natural world.

8:23-25 Jesus and the disciples got into the boat to cross to the other side of the Sea of Galilee, as had been planned (8:18). This boat probably was a fishing boat because many of Jesus' disciples were fishermen. Josephus, an ancient historian, wrote that there were usually more than three hundred fishing boats on the Sea of Galilee at one time. This boat was large enough to hold Jesus and his twelve disciples. Mark explained that it was evening when they finally set sail (Mark 4:35), which was not unusual because Peter was used to fishing at night (see John 21:3) when fishing was best.

The Sea of Galilee is an unusual body of water. It is relatively small (13 miles long, 7 miles wide), but it is 150 feet deep, and the shoreline is 680 feet below sea level. Storms can appear suddenly over the surrounding mountains, stirring the water into violent twenty-foot waves. Even though several of these men were expert fishermen and knew how to handle a boat, they had been caught without warning in this terrible storm.

While the waves swept over the boat, Jesus was sleeping. That Jesus could sleep during this storm indicates his complete exhaustion; it also depicts the realness of his human nature. The disciples woke him up, shouting, "Lord, save us! We're going to drown!"

8:26 Abruptly awakened from a deep sleep, Jesus arose and rebuked his frightened disciples. The disciples had seen Jesus do wonderful miracles, but they had not taken their knowledge of his power and applied it to every situation. So he asked them, "Why are you afraid? You have so little faith!" They wanted him to do something; he wanted them to trust him! Standing in the stern of the rocking ship, Jesus stood up and rebuked the wind and waves, and suddenly all was calm. The power of the Teacher to speak and control the waves shocked the disciples. The storm was out of control, their fears were out of control, but Jesus was never out of control.

8:27 The disciples still did not completely understand, as their question betrayed: “Who is this?” they asked. They should have known because this miracle clearly displayed Jesus’ divine identity.

JESUS SENDS DEMONS INTO A HERD OF PIGS / 8:28-34 / 88

Matthew recorded the following miracle to show Jesus’ power over the supernatural realm. This also shows the ultimate goal of Satan and his demons—utter destruction.

8:28 The land of the Gadarenes is located southeast of the Sea of Galilee, near the town of Gadara, one of the most important cities of the region. Gadara was a member of the Decapolis, or Ten Cities, which had independent governments and were largely inhabited by Gentiles. This was Gentile territory, revealing a new direction for Jesus’ ministry.

As they landed, two men who were possessed by demons met them. They were bloody, out of control, and apparently strong and frightening (Mark 5:4-5). Demon-possessed people are controlled by one or more demons. Demons are fallen angels who joined Satan in his rebellion against God and are now evil spirits under Satan’s control. They help Satan tempt people to sin and have great destructive powers. These men were clearly hopeless without Christ. Although we cannot be sure why demon possession occurs, we know that evil spirits can use the human body to distort and destroy a person’s relationship with God. Demons had entered these men’s bodies and were controlling them.

8:29 Though aware of who Jesus was and of his power over them, the demons still attempted to defend themselves by screaming and by calling Jesus by his divine name. The loud voice shows the demons’ fierce and violent nature. The demons wanted Jesus to leave them alone, saying that Jesus had no right to torture them. The word for “torture” is graphic and correct. The Bible says that at the end of the world, the Devil and his demons will be thrown into the lake of fire (Revelation 20:10). The demons’ question revealed that they knew their ultimate fate. The demons hoped that Jesus would not send them to their fate before God’s appointed time.

8:30-31 The demons wanted a “home” and wanted to possess a living being. On the hillside were enough physical animal hosts for all these demons to inhabit. Pigs were unclean animals, so they provided a fitting habitation for the demons. So the demons asked to be sent into the herd. Why didn’t Jesus just destroy these demons—or send them away? Because the time for such work had not yet come. Jesus healed many people of the destructive effects of demon possession, but he did not yet destroy demons. In this situation, Jesus wanted to show Satan's destructive power and intent. Many ask the same question today—why doesn't Jesus stop all the evil in the world? His time for that has not yet come. But it will come. The book of Revelation portrays the future victory of Jesus over Satan, his demons, and all evil.

8:32 In every case when confronted by Jesus, demons lost their power. Jesus' simple command, "Go!" showed the extent of his authority over the demons. He did not need to perform a lengthy exorcism. God limits what evil spirits can do; these demons could do nothing without Jesus' permission.

When the demons entered the pigs, the whole herd plunged down the steep hillside into the lake and drowned in the water. Jesus granted the demons' request to enter the pigs and destroy the herd, but he stopped their destructive work in people, particularly the men they had possessed. Jesus also taught a lesson by giving the demons permission to enter the pigs. He showed his disciples, the townspeople, and even us who read these words today the absolute goal of Satan and his demons. They want total and complete destruction of their hosts.

8:33-34 When Jesus performed this miracle, he again gained immediate publicity. The herdsmen, astonished and upset at what had happened, fled and told the amazing story. The entire town came out to meet Jesus. Among these would have been the owner of the herd who, doubtless, was not pleased at the loss of the livestock.

The people could have responded in several ways. They could have been overjoyed to see Jesus on their own shore. They also could have responded with joy that Jesus had healed the demon-possessed men. They could have been thrilled to have seen a healing of such magnitude with their own eyes. Instead, they begged him to go away and leave them alone. Unfortunately for them, Jesus did as they asked. And there is no biblical record that he ever returned. Sometimes the worst that can happen to us is for Jesus to answer one of our poorly considered requests.

JESUS HEALS A PARALYZED MAN / 9:1-8 / 39

The events in 8:28-34 had occurred on the other side of the Sea of Galilee (Jesus and the disciples had gotten there by boat, 8:18, 23). The events Matthew placed at the end of chapter 8 and the beginning of chapter 9 are not in chronological sequence (see the Harmony of the Gospels).

9:1 Jesus climbed into a boat and went back across the lake to Capernaum. This city became Jesus' base of operations while he was in Galilee (see 8:5-6).

9:2 Some people, remembering that Jesus had healed many people in Capernaum on an earlier visit (8:14-17), brought a friend who needed Jesus' help. The friend was paralyzed and lying on a mat, a stretcher that the men could carry. Jesus saw their faith acted out in their determination. They knew that if they could just get near Jesus, Jesus could heal. Jesus said to the paralyzed man, "Take heart, son! Your sins are forgiven." Several verses in the Old Testament indicate that sickness and death result from humanity's sinful condition (see, for example, Psalms 41:3-4; 103:2-3; and James 5:13-18 for the New Testament parallel). So God works forgiveness and healing together. That does not mean that we can measure a person's spiritual health by looking at his or her physical health. But all sickness and death are the result of evil and sin. This man was paralyzed because of sin (in the world and in every human heart)—that was the root cause. Jesus spoke first to that condition. The man needed spiritual healing, so Jesus forgave his sins. Then Jesus healed the man.

9:3 These teachers of religious law were the legal specialists in Jesus' day. Jesus' teaching and popularity had prompted a special investigation by the powerful leaders of the Jewish faith. Jealous of Jesus' popularity and power, these men hoped to find something to criticize or even condemn in Jesus' teaching. When they heard Jesus tell the paralyzed man that his sins were forgiven, they were shocked. Because only God can forgive sins, Jesus was claiming to be God. In Jewish law, this was blasphemy, which was punishable by death (Leviticus 24:16). In labeling Jesus' claim to forgive sins as blasphemous, the religious leaders showed that they did not understand that Jesus was God. Jesus had God's power and authority to heal bodies and forgive sins. Forgiveness of sins was a sign that the messianic age had come (Isaiah 40:2; Joel 2:32; Micah 7:18-19; Zechariah 13:1). Unfortunately, it did not occur to these Jewish leaders that perhaps this man was their Messiah.

9:4 When Jesus became human, he restrained the full use of his powers, yet he could still see each person's thoughts, intents, and motives. Jesus knew what these teachers were thinking. They could not hide their hostility at Jesus' words. Their thoughts of Jesus as a blasphemer were evil.

9:5 It would take someone of great power and authority to forgive sins. Yet making a statement concerning forgiveness of sins could be said without having to be verified. Healing the paralyzed man would be open to immediate public verification. Jesus was offering to do an easier task (healing the man) as public evidence that the more difficult, "secret" task (forgiving his sins) was also accomplished. Jesus wanted to show that he had the power to forgive sins by showing that he had the power to make a paralytic get up and walk.

9:6-7 Jesus' authority extended from spiritual healing to physical healing. The physical healings revealed this to the world. One who could heal a paralytic could also forgive sins. Jesus spoke to the doubtful Jewish teachers, "I will prove that I, the Son of Man, have the authority on earth to forgive sins." Jesus spoke with commanding authority, showing that he expected immediate obedience. He told the paralyzed man to stand up, take his mat, and go on home. The man did as Jesus said. The healing unmistakably revealed Jesus' power and authority. The teachers who questioned Jesus' ability to forgive sins (9:3) saw the formerly paralyzed man get up and walk. Jesus' question in 9:5 forced their answer: Jesus had the power to make the paralyzed man walk; thus, he also had the authority to forgive his sins.

9:8 Jesus did this miracle in front of the crowd that had gathered in this home to hear Jesus speak (Mark 2:2). Their fear was appropriate in the presence of one who displayed such great authority (that is, authority to forgive sins). What was the result of this fear? The people praised God. While the religious leaders had previously called Jesus a blasphemer, the people recognized God's power and realized that Jesus had authority from God.

JESUS EATS WITH SINNERS AT MATTHEW'S HOUSE / 9:9-13 / 40

Matthew's radical obedience would cause a great change in his life. He was probably very wealthy—tax collecting was a lucrative occupation—so when Matthew walked away from his booth, he snubbed Rome and a lifetime of potentially great wealth. Several of the other disciples could always return to fishing, but Matthew could never turn back.

9:9 Matthew (the author of this Gospel) was a Jew who worked for the Romans (specifically for Herod Antipas) as the area's tax collector. (In Mark and Luke, he is called "Levi." Most people in this day had two or three names: a Jewish name, a Roman name, and possibly a Greek name. Levi was his Jewish name, Matthew his Roman name.) He collected custom duties from the citizens, as well as from merchants passing through town. (Capernaum was a customs post on the caravan route between Damascus to the northeast and the Mediterranean Sea to the west.) Tax collectors took a commission on the taxes they collected, so most of them overcharged and kept the profits. Thus, most Jews hated tax collectors because of their reputation for cheating, their support of Rome, and their constant contact with "unclean" Gentiles. A Jew who accepted such an office shamed his family and friends and was excommunicated from the synagogue.

The tax-collection booth was an elevated platform or bench. Everyone knew who Matthew was, and anyone passing through the city who had to pay taxes could find him easily. One day Jesus walked right up to Matthew's booth and said, "Come, be my disciple." That Jesus called such a notorious person into his circle of disciples certainly must have shocked the other disciples, as well as the trailing crowd. Matthew recognized that Jesus was not inviting him; Jesus was calling him. So Matthew got up and followed him.

9:10 Matthew called his friends together to meet Jesus too, inviting him to a dinner along with his fellow tax collectors and other notorious sinners. At Matthew's house there gathered a crowd that Jesus could not reach in the synagogues. The tax collectors had been excommunicated. The term "sinners" referred not only to immoral and pagan people, but also to the common people who were not learned in the law and did not abide by the rigid standards of the Pharisees.

9:11 According to the Pharisees, contact with these scum made a Jew unclean; to sit and eat with such people was particularly heinous. The Pharisees would have nothing to do with such people. But not so with Jesus, who stooped to the level of the poor, unlearned, common people—even sinners! Thus, the Pharisees pulled his disciples aside and asked why Jesus did this. They fashioned their question as an accusation.

9:12-13 The Pharisees' question apparently made its way to Jesus' ears. The first part of Jesus' answer was from a common proverb. Healthy people don't need a doctor; the doctor's waiting room is filled with sick people. Jesus then told these self-righteous Pharisees to go and learn, implying that they did not understand their own Scriptures. The Pharisees thought they knew Scripture perfectly; Jesus told them to go back and study again the words of God spoken through the prophet Hosea, "I want you to be merciful; I don't want your sacrifices" (Hosea 6:6). God did not want the Israelites' rituals; he wanted their hearts. Jesus challenged the Pharisees to apply Hosea's words to themselves. God wants a heart attitude that includes a right relationship with him and with others, an attitude that reaches out to those in physical and spiritual need.

Jesus did not come to call those who think they are already good enough (like these Pharisees), for the self-righteous do not recognize their sinfulness. But these sinners saw their need. Jesus, the Great Physician, healed people of physical illnesses, but he knew that all people are spiritually sick and in need of salvation.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS ASK JESUS ABOUT FASTING / 9:14-17 / 41

The Pharisees questioned Jesus about those with whom he had fellowship at meals. They also questioned why Jesus and his disciples feasted instead of fasting on the customary days. Jesus showed the need for joy because the Messiah had come.

9:14 The disciples of John the Baptist were a group that lasted into the second century (see Acts 19:1-9). These men and the Pharisees were fasting—going without food in order to spend time in prayer. The Old Testament Law set aside only one day a year as a required day of fasting for all Jews (Leviticus 16:29). The Pharisees, however, fasted on Mondays and Thursdays (see Luke 18:12) as an act of piety, and most likely they promoted this among the people.

The tense of the verb fast indicates that the feast at Matthew's house happened at the very time that these people were fasting, apparently on one of the weekly fasting days. John's disciples fasted as a sign of mourning for sin and to prepare themselves for the Messiah's coming. John the Baptist was in prison, and these disciples found themselves siding with the Pharisees on this issue. But they were fasting when they should have been feasting with Jesus.

9:15 While Jesus walked the earth, his presence was a cause for celebration—the Messiah had come! Jesus' presence was as joyous as the presence of the groom at a wedding feast. The picture of Jesus as a "groom" comes from the Old Testament description of the wedding feast that God will prepare for himself and his people (Isaiah 54:5-6; Hosea 2:16-20). Wedding guests do not mourn or fast; a wedding is a time of celebration and feasting. Likewise, Jesus' coming was a sign of celebration. Jesus did not condemn fasting—he himself fasted (Luke 4:2). He emphasized that fasting must be done at the right time for the right reasons.

Jesus knew, however, that soon he would be taken from them. The Greek word translated “taken from” is in Isaiah 53:8, a verse prophesying the Messiah's violent death. The disciples would grieve for their crucified Master, and the world (the mass of people opposed to Jesus) would rejoice. But the disciples' grief would not last long; their sorrow would turn to joy when they saw their risen Lord.

9:16 Jesus' arrival on earth ushered in a new covenant between God and people. The new covenant called for a new way of expressing personal faith. The newness of the gospel could not be combined with the legalism of the Pharisees any more than a piece of unshrunk cloth should be used as a patch on an old garment. When the garment is washed, the patch will shrink, pull away from the old garment, and leave a bigger hole than before. The parables of the cloth and the wineskins (9:17) apply to more than just fasting or to the Pharisees. They speak of Jesus' entire mission and the new era he inaugurated by his entrance into human history.

9:17 In Bible times, people stored wine in goatskins sewn around the edges to form watertight bags (called wineskins). New wine expanded as it fermented, stretching its wineskin. After this wine had aged, old and brittle wineskins would burst if fresh wine was poured into them. New wine, therefore, would always be put into new wineskins. The new wine was the newness of the gospel as exemplified in the person of Jesus Christ (John 2:1-11). Like old wineskins, the Pharisees and indeed the entire religious system of Judaism had become too rigid to accept Jesus. They could not contain him or his message in their traditions or rules. Their understanding of faithfulness to the law had become unsuitable for the fresh, dynamic power of Christ's message. They were the self-appointed guardians of the “old garment” and the “old wineskins.”

Jesus did not come to abolish or annul the Law and the Prophets but to fulfill them (5:17). But this fulfillment required new approaches and new structures. Jesus' words, “That way both the wine and the wineskins are preserved,” reveal that the new wine needed to be preserved in new forms. The new way of obedience to the law would be found in the authoritative teaching of Jesus. His purpose was to bring in something new, though God's prophets had told about it centuries before. This new message said that God's Son would come to earth to offer all people forgiveness of sins and reconciliation.

JESUS HEALS A BLEEDING WOMAN AND RESTORES A GIRL TO LIFE / 9:18-26 / 89

In this new Kingdom, joy predominates (9:15) and love in action takes the place of rigid law-keeping. Matthew followed the previous account of Jesus' response to the questioning Pharisees and disciples of John the Baptist with the account of Jesus reaching out to two more unclean people—a woman with a bleeding disorder and a dead child—healing one and raising the other to life.

9:18-19 Jesus was interrupted at his meal by a man who came with a need. Mark and Luke say this man's name was Jairus (Mark 5:22; Luke 8:41). He was the leader of a synagogue, the local center of worship. The synagogue leaders were responsible for supervising worship services, caring for the scrolls, running the daily school, keeping the congregation faithful to the law, distributing alms, administering the care of the building, and finding rabbis to teach on the Sabbath. The leader of the local synagogue exerted great influence in his community, yet Jairus knelt before Jesus, indicating homage and courtesy as he came with his urgent request. Matthew abbreviated this story by quoting the father as saying, "My daughter has just died."

9:20-21 In the crowd pressing on Jesus was another desperate person in need of divine help. A woman had had a hemorrhage for twelve years. This bleeding was painful and may have been a menstrual or uterine disorder. She had been to many doctors, had spent all her money, but had received no cure (Mark 5:26). The bleeding caused the woman to be in a constant condition of ceremonial uncleanness (see Leviticus 15:25-33). She could not worship in the synagogue and she could not have normal social relationships, for under Jewish law, anyone who touched her also became unclean. Thus, the woman had been treated almost as severely as a leper.

She worked her way through the crowd and came up behind Jesus. She believed that she only had to touch his robe (the fringe) and she would be healed. She may have feared that Jesus would not touch her if he knew her condition, that Jesus would not risk becoming unclean in order to heal her. Or she may have feared that if her condition became known to the crowd, the people who had touched her would be angry at having become unclean unknowingly. The woman knew she could receive healing, but she tried to do it as unobtrusively as possible.

9:22 Jesus healed the woman—her faith appropriated the healing, and Jesus perceived what had happened. He turned and spoke words of comfort to the woman, “Your faith has made you well.” Jesus explained that it was not his clothing that had healed her; rather, her faith in reaching out to the one person who could heal her had allowed that healing to take place. Not only did she have faith, but she had also placed her faith in the right person. At that moment, she was delivered from her bleeding and her pain.

9:23-24 At Jairus’s home, the noisy crowds and funeral music were part of the customary ritual of mourning. Jesus, however, spoke words of encouragement: “The girl isn’t dead; she’s only asleep.” The girl was indeed dead, and everyone from the family to the mourners knew it. Jesus knew it too, but his words tested the faith of the crowd and revealed to Jairus the hope beyond all hope of what Jesus was about to do.

9:25-26 Jesus took the child’s father and mother and the three disciples who had come and went in where the child was. Jesus did no incantations and spoke no magic words, as other healers of the day normally did. He simply went to the girl’s bedside and took her by the hand. The fact that Jesus touched the girl’s hand would have amazed the synagogue leader and the disciples. Touching a dead body meant to become unclean. Touching the dead girl confirmed once again that to Jesus, compassion was more important than the letter of the law. Jesus took the girl’s hand in his, he issued a command (Mark 5:41), and the dead child stood up. Jesus had authority and power over humanity’s greatest enemy—death. Mark explained that Jesus had commanded the parents not to advertise the miracle (Mark 5:43). However, despite Jesus’ command to the contrary, report of this miracle swept through the entire countryside.

JESUS HEALS THE BLIND AND MUTE / 9:27-34 / 90

Matthew showed how Jesus was maligned by those who should have received him most gladly. While the Pharisees questioned, debated, and dissected Jesus, people were being healed and lives changed right in front of them. Their skepticism was based on jealousy of Jesus’ popularity. The opposition to Jesus was intensifying; Jesus was far too powerful and popular for the Pharisees’ comfort.

9:27 Two blind men cried out for mercy, which meant they wanted Jesus to help them. Isaiah had prophesied that a day would come when God would open the eyes of the blind (Isaiah 29:18; 35:5-6; 42:7). These men called Jesus Son of David, a popular way of addressing Jesus as the Messiah. It was known that the Messiah would be a descendant of David (Isaiah 9:7). This is the first time this title is used in Matthew.

9:28 Jesus didn't respond immediately to the blind men's pleas, but they persisted, following Jesus right into the house where he was staying. The focus of this story is the power of faith. Jesus asked these blind men first if they had faith (Do you believe?). These men answered Jesus' question about their belief, saying, "Yes, Lord." The use of the word "Lord" reveals their faith in Jesus' power and authority to heal them.

9:29-31 Because these men believed, Jesus touched their eyes and suddenly they could see. The words because of your faith do not mean "in proportion to," but "in response to." This healing was a powerful example that Jesus was the Messiah. Healing of the blind had never occurred in the Old Testament or in Judaism before Jesus.

Jesus told the men not to tell anyone because he was concerned for his ministry. Jesus did not want to be known as just a miracle worker; he wanted people to listen to his words that would heal their broken spiritual lives. Jesus' mission was to preach the Good News of the Kingdom of God. If crowds descended on him to see amazing healings and dead people raised, they would not be coming with the heart attitude needed to hear and respond to the gospel. Obviously the blind men would not be able to hide their healing for long. What, exactly, did Jesus expect? Jesus simply wanted these men to keep the details to themselves and think about them. He wanted them to worship quietly and treasure in their hearts what Jesus had done. He wanted them to focus on the spiritual aspect. Above all, he did not want more advertisement of his healing power. But the men could not contain themselves; they told everyone in that area what Jesus had done.

9:32 Jesus could hardly come or go without someone in need coming to him! This time, as Jesus and his disciples were leaving, a man who couldn't speak because he was possessed by a demon was brought to Jesus. Such disabilities are not always the work of demons, because Jesus healed many people of illness and disability without casting out demons. Matthew wanted his readers to understand, however, that in this situation a demon was at work. While Jesus was on earth, demonic forces seemed especially active. Although we cannot always be sure why or how demon possession occurs, it causes both physical and mental problems. In this case, the demon made the man unable to talk.

9:33-34 After Jesus cast out the demon, the mute man was able to speak. Once again, the ever-present crowds marveled. They had never seen anything like this. The Pharisees, however, saw something entirely different: “He can cast out demons because he is empowered by the prince of demons.” This chapter has the Pharisees accusing Jesus of four different sins: blasphemy, befriending outcasts, impiety, and serving Satan. They tried to explain Jesus away by saying that he was only imitating God but was really in league with Satan—and that’s why the demons obeyed him.

JESUS URGES THE DISCIPLES TO PRAY FOR WORKERS / 9:35-38 / 92

From 9:35 through 10:42, Matthew recorded a second discourse of Jesus, focusing on mission. (The first discourse was the Sermon on the Mount, recorded in chapters 5–7.) Jesus continued to share the Good News of the Kingdom to all who would listen, and he exemplified the task and pattern his disciples would follow after his return to heaven.

9:35 Jesus traveled through all the cities and villages of that area. The Good News about the Kingdom was that the promised and long-awaited Messiah had finally come. His healing miracles were a sign that his teaching was true.

9:36 Wherever Jesus went, crowds gathered, and Jesus felt great pity for them. The word “pity” describes the deep mercy of God. The prophet Ezekiel compared Israel to sheep without a shepherd (Ezekiel 34:5-6; see also Numbers 27:17; 1 Kings 22:17); Jesus saw that the people didn’t know where to go for help. These words stress people’s helplessness without God. Jesus came to be the Shepherd, the one who could show people how to avoid life’s pitfalls (see John 10:14; 1 Peter 2:25).

9:37-38 Jesus looked at the crowds following him and referred to them as a field ripe for harvest, but the workers to bring in the harvest are so few. These “workers” were the disciples, then few in number. Jesus commanded his disciples to pray to the Lord who is in charge of the harvest; ask him to send out more workers for his fields. These workers must warn people of coming judgment and call them to repentance. Many people are ready to give their lives to Christ if someone would show them how. We are to pray that people will respond to this need for workers. Often, when we pray for something, God answers our prayers by using us. Be prepared for God to use you to show another person the way to him. Chapter 10 will describe this mission and what it will involve in more detail.

JESUS SENDS OUT THE TWELVE DISCIPLES / 10:1-16 / 93

This chapter continues Jesus' second discourse recorded by Matthew. This second discourse began at 9:35 and ends at 10:42. Matthew 10:1-16, closely parallel to Mark 3:13-19 and 6:7-13, describes Jesus' appointment of the Twelve for their first apostolic mission. Though this was the first time they went out on their own, they had been given authority from Jesus to carry on the work of preaching and healing.

10:1 Jesus had many disciples (learners), but he appointed twelve to whom he gave authority and special training. These men were his inner circle and received the most intense training. We see the impact of these men throughout the rest of the New Testament. They started the Christian church. The Gospels call these men the "disciples" or the "Twelve"; the book of Acts calls them "apostles."

The choice of twelve men is highly symbolic. The number twelve corresponds to the twelve tribes of Israel (19:28), showing the continuity between the old religious system and the new one based on Jesus' message. These men were the righteous remnant (the faithful believers throughout the Old Testament who never abandoned God or his law) who would carry on the work the twelve tribes were chosen to do—to build the community of God. The number was so important that when Judas Iscariot killed himself, the disciples chose another man to replace him (see Acts 1:15-26).

This records the first time Jesus sent these disciples out on their own. These twelve men had Jesus' authority over the forces of evil. Jesus empowered his disciples to cast out evil spirits. Jesus also gave these disciples power to heal every kind of disease and illness. It was important that they have these powers because Jesus was extending his mission through them. Jesus directly confronted demons and sicknesses. The disciples carried on Jesus' purpose and his power.

10:2-4 In verse 1, these men are called "disciples"; here, the word apostles is used to stress their role as messengers, "sent-ones."

The first name recorded was Simon to whom Jesus had given the name Peter (see John 1:42). Peter had been a fisherman (4:18). He became one of three in Jesus' core group among the disciples. He also confessed that Jesus was the Messiah (16:16). Although, later, Peter would deny ever knowing Jesus, Peter eventually would become a leader in the Jerusalem church, write two letters that appear in the Bible (1 and 2 Peter), and be crucified for his faith.

Andrew was Peter's brother and also a fisherman (4:18). Andrew had been a disciple of John the Baptist and had accepted John the Baptist's testimony that Jesus was "the Lamb of God." He had left John to follow Jesus. Andrew and John were Jesus' first disciples (John 1:35-40); Andrew then had brought Peter to Jesus (John 1:41-42).

James and John had also been fishermen (4:21). James would become the first apostle to be martyred (Acts 12:2). John would write the Gospel of John, the letters of 1, 2, and 3 John, and the book of Revelation. The brothers may have been related to Jesus (distant cousins); at one point, their mother requested special places for them in Christ's Kingdom (20:20-28).

Philip was the fourth to meet Jesus (John 1:43). Philip then brought Bartholomew (John 1:45). Philip probably knew Andrew and Peter because they were from the same town, Bethsaida (John 1:44). Scholars think that Bartholomew is the same person as Nathanael. Bartholomew was an honest man (John 1:47).

We often remember Thomas as "Doubting Thomas" because he doubted Jesus' resurrection (John 20:24-25). But he also loved the Lord and was a man of great courage (John 11:16). When Thomas saw and touched the living Christ, doubting Thomas became believing Thomas.

Matthew, author of this Gospel, described himself by his former profession, probably to show the change that Jesus had made in his life. Also known as Levi, he had been a tax collector (9:9). Thus, he had been a despised outcast, but he had abandoned that corrupt (though lucrative) way of life to follow Jesus.

James is designated as son of Alphaeus to differentiate him from the James in 10:2.

Thaddaeus is also called "Judas son of James" (see Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13).

Simon was probably not a member of the party of Zealots, for that political party did not appear until ^{A.D.} 68. Most likely the word zealot indicates zeal for God's honor and not extreme nationalism; it was an affectionate nickname.

Judas Iscariot. The name "Iscariot" is probably a compound word meaning "the man from Kerioth." Thus, Judas's hometown was Kerioth in southern Judea (see Joshua 15:25), making him the only one of the Twelve who was not from Galilee. It was Judas, son of Simon Iscariot (John 6:71), who later betrayed Jesus to his enemies and then committed suicide (27:3-5; Luke 22:47-48).

10:5-6 Jesus gave specific instructions, however, regarding the focus of their ministry: “Don’t go to the Gentiles or the Samaritans.” A “Gentile” was anyone who was not a Jew. The “Samaritans” were a race that resulted from intermarriage between Jews and Gentiles after the Old Testament captivities (see 2 Kings 17:24). This did not mean that Jesus opposed evangelizing Gentiles and Samaritans; in fact, Matthew had already described Jesus’ positive encounter with Gentiles (8:28-34), and John 4 recounts his conversation with a Samaritan woman. Jesus’ command to go only to the people of Israel means that the disciples should spend their time among the Jews (see also 15:24). These words restricted the disciples’ “short-term” mission. Jesus came not to the Jews only, but to the Jews “first” (Romans 1:16). God chose them to tell the rest of the world about him. Later, these disciples would receive the commission to “go and make disciples of all the nations” (28:19). Jewish disciples and apostles preached the gospel of the risen Christ all around the Roman Empire, and soon Gentiles were pouring into the church. The Bible clearly teaches that God’s message of salvation is for all people, regardless of race, sex, or national origin (Genesis 12:3; Isaiah 25:6; 56:3-7; Malachi 1:11; Acts 10:34-35; Romans 3:29-30; Galatians 3:28).

10:7-8 Jesus sent his disciples out to announce that the Kingdom of Heaven was near. Jesus was talking about a spiritual kingdom. The Kingdom is still “near.” Jesus, the Messiah, has already begun his Kingdom on earth in the hearts of his followers. One day the Kingdom will be fully realized.

The disciples were also to use the authority and power Jesus had given them (10:1). He gave the disciples a principle to guide their actions as they ministered to others: Give as freely as you have received. The disciples had received salvation and the Kingdom without cost; they should give their time under the same principle. Because God has showered us with his blessings, we should give generously to others of our time, love, and possessions.

10:9-10 These instructions seem, at first, to be contrary to normal travel plans, but they simply reveal the urgency of the task and its temporary nature. Jesus sent the disciples in pairs (Mark 6:7), expecting them to return with a full report. This was a training mission; they were to leave immediately and travel light, taking along only minimal supplies. They were to depend on God and on the people to whom they ministered (10:11). The disciples were to leave at once, without extensive preparation, trusting in God’s care rather than in their own resources. Jesus said those who work deserve to be fed, meaning that those who minister are to receive care from those to whom they minister (see Luke 10:17; 1 Timothy 5:18). Jesus' instructions pertained only to this particular mission. Different times and situations would call for different measures, but Christian workers still can reveal the simplicity of Christ when they carry out ministry without excessive worldly entanglements.

10:11 Each pair of disciples would enter a city or village and stay in a worthy person's house (that is, the home of a believer who had invited them to lodge there during their ministry). The command to stay there until they left the city cautioned them never to offend their hosts by looking for "better" lodging in a home that was more comfortable or socially prominent. To remain in one home would not be a burden for the home owner because the disciples' stay in each community would be brief. The "worthy" were those who would respond to and believe the gospel message.

10:12-13 As the disciples entered someone's home, they were to give it a blessing. At this time, people believed that blessings could be given as well as taken back. If it turns out to be a worthy home (that is, had accepted them and their message), then the blessing of peace would stand. But if the household did not accept their message, then the disciples would take back the blessing. The peace returning from that house also indicated judgment to come (10:15). Those who would receive the disciples also would receive the Messiah. Those who cared for God's emissaries would receive blessing in return (10:40).

10:14 The disciples should also expect rejection, such as Jesus had faced in Decapolis (8:34). So Jesus further instructed that if a village did not welcome them (that is, take them in and offer hospitality) and refused even to listen to them, then they should shake off the dust of that place from their feet as they left.

Shaking off dust that accumulated on one's sandals showed extreme contempt for an area and its people, as well as the determination not to have any further involvement with them. To shake the dust off one's feet was a gesture of total repudiation. Shaking off the dust of a place, Jesus said, would be a testimony against the people. Its implications were clear and had eternal consequences. Jesus was making it clear that the listeners were responsible for what they did with the gospel. As long as the disciples had faithfully and carefully presented the message, they were not to blame if the townspeople rejected it. Likewise, we are not responsible when others reject Christ's message of salvation, but we do have the responsibility to share the gospel clearly and faithfully.

10:15 God had destroyed the wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah by fire from heaven because of their wickedness (Genesis 19:24-25). To Jews, the judgment of these cities was a lesson not only in punishment of great evil, but also in the finality of divine judgment. Those who reject the gospel will be worse off on the judgment day than the wicked people of these destroyed cities who never had heard the gospel at all.

10:16 The disciples would go out with the message as sheep among wolves (the “wolves” were the enemies of the believers—in this context probably the Jewish religious leaders). The solution? Be as wary as snakes and harmless as doves. These words may have come from a local proverb. To be “wary as snakes” speaks of prudence or cleverness. To be “harmless as doves” is to be sincere and to have pure intentions. Jesus’ followers would need both to be prepared for the battles that lay ahead. They would need to be unafraid of conflict but also able to deal with it in integrity.

JESUS PREPARES THE DISCIPLES FOR PERSECUTION / 10:17-42 / 94

The new movement of Christianity would eventually face great opposition—from Jews and Gentiles alike. While it may not have seemed possible as these disciples roamed the hillsides with this popular teacher, a day would come when some would have to choose between their faith and persecution (or death). Jesus warned that they would need to focus on their mission and turn their defense into a testimony for their faith.

10:17-18 The danger of arrest and persecution would come from without (governors, kings) and from within (courts, synagogues). These persecutions would provide opportunity for witness to the world. Later, the disciples experienced these hardships (Acts 5:40; 12:1-3; 22:19; 2 Corinthians 11:24).

10:19-20 Jesus told the disciples that when (not “if”) they were arrested, they should not worry about what to say in their defense. You will be given the right words at the right time—God’s Spirit would speak through them. The phrase Spirit of your Father is Old Testament language and recalls the inspiration of the prophets. Jesus described the Holy Spirit as a defense lawyer coming to the disciples’ aid. This promise of an infilling of the Holy Spirit was fulfilled in Acts 2, where the Spirit empowered the disciples to speak. Some mistakenly think this means believers do not have to prepare to present the gospel because God will take care of everything. Scripture teaches, however, that we are to make carefully prepared, thoughtful statements (Colossians 4:6). Jesus was telling his followers to prepare but not to worry. He promised special inspiration for times of great need.

10:21-22 Jesus detailed some aspects of the coming persecution. The Jews considered family denunciations and betrayals a sign of the end times. These words may allude to Micah 7:6. This passage speaks of internal corruption in Israel; Jesus said this was a sign of the last days. Not only will faith in Jesus tear families apart, but believers will also find that everyone will hate them. As Jesus' disciples share his authority, they will also share his sufferings. Those who endure to the end (meaning wholly, completely) will enter into Christ's Kingdom. Standing firm to the end is not a way to be saved but the evidence that a person is really committed to Jesus. Persistence is not a means to earn salvation; it is the by-product of a truly devoted life.

10:23 While Jesus told the disciples to expect persecution, he also warned them against foolhardiness. If they faced persecution in one town, they were to flee to the next. They ought not cast their pearls before swine (7:6), nor should they abort their ministry in fear. They were to leave and move on if the persecution became too great. Perhaps this is part of being "wary as snakes" (10:16).

"I assure you that I, the Son of Man, will return before you have reached all the towns of Israel." This difficult sentence has received many interpretations. Following are five:

1. Some have understood this to focus on the immediate context of verses 5-16. The disciples would not have time to go through all the towns before Jesus would catch up with them. This interpretation is too simple, however, given the language in the text that refers to events after the resurrection of Christ. At the time of Matthew's writing, the disciples had completed the mission, so Jesus obviously was referring to something else.
2. Some suggest that the coming of the Son of Man refers to his coming judgment against the Jews, fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. But it is an unlikely interpretation to connect the destruction of Jerusalem with the return of the Son of Man.
3. Albert Schweitzer made this the key to his interpretation of Jesus' understanding of his ministry. Schweitzer explained that Jesus expected the end of time to happen before the disciples finished this mission. When it did not happen, said Schweitzer, Jesus switched to a more active role and tried to force it to come through his crucifixion. This view misinterprets Jesus' words to apply only to the immediate context (as does number 1 above).

4. Still others explain that the “coming” refers to Jesus’ appearance in triumph after his resurrection.
5. Because of the events of the book of Acts, it seems more likely that Jesus was referring to events after his resurrection. The meaning of his words would be that the task of the mission to the Jews would be so great and so difficult (for many would refuse to believe) that it would not be accomplished even by the time of his second coming.

10:24-25 Jesus used a common proverb stated two ways. A student or servant is not greater than the teacher or master. In Judaism, a student (disciple) shared the daily experiences of his teacher; in pagan cultures, a servant fought beside his master. Both receive the same treatment. The Pharisees had called Jesus the prince of demons when they accused Jesus of using Beelzebub’s power to drive out demons (see 12:24). If Jesus, who is perfect, was called evil, how much more will it happen to Jesus’ followers.

10:26 Jesus’ followers can expect persecution, but they must never be afraid. The gospel mission must be accomplished. The truths entrusted to the disciples will be known no matter what the opposition.

10:27 The darkness is not a picture of sin but of privacy. What Jesus had told them privately they were to proclaim publicly. These phrases describe bold, public proclamation of the truths that Jesus had taught the disciples privately. The disciples had a mission and a responsibility to teach what they learned from Jesus.

10:28 People might be able to kill the body, but they would not be able to touch the soul. The only one worthy of our fear is God, who can destroy both soul and body in hell. The worst that people can do (kill the body) does not compare with the worst that God can do. We are not to be afraid of people, but we are to be afraid of (that is, be in awe of) God.

10:29-31 This awesome God whom we are to fear (10:28) is also the God who cares about the smallest sparrow. When we fear him, we have nothing to worry about because he loves us. Sparrows were the cheapest type of living food sold in the market; a penny was the smallest copper coin. Sparrows were not of high value in the world—a penny could buy two of them. Yet God is so concerned for them that not one falls to the ground without God’s consent. That God knows the number of the very hairs on our heads shows his concern about the most trifling details about each of us. Because God is aware of everything that happens to sparrows, and because he knows every tiny detail about us, Jesus concludes that his followers need never be afraid. Sparrows will fall to the ground; God's people will die, sometimes by martyrdom. Yet we are so valuable that God sent Jesus, his only Son, to die for us (John 3:16). Because God places such value on us, we need never fear personal threats or difficult trials.

10:32-33 People have a clear choice. Everyone who acknowledges Jesus Christ (that is, publicly confesses faith in or declares allegiance to him) will be acknowledged by Christ before his Father in heaven. Jesus' followers would face earthly courts of law where they would have to publicly claim to belong to Jesus Christ, usually at their peril (10:17-25). But for the disciple to acknowledge Jesus means that Jesus will claim that disciple as his own before the Father in heaven.

However, the person who denies his relationship to Jesus Christ would in turn face denial by Jesus before the Father. These words refer to those whose true allegiance would be revealed under pressure. Jesus was making the astounding statement that each person's standing before God is based on his or her relationship to Jesus Christ. Jesus is the advocate whose intercession before God will depend on one's faithfulness in acknowledging him.

10:34 The Jews believed that when the Messiah came, he would usher in a time of world peace. Jesus' first arrival would not bring that universal peace. The very nature of Jesus' claims forces people to make a choice. They must choose to believe who he said he is, or they must choose to reject him. Jesus did not come to bring peace but a sword (that is, division) that separates families, friends, and nations. Conflict and disagreement will arise between those who choose to follow Christ and those who do not. In saying this, Jesus was not encouraging disobedience to parents or conflict at home. Rather, he was showing that his presence demands a decision.

10:35-36 Jesus was quoting from Micah 7:6 (already alluded to in 10:21). In Micah, these divisive conditions led to a yearning for the Messiah; in this context they were caused by the Messiah's coming. Jesus explained the response to his call—there will inevitably be conflict between those who respond and those who do not. Sometimes the reaction is violent, and angry family members become like enemies. Jesus did not come to make such divisions happen; instead, his coming, his words, and his call inevitably will cause conflict between those who accept him and those who reject him.

10:37 Jesus did not force his followers to break family ties to follow him (as opposed to some present-day cults). Jesus was pointing out that his disciples must have singular loyalty to him. When discipleship conflicts with family loyalty, following Jesus must take the priority over natural love of family. If one must choose, one must take Jesus.

10:38 These words applied to the disciples and to all who want to be worthy of Jesus (“worthy” meaning willing to follow and serve, as in 10:11). To take up your cross was a vivid illustration of the humility and submission that Jesus asked of his followers. When Jesus used this picture of his followers taking up their crosses to follow him, the people knew what it meant. For some, taking up the cross might indeed mean death; for all, it means denying self. To follow Christ is a moment-by-moment decision, requiring denial of self. Following Jesus means taking the same road of sacrifice and service that he took. The blessing for us is that he walks with us along the way.

10:39 This verse is a positive and negative statement of the same truth: Clinging to this life may cause us to forfeit the best from Christ in this world and in the next. The Christian life is a paradox: To attempt to find (or save) your life means only to lose it. A person who “finds” his or her life to satisfy desires and goals apart from God ultimately “loses” life. Not only does that person lose the eternal life offered only to those who believe and accept Christ as Savior, but he or she loses the fullness of life promised to those who believe. By contrast, those who willingly “lose” their lives for the sake of Christ actually “find” them. They will receive great reward in God’s Kingdom. To lose one’s life for Christ’s sake refers to a person refusing to renounce Christ, even if the punishment were death.

It would be easier to give one’s life in battle or in martyrdom than what Christ actually asks of us. Not only does Christ demand loyalty over family, he also demands loyalty over every part of our life. The more we love this life’s rewards (leisure, power, popularity, financial security), the more we will discover how empty they really are. The best way to “find” life, therefore, is to loosen our greedy grasp on earthly rewards so that we can be free to follow Christ. We must risk pain, discomfort, conflict, and stress. We must acknowledge Christ’s claim over our destiny and our career. In doing so, we will inherit eternal life and begin at once to experience the benefits of following Christ.

10:40-42 In 10:11-14, Jesus described how the disciples should go about their ministry—staying in homes of worthy people. Those who would welcome the disciples would receive great reward. The word “welcomes” may refer both to hospitality (receiving the messenger) as well as conversion (receiving the message). Jesus’ representatives carry all his authority. Those who welcome the disciples welcome Jesus; those who welcome Jesus welcome the Father who sent Jesus. Again Jesus unmistakably claims his relationship to God. Jesus spoke these words to his twelve disciples, but then repeated the saying three more times using prophets, righteous people, and little ones. To give a cup of cold water was an important act of courtesy and hospitality. The disciples definitely were “little ones” who were insignificant and despised in the eyes of the world. Those who would welcome the disciples merely because they were disciples would not lose their reward. Because the disciples would come with God’s authority, their acceptance by people would test the people’s attitudes toward God. It is that attitude that leads either to reward or loss of reward.

JESUS EASES JOHN'S DOUBT / 11:1-19 / 70

Opposition against Jesus began to grow, as Jesus had prophesied in chapter 10. Even John the Baptist had some misunderstanding. At first the opposition is implicit; later it will be explicit.

11:1 This verse forms a transition from chapter 10. Jesus finished instructing his twelve disciples (for the time being) and went off teaching and preaching in towns throughout the country.

11:2-3 King Herod, also known as Herod Antipas, had imprisoned John the Baptist (4:12). While John sat in prison, word came to him about all the things the Messiah was doing. John the Baptist had his own disciples who apparently remained close to him during his imprisonment. They brought news of Jesus' activities—most likely those deeds that reflected that he was the Messiah (such as those described in chapters 8 and 9). But Jesus' peaceful teaching and healing ministry may not have seemed to measure up to people's expectations for a militaristic Messiah. Perhaps John was wondering about the veiled terms in which Jesus was giving his teachings. This caused John to wonder, so he sent his disciples back to Jesus with a question, "Are you really the Messiah we've been waiting for, or should we keep looking for someone else?" John had baptized Jesus, had seen the heavens open, and had heard the voice of God (3:13-17), yet he was experiencing periods of doubt and questioning.

11:4-6 Jesus answered John's doubts by telling John's disciples to go back to John and tell him about what they had heard and seen. Jesus pointed to his acts of healing and preaching. These words reflect Isaiah 35:5-6, Isaiah's prophecy of the final Kingdom. The Messiah's arrival was the first phase of this coming Kingdom, and Jesus fulfilled these words. That the Good News is being preached to the poor reflects Isaiah 61:1. "The poor" are the small group of faithful followers, the oppressed and afflicted, who respond to the Good News. God blesses them because they are not offended at Jesus, but willingly accept him as the promised Messiah.

11:7-8 As John's disciples left with Jesus' message, Jesus took the opportunity to address the crowds. He asked three questions and gave three answers. John the Baptist came preaching in the wilderness, and people went out to listen to him (3:1, 5). Jesus asked if the people had gone into the wilderness to see a reed, moved by every breath of wind. To compare a person to a reed was to say that the person was without moral fiber or courage, easily tossed about, never taking a stand on anything. Obviously, they did not go to see a “reed”—John’s fiery preaching was anything but that. The people who went out to see him had been attracted by the opposite quality.

Second, Jesus asked if they had gone out to see a man dressed in expensive clothes. Obviously, John’s rough attire (3:4) hardly qualified. The people who went out to see John liked his prophetic power in contrast to the worldliness in the palaces and even in their own Temple.

11:9-10 In this third question, Jesus asked if the people had gone out into the wilderness to see a prophet. That was, in fact, true—they had. The people knew that John’s appearance meant that something new was about to happen; many believed the age of the Messiah had come. They had seen, Jesus said, more than a prophet. Jesus described John as “more” because he had inaugurated the messianic age and had announced the coming Kingdom of God (see also 3:3). More than being a prophet, John also had been the subject of prophecy, fulfilling Malachi 3:1.

11:11 John the Baptist’s role as forerunner of the Messiah put him in a position of great privilege, described as “more than a prophet” (11:9) with none greater. No man ever fulfilled his God-given purpose better than John. Yet in God’s coming Kingdom, the most insignificant person will have a greater spiritual heritage than John because he will have seen and known Christ and his finished work on the cross. John would die before Jesus would die and rise again to inaugurate his Kingdom. Jesus’ followers, because they will witness the Kingdom’s reality, will have privilege and place greater than John’s.

11:12 There are several views about the meaning of this verse. Most likely, this is a reference to Jesus’ opponents. Jesus was explaining that as his Kingdom advanced, attacks against it by violent people would increase. He referred not to just one type of opposition, but to opposition in general. John the Baptist, as herald of the arrival of the Kingdom of Heaven, was already experiencing the attacks of evil men (Herod) against God’s Kingdom. The conflict had begun.

11:13-15 All the teachings of the Scriptures had prophesied about the coming of God’s Kingdom. John fulfilled prophecy, for he himself was Elijah, the one the prophets said would come (Malachi 4:5). John was not a resurrected Elijah, but he took on Elijah's prophetic role—boldly confronting sin and pointing people to God (Malachi 3:1). Jesus understood how difficult it was for the people to grasp all that they were seeing and hearing. Indeed, many would be unwilling to believe. Only those who were willing to hear would be able to listen and understand. Only those with the desire of true disciples could truly understand Jesus' words.

11:16-19 Jesus condemned the attitude of his generation. No matter what he said or did, they took the opposite view. They were cynical and skeptical because he challenged their comfortable, secure, and self-centered lives. Jesus compared them to children playing a game in the public square. The thrust is that some of the children called out to others to join them, but their companions ignored their invitation and went on playing their own games. Jesus' generation, like the children in the square, was unresponsive to the calls issued by John the Baptist and by Jesus.

Jesus continued that John the Baptist didn't drink wine and he often fasted, yet that did not satisfy the Jews. They assumed that he was demon possessed (or was merely deranged). In contrast, Jesus (here he called himself the Son of Man) came eating and drinking, but that did not satisfy the Jews either. They labeled him as a glutton and a drunkard who hung out with the lowest sort of people. Many of the Jews in Jesus' generation, including most of the religious establishment, simply refused to listen and went about their own "games."

But God's wisdom is seen in Jesus' deeds. People could see the Kingdom's power through Jesus' miracles. These miracles showed that Jesus' teaching was right. People might reject both the miracles and the teaching, but that will not change the truth nor will it hinder the Kingdom's arrival.

JESUS PROMISES REST FOR THE SOUL / 11:20-30 / 71

Jesus' gracious invitation of rest and freedom extends to all. No one is omitted or neglected. All we must do is acknowledge our need and come to him. The "rest" that Jesus gives equals eternal life (Hebrews 4:9) and brings love, healing, and peace with God, not the cessation of work, effort, worship, or service.

11:20 The cities Jesus denounced were those where he had done most of his miracles. Because his words were vindicated by his deeds (11:19), those people should have been eager to turn from their sins and believe. Instead, they rejected Jesus, the Messiah.

11:21-22 For their unbelief, the unrepentant cities would receive judgment and horrors (an expression of grief or regret). The people of Korazin and Bethsaida had seen Jesus firsthand (both cities were in Galilee); yet they stubbornly refused to repent of their sins and believe in him. Tyre and Sidon were ancient Phoenician cities with a long-standing reputation for wickedness (Isaiah 23; Ezekiel 27–28; Amos 1:9-10). God had destroyed those cities for their opposition to his people and for their wickedness as centers of Baal worship. Jesus said that if he had done miracles in those wicked cities, the people would have sat in deep repentance. Sackcloth and ashes were symbols of humiliation, grief for sin, and repentance. Because Korazin and Bethsaida had rejected Jesus, they would suffer even greater punishment than that of the wicked cities who had not seen Jesus. Those people had less opportunity to believe; therefore, they would be accountable for less. Similarly, nations and cities with churches on every corner and Bibles in every home will have no excuse on judgment day if they do not repent and believe.

11:23-24 Jesus singled out the city of Capernaum for special denunciation. Jesus had made his home in this city (4:12-13) and had performed countless miracles there (8:5-17; 9:2-8, 18-33; Mark 1:23-28). But would it be exalted to heaven for that reason? Instead of being “exalted,” they would be brought down to the place of the dead. Instead of “heaven,” they would experience “hades,” the word for the grave, the abode of the dead. Here Jesus used the term in a general sense for God’s judgment.

As in 11:21-22 above, Jesus was comparing a city that he personally had visited (in this case, had lived in) with one of the most evil cities in the Old Testament. Indeed, if the city of Sodom had seen Jesus’ miracles, Sodom would still have existed in Jesus’ day. (God had destroyed the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah for their extreme wickedness, see Genesis 18–19.) Jesus implied that the city would have repented of its sin and therefore would not have been destroyed by God. Capernaum itself would be worse off than the worst of the Old Testament cities, simply because it was the home of the Messiah. Its people had seen Jesus, and they had rejected him.

11:25-26 Jesus’ response to this rejection, however, was to praise his Father. He praised God for hiding the significance of his words and miracles from those who think themselves so wise and clever and for revealing them to the childlike (those open to humbly receiving the truth of God’s word). That God had revealed himself in this way was not an accident; it pleased him. Spiritual understanding is not dependent on status, race, or education—it is God’s gift.

11:27 Jesus clearly stated his relationship to the Father of whom he spoke in 11:25. He made three unmistakable claims to having a special relationship with God:

1. My Father has given me authority over everything. These words explain shared knowledge. There are no secrets between Father and Son and never have been. Jesus is the only source of the revelation that is hidden or revealed (11:25-26).
2. No one really knows the Son except the Father. In the Old Testament, “know” means more than knowledge; it implies an intimate relationship. The communion between God the Father and God the Son is the core of their relationship. Those who make Jesus out to be nothing more than a great teacher have ignored such statements as this, statements that force us to a decision as to whether Jesus really is who he claimed to be.
3. No one really knows the Father except the Son and those to whom the Son chooses to reveal him. For anyone else to know God, God must reveal himself to that person, by the Son’s choice. How fortunate we are that Jesus has clearly revealed to us God, his truth, and how we can know him. People can approach God only through Jesus—he truly is the only way (John 14:6).

11:28 While those wise and learned in their own eyes are blinded to the truth (11:25-26), Jesus invites those who are weary and carry heavy burdens. The “wise and learned” Pharisees had placed so many rules and regulations on the people that religion had become like “labor,” and a life of devotion to the Law had become a burden to carry (see 23:1-4). But Jesus invited the “little ones,” true disciples with eyes open to see the truth, to come to him and find rest from these labors. Jesus was clearly admonishing them to abandon Pharisaic legalism and join him. Those who follow Christ will find refreshment in their renewed relationship with him, freedom from guilt over sin, deliverance from fear and despair, and the promise of continued help and guidance from the Holy Spirit. (See Hebrews 3–4 for more on the New Testament view of rest.)

11:29-30 A yoke is a heavy wooden harness that fits over the shoulders of animals, such as oxen, that is attached to a piece of equipment that the animals are to pull. The law was a “yoke” that was considered hard to bear. Jesus used the familiar phrasing used of the law as an invitation to discipleship. “Take off the burdensome yoke of the Pharisee-styled law,” Jesus said, and “take my yoke upon you.” Following Jesus would not be a free ride; Jesus had already described the persecution and rejection his followers could expect (10:17-42). They were not free from all constraints; they would carry a yoke, but it would be light. Again, this did not belittle the importance or difficulty of carrying out his mission; indeed, Jesus asked for more than mere obedience to the law. Discipleship requires extraordinary effort. These words focused on Jesus’ care and concern for his followers, his promise of guidance and presence (28:20), and the ultimate future rewards.

Jesus said, “Let me teach you.” Jesus, their leader and example, was also the ultimate servant, humble and gentle. His path of humble service is the pattern for us to follow.

THE DISCIPLES PICK WHEAT ON THE SABBATH / 12:1-8 / 45

At this point, Matthew returned to an order of events matching Mark's Gospel. The sections included in 9:18–11:30 are out of order chronologically, but placed thematically according to Matthew's focus on Jesus' teachings.

12:1-2 Jesus and his disciples, still in Galilee, went out walking through some grainfields. The disciples were hungry, so they began breaking off heads of wheat and eating the grain. They were not stealing grain; God's law called for this kind of sharing among his people (Deuteronomy 23:25). But harvesting was forbidden on the Sabbath (Exodus 34:21). The disciples, however, were picking grain because they were hungry, not because they wanted to harvest the grain for a profit. Thus, they were not breaking God's law. According to the religious leaders, the disciples were technically "harvesting," because they were picking wheat and rubbing it in their hands. The Pharisees were determined to accuse Jesus of wrongdoing. They even followed him around on the Sabbath in order to do so!

12:3-4 Jesus' answer to the Pharisees (12:3-8) contains four arguments explaining why his disciples' actions were lawful to do on the Sabbath (12:2): (1) David's example (12:3-4), (2) the priests' example (12:5-6), (3) proof from the prophets (12:7), and (4) proof from who Jesus himself was (12:8).

First, Jesus reminded the Pharisees of an example from the life of King David. This story is recorded in 1 Samuel 21:1-6. Each week twelve loaves of special bread (the Bread of the Presence), representing the twelve tribes of Israel, were placed on a table in the Tabernacle. After its use, it was to be eaten only by priests. On one occasion, when fleeing from Saul, David and his men had been given this consecrated bread to eat by Abiathar, the high priest. The loaves given to David were the old loaves that had just been replaced. God did not punish David because his need for food was more important than the priestly regulations. When Jesus compared himself and his disciples to David and his men, Jesus was saying, in effect, "If you condemn me, you must also condemn David." Jesus was not condoning disobedience to God's laws. Instead, he was emphasizing discernment and compassion in enforcing the ceremonial laws, something the self-righteous Pharisees did not comprehend.

12:5-6 Jesus responded to the Pharisees' accusation with a second answer, using an example from the priests who served in the Temple. Jesus again repeated the question, “Haven’t you ever read in the law of Moses?” to show these self-righteous Pharisees that while they had the law memorized, they really didn’t understand it. The Ten Commandments prohibit work on the Sabbath (Exodus 20:8-11). That was the “letter” of the law. But because the purpose of the Sabbath is to rest and to worship God, the priests had to perform sacrifices and conduct worship services—in short, they had to work. Their “Sabbath work” was serving and worshipping God, which God allowed. Thus, even though they technically broke the Sabbath, God held them guiltless.

Just as the priestly duties in the Temple surpass Sabbath regulations about work, so Jesus’ ministry transcends the Temple. The Pharisees were so concerned about religious rituals that they missed the whole purpose of the Temple—to bring people to God. Because Jesus Christ is even greater than the Temple, how much better can he bring people to God. Our love and worship of God are far more important than the created instruments of worship.

12:7 Jesus used a third proof from the Old Testament prophets to answer the Pharisees. Jesus repeated common Old Testament words (1 Samuel 15:22-23; Psalm 40:6-8; Isaiah 1:11-17; Jeremiah 7:21-23; Hosea 6:6). The statement “I want you to be merciful; I don’t want your sacrifices” means that rituals and obedience to the law are valuable only if carried out with an attitude of love for God. The Pharisees’ rigid guidelines had caused them to be unable to see beyond the letter of the law. So in condemning Jesus and his disciples, they had condemned those who aren’t guilty. The disciples were no more guilty of breaking the law than priests who did their duty on the Sabbath.

12:8 Jesus’ fourth answer to the Pharisees’ accusation (12:2) focused on who he was. When Jesus said that he (again, calling himself the Son of Man) was master even of the Sabbath, he was claiming to be greater than the law and above the law. To the Pharisees, this was heresy. They refused to believe that Jesus, the divine Son of God, had created the Sabbath. The Creator is always greater than the creation; thus, Jesus had the authority to overrule their traditions and regulations.

JESUS HEALS A MAN’S HAND ON THE SABBATH / 12:9-14 / 46

As if to illustrate that the commandment to love takes precedence over the law, Jesus went to the synagogue where he healed a man with a deformed hand.

12:9-10 It was the Sabbath (12:1), and according to his regular custom, Jesus went to the synagogue. There was a man with a deformed hand. Jesus' reputation for healing (even on the Sabbath, see Mark 1:21-26) had preceded him, but would he dare heal on the Sabbath with Pharisees watching? Healing, they argued, was practicing medicine, and they had a law that a person could not practice his profession on the Sabbath. As they pointed to the man with the deformed hand, the Pharisees tried to trick Jesus by asking him if it was legal to work by healing on the Sabbath day. Their motive, however, was not to gain information; they were hoping he would say yes, so they could bring charges against him. Sabbath rules said that people could be helped on the Sabbath only if their lives were in danger. If Jesus had waited until another day, he would have been submitting to the Pharisees' authority, showing that their petty rules were equal to God's law. If he healed the man on the Sabbath, the Pharisees could claim that because Jesus broke their rules, his power was not from God. But Jesus made it clear how ridiculous and petty their rules were. God is a God of people, not of rules. The best time to reach out to someone is when he or she needs help.

12:11-12 Instead of answering the Pharisees' question, Jesus responded with an illustration and a question of his own. A sheep that had fallen into a pit was in danger. If this occurred on the Sabbath, the sheep's owner was allowed to pull it out, even though this constituted work. If it is acceptable to do good to a sheep on the Sabbath, doesn't it also follow that people can do good for other people on the Sabbath?

12:13 Jesus refused to play by the Pharisees' rules. After pronouncing that it was lawful to do good on the Sabbath (12:12), Jesus did exactly that. He told the man to reach out his hand. The moment the man did so, it became normal. No particular action of Jesus is recorded; he told the man to move, and with that movement, healing arrived. Jesus did nothing that could be called "work," but the Pharisees would not be swayed from their purpose.

12:14 The Pharisees were outraged. In their fury, they determined to kill Jesus. Ironically, the Pharisees had accused Jesus of breaking their law about healing on the Sabbath, yet they were planning (on the Sabbath) to kill him. Their hatred drove them to plot murder—an act that was clearly against God's law.

Jesus was not afraid of the religious leaders. Jesus had been aggressively confronting the Pharisees' hypocrisy, but here, however, he decided to withdraw from the synagogue before a major confrontation developed. Jesus did this because it was not time for him to die. He still had many lessons to teach his disciples and the people.

12:15-16 Despite his withdrawal, Jesus could not escape the crowds. Many people continued to follow him, and Jesus had compassion on those who were sick, and he healed them; however, he also warned them not to say who he was. Jesus did not want people coming to him for the wrong reasons.

12:17-21 In these verses, Matthew gets to the focus of this chapter—Jesus as the one who fulfilled prophecy. The people expected the Messiah to be a king. This quotation from Isaiah 42:1-4 showed that the Messiah was indeed a king, but it illustrated the kind of king he would be—a quiet, gentle ruler who brings justice to the nations.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS ACCUSE JESUS OF GETTING HIS POWER FROM SATAN / 12:22-37 / 74

Leaving the chronology in these verses, Matthew gives an example of the intensifying conflict between Jesus and the religious leaders. The religious leaders had already decided that they wanted to kill Jesus (12:14), so they began looking for any opportunity to accuse him.

12:22 A man who was demon-possessed, blind, and unable to talk was brought to Jesus for healing, and Jesus healed him.

12:23 The crowd was amazed when they saw the man healed. “Could it be that Jesus is the Son of David, the Messiah?” The Jews understood that the promised Messiah would be a son (descendant) of King David (see Isaiah 9:6-7; 11:1; Jeremiah 23:5-6). They were puzzled because, despite all his miracles, Jesus just did not seem to be the Messiah they were expecting.

12:24 Apparently another delegation of Pharisees had come from Jerusalem. The people were “amazed,” but these leaders refused to believe that Jesus’ power was from God. They could not deny the reality of Jesus’ miracles and supernatural power, for he had indeed been casting out demons. So the Pharisees accused him of having power from Satan.

12:25-26 Jesus knew their thoughts. In the Incarnation, Jesus gave up the complete and unlimited use of his supernatural abilities, but he still had profound insight into human nature (see 9:4). Jesus responded to them in a parable—a simple example from life that would reveal the absurdity of their charge. Following the obvious conclusion of their accusation—that Satan was driving himself out of people—Jesus indicated that if that were true, it would then mean that there was civil war in the kingdom of evil. No king would throw his own soldiers out of his kingdom; neither would Satan throw his soldiers out because his kingdom would then be divided against itself. Such a kingdom would be doomed. Jesus implied that it would be impossible for Satan to cast out his demons.

12:27 Jesus was not the first person to exorcise demons. In the first century, exorcism was a thriving business. Exorcists would employ complex incantations, magical charms, and even visual effects. Jesus, however, needed only his authoritative word. His constant success, the ease with which he cast out demons, and the reactions of the demons made Jesus' exorcisms notable. Jesus was saying, "If it takes Satan's power to drive out demons, then those of your own group who claim to drive out demons must also be demon-possessed." The Pharisees who had cast out demons would judge these other Pharisees for implying that being able to exorcise demons meant being in league with Satan.

12:28 There is no question that it was by the Spirit of God that Jesus cast out demons. That the Kingdom of God has arrived shows that Jesus' exorcisms were specific evidence of the presence of Kingdom power. That Jesus was powerfully casting out demons and plundering Satan's kingdom revealed that the Kingdom of God had begun.

12:29 This picture reflects a situation in the ancient world where wealthy people's homes were virtual fortresses, and their servants could form a small army. Jesus called Satan a strong man. His house is the realm of evil where there is sickness, demon possession, and death. The only way he could be robbed would be for someone to first tie him up; the only way for the demons to be cast out is for someone to first overpower Satan. Jesus' advent into the world did just that (1 John 3:8). Although Satan still works in our world, God is in control. Jesus, as God, has "tied up" Satan in one sense; Satan's ultimate doom is sure.

12:30 It is impossible to know about Christ and remain neutral indefinitely. Anyone who is not actively helping him has chosen to oppose him. To refuse to follow Christ is to choose to follow Satan.

12:31 Jesus would no longer reason with his accusers; he was giving them a solemn warning. Jesus had just been accused of being in league with Satan and had soundly refuted those charges. Here he had a few words for these so-called teachers of the law, the Jewish leaders.

First, he made the reassuring promise: Every sin or blasphemy can be forgiven. Those who believe in Jesus will be forgiven of all sins (evil acts, good acts not done, evil thoughts, evil motives, etc.) and of all blasphemies (evil words said against God). When there is confession and repentance, no sin is beyond God's forgiveness.

But blasphemy against the Holy Spirit is a sin that can never be forgiven. This refers to an attitude. Those who defiantly deny Jesus' power and persistently refuse to believe that he is the Messiah are blaspheming the Holy Spirit. Jesus' words were addressed directly to the Pharisees. They had blasphemed the Spirit by attributing to Satan the power Christ had in performing miracles. This is the unforgivable sin—the deliberate refusal to acknowledge God's power in Christ. It indicates an irreversible hardness of heart. Forgiveness would not be possible because it never would be sought.

12:32 Blasphemy against the Holy Spirit—denying the power behind Jesus' ministry—will never be forgiven. The mighty works done by the Spirit were unmistakable announcements that the Kingdom had arrived. Those who dared to attribute these works to Satan were not ignorant; instead, they had made up their minds not to believe. Jesus said that those who slander the Holy Spirit will not be forgiven—not because their sin is worse than any other, but because they will never ask for forgiveness.

12:33 Just as a good tree bears good fruit and a diseased (or bad) tree bears inedible fruit, so the fruits of a person's life will show the quality of his or her character. Fruit is a comprehensive word, referring to teaching, character, and action. Our character is revealed by our conduct.

12:34-35 Jesus called the Pharisees a brood of snakes (see also 3:7; 23:33), rebuking them for their hypocritical accusation against him (12:24). Jesus called them evil, as seen by their words (their "fruit," 12:33). Because they were evil, how could they possibly speak what is good and right? The Pharisees could not hide their evil behind their status, robes, and position; their words betrayed their true character.

12:36-37 These verses are found only in Matthew. Jesus explained that words matter—each person will give an account on judgment day of every idle word he speaks. The word “idle” refers not to mindless small talk or carefree jokes, but to broken promises, unkept commitments, and unpaid vows. Such words are better indicators of a person’s true character than his or her carefully planned and prepared statements and speeches. No word is insignificant to God because every spoken word reveals what is in the heart. Words will be a basis for judgment: The words you say now reflect your fate then.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS ASK JESUS FOR A MIRACULOUS SIGN / 12:38-45 / 75

The Pharisees (here joined by the teachers of religious law) wanted Jesus to authenticate by a sign the special relationship he claimed to have with God. In a separate incident recorded in 16:1-4, the Pharisees and Sadducees would ask Jesus for a miraculous sign. Jesus responded to both requests the same way.

12:38 Some teachers of religious law joined the Pharisees and asked Jesus for a miraculous sign—that is, some miracle proving that he was the Messiah. But they were not sincerely seeking to know Jesus. They had already seen enough miraculous proof to convince them that he was the Messiah, but they had already decided not to believe in him. More miracles would not change their minds.

12:39-40 Jesus refused to give the religious leaders a sign. Instead, he explained that a sign would come in his timing and that the sign would be unmistakable. The only sign they would get would be the sign of the prophet Jonah. Jonah was a prophet sent to the Assyrian city of Nineveh (see the book of Jonah). As Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the great fish, so Jesus would be in the heart of the earth for three days and three nights. Jesus’ resurrection would prove that he is the Messiah. Three days after his death Jesus would come back to life, just as Jonah had been “brought back” to life after spending three days in the fish.

12:41 The people of Nineveh will condemn those of Jesus’ generation on judgment day. The pagans repented at the preaching of Jonah, but the Jews and their religious leaders refused to repent at Jesus’ preaching. Someone greater than Jonah refers to Jesus himself and his proclamation of the Kingdom’s arrival (see also 12:6). Jesus was their promised Messiah. The religious leaders who knew prophecy should have been the first to proclaim Jesus as God’s Son. Instead, they rejected him; thus, they will face condemnation for their refusal to believe.

12:42 The queen of Sheba had traveled from southern Arabia to see Solomon, king of Israel, and to learn about his great wisdom (1 Kings 10:1-10). This unbelieving Gentile recognized the truth about God when it was presented to her, unlike the Jewish religious leaders who refused the truth even though it was staring them in the face. That queen will rise up against this generation and condemn those who refused to believe someone greater than Solomon—the Messiah himself.

12:43-45 To further describe how it will be with this evil generation (12:39, 45), Jesus told a parable focusing on the attitude of the nation of Israel and the religious leaders in particular. There is danger in attempting to be neutral about Jesus. Unfilled and complacent people are easy targets for Satan.

The evil spirit was not “cast out,” but for some reason had left a person. The desert was believed to be the habitation of demons. Because demons need a place to live (rest), this demon returned to its former home. In its absence, the demon’s “home” had been cleaned up, but it was still empty. Therein lay the problem and the crux of Jesus’ teaching. The nation had been swept “clean” by the teaching and preaching of John the Baptist and of Jesus. Many had come to repent. But if the nation did not turn around, truly repenting from sin and turning to Jesus as their Messiah and Savior, they would be no better off than a clean but empty house. Into that house comes worse evil than before. Jesus pictured the demon finding seven other spirits and returning to the clean house. The person, now filled with eight demons instead of one, is definitely worse off than before. God’s people, this evil generation, privileged with prophecy and promises, would be faced with horrible judgment for rejecting their Messiah.

In this section, Jesus was not denying his responsibility to his earthly family. He would provide for his mother’s security as he hung on the cross (John 19:25-27). His mother and brothers would be present in the Upper Room at Pentecost (Acts 1:14). Instead, Jesus was pointing out that spiritual relationships are as binding as physical ones, and he was paving the way for a new community of believers to be formed. This family would be characterized by love.

12:46-47 Jesus’ mother was Mary (Luke 1:30-31), and his brothers were probably the other children Mary and Joseph had after Jesus (see also Mark 6:3-4). Based on 13:55, these were Jesus’ half brothers, Mary and Joseph’s other children, because Jesus’ father was God, not Joseph. Apparently Mary had gathered her family, and they had gone to find Jesus. Mark explained that Jesus’ family thought he was “out of his mind” (Mark 3:21). Mary hoped to use her personal relationship with Jesus to influence him. She saw her son in a busy ministry that was taking its toll on him. Perhaps she hoped to get him to come home and rest. As Jesus was speaking, the message from his family was relayed to him. Jesus’ family thought that because of their relationship with him, he would answer their request.

12:48 Instead of going outside to see what his family members wanted, Jesus looked at the crowd and asked an odd question, “Who is my mother? Who are my brothers?” Jesus knew why his family had come, yet he used their visit as a lesson in discipleship. A relationship with Jesus was not limited to those in his immediate family. Jesus opened this relationship to all people. His question could be rendered, “Who are the types of people who can have a family relationship with me?”

12:49-50 Jesus pointed to his disciples and answered his own question. The types of people who can have a relationship with him are those who do the will of the Father in heaven. They listen, learn, believe, and follow. Obedience is the key to discipleship. In these words, Jesus explained that in his spiritual family, the relationships are ultimately more important and longer lasting than those formed in his physical family.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE FOUR SOILS / 13:1-9 / 77

Jesus left the synagogue and began to teach outdoors. He left those opposed to him and reached out to the responsive people. Jesus had already made unmistakable claims about his true identity, and there was increasing division between those who accepted and those who rejected. The religious leaders had already decided that Jesus was not the Messiah.

Jesus began teaching a series of parables about the Kingdom of Heaven. These “parables” hid the truth from those who had their minds made up, having already chosen to reject Jesus. Those who truly wanted to know Jesus and listened carefully would understand his words.

13:1-2 Earlier that same day, Jesus had been accused of being under Satan’s power (12:22-37), had turned down the religious leaders’ request for a miracle (12:38-45), and had dealt with his family who had come to take him home (12:46-50). Then, Jesus left the house and went down to the shore of the Sea of Galilee and sat and taught from a boat.

13:3 Jesus used many stories, or parables, when teaching. Parables use familiar scenes and everyday objects and relationships to explain spiritual truths. They compel listeners to discover truth, while at the same time they conceal the truth from those too lazy or too stubborn to see it. This “Kingdom parable” gave a familiar picture to Jesus’ audience—a farmer planting seed, with the resulting increase dependent on the condition of the soil. In ancient Israel, farmers sowed seed by hand, scattering (13:4) handfuls of seed onto the ground from a large bag slung across the shoulders. No matter how skillful, no farmer could keep some of his seed from falling on the path, being scattered among rocks and thorns, or from being carried off by the wind. So the farmer would throw the seed liberally, and enough would fall on good ground to ensure a good harvest.

13:4 Some of the seed fell on a footpath. The hard and compacted soil of the path made it impossible for the seed to penetrate. So it sat on top, as tempting morsels for birds.

13:5-6 Some of that seed fell on shallow soil with underlying rock. Unlike the path, rocky ground had some soil to accept the seed, but not much. The seed sprang up quickly, but the sun took the moisture out so rapidly that the young plant died.

13:7 Some of the farmer's seed fell among thorns. Thorns rob the sprouts of nutrition, water, light, and space. Thus, when the thorns shot up, the good seed was choked out and could not grow.

13:8 However, some of the seed landed in fertile soil and yielded thirty, sixty, or even up to a hundred times the amount of seed sown. A farmer would be happy indeed to see his crop multiply even ten times. Thirty, sixty, or a hundred would be a marvelous yield.

13:9 Human ears hear many sounds, but there is a deeper kind of listening that results in spiritual understanding. Jesus was speaking of the response of the mind and heart necessary to understand spiritual truth. Some people in the crowd were only curious about Jesus; a few were looking for evidence to use against him; others truly wanted to learn and grow. Jesus' words were for the honest seekers. Those who honestly seek God will have spiritual hearing.

When speaking in parables, Jesus was not hiding truth from sincere seekers, because those who were receptive to spiritual truth understood the illustrations. To others, they were only stories without meaning. Jesus purposely spoke in parables to weed out the halfhearted and curiosity-seekers from the true seekers. His words, like the farmer's seed, fell on various types of hearts. Those who truly heard and understood would become his followers.

13:11 Jesus revealed that understanding the truth of the gospel comes as a gift of God to those he has chosen. The you to whom Jesus spoke was the group of his true followers. God had given this understanding of the secrets of the Kingdom of Heaven to the disciples as a permanent possession, a distinguishing mark of discipleship. They understood, though only partially, the "secret" that God's Kingdom had arrived among them in the person of Jesus. Those who have not been given this knowledge are those who willfully reject the gospel message.

13:12 To those who are open to Jesus' teaching, God will give more understanding and an abundance of knowledge. In contrast are those who are not listening—Jesus says that even what they have will be taken away from them. Those who were “not listening” were the religious leaders and the vast majority of the Jews. They thought they were privileged and secure as God's chosen people, but they would lose that position. We are responsible to use well what we have. When people reject Jesus, their hardness of heart drives away or renders useless even the little understanding they had.

13:13 The parable of the farmer accurately pictured the people's reaction to all of Jesus' parables. Jesus would not explain the parables to all the people; rather, he would answer questions about his parables with other parables because, he said, “People see what I do, but they don't really see. They hear what I say, but they don't really hear, and they don't understand.” The parables could not penetrate the hard soil of unbelief already characterizing unbelievers' hearts. These unbelievers had already rejected Jesus; no amount of explaining or talking would make any difference. The soil of their heart was hard; the seed of the word would not grow; the parables would be nothing more than strange stories to them. Jesus was not hiding truth from sincere seekers because those who were receptive to spiritual truth understood the illustrations.

13:14 The parables allowed Jesus to give spiritual food to those who hungered for it; but for the others, Isaiah's prophecy explained their situation. God told Isaiah that people would hear but not understand and see but not perceive its meaning (Isaiah 6:9); Jesus witnessed the same reaction to his teaching. By quoting from the prophet Isaiah, Jesus was explaining to this inner group of followers that the crowd resembled the Israelites about whom Isaiah had written. God had told Isaiah that the people would listen but not learn from his message because their hearts had hardened beyond repentance. Yet God still sent Isaiah with the message because even though the nation itself would not repent and would reap judgment, some individuals would listen.

13:15 Neither Isaiah's nor Jesus' audiences were denied the opportunity to turn and receive healing (forgiveness). Instead, refusing to listen would mean that the people's hearts were hardened. No matter how much they saw of Jesus' miracles or heard of his teaching, they never would be able to understand because they had deliberately chosen to reject him.

13:16 The images of “seeing” and “hearing” refer to knowledge of God's revelation. The disciples were blessed above the people in the crowd because they could see and hear what the prophets had foretold. God gave them spiritual enlightenment to understand and accept the person and message of Jesus.

13:17 The Kingdom of God was a mystery to the prophets of the Old Testament because, though they wrote about it, they did not understand it (as Paul explains in Romans 16:25-26). The believers who knew Jesus personally received spiritual insight that illuminated the mystery. In these words, Jesus was explaining that he was the fulfillment of the prophecies (see 1 Peter 1:10-12).

13:18-19 Jesus explained the story about the farmer sowing grain. The farmer was Jesus (see also 13:37) and, by extension, anyone after him who would teach and preach the Good News (represented by the seed). Jesus was sowing the word among the crowd of followers. The parable revealed people's varying responses to the gospel message. The attitude or condition of their hearts would govern their response.

The word makes no impression on some people. For those who hear and don't understand, the seed lands on a hard heart. Then the evil one (Satan) snatches it away. Perhaps the person feels no need in his or her heart, no desire for anything other than this life, no guilt of sin or need of forgiveness.

13:20-21 The rocky soil represents people who joyfully receive the Good News of the gospel because of the promises offered. These people understand some of the basics but do not allow God's truth to work its way into their souls and make a difference in their lives. Their roots don't go very deep, and although they are fine at first, they wilt as soon as they have problems or are persecuted. Satan can always use sorrow, trouble, and persecution to draw such "shallow" people away from God.

13:22 The thorny ground is Satan's most subversive tactic of all. These people hear and accept the Good News, giving hope of a harvest. But thorns grow up and choke out the growing seed. All too quickly the message is crowded out by the cares of this life and the lure of wealth. Worldly worries, the false sense of security brought on by prosperity, and the desire for material things plagued first-century disciples as they do us today. Daily routines overcrowd and materialistic pursuits distract believers, choking out God's word so that no crop is produced.

13:23 But other people are like good soil—they hear the word and accept it.

These are the true disciples—those who have accepted Jesus, believed his words, and allowed him to make a difference in their lives. These people produce a huge harvest. They tell the Good News to others who tell it to others and so on. The desire to evangelize the world should naturally follow from a life rebuilt around God’s word.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE WEEDS / 13:24-30 / 80

While the Kingdom message is being sown, it faces a variety of different receptions. Some may have thought that the inauguration of the Messiah’s Kingdom would be accompanied by cataclysmic events. That did not seem to be happening with Jesus. In the Jewish mind, the coming of the Messiah signaled the coming of God’s promised Kingdom. Jesus stated that the Messiah had arrived with his Kingdom, but the fulfillment of the Messianic Kingdom would be delayed until he comes a second time. What, then, is the Kingdom of Heaven like? The parables in this chapter answer this question.

13:24-26 Jesus explained that the Kingdom grows quietly and abundantly, yet evil still exists in the world. The picture of weeds planted in the fields was a known practice in ancient warfare and feuds—destroy a nation’s (or person’s) agricultural base and his military power would also be destroyed. Because no one recognized the weeds, both grew at the same time.

13:27-28 The servants knew the master had sowed good seed. While the servants would expect a few weeds, instead the field was full of weeds. Who are these “weeds”? Jesus would soon explain that “the weeds are the people who belong to the evil one” (13:38). They may be people in the church who appear to be believers but who never truly believe. To interpret the meaning more broadly, the Kingdom of God is present and growing in a world full of sin and unbelief. The enemy, Satan (13:39), is always working to obstruct the growth of God’s Kingdom. The enemy caused a problem, so the servants dutifully asked if they should pull out the weeds.

13:29-30 The owner decided that the wheat and weeds should grow together until the harvest—a common metaphor for the final judgment (Jeremiah 51:33; Hosea 6:11; see also Revelation 14:14-16). Jesus was making the point that while his coming signaled the arrival of the Kingdom, its consummation would be delayed. God will not eliminate all opposition until the end of the age. The children of God and children of Satan would grow together “until” the harvest; then, God would judge and sort out his children from Satan’s children.

No one parable can completely describe God's Kingdom in all its aspects, so Jesus gave several. Through this parable, Jesus explained that his Kingdom would have a small beginning. Indeed, it began with Jesus alone and, upon his ascension, was left in the care of twelve apostles and just a few hundred other followers.

13:31-32 Jesus compared this beginning to the mustard seed, which was the smallest seed that a farmer used. The mustard seed was so small that it would take almost twenty thousand seeds to make one ounce. Modern critics have pointed out that the mustard seed is not the smallest seed that exists. But Jesus was not making a scientific statement. Though the mustard seed is not the smallest seed in all of creation, it was used in rabbinic proverbs to designate the smallest of things. No other seed so small produced such a large plant. Jesus' point was that just as a tiny seed will grow into a large plant, so God's Kingdom will produce many people who truly believe.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE YEAST / 13:33-35 / 82

Like the parable of the mustard seed, this parable stresses small beginnings with great growth. Yeast permeates and transforms; thus, we see another aspect of the Kingdom.

13:33 In other Bible passages, yeast is used as a symbol of evil or uncleanness (see 16:6). Here it is a positive symbol of growth. Although yeast looks like a minor ingredient, it permeates every part of the dough. Although the Kingdom had small beginnings, it would grow to have a great impact on the world.

13:34-35 The first half of the quoted verse follows the first part of Psalm 78:2. The second half (since the creation of the world) seems to be an independent rendition of the end of Psalm 78:2. Psalm 78 reviews Israel's history from the time of slavery in Egypt to David's reign. This psalm was told over and over to each generation so they would not forget God and make the same mistakes as their ancestors. The mysteries hidden refers to God's mighty acts in redeeming his people despite their sin and unfaithfulness.

JESUS EXPLAINS THE PARABLE OF THE WEEDS / 13:36-43 / 83

The young weeds and the young blades of wheat look the same and can't be distinguished until they are grown and ready for harvest. Weeds (unbelievers) and wheat (believers) must live side by side in the world. God allows unbelievers to remain for a while, just as a farmer allows weeds to remain in his field so that the surrounding wheat won't be uprooted with them. At the harvest, however, the weeds will be thrown away.

13:36 In 13:1, Jesus had “left the house” to sit beside the sea. There he spoke publicly to the crowds. Jesus’ movement back into the house signifies a movement away from the crowds and to private discussion with his disciples. Jesus’ followers had the knowledge of the secrets of the Kingdom (13:11) and the ability to “see” and “hear” (13:16), but they still needed his help in understanding all his words.

13:37-39 Jesus described the identity of the important parts of the parable of the weeds recorded in 13:24-30. Jesus explained to his listening disciples that the good seed represents the people of the Kingdom, sown by the Son of Man in the field of the world. In this world also exist people who belong to the evil one, sown by him into this world. At the end of the world, the angels would come and the harvest would begin.

13:40-42 At this harvest, God will separate his people from Satan’s people. As the harvesters collect the weeds into bundles to be destroyed, so Satan’s works and Satan’s people will be thrown into the furnace—a metaphor for final judgment (see Daniel 3:6). Jesus often used the term weeping and gnashing of teeth to refer to the coming judgment (see 8:12; 13:50; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30). The “weeping” indicates sorrow or remorse, and “gnashing of teeth” shows extreme anxiety or pain. Those who say they don’t care what happens to them after they die don’t realize what they are saying. God will punish them for living in selfishness and indifference to him. Jesus, who has already identified himself as the Son of Man (8:20; 9:6; 10:23; 11:19; 12:8, 32, 40), revealed that he will inaugurate the end of the age and the final judgment.

13:43 Reflecting words from Daniel 12:3, Jesus described the final glory of the godly. Those who receive God’s favor stand in bright contrast to those who receive his judgment. Heaven will be a glorious place!

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE HIDDEN TREASURE / 13:44 / 84

The parable of the hidden treasure and the parable of the pearl merchant (13:45-46) form a pair and belong together. They teach the inestimable value of the Kingdom.

13:44 To teach the inestimable value of the Kingdom of Heaven and of being part of that Kingdom, Jesus described it as a treasure found hidden in a field. The man who discovered the treasure in the field stumbled upon it by accident but knew its value when he found it. Some have wondered about the morality of a man obtaining a treasure in this way, but Jesus was not teaching a moral lesson. He was merely showing the value of this treasure that is worth every sacrifice and commitment to obtain. The Kingdom of Heaven is more valuable than anything else we can have, and a person must be willing to give up everything to obtain it.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE PEARL MERCHANT / 13:45-46 / 85

This parable and the previous parable of the hidden treasure (13:44) are a pair and should be studied together (as noted by the word “again” in verse 45).

13:45-46 In the previous parable, Jesus described a man stumbling upon a treasure. In this parable, Jesus pictured a wealthy pearl merchant. Pearls were especially valued in the Near East. A pearl of great value could obviously set up this merchant for life. Knowing pearls, this merchant searched earnestly for one of great value. When he found it, he sold everything he had to buy it. Some may discover the Kingdom (13:44); some may seek earnestly and finally obtain it. In both cases, the men recognized the value of what they had found and willingly invested everything to find it. The Kingdom of Heaven is so valuable that it calls for a total investment (radical discipleship) from those who find it.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE FISHING NET / 13:47-52 / 86

The parable of the fishing net deals with the dividing of people much as the parable of the wheat and weeds does.

13:47-48 This parable pictures a dragnet perhaps drawn between two boats and dragged in a wide semicircle. Fish of every kind are caught and the fishermen drag the net to the beach where they sort the fish. They put good fish into crates and throw the bad ones away.

13:49-50 While the parable of the wheat and weeds highlighted the length of time during which good and evil people must coexist before the judgment, this parable focuses on that final judgment. As the net catches all kinds of fish, the gospel message will go out to all kinds of people. At the end of the world, the angels will separate the wicked people from the godly. Like the fish that are thrown away, the wicked will be thrown into the fire (a metaphor for judgment, see 13:40-42).

13:51-52 Because the disciples now understood these parables, Jesus said, “Every teacher of religious law who has become a disciple in the Kingdom of Heaven is like a person who brings out of the storehouse the new teachings as well as the old.” The disciples who understood Jesus’ words were the “teachers of the law” in his Kingdom. In other words, the current teachers of religious law did not understand, so their teaching was invalid. The disciples understood God’s real purpose in the law as revealed in the Old Testament; therefore, they had a real treasure. The disciples would bring this treasure “out of the storehouse” in that their responsibility would be to share what they had learned with others. The disciples had gained this treasure through Jesus’ instruction, so they were able to understand and use the best of older wisdom, as well as the new insights that Jesus brought to them. True teachers see the value of both old and new.

The Old Testament points the way to Jesus, the Messiah. Jesus always upheld the authority and relevance of the Scriptures. Those who understand Jesus’ teaching about the Kingdom of Heaven receive a double benefit. This was a new treasure that Jesus was revealing. Both the old and new teachings give practical guidelines for faith and for living in the world. The religious leaders, however, were trapped in the old and blind to the new. The religious leaders were looking for a physical and temporal kingdom (brought on by military strength and physical rule), but they were blind to the spiritual significance of the Kingdom that Christ had brought.

Jesus had been born in Bethlehem, but he had been reared in Nazareth (Matthew 2:19-23; Luke 2:39-40). This was not the first time he had spoken and taught in Nazareth (Luke 4:14-30).

13:53-54 A previous visit to Nazareth by Jesus to teach had been given a less than positive response; in fact, the people had tried to kill him. This trip to Nazareth, therefore, is significant. The people of Nazareth were about to receive a second chance to believe; unfortunately, they again rejected the Lord.

The synagogue was the center of the town. This was really a key place for Jesus to meet the people. When he taught there, the people were astonished at his wisdom and his miracles. They knew Jesus’ miracles were supernatural, but they wondered about their source (the options were either God or Satan—see 12:24) and how Jesus could do them.

13:55-56 Jesus was teaching effectively and wisely, but the people of his hometown saw him as only a carpenter's son (referring to Joseph) whose family they also knew well. Jesus had been almost thirty years old before he began his public teaching ministry, and he had never been formally trained as a rabbi. For the years before that, he had been at home, learning the trade of carpentry from his father. The listing of the brothers (see also 12:46-49) indicates that the people knew the family well—the mother, the brothers, the sisters. Apparently they were all ordinary people, and Jesus had experienced an ordinary childhood. The residents of Jesus' hometown could not bring themselves to believe Jesus' message. Jesus had come to them as a prophet who challenged them to respond to spiritual truth.

13:57 Jesus' claims caused the people in his hometown to be deeply offended. They stumbled over his words and could not accept them. He was one of their peers, and their preconceived notions about who he was made it impossible for them to accept his message. They also may have been jealous. Jesus had come to them as a prophet, but they saw only a hometown boy.

Jesus used a common proverb found in rabbinic literature. It is significant that Jesus applied the word “prophet” to himself, thus specifically claiming to be God's messenger. Jesus was not the first prophet to be rejected in his own hometown (see Jeremiah 12:5-6). Jesus also experienced rejection by members among his own family (John 7:5). Some of Jesus' family did believe in him after his resurrection (Acts 1:14).

13:58 Jesus could have done greater miracles in Nazareth, but he chose not to do so because of the people's unbelief. Unbelief blinds people to the truth and robs them of hope. These people missed the Messiah. When Jesus performed mighty works, his goal was to further the Kingdom of God, not to try to convince a group of stubborn people who had already thoroughly rejected him. To do miracles in Nazareth would be of no value because the people did not accept his message or believe that he was from God. Therefore, Jesus looked elsewhere, seeking those who would respond to his miracles and message. We need to proclaim the gospel. At times, however, we need to move on, to other towns and people.

Matthew continued to record various responses to Jesus. The Pharisees had accused him of being under Satan's power (12:22-37). Other religious leaders had expressed their rejection (12:38-45). Jesus' own family thought he had gone crazy (12:46-50). Finally, the people of Jesus' hometown had rejected him (13:53-58).

This chapter gives the story of a government leader's misunderstanding of Jesus' identity. Herod thought that Jesus was the resurrected John the Baptist, who had been arrested just prior to the beginning of Jesus' public ministry. Because John had ministered in Perea ("east of the Jordan River," John 1:28), he was under Herod's jurisdiction. The arrest marked the end of John's public ministry. He was imprisoned for some time prior to his death (see 11:2-6).

14:1-2 Herod Antipas ruled over the territories of Galilee and Perea. He was the son of Herod the Great, who had ordered the killing of the babies in Bethlehem (2:16). Eventually he would hear Jesus' case before the crucifixion (Luke 23:6-12). Herod's guilt over John's death led him to think that his worst nightmares had come true: John the Baptist had come back to life again. John had done no miracles (John 10:41); he had simply preached and prepared the way for Jesus. But Herod identified Jesus with John.

14:3-4 Herod's personal guilt was well placed, for he had ordered John to be arrested and imprisoned. Ironically, this "powerful" king did this in response to pressure from Herodias (the former wife of Herod's brother Philip). Philip was Herod's half brother. When Herod Antipas met Herodias, his brother's wife, he divorced his first wife and married Herodias. Herodias was the daughter of Aristobulus, another half brother. Thus, Herodias was a half niece to both Philip and Herod (and they, in turn, were her half uncles). She married her half uncle Philip and then divorced him to marry another half uncle, Herod. Thus, in marrying, Herodias and Herod had committed adultery, as well as a type of incest. John the Baptist condemned Herod and Herodias for living immorally. It was illegal for Herod to be married to her.

14:5 Rebuking a tyrannical Roman official who could imprison and execute him was extremely dangerous, yet that is what John had done. In addition, there was political tension over Herod's divorce of his first wife—the daughter of the king of a neighboring country. This was explosive enough without John bringing up the illegal marriage. John's public denunciation of the incest and adultery of Herod and Herodias was too much for them to bear, especially Herodias, whose anger turned to hatred. Mark's Gospel focuses on Herodias, who was both wicked and ruthless in her attempts to kill John the Baptist. While Matthew's account seems to say that Herod would have executed John, we can combine the accounts to see a wicked yet weak ruler who was not in a hurry to kill John because he was afraid of the people, who believed John was a prophet. For Herod to put to death one of the Jews' prophets could have caused a huge revolt in his territory and certainly would have created great discontent.

14:6-7 That Herod had imprisoned John the Baptist was not enough for the angry Herodias. She continued to nurse her grudge against John for speaking publicly about her sins, biding her time until she would get her way and have John killed. Then on Herod's birthday, the opportunity arrived. Mark wrote that Herod gave a banquet for many notable men from governmental, military, and civil positions in Galilee (Mark 6:21). According to the Jewish historian Josephus, Herodias's daughter (by her marriage with Herod Philip) was Salome, a young woman in her middle teens. Herodias sent Salome into the banquet hall to dance. Afterwards, the king promised with an oath to give her anything she wanted.

14:8 Apparently, Salome had already been prompted by her mother, so she responded, "I want the head of John the Baptist on a tray!" Herod, faced by drunk and smirking officials who waited to see what he would do, was too weak to object. Herodias would have her way. Herod caved in under the social pressure and John's death was sealed.

14:9-10 Herod was sorry because he had put himself in this position in front of his guests, and yet he considered John a holy man whom he both respected and feared (Mark 6:20). Herod had made a promise and had sealed it with an oath. Such words were considered irrevocable. To back out on the promise would show his important guests that Herod was not a man of his word or that he was afraid of this "unimportant" prisoner in a dungeon. So, John was beheaded.

14:11 An executioner beheaded John and brought his head to the girl on a tray. Herod fulfilled his oath and saved face before his guests. But he had been manipulated by his wife and was left with great fear over what he had done in killing a holy man. Herod's guilt could not be assuaged. Thus, when Jesus came on the scene, Herod thought that John had come back to life (14:2).

14:12 John the Baptist apparently still had disciples, even though many had left him to follow Jesus (which John was content for them to do, see John 1:35-37). When they heard that John had been beheaded, they came, took away his corpse, and gave it a proper burial. Then, they told Jesus. Matthew's mention of this report to Jesus shows the close link between John's and Jesus' ministries.

JESUS FEEDS FIVE THOUSAND / 14:13-21 / 96

Apart from Jesus' resurrection, this is the only miracle that appears in all four Gospels, showing its importance to Jesus' ministry and to the early church. While many people have tried to explain away the incident, it is clear that all the Gospel writers saw this as a wonderful miracle. In Matthew and Mark, this miracle follows the account of Herod's tragic feast where John the Baptist was killed. The placement of the event creates a stark contrast between Herod's grisly orgy and the miraculous feast that Jesus provided for the multitude. Like each of Jesus' miracles, the feeding of the five thousand demonstrated his control over creation and showed that God will provide when we are in need.

14:13-14 News of John's death resulted in Jesus' desire to pull away and be alone for a while with his disciples. Jesus and the disciples got into a boat and withdrew to a remote area. Luke says they went to Bethsaida (Luke 9:10). But the crowds would not let them get away, so they followed by land. As soon as Jesus landed, the rest was over because a vast crowd waited on the shore. Far from feeling impatience and frustration toward these needy people, Jesus had compassion on them and healed their sick. While Jesus had hoped to be alone with the disciples for a time of rest, he did not send away this needy crowd. He had compassion for the people and took it upon himself to meet their needs. Jesus knew that his time on earth was short, so he took advantage of every opportunity to teach the Good News of the Kingdom to those willing to listen.

14:15 Jesus had been teaching the people until evening. Sunset was approaching, and the disciples wondered what Jesus planned to do with this crowd that had come far from their homes to be with them in this desolate place. The disciples brought their suggestion to Jesus: "Send the crowds away so they can go to the villages and buy food for themselves."

14:16 The disciples were very concerned regarding the people's needs. After all, the people would need to reach a nearby town before sunset if they were going to obtain food. Jesus' answer both astounded and exasperated them: “That isn't necessary—you feed them.” Jesus directly involved his disciples in the miracle so that it would make a lasting impression on them.

14:17-18 There was nothing in the crowd but five loaves of bread and two fish—common staples for the poor of Jesus' day. Apparently, in their hurry, no one else in the crowd had thought to bring along food to eat. A young boy offered his lunch to the disciples (John 6:8), but the disciples could see only the impossibility of the situation. Jesus had an entirely different approach, and he asked the disciples to bring the loaves and fish to him.

14:19 Jesus, acting as the host of the soon-to-be banquet, took the loaves and fish, looked up to heaven, and asked God's blessing on the food. As Jesus broke the loaves, the miracle occurred. He broke the loaves and gave them to his disciples to then give to the people. The disciples acted as waiters to the groups of hungry people seated on the grass, taking bread and fish, distributing it, and then returning to Jesus to get more. They continued to serve the crowd until everyone had had enough to eat.

14:20 The five loaves and two fish multiplied so that all the people could eat as much as they wanted. Even the leftovers were more than they had begun with.

14:21 The Greek word translated men is andres, meaning not “people” but “male individuals.” Therefore, there were five thousand men, in addition to the women and children. The total number of people Jesus fed could have been over ten thousand. Jesus did what the disciples thought to be impossible. He multiplied five loaves and two fish to feed over five thousand people.

JESUS WALKS ON WATER / 14:22-33 / 97

The miracles of Jesus walking on the water and calming the storm (8:23-27) were a double demonstration of Jesus' power over nature. Matthew and Mark highlighted the effects of these miracles on those who witnessed them.

14:22 As soon as the crowd had been fed and the disciples had picked up the scraps, Jesus immediately got his disciples and the crowd moving. His sudden desire to dismiss the crowd and send the disciples off in their boat is explained in John's Gospel. Upon seeing (and participating in) the miracle of multiplied loaves and fish, the people wanted to take Jesus by force and make him king (John 6:15). Before the crowd could become an unruly mob, Jesus sent the disciples back into the boat and sent the people home.

14:23-24 Jesus went up into the hills by himself to pray. Jesus wanted time to communicate with his Father. During his ministry on earth, Jesus was in constant contact with the Father—he may have gone off alone to pray often, so his desire to do so may not have surprised the disciples, who departed in the boat as instructed. The disciples had left sometime before sunset, so by the time night fell, they were far away from land. They got into trouble, however, facing strong wind and heavy waves. At least the last time this had happened, Jesus had been in the boat with them (8:23-27). This time, Jesus was alone on the land, and the disciples were left to fend for themselves (or so they thought) against another raging storm.

14:25 From evening until about three o'clock in the morning, the disciples had been out on the sea, much of that time fighting a strong headwind and high waves. Jesus came to them, walking on the water. The Old Testament often describes God's control over the seas. Jesus' walking on the sea was an unmistakable picture of his divine identity and power (see Job 9:8; 38:16; Psalm 77:19; Isaiah 43:16).

14:26 The disciples were battling exhaustion even before they got into the boat to head back across the lake. Their anticipated rest in a solitary place had been interrupted by the crowds (14:13-14). They had been battling the buffeting waves for some time. Suddenly, in the predawn mist, Jesus came walking toward them on the water. They reacted in terror, imagining that they were seeing a ghost. Once again, Jesus was doing the unexpected and the impossible. Again the disciples were not ready to grasp what it meant.

14:27 Jesus called out to the disciples over the storm, telling them, “Don't be afraid.” The literal reading for “I am here” is “I am”; it is the same as saying “the I AM is here” or “I, Yahweh, am here” (see Exodus 3:14; Isaiah 41:4; 43:10; 52:6). Jesus, the “I AM,” came with unexpected help and encouragement during the disciples' time of desperate need. Their need was real; their fear was real. But in the presence of Jesus, fear can be dismissed.

14:28-29 Peter was not putting Jesus to the test, something we are told not to do (4:7). Instead, he was the only one in the boat who reacted in faith. His impulsive request to also walk on water led him to experience a rather unusual demonstration of God's power. Jesus' presence in the storm caused Peter to exercise a fearless faith. But notice that he did so only with Jesus' command to come. Notice also that he asked only to do what Jesus was doing; that is, he wanted to share in Jesus' power, some of which the disciples had already been experiencing (10:1).

14:30 Peter started to sink because he took his eyes off Jesus and focused on the high waves around him. His faith was strong enough to trust that he could walk on the water. But when he realized that he was in a terrifying storm, his faith wavered.

Although we start out with good intentions, sometimes our faith is weak. In Peter's faltering faith we can see the path of discipleship. We have to exercise faith to have the power, but often we stumble and fail to grasp it fully. When Peter's faith faltered, he reached out to Christ, the only one who could help. When you are apprehensive about the troubles around you and doubt Christ's presence or ability to help, remember to put your eyes on Jesus.

14:31 Jesus' immediate response showed Peter that divine undergirding and power are present in times of testing. Jesus grabbed Peter, saving him from drowning in the waves. Peter had taken his eyes off Christ and was focusing instead on his situation. Jesus' question focused on why Peter allowed the wind and waves to overwhelm his faith. He momentarily despaired and so began to sink. His doubt became his downfall.

14:32 Jesus and Peter then climbed back into the boat with the rest of the disciples. Then, as had occurred once before when the disciples had experienced another storm, the wind stopped. Jesus had revealed to them his complete mastery over nature.

14:33 The disciples' declaration, "You really are the Son of God!" indicates a progression in faith. While the disciples worshiped him, they still had much to learn about who Jesus was and what he had come to do.

JESUS HEALS ALL WHO TOUCH HIM / 14:34-36 / 98

The storm had blown the disciples off course, so they did not land at Bethsaida as planned (14:22; see also Mark 6:45). They landed at Gennesaret, a small fertile plain located on the west side of the Sea of Galilee. The small town there had the same name. Capernaum sat at the northern edge of this plain.

14:34-36 Jesus was well-known in the region of Galilee, and his presence always created great excitement. Immediately upon getting out of the boat, people recognized Jesus, and a flurry of activity began. There still would be no rest for him. The news of Jesus' arrival spread quickly through the area. As Jesus moved through the region, people brought all their sick to be healed. Perhaps the story had spread of the woman in Capernaum who had been healed by touching Jesus' robe, for at this time the people begged him to let them touch even the fringe of his robe. No one missed out on Jesus' loving compassion; all who touched it were healed. But as the woman in Capernaum learned, healing came from faith in Jesus, not from his garment (9:20-22).

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT INNER PURITY / 15:1-20 / 102

Another delegation came from Jerusalem to investigate this new rabbi who was causing such a stir throughout the country. Again the Pharisees and teachers of religious law, Jesus' main opponents, raised an issue with Jesus. They wanted to debate Jesus about his disciples' disregard of their oral traditions and rituals.

15:1-2 A delegation came from Jerusalem, the center of Jewish authority, and was made up of Pharisees (who advocated detailed obedience to the Jewish law and traditions) and teachers of religious law (professional interpreters of the law who especially emphasized the traditions). As these religious leaders scrutinized Jesus and his disciples, they noticed that some of his disciples were eating without first performing the tradition of ceremonial hand washing. This referred not to washing for cleanliness, but to a particular kind of washing that made a person "ceremonially clean" before eating. The Pharisees called this a "tradition," but they believed that it had the same authority as God's law. Their underlying question was, "If you are really a rabbi, as holy, righteous, and versed in the law as we are, then you should know that we don't eat without first ceremonially washing our hands." Many religious traditions are good and can add richness and meaning to life. Traditions should help us understand God's laws better, not become laws themselves.

15:3-4 Jesus didn't answer their question until 15:10-11. Instead, he dealt with the issue of authority—your traditions versus the direct commandments of God. Jesus would show that the religious leaders, who had supposedly devoted their lives to protecting the law, had become so zealous for their traditions that they had missed the point of God's law entirely.

Jesus quoted one of the Ten Commandments: honor your father and mother (Exodus 20:12). The commandment did not apply just to young children but to anyone whose parents were living. "Honor" includes speaking respectfully and showing care and consideration. The same law is written negatively in Exodus 21:17, anyone who speaks evil of father or mother must be put to death. "Speaking evil" (also translated "cursing") means to criticize, ridicule, or abuse verbally. Such action carried a severe penalty.

15:5-6 Jesus then went on to explain how some of the Pharisees had found a way to completely sidestep God's command to honor parents: "But you say, 'You don't need to honor your parents by caring for their needs if you give the money to God instead." Jesus was referring to the vow of "Corban" which allowed a person to dedicate money or property for God's exclusive use, but it could still be used by the donor. This vow was grossly misused. A man could use an article vowed to God indefinitely, but could not transfer it to anyone else. The Pharisees had allowed men to dedicate money to God's Temple that otherwise would have gone to support their parents. But some found a way to keep from doing so and still use their money or property as they chose. A man could simply take the vow of Corban, saying that all his money was dedicated to God. Although the action—dedicating money to God—seemed worthy and no doubt conferred prestige on the giver, these people were ignoring God's clear command to honor their parents. Even worse, this was an irrevocable vow. If a son were to later decide that he needed to help his parents, the Pharisees would not permit it. Jesus rightly said that the Pharisees nullified the direct commandment of God by allowing their tradition to violate the fifth commandment.

15:7-9 Jesus blasted these self-righteous leaders with one word; he called them hypocrites. Jesus then quoted the Scripture that they claimed to know so well. The great prophet Isaiah had described these religious leaders: they gave honor with their lips, but their hearts were far away (Isaiah 29:13). They had replaced God's commands with their own man-made teachings. Isaiah explained that their worship is a farce. Our actions and our attitudes must be sincere. If they are not, Isaiah's words also describe us. The Pharisees knew a lot about God, but they didn't know God.

15:10-11 The Pharisees thought that to eat with defiled hands meant to be defiled (15:1-2). Jesus explained that they were wrong in thinking they were acceptable to God just because they were "clean" on the outside. Defilement is not an external matter (keeping food laws, washing ceremonially, keeping Sabbath requirements), but an internal one. The phrase "You are not defiled by what you eat" refers directly to the Pharisees' question about the disciples eating with "defiled" hands. A person does not become morally defiled by eating with hands that have not been ceremonially washed. Instead, "you are defiled by what you say and do." The condition of a person's heart will be revealed by his or her words and actions.

whole set of rules governing such matters. Mark added the parenthesis that by saying this Jesus had declared all foods clean (Mark 7:19). By so doing, he was establishing himself as the right interpreter of Scripture. Leviticus 11 contains many of the Jewish dietary laws, including a list of foods considered “clean” and “unclean.” Over the years, however, the laws had become more important than the reasons for them and the meanings behind them. As the Jews interpreted the dietary laws, they believed that they could be clean before God because of what they had refused to eat. But Jesus explained that sin and defilement do not come from eating the forbidden foods. Rather, they come from the disobedience that begins in the heart. No wonder Jesus offended the Pharisees!

15:13-14 The Pharisees may have been offended, but Jesus would add more, explaining that they were being rejected as leaders of God’s people. They claimed to be God’s true people, but like a weed growing in a flowerbed, they would be rooted up. The Pharisees claimed to be leaders of the people (see Romans 2:19), but Jesus turned this around to show that they themselves were blind guides leading the blind. They were very proud of their wisdom and enlightenment, so Jesus’ indictment would have stung. Their failure to understand God and his desires for people would prove to be disastrous for them and for those who followed them. Both fall into a ditch is probably a picture of judgment (see Isaiah 24:18; Jeremiah 48:44).

15:15 Peter often would act as spokesman for the disciples, so he asked Jesus to explain what he meant (15:10-11). Later, Peter would be faced with the issue of clean and unclean food (see Acts 10:9-15). Then he would learn that nothing should be a barrier to proclaiming the gospel to the Gentiles (non-Jews). Even more, he would learn that everything created by God is good.

15:16-17 Jesus explained that what goes into a person cannot make that person unclean. Thus, to eat food with hands that may have touched a “defiled” person or article did not mean that the person was ingesting defilement. Logically, as Jesus explained, food passes through the stomach and then goes out of the body. It has no effect whatever on the moral condition of the heart. Sin in a person’s heart is what defiles that person, not the lack of ceremonial cleansing or the type of food eaten.

15:18-20 Defilement occurs because of sinful thoughts, attitudes, and actions. Sin begins in a person’s heart, and evil words come from an evil heart and defile the person who says them. All evil acts begin in the heart. Jesus made it clear why people sin—it's a matter of the heart. Our hearts have been inclined toward sin from the time we were born. While many people work hard to keep their outward appearance attractive, what is in their hearts is even more important. When people become Christians, God makes them different on the inside, beginning with the heart.

JESUS SENDS A DEMON OUT OF A GIRL / 15:21-28 / 103

Jesus traveled about thirty miles to the region of Tyre and Sidon. These were port cities on the Mediterranean Sea north of Israel. Both cities had flourishing trade and were very wealthy. Jesus withdrew to Gentile territory to evade the opposition of the Pharisees.

15:21-22 Apparently, a woman had heard about Jesus' miracle-working power and how he could cast out demons, so she wasn't going to miss a chance to see him. The woman called Jesus Lord, Son of David, showing her acceptance of Jesus' identity as the Jewish Messiah. She may have been a Greek proselyte. Sometimes Gentiles would convert to Judaism, attracted by its strong moral qualities. This woman came to Jesus on behalf of her daughter, who was tormented by a demon.

15:23 The woman continued to follow after them, and she continued to shout. Finally, the disciples urged Jesus to tell her to leave. Jesus, always compassionate, would heal the woman's daughter, but not just to make her stop following them. He had a lesson about faith that he needed to teach this woman. In so doing, he would teach the disciples a lesson as well.

15:24 Jesus' words do not contradict the truth that God's message is for all kinds of people (Psalm 22:27; Isaiah 56:7; Matthew 28:19; Romans 15:9-12). After all, when Jesus said, "I was sent only to help the people of Israel . . . not the Gentiles," he was in Gentile territory. He ministered to Gentiles on many other occasions (4:24-25; 8:5-13). Jesus was simply telling the woman that Jews were to have the first opportunity to accept him as the Messiah because God wanted them to present the message of salvation to the rest of the world (see Genesis 12:3). While on earth, Jesus restricted his mission to the people of Israel. He was doing his Father's will (11:27) and fulfilling the promise God made to Jews in the Old Testament. The restricted mission of Jesus and the disciples echoes the principle recorded in 10:5-6.

15:25-26 Undaunted by Jesus' apparent unwillingness to respond to her request, the woman came and worshiped him, pleading for help. Jesus' answer comes in the language of a parable; therefore, we must not press the details too far. The simple parable meant that the children at the table should be fed before the pets; it would not be right to take the children's food and throw it to the dogs. By these words, Jesus may have meant that his first priority was to spend time feeding his children (teaching his disciples), not to take food away from them and throw it to the pets (just anyone). Jesus was not insulting the woman; instead, he was saying that she must not demand what God had ordained for the Jews. She should wait until God's appointed time—when the Gentiles would receive the Good News of the gospel.

15:27 This Gentile woman understood Jesus' parable. Her answer was wise, for she explained to Jesus, by extending his parable, that children often drop morsels of food to their dogs. Not all the Jews accepted Jesus, while some Gentiles chose to follow him. Why couldn't she have some of those crumbs that the Jews didn't want? She adroitly pointed out that even dogs ate with (not after) the children. She did not ask for the entire meal; she was perfectly willing to take second place behind the Jews. All she wanted right then was a few crumbs—or one "crumb" in particular—one miracle of healing for her daughter.

15:28 Jesus was delighted by the faith of the woman. He granted her request because of her humility and persistence. She had made her request in faith that Jesus could perform the healing. She understood Christ's lordship, and she understood the priorities of his mission. No wonder Jesus exclaimed, "Your faith is great." On that basis, Jesus healed the woman's daughter.

JESUS HEALS MANY PEOPLE / 15:29-31 / 104

Then Jesus left the vicinity of Tyre, and returned to the Sea of Galilee. He did not go into Jewish regions, however, but traveled to the northeastern shore of the lake instead, into a primarily Gentile area.

15:29-31 A vast crowd surrounded Jesus. They wanted to be healed, and he healed them all. The phrase and they praised the God of Israel indicates that this was a Gentile crowd. Matthew was showing his Jewish readers that the Gentiles would share with the Jews in the blessings of their Messiah. While Jesus came to the lost sheep of Israel (15:24), he did not restrict his ministry to the Jews alone.

Differences in details distinguish this miracle from the feeding of the five thousand described in chapter 14. At that time, those fed were mostly Jews. At this second miracle, Jesus ministered to a mixed crowd of Jews and Gentiles in a predominantly Gentile region.

15:32 This story sounds very much like the feeding of the five thousand recorded in 14:13-21, but it is a separate event. In this episode, the crowd had been following Jesus for three days, listening to his teaching and observing his miracles. Jesus took the initiative in his concern for their need for food, and he shared his concern with the disciples. The wording probably does not mean that the people hadn't eaten for three days. Instead, whatever supplies they had brought along were depleted; so most of them had nothing left to eat. Thus, Jesus was concerned not to send them away hungry.

15:33 Although the disciples had already seen Jesus feed over five thousand people, they had no idea what he would do in this situation, and wondered where they would get enough food for everyone. Perhaps they didn't expect Jesus to perform the same miracle when the crowd was Gentile and not Jewish (thus revealing their spiritual blindness). Jesus had already found the resources in a previous remote place for an even larger crowd, yet the disciples were completely perplexed as to how they should be expected to feed this crowd.

People often give up when faced with difficult situations. Like the disciples, we often forget God's provision for us in the past. When facing a difficult situation, remember what God has done for you and trust him to take care of you again.

15:34 In the Bible, the number seven often signifies perfection or completeness, as in the seven days of creation (Genesis 1) and offering forgiveness seven times (Matthew 18:21). Thus, in this passage some have seen the number seven to have symbolic significance. It may hint at the worldwide scope of Jesus' message.

15:35-36 Jesus took the seven loaves and the fish and thanked God for the provision he was about to give. Next Jesus broke apart the loaves and had the disciples pass them out as before.

15:37-38 As had happened before, each person in the crowd ate and was filled. No one went away hungry from this banquet. The seven loaves and few fish multiplied so that, again, even the leftovers were more than the food Jesus had started with. As before, the number of those who ate, four thousand men, meant that there were four thousand men in addition to all the women and children who were there.

15:39 Once Jesus knew the people had eaten their fill and would not faint from hunger on their journey home (15:32), he sent the people home. Jesus and the disciples crossed over to the region of Magadan (also called Dalmanutha), a town located on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee. Magadan was Mary Magdalene's hometown (Luke 8:2-3). This meant a return back to Jewish territory. There Jesus would face further conflict with the Pharisees and Sadducees (16:1-4).

LEADERS DEMAND A MIRACULOUS SIGN / 16:1-4 / 106

Following the visit to Gentile territories where the Gentiles saw Jesus' miracles and reacted by praising the God of Israel (15:31), Jesus returned to Jewish territory, only to face a test from the unbelieving religious leaders. As recorded in 12:38-39, they had previously asked for a sign; here they resumed their challenge to Jesus' authority. Matthew pictured the striking contrast of responses to Jesus.

16:1 The religious leaders weren't going to give up in their relentless attempts to discredit Jesus before the crowds. So, upon Jesus' return, the Pharisees and Sadducees came to test Jesus' claims. The Pharisees and Sadducees were Jewish religious leaders of two different parties, and their views were diametrically opposed on many issues. The Pharisees carefully followed their religious rules and traditions, believing that this was the way to God. They also believed in the authority of all the books of Scripture that we now call the Old Testament and in the resurrection of the dead. The Sadducees accepted only the books of Moses as Scripture and did not believe in life after death. These two groups, however, had something in common: Jesus was their enemy.

They demanded that Jesus show them a miraculous sign from heaven. From their standpoint, this test would show that Jesus was a false prophet. A miraculous sign showed a prophet's reliability—if a prophet said something would happen and it came to pass, this would demonstrate that in all his prophecies he was telling the truth from God. A sign also authenticated the power and authority of the prophet. But Jesus would not give them the sign they demanded. He had in mind an even greater evidence of his power.

16:2-3 The Pharisees and Sadducees had tried to explain away Jesus' other miracles as sleight of hand, coincidence, or use of evil power, but they believed that only God could do a sign from heaven. This, they were sure, would be a feat beyond Jesus' power. Although Jesus could have easily impressed them, he refused. He knew that even a miracle in the sky would not convince them that he was the Messiah because they had already decided not to believe in him. So, instead, he spoke to them in a parable. Jesus' meaning was that while these leaders could discern the signs of the weather by watching the sky, they could not read the obvious signs of the times. They asked for a sign from heaven; they had the ultimate sign standing in front of them! They could not interpret the coming of God's Kingdom with the appearance of God's Messiah.

16:4 Jesus explained that a sign would come—in his timing—and that this sign would be unmistakable. By using the sign of the prophet Jonah, who had been inside a great fish for three days, Jesus was predicting his death and resurrection. Jesus' resurrection, of course, would be the most spectacular sign of all.

JESUS WARNS AGAINST WRONG TEACHING / 16:5-12 / 107

The Jews were required to celebrate an annual period beginning with the Passover during which no yeast was to be found in their homes; all bread had to be made without yeast (Exodus 12:14-20). Yeast is a key ingredient in bread, for it causes the dough to rise. "Yeast" in this passage symbolizes evil.

16:5-6 Jesus had left his confrontation with the Pharisees abruptly, and the disciples had gone with him. Apparently, at some point out on the sea, they realized that they had forgotten to bring any food. The disciples were worrying about bread, so Jesus used the opportunity to teach of the danger of the yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees. Jesus was teaching that just as only a small amount of yeast was needed to make a batch of bread rise, so the evil teachings and hypocrisy of the religious and political leaders could permeate and contaminate the entire society. The wrong teachings of the Pharisees were leading the entire nation astray.

16:7-8 After hearing Jesus' warning against wrong teaching, the disciples quietly talked among themselves. They didn't understand the warning. They interpreted Jesus so literally that they missed his point entirely. Jesus' rebuke, "You have so little faith!" refers both to their lack of faith in realizing that he could supply bread as needed (as he had already done miraculously two separate times) and to their lack of understanding regarding his teachings. These men, closest to Jesus, would carry a huge responsibility after he was gone. Jesus wanted to be sure that they were getting the message.

16:9-10 Jesus' question, "Won't you ever understand?" emphasized that, at this point in his ministry, the disciples should have begun to understand and perceive who Jesus was. After all they had seen and heard, they should have understood. Jesus had shown compassion on people and had performed miracles to meet their needs. Thus, the disciples should have understood that Jesus would meet their needs as well—whether for bread or for spiritual insight regarding the religious leaders. Jesus wanted the disciples to think about what they had seen, especially in the two feeding miracles. If they considered what had happened, they would have to conclude that Jesus was their Messiah, the Son of God.

16:11-12 The disciples should have realized that Jesus was not talking about food. Instead, he wanted the disciples to beware of the yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees. Jesus was severing the disciples from all links to their religious past and the authority of the religious leaders, and was attaching them exclusively to himself.

PETER SAYS JESUS IS THE MESSIAH / 16:13-20 / 109

A beautiful site on the northern shore of the Sea of Galilee, Caesarea Philippi was located about twenty-five miles north of Bethsaida, on the slopes of Mount Hermon. The city was primarily non-Jewish, known for its worship of Greek gods and its temples devoted to the ancient god Pan. Jesus spoke to the disciples about who they believed him to be.

16:13-14 As Jesus and the disciples walked toward the city, Jesus asked his disciples what they had heard from the people regarding his identity: “Who do people say that the Son of Man is?” The disciples answered Jesus’ question with the common view that Jesus was one of the great prophets who had come back to life. This belief may have stemmed from Deuteronomy 18:18, where God said he would raise up a prophet from among the people. Herod had thought that Jesus was John the Baptist come back to life (14:1-2), so apparently this rumor was widespread. The people considered Jesus to be Elijah because Elijah had been a great prophet, and one like him was expected to come before the Messiah arrived (see Malachi 4:5). Jeremiah may have been considered because, according to Jewish legend, he was “immortal” (his death is not mentioned in Scripture)—thus, like Elijah, he did not die but was taken to heaven.

16:15-16 The people may have had various opinions and ideas about Jesus’ identity, but Jesus was concerned about what his chosen twelve believed about him. So he asked them, “Who do you say I am?” Peter, often the one to speak up when the others might be silent, declared what he had come to understand, “You are the Messiah, the Son of the living God.” In his declaration, Peter proclaimed Jesus to be the promised King and Deliverer. This is the core of the gospel message.

The disciples, however, still needed further understanding. Although it certainly had already crossed all of their minds that Jesus might be the Messiah, they still needed to learn about their role as agents of the promised Messiah and their role in his Kingdom. They did not yet fully understand the kind of king Jesus would be. Peter, and indeed all Israel, expected the Messiah to be a conqueror-liberator who would free the nation from Rome. Jesus would be a totally different kind of liberator, for he would conquer sin and death and free people from sin's grasp.

16:17 All of the disciples may have had glimmers of understanding about who Jesus was, but Jesus perceived the depth of Peter's confession of faith. Thus Jesus called him blessed, meaning especially favored by God's gracious approval.

Peter is pictured as the focus of divine revelation. No human being had showed Peter the truth he had just spoken (16:16); instead, Jesus' Father in heaven had revealed it to him. Then, as now, true understanding of who Jesus is and the ability to confess that fact come not from our human nature or will, but from God alone.

16:18 The name Peter had already been given to Simon when Jesus first met him (John 1:42). Here Jesus gave the name new meaning. Jesus said, "You are Peter [Greek petros], and upon this rock [Greek petra] I will build my church." While the wordplay is evident, what did this rock refer to? The "rock" on which Jesus would build his church has been identified in four main ways:

1. Jesus himself as the divine architect of our faith and that he himself is the chief cornerstone. But this truth does not seem to be what the language conveys here. The focus was on Peter.
2. Peter as the supreme leader or first "bishop" of the church, promoted by Roman Catholic scholars. It gives authority to the hierarchy of their church and regards Peter and each of his successors as the supreme pontiff of the church. There is no mention of succession in these verses, however, and while the early church expressed high regard for Peter, there is no evidence that they regarded him as final authority.
3. The confession of faith that Peter gave and that all subsequent true believers give. This view was promoted by Luther and the reformers as a reaction to view number two.
4. Peter as the leader of the disciples. Just as Peter had revealed the true identity of Christ, so Jesus revealed Peter's identity and role. While apostolic succession cannot be found in this context or in any of the epistles, Peter's role as a leader and spokesman of the church must not be discounted. Peter received the revelation of insight and faith concerning Christ's identity, and is the first who confessed Christ.

Though the word "church" (ekklesia) is found in the Gospels only in Matthew, the concept is found throughout all four Gospels. Jesus' words reveal that there would be a definite interim period between his death and second coming called the "church age." "Church" means "the called out people of God." Peter's individual authority became clear in the book of Acts as he became the spokesman for the disciples and for the Christian community. Later, Peter reminded Christians that they were the church built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, with Jesus Christ as the cornerstone (1 Peter 2:4-8; see also 1 Corinthians 3:11). All believers are joined into this church by faith in Jesus Christ as Savior, the same faith that Peter expressed here (see also Ephesians 2:20-21; Revelation 21:14). True believers like Peter regard their faith as a revelation from God and are willing to confess him publicly. Jesus praised Peter for his confession of faith. Faith like Peter's is the foundation of Christ's Kingdom.

The powers of hell represent Satan and all his minions. These words may be interpreted as the power of Satan on the offensive against the church. Christ promises that Satan will not defeat the church; instead, his sphere of operation will be defeated. In these words Jesus gave the promise of the indestructibility of the church and protection for all who believe in him and become part of his church.

16:19 The meaning of this verse has been a subject of debate for centuries. Some say the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven represents the authority to carry out church discipline, legislation, and administration (18:15-18); others say the keys give the authority to announce the forgiveness of sins (John 20:23). Most likely, the "keys" are the Kingdom authority given to the church, including the opportunity to bring people to the Kingdom of Heaven by presenting them with the message of salvation found in God's word (Acts 15:7-9). They are also the keys to prohibiting and allowing (18:18-20). Peter had been told about the foundation of a building that Christ would build and then was given the keys to that building. The "keys" suggest not that he was a "doorman," controlling who would enter the building; rather, they portray a "steward," who would administer the building.

Earth and heaven refer not to spatial relationships, but to the divine, heavenly authority behind the disciples' earthly actions. "Locking" and "opening" were a rabbinic concept that could have two meanings: to establish rules or to discipline. The disciples would be involved in a certain amount of rule making in building God's community (such as determining what kind of conduct would be worthy of its members), and they would have authority to discipline other members of the community. Thus, the words also refer to the disciples' inspiration as proclaimers of God's new revelation.

The religious leaders thought they held the keys of the Kingdom, and they tried to shut some people out. We cannot decide to open or close the Kingdom of Heaven for others, but God uses us to help others find the way inside. To all who believe in Christ and obey his words, the Kingdom doors are swung wide open.

16:20 Jesus sternly warned his disciples not to tell anyone that he was the Messiah because at this point they didn't fully understand the significance of Peter's confession. Everyone still expected the Messiah to come as a conquering king. But even though Jesus was the Messiah, he still had to suffer, be rejected by the leaders, be killed, and rise from the dead. When the disciples saw all this happen to Jesus, they would understand what the Messiah had come to do. Only then would they be equipped to share the gospel around the world.

From this point on, Jesus spoke plainly and directly to his disciples about his death and resurrection. He began to prepare them for what was going to happen to him by telling them three times that he would soon suffer and die and then be raised back to life (16:21-28; 17:22-23; 20:17-19).

16:21 The phrase from then on marks a turning point. Jesus began teaching clearly and specifically what they could expect so that they would not be surprised when it happened. Contrary to what they thought, Jesus had not come to set up an earthly kingdom. He would not be the conquering Messiah because he first had to suffer and be killed. For any human king, death would be the end. Not so for Jesus. Death would only be the beginning, for he would be raised on the third day.

Jesus knew from what quarters the rejection would come: the leaders and the leading priests and the teachers of religious law. These three groups made up the Jewish council, the Jewish supreme court that ultimately sentenced Jesus to be killed (27:1). Notice that opposition came not from the people at large, but from their leaders—the very people who should have been the first to recognize and rejoice in Messiah's arrival.

16:22 This was too much for Peter. Having just confessed his heartfelt belief in Jesus, Peter certainly found it most unnerving that the king would soon be put to death. So he took Jesus aside and corrected him. Peter sought to protect Jesus from the suffering he prophesied. But if Jesus hadn't suffered and died, Peter would have died in his sins. Great temptations can come from those who love us and seek to protect us. Be cautious of advice from a friend who says, "Surely God doesn't want you to face this." Often our most difficult temptations come from those who try to protect us from discomfort.

16:23 In his wilderness temptations, Jesus had been told that he could achieve greatness without dying (4:8-9). Peter, in his rebuke of Jesus' words about dying, was saying the same thing. Trying to circumvent God's plan had been one of Satan's tools; Peter inadvertently used Satan's tool in trying to protect his beloved Master. This would be a dangerous trap to Jesus, so Jesus rebuked Peter. God's plan included suffering and death for the Messiah. Jesus would fulfill his mission exactly as planned.

16:24 Jesus invites every person to follow him; they must have a willingness to put aside selfish ambition, to shoulder their cross, and to follow.

To "put aside selfish ambition" means to surrender immediate material gratification in order to discover and secure one's true self and God's interests. It is a willingness to let go of selfish desires and earthly security. This attitude turns self-centeredness to God-centeredness. "Self" is no longer in charge; God is.

To "shoulder the cross" was a vivid illustration of the humility and submission that Jesus was asking of his followers. Death on a cross was a form of execution used by Rome for what they considered dangerous criminals. A prisoner carried his own cross to the place of execution, signifying submission to Rome's power. Following Jesus, therefore, meant identifying with Jesus and his followers, facing social and political oppression and ostracism, and no turning back. For some, taking up the cross might indeed mean death. To "follow" Christ is also a moment-by-moment decision, requiring compassion and service. Following Jesus doesn't mean walking behind him, but taking the same road of sacrifice and service that he took.

16:25 The Christian life is a paradox: To attempt to keep your life means only to lose it. A person who "saves" his or her life in order to satisfy desires and goals apart from God ultimately "loses" life. Not only does that person lose eternal life, but he or she also loses the fullness of earthly life promised to those who believe.

By contrast, those who willingly give up their lives for the sake of Christ actually find true life. To be willing to put personal desires and life itself into God's hands means to understand that nothing that we can gain on our own in our earthly lives can compare to what we gain with Christ. Jesus wants us to choose to follow him rather than to lead a life of sin and self-satisfaction. He wants us to stop trying to control our own destiny and to let him direct us. When we give our lives in service to Christ, however, we discover the real purpose of living.

16:26 To reinforce his words in 16:25, Jesus asked his listeners a rhetorical question. What good would it be for a person to gain the whole world (that is, to have power or financial control over the entire world system of which Satan is the head), but lose his or her soul (that is, to lose eternal life with God)? Every person will die, even those most powerful or most wealthy. If they have not taken care to "save" their lives for eternity with God, then they gain nothing and lose everything.

Many people spend all their energy seeking pleasure. Jesus said, however, that a world of pleasure centered on possessions, position, or power is ultimately worthless. Whatever a person has on earth is only temporary; it cannot be exchanged for his or her soul. Believers must be willing to make the pursuit of God more important than the selfish pursuit of pleasure. If we follow Jesus, we will know what it means to live abundantly now and to have eternal life as well.

16:27 Jesus, here again using the self-designation of Son of Man, said that he will come again, but at that time he will be in his exalted state as King and Judge. The judgment referred to here is positive, involving the Son of Man's loving acceptance of true disciples. While Jesus called his followers to deny themselves, take up their crosses, and follow, he also promised great reward. Their self-denial and discipleship would not be wasted. Their repayment would come in the glorious future Kingdom of God.

16:28 When Jesus said some will not die before seeing the coming of the Kingdom, he may have been referring to

- Peter, James, and John, who would witness the Transfiguration a few days later;
- those who would witness the Resurrection and Ascension;
- the Holy Spirit's coming at Pentecost; and
- all who would take part in the spread of the church after Pentecost.

Some people reading this passage have assumed that Jesus was promising that the disciples would not die before he came back to set up his glorious Kingdom. Perhaps the disciples themselves at first thought that Jesus was referring to his glorious rule on earth. But the disciples have died, so this passage must be interpreted differently. Jesus' Transfiguration, which immediately follows (17:1-13), was a preview of that coming glory. At the Transfiguration, Peter, James, and John saw Jesus' glory, identity, and power as the Son of God. Thus, certain disciples were eyewitnesses to the power and glory of Christ's Kingdom. Jesus' point was that his listeners would not have to wait for another Messiah because the Kingdom was among them, and it would soon come in power.

JESUS IS TRANSFIGURED ON THE MOUNTAIN / 17:1-13 / 111

The time frame of “six days later” ties into 16:28. If Jesus had been referring to his coming Transfiguration, then three of those with Jesus at the time (Peter, James, and John) did get a glimpse of the Kingdom during this significant event. These three disciples comprised the inner circle of the Twelve. Seeing Jesus transfigured was an unforgettable experience for Peter (see 2 Peter 1:16).

17:1-2 Jesus took the disciples up a high mountain—either Mount Hermon or Mount Tabor. A mountain was often associated with closeness to God and readiness to receive his words. God had appeared to both Moses (Exodus 24:12-18) and Elijah (1 Kings 19:8-18) on mountains. The Transfiguration was a glimpse of Jesus’ true glory, a special revelation of his divinity to Peter, James, and John. This was God’s affirmation of everything Jesus had done and was about to do. The Transfiguration clearly revealed not only that they were correct in believing Jesus to be the Messiah (16:16), but that their commitment was well placed and their eternity was secure. Jesus was truly the Messiah, the divine Son of God.

The Greek word translated “transfigured” is metamorphothe, from which we get our word “metamorphosis.” The verb refers to an outward change that comes from within. Jesus’ change was not a change merely in appearance; it was a complete change into another form. On earth, Jesus appeared as a man, a poor carpenter from Nazareth turned itinerant preacher. But at the Transfiguration, Jesus’ body was transformed into the glorious radiance that he had before coming to earth (John 17:5; Philippians 2:6) and that he will have when he returns in glory (Revelation 1:14-15).

17:3 Moses and Elijah were considered the two greatest prophets in the Old Testament. They were the primary figures associated with the Messiah (Moses was his predictor and Elijah was his precursor), and they both experienced theophanies—that is, special appearances of God (Exodus 24; 1 Kings 19). Moses represented the law, or the old covenant. He had written the Pentateuch and had predicted the coming of a great prophet (Deuteronomy 18:15-19). Elijah represented the prophets who had foretold the coming of the Messiah (Malachi 4:5-6). Moses’ and Elijah’s presence with Jesus confirmed Jesus’ messianic mission to fulfill God’s law and the words of God’s prophets (5:17). Their appearance also removed any thought that Jesus was a reincarnation of Elijah or Moses.

17:4 Peter suggested making three shrines, one for each of them. He may have thought that God's Kingdom had come when he saw Jesus' glory. Perhaps Peter had overlooked Jesus' words that suffering and death would precede glory. He saw the fulfillment of Christ's glory for a moment and wanted the experience to continue. Regardless of his motives, he had mistakenly made all three men equal. He had missed Jesus' true identity as God himself.

17:5 Just as God's voice in the cloud over Mount Sinai gave authority to his law (Exodus 19:9), God's voice at the Transfiguration gave authority to Jesus' words. A bright cloud suddenly appeared and God's voice spoke from the cloud, singling out Jesus from Moses and Elijah as the long-awaited Messiah who possessed divine authority. As he had done at Jesus' baptism, the Father was identifying Jesus as his beloved Son and the promised Messiah.

17:6-8 When the disciples heard God's voice speaking directly to them as they were enveloped by the luminous cloud, they were terrified. Throughout Scripture, the visible glory of deity creates fear (see Daniel 10:7-9). But Jesus told them not to be afraid. Peter may have wanted to keep Jesus and Elijah and Moses there in shrines on the mountainside, but his desire was wrong. The event was merely a glimpse of what was to come. Thus, when they looked up, the cloud and the prophets were gone. The disciples had to look only to Jesus. He alone was qualified to be the Savior.

17:9 Jesus instructed Peter, James, and John not to tell anyone about what they had seen, presumably not even the other disciples because they would not fully understand it, until Jesus would be raised from the dead. This is the only injunction to silence given by Jesus with a time limit. It suggests that once the temporary time limit had expired, the three would not need to keep Jesus' identity secret anymore. Furthermore, after the Resurrection, these disciples would understand the Transfiguration and be able to correctly interpret and proclaim it.

17:10 The appearance of Elijah on the mountain caused a question in the disciples' minds. Based on Malachi 4:5-6, the Jewish teachers believed that Elijah had to return before the Messiah to usher in the messianic age. Elijah had appeared on the mountain, but he had not come in person to prepare the people for the Messiah's arrival (especially in the area of repentance). The disciples fully believed that Jesus was the Messiah, but they wondered about the prophecy regarding Elijah.

17:11-13 Jesus explained to the disciples that the Jewish teachers correctly understood that Elijah would come before the Messiah and bring spiritual renewal (see Malachi 4:5-6). Elijah was supposed to come first, but Jesus explained that, in fact, Elijah had already come. Jesus was referring to John the Baptist, not to a reincarnation of the Old Testament prophet Elijah. John the Baptist had taken on Elijah's prophetic role; he boldly confronted sin and pointed people to God.

Even though the disciples had been given much power (10:8), Matthew records the failure of the disciples throughout this section (14:16-21, 26-27, 28-31; 15:16, 23, 33; 16:5, 22; 17:4, 10-22). It serves to teach that the power to heal is God's and must be appropriated by faith.

17:14-15 Jesus, Peter, James, and John came down from the mountain and returned to the other nine disciples and a huge crowd. A man had asked for mercy on his son, who had seizures and was suffering terribly. Mark gives more detail, for the man explained that he had come looking for Jesus to heal his son who was possessed by an evil spirit, making him unable to utter any sound (also he could not hear, see Mark 9:25). This was not just a case of epilepsy; it was the work of an evil spirit. The demon's destructive intent is seen in that the boy would often fall into the fire or water.

17:16 Having heard of Jesus' power to cast out demons, the father had come to Jesus, hoping for a cure for his son. He brought his son to the disciples to drive out the spirit, an appropriate request since the disciples had been given this power (10:1). But the disciples could not drive out the demon.

17:17-18 Jesus cried out in exasperation, fed up with unbelief and lack of faith. His unusual words carry a biting rebuke. The disciples had been given the authority to do the healing, but they had not yet learned how to appropriate God's power. Jesus' frustration was with the stubborn, faithless people, including the crowd, the teachers of religious law, the man, and the nine disciples. His disciples merely reflected that attitude of unbelief so prevalent in the society. Then Jesus rebuked the demon, and it came out of the boy.

17:19-21 The disciples had been unable to drive out this demon, and they asked Jesus why. They had cast out demons before; why hadn't this demon responded? Perhaps the disciples had tried to drive out the demon with their own ability rather than God's. If so, their hearts and minds were not in tune with God, so their words had no power.

Jesus pointed to the disciples' lack of faith. Jesus wasn't condemning the disciples for substandard faith; he was trying to show how important faith would be in their future ministry. It is the power of God, not our faith, that can move a mountain, but faith must be present to do so. As the mustard seed that grew into a large garden plant (13:31-32), even a small "seed" of faith is sufficient.

There is great power in even a little faith when God is with us. If we feel weak or powerless as Christians, we should examine our faith, making sure we are trusting not in our own abilities to produce results but in God's. If we are facing problems that seem as big and immovable as mountains, we must turn our eyes from the mountain and look to Christ for more faith. Then, as Jesus promised, nothing will be impossible.

Verse 21 does not appear in most modern translations because the best Greek manuscripts do not have it.

JESUS PREDICTS HIS DEATH THE SECOND TIME / 17:22-23 / 113

17:22-23 The disciples still resisted Jesus' predictions of his suffering and death. This was the second time he clearly told the disciples that he (the Son of Man) would suffer (see 16:21). Whereas Jesus had spoken before about being rejected, this time he added the element of betrayal. He again said that he would be killed and be raised from the dead. There was again the assurance of victory, although the disciples always seemed to miss this point.

PETER FINDS THE COIN IN THE FISH'S MOUTH / 17:24-27 / 114

This return to Capernaum would be Jesus' last visit prior to his death. Only Matthew records this incident—perhaps because he had been a tax collector himself.

17:24 All Jewish males (age twenty and older) had to pay a Temple tax every year (Exodus 30:11-16). The amount was equivalent to about two days' wages for the average worker. The money went for public sacrifices and then for the upkeep of the Temple. Tax collectors set up booths to collect these taxes. These tax collectors were probably the Temple commissioners who went through Palestine annually (these were not the same people who collected the Roman tax, such as Matthew). These collectors came to Peter. He may have been seen as a leader in this band of Jesus' followers, or he may have been approached because he was "head of the household" and a homeowner in Capernaum. These men asked Peter if Jesus (your teacher) would be paying the Temple tax. To not pay the tax indicated a desire to separate from the religious community.

17:25-26 Peter answered a question without really knowing the answer, thereby putting Jesus and the disciples in an awkward position. Jesus used this situation, however, to emphasize his kingly role. Jesus' question generalized the issue from the Jewish tax to all taxes. Kings collected taxes from foreigners, but never from their own people (referring to their family). If the tax is the Temple tax, then it belongs to God, and as a royal child of the king, there would be no need for Jesus to pay tax to his Father. By these words, Jesus once again established his identity as the Son of God.

17:27 Just as kings pay no taxes and collect none from their family, Jesus, the King, owed no Temple tax because he and his "children" belonged to another Kingdom. But Jesus supplied the tax payment for both himself and Peter rather than offend those who didn't understand his kingship. Jesus taught his disciples that at times it would be important to submit for the sake of their witness. (See also Romans 13:1-7; 1 Timothy 2:1-3; Titus 3:1-3, 8; 1 Peter 2:13-17.)

THE DISCIPLES ARGUE ABOUT WHO WOULD BE THE GREATEST / 18:1-6 / 115

All believers are presently part of the Kingdom, yet the consummation of that Kingdom is still in the future. In the meantime, we must learn to live together in a way that pleases God. In this chapter, Matthew included a fourth discourse that deals with life in the community of believers.

18:1 The opening phrase about that time ties this event to the previous teaching (17:24-27). The disciples wondered about this coming Kingdom of which Jesus would be the king. In addition, Jesus' talk of his coming death probably made them wonder how they were to run the Kingdom in his absence. The disciples were naturally curious about their position in the coming Kingdom. This question, "Which of us is greatest?" also may have been fueled by the special privileges given to Peter, James, and John at various times—most recently their trip with Jesus to the mountain and then their silence about what had happened there (17:1-9).

18:2-4 To answer the disciples' question, Jesus called a small child over to him. The disciples needed to become as little children. Jesus wanted them to change their attitude toward greatness. The disciples had become preoccupied with the organization of an earthly kingdom and were seeking positions of advantage. Jesus used a child to help his self-centered disciples get the point. They were to have servant attitudes, not being "childish" (arguing over petty issues) but "childlike," with humble and sincere hearts. God's people are called to humility and unconcern for social status. Those who persist in pride and "ladder climbing" for the sake of status in this world will never get into the Kingdom of Heaven. By contrast, those who, in humility, realize their need of a Savior, accept him, and move into the world to serve, not only enter the Kingdom but will be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. True humility means to deny oneself, to accept a position of servanthood, and to completely follow the Master.

18:5 Jesus was also teaching the disciples to welcome children. This was a new approach in a society where children were usually treated as second-class citizens. Jesus equated the attitude of welcoming children with a willingness to receive him. An attitude that welcomes a little child like this readily welcomes and embraces believers of little worldly importance and low status. This shows an attitude that also welcomes the Savior, for he too was of little worldly importance and of low status. In God's Kingdom, greatness lies in acceptance of and dependence upon the Savior. Together in the church, believers are to welcome and love one another, encourage one another, allow everyone a place to shine according to their gifts, and appreciate one another.

18:6 As in 18:5, these little ones refers not just to children but to Jesus' "little ones"—the disciples. Jesus warned that anyone who turns people away from him will receive severe punishment. A millstone was a heavy, flat stone used to grind grain. To have a millstone tied around one's neck and then be thrown into the sea meant certain death by drowning. Even the horror of such a death was minor compared to what this person would face in eternity.

JESUS WARNS AGAINST TEMPTATION / 18:7-9 / 117

With strong language (not meant to promote self-mutilation), Jesus described how the disciples should renounce anything that would cause them to sin or turn away from the faith.

18:7 Jesus described two terrible situations in the verse. First, it will be terrible for anyone who causes others to sin. Second, it will be terrible for the person who does the tempting. Jesus' followers face constant temptations from the world to do evil. Yet this does not excuse those individuals who are the cause of stumbling. This responsibility to lead people correctly applies to individuals, churches, and institutions. No person or organization should lead people astray into sin.

18:8-9 The action of surgically cutting sin out of their lives should be prompt and complete in order to keep them from sin. All who desire to follow Jesus must remove any stumbling blocks that cause sin. Jesus did not mean to literally cut off a part of the body; he meant that any relationship, practice, or activity that leads to sin should be stopped. As a person would submit to losing a diseased appendage (hands or feet) or a sense (sight) in order to save his or her life, so believers should be just as willing to "cut off" any temptation, habit, or part of their nature that could lead them to hold on to this world and turn away from Christ and into sin. Just cutting off a limb that committed sin or gouging out an eye that looked lustfully would still not get rid of sin, for that must begin in the heart and mind. Jesus was saying that people need to take drastic action to keep from stumbling. The reason? Jesus explained that it would be better to have lost some worldly possession, attitude, or action than to keep it and be thrown into hell. This is true, radical discipleship. While no person will be completely sin-free until eternity, God wants an attitude that renounces sin instead of one that holds on to sin.

JESUS WARNS AGAINST LOOKING DOWN ON OTHERS / 18:10-14 / 118

This verse is found only in Matthew and bridges from the concept of leading the little ones astray to seeking them when they do go astray (see also 18:6).

18:10-11 Little ones can refer to both children and disciples. The words don't despise pointed directly at the pious religious leaders who showed nothing but contempt for those below them on the "spiritual ladder" (see, for example, Luke 18:9-14 about the Pharisee and the tax collector). The reason the "little ones" should not be despised is because in heaven their angels are always in the presence of my heavenly Father. Some have seen in these verses the concept of guardian angels. These words neither prove nor condemn the concept. Being in God's presence means having access to God, so these angels are ministering angels (see Hebrews 1:14). The Old Testament does not speak about guardian angels assigned to God's people, but it does speak of angelic intercession and help (as in Psalm 91:11). Also, in Daniel 10:10-14, angels watch over nations. The meaning here is that God's people are constantly represented before the Father; therefore, each one of us has special importance (see Hebrews 1:14).

Verse 11 is not found in the earliest and best manuscripts; therefore, it is not included in most modern versions.

18:12 Jesus was addressing his disciples, reminding them that God's care extends to each of his "little ones" (here portrayed as sheep). If a sheep should go astray from the flock, God, like a protective shepherd, will go out into the hills to search for the lost one. God is concerned about every single believer and will actively go in search of those who have "gone astray" (meaning they have gotten out of a right relationship with him, are heading toward false teaching, are heading down a dangerous path in life, or are falling into sin).

18:13-14 The sheep went astray, but the shepherd sought after it. The Father does not want any of his flock to wander away. God so loves each of his followers that, should they go astray, he actively seeks and rejoices when they return to him. A sheep that is not "found" (that is, one that willingly refuses faith) will face a consequence—that sheep will perish. But God does not want that to happen. He will rejoice over a "lost" person who is "found!" And God wants faithful believers to be part of the rescue team. Our follow-through care of new Christians, our small group ministry, and our individual contact with fellow believers should demonstrate the Great Shepherd's care for his sheep.

JESUS TEACHES HOW TO TREAT A BELIEVER WHO SINS / 18:15-20 / 119

The thrust of the parable in 18:12-14 leads naturally into the area of discipline. Note that the rigid use of excommunication (18:8-9) was muted by the law of love, which seeks to bring the straying believer back into the fold.

18:15 These are Jesus' guidelines for dealing with those who sin against us. These guidelines were meant for Christians and for discipline and conflict resolution in the context of the church. These steps are designed to reconcile church members who disagree, so that the church body can live in harmony.

Jesus explained that the person who has been offended must first go privately and point out the fault. A personal confrontation, carried out in love, will allow the sinning member the opportunity to correct himself. However, the person doing the confronting ought to be very certain of his accusation and that he is doing this out of true humility with a view to restoration of the other (see Galatians 6:1-4). Many misunderstandings and hurt feelings can be solved at this stage, but this is not a license for a frontal attack on every person who hurts or slights us. Personal action saves church leaders from getting involved in everyone's personal concerns. Personal confrontation also keeps believers from gossiping with one another. Instead, believers are to be mature enough to go directly to the source and deal with the problem at that level.

18:16 If the personal confrontation yields nothing, then the confronter is to proceed to step two. In this step, he takes one or two others along. This is backed up by Old Testament Law (see Deuteronomy 19:15). These "others" also ought to help in reconciliation at this second meeting, hoping to settle the matter privately. An erring person might be willing to listen to the wise counsel of these others. In addition, they serve as witnesses to this meeting.

18:17 If the additional witnesses can accomplish no reconciliation and the person still refuses to listen, then the third step is to take the case to the church. The objective at this point still is not disciplinary action but helping the sinning person to see his or her fault, repent, and be restored. But even the law of love has its limit. The fourth and last step is to disassociate with that person. The goal, even through this difficult act, is to help the person see his or her sin and repent. Paul recommended such action to the church in Corinth (see 1 Corinthians 5:1-13; 2 Corinthians 2:5-11; 2 Thessalonians 3:14-15). The person should be treated as a pagan or a corrupt tax collector.

While all people in the church are “sinners saved by grace,” and while no church will ever be free of members who commit sin, the person described here has a huge blind spot to sin, and many people can see it. Yet this person refuses to listen to those whom God sends to help. In the church, believers are to teach, challenge, encourage, admonish, help, and love each other. But there can be no true fellowship with a believer who commits sin and refuses the loving guidance of his or her fellow church members.

18:18 This verse parallels the similar authority given to Peter and the disciples in 16:19. Here the authority belongs to the church—the word you is plural. What they prohibit and what they allow refer to the decisions of the church in conflicts and discipline. Among believers, there is no court of appeals beyond the church. Ideally, the church’s decisions should be God-guided and based on discernment of his word. Believers have the responsibility, therefore, to bring their problems to the church, and the church has the responsibility to use God’s guidance in seeking to discipline members.

18:19-20 In context, the application of this verse applies to matters of church discipline. Two people agree, and God stands among them as they work through their disagreement. If the matter must go before the church, God is there helping those in agreement to deal with the sinning member as they ought. Indeed, God may be using the people to “chase down the lost sheep,” so to speak, and bring him or her back “into the fold.”

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE UNFORGIVING DEBTOR / 18:21-35 / 120

At this point, the perspective shifts to showing God’s grace and how ridiculous it is for us to withhold forgiveness from those who sin against us.

18:21 Peter asked Jesus a question commonly discussed in rabbinic debates. The common answer was that it was considered sufficient to forgive three times. Peter may have chosen the number seven not only to indicate generosity, but also because the number seven is commonly used in the Bible to communicate completeness.

18:22 Jesus’ answer did not mean his followers ought to keep count up to seventy times seven; rather, this statement means not to keep track of numbers at all. There ought to be no limit to a believer's willingness to forgive another believer (within the confines of the steps set out above in helping to restore straying believers, 18:15-20). All believers ought to willingly forgive, for all believers have already been forgiven far beyond their comprehension, as the following parable shows.

18:23-24 This parable is recorded only in Matthew and illustrates the need for unlimited forgiveness in the body of Christ. A king decided that he wanted to go over the books with his accountant. This first man found himself in debt for a huge sum of money.

18:25 The man couldn't pay the king the millions that he owed, so the king ordered that he, his family, and his possessions be sold to pay the debt. The sale of family as well as possessions to pay debts was common in ancient times.

18:26-27 The man humbly fell down before the king and begged for patience. The merciful king was filled with pity, released him and forgave his debt. This highly unlikely turn of events would have surprised Jesus' listeners. What an incredible load must have been taken from his shoulders! Unfortunately, the story doesn't end here.

18:28-31 The king had forgiven a debt of millions of dollars and had let his servant go free. But when that servant left, he went to a fellow servant who owed him a few thousand dollars. He grabbed him by the throat and demanded instant payment. The thousands he was owed was a significant amount, but compared to the millions, it was extremely small. The fellow servant also begged for patience but was refused, arrested, and jailed until the debt could be paid.

Compared to what the first servant had been forgiven, his refusal to forgive another was appalling. Apparently other servants (other court officials) thought his behavior was appalling as well, so they went to the king and told him what had happened.

18:32-33 For some reason, the first servant just didn't understand. After being forgiven millions of dollars, he threw into prison a fellow servant who owed him a few thousand. But before he continued too far on his merry way, he found himself summoned back to the king. The king, who had been so merciful, angrily reproved the servant for accepting forgiveness and then being unwilling to extend forgiveness to another. The servant should have had mercy on his fellow servant.

18:34 The king was so angry that he sent the man to prison. Because this man would not forgive another, the king decided not to forgive his debt either. Instead, the man would be imprisoned until he had paid every penny. This man effectively received a life sentence.

18:35 The king in the parable represents the heavenly Father and pictures his role as judge. In the context of interchurch discipline, the parable could underscore the corporate responsibility of the church to deal righteously with erring members. This includes harsh judgment on those who hurt the fellowship by refusing to forgive one another. But because God has forgiven all our sins, we should not withhold forgiveness from others. Realizing how completely Christ has forgiven us should produce a free and generous attitude of forgiveness toward others. When we don't forgive others, we are saying that we appreciate God's love and forgiveness but that we're unwilling to give it to anyone else.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE / 19:1-12 / 173

Both Matthew and Mark note the geographic shift in Jesus' ministry from Galilee to Judea and the area east of the Jordan River. John the Baptist had ministered there, and crowds had come to Jesus from the region earlier (see Mark 3:8). Jesus continued his ministry, but he was moving toward his death in Jerusalem.

19:1-3 The Pharisees hoped to trap Jesus by getting him to choose sides in a theological controversy regarding divorce. The debate focused on Moses' words about divorce in Deuteronomy 24:1-4. Some thought a man could divorce his wife for almost any reason. Others thought that a man could divorce his wife only if she had been unfaithful to him. If Jesus were to support divorce, he would be upholding the Pharisees' procedures; they doubted that Jesus would do that. If Jesus were to choose sides in the controversy, some members of the crowd would dislike his position, for some may have used the law to their advantage to divorce their wives. Or, if he were to speak against divorce altogether, he would appear to be speaking against Moses.

19:4-6 The Pharisees had quoted Moses' writings in Deuteronomy; Jesus also quoted from Moses' writings (Genesis 1:27; 2:24), but he went back to Genesis, the beginning, referring to the ideal state of creation and particularly of marriage. In creating male and female, God's plan was that in marriage the husband and wife are united into one. The wife is not property, but a person created in God's image. Jesus drew a distinction: God's creation of marriage and his absolute command that it be a permanent union versus the provisions written hundreds of years later that tolerated divorce because of people's utter sinfulness (19:8). The Pharisees regarded Deuteronomy 24:1 as a proof text for divorce. But Jesus focused on marriage rather than divorce. The Pharisees regarded divorce as a legal issue rather than a spiritual one; marriage and divorce were merely transactions similar to buying and selling land (with women being treated as property). But Jesus condemned this attitude, clarifying God's original intention; that marriage bring unity that no one should separate.

19:7-8 The Pharisees asked why Moses allowed divorce. They wondered if Jesus was saying that Moses had written laws contrary to God's commands. In reality, Moses had instituted divorce laws to help its victims. Under Jewish law, only a husband could initiate and carry out a divorce. The civil laws protected the women, who, in that culture, were quite vulnerable when living alone. Because of Moses' law, a man could no longer just throw his wife out—he had to write an official letter of divorce so she could remarry and reclaim her dowry. This was a major step toward civil rights for women, for it made a man think twice before sending his wife away. Moses' words gave protection to the wife and limited abuses of divorce.

In Moses' time, as well as in Jesus' day and today, the practice of marriage fell far short of God's intention. Jesus said that Moses permitted divorce only because of people's hard-hearted wickedness, referring to a stubborn, willful attitude. Many refused to follow through with their marriages as God had intended, so God allowed divorce as a concession to their sinfulness. Jesus turned the Pharisees' "test" question back on them by using it as an opportunity to review God's intended purpose for marriage and to expose their spiteful motives in testing Jesus.

19:9 Jesus had clearly explained that divorce dissolves a divinely formed union. Some men were divorcing in order to get remarried. The rabbis' interpretation of Moses' law permitted remarriage after divorce, but Jesus explained that marriage after divorce is adultery. However, he gave one exception: unless the wife has been unfaithful (see also 5:32). Scholars agree that Jesus' words refer to both husbands and wives; that is, the unfaithfulness of one could be grounds for divorce by the other (see Mark 10:12).

While the application of Jesus' words requires interpretation to specific situations, one truth is inescapable: God created marriage to be a sacred, permanent union and partnership between husband and wife. When both husband and wife enter this union with that understanding and commitment, they can provide security for each other, a stable home for their children, and strength to weather any of life's storms or stresses.

19:10 The disciples believed Jesus upheld such an impossible standard that it would be better for people not to marry than to enter into the covenant of marriage. It seemed better not to make the vow than to make the vow and not be able to keep it.

19:11-12 The high ideal of marriage was not for everyone, but only those whom God helps. Those given that responsibility are expected to adhere to it. There are some to whom this gift of marriage is not given. A "eunuch" is an emasculated male—a man with no testicles. Some are born as eunuchs, who perhaps had physical limitations that prevented their marrying. Others were made that way by others, such as those servants who, in ancient cultures, were castrated in order to serve the master without sexual distractions. Some choose not to marry for the sake of the Kingdom of Heaven, voluntarily remaining abstinent because, in their particular situation, they could serve God better as single people. Jesus himself would be in this category, as was the apostle Paul.

JESUS BLESSES THE CHILDREN / 19:13-15 / 174

Jesus wanted little children to come to him because he loves them and because they have the kind of attitude needed to approach God. He didn't mean that heaven is only for children but that people need childlike attitudes of trust in God. The receptiveness of little children was a great contrast to the stubbornness of the religious leaders who let their education and sophistication stand in the way of the simple faith needed to believe in Jesus.

19:13-15 It was customary for people to bring their children to a rabbi for a blessing. Thus people were bringing children to Jesus so that he could lay his hands on them and pray for them. The disciples thought the children were unworthy of the Master's time. In the first century, Jewish households were patriarchal—men came first, followed by women and children. The disciples apparently viewed these parents and children as an intrusion and a drain of time and energy. So they told the people not to bother Jesus with their children.

Jesus told his disciples to let the children come because the Kingdom of Heaven belongs to such as these. The disciples must have forgotten what Jesus had said about children earlier (see 18:4-6). Anyone of any age who exhibits such faith and trust is promised access to Jesus and to the Kingdom.

JESUS SPEAKS TO THE RICH YOUNG MAN / 19:16-30 / 175

While the children came readily to Jesus, a rich young man had difficulty. He wanted to get close, but he wanted to do so on his own terms. To this man seeking assurance of eternal life, Jesus pointed out that salvation does not come from good deeds but from submitting humbly to the lordship of Christ.

19:16 A man ran up to Jesus who wanted to be sure he would receive eternal life. He asked what good things he should do to get it. He viewed eternal life as something that one achieves.

19:17-19 At first, Jesus did not address the man's question but, instead, challenged him to think about God. Goodness is not measured by one's works; in fact, only God is good. Jesus wanted the man to turn his attention from himself and instead think about God's absolute goodness.

In response to the young man's question about how to have eternal life, Jesus told him to keep the commandments, and then he listed five of the Ten Commandments (numbers five through nine) and added Leviticus 19:18 (love your neighbor as yourself)—all referring to relationships with others.

19:20 The man sincerely believed that he had obeyed all these commandments, yet he felt that something was lacking. The powerful lesson here is that even if a person could keep all these commandments perfectly, which this man claimed to have done, there would still be a lack of assurance of salvation. The answer was that keeping the commandments perfectly could not save anyone—for obedience is not a matter of law keeping, it is a matter of the heart. This was a mind-bending revelation to this young man and to all of Jesus' listeners.

19:21 Jesus' words, if you want to be perfect, can be translated, "if you want to be mature or full-grown." The man said he had never once broken any of the laws Jesus mentioned, so he may have felt that he had attained a certain level of perfection. But the law was not the standard of perfection, God was. Jesus lovingly broke through the man's pride by pointing out that despite his self-proclaimed obedience, he still had a long way to go in understanding what God desired. Jesus told him, "Sell all you have and give the money to the poor." This challenge exposed the barrier that could keep this man out of the Kingdom: his love of money. Ironically, his attitude made him unable to keep the first commandment, one that Jesus did not quote: "Do not worship any other gods besides me" (Exodus 20:3). The young man did not love God with his whole heart as he had presumed. In reality, his many possessions were his god, his idol. If he could not give these up, he would be violating the first commandment.

The task of selling all his possessions would not, of itself, give the man eternal life. But such radical obedience would be the first step for this man to become a follower of Jesus. The man thought he needed to do more; Jesus explained that there was plenty more he could do, but not in order to obtain eternal life. Instead, he needed an attitude adjustment toward his wealth. By putting his treasure in heaven and following Jesus along the road of selflessness and service to others, the man could be assured of his eternal destiny.

19:22 This man's many possessions made his life comfortable and gave him power and prestige. When Jesus told him to sell everything he owned, Jesus was touching the very basis of the man's security and identity. He could not meet the one requirement that Jesus gave—to turn his whole heart and life over to God. The one assurance he wanted, eternal life, was unattainable because he deemed the price too high. The man came to Jesus wondering what he could do; he left seeing what he was unable to do. How tragic—to be possessed by possessions and miss the opportunity to be with Jesus.

19:23-24 Jesus looked at his disciples and taught them a lesson from this incident with the rich young man. Jesus explained that it was very hard for a rich person to get into the Kingdom of Heaven (not impossible, but hard). Jesus used a common Jewish proverb of a camel unable to go through the eye of a needle to describe the difficulty of the rich entering God's Kingdom. Wealth can be a stumbling block. The rich, with most of their basic physical needs met, often become self-reliant. When they feel empty, they can buy something new to dull the pain that was meant to drive them toward God. Their abundance and self-sufficiency become their deficiency. People who have everything on earth can still lack what is most important—eternal life.

19:25-26 The disciples wondered what Jesus meant. The Jews looked upon wealth as a blessing from God, a reward for being good, a sign of his special favor. If the rich—those who from the disciples' vantage point seemed to be first in line for salvation—cannot be saved, then who in the world can be saved?

In reality, it is not just the rich who have difficulty, for salvation is not possible for anyone from a human standpoint. No one can be saved by his or her wealth, achievements, talents, or good deeds: Humanly speaking, it is impossible. But the situation is not hopeless, for God has an entirely different plan: With God everything is possible. Salvation cannot be earned; God gives it to us as a gift.

19:27 Peter mentioned that the disciples had given up everything to follow Jesus. Peter's question, "What will we get out of it?" emphasizes that the disciples had done the ultimate in self-denial and had followed Jesus' call. While Peter's question seems somewhat selfish, he was merely thinking about rewards from the standpoint of his Jewish background. In the Old Testament, God rewarded his people according to his justice, and obedience often brought reward in this life (Deuteronomy 28). But Jesus explained to Peter that obedience and immediate reward are not always linked. If they were, good people would always be rich, and suffering would always be a sign of sin. The disciples' true reward (and ours) was God's presence and power through the Holy Spirit. The reward also includes the assurance of salvation and eternal life (an assurance that the rich young man lacked, 19:20). Later, in eternity, God will reward his people for faith and service (see 5:12).

19:28 Peter and the other disciples had paid a high price—leaving their homes and jobs—to follow Jesus. But Jesus reminded them that following him has its benefits as well as its sacrifices. The Jews looked forward to a restoration at the messianic age at the end of the world based on Old Testament prophecy (Isaiah 65:17; 66:22). They believed that a golden age similar to the days when David ruled the kingdom would be restored. This would occur when the Son of Man is seated on his glorious throne in the Kingdom. Jesus made it clear that this was an event still in the future. The disciples had been hoping that it would happen immediately, but Jesus’ constant talk of his coming death made them wonder what would happen to them in this whole scenario and who would rule in Jesus’ absence.

Jesus clarified that the time would come when he would rule. They, in turn, would sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. This may refer to the apostles ruling the tribes of Israel at Christ’s return. The exact time and nature of that role is not specified. But it may also picture the disciples overseeing the church, which will have a prominent place in God’s plan.

19:29 Jesus assured the disciples that anyone who gave up something valuable for his sake would be repaid a hundred times over, although not necessarily in the same form. For example, someone may be rejected by his or her family for accepting Christ, but he or she will gain the larger family of believers with all the love it has to offer.

Here is the answer to the rich young ruler’s question about how to obtain eternal life. Jesus explained that by submitting to his authority and rule, making him top priority over all else, and giving up anything that hinders following him, each person can have eternal life. For the rich young man, that meant giving up money as his idol. For each person the sacrifice may be different, though no less difficult. We may have little or much, but are we willing to give it all up in order to have eternal life?

19:30 Jesus had already shown that the “greatest” are like “little children” (18:1-4). In the world to come, the values of this world will be reversed. Those who believe but who still seek to be important here on earth will be the least in heaven. Jesus may have been referring to the disciples’ mixed-up motives. They had given up everything and hoped for rewards and for status in God’s Kingdom. Jesus explained that yearning for position would cause them to lose any position they might have. Christ's disciples who have humbly served others are most qualified to be great in heaven. Rewards in heaven are not given on the basis of merit or "time served" or other earthly standards. What matters in heaven is a person's commitment to Christ. Radical discipleship is a willingness to follow totally and accept the consequences, a willingness to surrender everything to and for the service of Christ. It is the only path to reward.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE VINEYARD WORKERS / 20:1-16 / 176

This parable further explains Jesus' words in 19:30 explaining the "first and last" saying by focusing on the landowner's generosity in welcoming everyone into his field. Jesus further clarified the membership rules of the Kingdom of Heaven—entrance is by God's grace alone.

20:1-7 In this parable, God is the owner, believers are the workers, and the vineyard is the Kingdom of Heaven. The landowner went out early one morning to find some workers to whom he agreed to pay the normal daily wage. Then the owner went out again at nine o'clock in the morning and hired more workers. They agreed to be paid whatever was right at the end of the day. He did the same thing at noon and again at five o'clock that evening. These last men were willing to work for that last hour, even though they would not earn much money.

20:8-10 At evening (referring to sunset), the workers were called to collect the day's wages. This was required by Jewish law so that the poor would not go hungry (see Leviticus 19:13; Deuteronomy 24:14-15). The landowner paid a full day's wage even to those hired at five o'clock. When those who worked less time received a full day's wage, the laborers who had been hired earlier and had worked throughout the day assumed they would receive more.

20:11-15 Everyone who had been hired during the day received the same amount, no matter what time they started. This caused complaint from those who had worked all day in the hot sun. "Those people worked only one hour, and yet you've paid them just as much," they protested. The owner explained, however, that he had not done wrong by the workers who had worked hard all day; he had paid them the amount they had agreed upon. Obviously, the landowner could pay whatever he chose as long as he cheated no one. Why should they be angry because he had been kind?

In this parable, Jesus pointed out that salvation is not earned, but given freely only because of God's great generosity, which goes far beyond our human ideas of what is fair. The message of the parable is that God's loving mercy accepts the lowest member of society on an equal footing with the elite. This parable may have been addressed in the presence of the religious leaders who “grumbled” because Jesus chose the “lowly” disciples and spent time with those considered unclean and sinful (Luke 15:1-2). Those who come to God—regardless of social strata, age, material wealth, or heritage, and no matter when in life they come—will all be accepted by him on an equal footing. Such generosity, such grace, ought to cause all believers great joy.

20:16 The reversal noted in these words (and in 19:30) points out the differences between this life and life in the Kingdom. Many people we don’t expect to see in the Kingdom will be there. The criminal who repented as he was dying (Luke 23:40-43) will be there, along with people who have believed and served God for many years. God offers his Kingdom to all kinds of people everywhere. God’s grace accepts the world’s outcasts. No one has a claim to position in the Kingdom; God will make the appointments—the last and first places cannot be earned, bought, or bargained for (see 20:20-23).

JESUS PREDICTS HIS DEATH THE THIRD TIME / 20:17-19 / 177

Jesus and the disciples continued toward Jerusalem. Jesus led the way, determined to go to the city where he knew he would die (see also Luke 9:51).

20:17-19 Jesus had just spoken to the disciples about facing persecution and had told them of his impending death twice before (see 16:21; 17:22, 23). However, this is the first mention of it occurring in Jerusalem itself, of the involvement of Romans, and that he would be crucified. Jesus clearly explained what would happen to him, but the disciples didn’t really grasp what he was saying. Certainly they did not want to believe that he might die. Jesus said he was the Messiah, but they thought the Messiah would be a conquering king. Instead, Jesus clearly explained that he, the Son of Man, the human being who was also the Messiah, God’s Son, would be betrayed to the Jewish leaders.

Jesus added that on the third day, he would be raised from the dead, but the disciples heard only his words about death. Because Jesus often spoke in parables, the disciples may have thought that his words on death and resurrection were another parable they weren’t astute enough to understand. The Gospel records of Jesus’ predictions of his death and resurrection show that these events were God’s plan from the beginning and not accidents (see, for example, Psalm 22:6-8; Isaiah 50:6; 52:13–53:12).

Matthew created a dual contrast by including Jesus’ comment on his impending death between the section on rewards and eternal life and the request from the mother of James and John. The consistent misunderstanding represents a pattern of response to Jesus. He shattered the expectations and interpretations of others. How often do our prayers evoke the same response from God? We hardly ever know what we're asking. Fortunately, God isn't bound by our requests. He lovingly edits our prayers. So, ask what you will today for yourself and for others, but remember that God will always do what is best.

20:20 As the disciples followed Jesus toward Jerusalem, they knew he believed he would die—he had told them three times. What was to become of his Kingdom? Who would be in charge after his death? Among themselves, the disciples were arguing about this issue. Then the mother of James and John came to ask a favor of Jesus. She was apparently among Jesus' regular followers who were not part of the Twelve. She was at the cross when Jesus was crucified (27:56). Some have suggested that she was the sister of Mary, the mother of Jesus. Thus, she and her sons may have hoped that their close family relationship would lend weight to their request. Also, James and John were brothers who, along with Peter, made up the inner circle of disciples (17:1).

20:21 In ancient royal courts, the persons chosen to sit at the right and left hands of the king were highly honored. James and John's mother wanted her sons to sit beside Christ in the most honored places in the Kingdom. They all understood that Jesus would have a Kingdom; however, until after the Resurrection, none of them fully understood that Jesus' Kingdom was not of this world; it was not centered in palaces and thrones, but in the hearts and lives of his followers.

20:22 Jesus responded that in making such a self-centered request, they did not know what they were asking. To request positions of highest honor meant also to request deep suffering, for they could not have one without the other. Jesus asked first if they were able to drink from the bitter cup of sorrow that he would drink. The "cup" to which Jesus referred is the same "cup" that he would mention in his prayer in Gethsemane (26:39). It is the cup of suffering that he would have to drink in order to accomplish salvation for sinners. Jesus' "cup" of suffering was unique and only he could drink the particular "cup" that would accomplish salvation. Jesus was asking James and John if they were ready to suffer for the sake of the Kingdom. James and John replied that they were able to drink the cup. Their answer may not have revealed bravado or pride as much as it showed their willingness to follow Jesus whatever the cost. However, their desertion of Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane revealed how unready they really were for what this “cup” entailed (26:56).

20:23 Jesus said these two disciples would indeed drink from the cup of suffering. James died as a martyr (Acts 12:2); John lived through many years of persecution before being forced to live the last years of his life in exile (Revelation 1:9).

Although Jesus knew that these two disciples would face great suffering, this still did not mean that he would grant their request for great honor. Suffering is the price of greatness, but it is the price required to follow Christ at all. They would follow and they would suffer, but they would not thereby sit at his right and left in the Kingdom. Jesus would not make that decision; instead, his Father has prepared those places for the ones he has chosen. Although Jesus will distribute eternal rewards (2 Timothy 4:8), he will do so according to the Father’s decisions. Jesus showed by this statement that he was under the authority of the Father, who alone makes the decisions about leadership in heaven. Such rewards are not granted as favors. They are reserved for those whom God selects.

Jesus didn’t ridicule James and John for asking, but he denied their request. We can feel free to ask God for anything, but our requests may be denied. God wants to give us what is best for us, not merely what we want.

20:24-25 The ten other disciples were indignant that James and John had tried to use their relationship with Jesus to grab the top positions. Why such anger? Probably because all the disciples desired honor in the Kingdom. Perhaps Peter, his temper getting the best of him, led the indignant ten disciples, for he had been the third with James and John in the group closest to Jesus. This probably seemed like a real slight to him. The disciples’ attitudes degenerated into pure jealousy and rivalry.

Jesus immediately corrected their attitudes, for they would never accomplish the mission to which he had called them if they did not love and serve one another, working together for the sake of the Kingdom. So he patiently called his disciples together and explained to them the difference between the kingdoms they saw in the world and God’s Kingdom, which they had not yet experienced.

The Gentile kingdoms (an obvious example being the Roman Empire) have leaders who lord it over people, exercising authority and demanding submission (see 1 Peter 5:1-3). In Gentile kingdoms, people’s greatness depended on their social standing or family name. But Jesus explained that his Kingdom would be completely different.

20:26-28 In a sentence, Jesus taught the essence of true greatness: Whoever wants to be a leader among you must be your servant. Greatness is determined by servanthood. The true leader places his or her needs last, as Jesus exemplified in his life and in his death. Being a “servant” did not mean occupying a servile position; rather, it meant having an attitude of life that freely attended to others’ needs without expecting or demanding anything in return. Servant leaders appreciate others’ worth and realize that they’re not above any job. Seeking honor, respect, and the attention of others runs contrary to Jesus’ requirements for his servants. Jesus described leadership from a new perspective. Instead of using people, we are to serve them.

Jesus’ mission was to serve others and to give his life away. A real leader has a servant’s heart. The disciples must be willing to serve because their Master set the example. Jesus explained that he came here not to be served but to serve others. Jesus’ mission was to serve—ultimately by giving his life in order to save sinful humanity. His life wasn’t “taken”; he “gave” it by offering it up as a sacrifice for people’s sins. A ransom was the price paid to release a slave from bondage. Jesus paid a ransom for us, and the demanded price was his life. Jesus took our place; he died the death we deserved.

JESUS HEALS TWO BLIND BEGGARS / 20:29-34 / 179

Jesus and the disciples were on the way out of Jericho, continuing southward toward Jerusalem. The Old Testament city of Jericho had been destroyed by the Israelites (Joshua 6:20), but during Herod the Great’s rule over Palestine, he had rebuilt the city (about a mile south of the original city) as a site for his winter palace. Jericho was a popular and wealthy resort city, not far from the Jordan River, about eighteen miles northeast of Jerusalem.

20:29-31 These two blind men were sitting beside the road begging. The blind men heard that Jesus was at the head of an approaching crowd. In order to be heard above the din, they began shouting for Jesus’ attention. They had undoubtedly heard that Jesus had healed many (including blind people—see 9:29-31), and they hoped that Jesus would have mercy on them and heal their eyes. There were no healings of the blind in the Old Testament; the Jews believed that such a miracle would be a sign that the messianic age had begun (Isaiah 29:18; 35:5).

The crowd tried to get the men to be quiet. It was most natural for the people, even Jesus’ disciples, to attempt to shield Jesus from being harassed by beggars. But this only caused the men to shout louder. They kept on crying out in an attempt to gain Jesus’ attention.

20:32-34 Although Jesus was concerned about the coming events in Jerusalem, he demonstrated what he had just told the disciples about service (20:26-28) by stopping to care for the blind men. Blindness was considered a curse from God for sin (John 9:2), but such an idea did not hinder Jesus. Because Jesus probably knew what the men wanted, his question was not to gain information, but to allow them to specify their need and, in the process, to declare their faith that Jesus could meet that need. The result of the blind men's request was that Jesus touched their eyes and instantly they could see.

JESUS RIDES INTO JERUSALEM ON A DONKEY / 21:1-11 / 183

This was the first day of the week that Jesus would be crucified (commonly known now as Palm Sunday), and the great Passover festival was about to begin. Jews would come to Jerusalem from all over the Roman world during this week-long celebration to remember the great Exodus from Egypt (see Exodus 12:37-51). Matthew concentrated chapters 21 and 22 in the Temple area to show Jesus' authority and superiority over the Jewish leaders and their way of thinking.

21:1-5 The Mount of Olives is a ridge about two and a half miles long on the other side of the Kidron Valley east of Jerusalem. The Mount of Olives is important in the Old Testament as the place of God's final revelation and judgment (see Ezekiel 43:2-9; Zechariah 14:1-19).

Jesus was in Bethphage and sent two disciples to a nearby village (probably Bethany) to get the donkey and her colt and bring them back. When Jesus entered Jerusalem on a donkey's colt, he affirmed his messianic royalty, as well as his humility. The people recognized that he was fulfilling prophecy. The first part comes from Isaiah 62:11, the rest from Zechariah 9:9.

21:6-8 The colt, never having been ridden (Mark 11:2), did not have a saddle, so the disciples threw their garments over the colt so that Jesus could sit on it. The action of placing the cloaks on the donkey and Jesus riding it connotes majesty (see 2 Kings 9:13). Crowds of people had already gathered on this stretch of road a mile outside of Jerusalem, going to the city for the festival. The crowd's spontaneous celebration honored Jesus as they spread their coats on the road ahead of Jesus and cut branches from the trees. Some were spread along Jesus' path; others were probably waved in the air (see Psalm 118:27). The branches, probably from olive or fig trees, were used to welcome a national liberator and symbolized victory. This verse is one of the few places where the Gospels record that Jesus' glory was recognized on earth. Today Christians celebrate this event on Palm Sunday.

21:9 The crowds chanted words from Psalm 118:25-26. "Long live the King" was the meaning behind their joyful shouts because they knew that Jesus was intentionally fulfilling prophecy. This was the crowd's acclamation that he was indeed the long-awaited Messiah. The people were sure their liberation from Rome was at hand. While the crowd correctly saw Jesus as the fulfillment of these prophecies, they did not understand where Jesus' kingship would lead him. They expected him to be a national leader who would restore their nation to its former glory; thus, they were deaf to the words of their prophets and blind to Jesus' real mission. When it became apparent that Jesus was not going to fulfill their hopes, many people would turn against him. Another crowd would cry out, "Crucify him!" when Jesus stood on trial only a few days later.

21:10-11 The people in Jerusalem were naturally very interested in who was causing the furor. When Jesus had been born and the wise men had come seeking him, the entire city had been "disturbed" (2:3). Once again, Jesus caused a great disturbance in this great city. To the question, "Who is this?" came the reply, "It's Jesus, the prophet from Nazareth in Galilee." But Jesus was not just another prophet; he was the prophet who was to come (Deuteronomy 18:15-18). No wonder the city was in an uproar!

JESUS CLEARS THE TEMPLE AGAIN / 21:12-17 / 184

Jesus entered the great city and went to the Temple, entering its outer courts, as did many in the crowd. People came to the Temple in Jerusalem to offer sacrifices. God had originally instructed the people to bring sacrifices from their own flocks (Deuteronomy 12:5-7). However, the religious leadership had established four markets on the Mount of Olives where such animals could be purchased. This greatly angered Jesus.

21:12-13 The high priest had authorized a market with merchants and money changers to be set up right in the Court of the Gentiles, the huge outer court of the Temple. The Court of the Gentiles was the only place Gentile converts to Judaism could worship. But the market filled their worship space with merchants so that these foreigners, who had traveled long distances, found it impossible to worship. The chaos in that Court must have been tremendous. The money changers exchanged all international currency for the special Temple coins—the only money the merchants would accept. The money changers did big business during Passover with those who came from foreign countries. The inflated exchange rate often enriched the money changers, and the exorbitant prices of animals made the merchants wealthy.

Because both those who bought and those who sold were going against God's commands regarding the sacrifices, Jesus began to drive them out. This is the second time that Jesus cleared the Temple (see John 2:13-17). Jesus became angry because God's house of worship had become a place of extortion and a barrier to Gentiles who wanted to worship. Jesus quoted from Isaiah 56:7 and used it to explain that God's Temple was meant to be a place of prayer, but the merchants and money changers had turned it into a den of thieves.

21:14 It was significant that the blind and the lame came to Jesus in the Temple. Usually they were excluded from worship in the Temple based on laws stemming from 2 Samuel 5:8. With the coming of the Messiah, Jesus himself welcomed them and healed them there in the Temple. This was also an expected result of the messianic age (Isaiah 35:5).

21:15-16 Jesus' actions in the Temple provoked the anger of the religious leaders. The children who were in the Temple were crying out, "Praise God for the Son of David," echoing the cries made by the crowd along the road to Jerusalem (21:9). The religious leaders' question indicated that they objected to the concept of Jesus as "the Son of David." But Jesus heard what the children were saying and did not stop them, for what they said was true.

21:17 With the religious leaders plotting to kill him, Jerusalem would hardly be a safe place for Jesus to spend the night. So when evening came, Jesus and the disciples left the city and returned to Bethany. Most pilgrims who traveled to Jerusalem for the great feasts found lodging outside the city.

After their stay in Bethany overnight (21:17), Jesus and the disciples got up and headed back into Jerusalem. Bethany was about two miles outside of Jerusalem, making it a suburb of the city.

21:18-20 Fig trees were a popular source of inexpensive food in Israel. In March, the fig trees had small edible buds; in April came the large green leaves. Then in May, the buds would fall off and be replaced by the normal crop of figs. This incident occurred in April, and the green leaves should have indicated the presence of the edible buds that Jesus expected to find on the tree. This tree, however, though full of leaves, had no buds. The tree looked promising but offered no fruit.

Jesus did not curse this fig tree because he was angry at not getting any food from it. Instead, this was an acted-out parable intended to teach the disciples a lesson. By cursing the fig tree, Jesus was showing his anger at religion without substance. Jesus' harsh words to the fig tree could be applied to the nation of Israel and its beautiful Temple. Fruitful in appearance only, Israel was spiritually barren. Just as the fig tree looked good from a distance but was fruitless on close examination, so the Temple looked impressive at first glance, but its sacrifices and other activities were hollow because they were not done to worship God sincerely.

After Jesus spoke these words, the fig tree withered up. This parable of judgment on spiritually dead people revealed its severity. The early church later applied this parable to the total destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

21:21 Jesus did not explain why he cursed the fig tree, and we don't know whether the disciples understood Jesus' meaning. Yet his words to them could mean that they must have faith in God. Their faith should not rest in a kingdom they hoped Jesus would set up, in obeying the Jewish laws, or in their position as Jesus' disciples. Their faith should rest in God alone.

Jesus then taught them a lesson about answers to prayer. Jesus had cursed the fig tree; the fig tree had died; the disciples had expressed surprise. Jesus explained that they could ask anything of God and receive an answer. Jesus then used a mountain as a figure of speech to show that God could help in any situation. Jesus' point was that in their petitions to God they must believe and not doubt. The kind of prayer Jesus meant was not the arbitrary wish to move a mountain of dirt and stone; instead, he was referring to prayers that the disciples would need to faithfully pray as they faced mountains of opposition to their gospel message in the years to come. Their prayers for the advancement of God's Kingdom would always be answered positively—in God's timing.

21:22 This verse was not a guarantee that the disciples could get anything they wanted simply by asking Jesus and believing. God does not grant requests that will hurt people or that will violate his own nature or will. Jesus' statement was not a blank check to be filled in by believers, not a "name it and claim it" theology. To be fulfilled, requests made to God in prayer must be in harmony with the principles of God's Kingdom. They must be made in Jesus' name (John 14:13-14). The stronger our faith, the more likely our prayers will be in union with Christ and in line with God's will; then God will be happy to grant them. God can do anything, even what seems humanly impossible.

The basic theme of this whole section is that Jesus was taking on the religious leaders at their own game and defeating them with their own logic. Jesus was triumphant in his dealings with them, and this angered them even more.

21:23 Jesus and the disciples returned to the Temple, where Jesus had thrown out the merchants and money changers the day before. A delegation of leading priests and other leaders came up to him. They asked for his credentials and demanded that he tell them who gave him the authority to drive out the merchants from the Temple.

If Jesus were to answer that his authority came from God, which would be tantamount to declaring himself as the Messiah, they would accuse him of blasphemy and bring him to trial (blasphemy carried the death penalty, Leviticus 24:10-23). If Jesus were to say that his authority was his own, the religious leaders could dismiss him as a fanatic and could trust that the crowds would soon return to those with true authority (themselves).

21:24-26 Jesus would not let himself be caught; turning the question on them, he exposed their motives and avoided their trap. Jesus' question seems totally unrelated to the situation at hand, but Jesus knew that the leaders' attitude about John the Baptist would reveal their true attitude toward him. In this question, Jesus implied that his authority came from the same source as John the Baptist's. So Jesus asked these religious leaders what they thought: Did John's baptism come from heaven [thus, from God] or was it merely human?

The interchange recorded among these factions of the religious leaders revealed their true motives. They weren't interested in the truth; they simply hoped to trap him. If they answered that John's baptism had come from heaven (with God's authority), then they would incriminate themselves for not listening to John and believing his words.

21:27 The Pharisees couldn't win, so they hoped to save face by refusing to answer. Thus, Jesus was not obligated to answer their question. In reality, he had already answered it. His question about John the Baptist implied that both he and John received their authority from the same source. The religious leaders had already decided against Jesus, and nothing would stand in the way of their plan to kill him. They had already rejected both Jesus and John as God's messengers, carrying on a long tradition of the leaders of Israel rejecting God's prophets. This was the point that Jesus made in the following parable (21:28-32).

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE TWO SONS / 21:28-32 / 190

Jesus continued his conversation with the religious leaders who had attempted to trip him up with a trick question (21:23-27). This parable was spoken directly to them, and it showed them their true position in the Kingdom of Heaven.

21:28-30 The man in this parable represents God, while the two sons represent, respectively, the “sinners” (or outcasts among the Jews) and conservative Jews.

The first son said he would not go to the vineyard, but changed his mind and went anyway. This son represents the “sinner” and outcast who rejected the call but “repented” and then obeyed.

The second son said he would go to the vineyard, but then didn’t go. This son represents the Jewish leaders of the day who said “yes” to the Kingdom message (that is, they accepted the outward call to Jewish piety) but did not obey its intent. They rejected the call to true obedience. They said they wanted to do God’s will, but they constantly disobeyed. They lacked insight into God’s real meaning, and they were too stubborn to listen to Jesus.

21:31 Jesus directed his question to the religious leaders, and they gave the obviously correct answer. The son who did what his father wanted was the son who eventually obeyed. Jesus explained that corrupt tax collectors and prostitutes will get into the Kingdom of God before the religious leaders. These were astounding words. The tax collectors and prostitutes were representative of the despised classes, those who were the most despicable to the self-righteous leaders. The pious religious leaders had said they would “go to the vineyard” but then had refused. The tax collectors and prostitutes had obviously strayed from God, but those who repented of their sin would enter the Kingdom of God.

21:32 The reaction to John the Baptist spelled out the reaction to the one John proclaimed—Jesus, the Messiah. Even when the religious leaders saw how sinful people repented and believed, these leaders still refused to turn and believe. Neither, then, would they believe Jesus.

In this parable, Jesus displayed his knowledge of the religious leaders’ murderous plot (21:45).

21:33 The main elements in this parable are (1) the landowner—God, (2) the vineyard—Israel, (3) the farmers—the Jewish religious leaders, (4) the landowner’s servants—the prophets and priests who remained faithful to God and preached to Israel, (5) the son—Jesus, and (6) the others—the Gentiles. In a vineyard such as this, the lookout tower would have been for guards who would protect the farm from thieves; the wall would have kept wild animals out.

21:34-36 The rent on the farm was paid by crops at harvesttime, a common practice in this culture. So, as expected, the landowner sent his servants to collect the rent in the form of a share of the crop. But the farmers grabbed his servants, beating, killing, and stoning them. More servants were sent, and they received the same treatment. These “servants” refer to the prophets who had been sent to Israel over the centuries. Some had been beaten (Jeremiah 26:7-11; 38:1-28), some had been killed (tradition says Isaiah was killed; John the Baptist had been killed, Matthew 14:1-12), some had been stoned (2 Chronicles 24:21). Jesus was reminding the religious leaders that God’s prophets often had been ridiculed and persecuted by God’s people.

21:37-39 The landowner then sent his son, thinking that surely the tenants would respect his son. The historical situation behind this section reflects the law that property would go to anyone in possession of it when the master died. So the tenants assumed that by killing the son and heir to the property, they would get the estate. So they murdered the son. With these words, Jesus was revealing to the religious leaders his knowledge of their desire to kill him.

21:40-41 Jesus’ question forced the religious leaders to announce their own fate. These words allude to Isaiah 5:5 and continue the same imagery. In their answer to Jesus, the religious leaders announced themselves to be wicked men who deserved a horrible death. Others would take over what they thought they had (see 21:43).

21:42 The imagery of the stone rejected by the builders is taken from Psalm 118:22-23, referring to the deliverance of Israel from a situation when it seemed that their enemies had triumphed. Their deliverance could only be attributed to God’s miraculous intervention. Although Jesus had been rejected by many of his people, he will become the cornerstone of his new building, the church (see Acts 4:11 and 1 Peter 2:6-7). It seemed that Jesus had been rejected and defeated by his own people, the Jews, but God would raise him from the dead and seat him at his own right hand.

21:43 A nation that will produce the proper fruit refers to the Gentiles who will be added to make up God’s people (21:41). By their rejection of the prophets’ message and finally of the Son himself, Israel showed that they were incapable of repentance and belief. So the Kingdom would be taken away from them and given to a unity of Jews and Gentiles, a foreshadowing of the church. The same presentation is given by Paul in Romans 11:11-24.

21:44 Jesus used this metaphor to show that one stone can affect people different ways, depending on how they relate to it (see Isaiah 8:14-15; 28:16; Daniel 2:34, 44-45). Ideally they will build on it; many, however, will stumble over it. At the Last Judgment, God's enemies will be crushed by it. At that time, Christ, the "building block," will become the "crushing stone." He offers mercy and forgiveness now, and he promises judgment later.

21:45-46 It seems that the religious leaders finally understood something, for here they realized he was pointing at them, that they were the "wicked men" who were plotting to kill the son and who would have the "vineyard" taken away from them. They must have become very angry, so much so that they wanted to arrest him. The Jewish leaders wouldn't do so because they feared the crowds. To arrest Jesus would have caused an uprising against them and an uproar that they couldn't afford with the Romans ready to come down on them. The crowds considered Jesus to be a prophet.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE WEDDING DINNER / 22:1-14 / 192

Jesus had already told two parables focusing on rejection of him as God's Son and God's resulting judgment. The parable of the two sons (21:28-32) showed how the rewards of the sons were switched according to their ultimate service rendered. The parable of the wicked tenants (21:33-46) explained that "others" would be given the vineyard. The following parable of the wedding feast showed that those least expected would be invited to the feast.

22:1-3 In this parable, Jesus pictured the Kingdom of Heaven being offered to those who might be least expected to enter it. A king gives a great wedding feast for his son. In this culture, two invitations were expected when banquets were given. The first asked the guests to attend; the second announced that all was ready. When the king sent his servants to notify everyone that it was time to come, this referred to the second invitation. These invitees had already accepted the first invitation. At this second one, however, these guests refused. Like the son who said he would go to the vineyard and didn't (21:30) and the tenant farmers who refused to pay the rent (21:34-39), these guests reneged on an earlier agreement.

22:4-6 The meal was ready, but these guests ignored the announcement, placing a higher priority on their farms and businesses. The seizing and killing of these messengers stretches the imagination for this story, but probably recalls the same meaning as in the parable of the wicked tenants who killed the servants—prophets whom God had sent to offer his invitation.

22:7-8 The king's invitation had been refused and his servants murdered, so he became furious. Sending his army and destroying the city has been interpreted as referring to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. More likely it refers to the final war between good and evil, a very popular theme in passages about the end times (Isaiah 25:6-8; Ezekiel 39:17-24; Revelation 19:17-21). The feast was ready and waiting, but his guests were not worthy of the honor. This is similar to the giving of the vineyard to "others" in the previous parable (21:41). The Kingdom will go to those whom God has deemed "worthy."

22:9-10 The king still wanted to share his banquet, so he ordered his servants to go out to the street corners and invite everyone they found. They did so, bringing both good and bad (meaning they didn't discriminate about social standing, reputation, or moral character) for the feast. The metaphor focuses on the outcasts and sinners (see also 21:31-32) as well as righteous people. An unlikely scenario in ancient times, this scene pictures God's gracious invitation to all kinds of people—Jew and Gentile, rich and poor, male and female, good and bad. As the servants gathered all who would respond, so God gives salvation to all who hear and respond.

22:11-12 The proper clothes for a wedding probably refers to clean, fresh clothing. It was unthinkable to come to a wedding banquet in soiled clothes. This would insult the host, who could only assume that the guest was ignorant, had not truly been invited, or was not prepared for the banquet. When the king pointed this out, the man had no reply, so the king declared him unprepared and unworthy.

The wedding clothes picture the righteousness needed to enter God's Kingdom—the total acceptance in God's eyes that Christ provides for every believer (Isaiah 61:10). Christ has provided this garment of righteousness for everyone, but each person must put it on (accept Christ's gracious provision of his life given for us) in order to enter the King's banquet (eternal life). There is an open invitation, but we must be ready. For more on the imagery of clothes of righteousness and salvation, see Psalm 132:16; Zechariah 3:3-5; Revelation 3:4-5; 19:7-8.

22:13 In the final judgment, God's true people will be revealed. Claiming to belong at the wedding feast while refusing to wear the correct garments was like the nation of Israel claiming to be God's people but refusing to live for him. Like the wicked tenants who deserved "a horrible death" (21:41), so this impostor at the banquet found himself tied up and thrown into the outer darkness where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth—a common biblical description of hell (see also 8:12; 13:42, 50).

22:14 Those who are called but reject God's invitation will be punished, as will those who seem to accept the call but fail to follow through. The use of the word "called" means "invited," not the irresistible call of God as Paul used it (see Romans 8:28-29). The invitation had gone out to all Israel, but only a few had accepted and followed Jesus. Chosen refers to the elect. Jesus was applying this teaching to the Jews, who believed that because they were descendants of Abraham, they would be sure to share in the blessings of God's Kingdom through the Messiah. But Jesus taught that not all those invited would actually be among the chosen of God.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS QUESTION JESUS ABOUT PAYING TAXES / 22:15-22 / 193

The Pharisees and Herodians who approached Jesus usually were parties in conflict, with one side against Rome and one side pro-Rome. They sent young men in the hope that Jesus would not suspect them of trickery.

22:15-16 The Pharisees were a religious group opposed to the Roman occupation of Palestine. The supporters of Herod were a political party that supported the Herods and the policies instituted by Rome. These antagonistic groups found a common enemy in Jesus. Pretending to be honest, they flattered Jesus before asking him their trick question, hoping to trap him.

22:17-19 The Jews hated to pay taxes to Rome because the money supported their oppressors and symbolized their subjection. Anyone who avoided paying taxes faced harsh penalties. Thus, this was a valid (and loaded) question, and the crowd around Jesus waited expectantly for his answer. Matthew, as a former tax collector, was certainly interested in Jesus' response to this question.

The Pharisees were against these taxes on religious grounds; the Herodians supported taxation on political grounds. Thus, either a yes or a no could get Jesus into trouble. If Jesus agreed that it was right to pay taxes to Caesar, the Pharisees would say he was opposed to God, and the people would turn against him. If Jesus said the taxes should not be paid, the Herodians could hand him over to Herod on the charge of rebellion.

Jesus saw through their flattering words to the underlying evil motives. He then asked his questioners to produce a Roman coin used for the tax so he could use it to make a point.

22:20-22 The coin had a picture of the reigning Caesar. The title referred to Caesar as divine and as "chief priest." The Caesars were worshiped as gods by the pagans, so the claim to divinity on the coin itself repulsed the Jews.

Jesus said, "Give to Caesar what belongs to him"—that is, the coin bearing the emperor's image should be given to the emperor. In other words, having a coin meant being part of that country, so citizens should acknowledge the authority of Caesar and pay for the benefits accorded to them by his empire (for example, peace and an efficient road system). The Pharisees and Herodians tried to make it appear that it was incompatible to be a Jew and pay taxes to a pagan emperor who claimed to be divine. But Jesus explained that no such incompatibility existed because God was ultimately in control. They would lose much and gain little if they refused to pay Caesar's taxes (see Romans 13:1-7; 1 Timothy 2:1-6; 1 Peter 2:13-17).

Paying the taxes, however, did not have to mean submission to the divinity claimed by the emperor. The words on the coins were incorrect. Caesar had the right to claim their tax money, but he had no claim on their souls. The Jews knew that everything that belongs to God must be given to God. While they lived in the Roman world, the Jews had to face the dual reality of subjection to Rome and responsibility to God. Jesus explained that they could do both if they kept their priorities straight. The tax would be paid as long as Rome held sway over Judea, but God had rights on eternity and on their lives.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS QUESTION JESUS ABOUT THE RESURRECTION / 22:23-33 / 194

The combined group of religious leaders from the Council had failed with their first question (21:23-27); the paired antagonists of Pharisees and Herodians had failed with a political question (22:15-22); here the Sadducees, another group of religious leaders, smugly stepped in to try to trap Jesus with a theological question.

22:23 The Sadducees honored only the Pentateuch—Genesis through Deuteronomy—as Scripture, and they rejected most of the Pharisees' traditions, rules, and regulations. The Sadducees said there is no resurrection because they could find no mention of it in the Pentateuch. Apparently, the Pharisees had never been able to come up with a convincing argument from the Pentateuch for the resurrection, and the Sadducees thought they had trapped Jesus for sure.

22:24 Moses had written that if a man dies without children, his unmarried brother (or nearest male relative) should marry the widow and have a child who will be the brother's heir. The first son of this marriage was considered the heir of the dead man (Deuteronomy 25:5-6). The main purpose of the instruction was to produce an heir and guarantee that the family would not lose their land. The book of Ruth gives an example of this law in operation (Ruth 3:1–4:12; see also Genesis 38:1-26). This law, called "levirate" marriage, protected the widow (in that culture widows usually had no means to support themselves) and allowed the family line to continue.

22:25-28 The Sadducees used an example of a woman who had been married, one at a time, to seven brothers. When all eight of them were resurrected, whose wife will she be? This was a tongue-in-cheek question meant to prove that it was ridiculous to believe in a resurrection. The Sadducees erroneously assumed that if people were resurrected, they would assume physical bodies capable of procreation. Because they could not conceive of a resurrection life, they decided that God couldn't raise the dead. And since they thought that Moses hadn't written about it, they considered the case "closed."

22:29-30 Jesus wasted no time dealing with their hypothetical situation but went directly to their underlying assumption that resurrection of the dead was impossible. Jesus clearly stated that these Sadducees were wrong about the resurrection for two reasons: (1) They didn't know the Scriptures (if they did, they would believe in the resurrection because it is taught in Scripture), and (2) they didn't know the power of God (if they did, they would believe in the resurrection because God's power makes it possible). Ignorance on these two counts was inexcusable for these religious leaders.

Furthermore, resurrection will not be an extension of earthly life. Instead, life in heaven will be different. Believers will be like the angels in heaven regarding marriage. Those in heaven will no longer be governed by physical laws but will share the immortal and exalted nature of angels, living above physical needs.

Jesus was not teaching that people will not recognize their spouses in heaven. Jesus was not dissolving the eternal aspect of marriage, doing away with sexual differences, or teaching that we will be asexual beings after death. Jesus was not intending to give the final word on marriage in heaven. We cannot learn very much about sex and marriage in heaven from this one statement by Jesus. His point was simply that we must not think of heaven as an extension of life as we now know it. Our relationships in this life are limited by time and death. We don't know everything about our resurrection life, but Jesus was affirming that relationships will be different from what we are used to here and now. Jesus was showing that the Sadducees' question was completely irrelevant. But their assumption about the resurrection needed a definitive answer, and Jesus was just the one to give it.

22:31-32 The Sadducees' underlying comment regarded their view of the absurdity of resurrection. Their question to Jesus was intended to show him to be foolish. So Jesus cut right to the point: as to whether there will be a resurrection of the dead, Jesus answered them from the book of Exodus (3:6). God would not have said, "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob," if Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were dead (he would have said, “I was their God”). Thus, from God’s perspective, they are alive. This evidence would have been acceptable in any rabbinic debate because it applied a grammatical argument. God had spoken of dead men as though they were still alive; thus, Jesus reasoned, the men were not dead but living. God would not have a relationship with dead beings. Although men and women have died on earth, God continues his relationship with them because they are resurrected to life with him in heaven. Therefore, the Sadducees were wrong in their mistaken assumption about the resurrection.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS QUESTION JESUS ABOUT THE GREATEST COMMANDMENT / 22:34-40 / 195

The questions leading up to the one recorded in this section were intended to trap Jesus rather than to find answers. Here, however, an expert in religious law asked Jesus to condense the Law to a single principle.

22:34-36 Next an expert in religious law stepped up to trap Jesus with another question, “Which is the most important commandment in the law of Moses?” The legal expert was referring to a popular debate about the “more important” and “less important” of the hundreds of laws that the Jews had accumulated. The Pharisees had classified over six hundred laws and would spend much time discussing which laws were weightier than others. Jesus’ definitive answer about the resurrection caused this man to hope that Jesus might also have the final answer about all these laws.

22:37-38 Jesus referred to Deuteronomy 6:5 to show that a person’s total being must be involved in loving God. Nothing must be held back because God holds nothing back: You must love the Lord your God with all your heart, all your soul, and all your mind. The word for “love” is agapao, totally unselfish love, a love of which human beings are capable only with the help of the Holy Spirit. The heart is the center of desires and affections, the soul is a person’s “being” and uniqueness, the mind is the center of a person’s intellect. To love God in this way is to fulfill completely all the commandments regarding one’s “vertical” relationship.

22:39-40 There is a second and equally important law that focuses on “horizontal” relationships—dealings with fellow human beings. Jesus quoted Leviticus 19:18: “Love your neighbor as yourself.” The word “neighbor” refers to fellow human beings in general. The love a person has for himself or herself (in the sense of looking out for oneself, caring about one’s best interests, etc.) should also be directed toward others.

In answer to the man's question, Jesus explained that all the demands of the prophets are based on these two commandments. By fulfilling these two commands to love God totally and love others as oneself, a person will keep all the other commands.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS CANNOT ANSWER JESUS' QUESTION / 22:41-46 / 196

This was still presumably Tuesday of Jesus' final week on earth. Jesus had answered questions from various groups of religious leaders: the Pharisees, Herodians, and Sadducees. Then Jesus turned the tables and asked the Pharisees a question that went right to the heart of the matter—what they thought about the Messiah's identity. The central issue of life for these ancient religious leaders (as well as for us) is Jesus' true identity.

22:41-42 The Pharisees expected a Messiah, but they erroneously thought he would be only a human ruler who would reign on King David's throne, deliver the Jews from Gentile domination by establishing God's rule on earth, and restore Israel's greatness as in the days of David and Solomon. They knew that the Messiah would be a son (descendant) of David, but they did not understand that he would be more than a human descendant—he would be God in the flesh.

22:43-46 Jesus quoted Psalm 110:1 to show that David, speaking under the influence of the Holy Spirit, understood the Messiah to be his Lord (that is, one who had authority over him), not just his descendant. If the great King David himself called the coming Messiah his Lord, then how could the Messiah be merely David's son (meaning "descendant")? David himself didn't think the Messiah would be just a descendant; instead, David, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, had realized that the Messiah would be God in human form and would deserve due respect and honor.

The silence of Jesus' opponents shows their total defeat. This was Jesus' last controversy with the religious establishment.

JESUS WARNS AGAINST THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS / 23:1-12 / 197

Chapter 23 serves as a transition between the controversy narratives and the Olivet Discourse. Jesus made many scathing remarks to the religious leaders, but not all of them were evil (consider Nicodemus in John 3 and Joseph in Mark 15:43). Jesus attacked their legalism that had become a stumbling block for the Jews.

23:1-4 Jesus turned his attention to the crowds and to his disciples, as he spoke about the religious leaders whose pride and hypocrisy made them far from the type of followers God desires. To be the official interpreters of the Scriptures referred to their authority. Because of that authority, the people ought to practice and obey whatever they say. This seems strange at first because of Jesus' denouncement of much of their teaching (see 12:1-14; 15:1-20; 16:6-12; 19:3-9). Yet Jesus did not toss aside the religious leaders as worthless; he understood the need for their function when they taught correctly. But he did question their actions. For all their teaching, the leaders did not practice what they were teaching. Also the Pharisees were notorious for adding minute details and requirements to the law that made it impossible for the average person to keep the law. After giving the people all these impossible commands, the leaders would never lift a finger to help ease the burden. They offered the people no practical advice in working the law out in their lives or in building a relationship with the heavenly Father.

23:5-7 As they made their living keeping all their tiny laws, the teachers of the law and Pharisees were very aware of the attention they received from the people—and they loved it. Everything they did was for show. They did not keep the laws because they loved God, but because they loved human praise.

They wore prayer boxes with Scripture verses inside. Very religious people wore these boxes on their forehead (tied around the head by a strap) and on their arms so as to obey—literally—Deuteronomy 6:8 and Exodus 13:9, 16. But the prayer boxes had become more important for the status they gave than for the truth they contained. The extra long tassels on the robes were again simply to make them more noticeable. The head table at banquets received special treatment during the meal. The most prominent seats in the synagogue faced the congregation and were reserved for the most important people. To be called Rabbi (meaning “teacher”) was treasured for the status it gave a person as a leading teacher of the Torah. In short, the religious leaders had lost sight of their priority as teachers and were enjoying their position merely because of the “perks” it offered. Jesus condemned this attitude.

23:8-10 In these words, Jesus described true discipleship. Don’t ever let anyone call you “Rabbi,” did not mean that Jesus refused anyone that title. Rather, this means that a learned teacher should not allow anyone to call him “rabbi” in the sense of “great one.” Why? Because there is only one “Great One,” one teacher, and all rabbis are under his authority. True disciples are united under one authority (all of you are on the same level as brothers and sisters) and do not establish a hierarchy of importance.

Don’t address anyone here on earth as Father does not mean that we cannot use the word for a parent. Again, Jesus was speaking in the context of the rabbi and disciple relationship. Disciples would call their rabbi “father,” and the relationship could be compared to that between a father and son. This command gives the flip side of the first one. While rabbis must not accept homage from disciples, the disciples were not to revere any rabbi or put him on a pedestal.

The third command repeats the first one, but adds the emphasis of the Messiah. All rabbis (all learned teachers) fall under the authority of one master. Jesus, of course, was referring to himself.

23:11-12 The heart of discipleship is not found in outward appearances or long tassels or places of honor. It comes from servanthood and humility. Jesus had explained in 20:26 that true greatness comes from being a servant. The true leader places his or her needs last, as Jesus exemplified in his life and in his death. Being a servant did not mean occupying a servile position; rather, it meant having an attitude of freely attending to others’ needs without expecting or demanding anything in return. Trying to exalt oneself runs contrary to Jesus’ requirements for his servants. Only those who humble themselves will find true greatness in God’s Kingdom. This completely opposed the attitudes and actions of the Jewish religious leaders.

JESUS CONDEMNS THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS / 23:13-36 / 198

Matthew included seven denunciations against the Jewish leaders whom Jesus unhesitatingly called “hypocrites.” Being a religious leader in Jerusalem was very different from being a pastor in a secular society today. Israel’s history, culture, and daily life revolved around its relationship with God. The religious leaders were the best known, most powerful, and most respected of all leaders. Jesus made these stinging accusations because the leaders’ hunger for more power, money, and status had made them lose sight of God, and their blindness was spreading to the whole nation.

23:13-14 The teachers of religious law and Pharisees were hypocrites. Their rejection of Jesus and emphasis on their petty demands had the effect of locking people out of the Kingdom and keeping themselves out as well. Anyone who might have gotten in through a saving relationship with God was stopped by these Pharisees. They made God seem impossible to please, his commands impossible to obey, and thus the Kingdom an impossible goal. (Verse 14 is not present in the best ancient manuscripts.)

23:15 The teachers of religious law and Pharisees were guilty of perverting their own converts, who were attracted to status and rule keeping, not to God. By getting caught up in the details of the Pharisees' additional laws and regulations, they completely missed God, to whom the laws pointed. A religion of deeds pressures people to surpass others in what they know and do. Thus, a hypocritical teacher was likely to have students who were even more hypocritical. Making converts was laudable. But when the ones doing the converting are children of hell, then their converts will likely meet the same end.

23:16-19 Jesus pointed out the leaders' hypocrisy regarding the binding power of oaths made to God for dedication for service or for contributions of property. The leaders should have been guides for the blind but instead were blind themselves. Two examples were given of the ridiculous lengths to which the overly legalistic system had gone—swearing by the Temple or the gold, and swearing by the altar or the gift. In one case, the oath could not be broken; in the other case, it could. Jesus illustrated the minute (and ridiculous) distinctions.

23:20-22 Jesus had explained that his followers should not need to make any oaths at all, for to do so would imply that their word could not be trusted (5:33-37). The leaders, by attempting to make distinctions in oaths, had lost sight of the fact that all oaths are made before God and should be equally binding. In other words, no oath should be made with a loophole.

23:23 The hypocrisy of the scribes and Pharisees lay in their careful obedience to the small details of the law (tithing even the tiniest part of their income) while they ignored larger issues that were far more important—such as dealing correctly with other people and building a relationship with God (justice, mercy, and faith).

It is possible to carefully obey certain details of God's laws but still be disobedient in our general behavior. For example, we could be very precise and faithful about giving ten percent of our money to the church but refuse to give one minute of our time in helping others. Tithing is important, but giving a tithe does not exempt us from fulfilling God's other directives. The last phrase sums up all the "woes." We also must not leave undone the more important things. Jesus was not negating faithfulness to God's law; rather, he was condemning a concern for minor details that replaced true piety and discipleship.

23:24 How blind these religious leaders were—guides who were leading the people astray! Jesus used a play on words here—the Aramaic words for "gnat" and "camel" are very similar. The Pharisees strained their water so they wouldn't accidentally swallow a gnat—an unclean insect according to the law. Meticulous about the details of ceremonial cleanliness, they nevertheless had lost their perspective on the matters of justice, mercy, and faithfulness (23:23), symbolized by the camel. The camel was not only the largest creature in the Near East but was also unclean. As the Pharisees took great care of the smallest details in order to remain pure, they had become unclean in the most important areas. Ceremonially clean on the outside, they had corrupt hearts.

23:25-26 The Pharisees were so obsessed about having contact with only clean things that they not only washed the kitchen utensils but also made certain that the utensils were ceremonially clean. Staying ceremonially clean was the central focus of the Pharisees' lifestyle. Jesus pointed out that they had taken care of the outside, but neglected their own filth on the inside, for they were full of greed and self-indulgence. Jesus condemned the Pharisees and religious leaders for outwardly appearing saintly and holy but inwardly remaining full of corruption and greed.

23:27-28 Like whitewashed tombs, the religious leaders had put on a beautiful appearance, but inside they were full of dead people's bones and all sorts of impurity. They were supposed to be the holy men and instead were filled with hypocrisy (in their wrongful application of God's law and their attempts to make others live up to their standards) and lawlessness (in their evil deeds, such as those described in 15:5-6 and 23:14).

23:29-32 Continuing the imagery of the whitewashed tombs, Jesus centered on the tombs of the prophets and the graves of the godly people, which were revered. This was ironic because these martyrs had, in most cases, been killed by the religious establishment of the day. For example, the prophet Zechariah was executed (2 Chronicles 24:20-22) and the prophet Uriah was killed (Jeremiah 26:20-23). While the current religious leaders said that they never would have joined their ancestors in killing the prophets, Jesus pointed out that they were no different from their ancestors at all for they were plotting to kill another messenger from God—the Messiah himself.

23:33-34 By using the description of snakes and vipers, Jesus called the teachers and Pharisees contemptible and obnoxious creatures. Their punishment evokes the imagery of hell and its eternal fires. There will be no escape for these men, for they had already cast aside any hope of salvation.

The prophets, wise men, and teachers of religious law to whom Jesus referred were probably leaders in the early church who eventually were persecuted, scourged, and killed, just as Jesus predicted. The people of Jesus' generation said they would not act as their fathers did in killing the prophets whom God had sent to them (23:30), but they were about to kill the Messiah himself and his faithful followers. Thus, they would become guilty of all the righteous blood shed through the centuries.

23:35-36 Jesus gave two examples of Old Testament martyrdom. Abel was the first martyr (Genesis 4); Zechariah was the last mentioned in the Hebrew Bible, which ended with 2 Chronicles according to their canon. Zechariah is a classic example of a man of God who was killed by those who claimed to be God's people (see 2 Chronicles 24:20-21). In both cases, the call for vengeance is explicit (Genesis 4:10; 2 Chronicles 24:22). In 23:30, now all the accumulated judgment of the centuries would come upon the heads of this very generation. The current religious establishment would be guilty of all of their deaths, for they would be guilty of murdering the Messiah and would face judgment for that act. The destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 was a partial fulfillment of Jesus' words.

JESUS GRIEVES OVER JERUSALEM AGAIN / 23:37-39 / 199

These verses bridge the gap between Jesus' denunciation of the Judaism of the religious leaders (that had become horribly corrupt) and his explicit prediction of the destruction of the Temple in chapter 24.

23:37 Jerusalem was the capital city of God's chosen people, the ancestral home of David, Israel's greatest king, and the location of the Temple, the earthly dwelling place of God. It was intended to be the center of worship of the true

God and a symbol of justice to all people. But Jerusalem had become blind to God and insensitive to human need. Jerusalem here stands for all the Jewish people, but this prophecy specifically looks to the city's destruction. The Jewish leaders had stoned and killed the prophets and others whom God had sent to the nation to bring them back to him. By their constant rejection of God's messengers, they had sealed their fate. Jesus wanted to gather the nation and bring it to repentance, but the people wouldn't let him. Here we see the depth of Jesus' feelings for lost people and for his beloved city that would soon be destroyed. Jesus took no pleasure in denouncing the religious establishment or in prophesying the coming destruction of the city and the people that rejected him. He had come to save, but they would not let him.

23:38-39 Jesus may have been alluding to Jeremiah 12:7. Jeremiah had prophesied the coming destruction of the Temple by the Babylonians. The nation's sin sealed their punishment, and God's presence left the Temple. When Jesus Christ came, God himself again stood in the Temple. But the people's refusal to accept him would have severe consequences, for he would again leave the Temple. The Temple stood for the people's relationship with God; an empty and desolate Temple meant separation from God.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT THE FUTURE / 24:1-25 / 201

Chapter 24 contains a conversation between Jesus and his disciples as they left the Temple and began their walk back to Bethany where they were spending their nights. This may have been either Tuesday or Wednesday evening of the week before the Crucifixion. This was Jesus' last visit to the Temple area. He would do no more preaching or public teaching. A casual remark by a disciple led Jesus to make a startling prophetic statement about the fate of the magnificent Temple.

24:1 One of the disciples pointed out to Jesus the various Temple buildings, remarking on their incredible beauty (Mark 13:1). Although no one knows exactly what the Temple looked like, it must have been magnificent, for in its time it was considered one of the architectural wonders of the world. The Temple was impressive, covering about one-sixth of the land area of the ancient city of Jerusalem. It was not one building, but a majestic mixture of porches, colonnades, separate small edifices, and courts surrounding the Temple proper. The Jews were convinced of the permanence of this magnificent structure, not only because of the stability of construction, but also because it represented God's presence among them.

24:2 Jesus acknowledged the great buildings but then made a startling statement: This wonder of the world would be completely demolished. As in the days of the prophet Jeremiah, the destruction of the Jews' beloved Temple would be God's punishment for turning away from him. This would happen only a few years later when the Romans sacked Jerusalem in A.D. 70. The sovereign judgment of God was to fall upon his unbelieving people; and just as Jesus as Lord of the Temple had proclaimed its purification, here he predicted its destruction.

24:3 The Mount of Olives rises above Jerusalem to the east. As Jesus was leaving the city to return to Bethany for the night, he would have crossed the Kidron Valley, and then he would have headed up the slope of the Mount of Olives. From this slope, he and the disciples could look down into the city and see the Temple. The prophet Zechariah predicted that the Messiah would stand on that very mountain when he would return to set up his eternal Kingdom (Zechariah 14:1-4). This place evoked questions about the future, so it was natural for the disciples to ask Jesus when he would come in power and what they could expect at that time.

The disciples' question had two parts. They wanted to know when this would happen and what would be the sign that would signal Jesus' return and the end of the world. In the disciples' minds, one event would occur immediately after the other. They expected the Messiah to inaugurate his Kingdom soon, and they wanted to know the sign that it was about to arrive.

Jesus gave them a prophetic picture of that time, including events leading up to it. He also talked about far future events connected with the last days and his second coming when he would return to earth to judge all people. As many of the Old Testament prophets had done, Jesus predicted both near and distant events without putting them in chronological order. The coming destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple only foreshadowed a future destruction that would precede Christ's return. Some of the disciples lived to see the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, while some of the events Jesus spoke of have not yet—to this day—occurred. But the truth of Jesus' prediction regarding Jerusalem assured the disciples (and assures us) that everything else he predicted will also happen.

24:4-5 Jesus knew that if the disciples looked for signs, they would be susceptible to deception. There would be many false prophets (24:24) with counterfeit signs of spiritual power and authority. Jesus predicted that before his return, many believers would be misled by false teachers coming in his name—that is, claiming to be the Messiah. Throughout the first century, many such deceivers arose (see Acts 5:36-37; 8:9-11; 2 Timothy 3; 2 Peter 2; 1 John 2:18; 4:1-3).

24:6-8 As political situations worsen, as wars ravage the world, Jesus' followers should not be afraid that God has lost control or that his promises will not come true. Just as false messiahs and religious frauds come and go, so do political and natural crises. Even when the world seems to be in chaos, God is in control. These things must come as part of God's divine plan. However, the wars and rumors of wars do not signal the end. The disciples probably assumed that the Temple would only be destroyed at the end of the age as part of God establishing his new Kingdom. Jesus taught that horrible events would happen, but the end won't follow immediately. Instead, this will be but the beginning of the horrors to come. Jesus' words indicated to the eager disciples that there would be a span of time before the end of the age and the coming Kingdom—it would not come that week, or immediately upon Jesus' resurrection, or even right after the destruction of Jerusalem. First, much suffering would occur as a part of life on earth, while history would move toward a single, final, God-planned goal—the creation of a new earth and a new Kingdom (Revelation 21:1-3).

24:9 Jesus personalized his prophecy by explaining that the disciples themselves would face severe persecution; thus, they must be on their guard in order to stay true to the faith. As the early church began to grow, the disciples' allegiance to Jesus caused them to be hated all over the world. To believe in Jesus and stay strong to the end (24:13) will take perseverance because our faith will be challenged and opposed. Severe trials will sift true Christians from phony believers.

24:10 Jesus warned that such severe persecution may lead to the defection of some members. The fear and persecution will be so intense that people will betray and hate each other in order to keep themselves safe. It will be dangerous to be a Christian.

24:11-12 Not only will believers face defection and betrayal from within the body, but also false prophets will appear and their teachings will lead many people astray. The Old Testament frequently mentions false prophets (see 2 Kings 3:13; Isaiah 44:25; Jeremiah 23:16; Ezekiel 13:2-3; Micah 3:5; Zechariah 13:2). False prophets claimed to receive messages from God, but they said what the people wanted to hear, even when the nation was not following God. We have false prophets today, popular leaders who tell people what they want to hear—such as “God wants you to be rich,” “Do whatever your desires tell you,” or “There is no such thing as sin or hell.” Jesus said false teachers would come, and he warned his disciples, as he warns us, not to listen to their dangerous words.

False teaching and loose morals bring a particularly destructive disease—the loss of true love for God and others. Love grows cold when sin turns our focus on ourselves and our desires.

24:13 Only Jesus' faithful followers will enter God's Kingdom. The stress in this verse is not on endurance, but on salvation; the verse offers both a promise and a warning. The end refers to the consummation of the Kingdom at Christ's return. This became a precious promise to believers who were struggling during intense persecution throughout the history of the church. Enduring to the end does not earn salvation for us; it marks us as already saved. The assurance of our salvation will keep us going through times of persecution. While some will suffer and some will die, none of Jesus' followers will suffer spiritual or eternal loss.

24:14 Jesus said that before his return, the Good News about the Kingdom (the message of salvation) would be preached throughout the whole world. Some have misconstrued Jesus' predictive prophecy; it does not necessarily mean that every last tribe must hear the gospel before Christ returns. But this was the disciples' mission—and it is ours. Jesus talked about the end times and final judgment to emphasize to his followers the urgency of spreading the Good News of salvation to everyone.

24:15-16 Jesus warned against seeking signs, but as a final part of his answer to the disciples' second question (24:3), he gave them the ultimate event that would signal coming destruction. The sacrilegious object that causes desecration refers to the desecration of the Temple by God's enemies. Matthew urged his readers to understand Jesus' words in light of the prophecy from the Old Testament prophet Daniel (see Daniel 9:27; 11:31; 12:11). The first fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy occurred in 168 B.C. by Antiochus Epiphanes when he sacrificed a pig to Zeus on the sacred Temple altar and made Judaism an outlaw religion, punishable by death. This incited the Maccabean wars.

The second fulfillment occurred when Jesus' prediction of the destruction of the Temple (24:2) came true. In just a few years (A.D. 70), the Roman army would destroy Jerusalem and desecrate the Temple.

Based on 24:21, the third fulfillment is yet to come. Jesus' words look forward to the end times and to the Antichrist. In the end times, the Antichrist will commit the ultimate sacrilege by setting up an image of himself in the Temple and ordering everyone to worship it (2 Thessalonians 2:4; Revelation 13:14-15).

Many of Jesus' followers would live during the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple in A.D. 70. Jesus warned his followers to get out of Jerusalem and Judea and to flee to the hills across the Jordan River when they saw the Temple being profaned. This proved to be their protection, for when the Roman army swept in, the nation and its capital city were destroyed.

24:17-20 There is undoubtedly a dual reference both to the historical present and to the distant future. First, this section prophesied the profaning of the Temple by the Roman armies. The flight with haste may focus on going to the mountains. Jesus told people to get away immediately, not worrying about their possessions. Jesus expressed sympathy and concern for those who would have difficulty fleeing because they were pregnant or had small children. Jesus told the disciples to pray that the crisis would not break in winter because that would make it difficult for everyone to get away. They should pray for nothing to hinder their flight. These people literally would be running for their lives.

The destruction of the Temple would also be a sign pointing to the final desecration that precedes the second coming of Christ (2 Thessalonians 2:4). They could be fleeing the judgment of God that would fall upon the land of Judea, or fleeing from the Antichrist.

24:21 Jesus gave this warning to get out quickly for that will be a time of greater horror than anything the world has ever seen or will ever see again. Great suffering is in store for God's people throughout the years ahead. The Jewish historian Josephus recorded that when the Romans sacked Jerusalem and devastated Judea, one hundred thousand Jews were taken prisoner and another 1.1 million died by slaughter and starvation. Jesus' words also point ultimately to the final period of tribulation at the end of the age because nothing like it had ever been seen or would ever be seen again. Yet the great suffering is tempered by a great promise of hope for true believers.

24:22 Many interpreters conclude that Jesus, talking about the end times, was telescoping near-future and far-future events, as the Old Testament prophets had done. Many of these persecutions have already occurred; more are yet to come. While a certain amount of persecution happened in the destruction of Jerusalem, Jesus may also have envisioned the persecution (tribulation) of believers throughout the subsequent years. The persecution will be so severe that those days had to be shortened—that is, if they did not have a specific ending time, the entire human race would be destroyed. This refers to physical survival (as opposed to 24:13, which speaks of spiritual survival). The time would be cut short for the sake of God's chosen ones so that the destruction will not wipe out God's people and thus their mission. God is ultimately in charge of history and will not allow evil to exceed the bounds he has set.

Who are the "chosen ones"? In the Old Testament, this refers to Israel, particularly those who are faithful to God (see 1 Chronicles 16:13; Psalm 105:43; Isaiah 65:9, 15; Daniel 12:1). In the New Testament, this refers to the church—all believers (Romans 8:33; Colossians 3:12; 2 Timothy 2:10; 1 Peter 1:1-2). Some believe that these verses mean that before the beginning of the world, God chose certain people to receive his gift of salvation. Others believe that God foreknew those who would respond to him and therefore he predestined them. What is clear is that God's purpose for people was not an afterthought; it was settled before the foundation of the world.

There are three main views regarding the identity of God's chosen ones and the coming time of tribulation. Each view interprets this verse differently:

Pretribulationists believe that the chosen ones are the Jews who will have returned to the Lord and will join the believers (taken to heaven before the Tribulation) at the end of three and a half years.

Midtribulationists believe that the chosen ones are the church (all true Christians, both Jews and Gentiles). Jesus will return in the middle of the Tribulation and take them with him.

Posttribulationists believe that the chosen ones are the church (all true Christians, both Jews and Gentiles) who will persevere throughout the Tribulation period, which will be ended by God for their sakes.

When the time of suffering comes, the important point for the disciples and all believers to remember is that God is in control. Persecution will occur, but God knows about it and controls how long it will take place. The main thrust of Jesus' teaching is to show God's mercy toward the faithful and to show that God is loving and sovereign. He will not forget his people.

24:23-25 These false messiahs and false prophets will rise up and be able to perform great miraculous signs and wonders designed to convince people that their claims are true. But their "power" will be by trickery or from Satan, not from God. Yet they will be so convincing that they might even deceive God's chosen ones. If we are prepared, Jesus says, we can remain faithful. With the Holy Spirit's help, the elect will not give in and will be able to discern that what the deceivers say is false.

In times of persecution even strong believers will find it difficult to be loyal. They will so much want the Messiah to come that they will grasp any rumor that he has arrived. But if believers have to be told that the Messiah has come, then he hasn't. Christ's coming will be obvious to everyone.

24:26-27 Jesus had already warned his followers that false messiahs and false prophets will come and attempt to lead many astray (24:23-25). Others will think they have found the Messiah and will try to convince people by saying that he can be found in a certain place. The desert refers to prophetic expectation regarding an Elijah-prophet, similar to John the Baptist, who would come (Isaiah 40:3; Malachi 4:5). Jesus explained that, by contrast, his coming would be as obvious and unmistakable as a flash of lightning bursting across the entire sky. Lightning may flash in one part of the sky and be seen just as clearly in another part; so it will be when the Son of Man comes.

24:28 This verse, probably quoting a well-known proverb of the culture, looks to the Second Coming as a time of judgment. Jesus was telling his audience that, just as you know a carcass must be nearby if you see vultures circling overhead, so his coming will be unmistakably marked by various signs.

24:29 After the time of tribulation, nature itself would experience changes intended to contrast with the pseudo signs of the false messiahs. There will be a variety of changes—the sun going dark, the moon not being seen, stars falling, heavenly bodies being shaken (see also Revelation 6:12-14).

Coming persecutions and natural disasters will cause great sorrow in the world. But when believers see these events happening, they should realize that the return of their Messiah is near and that they can look forward to his reign of justice and peace. Rather than being terrified by what is happening in our world, we should confidently await Christ's return to bring justice and to restore his people.

24:30 The Son of Man will appear in the heavens just as he would leave. His second coming will have universal impact. There will be deep mourning among all the nations of the earth because unbelievers will suddenly realize that they have chosen the wrong side. Everything they have scoffed about will be happening, and it will be too late for them. After the cosmic events recorded in 24:29, all the people on earth will see the Son of Man arrive on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Jesus' return will be unmistakable; no one will wonder about his identity. The "clouds" are pictured as the Son of Man's royal chariot, bringing him from heaven to earth as the powerful, glorious, and divine Son of Man.

24:31 Upon his return to earth, Jesus will send forth his angels to gather together his chosen ones from the farthest ends of the earth and heaven. This gathering of the chosen ones signifies the triumphant enthronement of the Son of Man, who will be revealed in all his power and glory. Jesus' second coming marks the core of the Christian hope. The sound of a mighty trumpet blast will signal the gathering of God's people. When he comes, the whole world will know that Jesus is Lord.

As in 24:22, three main views of the Tribulation interpret this verse in different ways:

Pretribulationists would say that this "gathering" refers to the gathering of Jewish saints (also as in 24:22), not the church. The "rapture" (taking believers to heaven) occurred before the Tribulation and concerned only the church.

Midtribulationists would say that this verse refers to the rapture and that it identifies both the church and the Jewish saints. This event will occur in the middle of the Tribulation, with the outpouring of God's wrath on the world occurring in the last half of that period.

Posttribulationists would say that the rapture and revelation are a single event, and this pictures the only return of Christ at the end of the Tribulation. There, as here, he will come to gather his saints and to judge unbelievers.

24:32-33 Using a parable, Jesus answered the disciples' question regarding when the events he spoke about would happen (24:3). The disciples, like anyone living in Palestine, knew when summer would come by observing a fig tree. The dry, brittle twigs getting tender with rising sap and the leaves coming out were certain signs that summer was near. Inherent in this process is patient waiting. There is no hurrying the natural cycle of the fig tree. So all believers must patiently await the Second Coming.

This verse means that the second coming of Jesus is both certain and near. The fulfillment of Jesus' prophecy would assure the disciples that the other prophecies he had given regarding the end times would also come true.

24:34 There are three views of the meaning of the words: this generation will not pass from the scene before all these things take place. (1) It refers only to those alive at the time Jesus spoke who still would be alive at the destruction of Jerusalem; (2) it refers to the end times only; (3) it refers both to the destruction of Jerusalem and the end times—the destruction of Jerusalem containing within itself the elements of the final end times.

"This generation" could refer both to those living at a given time as well as to race or lineage (therefore, he would be speaking of the Jewish race). That makes the third view above most likely. The events of 24:1-28 would occur initially within the lifetime of Jesus' contemporaries. Not that all the problems would stop at the end of their lifetimes, but that all these things would be under way, verifying what Jesus had said. Jesus explained that many of those alive at that time would witness the destruction of Jerusalem. In addition, the Jewish nation would be preserved and remain on earth, so Jews also would witness the end-time events (see also 16:28).

24:35 There could be no doubt in the disciples' minds about the certainty of these prophecies. While heaven and earth would eventually come to an end, Jesus' words (including all his teachings during his time on earth) would remain forever.

While Jesus had given general “signs” to watch for regarding the coming of the end, he clearly explained to the disciples that the exact day or hour was not known by the angels or the Son (Jesus himself). It is good that we don't know exactly when Christ will return. If we knew the precise date, we might be tempted to be lazy in our work for Christ. Worse yet, we might plan to keep sinning and then turn to God right at the end.

24:36 When Jesus said that even he did not know the time of the end, he was affirming his limitations as a human (see Philippians 2:5-8). Of course, God the Father knows the time, and Jesus and the Father are one. But when Jesus became a man, he voluntarily gave up the unlimited use of his divine attributes. On earth, Jesus laid aside his divine prerogatives and submitted to the Father's will. Thus, only the Father knows exactly when Jesus will return. The emphasis of this verse is not on Jesus' lack of knowledge, but rather on the fact that no one knows. It is God the Father's secret to be revealed when he wills. No one can predict by Scripture or science the exact day of the Second Coming. Jesus was teaching that preparation, not calculation, was needed.

24:37-39 The first outpouring of God's judgment upon sinful people in Noah's day has a natural connection with the final outpouring at the Lord's return. People will be going about their daily business, just as they were in Noah's time (Genesis 7:17-24). Just as the flood caught them unawares (and after it was too late) and swept them away in judgment, so it will be when the Son of Man comes (see also 1 Peter 3:20-21).

24:40-42 To further illustrate the suddenness of his return, Jesus pictured “business as usual” in Palestine—the men out working in the field; the women doing domestic chores such as grinding grain. The Second Coming will happen so suddenly that in the blink of an eye, one of those people may be taken and the other left. The reason? One was ready and one was not. Believers must be on guard and alert, constantly ready for him to come at any time. Christ's second coming will be swift and sudden. There will be no time for last-minute repenting or bargaining. The choice that people have already made will determine their eternal destiny.

24:43-44 Jesus again pointed out the need for constant vigilance. A homeowner cannot know when a burglar might come to break into his home, so he must stay alert. So it will be with the return of Christ. He will come when least expected.

24:45-47 In ancient times it was a common practice for masters to put one servant in charge of all the household business. The servant, described as faithful and sensible, parallels the disciples, who were given unprecedented responsibility by Jesus. Yet it also describes those appointed to positions of leadership in the church who should be found faithfully carrying out their duties when Jesus (the master) returns. These servants will be given great rewards.

24:48-51 Some servants, however, might decide to take advantage of their leadership positions, bullying others and indulging themselves. The servant may have thought his master would be gone a long time, but one day, the master will return unannounced and unexpectedly. It will be sudden and without warning, and the evil servant will be “caught in the act.” The master’s judgment against his wicked servant will be extremely severe. Even worse than that horrible punishment will be the servant’s eternal destiny. He will be assigned to a place of weeping and gnashing of teeth (referring to hell). God’s coming judgment is as certain as Jesus’ return to earth.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE TEN BRIDESMAIDS / 25:1-13 / 204

Jesus told the following parables to clarify further what it means to be ready for his return and how to live until he comes. The ten bridesmaids (25:1-13) teach that every person is responsible for his or her own spiritual condition. Some will be included while others will not. No parable by itself completely describes our preparation. Instead, each presents one part of the whole picture.

25:1 All weddings in Israel at this time included the processional of the bridegroom to the bride's family home. These ten bridesmaids were going out to meet the bridegroom, who was coming to the bride's home to join the procession back to his house for the ceremony and the wedding banquet. This happened after dark, and in villages and towns without streetlights; so their lamps lit the way. Everyone was required to carry his or her own lamp.

25:2-7 The foolish bridesmaids were unprepared; they took no oil for their lamps. If their lamps burned out, they would be unable to light them again. The wise bridesmaids had brought along extra oil. Finally at midnight, the bridegroom arrived. Everyone got up and prepared their lamps in anticipation of the procession.

25:8-9 The foolish bridesmaids realized that their lamps were going out, but the wise bridesmaids explained that they didn't have enough to share. This was not selfishness, but rather the realization that if they shared their little oil, then all the torches would burn low and there would not be enough light for the wedding procession. Jesus' focus was on the foolish people's unpreparedness. When Jesus returns to take his people to heaven, we must be ready. Spiritual preparation cannot be bought or borrowed at the last minute. No one can rely on anyone else. Our relationship with God must be our own.

25:10-12 While the foolish bridesmaids were off trying to buy oil, the bridegroom came and everyone proceeded on to the wedding banquet. The central focus of the parable lies in the words and the door was locked. Jesus' point, again, is that to not be ready at the right time means to miss out completely. There is a finality to the shutting of that door. Those outside will not have another chance to be let in.

25:13 Jesus concluded with the application that his true followers must stay awake and be prepared because he will return when they will least expect it. God may delay his return longer than we might prefer or expect. We must be prepared for such a delay—counting the cost of discipleship and persevering faithfully until he returns. Those who are unfaithful must realize that neglecting Christ’s invitation may lead to irreversible consequences and the time of opportunity to believe may pass.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE LOANED MONEY / 25:14-30 / 205

The following parable explains how Jesus’ followers are to remain prepared during their wait for his return. While the previous parable about the wise and foolish bridesmaids stressed readiness, this parable focused on using the waiting time well.

25:14-15 The man going on a trip was wealthy enough to have servants and to have an amount of money that he wanted invested and multiplied while he was gone. He divided the money among his three servants. Each received different amounts in proportion to his abilities. The different sums of money point out how God recognizes each person as a unique individual with varied circumstances and personality. What he “gives” to each person is exactly what that person can handle. If any of these servants failed in the assignment, his excuse could not be that he was overwhelmed. The money represents any kind of resource that believers are given. God gives us time, abilities, and other resources according to our abilities, and he expects us to invest them wisely until he returns.

25:16-18 The first two servants doubled the money the master had given them. But the third servant dug a hole in the ground and hid the master’s money. This would not have seemed unusual to Jesus’ listeners, for in the ancient world, it was not an uncommon way to safeguard one’s valuables (see 13:44). We do not know why he did it; he could have been lazy or afraid.

25:19-23 The first servant brought the doubled money, and his master was pleased with his efforts and with the profit. The reward for the servant’s faithfulness is even greater responsibility. The second servant had also faithfully fulfilled his responsibility. He had been given less money, but he had done everything he could and brought a doubled return to the master. Because he had faithfully discharged his responsibility, even though he had less than the first servant, he received the same reward, commendation, and privileges.

We are responsible to use well what God has given us. The issue is not how much we have but how well we use what we have. Each believer should faithfully carry out the duties entrusted to him or her by God and multiply his or her God-given gifts for the sake of the Kingdom.

25:24-25 The third servant made excuses instead of realizing that, from the start, his responsibility was to serve his master to the best of his ability. To refuse to serve reveals a lack of love and little desire to accomplish anything for the master. He hoped to play it safe and protect himself from his hard master, but he had accomplished nothing for him. His words to the master reveal a self-centered character. He accused his master of being hard. His accusation was an attempt to cover up his own irresponsibility.

We must not make excuses to avoid doing what God calls us to do. God truly is our Master, so we must obey him. Our time, abilities, and money aren't really ours; we are caretakers, not owners. When we ignore, squander, or abuse what we have been given, we are rebellious and deserve to be punished.

25:26-27 Using the servant's own words, the master pointed out that he had every right to require that his servants fulfill their responsibilities. He had not expected much of this servant in the first place; that's why the servant received so little. So even putting the money in the bank to earn interest would have been enough. Yet the wicked and lazy servant had not even done that.

25:28-29 The master severed his relationship with this servant, took away the money, and gave it to the one who had earned the most. Jesus had already taught the concept: to those who use well what they are given, even more will be given (13:12). This parable describes the consequences of two attitudes regarding Christ's return. The person who diligently prepares for it by investing his or her time and talent to serve God will be rewarded. The person who has no heart for the work of the Kingdom will be punished. God rewards faithfulness. Those who bear no fruit for God's Kingdom cannot expect to be treated the same as those who are faithful.

25:30 To fail to do good with what God has entrusted to us, to fail to use it to increase his Kingdom, is a grievous sin that will receive severe punishment—for it means that one never knew or loved the Master. The outer darkness and weeping and gnashing of teeth picture the anguish of hell (see 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51).

Watching and waiting for the Kingdom means being prepared. Being prepared means making ready for it by increasing the glory of God in this world through good deeds. Good deeds are best performed through the talents God has given us and should be done to the best of our ability.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT THE FINAL JUDGMENT / 25:31-46 / 206

This parable of the sheep and goats builds Jesus' message of judgment and salvation. Those who believe will naturally serve others in need.

25:31-33 This verse pictures Jesus when he will return, not as the humble carpenter from Nazareth but in his glory. The sight will be spectacular when the angels accompany the Son and we see him upon his glorious throne (see also 16:27-28; 24:30-31; Zechariah 14:5). He will come as Judge, for all the nations will be gathered in his presence (see Psalm 110:1; 2 Corinthians 5:10).

Jesus used sheep and goats to picture the division between believers and unbelievers. Jesus, the Judge, will separate them. While all "nations" are before him, he will separate individuals, for each individual is responsible for his or her own salvation (as seen in the parable of the bridesmaids, 25:1-13). This "separation" became a picture for the Last Judgment.

25:34-39 The "sheep" are at his right hand, and are identified as God's chosen people who inherit the Kingdom prepared for them. This Kingdom, existing from the beginning of time, is sure and unchangeable. Believers need never doubt its existence. The reason they are ushered into the Kingdom is that they gave to those who had need. This list describes acts of mercy people can do every day. These acts do not depend on wealth, ability, or intelligence; they are simple acts freely given and freely received. Jesus demands our personal involvement in caring for others' needs (Isaiah 58:7). That this list is repeated four times in this parable indicates its importance as a guide for practical discipleship. The list is not exhaustive; instead, it represents all types of good deeds. This parable is not teaching salvation by good deeds, but evidence of salvation through good deeds.

The righteous are surprised at the King's words. He commends them for their acts of kindness to him, but they realize that they did not have opportunity to do such kindnesses to him directly.

25:40 The basis of reward rests on the acts of kindness each individual believer did for other believers, for in so doing, they did those kindnesses for the King himself. Through the Holy Spirit, Jesus is present in even the most humble or "insignificant" follower of Christ. How we treat lowly and needy fellow Christians determines how truly we love Jesus. If Christians who have resources would help needy fellow Christians, non-Christians would be totally persuaded of the validity of Christian love. Such love for others glorifies God by reflecting our love for him.

25:41 For the goats (those on his left), however, the story is different. These “goats,” mingling every day as they did with the sheep, may have thought that they could get by unnoticed. But God would separate them, and their judgment would be severe. There will be no middle ground at the final judgment—either a person is a “sheep” or a “goat.” And the result will be either the Kingdom (25:34) or eternal fire prepared for the Devil and his demons (referring to hell) and separation from God forever (indicated by the words “away with you”). For more on hell, see 5:22.

25:42-43 The sin noted by the King was not active evil-doing but failure to do good. As in 25:35-36, the list is not comprehensive, but it represents good deeds that people often fail to do. Doing wrong in ignorance may be excusable (see Acts 3:17; 1 Timothy 1:13), but when believers neglect to help those in need, they disobey Christ. These actions do not take special talents, gifts, or lifestyles. One need not be rich to carry these out. Failure to do them then shows a lack of love for Christian brothers and, by extension, for the Lord himself.

25:44-45 The evildoers, also, were surprised at the King’s words. How could he say that they had neglected to do acts of kindness to him personally when, in reality, that would seem to be an impossibility? So he explained that in neglecting to do these kindnesses to even the least of the Christian brothers and sisters, they had neglected to do so for him. By that neglect, they had shown no true salvation, for their salvation had not manifested itself in good deeds as it would naturally do. Their failures were not acts of wickedness, but refusals to do good and to show compassion.

25:46 God will separate his obedient followers from pretenders and unbelievers, and their destinies will be vastly different. The real evidence of our belief is the way we act. To treat all persons we encounter as if they are Jesus is not easy. What we do for others demonstrates what we really think about Jesus’ words to us—feed the hungry, give the homeless a place to stay, look after the sick. How well do your actions separate you from pretenders and unbelievers? Will you be sent away to eternal punishment or eternal life?

RELIGIOUS LEADERS PLOT TO KILL JESUS / 26:1-5 / 207

Starting in this chapter and through the end of the book, we find the climax of Jesus' ministry. Matthew recorded little teaching (as opposed to John who recorded lengthy teaching at the Last Supper) and instead focused on Jesus' completion of the work that he had come to do. Jesus moved into the final days of his earthly ministry and to the act that he ultimately came to accomplish—death for sins. This was never a surprise to Jesus; in fact, he had already told his disciples on three different occasions that he would suffer and die (see 16:21-28; 17:22-23; 20:17-19). As if echoing these warnings, Jesus reminded his disciples that the time had come for these things to be fulfilled.

26:1-2 That Jesus would be betrayed and crucified during Passover was deeply significant with respect to Jewish history. The “Passover” commemorated the night the Israelites were freed from Egypt (Exodus 12)—when God “passed over” homes marked by the blood of a lamb. This was the last great plague on Egypt when, in unmarked homes, the firstborn sons died. After this horrible disaster, Pharaoh allowed the Israelites to leave. Annually, Hebrew families would celebrate the Passover meal, a feast with the main course of lamb. The sacrifice of a lamb and the spilling of its blood commemorated Israel's escape from Egypt, when the blood of a lamb painted on their doorposts had saved their firstborn sons from death. This event foreshadowed Jesus' work on the cross. As the spotless Lamb of God, his blood would be spilled in order to save his people from the penalty of death brought by sin.

26:3-5 The Jewish leaders plotted secretly to kill Jesus. They met at the residence of Caiaphas, the ruling high priest. Caiaphas was the leader of the religious group called the Sadducees. Caiaphas served for eighteen years, longer than most high priests, suggesting that he was gifted at cooperating with the Romans.

They did not want to attempt to arrest Jesus during the Passover because they realized that to do so could cause a riot on his behalf. During this holiday, Jerusalem, a town of about 50,000, would swell to 250,000 people. The leaders feared that an uprising might bring the wrath of Rome. They may have planned to arrest Jesus after the Feast when the vast crowds were gone. Perhaps Judas's unexpected offer (26:14-16) caused them to move sooner than they had planned, but, as this passage implies, all was proceeding according to God's timetable.

A WOMAN ANOINTS JESUS WITH PERFUME / 26:6-13 / 182

Matthew sandwiched this beautiful event between two sections dealing with the plot to eliminate Jesus. Most likely, John's Gospel placed this event in its chronological position. This act of devotion by Mary, who is a true heroine in this narrative, contrasts with the treachery of the villains—the religious leaders and Judas.

26:6-7 Bethany was located on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives (Jerusalem is on the western side). This town was the home of Jesus' friends Lazarus, Mary, and Martha. Jesus had been returning to Bethany from Jerusalem each night during this final week, probably staying with these dear friends (21:17).

One night, a dinner had been prepared with Jesus as the honored guest. The host, Simon, did not have leprosy at this time, for lepers were forced to live separately from people. Jesus may have healed Simon of his leprosy, but he had the nickname as a former leper.

The woman who came in was probably Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus. She had a beautiful jar of expensive perfume which she poured on Jesus' head. Such an anointing, using expensive oil, pictured a royal anointing appropriate for the Messiah.

26:8-9 Mary's gift to Jesus was worth a year's wages. The disciples concluded that the expensive ointment had been wasted on Jesus, and they rebuked Mary for such an act because the perfume could have been given to the poor. Where Matthew says the disciples, John specifically mentions Judas (John 12:4-5). Judas's indignation over Mary's act of worship would not have been based on concern for the poor, but on greed. Because Judas was the treasurer of Jesus' ministry and had embezzled funds (John 12:6), he no doubt wanted the perfume sold so that the proceeds could be put into his care.

26:10-11 Jesus reprimanded the disciples for their lack of insight. Their words criticized Mary's actions, but Jesus' words comforted her. The expensive perfume poured on Jesus had been a good thing—a beautiful act of love and sacrifice—and Jesus declared it to be so. This was a unique act for a specific occasion—an anointing that anticipated Jesus' burial and publicly declared faith in him as Messiah. In saying you will always have the poor among you, Jesus was not saying that we should neglect the poor, nor was he justifying indifference to them. Believers should show kindness to the poor, and opportunities to do so would continue until the end of time. There would always be poor people who would need help.

The phrase I will not be here with you much longer meant that Jesus would soon be gone from them physically. Jesus' purpose in these words was to explain that the opportunity to show him such devotion and to anoint him with oil (in preparation for burial) would soon pass. Jesus was affirming Mary's unselfish act of worship and highlighting the special sacrifice that Mary had made for him. The essence of worshiping Christ is to regard him with utmost love, respect, and devotion, as well as to be willing to sacrifice to him what is most precious.

26:12-13 Mary may not have set out to anoint Jesus for burial; she was merely showing great respect for the Teacher she so loved and respected. She may not have understood Jesus' approaching death any more than the disciples, although she was known for truly listening to Jesus (Luke 10:39). She may have realized something was going to happen to Jesus, for all knew he was in great danger, and thus she sympathized with him and honored him with the greatest gift she could give.

Mary's unselfish act would be preached throughout the world along with the Good News. This has come true because we read about it today. While the disciples misunderstood Jesus' mission and constantly argued about places in the Kingdom, and while the religious leaders stubbornly refused to believe in Jesus and plotted his death, this one quiet woman so loved Jesus and was so devoted to him that she considered no sacrifice too great for her beloved Master. She is an example to us all of unselfish devotion to our Savior.

JUDAS AGREES TO BETRAY JESUS / 26:14-16 / 208

26:14-16 Why would one of Jesus' twelve disciples, Judas Iscariot, want to betray Jesus? The Bible does not reveal Judas's motives other than gaining money. Judas knew that the leading priests had it in for Jesus, and he knew they would have the power to arrest Jesus. So that was where he went. Judas's greedy desire for money could not be fulfilled if he followed Jesus, so he betrayed him in exchange for pay from the religious leaders. To have discovered a traitor among Jesus' followers greatly pleased the religious leaders. They had been having difficulty figuring out how to arrest Jesus (26:3-5), so when an offer of help came from this unexpected corner, they took advantage of it.

Matthew alone has the exact amount of money Judas accepted to betray Jesus—thirty pieces of silver, the price of a slave (Exodus 21:32). This fulfilled Zechariah 11:12-13 (see also Jeremiah 18:1-4; 19:1-13; 32:6-15).

DISCIPLES PREPARE FOR THE PASSOVER / 26:17-19 / 209

The Passover took place on one night and at one meal, but the Festival of Unleavened Bread, which was celebrated with it, would continue for a week. The chronology of the events of Jesus' final week is as follows:

Thursday—Lambs were slain in the afternoon, Passover began at 6:00 ^{P.M.}, Last Supper, Gethsemane, arrest

Friday—Official trial, Crucifixion, burial by sundown, Feast of Unleavened Bread and Sabbath began at 6:00 ^{P.M.}

Saturday—Jesus' body was in the tomb

Sunday—Early morning Resurrection

26:17-19 Jesus' disciples asked him, “Where do you want us to prepare the Passover supper?” Peter and John were sent to make preparations (Luke 22:8)—buying and preparing the unleavened bread, herbs, wine, and other ceremonial food. Jesus told the two disciples that as they entered Jerusalem, they would meet a certain man. In Mark, Jesus explained that this man would be carrying a jar of water (Mark 14:13). Ordinarily women, not men, would go to the well and bring home the water. So this man would have stood out in the crowd. This may have been a prearranged signal, or Jesus may have supernaturally known that this man would be there and would lead them to the right house. This private location kept the plans secret and security tight. Tradition says that this may have been Mark's home (the writer of the Gospel). If this speculation is true, the owner of the house would have been Mark's father and one of Jesus' followers. He knew exactly who the Teacher was and probably knew the disciples by sight. The disciples did as Jesus directed and made preparations for the others.

JESUS AND THE DISCIPLES SHARE THE LAST SUPPER / 26:20-30 / 211

On that evening, Jesus and the disciples arrived in Jerusalem. The Passover meal was supposed to be eaten in Jerusalem after sunset and before midnight. The disciples and Jesus took their places on the couches around the table.

26:20-22 While they were eating, Jesus said, “The truth is, one of you will betray me.” His words caused quite a stir among the disciples. Jesus had told them three different times that he would soon die, but news that one of them was a traitor saddened them greatly. Although the other disciples were confused, Judas was not. Apparently, Judas was not obvious as the betrayer, so each disciple asked Jesus for assurance.

26:23-24 Jesus would be betrayed and would die as he had already told his disciples. His death would not occur merely because of the betrayer, for the Son of Man had to die to complete God's plan as the Scriptures declared long ago.

But it would be far better for the betrayer if he had never been born. Jesus' words are reminiscent of Psalm 41:10-12, where the sufferer is vindicated by God and his enemies punished. Jesus knew that Judas was going to betray him, and he also knew that Judas would not repent.

26:25 Jesus' answer to Judas was ambiguous enough so that only Judas would know that Jesus had identified him as the betrayer. Luke wrote that "Satan entered into Judas Iscariot" before Judas went to the religious leaders (Luke 22:3); however, Satan's part in the betrayal of Jesus does not remove any of the responsibility from Judas. In God's sovereign will and according to his timetable, he uses sinful men, but that doesn't excuse their sin. All people will be held accountable for their choices and actions. Satan tried to end Jesus' mission and thwart God's plan. Like Judas, Satan did not know that Jesus' death and resurrection were the most important parts of God's plan all along.

26:26 As Jesus and the disciples were eating, Jesus took the loaf of unleavened bread, asked God's blessing on it, and broke it in pieces. Jesus took two traditional parts of the Passover meal, the passing of bread and the drinking of wine, and gave them new meaning as representations of his body and blood. He used the bread and wine to explain the significance of what he was about to do on the cross. Jesus told the disciples to take it and eat the bread for it was his body. Jesus portrayed the sacrifice he would make and the spiritual benefit that would be passed on to those who had a personal relationship with him. This was Jesus' pledge of his personal presence with all his disciples whenever they would partake of this meal.

26:27-28 Jesus gave thanks and gave the cup to the disciples, saying, "Each of you drink from it." As with the bread, Jesus spoke words in figurative language. "This is my blood" means "this wine represents my blood." Jesus' blood, shed on behalf of the sins of many, began a covenant between God and people.

In Old Testament times, God had agreed to forgive people's sins if they would bring animals for the priests to sacrifice. When this sacrificial system was inaugurated, the agreement between God and human beings was sealed with the blood of animals (Exodus 24:8). But animal blood did not in itself remove sin, and animal sacrifices had to be repeated day by day and year after year.

Jesus instituted a new covenant, or agreement, between humans and God. This concept is key to all New Testament theology and forms the basis for the name of the “New Testament” portion of the Bible. Under this new covenant, Jesus would die in the place of sinners. Unlike the blood of animals, Jesus’ blood would truly remove the sins of all who would put their faith in him. And Jesus’ sacrifice would never have to be repeated; it would be good for all eternity (Hebrews 9:23-28). The old covenant was a shadow of the new, pointing forward to the day when Jesus himself would be the final and ultimate sacrifice for sin. Rather than an unblemished lamb slain on the altar, the perfect Lamb of God was slain on the cross, a sinless sacrifice to forgive sins once and for all. Jesus explained that his blood would be poured out, referring to a violent death.

Those who accept Christ’s sacrifice and believe in him receive forgiveness. Now all people can come directly to God through faith because Jesus’ death has made us acceptable in God’s eyes (Romans 3:21-24).

The Lord’s Supper commemorates Christ’s death on the cross in our place, paying the penalty for our sins, and it points to the coming of his Kingdom in glory. When we partake of it, we show our deep gratitude for Christ’s work on our behalf, and our faith is strengthened.

26:29-30 Again Jesus assured his disciples of his victory over his imminent death and of a future in his Father’s Kingdom. The next few hours would bring apparent defeat, but soon they would experience the power of the Holy Spirit, and they would witness the great spread of the gospel message. Because Jesus would be raised, so his followers will be raised, for he will drink that wine with his followers. One day we will all be together again in God’s new Kingdom.

The hymn they sang was most likely taken from Psalms 115–118. John included a lengthy discourse that Jesus had with his disciples (John 13:31–17:26) before he and the eleven remaining disciples left the upper room and went out to the Mount of Olives.

JESUS AGAIN PREDICTS PETER’S DENIAL / 26:31-35 / 222

This is the second time in the same evening that Jesus predicted the disciples’ denial and desertion (see Luke 22:31-34; John 13:36-38). The disciples would turn away from him. Jesus would go to the cross alone.

26:31-32 The disciples might have been tempted to think that Satan and his forces had gained the upper hand in this drama about Jesus’ death. But God was in control, even in the death of his Son. Satan gained no victory—everything occurred as God had planned. Jesus himself explained that the disciples' desertion would also occur just as it had been predicted in Scripture, specifically Zechariah 13:7.

In Zechariah, God commanded that the Shepherd be struck down. As a result, the sheep would be scattered. Without a shepherd, the sheep would go through a period of great trial and be refined. The refining process would strengthen them and create a new, faithful people for God. The disciples would be staggered by what would happen to Jesus, but his death would ultimately produce their salvation and regather the sheep.

After predicting the disciples' desertion, Jesus predicted their reunion after his resurrection. Jesus promised that he would go ahead of them to Galilee and meet them all there.

26:33-35 Although all the disciples protested Jesus' words (26:35), Peter, always ready to speak up, declared that his allegiance to Jesus would prove to be much stronger than that of all the other disciples. He knew that Jesus had said to him, "Upon this rock I will build my church" (16:18), and may have assumed that he would be immune to such faithlessness.

Jesus' words to Peter were solemn. Instead of being the only loyal disciple, Peter would in fact prove to be more disloyal than the other ten. Not only would he desert Jesus, but he would also deny him three times before the night was over, that is before the rooster crowed at dawn's first light.

Peter did not think it possible for him to actually deny any relationship with Jesus. Not only Peter, but all the disciples, declared that they would die before denying Jesus. A few hours later, however, they all would scatter.

JESUS AGONIZES IN THE GARDEN / 26:36-46 / 223

After eating the meal, the disciples left Jerusalem and went out to a favorite meeting place (Luke 22:39; John 18:2). This gardenlike enclosure called Gethsemane, meaning "olive press," was probably an orchard of olive trees with a press for extracting oil. The garden was in the Kidron Valley just outside the eastern wall of Jerusalem and just below the Mount of Olives.

26:36 Jesus told eight of the disciples to sit down and wait, probably near the garden's entrance, while he went farther in to pray. The disciples must have been physically and emotionally exhausted from trying to comprehend what would transpire. Instead of watching, they gave in to their exhaustion and fell asleep.

26:37-38 Jesus then took the other three disciples, Peter, James, and John, farther into the garden with him. To these closest friends, Jesus revealed that he was filled with anguish and deep distress over his approaching death because he would be forsaken by the Father (27:46), would have to bear the sins of the world, and would face a terrible execution. The divine course was set, but Jesus, in his human nature, still struggled (Hebrews 5:7-9). As the time of this event neared, it became even more horrifying. Jesus naturally recoiled from the prospect.

Early in Jesus' ministry Satan had tempted him to take the easy way out (4:1-11); later Peter had suggested that Jesus did not have to die (16:22). In both cases, Jesus had dealt with the temptation soundly. Now, as his horrible death and separation from the Father loomed before him, he was crushed with grief to the point of death. So he asked Peter, James, and John to stay with him and keep watch. Jesus knew Judas would soon arrive, and Jesus wanted to devote himself to prayer until that time came.

26:39 Jesus went still farther into the garden to be alone with God. He threw himself on the ground before God in deep spiritual anguish, praying that this cup of suffering might be taken away. In the Old Testament, "cup" stood for the trial of suffering and the wrath of God (Isaiah 51:17). So Jesus referred to the suffering that he must endure as the "cup" he would be required to drink. This was a bitter cup. The physical suffering would be horrible enough (Hebrews 5:7-9), but God's Son also had to accept the cup of spiritual suffering—bearing our sin and being separated from God (27:46). Yet Jesus humbly submitted to the Father's will. He went ahead with the mission for which he had come. Jesus expressed his true feelings as a human being, but he was not denying or rebelling against God's will. He reaffirmed his desire to do what God wanted by saying, "Yet I want your will, not mine." God did not take away the "cup," for the cup was his will. Yet he did take away Jesus' extreme fear and agitation. Jesus moved serenely through the next several hours, knowing that he was doing his Father's will.

26:40-41 Jesus got up from his prayer to return to the three disciples. He had told them to stay and keep watch. But instead of showing support for Jesus by remaining awake with him and praying for strength in the coming hours, they had fallen asleep. Jesus addressed Peter directly. Peter had said he would never leave Jesus; yet when Jesus needed prayer and support, Peter wasn't there for him. Thus, Jesus rebuked Peter for his failure to keep watch for even one hour.

Jesus told the disciples that this was the time to keep alert and pray, for very soon they would face difficult temptations. Jesus was not only asking that they pray for him, but also that they pray for themselves. Jesus knew that these men would need extra strength to face the temptation ahead—temptation to run away or to deny their relationship with him. The disciples were about to see Jesus die. Would they still think he was the Messiah? The disciples would soon face confusion, fear, loneliness, guilt, and the temptation to conclude that they had been deceived.

Jesus added, “For though the spirit is willing enough, the body is weak.” Their inner desires and intentions would be, as they had previously boasted, to never deny Jesus and to die with him. Yet their human inadequacies, with all their fears and failures, would make it difficult to carry out those good intentions.

Jesus used Peter’s drowsiness to warn him to be spiritually vigilant against the temptation he would soon face. The way to overcome temptation is to stay alert and to pray. This means being aware of the possibilities of temptation, sensitive to the subtleties, and morally resolved to fight courageously. Because temptation strikes where we are most vulnerable, we can’t resist alone. Prayer is essential because God’s strength can shore up our defenses and defeat Satan.

26:42-45 Jesus left the three disciples and returned to his conversation with the Father (26:39). Jesus returned to the three disciples and found them sleeping. Despite his warning that they should be awake, alert, and praying not to fall to the coming temptations, they just couldn’t keep their eyes open. Jesus went back to pray a third time. During these times of prayer, the battle was won. Jesus still had to go to the cross, but he would humbly submit to the Father’s will and accomplish the task set before him.

After much time in prayer, Jesus was ready to face his time, which conveyed that all he had predicted about his death was about to happen (see John 12:23-24). The disciples had missed a great opportunity to talk to the Father, and there would be no more time to do so, for Jesus’ hour had come. Thus, Jesus did not again tell them to pray. Jesus had spent the last few hours with the Father, wrestling with him, and humbly submitting to him. Now he was prepared to face his betrayer and the sinners who were coming to arrest him.

26:46 Jesus roused the three sleeping disciples (and perhaps the other eight as well) and called them together. His words “Up, let’s be going” did not mean that Jesus was contemplating running away. Instead, he called the disciples to go with him to meet the betrayer, Judas, and the coming crowd. Jesus went forth of his own will, advancing to meet his accusers rather than waiting for them to come to him.

JESUS IS BETRAYED AND ARRESTED / 26:47-56 / 224

Judas, who had left the Last Supper at Jesus' request (John 13:27), had apparently gone to the religious leaders to whom he had spoken earlier (26:14-16). The religious leaders had issued the warrant for Jesus' arrest, and Judas was acting as Jesus' official accuser. Judas led the group to one of Jesus' retreats where no onlookers would interfere with them.

26:47 The mob came in the middle of the night when most of the people were asleep, so they could arrest Jesus without commotion. Although there were no crowds to worry about, Jesus was surrounded by eleven loyal followers who might put up a fight, so they came armed with swords and clubs in addition to lanterns and torches to light their way (John 18:3).

26:48-50 Judas had told the crowd to arrest the man whom he would kiss. A kiss on the cheek or hand was a common form of greeting in the Middle East, so this was not unusual. Judas would affectionately greet the man the guards were to arrest and lead away.

Jesus' use of the word friend for Judas was an act of love on Jesus' part, which shows that God's love never leaves even the apostate. But it carried a twist of irony in that both Jesus and Judas knew of the treachery. Jesus was still in charge, and his words do what you have come for amount to him giving permission for the event to take place.

The religious leaders had not arrested Jesus in the Temple for fear of a riot. Instead, they had come secretly at night, under the influence of the prince of darkness, Satan himself. Jesus offered no resistance and was duly arrested. Everything was proceeding according to God's plan. It was time for Jesus to suffer and die.

26:51 According to John 18:10, the person who pulled out a sword was Peter, who slashed off the right ear of the high priest's servant named Malchus. Peter was trying to demonstrate his loyalty as well as prevent what he saw as defeat. He wasn't going to let this crowd arrest Jesus without putting up a fight. Luke 22:51 records that Jesus immediately healed the man's ear and prevented any further bloodshed.

26:52-54 Jesus told Peter to put away his sword and allow God's plan to unfold. Peter didn't understand that Jesus had to die in order to gain victory. But Jesus demonstrated perfect commitment to his Father's will. His Kingdom would not be advanced with swords, but with faith and obedience.

Jesus' words here, recorded only by Matthew, stress the difference between people's tendency to take matters into their own hands (and suffer the consequences) and God's more far-reaching actions. The reason for putting the sword away was that those who use the sword will be killed by the sword (probably quoting a local proverb). To take revenge with one's own hands is to set oneself against the will of God. Jesus clarified this by stating that he could call on his Father who would at once make available to him thousands of angels. Jesus was stating that he was in control—thus, everything was happening with his permission.

Jesus knew the far-reaching results. If he were to call for protection from legions of angels, how would the Scriptures be fulfilled that describe what must happen? Jesus' suffering would be necessary to God's plan; no one must stand in the way of God's will.

26:55-56 Jesus pointed out the ridiculous tactics of these people who had come to arrest him. They did not need to come against him with swords and clubs, for he voluntarily surrendered himself. Jesus was not a dangerous criminal; he was a religious teacher who had been teaching in the Temple every day during the past week. Instead, they came at night for fear of the crowds. Jesus also mocked their show of worldly power. He who could summon angels was not afraid of swords. Did the guards imagine that swords would intimidate Jesus? They didn't understand who he was.

Just hours earlier, these disciples had vowed never to desert Jesus (26:35). The "all" who promised total allegiance were now the all who deserted him and fled.

CAIAPHAS QUESTIONS JESUS / 26:57-68 / 226

The trial by the Council had two phases. This first phase occurred during the night (recorded here in 26:57-68); then another meeting was held early in the morning (27:1) to satisfy a law that allowed trials only during the daytime. That meeting was a mere formality held at daybreak, during which the verdict was given and Jesus was led off to the Roman procurator for sentencing. A death sentence had to be authorized by the Romans (John 18:31).

26:57 By then it was very early Friday morning, before daybreak. Jesus was taken under guard from the garden back into Jerusalem to the home of Caiaphas, the ruling high priest. That the teachers of religious law and other leaders had gathered shows that this was a trial by the Jewish Council. Because of their haste to complete the trial and see Jesus die before the Sabbath, less than twenty-four hours later, the religious leaders first met at Caiaphas's house at night to accomplish the preliminaries before their more formal meeting in the Temple at daylight. The leaders finally had Jesus where they wanted him, and they were determined to accomplish their plans as quickly as possible.

26:58 The high priest's residence was a palace with outer walls enclosing a courtyard. Although most of the disciples had fled when the soldiers arrested Jesus, two of them, Peter and another disciple (perhaps John) returned to where Jesus had been taken (John 18:15).

26:59-61 Upstairs in the high priest's palace, the leading priests and the entire high council had assembled before dawn. They wanted evidence to convict Jesus of a crime deserving death, but they did not find any. The obvious conclusion should have been that Jesus was innocent of any crime. But this was not a trial for justice; it was a trial to accomplish an evil purpose.

There was no shortage of witnesses; the problem was in finding two testimonies that agreed. During a trial, each witness would be called upon separately to give his testimony. But the stories these witnesses gave did not agree in the details. According to Moses' law, no one was to be put to death on the testimony of only one witness (Numbers 35:30); there had to be two or three agreeing witnesses (Deuteronomy 19:15). This must have been exasperating for the desperate religious leaders. They weren't going to let Jesus get away on a technicality!

Finally, two men were found who claimed that Jesus had said he could destroy the Temple of God. However, Jesus had not spoken in the first person ("I will destroy"); nor had he said anything linking his words with the Temple building. Instead, Jesus had spoken in the second person plural, issuing a command, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up" (John 2:19). Jesus, of course, was talking about his body, not the building. Ironically, the religious leaders were about to destroy Jesus' body just as he had said, and three days later he would rise from the dead.

26:62-64 The legal code required that a defendant answer his accusers, so Caiaphas was getting frustrated. His only hope was to get Jesus to say something that would give them evidence to convict him. Caiaphas tried to make up in intimidation what was lacking in evidence. He asked Jesus to answer his accusers and then to explain the accusations against him. Jesus had nothing to say to the group of liars who had spoken against him, so he remained silent. This had been prophesied in Scripture (Isaiah 53:7). With Jesus' silence, the court proceedings ground to a halt.

But Caiaphas had another tactic up the sleeve of his priestly robe. He decided to ask Jesus point-blank, “Tell us whether you are the Messiah, the Son of God.” The Council must have held its collective breath in anticipation. Would Jesus outrightly claim to be the Messiah?

To the first questions, Jesus made no reply because the questions were based on confusing and erroneous evidence. Not answering was wiser than trying to clarify the fabricated accusations. But if Jesus had refused to answer this question, it would have been tantamount to denying his deity and his mission. So Jesus answered without hesitation, “Yes, it is as you say.”

Then Jesus gave a startling prophecy. The words the Son of Man, sitting at God’s right hand refer to Psalm 110:1, and coming back on the clouds of heaven recall Daniel 7:13-14. The “clouds” represented the power and glory of God. Both verses were considered to be prophecies of the coming Messiah, and Jesus applied them to himself. As the one sitting at the right hand of power, he would judge his accusers, and they would have to answer to him (Revelation 20:11-13).

26:65-66 Blasphemy was the sin of claiming to be God or of attacking God’s authority and majesty in any way. Caiaphas tore his clothing to signify his outrage at the audacity of the claims of this mere teacher from Nazareth. Jesus had identified himself with God by applying two messianic prophecies to himself. The high priest recognized Jesus’ claim and exclaimed to the Council, “You have all heard his blasphemy.”

Blasphemy was punishable by death (Leviticus 24:15-16). “Why do we need other witnesses?” asked Caiaphas without expecting any answer. They needed no more false witnesses. Jesus had finally said what Caiaphas needed, so he asked for the group’s decision. They condemned him to die.

26:67-68 Then some of the members of the Council acted in a most brutish way. To spit in someone’s face was the worst insult possible (see Numbers 12:14), but these religious men weren’t content to stop at that. While Jesus was blindfolded, they took turns hitting him and then asking him to tell who it was that hit him. Yet even this had been prophesied in Scripture (Isaiah 52:14). Jesus suffered great pain, humiliation, and brutality to take away our sin.

PETER DENIES KNOWING JESUS / 26:69-75 / 227

Peter’s experiences in the next few hours would revolutionize his life. He would change from an impulsive follower to a repentant and wiser disciple, and finally to the kind of person Christ could use to build his church.

26:69-70 This servant girl was actually guarding the gate to the inner courtyard (John 18:16). She had seen Peter enter and take a seat outside in the courtyard of the palace and recognized him as one who had been with Jesus the Galilean. This put Peter in a difficult position. Standing among the soldiers and servants right there in enemy territory, Peter did not necessarily want to be identified with the man in an upstairs room on trial for his life. So Peter made an impulsive response—he lied. Peter gave the answer that Jesus had predicted: He denied knowing Jesus. Temptation came when Peter least expected it, and this serves to warn us to be prepared. Peter had been ready to fight with a sword but not to face the accusations of a servant.

26:71-72 Once again Peter was put to the test. Another servant girl noticed him. She didn't question him; she just told those standing around that Peter was with Jesus of Nazareth. The accusation scared Peter, so once again he lied, this time with an oath, meaning he had invoked a curse on himself if he were lying. This was Peter's second denial.

26:73-75 About an hour passed (Luke 22:59), and another bystander noticed Peter's Galilean accent. While Peter may have hoped to seem a natural part of the group by joining in the conversation, instead he revealed, by his speech, that he did not belong there. This was too much for Peter, so he decided to make the strongest denial he could think of by denying with an oath, "I don't know the man." Peter was swearing that he did not know Jesus and was invoking a curse on himself if his words were untrue. He was saying, in effect, "May God strike me dead if I am lying." This was the third denial.

Immediately upon Peter's final words, the rooster crowed. Peter's denials fulfilled Jesus' words (26:33-35). When Peter heard the rooster crowing and saw Jesus look down at him from the upper story where the trial was being held (Luke 22:61), he was reminded of what Jesus had said to him earlier. Peter had indeed denied Jesus three times before the rooster crowed.

Peter went away, crying bitterly, realizing he had denied his Lord, the Messiah. Fortunately, the story does not end there. Peter's tears were of true sorrow and repentance. Later, Peter would reaffirm his love for Jesus, and Jesus would forgive him (see Mark 16:7; John 21:15-19). From this humiliating experience, Peter learned much that would help him later when he became leader of the young church. The presence of this scene in all four Gospels shows its importance to the early church, both as a warning of the dangers of yielding to persecution and as an example of Jesus' power to forgive the most abject failure.

THE COUNCIL OF RELIGIOUS LEADERS CONDEMNS JESUS / 27:1-2 / 228

At daybreak, the entire Council reached a decision. They had actually reached it before daybreak (26:66), but they had to pronounce the decision at a meeting during the daytime in accordance with their law.

27:1-2 Very early in the morning, the Council made it official that Jesus was worthy of death. The Jewish leaders had arrested Jesus on theological grounds—blasphemy; because this charge would be thrown out of a Roman court, however, they had to come up with a political reason for Jesus' death. Their strategy was to show Jesus as a rebel who claimed to be a king and thus a threat to Caesar. The charge against Jesus in the Roman court was treason.

Jesus was bound like a common criminal and sent off to Pilate. The Jewish leaders had to get permission from the Roman governor in order to carry out the death penalty. Pontius Pilate served as the Roman governor for the regions of Samaria and Judea from A.D. 26 to 36. Pilate happened to be in Jerusalem because of the Passover festival. With the large crowds that flocked to the city for that celebration, Pilate and his soldiers came to help keep the peace. Pilate was a harsh governor who felt nothing but contempt for the Jews; they, in turn, felt the same about him. He seemed to take special pleasure in demonstrating his authority; for example, he had impounded money from the Temple treasuries to build an aqueduct and had insulted the Jewish religion by bringing imperial images into the city.

Pilate was not popular, but the religious leaders had no other way to get rid of Jesus than to go to him. So they imposed this on him early Friday morning, bringing a man whom they accused of treason against the hated Romans!

JUDAS HANGS HIMSELF / 27:3-10 / 229

The stories of Peter and Judas provide a dramatic contrast. We see in Peter the weakness of humanity and in Judas the guilt and spiritual consequences of rejecting Christ. Both had fulfilled Jesus' predictions (26:24 for Judas; 26:34 for Peter), yet they responded quite differently. Peter wept, repented, and was restored; Judas had remorse, but killed himself. Forgiveness was available from the Master, but Judas did not pursue it.

27:3-5 Judas, filled with remorse at having betrayed Jesus, went back to the leading priests (26:14-16). Jesus had been condemned to die, and Judas realized his sin, but it was too late. The religious leaders had Jesus where they wanted him, and they replied, “What do we care?” What a response from the religious leadership! The priests’ job was to teach people about God and act as intercessors for them, helping them turn from sin and find forgiveness. Judas returned to the priests, exclaiming that he had sinned. Rather than helping him find forgiveness, however, the priests didn’t care. At that, Judas threw the money onto the floor of the Temple. Judas then hanged himself. Acts 1:18 says that he fell and burst open. Evidently, the limb from which he was hanging broke, and the resulting fall split open his body.

27:6-10 These chief priests felt no guilt in giving Judas money to betray an innocent man, but when Judas returned the money, the priests couldn’t accept it because it was against the law to accept money paid for murder. True to character, they refused to break certain laws while overlooking their own gross sins as they planned the murder of an innocent man! Because they could not put the money into the Temple treasury (it was considered “unclean” money), they decided to buy the potter’s field, and they made it into a cemetery for foreigners. Graveyards and tombs were considered by the Jews to be “unclean” places, so this appeared to be a perfect use for this “unclean” money. This fulfilled the prophecy in Zechariah 11:12-13, but it may also have been taken from Jeremiah 18:1-4; 19:1-13; or 32:6-15. In Old Testament times, Jeremiah was considered the collector of some of the prophets’ writings. This may account for why the quotation is attributed to him.

JESUS STANDS TRIAL BEFORE PILATE / 27:11-14 / 230

The region of Judea where Pilate ruled as governor was little more than a hot and dusty outpost of the Roman Empire. The Roman government could not afford to put large numbers of troops in all the regions under their control, so one of Pilate’s main duties was to do whatever was necessary to maintain peace. We know from historical records that Pilate had already been warned about other uprisings in his region. Although he may have seen no guilt in Jesus and no reason to condemn him to death, Pilate wavered when the Jews in the crowd threatened to report him to Caesar (John 19:12). Such a report, accompanied by a riot, could cost him his position and hopes for advancement. Would he set free this innocent man at the risk of a major uproar in his region, or would he give in to their demands and condemn a man who, he was quite sure, was innocent? That was the question facing Pilate that springtime Friday morning nearly two thousand years ago.

27:11 The charge was treason, so Pilate asked Jesus directly if he claimed to be the King of the Jews. Jesus' answer was basically "yes" but with a qualification attached. Jesus did claim to be a king—to remain silent would be like denying it (see also 26:64). But he wasn't claiming kingship in any way that would threaten Pilate, Caesar, or the Empire. Jesus' kingship was spiritual. Pilate could sense that the Council's case was embarrassingly weak and that the solemn rabbi standing before him was unlikely to lead a revolt against Rome.

27:12-14 The Jewish leaders had to fabricate new accusations against Jesus when they brought him before Pilate (see Luke 23:1-5). The charge of blasphemy would mean nothing to the Roman governor, so they accused Jesus of three other crimes: tax evasion, treason, and terrorism. Pilate knew that the charges were preposterous, and he expected Jesus to defend himself, but Jesus remained silent. Jesus' silence had been prophesied in Scripture (Isaiah 53:7). It would have been futile to answer, and the time had come to give his life to save the world. Jesus had no reason to try to prolong the trial or save himself. If Jesus did not answer, Pilate would have to judge him guilty. Recognizing the obvious plot against Jesus, Pilate wanted to let him go. John recorded, in detail, Jesus' final answer to Pilate regarding the nature of his messiahship (John 18:33-38). These words made Pilate realize that Jesus was innocent of any crime against Roman law.

Luke recorded that when Pilate found that Jesus was from Galilee, he sent him off to Herod Antipas, who was also in town for the Passover. But Herod only mocked Jesus and returned him to Pilate (Luke 23:6-12).

PILATE HANDS JESUS OVER TO BE CRUCIFIED / 27:15-26 / 232

In the custom of pardoning a criminal during Passover, Pilate saw an opportunity to avoid responsibility for the death of a man whom he perceived to be innocent. That Jesus died for Barabbas represents yet another example of the purpose of Jesus' death: to take the place not just of one condemned man but of all who stand condemned before God's perfect standard of justice.

27:15-16 Each year, during the Jews' Passover celebration, Pilate had made it a custom to release one prisoner they requested. Pilate may have instituted this custom to be on better terms with the people. The notorious criminal currently held was Barabbas, who had taken part in a rebellion against the Roman government. Although he had been arrested with those who committed a murder (Mark 15:7) and was now on death row, he may have been a hero among the Jews. He had no hope of acquittal, so he must have been surprised when the guards came to get him on that Friday morning. Ironically, Barabbas was guilty of the crime of which Jesus was accused. Pilate knew that Jesus was innocent of political sedition, so he sought a way to be free of the guilt of killing an innocent man. His custom of releasing one prisoner at Passover seemed like an obvious way out.

27:17-18 The proceedings of this hearing by Pilate were held in public, so a crowd heard all that transpired, and this crowd probably grew larger as news spread. Perhaps this was all part of the religious leaders' plan—to incite the crowd to ask that Pilate free a prisoner, but not Jesus. Pilate could see that this was a frame-up. Why else would these people, who hated him and the Roman Empire he represented, ask him to convict of treason and give the death penalty to one of their fellow Jews? Pilate knew very well that the Jewish leaders had arrested Jesus out of envy, so he suggested that Jesus, who is called the Messiah, be set free. Pilate thought the crowd would favor Jesus, a popular teacher, over a murderer.

27:19 This event is recorded only in Matthew. Again Matthew presented a contrast: The Jewish leaders clamored for Jesus' death, while a Gentile woman believed that Jesus was truly innocent. People of these times placed a great deal of importance on dreams. God was sending a warning to Pilate through his wife, but he didn't heed it.

27:20-21 The religious leaders went among the crowd, persuading the people to call for Barabbas to be released. Faced with a clear choice, the people chose Barabbas, a revolutionary and murderer, over the Son of God. Faced with the same choice today, people are still choosing "Barabbas." They would rather have the tangible force of human power than the salvation offered by the Son of God.

27:22-23 Pilate asked what to do with Jesus, who is called the Messiah. Perhaps Pilate hoped to let Jesus go as well, in an extra special offer at this Passover. Luke records that Pilate said he would punish and then release him (Luke 23:15-16). But the crowd shouted, "Crucify him!" This was a remarkable request—crucifixion was the Roman penalty for rebellion and abhorrent to the Jews. In their eyes, crucifixion would demonstrate that he was under God's curse (see Deuteronomy 21:23). He would die the death of a rebel and slave, not the death of the king he claimed to be.

27:24 This handwashing, performed as a gesture of innocence to show that one had nothing to do with a murder, was a Jewish custom, not a Roman one (Deuteronomy 21:6-9). In trying to excuse himself and place the responsibility for an innocent man's death on them, he followed the path already taken by the religious leaders as they dealt with Judas in 27:4, saying, "The responsibility is yours!" In making no decision, Pilate made the decision to let the crowds crucify Jesus. Although he washed his hands, the guilt remained.

27:25-26 The statement "We will take responsibility for his death—we and our children!" meant that the entire crowd, not just the leaders, willingly took responsibility for Jesus' death. This verse has been misused down through history to label the Jews as "Christ-killers," but this crowd had no authority to pledge the nation in responsibility for Jesus' death. It was merely the attempt of an unruly mob to persuade Pilate to do what it wanted. Similarly Pilate, by handing Jesus over, was just as guilty as anyone. Yet this rejection, and acceptance of the guilt of Jesus' death, signaled the end of the privileged status of the Jewish nation (see 21:43).

Pilate desired only to satisfy the crowd, so he rationalized in order to salve his conscience. For a leader who was supposed to administer justice, Pilate proved to be more concerned about political expediency than about doing what was right. So he released Barabbas and then ordered Jesus flogged.

The flogging that Jesus received was part of the Roman legal code, which demanded that flogging precede capital punishment. The Romans did it to weaken the prisoner so that he would die more quickly on the cross. The usual procedure was to bare the upper half of the victim's body and tie the hands to a pillar before whipping the victim with a lead-tipped whip. The continued lashing with these sharp instruments tore at the victim's skin, even baring the bones. After the flogging, Pilate handed Jesus over to the Roman soldiers to crucify him (see Isaiah 53:6-12).

ROMAN SOLDIERS MOCK JESUS / 27:27-31 / 233

27:27-30 Only the Romans were allowed to carry out execution, so the Roman soldiers took him from the post where he had been flogged and led him, beaten and bleeding, back inside their headquarters. The entire battalion was probably about two hundred men who had accompanied Pilate from Caesarea. This whole event was a shameful mockery of Jesus by means of a cruel game. Someone found a scarlet robe, probably one of the scarlet cloaks worn by the soldiers, and threw it around the shoulders of this supposed "king," pretending that it was a royal color. Someone else, with a brutal sense of humor, twisted some long, sharp thorns into a crown that was then jammed onto Jesus' head. They spit on him and beat him. Such mockery of condemned prisoners was common. This event, however, was fulfilling prophecy (Isaiah 50:6; see also 52:14–53:6).

27:31 In being led out to be crucified, condemned prisoners (who had already been flogged) would carry the crossbeam of their own cross. This crossbeam weighed about one hundred pounds and was carried across the shoulders. The heavy crossbeam was placed on Jesus' already bleeding shoulders (John 19:17), and he began the long walk out of Jerusalem. Usually execution sites were outside of the city.

JESUS IS LED AWAY AND PLACED ON THE CROSS / 27:32-44 / 234, 235

While the Crucifixion was meant to brand Jesus as cursed by God, for Christians, the Crucifixion pictures Jesus indeed taking God's curse against sin upon himself and allowing his people to be set free from sin.

27:32 Colonies of Jews existed outside Judea. Simon was from Cyrene, in northern Africa (see Acts 2:10), and was either on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem for the Passover, or he was originally from Cyrene but resided in Palestine. Jesus started to carry his cross, but, weakened from the beatings he had received, he was physically unable to carry it. Roman soldiers had the power to enforce people to do tasks for them (see 5:41); so Simon, on his way into the city, was picked out of the crowd by the soldiers to carry Jesus' cross.

27:33-34 Golgotha is the Hebrew word for "skull." The familiar name "Calvary" is derived from the Latin calvaria (also meaning "skull"). Thus, it became known as Skull Hill, although some say its name was derived from its appearance, a hill with a stony top that may have looked like a skull. Golgotha may have been a regular place of execution. It was prominent, public, and outside the city along a main road. Executions held there served as examples to the people and as a deterrent to criminals.

The drink offered to Jesus was wine mixed with bitter gall. But Jesus refused to drink it. He would suffer fully conscious and with a clear mind.

27:35-36 Crucifixion, instituted by the Romans, was a feared and shameful form of execution. The victim was forced to carry his cross along the longest possible route to the crucifixion site as a warning to bystanders. There were several shapes for crosses and several different methods of crucifixion. Jesus was nailed to the cross; condemned men were sometimes tied to their cross with ropes. In both cases, death came by suffocation as the person would lose strength and the weight of the body would make breathing more and more difficult.

Contrary to the discreet paintings of the crucifixion, Jesus was crucified naked. Roman soldiers had the right to take for themselves the clothing of those crucified, so they gambled for his clothes by throwing dice. This act had also been prophesied (Psalm 22:18).

27:37 A signboard stating the condemned man's crime would be placed on his cross as a warning. Because Jesus was never found guilty, the only accusation placed on his sign was the "crime" of calling himself the King of the Jews. This sign was meant to be ironic. A king, stripped and executed in public view, had obviously lost his kingdom forever. But Jesus, who turns the world's wisdom upside down, was just coming into his Kingdom. Few people reading the sign that bleak day understood its real meaning.

27:38 When James and John had asked Jesus for the places of honor next to him in his Kingdom, Jesus had told them that they didn't know what they were asking (20:20-22). Here, as Jesus was preparing to inaugurate his Kingdom through his death, the places on his right and on his left were taken by two criminals (Isaiah 53:12). As Jesus had explained to his position-conscious disciples, a person who wants to be close to Jesus must be prepared to suffer and die as he himself was doing. The way to the Kingdom is the way of the Cross.

27:39-40 Insult was literally added to injury when it came to public crucifixion. The people passing by shouted abuse. They taunted Jesus that if he could boast of building the Temple in three days, surely he had the power to save himself from the fate of the cross. Ironically, Jesus was in the very process of fulfilling his own prophecy. His body was being destroyed, but in three days he would rise again. Because Jesus was the Son of God who always obeyed the will of the Father, he did not come down from the cross to save himself. If he had done so, he could not have saved us. Their words, "if you are the Son of God," recall Satan's temptations (see 4:3, 6), revealing that Satan was still at work attempting to get Jesus to give in to the suffering and fail to accomplish God's will. This incident recalls Psalm 22:7.

27:41-44 Apparently some religious leaders had followed the executioners out to Golgotha, eager to see their evil plot finally completed. Not content to have brought him to an unjust death, they also mocked him, that though he could save others, he couldn't save himself. The religious leaders had twice before asked Jesus to give them a miraculous sign so that they would believe in him, but Jesus had refused (12:38; 16:1). Here again they were saying, "Give us a sign," as they taunted, "come down from the cross." Their words echo Psalm 22:8. But Jesus would not renounce his God-appointed path. The lesson for all believers is that faith cannot be based on visible demonstrations of power; instead, faith is belief in things not seen (Hebrews 11:1).

Matthew, like Mark, recorded that the criminals also shouted insults at Jesus; but Luke states that later one of these robbers repented. Jesus promised that the repentant robber would join him in paradise (Luke 23:39-43).

JESUS DIES ON THE CROSS / 27:45-56 / 236

Jesus' death was accompanied by at least four miraculous events: early darkness (27:45), the tearing in two of the curtain in the Temple, a timely earthquake, and dead people rising from their tombs (27:52). Jesus' death, therefore, could not have gone unnoticed. Everyone knew that something significant had happened.

27:45 Jesus had been put on the cross at nine o'clock in the morning. Death by crucifixion was slow and excruciating. Three hours passed while Jesus put up with abuse from bystanders. Then, at noon, darkness settled over the land for three hours. We do not know how this darkness occurred, but it is clear that God caused it. Nature testified to the gravity of Jesus' death, while Jesus' friends and enemies alike fell silent in the encircling gloom. The darkness on that Friday afternoon was both physical and spiritual. All nature seemed to mourn over the stark tragedy of the death of God's Son. Some see a fulfillment of Amos 8:9.

27:46-47 Jesus did not ask this question, "Why have you forsaken me?" in surprise or despair. He was quoting the first line of Psalm 22, a prophecy expressing the deep agony of the Messiah's death for the world's sin. Jesus knew that he would be temporarily separated from God the moment he took upon himself the sins of the world because God cannot look on sin (Habakkuk 1:13). This separation was the "cup" Jesus had dreaded as he prayed in Gethsemane (26:39). The physical agony was horrible, but the spiritual alienation from God was the ultimate torture. Jesus suffered this double death so that we would never have to experience eternal separation from God.

The bystanders misinterpreted Jesus' words and thought he was calling for the prophet Elijah. Because Elijah had ascended into heaven without dying (2 Kings 2:11), a popular belief held that Elijah would return to rescue those suffering from great trouble (Malachi 4:5).

27:48-49 John records that Jesus said he was thirsty (John 19:28-29). In response, one man soaked a sponge with sour wine. This was not the same as the drugged wine offered to Jesus earlier, but a thirst quencher that was there, probably for the soldiers to drink. This man, either in an act of kindness or further mockery, put the sponge on a long stick and held it up in order to reach Jesus' lips (again fulfilling prophecy, Psalm 69:21). The crowd, however, resuming its taunting, thought Jesus had called for Elijah (27:47), and said not to give Jesus any relief for his thirst, but instead to wait and see if Elijah would come and save him.

27:50-53 Jesus' loud cry may have been his last words, "It is finished!" (John 19:30). This cry climaxed the horror of the scene and showed his sudden death after over six hours on the cross. Usually crucifixion caused a person to lapse into a coma from extreme exhaustion. Jesus, however, was completely conscious to the end, and then he gave up his spirit.

Some significant events symbolized what Christ's work on the cross had accomplished. The Temple had three main parts—the courts, the holy place (where only the priests could enter), and the most holy place, reserved by God for himself. It was in the most holy place that the ark of the covenant rested. The room was entered only once a year, on the Day of Atonement, by the high priest as he made a sacrifice to gain forgiveness for the sins of all the nation (Leviticus 16:1-34). The curtain in the Temple was between the holy place and the most holy place. Symbolically, that curtain separated the holy God from sinful people. By tearing the curtain in two, from top to bottom, God showed that Jesus had opened the way for sinful people to reach a holy God. The opening of the tombs and people being raised from the dead revealed that by Jesus' death, the power of death was broken.

27:54 A Roman officer had accompanied the soldiers to the execution site. He probably had done this many times. Yet this crucifixion was completely different. These Gentiles realized something that most of the Jewish nation had missed: "Truly, this was the Son of God!" Whether they understood what they were saying, we cannot know. They may simply have admired Jesus' courage and inner strength, perhaps thinking that he was divine, like one of Rome's many gods. They were terrified because of the other events (darkness and earthquake) that had surrounded this particular crucifixion, which they attributed to the wrath of God (or a god). They certainly recognized Jesus' innocence. While the Jewish religious leaders were celebrating Jesus' death, a small group of Gentiles were the first to proclaim Jesus as the Son of God after his death.

27:55-56 There had been many people at the cross who had come only to mock and taunt Jesus or, like the religious leaders, to revel in their apparent victory. Some of Jesus' faithful followers were at the cross as well. Among the disciples, only John was there, and he recorded in his Gospel in graphic detail the horror he observed. Many women were also there, watching from a distance.

Mary Magdalene was from Magdala, a town near Capernaum in Galilee. She had been released from demon possession by Jesus (Luke 8:2). Another Mary is distinguished by the names of her sons who may have been well known in the early church. Zebedee's wife was the mother of the disciples James and John. Her name was Salome (20:20-21), and she was probably the sister of Jesus' mother. These women had been faithful to Jesus' ministry, following him and providing for his material needs (see Luke 8:1-3). John wrote that Jesus' mother, Mary, was present and that, from the cross, Jesus spoke to John about taking care of Mary (John 19:25-27).

These women could do very little, but they did what they could. They stayed at the cross when the disciples had not even come; they followed Jesus' body to the tomb; they prepared spices for his body. Because these women used the opportunities they had, they were the first to witness the Resurrection. God blessed their devotion, initiative, and diligence. As believers, we should take advantage of the opportunities we have and do what we can for Christ.

JESUS IS LAID IN THE TOMB / 27:57-61 / 237

27:57-58 The Sabbath began at sundown on Friday and ended at sundown on Saturday. Jesus died just a few hours before sundown on Friday (at about three o'clock, 27:46). It was against Jewish law to do physical work or to travel on the Sabbath. It was also against Jewish law to let a dead body remain exposed overnight (Deuteronomy 21:23).

So as evening approached, Joseph of Arimathea asked for Jesus' body so he could give it a proper burial. Arimathea was a town about twenty-two miles northwest of Jerusalem. Although an honored member of the Council (Mark 15:43), Joseph was one of Jesus' followers. Thus, not all the Jewish leaders hated Jesus. In the past, Joseph had been reluctant to speak against the religious leaders who had opposed Jesus (John 19:38); at this time he went boldly to Pilate and Pilate released Jesus' body to him.

27:59-60 As evening and the Sabbath approached, Joseph had to hurry. Fortunately he had help. John wrote that Nicodemus, another member of the Council, brought spices in which to wrap Jesus' body (John 3:1; 19:38-42). Joseph brought a long linen cloth. The body was carefully taken down from the cross, washed, wrapped in layers of cloth with the spices in between, and laid in a tomb. Jesus was given a burial fit for a king.

This new tomb was unused (some tombs were large enough to hold several bodies). It had been carved out of the rock, so it was a man-made cave cut out of one of the many limestone hills in the area around Jerusalem. It was large enough to walk into (John 20:6). Joseph and Nicodemus placed Jesus' body in the tomb and rolled a great stone across the entrance. A wealthy person's tomb would often have a groove sloping down into the doorway, and a stone slab a yard in diameter would be rolled into it. The stone would be easy to roll in, but it would take several men to roll it up the slope to open the tomb.

27:61 Two of the women who had been at the cross (27:56), Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, followed Joseph and Nicodemus as they carried Jesus' body to the tomb. No mourning was permitted for those executed under Roman law, so they followed in silent grief. They wanted to know where the body would be laid because they planned to return after the Sabbath with their own spices to anoint Jesus' body (28:1).

GUARDS ARE POSTED AT THE TOMB / 27:62-66 / 238

Whereas the disciples in their despair had probably forgotten about Jesus' promise of resurrection, the leaders hadn't forgotten.

27:62-66 Apparently, the leading priests and Pharisees knew where Jesus was buried. Jesus may have died, but they remembered that he had said he would be raised from the dead. The religious leaders did not believe Jesus' claims, but they were afraid of fraud—after all, the body had been taken down by two followers of Jesus. The Pharisees wanted Pilate to seal the tomb until the third day to make sure that no one would steal Jesus' body and claim he had risen from the dead.

So they made sure the tomb was sealed and guarded. The tomb was made secure by stringing a cord across the stone that was rolled over the entrance. The cord was sealed at each end with clay. Pilate gave them permission to post guards at the tomb as a further precaution. These may have been some Roman soldiers or the Temple police who were at the Jewish leaders' disposal (see John 18:3). With such precautions, the only way the tomb could be empty would be for Jesus to rise from the dead. The Pharisees failed to understand that no rock, seal, guard, or army could keep them secure, nor could any power prevent the Son of God from rising again.

JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD / 28:1-7 / 239

The resurrection of Jesus from the dead is the central fact of Christian history. On it, the church is built; without it, there would be no Christian church today. Jesus' resurrection is unique. Other religions have strong ethical systems, concepts about paradise and afterlife, and various holy scriptures. Only Christianity has a God who became human, literally died for his people, and was raised again in power and glory to rule his church forever.

Why is the Resurrection so important?

- Because of the Resurrection, we know that the Kingdom of Heaven has broken into earth's history.
- Because of the Resurrection, we know that death has been conquered and that we, too, will be raised from the dead to live forever with Christ.
- The Resurrection gives authority to the church's witness in the world. The apostles' most important message was the proclamation that Jesus Christ had been raised from the dead!
- The Resurrection gives meaning to the church's regular feast, the Lord's Supper. Like the disciples on the road to Emmaus, we break bread with our risen Lord.
- The Resurrection helps us find meaning even in great tragedy. No matter what happens to us as we walk with the Lord, the Resurrection gives us hope for the future.
- The Resurrection assures us that Christ is alive and ruling his Kingdom.

Christians can look very different from one another, and they can hold widely varying beliefs about politics, lifestyle, and even theology. But one central belief unites and inspires all true Christians—Jesus Christ rose from the dead!

28:1 The women could not make the trip to the tomb until early on Sunday morning after the Sabbath. As dawn approached, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went out to see the tomb. Both of them had been at Jesus' cross and had followed Joseph so they would know where the tomb was located (27:56, 61). Mark explained that they had gone back to the tomb to bring spices and perfumes to anoint Jesus' body because they had had no time to do so before the Sabbath (Mark 16:1). Anointing a body was a sign of love, devotion, and respect. Bringing spices to the tomb would be like bringing flowers to a grave today.

28:2-4 Again a supernatural event took place: a great earthquake occurred as an angel of the Lord came down from heaven. Mark records that the women were concerned about how they would get into the tomb to anoint Jesus' body (Mark 16:3). They had seen Joseph put the stone at its entrance (27:60-61), although they may have been unaware of the sealing of the stone and of the guards who had been posted. When they arrived at the tomb, they saw that the large stone had already been rolled aside. An angel was sitting on the stone, whose face shone like lightning and clothing was as white as snow. For fear of him, the guards fell into a dead faint.

28:5-6 The angel spoke reassuringly to the frightened women. They were looking for Jesus, the human being who had been crucified on the cross. But Jesus was not there; he had risen. The angel invited the women to look into the inner burial chamber and see where his body was lying. Jesus had been raised from the dead, just as he said would happen.

28:7 The women who had come to anoint a dead body were given another task—proclaiming the Resurrection to the frightened disciples. The disciples had deserted Jesus in the hour of trial, but the angel's words held hope of renewal and forgiveness. The disciples had deserted Jesus, but they were directed to meet Jesus in Galilee. This was exactly what Jesus had told them during the Last Supper (26:32).

JESUS APPEARS TO THE WOMEN / 28:8-10 / 241

28:8. The women ran quickly from the tomb realizing that they had seen the results of an awesome miracle in the empty tomb and had been in the presence of an angel. This revelation from God had filled them with a mixture of fear and joy. They obeyed the angel's command and rushed to the eleven disciples with the good news.

28:9 As the women ran from the tomb, in their path appeared Jesus himself! The women held his feet (a Near Eastern custom of what a subject does in showing obeisance to a king) and worshiped him, giving homage to their Savior, Lord, and King.

28:10 By brothers, Jesus meant his disciples. This showed that he had forgiven them, even after they had denied and deserted him, and that he raised them to a new level of fellowship—from disciples to “brothers” (see John 15:15). Jesus told the women to pass a message on to the disciples—that they should leave for Galilee as he had previously told them (26:32). But the disciples, filled with fear, remained behind locked doors in Jerusalem (John 20:19). So Jesus met them first in Jerusalem (Luke 24:36) and later in Galilee (John 21).

RELIGIOUS LEADERS BRIBE THE GUARDS / 28:11-15 / 242

28:11 Jesus’ resurrection was already causing a great stir in Jerusalem. A group of women was moving quickly through the streets, looking for the disciples to tell them the amazing news that Jesus was alive. At the same time, guards were on their way, not to Pilate, but to the leading priests. If these were Roman guards, under Roman law, they would have paid with their lives for falling asleep on the job (28:13). Since they were assigned to the Jewish authorities, they went to the religious leaders badly in need of a cover-up.

28:12-15 The religious leaders’ worst fears had been realized (27:63-64)—Jesus’ body had disappeared from the tomb! Instead of even considering that Jesus’ claims had been true and that he truly was the Messiah risen from the dead, the leaders decided to bribe the soldiers in order to explain that Jesus’ disciples came during the night and stole his body. This may have seemed like a logical explanation, but they didn’t think through the details. Why would Jesus’ disciples, who already had run off on him at his arrest, risk a return at night to a guarded and sealed tomb in an effort to steal a body—an offense that could incur the death penalty? And if they had done so, would they have taken the time to unwrap the body?

If this had occurred while the guards were sleeping, how could the guards possibly have known what had occurred? If this truly happened, why didn’t the religious leaders arrest the disciples in order to prosecute them? The story was full of holes and the guards would have to admit to negligence on their part, so getting them to spread this rumor required a bribe. The story circulated and many people believed the lie—also apparently not thinking through the information long enough to ask the obvious questions.

JESUS GIVES THE GREAT COMMISSION / 28:16-20 / 248

28:16-17 Jesus made several appearances to various people after his resurrection. The eleven disciples refers to those remaining after the death of Judas Iscariot. They went to Galilee, as Jesus had previously directed them (26:32; 28:10). Among the eleven who saw Jesus there were some who still doubted. Matthew may have been reporting some of the doubts and concerns still lingering in the minds of the eleven chosen disciples. Of course, they would all eventually be fully convinced and believe.

28:18-20 When someone is dying or leaving us, we pay close attention to his or her last words. Jesus left the disciples with some last words of instruction. God gave Jesus complete authority over heaven and earth. On the basis of his authority, Jesus told his disciples to go and make disciples as they preached, baptized, and taught. “Making disciples” means instructing new believers on how to follow Jesus, to submit to Jesus’ lordship, and to take up his mission of compassionate service. Baptizing is important because it unites a believer with Jesus Christ in his or her death to sin and resurrection to new life. Baptism symbolizes submission to Christ, a willingness to live God’s way, and identification with God’s covenant people. To baptize in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit affirms the reality of the Trinity, the concept coming directly from Jesus himself. He did not say baptize them into the “names,” but into the “name” of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Whereas in previous missions Jesus had sent his disciples only to the Jews (10:5-6), their mission from here forward would be to go to all the nations. This is called the Great Commission. The disciples had been trained well, and they had seen the risen Lord. They were ready to teach people all over the world to obey all the commands that Jesus had given. This also showed the disciples that there would be a lapse of time between Jesus’ resurrection and his second coming. During that time, Jesus’ followers had a mission to do—evangelize, baptize, and teach people about Jesus so that they, in turn, could do the same. The Good News of the gospel was to go forth to all the nations.

With this same authority, Jesus still commands us to tell others the Good News and make them disciples for the Kingdom. We are to go—whether it is next door or to another country—and make disciples. It is not an option, but a command to all who call Jesus “Lord.” As we obey, we have comfort in the knowledge that Jesus is always with us. This would occur through the Holy Spirit’s presence in believers’ lives. The Holy Spirit would be Jesus’ presence that would never leave them (John 14:26; Acts 1:4-5). Jesus continues to be with us today through his Spirit. As this Gospel began, so it ends—Immanuel, “God is with us” (1:23).

The Old Testament prophecies and genealogies in the book of Matthew present Jesus’ credentials for being King of the world—not a military or political leader, as the disciples had originally hoped, but a spiritual King who can overcome all evil and rule in the heart of every person. If we refuse to serve the King faithfully, we are disloyal subjects. We must make Jesus King of our lives and worship him as our Savior, King, and Lord.

MARK

INTRODUCTION

Action—moving, doing, helping, getting going, making things happen. Some people think, some talk, but a few get involved, not content to observe from the sidelines. They get into the game—they get into life! This is the picture of Jesus that Mark presents in this Gospel.

The Gospel of Mark is the shortest of the four records of Jesus' life, and it covers only three and a half years. On the first page, Mark jumps into the action, with John the Baptist's fiery preaching and the beginning of Jesus' public ministry. Then, moving swiftly through Jesus' baptism, temptation in the wilderness, and call of the disciples, Mark focuses his attention on Jesus' public ministry. He is interested in Christ's works, not just his words. In fact, Mark records eighteen of Jesus' miracles and only four of his parables. Although Mark presents events in chronological order, he gives little or no historical linkage between the events. Readers feel, "Jesus is on the move; we'd better stay alert or we'll miss something!"

Writing to a Roman audience, Mark did not have to recite Jesus' genealogy or refer to Old Testament prophecies that have been fulfilled. Gentiles don't need a Jewish history lesson; they need a clear picture of Christ. And the Romans believed in power and action. So Mark made sure they had a no-nonsense, concise, action-packed summary. Mark pictured Jesus as powerful—giving sight to the blind, raising the dead, calming stormy seas, restoring deformed bodies. But he showed Jesus using this mighty power to help others, taking the form of a servant, not a king. Mark wove the servant theme throughout his book and presented the servant Jesus as an example to follow: "And whoever wants to be first must be the slave of all. For even I, the Son of Man, came here not to be served but to serve others, and to give my life as a ransom for many" (10:44-45).

The Gospel of Mark is a short, action-packed account, bustling with life and focused on Christ's ministry. As you study Mark, be ready for nonstop action, be open for God's move into your life, and be challenged to move into your world to serve.

AUTHOR

Mark (John Mark): cousin of Barnabas (Colossians 4:10) and close friend of Peter (1 Peter 5:13)

The book of Mark names no one as author. Since the second century A.D., however, church leaders and scholars have accepted John Mark as the one who wrote this Gospel. (John is his Jewish name and Mark, “Marcus,” his Roman name.) The early church fathers unanimously accepted Mark’s authorship. Papias (A.D. 110) makes the earliest statement to this effect:

Mark, who was the interpreter of Peter, wrote down accurately all that he remembered, whether of sayings or doings of Christ, but not in order. For he was neither a hearer nor a companion of the Lord; but afterwards, as I have said, he accompanied Peter, who adapted his instruction as necessity required, not as though he were making a compilation of the Lord’s oracles. So then Mark made no mistake when he wrote down thus some things as he remembered them, for he concentrated on this alone—not to omit anything that he had heard, nor to include any false statement among them.
(Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History III, p. 39)

Other church fathers, including Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, and Eusebius, confirm this assessment of Mark as the writer of the Gospel. At the same time, they also affirm that Peter was the author behind the work. What this means is that Mark put Peter’s oral accounts of Jesus’ ministry into written form. Some believe that Mark took notes from Peter’s preaching so that many stories in this Gospel were probably presented verbally before they appeared in written form. Perhaps Mark worked with Peter on the Gospel in those earlier years together but then released it for wider distribution after Peter’s death. Whatever the case, we know that Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John are accurate accounts of the life and message of Christ. Through the Holy Spirit, God used these men to bring his word to the world.

Mark was young, perhaps in his teens, at the time of Jesus’ death and resurrection. Evidently his mother, Mary, was a well-to-do widow who had come to faith in Christ. Many surmise that Mary’s house was the site of the Last Supper (14:12-26) and the home where the disciples gathered at Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4); some believe that Mark was the young man who ran away naked when Jesus was arrested in the Garden of Gethsemane (14:51-52). Regardless of the truth of these speculations, Scripture clearly states that fourteen years after the tumultuous events leading to the Crucifixion, in about A.D. 44, the church gathered at Mary’s house to pray. King Herod had begun to persecute believers; he had executed James, the brother of John, and he was keeping Peter in prison. The church was praying for Peter’s release. Luke explains that after Peter had been miraculously released from prison, “After a little thought, he went to the home of Mary, the mother of John Mark, where many were gathered for prayer” (Acts 12:12). Mark was deeply involved in the drama of the Jerusalem church and was well-known to Peter and the other disciples.

In Colossians 4:10, Paul reveals that Mark was the cousin of Barnabas. Perhaps that is what motivated Barnabas and Paul to take Mark with them back to Antioch from Jerusalem (Acts 12:25). Soon thereafter, Barnabas and Paul were commissioned by the church in Antioch to begin their first missionary journey (Acts 13:1-3), and they included Mark as their helper (Acts 13:5). Early in the trip, however, at Perga, Mark abruptly left and returned to Jerusalem (Acts 13:13). Luke gives no reason for Mark's departure (perhaps he was homesick, fearful, or ill). Later, however, when Paul and Barnabas began to plan the second journey, Mark became the cause of a sharp disagreement between the two men. Barnabas wanted to include Mark again, but Paul was strongly opposed because Mark had "deserted" them on the previous trip. So Barnabas and Paul parted company. Barnabas sailed to Cyprus with Mark, while Paul chose Silas and traveled to Syria and Cilicia (Acts 15:36-41).

We know little else about John Mark. Evidently, he and Paul reconciled completely because later he joined Paul in Rome, during Paul's first imprisonment (A.D. 60-62), and was a comfort to him there (Colossians 4:10-11; Philemon 24). During Paul's second imprisonment and just before his death, he asked Timothy to bring Mark to Rome, "for he will be helpful to me" (2 Timothy 4:11). Mark must have matured emotionally and spiritually through the years and under the mentoring of cousin Barnabas.

Mark also enjoyed a very close relationship with Peter. In fact, Peter may have led Mark to Christ because he calls Mark "my son" (1 Peter 5:13). After Paul's release from prison in A.D. 62, Mark may have stayed in Rome (also called "Babylon"—1 Peter 5:13) to work closely with Peter. Mark probably left Rome in about A.D. 65 or 66, during Nero's intense persecution. Both Paul and Peter were executed by Nero in about A.D. 67 or 68. According to tradition, Mark died soon after.

John Mark provides a sterling example of how a young Christian can grow and mature. Perhaps basking in the attention of the spiritual giants Paul and Barnabas, and excited by the prospect of reaching the world with the gospel, he had sailed to Cyprus on the first missionary journey. A short time later, however, when the going got tough, Mark returned home. Whatever Mark's reason for leaving, Paul didn't approve; in fact, he wanted nothing to do with Mark after the incident. Yet fifteen years later, Mark was serving as a ministry companion to both Peter and Paul, and later he wrote the Gospel bearing his name. Little is known about Mark during those years, except that Barnabas took personal interest in him, encouraging Mark by continuing to work with him in ministry.

DATE AND SETTING

Written in Rome between A.D. 55 and 70

Dating the Gospel of Mark with accuracy is virtually impossible because the text contains few clues. We can only surmise that Mark was written before A.D. 70 because there is no mention of the destruction of Jerusalem, which had been predicted by Jesus (13:1-23). (Jerusalem was destroyed by Roman armies under the leadership of Titus, after a siege of 143 days. During this battle, 600,000 Jews were killed and thousands more taken captive.)

Rome is identified as the place of writing because both Paul and Peter mention Mark as being there (Colossians 4:10; 1 Peter 5:13—"Babylon" probably refers to Rome). All roads led to Rome, the capital of the vast and mighty Roman Empire. At that time, Rome was the largest city in the world, with a population of approximately one million. Wealthy and cosmopolitan, it was the diplomatic and trade center of the world, the epitome of power and influence. No wonder Paul and Peter were drawn to Rome—it was a strategic beachhead for the spread of the gospel.

We do not know who founded the church at Rome. It could not have been Peter because he ministered primarily to Jews and seems to have settled in Rome just after Paul's arrival in about A.D. 60. Also, it was not Paul, because in his letter to the Romans, he said as much (Romans 1:11-13; 15:23-24). Most likely, the church at Rome was begun by Jews who had traveled from Rome to Jerusalem for Pentecost in A.D. 30, had been converted through Peter's powerful sermon and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:5-40), and then had taken their Christian faith with them back home to Rome. Soon those believers were joined by travelers like Priscilla and Aquila who had heard about Christ in other places.

Reading between the lines of the book of Romans, the church in Rome seems to have been strong, unified in worship and outreach, with no factions or divisions such as those that were plaguing other churches. Certainly the Roman church was strengthened even further through the ministry of Paul, as he boldly taught for two years during his first imprisonment (Acts 28:16-31).

The political climate in Rome was volatile with a litany of palace intrigue, assassinations, and egocentric emperors. Nero, the fifth Roman emperor, began to reign in A.D. 54 at sixteen years of age. The first few years of his reign were peaceful. During that time, Paul had appealed to Caesar at his trial in Caesarea (Acts 25:10-11) and thus had been taken to Rome to make his appeal (A.D. 60). Even as a prisoner, Paul was allowed to debate with Jewish leaders (Acts 28:17-28) and to preach and teach about Christ to all who came to see him (Acts 28:30-31). Evidently, after these two years, Paul was released. Soon, however, the tolerance for Christians would take a terrible turn.

After marrying Poppaea in A.D. 62, Nero became brutal and ruthless, killing his own mother, his chief advisers Seneca and Burrus, and many of the nobility in order to seize their fortunes and solidify his power. Eventually, Nero's thirst for publicity in the arts and sports pushed him into excessive acts of decadence, including chariot races, combat between gladiators, and the gory spectacle of prisoners thrown to wild beasts. In A.D. 64, fire destroyed a large part of Rome. Nero probably ordered the fire himself to make room for a new palace, but he deflected blame by accusing the Christians. Thus began the terrible persecution against the church—with torture, executions, and even Coliseum entertainment. Some followers of Christ were covered in animal skins and torn to pieces by dogs. Others were fastened to crosses and set on fire, serving as torches at night for the city.

During this reign of terror for Christians, Paul was taken prisoner again, apparently at Nicopolis, where he had intended to spend the winter (Titus 3:12). Transported to Rome, Paul was imprisoned in the Mamertine dungeon, in the center of Rome near the forum. There Paul wrote his final words. We know that Mark was not in Rome at this time because in 2 Timothy 4:11, Paul asked Timothy to bring Mark with him. If Timothy obliged, then Mark may have been in Rome when both Paul and Peter were martyred. According to tradition, soon after writing 2 Timothy, Paul was executed by beheading on the Ostian Way outside Rome, shortly before Nero's own death, by suicide, in A.D. 68. Peter also was martyred at this time.

What would cause Mark to return to Rome where Christians were hunted and killed like animals? What would strengthen Mark to courageously face his own death at the hands of the Romans? What would motivate Mark to write the story of Jesus? He knew the Truth, and the Truth had set him free (John 8:32). What keeps you from obeying God and living for Christ?

AUDIENCE

Roman Christians living in Rome

It is fairly certain that Mark directed his Gospel to Romans. One reason for this conclusion is that he took time to explain Jewish terms for his readers (see, for example, 5:41). Mark also explained Jewish customs (7:3-4; see also 3:17; 7:11, 34; 14:12; 15:22, 34, 42). Gentile readers would need such phrases and customs explained. There are other indications that Mark wrote to Gentiles in general and Romans in particular: He used several Latin words, some of which do not appear elsewhere in the New Testament. (This is evident in the original text of Mark 5:9; 12:15, 42; 15:16, 39.) He referred to the Old Testament less than the other Gospel writers; he did not use the word “law,” which was mentioned often by Matthew, Luke, and John; he used the Roman way of telling time (6:48; 13:35). All of this evidence points to a Roman audience.

It also seems clear that Mark was writing primarily to Christians. He used distinctively Christian terms such as “baptize” (1:4) and “Holy Spirit” (1:8) without explaining them. And Mark seems to have assumed that his readers were familiar with Jesus’ background, with John the Baptist, and with the major events of Jesus’ life.

So who were these Roman Christians to whom Mark directed his Gospel? At first the church at Rome was Jewish, consisting of Jews who had come to believe in Jesus as their Messiah. But over the years, many Christians from all parts of the Roman Empire had migrated to Rome, some of them Paul’s converts and many of them Gentiles. In addition, many citizens of Rome had come to faith in Christ through the ministry of other believers and Paul while he was in prison (see Acts 28:30-31; Philippians 4:21-22; Colossians 4:10-12; 2 Timothy 4:21). Eventually the church had a majority of Gentiles, with an influential Jewish minority.

Being a Christian in Rome meant being part of a distinct minority, religiously and socially. Rome was filled with gods, and the prevailing thought was that all the gods were real. Thus, Jews and Christians were viewed as atheists because they believed in only one God and denied the existence of all the pagan deities. Christians also came into direct conflict with basic Roman values. To Roman citizens, the highest allegiance was to the state, but for Christians, God took priority. Roman citizens were very class conscious, and non-Romans were seen as distinctly inferior. But Christians believed that “there is no longer Jew or Gentile, slave or free, male or female. For you are all Christians—you are one in Christ Jesus” (Galatians 3:28). Believers also refused to participate in immoral activities (see Galatians 5:19-23). Christians stood out and eventually were singled out for terrible persecution. Mark wrote to men and women who could have felt overwhelmed by pressures and problems and needed a clear, fresh look at Christ.

In many ways, Roman culture resembles ours today. Certainly we live in an almost pagan society, filled with a wide variety of gods, both secular and religious, with true followers of Christ being a distinct minority. In addition, ours is a Gentile church, with believers from all races, nationalities, and walks of life. So Mark’s Gospel translates easily to us today and provides a clear picture of Jesus.

To present a clear picture of Christ to Roman believers who were experiencing increased persecution

The exact occasion that spurred Mark to write this Gospel is unknown. Unlike many epistles written by Paul to counter heretical teachings or church divisions, Mark hints of no precipitating event or problem. It may have been that Mark simply felt led by the Holy Spirit to give Peter's eyewitness account of Christ, geared especially for the Roman people among whom they were ministering. Certainly the increasing pressure from the Roman government must have played a key role, because persecution can lead to doubts about the faith and discouragement. Believers needed assurance and hope. The Gospel of Mark gave them a close and personal look at Jesus, their Savior and Lord. They could be assured that the faith they were living and for which they were giving their lives was true and reliable. Jesus, the Son of God, had lived, served (1:1–13:37), suffered, and died for them (14:1–15:47). And he had risen from the grave (16:1-8)—their triumphant Savior was alive!

Today we enjoy the Bible, complete with Old and New Testaments. In fact, most Christians probably own several copies of the Scriptures. First-century believers did not have that privilege. The holy scrolls—ancient copies of the books of Moses, the prophets, and other Old Testament writers—were safely kept in the Temple and in synagogues, and were cared for and guarded by rabbis. These scrolls were studied and memorized and read on the Sabbath. As for the New Testament, most of the books and letters were just being written and circulated among the churches. Thus Christians had to rely on the teachings and eyewitness accounts of the apostles and others who had known Jesus. Members of the church at Rome, especially Gentiles, desperately needed to learn about Christ and what it meant to follow him. Thus, inspired by the Holy Spirit, Mark provided an accurate account of Jesus and the twelve disciples.

Like most new believers, the Romans also needed to know the cultural, social, and personal implications of their faith. How should they live in a hostile environment, in a society with values totally at odds with their own? Mark's Gospel presented Jesus, the Servant, as their model to follow.

Centuries later, we live in a secular culture whose predominant values are far from Christian, and where under the banner of pluralism, government officials strain to remove every vestige of historic Christian faith from public life. While usually not as violent as Roman persecution, our society still pressures Christians to forget Christ. In a society replete with aberrant and heretical religious beliefs, cults, and idols, true followers of Christ have become an absolute minority. As in Rome, it would be easy to become discouraged, dismayed, and doubtful. As with the Romans, we need a fresh look at Jesus of Nazareth, the Messiah, our Lord.

As you read Mark, look at Jesus and see him for who he is—God in the flesh, the suffering Servant, your Savior and model for how to live.

MESSAGE

Omitting the birth of Jesus, Mark begins with John the Baptist's preaching. Then, moving quickly past Jesus' baptism, temptation in the wilderness, and call of the disciples, Mark takes us directly into Jesus' public ministry. We see Jesus confronting a demon, healing a man with leprosy, and forgiving and healing the paralyzed man lowered into Jesus' presence by friends.

Next, Jesus calls Matthew (Levi) and has dinner with him and his disreputable associates. This initiates the conflict with the Pharisees and other religious leaders, who condemn Jesus for eating with sinners and breaking the Sabbath.

In chapter 4, Mark pauses to give a sample of Jesus' teaching—the parable of the farmer and the illustration of the mustard seed—and then plunges back into the action. Jesus calms the waves, drives out demons, and heals Jairus's daughter.

After returning to Nazareth for a few days and experiencing rejection in his hometown, Jesus commissions the disciples to spread the Good News everywhere. Opposition from Herod and the Pharisees increases, and John the Baptist is beheaded. But Jesus continues to move, feeding five thousand, reaching out to the woman from Syrian Phoenicia, healing the deaf man, and feeding four thousand.

Finally, it is time to reveal his true identity to the disciples. Do they really know who Jesus is? Peter proclaims him Messiah but then promptly shows that he does not understand Jesus' mission. After the Transfiguration, Jesus continues to teach and heal, confronting the Pharisees about divorce and the rich young man about eternal life. Blind Bartimaeus is healed.

Events move rapidly toward a climax. The Last Supper, the betrayal, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection are dramatically portrayed, along with more examples of Jesus' teachings. Mark shows us Jesus—moving, serving, sacrificing, and saving!

The main themes in the Gospel of Mark are as follows: Jesus Christ, Son of God; Jesus Christ, Servant; Discipleship; Miracles; and Evangelism.

Jesus Christ, Son of God (1:1, 9-11, 21-34; 2:1-12, 23-28; 3:7-12; 4:35-41; 5:1-20; 8:27-31; 9:1-13, 30-32; 10:32-34, 46-52; 11:1-19; 13:24-37; 14:32-42, 60-65; 16:1-8). Jesus was God in the flesh. When Jesus lived on earth, he clearly told his followers, the crowds, the religious leaders, and his accusers that he was the Son of God (see 14:60-65). And he demonstrated this truth by forgiving sins (see 2:5-12), controlling the forces of nature (see 4:35-41), and overcoming disease, demons, and death (see 5:1-43). In addition, Mark affirmed the divinity of Jesus by reporting the voice from heaven at Jesus' baptism (1:11), the Transfiguration (9:2-10), and the Resurrection (16:1-8). Truly Jesus was and is the Son of God.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The truth that Jesus, the man, is also God means that Jesus has the authority to forgive sins and to change lives. In fact, he died in our place, paying the penalty for our sins. So we can trust in Christ for forgiveness and eternal life. It also means that he is Truth and our authority. Those who know Christ as Savior must obey him as Lord. Christ was fully man, but he was much more—he was, and is, fully God. Do you know him as Savior? Do you follow him as Lord?

Jesus Christ, Servant (1:40-45; 3:1-12; 7:31-37; 8:22-26, 34-38; 9:33-50; 10:13-45; 12:38-44; 14:17-26, 32-50; 15:1-5, 12-47). Jesus fulfilled the Old Testament prophecies about the coming Messiah by coming to earth. He did not come as the conquering king that the people expected, but as a servant, keeping the fact that he was the Messiah a secret. Eventually Jesus would reign as King of kings and Lord of lords, but first he would reveal himself as the Suffering Servant. Jesus served by telling people about God, healing them, and giving his life as the sacrifice for their sins. Jesus suffered by being born into a poor family and by being tempted, questioned, rejected, falsely accused and convicted, beaten, hit, spat upon, tortured, mocked, and crucified. Giving his life and becoming sin on the cross was the ultimate act of suffering and service.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Those who claim Christ as Savior and Lord should follow his example by serving God and others. Real greatness in Christ's Kingdom is shown by service and sacrifice. Instead of being motivated by ambition or love of power or position (as is true with most people), we should do God's work because we love him and his creation. What does it mean for you to be a servant? What can you do to serve God today? To whom in your home, neighborhood, school, place of employment, or church can you give a "cup of water" in his name (9:41)?

Discipleship (1:16-20; 3:13-19; 6:7-13; 8:27-10:52; 13:1-14:52; 15:42-16:8). Through the eyes of one of Jesus' closest followers, Peter, Mark described the disciples' difficulty in understanding Jesus' true identity. They didn't understand Jesus' parables (see 4:13, 34; 7:18), his miracles (see 4:35-41; 6:45-52), his teaching on divorce (10:10-12), and his predictions of his approaching death and resurrection (8:32-33; 9:9-13, 32). In fact, in this Gospel they never did fully grasp who Jesus really was (see Peter's response to Jesus in 8:31-32) and why he had come to earth. Jesus knew that his disciples wouldn't truly understand his identity and mission until after the Resurrection, and he wanted to keep his true identity partially concealed until it would be revealed publicly after he had been raised from the dead. Yet he continued to teach the disciples about the cost of following him (8:34-38), about humility and Kingdom living (9:33-10:31), and about the importance of serving others (10:35-45).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. We live many centuries after Christ and have the benefit of reading about his life, death, and resurrection. But do we truly understand his identity as God and man, as Savior and Lord? And do we realize the cost of being his disciple? Following Jesus means dying to self, obeying him, and serving others (8:34-35). What kind of disciple are you?

Miracles (1:29-34, 40-45; 2:1-12; 3:1-12; 4:35-41; 5:1-43; 6:30-56; 7:24-37; 8:1-10, 22-26; 9:17-29; 10:46-52; 16:1-8). Mark records more of Jesus' miracles than sermons; in fact, every chapter until his final ministry in Jerusalem (chapter 11) and subsequent capture, trial, and execution contains at least one miracle. Mark's Roman readers could clearly see that Jesus was a man of power and action, not just words. Jesus performed miracles to release people from their sufferings (see 1:41-42), to convince the people who he was (see 2:1-12), and to teach the disciples his true identity as God (see 8:14-21).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The more convinced we become that Jesus is God, the more we will see his power and love. Christ's mighty works show us that he is able to save anyone, regardless of what he or she has done. His miracles of forgiveness bring healing, wholeness, and new life to all who trust him. Nothing is too big or too difficult for Christ to handle. We can give him all our needs and tell him all our problems. Are you struggling with doubts and fears? Trust Jesus. Are you hurting or suffering? Tell Jesus. Do you need a miracle in your life? Bring your request to Jesus.

Evangelism (1:2-8, 14-20, 38-39; 2:13-17; 3:13-19, 31-34; 4:1-34; 5:1-20; 6:1-13; 7:24-37; 9:33-41; 10:13-31; 12:28-34; 13:1-23, 32-36; 14:9). Jesus directed his public ministry to the Jews first (1:21-28, 38-39), but he also brought healing and the Good News to the non-Jewish world. Syrians (7:24-30) and other Gentiles (5:1-20; 7:31-37) were given the Good News. Jesus challenged his followers to take his message into all the world (6:7-13), preaching the gospel of salvation.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Jesus crossed national, racial, social, and economic barriers to spread the gospel. His message of faith and forgiveness is for the whole world, not just our church, neighborhood, community, or nation. We must reach beyond our own people and needs to fulfill Christ's worldwide vision that people everywhere might hear this great message and be forgiven of their sins and receive eternal life. Who do you know that needs to hear about Christ? What keeps you from sharing the Good News with them? What can you do today to begin to reach out beyond your circle of Christian friends?

Of the four Gospels, Mark's narrative is the most chronological—that is, most of the stories are positioned in the order they actually occurred. Though the shortest of the four, the Gospel of Mark contains the most events; it is action-packed. Most of this action centers in Galilee, where Jesus began his ministry. Capernaum served as his base of operation (1:21; 2:1; 9:33), from which he would go out to cities like Bethsaida—where he healed a blind man (8:22ff); Gennesaret—where he performed many healings (6:53ff); Tyre and Sidon (to the far north)—where he healed many, drove out demons, and met the woman from Syrian Phoenicia (3:8; 7:24ff); and Caesarea Philippi—where Peter declared him to be the Messiah (8:27ff). After his ministry in Galilee and the surrounding regions, Jesus headed for Jerusalem (10:1). Before going there, Jesus told his disciples three times that he would be crucified there and then come back to life (8:31; 9:31; 10:33-34). Jesus' earthly story begins in the town of Bethlehem in the Roman province of Judea (2:1). A threat to kill the infant king led Joseph to take his family to Egypt (2:14). When they returned God led them to settle in Nazareth in Galilee (2:22-23). At about age thirty, Jesus was baptized in the Jordan River and was tempted by Satan in the Judean wilderness (3:13; 4:1). Jesus set up his base of operations in Capernaum (4:12-13) and from there ministered throughout Israel, telling parables, teaching about the Kingdom, and healing the sick. He traveled to the region of the Gadarenes and healed two demon-possessed men (8:28ff); fed over five thousand people with five loaves and two fish on the shores of Galilee near Bethsaida (14:15ff); healed the sick in Gennesaret (14:34ff); ministered to the Gentiles in Tyre and Sidon (15:21ff); visited Caesarea Philippi, where Peter declared him as the Messiah (16:13ff); and taught in Perea, across the Jordan (19:1). As he set out on his last visit to Jerusalem, he told the disciples what would happen to him there (20:17ff). He spent some time in Jericho (20:29) and then stayed in Bethany at night as he went back and forth into Jerusalem during his last week (21:17ff). In Jerusalem he would be crucified, but he would rise again.

JOHN THE BAPTIST PREPARES THE WAY FOR JESUS / 1:1-8 / 16

Reading Mark's first words, we can sense his excitement. His account doesn't give background biographical information because he wanted his readers to see Jesus in action as quickly as possible. The power of Jesus' ministry and character alone would impact the reader. Mark introduced his account as "the Good News." For Mark, the purpose of writing was to convey a crucial message, the life-changing Good News about Jesus Christ.

With Mark's help, we can picture ourselves in the crowd as Jesus healed and taught, imagine ourselves as one of the disciples, and respond to his words of love and encouragement. And we can remember that Jesus came for us who live today, as well as for those who lived two thousand years ago.

Before the curtain rises, already we can hear someone shouting. Words about a wilderness come from a man who would be called wild-looking in any age. He lived in a geographical wilderness, and he preached about a spiritual one. We meet John the Baptist as he sets the stage for Jesus' entrance.

1:1 The first verse, here begins the Good News about Jesus the Messiah, the Son of God, acts as both a title to the book and a summary of its contents. No mention is made of the author, generally considered to be John Mark. Mark was not one of the twelve disciples of Jesus but probably knew Jesus personally. For further information about Mark, see the "Author" section in the Introduction.

While we generally call this book the Gospel of Mark, the title correctly penned by Mark was the Good News about Jesus the Messiah, the Son of God. The first name, "Jesus," was a common name in Israel (Matthew 1:21; Luke 2:21) as the Old Testament form of the name Joshua (meaning "Yahweh saves"). The second name, "the Messiah," is from the Greek word Christos meaning "the Anointed One." The Anointed One, the Messiah, would fulfill the Old Testament prophecies (see, for example, Genesis 49:10; Psalms 2; 110; Isaiah 9:1-7; 11:1-9; Zechariah 9:9-10).

Mark gave no genealogy because he presented Jesus as the servant. A servant needs no pedigree, but demonstrates his validity by the worth of the service he provides. The book portrays Jesus as a man who backed up his words with actions that proved he was the Son of God. Because Mark wrote the Gospel for Christians in Rome, where many gods were worshiped, he wanted his readers to know that Jesus was the one true Son of God. He is coeternal with God—and is himself God. He alone was fully man (Jesus), God's Anointed One (the Messiah), and fully divine (Son of God). Mark's Gospel fully develops Jesus' claims to be the Christ and the Son of God by showing how he was anointed by God's Spirit to carry out the divine plan of salvation.

1:2-3 Verses 2 and 3 are a composite quotation, taken first from Malachi and then from Isaiah. Malachi was a prophet to the Jews in Jerusalem who had returned to rebuild their beloved city after the exile. Isaiah was one of the greatest prophets of the Old Testament and one of the most quoted in the New. The second half of the book of Isaiah is devoted to the promise of salvation. Isaiah wrote about the coming of the Messiah and the man who would announce his coming, John the Baptist (Isaiah 40:3). Like Isaiah, John was a prophet who urged the people to confess their sins and live for God.

Although quoting from two prophets (Isaiah and Malachi), Mark simply applied the words to Isaiah. The theme in both references is the focus on a messenger who would prepare the way. With the help of the Holy Spirit, Mark understood the ministry of John the Baptist as fulfilling these promises. This messenger considered himself a voice shouting out to the people of Israel, “Prepare a pathway for the Lord's coming! Make a straight road for him!” How were they to do this? The picture could come from the Oriental custom of sending servants ahead of a king to level and clear the roads to make them passable for his journey. The people in Israel needed to prepare their minds—clear away the spiritual debris and straighten any “crooked” moral paths—in eager anticipation of their King and Messiah.

1:4 This messenger was John the Baptist. There had not been a prophet in Israel for more than four hundred years. It was widely believed that when the Messiah came, prophecy would reappear (Joel 2:28-29; Malachi 3:1; 4:5). Some people thought John himself was the Messiah. John spoke like the prophets of old, saying that the people must turn from their sin to avoid punishment and turn to God to experience his mercy and approval. This is a message for all times and places, but John spoke it with particular urgency—he was preparing the people for the coming Messiah.

Important Roman officials of this day were always preceded by an announcer or herald. When the herald arrived in town, the people knew that someone of prominence would soon arrive and they would be called to assemble. Because Mark's audience was comprised of primarily Roman Christians, he began his book with John the Baptist, whose mission was to announce the coming of Jesus, the most important man who ever lived.

John preached in the wilderness in the area near the Jordan River, but he did more than that. He urged his listeners to be baptized. Some scholars think that baptism by immersion (going down into the water) was a rite required by the Jews for Gentiles who wished to convert to Judaism. The ritual of immersion symbolized the death and burial of the old way of life; coming up out of the water symbolized the beginning of a new life. If so, then John took a known custom and gave it new meaning. While it was customary for Gentiles to be baptized in order to become Jews, John was demanding that Jews be baptized to show that they had turned from their sins and turned to God to be forgiven. John's baptism was immersion, and it was a visible sign that a person had decided to change his or her life, giving up a sinful and selfish way of living and turning to God. It was a public action signifying that a person had been cleansed of sin through repentance and had chosen a new way of life.

After Christ's death and resurrection, baptism became an outward sign for identifying with Christ and his resurrection and for signifying entrance into the Christian community. (See, for example, Romans 6:3-4; 1 Peter 3:21.) Baptism did not give forgiveness; baptism was a visible sign that the person had repented and received God's forgiveness for his or her sins. Matthew recorded that some of the Jewish religious leaders (Pharisees and Sadducees) came to be baptized and John angrily turned them away, for he knew there was no humble repentance in their hearts (Matthew 3:7-9).

1:5 From Jerusalem (the holy city of the Jews) and from all over Judea, a stream of people constantly flowed into the wilderness to hear John the Baptist preach. Why did John attract so many people? He was the first true prophet in four hundred years. He blasted both Herod and the religious leaders, a daring act that fascinated the common people. But John also had strong words for his audience—they too were sinners and needed to repent. When they confessed their sins, John baptized them in the Jordan River. Confession is more than simply acknowledging one's own sinfulness; it is agreeing with God's verdict on sin and expressing the desire to get rid of sin and live for God. Confessing means more than verbal response, affirmation, or praise; it means agreeing to change to a life of obedience and service.

1:6 John's clothes were much like the prophet Elijah (2 Kings 1:8) in order to distinguish him from the religious leaders, whose flowing robes reflected their great pride in their position (12:38-39). John's striking appearance reinforced his striking message. Elijah had also been considered a messenger preparing the way for God (see Malachi 3:1). His diet, locusts and wild honey, was common for survival in wilderness regions.

1:7 Although John was the first genuine prophet in four hundred years, Jesus the Messiah would be far greater than he. John saw himself as even lower than that slave in comparison to the coming Messiah (see John 3:30). What John began, Jesus finished. What John prepared, Jesus fulfilled.

1:8 John's baptism with water indicated immersion in the water of the Jordan River. John's baptism demonstrated repentance, humility, and willingness to turn from sin. This was the beginning of the spiritual process. To be effective, it had to be accompanied by an inward change of attitude leading to a changed life. John's baptism did not give salvation; it prepared a person to welcome the coming Messiah and receive his message and his baptism.

John's statement, He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit, revealed the identity of the "one" coming after John as the promised Messiah. The coming of the Spirit had been prophesied as part of the Messiah's arrival (see Isaiah 44:3; Jeremiah 31:31-34; Ezekiel 36:26-27; Joel 2:28-29). The Old Testament promised a time when God would demonstrate his power among people and give special relationship and blessings to his people. This looked ahead to Pentecost (Acts 2). All believers, those who would later come to Jesus Christ for salvation, would receive the Holy Spirit. When Jesus would baptize with the Holy Spirit, the entire person would be transformed by the Spirit's power. Jesus would offer both forgiveness of sin and the power to live for him. We need more than repentance to save us; we need the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS / 1:9-11 / 17

Mark proceeded to describe Jesus' baptism by John. The signs of the voice and dove from heaven affirmed Jesus' identity as the Son of God and showed the uniqueness of Jesus' baptism. But the words of God the Father's declaration clearly signified who Jesus was. What Jesus was doing, including undergoing baptism by John, totally pleased God. Jesus was in no way "becoming" God's Son; instead, his true nature was being revealed. Jesus' baptism showed that he was identifying with sinful men and women without implying that he himself was a sinner.

1:9 The coming one was identified as Jesus. Although born in Bethlehem, Jesus moved to Nazareth when he was a young boy and grew up there (Matthew 2:22-23). Nazareth was a small town in Galilee, located about halfway between the Sea of Galilee and the Mediterranean Sea. The city was despised and avoided by many Jews because it had a reputation for independence. Nazareth was an unlikely hometown for so great a king as Jesus. Yet even Jesus' hometown demonstrated his humility and identification with ordinary people.

If John's baptism was for repentance from sin, why was Jesus baptized? While even the greatest prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel) had to confess their sinfulness and need for repentance, Jesus didn't need to admit sin—he was sinless (John 8:46; 2 Corinthians 5:21; Hebrews 4:15; 1 John 3:5). Although Jesus didn't need forgiveness, he was baptized for the following reasons: (1) to confess sin on behalf of the nation (see Isaiah 6:5; Nehemiah 1:6; 9:1ff.; Ezra 9:2); (2) to fulfill all righteousness (Matthew 3:15) in order to accomplish God's mission and advance God's work in the world; (3) to inaugurate his public ministry to bring the message of salvation to all people; (4) to show support for John's ministry; (5) to identify with the penitent people of God, thus with humanness and sin; (6) to give us an example to follow.

Jesus, the perfect man, didn't need baptism for sin, but he accepted baptism in obedient service to the Father, and God showed his approval. We need this same attitude of humility, submission to God, and dedication to servanthood.

1:10 Apparently the action of the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove was a sign for John that Jesus was the Messiah. The “splitting” of the heavens presents God's intervention into humanity in the human presence of God in Jesus Christ. It was as if the heavens rolled back to reveal the invisible throne of God (Isaiah 63:19–64:2).

The dove is used as a symbol for the Holy Spirit. However, it is not the bird itself that was important, but the descent of the Spirit like a dove to emphasize the way the Holy Spirit related to Jesus. The Spirit descending portrays a gentle, peaceful, but active presence coming to indwell Jesus. In the same way, since Jesus has given us the Holy Spirit, he is available to us as well.

1:11 The Spirit descended and a voice came from heaven proclaiming the Father's approval of Jesus as his divine Son. That Jesus is God's divine Son is the foundation for all we read about Jesus in the Gospels. This voice came from the heavenly realm that had been briefly “split open” (1:10).

The voice said, “You are my beloved Son.” Jesus Christ has a unique relationship with God because he is God's one and only Son. The phrase “I am fully pleased with you,” means that the Father takes great delight, pleasure, and satisfaction in the Son. Jesus did not become the Son or the Messiah at this baptism. Jesus already had his divinity from eternity past. The opened heavens, the dove, and the voice revealed to John the Baptist that Jesus was God's Son, come to earth as the promised Messiah to fulfill prophecy and bring salvation to those who believe.

In this event, we see all three members of the Trinity together—God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit. The doctrine of the Trinity means that God is three persons and yet one in essence. In this passage, all three persons of the Trinity are present and active. This is one of God’s incomprehensible mysteries. Other Bible references that speak of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are Matthew 28:19; Luke 1:35; John 15:26; 1 Corinthians 12:4-13; 2 Corinthians 13:14; Ephesians 2:18; 1 Thessalonians 1:2-5; and 1 Peter 1:2.

This temptation by Satan shows us that though Jesus was human and subject to temptations such as we are, he was also divine because he overcame Satan and was ministered to by angels. Jesus’ temptation was an important demonstration of his sinlessness. He faced temptation and did not give in. As his servants, we will also be prepared for discipleship by testing.

1:12 Jesus, empowered by the Holy Spirit, takes the offensive against the enemy, Satan, by going into the lonely and desolate wilderness to fight temptation (see 1:13). The word for compelled is very forceful in the Greek, conveying the meaning of “thrown out” or “cast out.” (Mark used the same word to describe Jesus driving out demons, as in 1:34, 39.) This does not imply that Jesus was reluctant, but rather that God’s Spirit was intensely motivating him to go. As with Jesus’ disciples, the Spirit may have in mind to test us in order to prepare us for greater service.

1:13 Jesus remained alone for forty days; Matthew and Luke add that Jesus fasted during that time (Matthew 4:2; Luke 4:2). The Gospels of Matthew and Luke describe in more detail the temptation endured by Jesus. Satan is an angel who rebelled against God. He is real, not symbolic, and he is constantly working against God and those who obey him. Satan tempted Eve in the Garden and persuaded her to sin; he tempted Jesus in the wilderness and did not persuade him to fall. The verb being tempted describes continuous action because Jesus was tempted constantly during the forty days. Jesus’ personal victory over Satan at the very outset of his ministry set the stage for his command over demons throughout his ministry, but it did not dissuade Satan from continuing to try to ruin Jesus’ mission.

The wilderness was a dangerous and desolate place, inhabited by wild animals. The wilderness regions of Palestine had animals such as boars, jackals, wolves, foxes, leopards, and hyenas. Mark is the only Gospel writer to mention this, pointing out the hostile nature of the wilderness where Jesus spent forty days being tempted. That angels took care of him in no way lessens the intensity of the temptations that Jesus faced. Angels, like these who waited on Jesus, have a significant role as God's messengers. These spiritual beings were involved in Jesus' life on earth by (1) announcing Jesus' birth to Mary, (2) reassuring Joseph, (3) naming Jesus, (4) announcing Jesus' birth to the shepherds, (5) protecting Jesus by sending his family to Egypt, and (6) ministering to Jesus in Gethsemane.

From Jesus' temptation we can learn that following our Lord could bring dangerous and intense spiritual battles. It warns us that we won't always feel good; there will be times of deprivation, loneliness, and hostility. It also shows that our spiritual victories may not always be visible to the watching world. Above all, it shows that we must use the power of God to face temptation, and not try to withstand it in our own strength.

Approximately one year elapsed between 1:13 and 1:14, which begins a new section. In this section Mark focuses on Jesus' choosing of his disciples. This section also tells how Herod removed John the Baptist from ministry while Jesus' public ministry was beginning (see John 3:30). Mark then includes a summary of Jesus' message. Jesus echoed John's call for repentance and added the challenge that each person must believe the Good News. From the beginning, Jesus did not allow himself to be only a topic for debate or even admiration. He expected those who approached him to believe or to reject him. He never allowed the middle ground of indecision.

1:14 Mark mentioned the arrest of John the Baptist as merely a signal for the ministry of Jesus into Galilee, his home region. Luke explained that John was arrested because he publicly rebuked King Herod for taking his brother's wife. John's public protests greatly angered Herod, so he put John in prison, presumably to silence him. The family of Herods were renowned for their cruelty and evil; it was Herod the Great who ordered the murder of the babies in Bethlehem (Matthew 2:16). The Herod who imprisoned John was Herod Antipas; his wife was Herodias, Herod Antipas' niece and formerly his brother's wife. The imprisonment of John the Baptist was only one evil act in a family filled with incest, deceit, and murder.

1:15 The Old Testament prophets often spoke of the future Kingdom, ruled by a descendant of King David, that would be established on earth and exist for eternity. Thus when Jesus spoke of the time and the presence of the Kingdom of God, the Jews understood him to mean that the Messiah had come to fulfill or inaugurate his long-awaited Kingdom. Jesus reassured them that God was in sovereign control. He had begun to act in a new and decisive way.

This caused great excitement among the people. The problem arose, however, in the misunderstanding of the nature of this Kingdom. The Kingdom of God began when God entered history as a human being. But the Kingdom of God will not be fully realized until all evil in the world has been judged and removed. Christ came to earth first as a Suffering Servant; he will come again as King and Judge to rule victoriously over all the earth. The Kingdom was as near as people's willingness to make Jesus king over their lives. Jesus began his ministry with the very words people had heard John the Baptist say: Turn from your sins. The message is the same today.

Jesus confronted Simon and Andrew with a challenge beyond the one he presented in his public preaching. He called the crowds to repentance and belief. He invited Simon and the others to follow him. They had already repented and believed. Now they were being called into discipleship.

The Lord used their previous vocation as a metaphor of their new calling. The former fishermen would now be fishers of people. God finds a way to make good use of every past experience we have to help us serve him.

1:16 The Sea of Galilee is, in reality, a large lake—650 feet below sea level, 150 feet deep, and surrounded by hills. Fishing was the main industry for the approximately thirty fishing towns that surrounded the Sea of Galilee during Jesus' day. Fishing with nets was the most common fishing method. A circular net (ten to fifteen feet in diameter) was cast into the sea. Then it was drawn up, and the catch was hoisted into the boat.

The first pair of men Jesus called to follow him were brothers, Simon and Andrew. This was not the first time Simon and Andrew had met Jesus. Andrew had been a disciple of John the Baptist who, when introduced to "the Lamb of God," turned and followed Jesus (John 1:35-39). Andrew then brought his brother Simon to Jesus (John 1:42). These men understood and believed who Jesus was.

1:17 Jesus told Simon (Peter) and Andrew to leave their fishing business, come and be his disciples, and fish for people to also follow Jesus. These disciples were adept at catching fish, but they would need special training before they would become able to fish for people's souls. Jesus was calling them away from their productive trades to be productive spiritually by helping others believe the Good News and carry on Jesus' work after he was gone.

1:18 After their previous meeting with Jesus, Simon Peter and Andrew had returned to fishing. But when Jesus called them to follow him as disciples, they left their nets at once. Their lives had changed; their allegiance was now to their teacher. Mark taught radical discipleship; a person must leave all behind to follow Jesus.

1:19 Not far down the beach was another pair of brothers, James and John, Simon Peter's partners (Luke 5:10). These men were sitting in their moored boat mending their nets. The weight of a good catch of fish and the constant strain on the nets meant that the fishermen had to spend a lot of time keeping their nets repaired and in good shape.

John had met Jesus previously. In his Gospel, John records his own and Andrew's discipleship with John the Baptist and then their turning to follow Jesus (John 1:35-39). James probably knew about Jesus from his brother, John. These men were ready for Jesus' call.

1:20 Both sets of brothers immediately left behind the lives they had known and embarked on an incredible adventure. Surely the impression Jesus made upon them must have been great, and the certainty of their call must have been strong for them to follow without hesitation.

JESUS TEACHES WITH GREAT AUTHORITY / 1:21-28 / 34

Earlier in chapter 1, Satan attacked Jesus in the wilderness. Then Mark directed our attention to Jesus' counterattack. He carried the spiritual warfare into the domain of Satan, to those controlled by evil spirits. As will be the case repeatedly, the battle took place in a synagogue on the Sabbath. Perhaps this shows that Satan can be active even in our houses of worship.

1:21 Capernaum, located on the northwestern shore of the Sea of Galilee, was the largest of the many fishing towns surrounding the lake. Jesus had recently moved to Capernaum from Nazareth (Matthew 4:12-13). Capernaum was a thriving town with great wealth as well as great sin and decadence. Because it was the headquarters for many Roman troops, heathen influences from all over the Roman Empire were pervasive.

The Temple in Jerusalem was too far for many Jews to travel for regular worship, so many towns had synagogues serving both as places of worship and as schools. Beginning in the days of Ezra, about 450 B.C., a group of ten Jewish families could start a synagogue. There, during the week, Jewish boys were taught the Old Testament law and Jewish religion (girls could not attend). Each Saturday, the Sabbath, the Jewish men would gather to hear prayers, the Scriptures read, and an interpretation from a teacher. Because there was no permanent teacher, it was customary for the synagogue leader to ask visiting teachers to speak. This is why Jesus often spoke in the synagogues in the towns he visited.

1:22 The people were completely amazed by Jesus' teaching. The Jewish teachers of religious law often quoted from well-known rabbis to give their words more authority. But Jesus didn't have that need. Because Jesus was the Son of God, he knew exactly what the Scriptures said and meant. He was the ultimate authority. The people had never heard such teaching. The teachers of religious law were the legal specialists in Jesus' day. They interpreted the law but were especially concerned about the halakah or "rules" for life that came to be as binding as God's written law in the Torah. Their self-assured authority, in fact, became a stumbling block for them, for they denied Jesus' authority to reinterpret the law, and they rejected Jesus as the Messiah because he did not agree with nor obey all of their traditions.

1:23-24 Evil spirits, or demons, are ruled by Satan. They work to tempt people to sin. They were not created by Satan, because God is the Creator of all. Rather, the evil spirits and demons are fallen angels who joined Satan in his rebellion and thus became perverted and evil. The evil spirit had entered the man's body and possessed him. Though not all disease comes from Satan, sometimes demons can cause a person to become mute, deaf, blind, or insane. But in every case where demons confronted Jesus, they lost their power. Thus God limits what evil spirits can do; they can do nothing without his permission. During Jesus' life on earth, demons were allowed to be very active to demonstrate once and for all Christ's power and authority over them.

The evil spirit knew two facts—that Jesus had indeed come to destroy demonic power and that Jesus was the Holy One sent from God. While the people in the synagogue were astounded at Jesus' teaching and wondered who this man could be, the demon knew. At this time, people believed that to know a person's precise hidden name was to be able to gain control over the person. Thus the demon's first attempt against Jesus was to state his divine identity in public. By including this event in his Gospel, Mark was establishing Jesus' credentials, showing that even the spiritual underworld recognized Jesus as God's Son.

1:25 Jesus simply and sternly commanded the demon to be silent. Two explanations may help us understand why Jesus asked this: (1) Jesus wanted to contain the enthusiasm for a political messiah. He did not wish to be the people's king in the way they desired, nor did he want to be a military leader; (2) To confess Jesus' deity without a proper understanding of his mission is partial and invalid. He did not want people to wildly proclaim him to be God's Son unless they understood the meaning of his death for them on the cross. This would explain why even his disciples lacked understanding until his resurrection.

To silence the demon was not enough, for Jesus wanted to free the man possessed by the demon. So Jesus next commanded, "Come out of the man," again demonstrating his power and authority over Satan and his demons.

1:26 Without any recourse except to submit to a higher authority, the evil spirit left the man. But first, to show its anger and protest, the evil spirit screamed and threw the man into a convulsion. This could have been a severe spasm or a blow that thrust the man to the ground. With a final shriek, the demon left.

Many psychologists dismiss all accounts of demon possession as a primitive way to describe mental illness. Although throughout history mental illness has often been wrongly diagnosed as demon possession, clearly a hostile outside force controlled the man described here. Mark emphasized Jesus' conflict with evil powers to show his superiority over them, so he recorded many stories about Jesus driving out evil spirits. Jesus' power over demons reveals his absolute power over Satan, even in a world that seems to be in Satan's control. Satan is presently under God's authority; when God chooses to command, Satan must obey. Satan's workings are only within God's prescribed limits; he can do no more evil than God allows. In the end, Satan and all his demons will be tormented in the lake of fire forever (Revelation 20:10).

1:27 Jesus' display of his authority in the showdown with a demon caused amazement in the people. With a simple and stern command, the evil spirit obeyed and the possessed man was set free. The people called Jesus' teaching new; his teaching challenged them. Jesus taught with authority; he spoke to the powerful underworld with authority. Surely this man was someone to watch closely.

1:28 The people who left the gathering in the large synagogue in Capernaum had witnessed an authoritative and captivating new teacher with unheard-of power. The news spread quickly across the region of Galilee. Jesus' growing popularity becomes a major theme in chapter 1. This popularity among the common folk stands in glaring contrast to the religious leaders' opposition expressed in 2:1–3:6.

JESUS HEALS PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW AND MANY OTHERS / 1:29-34 / 35

After ending his clash with the demons in the synagogue, Jesus immediately healed Peter's mother-in-law of a fever. By the time evening arrived, there were many sick and demon-possessed crowding to Jesus for attention. Mark noted that Jesus was commanding the demons not to identify him. His goal was not to draw attention to himself, but to meet the real needs of others.

1:29 As the crowd hurriedly dispersed from the synagogue or continued talking among themselves, Jesus and the four disciples left for their own lodgings. They arrived at Simon and Andrew's home. Jesus and the disciples probably stayed in this home during their visits to Capernaum (2:1; 3:20; 9:33; 10:10)

1:30-31 Simon's mother-in-law was sick in bed, burning with a high fever. Jesus went to the mother-in-law's bedside, took her by the hand, and helped her to sit up. Jesus' touch on the woman's hand brought instant and complete healing—the fever suddenly left. She went and prepared a meal as she had probably planned.

1:32-33 The people came to Jesus on Saturday evening at sunset. The day had been the Sabbath (1:21), their day of worship and rest, lasting from sunset Friday to sunset Saturday. Jewish law prohibited traveling and carrying burdens on the Sabbath, so they waited until sunset. After the sun went down, Sabbath was over, and the people searched for Jesus. The Greek word for brought means “to carry.” Many of the sick and demon-possessed people were literally carried to Peter's home so Jesus could heal them. The crowd was so huge that it appeared that people from all over Capernaum had gathered there. This was no unruly mob; the people had come on a mission and were there to stay until their mission was accomplished.

1:34 Jesus patiently healed all the sick people. No disease took Jesus by surprise, and no disease was beyond his ability to heal. Jesus' authority over the demons continued to be revealed as he ordered many demons to come out from the victims brought to him. Again, Jesus simply had to command the demon to come out, and it obeyed. However, this time Jesus refused to allow the demons to speak because they knew who he was (see 1:25).

JESUS PREACHES THROUGHOUT GALILEE / 1:35-39 / 36

Jesus had just spent a Sabbath in feverish activity. Early in the morning of the next day, he set aside a time of prayer by himself. By the time the disciples found him, he was ready to face the next challenge. We must follow Christ's example by making time for personal prayer. Those who help and serve on Sunday especially need to set aside time with God to restore their strength. Our ability to serve will be hindered if we neglect times of spiritual replenishment.

1:35 Before the sun came up, Jesus went out alone into the wilderness to pray. During his ministry on earth, Jesus was in constant prayer with the Father. Mark recorded three of these times of prayer: (1) after the successful ministry in Capernaum with the healing of many sick and demon-possessed people; (2) after the miracle of feeding more than five thousand people (6:46); (3) in Gethsemane, just prior to his arrest, trial, and crucifixion (14:32-42).

What did Jesus pray about? After his great successes with the crowds in Capernaum and on the mountainside, his prayers may have focused on fulfilling his mission as the Suffering Servant, when it seemed (at least humanly) more strategic to be a conquering king. Popularity was a temptation in itself, for it threatened to turn Jesus away from his mission. Jesus had a mission to fulfill—and death on the cross was the key, for only Jesus' death could accomplish salvation. Jesus, in his humanity, may have continued to face the temptation to turn away from the difficult path and take the easier one. He constantly needed strength from God. Going into the wilderness, alone with the Father, helped Jesus focus on his task and gain strength for what that task entailed.

1:36-38 Apparently the people in Capernaum continued to arrive at Simon Peter's house the next morning hoping to hear more of Jesus' teaching and see him perform more miracles. The disciples were surprised that Jesus would not follow up on his great success from the previous day's ministry in Capernaum, but instead disappeared before anyone awoke. So they went out to find him and bring him back. But Jesus had a mission to fulfill and a very limited time to accomplish it. Not only was Jesus not going to capitalize on his great popularity in Capernaum, he was not even going back into the city. Instead, he was leaving on an extended trip throughout the region. Many people needed to hear Jesus preach the Good News of the Kingdom of God (1:14-15), as Jesus explained,

“That is why I came.” Jesus would not be deterred from his mission to preach the Good News to as many people as possible. His primary mission was to bring people to a place of decision to have faith in God.

1:39 Jesus and the disciples left the early morning bustle of Capernaum behind and began a preaching and healing tour throughout the region of Galilee. The Romans had divided the land of Israel into three separate regions: Galilee, Samaria, and Judea. Galilee was the northernmost region, an area about sixty miles long and thirty miles wide. Jesus did much of his ministry in this area, an ideal place for him to teach because there were over 250 towns concentrated there, with many synagogues. Jesus’ action of expelling demons verified his authority and power and showed compassion to those who had been possessed and, by Jesus’ word, had been set free.

JESUS HEALS A MAN WITH LEPROSY / 1:40-45 / 38

Once the news was out that Jesus could heal diseases, people with serious needs converged from every direction. Perhaps the greatest handicap God accepted in coming to earth was to limit himself to space and time. He was a single individual with divine power in a sea of human needs. Even those he helped, like this man cured of leprosy, hampered Jesus by telling everyone of Jesus’ miraculous power. By so doing, he drew attention to the sensational and miraculous aspect of Jesus’ ministry and away from the need for repentance and faith that leads to a life of service.

1:40 Leprosy was a terrifying disease because of the social rejection and the devastating impact it had on its victims. In Jesus’ day, the Greek word for leprosy was used for a variety of similar diseases; some forms were contagious, disfiguring, and / or deadly; some were as innocuous as ringworm. In keeping with the law in Leviticus 13 and 14, Jewish leaders declared people with leprosy (lepers) unclean. This meant that lepers were unfit to participate in any religious or social activity. Because the law said that contact with any unclean person made that person unclean too, some people even threw rocks at lepers to keep them at a safe distance. Even the mention of the name of this disabling disease terrified people because they were afraid of catching it. Lepers lived together in colonies outside their community. Most would remain there until they died. Sometimes, however, leprosy would go away. Then the person could return to the priest and ask to be declared “clean” before returning to the community.

That this man with leprosy came to Jesus reveals the man’s great courage; that he knelt reveals his desperation and his humility; his words to Jesus reveal his faith. The priest would declare him clean, but only Jesus could make him clean. “If you want to” reveals the man’s faith in Jesus’ authority in this matter of healing. What this man wanted was to be made well, a huge request.

1:41 Jesus’ love and power go hand in hand. Mark revealed Jesus’ heart of compassion. While all people shunned lepers, Jesus touched this man covered with a dreaded, contagious disease. The fact that Jesus’ touch precedes his pronouncement of healing indicates that Jesus disregarded the Jewish law not to touch a leper (Leviticus 5:3; 13:1-46; Numbers 5:2). This shows Jesus’ compassion and his authority over the law. With the words, “I want to . . . Be healed!” the leprosy immediately disappeared. The words were simple but effective, revealing Jesus’ divine authority over sickness.

1:42 We are not told the stage of this man’s leprosy—he may already have lost portions of his body to the disease. But when Jesus spoke, the man’s health was restored completely. The disease did not go into a type of “remission”—it disappeared. The man’s becoming healed meant he had his life back. He could return to his community, to his family, and to worshiping in the synagogue.

1:43-44 When a leper was cured, he or she had to go to a priest to be examined. Then the leper was to give a thank offering at the Temple. Jesus adhered to these laws by sending the man to the priest. Jesus wanted this man to give his story firsthand to the priest to prove that his leprosy was completely gone so that he could be restored to his family and community. This would be done as proof of his healing.

Jesus also told the man: “Don’t talk to anyone along the way.” Why would Jesus ask this man not to tell anyone about his healing? Wouldn’t this have been great advertising for Jesus, bringing more people to hear his message? While we might think so, Jesus knew better (John 2:24-25). Jesus’ mission was to preach the Good News of the Kingdom of God. If crowds descended on him to see miracles accomplished or to benefit from his power, they would not be coming with the heart attitude needed to hear and respond to the gospel. Jesus did not want to be a miracle worker in a sideshow; he wanted to be the Savior of their souls.

1:45 The man disobeyed Jesus’ strong warning. Perhaps the man thought he was helping Jesus’ ministry; perhaps he just couldn’t help himself. In any case, he spread the news. His disobedience to Jesus’ command, even if from good motives, hindered Jesus’ work because the publicity Jesus received severely hampered his ministry in the synagogue. Jesus had planned to go into towns throughout Galilee and preach in the synagogues. But his notoriety as a healer made this impossible. Mark recorded that Jesus couldn't enter a town anywhere publicly—probably crowds of people pressed on him, all seeking special favors. So Jesus had to stay out in the secluded places. But that did not hinder people in need of healing or desiring to see this healer. They still came to him there.

JESUS HEALS A PARALYZED MAN / 2:1-12 / 39

Chapter 1 draws the battle lines between Jesus and the power of Satan. Chapter 2 introduces a new factor in the conflict: resistance to Jesus by the religious establishment. The religious leaders, accustomed to giving lip service to the idea of a coming Messiah, found that Jesus threatened their power and prestige. Jesus challenged their authority, questioned their teachings, and trampled on their way of doing business. Mark illustrated their reactions and rejection of Christ with five clashes that form chapter 2 and the beginning of chapter 3.

2:1-2 Jesus returned to Capernaum, which had become his base of operations while he was in Galilee. Everyone in Capernaum had been looking for him (1:37), so when the people heard that he was back, they packed the house. Instead of healing, however, this time he preached the word to them. The basic message remained the same: The long-awaited Messiah had come to break the power of sin and begin God's personal reign on earth. The miracles Jesus performed served as a sign to Jesus' identity, as well as revealed his compassion and love for the people he had come to save.

2:3-4 As Jesus was preaching, four men arrived carrying a paralyzed man. The crowd had filled the house and the doorway (2:2), so the group couldn't get to Jesus. But these friends would not be deterred. Determined to get their friend to Jesus, they dug through the clay roof above his head. In Bible times, houses were built of stone and had outside stairways that led onto flat roofs. Roofs were made with joists covered with a mixture of mortar, tar, ashes, and sand. Thus they had to "dig" through the roof (see also Luke 5:19). They attached ropes to each corner of the pallet and carefully lowered the paralyzed man in front of Jesus.

2:5 We might expect a popular preacher in the middle of speaking to an expectant crowd to be annoyed at this intrusion. Obviously, several minutes were spent as the crowd watched these men take apart the roof above them. But Jesus saw their faith acted out in their determination. If they could but get their friend within Jesus' touch, they knew their friend would be restored.

Among the first words Jesus said to the paralyzed man were "My son, your sins are forgiven." The man needed spiritual healing, so Jesus forgave his sins. Then Jesus healed the man.

2:6-7 These teachers of religious law were the legal specialists in Jesus' day. Jesus' teaching and his popularity had prompted special investigation by the powerful leaders of the Jewish faith. These teachers had been dispatched from Jerusalem to Capernaum (Luke 5:17) and had made their way into the crowd that filled this house. Jealous of Jesus' popularity and power, these men hoped to find something to criticize or even condemn in Jesus' teaching. When they heard Jesus tell the paralyzed man that his sins were forgiven, they were shocked. For Jesus to claim to forgive sins was considered blasphemy, defined as claiming to be God or to do what only God can do. In Jewish law, blasphemy was punishable by death (Leviticus 24:16). The religious leaders were correct in their statement that only God can forgive sins (Exodus 34:6-7; Psalm 103:3; Isaiah 43:25; Daniel 9:9), and they also rightly understood that Jesus was claiming to be God. But in labeling Jesus' claim to forgive sins as blasphemy, the religious leaders showed they did not understand that Jesus was God. Jesus had God's power and authority to heal bodies and forgive sins. Forgiveness of sins was a sign that the messianic age had come (Isaiah 40:2; Joel 2:32; Micah 7:18-19; Zechariah 13:1). Unfortunately, it did not occur to these Jewish leaders that perhaps this man was their Messiah.

2:8 Jesus knew what they were discussing, and their hostility and anger at Jesus' words could not be hidden. Jesus asked them, "Why do you think this is blasphemy?" Would the teachers of religious law respond, or did they too believe this man to be the Messiah? Jesus knew the teachers' dilemma and offered to prove his authority.

2:9 The teachers of religious law knew about Jesus' ability to heal, and they probably had expected Jesus to immediately heal the paralyzed man. Instead, Jesus forgave the man's sins. To the teachers, this sounded like blasphemy, and it also sounded like an easy out. Anyone can just say someone's sins are forgiven, but it would take someone with great power and authority to heal a paralyzed person. Jesus asked them the question that they were asking themselves. He wanted to show that he had the power to forgive sins by showing that he had the power to make a paralytic pick up his mat and walk.

2:10-11 By recording this incident, Mark hoped to prove to his audience beyond any doubt that Jesus was the Messiah. The Son of Man has the delegated authority of God the Father to forgive sins. The teachers asked, "Who but God can forgive sins!" (2:7). The answer is, "No human except one delegated that authority by God himself. And the Son of Man has that authority." However, people cannot “see” sins forgiven; they can see physical healing. Therefore, Jesus turned to the paralytic, still lying on the mat in front of him, and told him to stand up on his previously useless legs; take his mat with arms that may also have been previously useless; and go on home.

2:12 The man did not doubt Jesus’ words; when Jesus told him to get up, he did so—before the stunned onlookers including Jesus’ critics. The healing unmistakably showed Jesus’ power and authority. The teachers of religious law who questioned Jesus’ ability to forgive sins (2:6-7) saw the formerly paralyzed man get up and walk. Jesus’ question in 2:9 forced their answer: Jesus had the power to make the paralyzed man walk; thus he also had the authority to forgive his sins. The people in Capernaum had already seen numerous healings by Jesus on his previous visit. But the crowd’s amazement is expressed in Mark’s words, they all praised God. While the religious leaders questioned and debated, the people recognized God’s power and realized that Jesus had been given authority by God.

JESUS EATS WITH SINNERS AT MATTHEW’S HOUSE / 2:13-17 / 40

The next clash between Jesus and the religious leaders revolved around the company he kept. Not only had Jesus not separated himself from distasteful characters, he sought them out. Jesus was charged with befriending sinners. Just as Jesus entered the world to save sinners, he still enters sinful human lives to rescue those he loves.

2:13 Jesus left Capernaum and went back to the lakeshore (that is, the Sea of Galilee). A crowd of people gathered, and Jesus taught them. While Jesus often spoke in synagogues or homes, he also taught groups of people on hillsides (Matthew 5:1) or on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. The hillsides and sloping shoreline of the Sea of Galilee provided a convenient place for large crowds to gather and listen.

2:14 Levi (also called Matthew, and later the author of the Gospel of Matthew) was a Jew who worked for the Romans (specifically for Herod Antipas) as the area’s tax collector. He collected taxes from the citizens as well as from merchants passing through town. (Capernaum was a customs post on the caravan route between Damascus to the northeast and the Mediterranean Sea to the west.) Tax collectors were expected to take a commission on the taxes they collected, but most of them overcharged and kept the profits. Thus, tax collectors were hated by most Jews because of their reputation for cheating and because of their support of Rome. A Jew who accepted such an office was excommunicated from the synagogue and shamed his family and friends. Thus, a Jewish tax collector was looked down upon for valuing money over reputation, respectability, purity before God, and concern for his own people, who had to pay extremely high taxes to the imperial power.

The tax-collection booth was an elevated platform or bench. Everyone knew who Levi was, and anyone passing through the city who had to pay taxes could find him easily. Levi's tollbooth taxed commercial goods being transported from the sea to land routes. This was probably not the first time Jesus saw Levi, for Jesus walked these shores many times.

Mark's words emphasize the brevity of Jesus' call and Levi's radical obedience. Jesus' words, "Come, be my disciple," are in the imperative mood, meaning this was a command, not an invitation. Levi recognized that Jesus wasn't inviting him; Jesus was calling him. So Levi got up and followed.

Levi's radical obedience is amazing for the change it would effect in his life. Already ostracized by family and friends, following Jesus probably made no difference in this regard. But Levi was probably very wealthy—tax collecting was a lucrative occupation. Levi had been an outcast; now he was wanted as a member of a group. But he would have to learn to live in poverty.

2:15 Levi responded, as Jesus would want all his followers to do; he followed his Lord immediately, and he called his friends together to meet him too. He held a dinner for his fellow tax collectors and many other notorious sinners so they also could meet Jesus.

In Levi's house there gathered a crowd that Jesus could not reach in the synagogues. The tax collectors had been excommunicated. The term sinners referred to the common people who were not learned in the law and did not abide by the rigid standards of the Pharisees. The Pharisees regarded these people as wicked and opposed to the will of God because they did not observe the rituals for purity, which enabled them to eat with others. In any case, Jesus had attracted a following among these people. These people gathered at Levi's house, where they knew they had a welcome, and they too sat with Jesus and his disciples at dinner and listened to the message this marvelous teacher had for them.

2:16 Many of these teachers of religious law were also Pharisees—a strict religious group of Jews who also advocated minute obedience to the Jewish laws and traditions. Their job was to teach the Scriptures and the Law and to protect them against anyone's willful defiance. They saw themselves as righteous and everyone else as sinners. When Jesus sat down to a meal with these “scum,” the Pharisees were quite surprised. Here was a man who seemed to have the entire law at his fingertips, who taught with great authority, yet who stooped to the level of the poor, unlearned, common people (even sinners!). Thus the Pharisees pulled his disciples aside and asked why Jesus did this.

2:17 The question apparently made its way to Jesus’ ears, and Jesus had an answer for the self-righteous, influential religious leaders. The first part of Jesus’ answer was from a common proverb on the healthy and the sick. People who are well don’t seek out a physician; the physician’s waiting room is filled with people who are sick. They recognize their need and come to the one who can make them well.

Jesus carried the proverb a step further and explained his messianic mission. Jesus did not come to call those who think they are already good enough (used ironically—those, like these Pharisees, who thought they were righteous) to repentance, for the self-righteous did not recognize their sinfulness. But these sinners saw their need. This was Jesus’ audience.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS ASK JESUS ABOUT FASTING / 2:18-22 / 41

At every turn, Jesus challenged the Pharisees’ way of looking at life. They lived by appearance; he challenged motives. They constructed elaborate behavior patterns to indicate their holiness; Jesus taught that good behavior done for the wrong reasons has no spiritual value.

In response to their questions about fasting, Jesus turned the discussion from proper behavior to the reasons for fasting. Jesus made it clear that fasting was not a self-justifying action. It was right in its proper place, but there was also a proper place for feasting and joy. To further underscore this truth, Jesus added two other analogies (clothing repair and wineskin care). A worn item of clothing cannot be repaired with a new piece of cloth that shrinks when washed. A well-stretched wineskin filled with new wine will expand and burst when the wine ferments. So also the new spiritual age brought by Christ would not fit the old system; indeed it would burst the confines of the old system.

2:18 John’s disciples refers to the remaining disciples of John the Baptist. These men and the Pharisees were fasting—that is, they were going without food in order to spend time in prayer repenting and humbling themselves before God. The Old Testament law set aside only one day a year as a required day of fasting for all Jews—the Day of Atonement (Leviticus 16:29). The Pharisees, however, fasted on Mondays and Thursdays (see Luke 18:12) as an act of piety, and most likely promoted this among the people.

John the Baptist was in prison, and his disciples erroneously sided with the Pharisees on this issue, fasting when they should have been feasting with Jesus. Naturally this caused a question: “Why do John’s disciples and the Pharisees fast, but your disciples don’t fast?”

2:19 The Pharisees fasted as a show of piety; the disciples of John the Baptist fasted as a sign of mourning for sin and to prepare for the Messiah’s coming. But, like Jesus’ disciples, they did not need to fast because the Messiah was with them! To be with Jesus the groom is as joyous as a wedding feast. Wedding guests do not mourn or fast; a wedding is a time of celebration and feasting. Likewise, Jesus’ coming was a sign of celebration, not mourning and fasting. Jesus did not condemn fasting—he himself fasted (Luke 4:2). He emphasized that fasting must be done at the right time for the right reasons.

2:20 While Jesus walked the earth, his presence was a cause for celebration—the Messiah had come! The people did not need to mourn, they needed to rejoice. But Jesus knew that soon he (the groom) would be taken away from them. The word someday refers to the day of Jesus’ crucifixion. On that day, Jesus’ disciples would indeed fast and mourn.

2:21 Jesus’ arrival on earth ushered in a new time, a new covenant between God and people. The new covenant called for a new way of expressing personal faith. The newness of the gospel and its relationship to people could not be combined with the religion of Judaism any more than a piece of unshrunk cloth should be used as a patch on a worn-out garment. When the garment is washed, the patch will shrink, pull away from the old garment, and leave a bigger hole than before.

2:22 In Bible times, wine was not kept in glass bottles, but in goatskins sewn around the edges to form watertight bags called wineskins. New wine expanded as it fermented, stretching its wineskin. After the wine had aged, the old wineskin (that had gotten brittle with age and couldn’t stretch anymore) would burst if more new wine was poured into it. New wine, therefore, needs new wineskins.

Like old wineskins, the Pharisees and indeed the entire religious system of Judaism were too rigid to accept Jesus, who could not be contained in their traditions or rules. They were the self-appointed guardians of the “old garments” and the “old wineskins.” Christianity required new approaches and new structures.

THE DISCIPLES PICK WHEAT ON THE SABBATH / 2:23-28 / 45

Jewish life in Jesus' day revolved around the Sabbath. Elaborate laws had been designed so that everyone knew exactly how to "keep the Sabbath." The fourth clash between Jesus and the power of Satan recorded by Mark occurred on a Sabbath. The way Jesus kept the Sabbath irritated his critics to the point of fury. The religious leaders, by imposing a bewildering system of Sabbath laws, had in fact made themselves masters of the Sabbath and thus masters over the people. They made the seventh day dreaded rather than enjoyed.

By claiming the title "Lord of the Sabbath," Jesus was stating his own divinity. But this claim was also an affront to the position of the religious leaders. His remaking the Sabbath into a day of refreshment, worship, and healing pried open the tight-fisted control the Pharisees held on the people. No wonder Jesus' approach to the Sabbath led his enemies to plot his death.

2:23-24 Mark prepares us for a conflict with the opening words, one Sabbath day. Jesus, determined not to be confined to the Pharisees' petty rules, always seemed to be doing something against those rules on the Sabbath.

Jesus and the disciples were walking through some grainfields. As they walked, they began breaking off heads of wheat to eat. The Pharisees (who apparently were following them around) pointed out that they were breaking the law against harvesting grain on the Sabbath. The Pharisees had established thirty-nine categories of actions forbidden on the Sabbath, based on interpretations of God's law and on Jewish custom. Harvesting was one of those forbidden actions. By breaking off heads of wheat to rub in their hands to eat, the disciples were technically harvesting, according to the religious leaders. However, Jesus and the disciples were picking grain because they were hungry (see Matthew 12:1), not because they wanted to harvest the grain for a profit. The disciples, who were not farmers, were not doing their daily work on the Sabbath. Neither were they stealing grain, for God's law allowed for this kind of sharing among his people (see Deuteronomy 23:25). Thus, though they may have been violating the Pharisees' rules, they were not breaking any divine law. The Pharisees, however, could not (and did not want to) see beyond their legalisms.

2:25-26 This story is recorded in 1 Samuel 21:1-6. Each week twelve consecrated loaves of bread, representing the twelve tribes of Israel, were placed on a table in the house of God, here meaning the Tabernacle. This bread was called the bread of the Presence. After its use, it was to be eaten only by priests. On one occasion, when fleeing from Saul, David and his men were given this special bread to eat by the high priest. The priest understood that the men's need was more important than ceremonial regulations. The loaves given to David were the old loaves that had just been replaced with fresh ones. Although the priests were the only ones allowed to eat this bread, God did not punish David because his need for food was more important than the priestly regulations.

The Pharisees knew the Scriptures thoroughly, yet Jesus' question, "Haven't you ever read," reveals their ignorance of the true meaning of the Scriptures that they claimed to know so well. Yes, they had read this story many times, but they had obviously not discerned or applied its meaning. Jesus justified his disciples' action on the grounds that they were hungry and that their need superseded the technicalities of ceremonial law. When Jesus compared himself and his disciples to David and his men, Jesus was saying, in effect, "If you condemn me, you must also condemn David." Jesus was not condoning disobedience to God's laws. Instead, he was emphasizing discernment and compassion in enforcing the ceremonial laws, something the self-righteous Pharisees did not comprehend. People's needs are more important than technicalities.

2:27 The Pharisees, having added all kinds of restrictions for the Sabbath, had completely forgotten God's purpose in creating the Sabbath. God mercifully provided the Sabbath as a day of rest for his people—a day to set aside the normal duties of the workweek and spend time resting and worshiping (Genesis 2:1-3). But the Pharisees had only succeeded in making the Sabbath an impossible burden. Jesus made clear that the Sabbath was made to benefit people by providing them a day of rest. God did not create people in order to place impossible restrictions and burdens on their lives.

2:28 Who created the Sabbath? God did. Therefore, because Jesus, the Son of Man, is God's Son, given authority and power by God himself, then he is master even of the Sabbath. By saying this, Jesus claimed to be greater than the law and above the law. To the Pharisees, this was heresy. They did not realize that Jesus, the divine Son of God, had created the Sabbath. The Creator is always greater than the creation; thus Jesus had the authority to overrule their traditions and regulations.

JESUS HEALS A MAN'S HAND ON THE SABBATH / 3:1-6 / 46

This episode completes a set of five escalating confrontations between Jesus and the religious leaders. Together, they summarize the points of tension leading to Jesus' rejection. The Pharisees were watching Jesus' actions on the Sabbath, anticipating that he might do something that would allow them to condemn him. Jesus thwarted their plan by involving them in the decision to heal the man. Their anger drove the Pharisees to break the Sabbath by plotting Jesus' murder. They committed the very sin they wanted to pin on him.

3:1-2 As was his regular custom (noted by the word again), Jesus went into the synagogue on the Sabbath (see 3:2). As Jesus entered, he noticed a man with a deformed hand. Luke adds that it was the man's right hand (Luke 6:6). Jesus' enemies were the Pharisees (3:6). They were spying on Jesus with the intention of finding some fault in his actions so that they could condemn him.

Jesus' reputation for healing (even on the Sabbath, see 1:21-26) preceded him, but would he dare heal on the Sabbath with the Pharisees watching? God's law prohibited work on the seventh day of the week (Exodus 31:14-17); thus, the religious leaders allowed no healing to be done on the Sabbath unless the person's life was in danger. Healing, they argued, was practicing medicine, and a person could not practice his or her profession on the Sabbath.

3:3 Jesus didn't avoid a confrontation with his adversaries; he needed to make the important point that he would not be bound by the Pharisees' burdensome laws and that, as God, he would perform an act of kindness and healing, even on the Sabbath. So Jesus commanded the man with the deformed hand to come to the center of the crowd so everyone could see him and his deformity. The Pharisees would not miss anything of what Jesus was about to do.

3:4 To Jesus it didn't matter that this man's life was not threatened by the condition of his hand; it didn't matter that he could have waited until the next day to perform this healing legally. If Jesus had waited until another day, he would have been submitting to the Pharisees' authority, showing that their petty rules were equal to God's law. God is a God of people, not of rules.

So Jesus asked a rhetorical question: "Is it legal to do good deeds on the Sabbath, or is it a day for doing harm?" But the Pharisees wouldn't answer him, for to answer would have left them without an accusation to pin on Jesus.

Their own laws allowed people to do good and to save life on the Sabbath—the farmer who could rescue his only sheep from a pit on the Sabbath knew that (see Matthew 12:11-12). How absurd, then, to refuse to allow a person to do good to another person on the Sabbath.

3:5 The religious leaders, the guardians of the Jewish faith, the keepers of the law, the teachers of the people—these men with their hard hearts were so spiritually and morally blind and hardened that they could not see who Jesus really was, and they could not even acknowledge a man’s need and rejoice in his healing. No wonder Jesus was angry and disturbed. But the Pharisees’ stubbornness didn’t matter. Jesus planned to make his point and to heal this man. So Jesus told the man to reach out his hand.

In response to Jesus’ command and with all eyes focused on him, the man stretched his hand out in front of him. The moment he did so, it became normal again. Jesus gave this man his life back. He could work again, and he no longer had to face the embarrassment of his deformity.

3:6 No particular action of Jesus is recorded; he told the man to move and with that movement, healing arrived. Jesus did nothing that could be called “work,” but the Pharisees would not be swayed from their purpose. Jesus had embarrassed them. In their fury, the only option they saw was to kill him. Ironically, the Pharisees had accused Jesus of breaking their law about healing on the Sabbath, yet they themselves were discussing plans for killing Jesus. Their hatred, combined with their zeal for the law, drove them to plot murder—an act that was clearly against the law.

In an unlikely alliance, the Pharisees plotted with the supporters of Herod (or Herodians), a Jewish political party that hoped to restore Herod the Great’s line to the throne. Their support of Rome’s leadership over Palestine brought them into direct conflict with the Jewish religious leaders. These two groups had little in common—until Jesus posed a threat to them both. Jesus threatened the Pharisees’ authority over the people; Jesus threatened the Herodians’ political ambitions because his talk of a “kingdom” caused them to think that this popular and powerful man was planning to set himself up as a ruler. This would jeopardize their authority derived from Herod’s power. To get rid of Jesus, the Pharisees needed the support of people with some influence with the secular leaders. Thus the Pharisees and Herodians, normally enemies, joined forces to discuss how to get rid of Jesus.

In contrast to the rejection of Jesus by certain religious leaders, Mark described the attraction and adoration of Christ by the crowds. Mark's details provide us a picture of the context of Jesus' ministry. People were coming from literally every direction (from Tyre and Sidon in the north; from Judea, Jerusalem, and Idumea in the far south; from across the Jordan in the east). From this whirlwind of activity, Mark highlighted a number of smaller interactions between Jesus and those around him. The character of Jesus emerges under the constant scrutiny and demand of the crowds. Jesus was rarely alone.

3:7 Up to this point, Jesus had been aggressively confronting the Pharisees' hypocrisy. Then he decided to withdraw from the synagogue before a major confrontation developed, because it was not time for him to die. Jesus had many lessons still to teach his disciples and the people. So he went out to the lake (that is, to the Sea of Galilee), followed by a huge crowd. The actual twelve disciples had not yet been called, but those closest to Jesus were marked as following him. They had separated themselves from the religious establishment and were sharing in the glow of Jesus' popularity.

3:8 While Jesus was drawing fire from the religious leaders, he was gaining great popularity among the people—they came literally from all directions. News of Jesus had spread far beyond Galilee. People came from Judea (the southernmost region of Israel), Jerusalem (the key city of Israel, in Judea), Idumea (the region south of Judea), east of the Jordan River (which probably refers to Perea and Decapolis), and Tyre and Sidon (pagan cities to the far north on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea). The people came for various reasons with various motives. Some were simply curious, some sought healing, some wanted evidence to use against him, and others truly wanted to know if Jesus was the Messiah. Most of them could only dimly guess at the real meaning of what was happening among them.

3:9-10 Only Mark recorded this detail, suggesting that this was an eyewitness report from one of the disciples whom Jesus asked (possibly Peter). This boat was about the size of a rowboat. As Jesus walked along the shoreline with the crowds following, the little boat was rowed along close to the shore so it would always be ready in case the people crowded Jesus right into the water. Jesus' reputation for healing had spread everywhere (see 3:8), and many sick people came from great distances just to touch Jesus and be healed. Picture people in the throng crowding around and shoving each other out of the way, reaching out at Jesus. They were so desperate to be healed that such rudeness made no difference.

3:11-12 Mark described a second encounter between Jesus and evil spirits (see also 1:23-24). The demons recognized who Jesus was, and whenever a possessed person saw Jesus, he or she would fall down in front of him, not in worship, but shrieking to everyone, “You are the Son of God!” The demons recognized Jesus and feared him (see James 2:19). They knew his power, and they were aware that he had the authority to cast them out of their lodgings (inside a person) and even to send them away permanently (see 5:9-10). Jesus didn’t want or need the demons to endorse him. His true identity would be revealed at the right time, at his resurrection. Thus, he spoke sternly to the demons and warned them not to say who he was (see also note 1:25).

Ironically, the demons recognized who Jesus was; the people didn’t. Jesus warned the evil (unclean) spirits not to reveal his identity because he did not want them to reinforce a popular misconception. The huge crowds were looking for a political and military leader who would free them from Rome’s control, and they thought that the Messiah predicted by the Old Testament prophets would be this kind of man. Jesus wanted to teach the people about the kind of Messiah he really was, because he was far different from what they expected. Christ’s Kingdom is spiritual. It begins, not with the overthrow of governments, but with the overthrow of sin in people’s hearts.

JESUS CHOOSES THE TWELVE DISCIPLES / 3:13-19 / 48

Earlier in this Gospel, Jesus invited several persons to follow him (1:16-19; 2:14). Soon hundreds and thousands of others also tracked Jesus’ steps. Some were curious, some critical, and some were committed. From among all of them Jesus chose twelve.

The better we know the disciples, the more we come to see that God might actually choose us, too. Grace does not make humanness a disqualifying characteristic. As disappointing as the disciples may have been, they leave room for us to hope. When we are aware of our unworthiness to merit God’s mercy and love, we are in the best position to experience what he can do for us.

3:13 Jesus left the shore of the Sea of Galilee and went up on a mountain (probably referring to the hill country of Galilee instead of to one particular mountain). Luke records that Jesus “prayed to God all night” (Luke 6:12) before calling the ones he wanted to go with him—that is, the twelve disciples. Jesus did not take volunteers; he chose and called those he wanted. Jesus wanted these men; so he called them, and they came to him. They did not hesitate to obey.

3:14-15 Jesus had many disciples (learners), but he selected twelve of them to be his regular companions, calling them apostles (messengers). The apostles were Jesus' inner circle. He gave them special training, and he sent them out with his own authority. From the hundreds of people who followed Jesus from place to place, he especially selected these twelve to receive the most intense training. We see the impact of these men throughout the rest of the New Testament, for they started the Christian church.

The choice of twelve men is highly symbolic. The number twelve corresponds to the twelve tribes of Israel (Matthew 19:28), showing the continuity between the old religious system and the new one based on Jesus' message. Jesus looked upon this as the gathering of the true people of God. These men were the righteous remnant who would carry on the work the twelve tribes were chosen to do—to build the community of God.

Jesus did not choose these twelve to be his disciples because of their faith—it often faltered. He didn't choose them because of their talent and ability—no one stood out with unusual ability. The disciples represented a wide range of backgrounds and life experiences, but apparently they may have had no more leadership potential than those who were not chosen. The one characteristic they all shared was their willingness to obey Jesus.

The apostles remained with Jesus for the purpose of being trained, so that Jesus could then send them out as his ambassadors or representatives to preach. Their message was the Good News of salvation; they were to proclaim that message publicly and with the authority given to them by Christ himself. Not only did the disciples go out trained in the message of the gospel, they also had Jesus' authority to cast out demons. This power was given to the disciples by Jesus; it was delegated authority. The disciples could speak the word, and God's power would cast out the demons.

3:16 Mark listed these disciples by name or family name ("son of"). It is interesting to note the almost complete silence of the Gospels and the Epistles as to the future work of the vast majority of these twelve men. We know some about Peter, James, and John in the book of Acts; we know from 3:19 that Judas would betray Jesus. Otherwise, the Bible is silent about many of the disciples' activities. One reason for this silence is that many of the twelve apostles, according to tradition, went far beyond the regions focused on in the book of Acts and the Epistles.

The first name recorded was Simon, whom Jesus renamed Peter (see John 1:42). Jesus gave him a name in addition to the one he already had—he did not change Simon's name. Sometimes Peter is referred to as Cephas. "Peter" is the Greek equivalent of the Aramaic Cephas—a word meaning stone or rock. Peter had been a fisherman (1:16). He became one of three in Jesus' core group among the disciples. He also confessed that Jesus was the Messiah (8:29). Although Peter would deny ever knowing Jesus, he would eventually become a leader in the Jerusalem church, write two letters that appear in the Bible (1 and 2 Peter), and be crucified for his faith.

3:17 James and John had also been fishermen (1:19). James would become the first martyr for the Christian faith (Acts 12:2). John would write the Gospel of John, the letters of 1, 2, and 3 John, and the book of Revelation. They may have been related to Jesus (distant cousins); thus, at one point they requested special places in Christ's Kingdom (10:35, 37). These brothers were nicknamed Sons of Thunder. Scripture gives glimpses of these men, revealing that they were somewhat short-tempered and judgmental; for example, they wanted to call fire down from heaven on an inhospitable Samaritan village (Luke 9:52-56). Thus Jesus gave them an appropriate name.

3:18-19 Andrew was Peter's brother and also a fisherman (1:16). Andrew had been a disciple of John the Baptist. He left John to follow Jesus, and then brought his brother Simon Peter to Jesus (John 1:35-39). Philip was the fourth to meet Jesus (John 1:43). Philip probably knew Andrew and Peter because they were from the same town, Bethsaida (John 1:44). Philip then brought Bartholomew (also called Nathanael) as recorded in John 1:45-47. Bartholomew at first rejected Jesus because Jesus was from Nazareth. But upon meeting Jesus, his attitude changed (John 1:49). Matthew was also known as Levi. He had been a tax collector (Mark 2:14). He had been a despised outcast because of his dishonest career, but he abandoned that corrupt (though lucrative) way of life to follow Jesus. He would later write the Gospel of Matthew. Thomas is sometimes called "Doubting Thomas" because he doubted Jesus' resurrection (John 20:24-25). But he also loved the Lord and was a man of great courage (John 11:16). Thomas was tough and committed, even if he tended to be pessimistic. Thus, when the other disciples said that Jesus was alive, Thomas didn't believe them. However, when Thomas saw and touched the living Christ, doubting Thomas became believing Thomas. James is designated as son of Alphaeus to differentiate him from James the son of Zebedee (and brother of John) in 3:17. Thaddaeus is also called "Judas son of James" (see Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13). Simon was probably not a member of the party of Zealots, for that political party did not appear until ^{A.D.} 68. Most likely the word Zealot used here indicates zeal for God's honor and not extreme nationalism; it was an affectionate nickname.

The name Iscariot is probably a compound word meaning “the man from Kerioth.” Thus, Judas’s hometown was Kerioth in southern Judea (see Joshua 15:25), making him the only one of the Twelve who was not from Galilee. It was Judas, son of Simon Iscariot (John 6:71), who betrayed Jesus to his enemies and then committed suicide (Luke 22:47-48; Matthew 27:3-5).

Mark presents a paradoxical picture of the disciples. They doubted and they failed, yet they were used to build the church. Some died for him, one betrayed him. The message is, what kind of disciple will you be?

RELIGIOUS LEADERS ACCUSE JESUS OF GETTING HIS POWER FROM SATAN / 3:20-30 / 74

Mark never allowed his readers to get far from the fact that Jesus’ ministry was constantly being opposed. He balanced Jesus’ choice of disciples with the evolving group of opposition. The religious leadership chose to add the accusation of demon possession. He neutralized his enemies’ charge with a counterattack. How, he asked them, could he possibly be serving Satan when his presence and his actions were causing such devastating damage to Satan’s kingdom? Further, he pointed out that their failure to recognize the Spirit, under whose influence he was actually operating, indicated that they were committing the unforgivable sin. By identifying the Holy Spirit as Satan in Jesus’ life, the religious leaders were committing unspeakable blasphemy.

3:20 The house Jesus entered was most likely in Capernaum and may have, once again, been Peter’s house. As had happened twice previously, crowds began to gather (see 1:33; 2:1-2). Again, the demand of the people in the crowd made it impossible for Jesus and the disciples to have any quiet, to spend time in training, or even to eat.

3:21 Thinking Jesus had gone out of his mind, his family came to him. John recorded that Jesus’ brothers did not believe in him (John 7:5), although some later did believe (Acts 1:14). In fact, Jesus’ brother James became one of the leaders in the church in Jerusalem and the writer of the book of James. Mary believed that her son was special, but she didn’t understand his mission. Perhaps she thought the situation was getting out of hand, and she needed to protect her son from himself, from the demands of his ministry, or even from the relentless crowds. Jesus’ family decided that they needed to take him home with them.

3:22 These teachers of religious law probably had been summoned by the Pharisees and Herodians who were already in league to destroy Jesus (3:6). The teachers and Pharisees could not deny the reality of Jesus' miracles and supernatural power—he had indeed been driving out demons. But they refused to believe that his power was from God because then they would have had to accept him as the Messiah. Their pride would not let them do that. So in an attempt to destroy Jesus' popularity among the people, the teachers accused him of being possessed by Satan, the prince of demons. That is why, they said, he was able to cast out demons.

3:23-26 Jesus first addressed their second accusation—that he was driving out demons by Satan's power—by simply asking, “How can Satan cast out Satan?” By the question, Jesus implied that it is impossible for Satan to cast out himself (or his own followers, demons). Why would Satan work against himself? Following the obvious conclusion of the accusation—that Satan was driving himself out of people—Jesus indicates that would then mean there was civil war in the kingdom of evil. No king would throw his own soldiers out of his kingdom; neither would Satan throw his soldiers out of his kingdom. His kingdom would then collapse. In the same way, a home, with people working against one another, is doomed. The answer to Jesus' question is that Satan doesn't and would not cast out his own, for to do so would mean the end of his power. He would never survive. The teachers' charge that Jesus was driving out demons by Satan's power was obviously false. But Jesus wasn't finished.

3:27 This picture reflects a situation in the ancient world where wealthy people's homes were virtual fortresses, and their servants could form a small army. Jesus pictured Satan as the wealthy man and his demons as his servants and possessions. The only way those possessions could be carried off would be for someone to first tie up the strong man—the only way for the demons to be cast out is for someone to first limit Satan's power. Satan would not do that to himself.

Although God permits Satan to work in our world, God is in control. Jesus, as God, has “tied up” Satan; Jesus is able to drive out demons and end their terrible work in people's lives. As such, every exorcism was a binding of Satan; one day Satan will be bound forever (Revelation 20:10). Jesus was not in league with Satan, as the teachers of the law tried to claim; rather, he had overpowered Satan by refusing his temptations and by constantly freeing people held in Satan's grasp—either through demon possession or through the power of sin.

3:28-30 I assure you is a recurring phrase used only by Jesus prior to a solemn warning or pronouncement. No longer was Jesus reasoning with his accusers; he was giving them a solemn warning. Jesus had just been accused of being in league with Satan and had soundly refuted those charges. Here he had a few words for these so-called teachers of religious law, the Jewish leaders.

First he made the incredible promise that any sin can be forgiven, including blasphemy. Too often people miss this promise and worry about the warning in the next verse. But the fact is, those who believe in Jesus will be forgiven of all sins (evil acts, wrong actions, good actions not done, evil thoughts, evil motives, etc.) and of all blasphemies (evil words said against God). When there is confession and repentance, no sin is beyond God's forgiveness.

There is one sin, however, that cannot be forgiven. Anyone who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit will never be forgiven. Blasphemy against the Holy Spirit refers not so much to a single action or word as to an attitude. Those who defiantly deny Jesus' divine power and instead attribute it to Satan are blaspheming the Holy Spirit (see also Matthew 12:32). Jesus was not talking about rejecting him, but of rejecting the power behind him. Jewish history tells us that Jesus' generation acknowledged that he performed miracles but that he did it by the power of the devil. Thus, the Jewish leaders rejected him as being the Messiah and thereby blasphemed the Holy Spirit.

Jesus' words were addressed directly to these teachers of religious law because they were saying he had an evil spirit. They had blasphemed the Spirit by attributing the power by which Christ did miracles to Satan instead of to the Holy Spirit. This is the unforgivable sin—the deliberate refusal to acknowledge God's power in Christ. It indicates an irreversible hardness of heart. Deliberate, ongoing rejection of the work of the Holy Spirit is blasphemy because it is rejecting God himself. The religious leaders accused Jesus of blasphemy (see also 14:63-64), but ironically they were the guilty ones when they looked Jesus in the face and accused him of being possessed by Satan.

Sometimes believers worry that they have accidentally committed this unforgivable sin. But only those who have turned their back on God and rejected all faith have any need to worry. Jesus said they can't be forgiven—not because their sin is worse than any other, but because they will never ask for forgiveness.

Jesus turned his rejection by his family into a compassionate invitation to recognize his true nature. They came to claim him as their family member; he challenged them to be members of God's true family. The conflict between Jesus and his family continues in our lives. Do we avoid Jesus' claim on us as the powerful Lord by reducing him to friendship status? Jesus is our friend and brother, but he is also our Lord. By treating him as any less, we may be neutralizing his rightful ownership of our thoughts and actions.

3:31-33 This verse continues from 3:20-21 when Jesus' family arrived to take him home because he was "out of his mind." Jesus' mother was Mary (Luke 1:30-31), and his brothers were probably the other children Mary and Joseph had after Jesus (see also 6:3).

Apparently Mary had gathered her family, and they went to find Jesus. Mary hoped to use her personal relationship with Jesus to influence him. She saw her son occupied in a busy ministry that was taking its toll on him—to the point that he had no time to eat (3:20). They arrived at the house but could not get in. So they stood outside and sent their message in to Jesus. Obviously Jesus' family thought that their relationship with him precluded all others and that he would immediately answer their request.

Instead of immediately going outside to see what his family members wanted, Jesus looked at the crowd and asked an odd question, "Who is my mother? Who are my brothers?" Jesus knew why his family had come, and he wasn't about to be dragged home because they thought he'd gone crazy. So he used their visit as a lesson in discipleship. A relationship with Jesus is not limited to those in his immediate family. Jesus opened this relationship to all people.

3:34-35 Jesus looked at those seated around him (not the entire crowd, but probably his disciples who were seated closest to him) and answered his own question. The types of people who can have a relationship with him are those who listen, learn, believe, and follow. In these words, "These are my mother and brothers," Jesus explained that in his spiritual family, the relationships are ultimately more important and longer lasting than those formed in his physical family. The key to discipleship in Mark's Gospel is radical obedience to God's will. While Jesus looked upon his disciples seated around him as members of his family, he broadened the scope to include anyone who does God's will.

Jesus was not denying his responsibility to his earthly family. On the contrary, he was criticizing the religious leaders for not following the Old Testament command to honor their parents (Matthew 15:1-9). He provided for his mother's security as he hung on the cross (John 19:25-27). His mother and brothers were present in the upper room at Pentecost (Acts 1:14). Instead, Jesus was pointing out that spiritual relationships are as binding as physical ones, and he was paving the way for a new community of believers to be formed as Jesus' spiritual family. This family would be characterized by love; the members should desire to be together, work together, and share one another's burdens.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE FOUR SOILS / 4:1-9 / 77

In the first three chapters, Mark recorded the quick pace of Jesus' ministry. In this chapter, Mark turned his attention to the content of Jesus' teaching, including a series of stories. Jesus' stories entertained the many who were merely curious, while they enlightened the few who genuinely sought to know God. These earthy stories have profound spiritual applications. The story of the farmer, seed, and soils describes how the human heart responds to the truth.

4:1 Again Jesus began teaching by the lakeshore (of the Sea of Galilee). The crowd that gathered around him was so large that he got into a boat and sat in it out on the lake. Jesus spoke from there.

4:2-3 Jesus used many stories, or parables, when teaching the crowds. These stories used familiar scenes to explain spiritual truths. A parable compares something familiar to something unfamiliar. It compels listeners to discover truth, while at the same time conceals the truth from those too lazy or too stubborn to see it.

This story gave a familiar picture to Jesus' audience—a farmer planting seed, with the resulting increase dependent on the condition of the soil. In ancient Israel, seed was sown by hand. As the farmer walked across the field, he would throw handfuls of seed from a large bag slung across his shoulders. No matter how skillful, no farmer could keep some of his seed from falling by the wayside, from being scattered among rocks and thorns, or from being carried off by the wind. So the farmer would throw the seed liberally, and enough would fall on good ground to ensure the harvest.

4:4-7 Some of the seeds fell on a footpath. The hard and compacted soil of the road made it impossible for the seed to penetrate. So it sat on top, as tempting morsels for the birds that came and ate the seeds. (In 4:15 we learn that these "birds" represent Satan.) Some of that seed fell on shallow soil with underlying rock. Unlike the wayside, the rocky places had some soil to accept the seed, but not much. The seed sprang up quickly in the shallow soil, but the sun took the moisture out so rapidly that the young plants wilted. Some of the farmer's seed fell among thorns. Thorns rob the sprouts of nutrition, water, light, and space. Thus, when the thorns grew up, the good seed was choked out.

4:8-9 However, some of the seed landed in fertile soil. This seed had the depth, space, and moisture to grow, multiply, and produce a crop. A farmer would be happy to see his crop multiply even ten times—thirty, sixty, or a hundred times would be an incredible yield for it would mean even more to plant and harvest in the coming year.

Jesus pointed out that “listening” makes fertile soil for the message of the Kingdom. If we bear fruit, it is proof that we have listened. If others bear fruit, it shows that the seed we have planted has taken root in their heart. Those willing to hear are those who will do a deeper kind of listening with the mind and heart that is necessary in order to gain spiritual understanding. Some people in the crowd were only curious about Jesus, a few were looking for evidence to use against him, and others truly wanted to learn and grow. Jesus’ words were for the honest seekers. Those who honestly seek God’s will have spiritual hearing, so they will be able to listen and understand.

The story of the soils was one of many Jesus used to create questions in the minds of his followers. Later, in a smaller group, Jesus explained why he used these stories, called parables, and what they meant. Although Jesus pointed out that the parables kept some people in ignorance, he willingly explained their meaning to the disciples. Any hearer who continued to be ignorant or confused did so because he or she refused to learn. Those who failed to understand the parables were not ready to obey the truth they taught.

4:10 When Jesus got away from the crowd and was alone with his true followers (the twelve disciples and the larger group of believers), a more intimate question-and-answer period followed. Perhaps these close followers did not want to reveal their ignorance about Jesus’ words in front of the entire crowd. So, as soon as they were alone with Jesus, his followers asked him about the stories in general, and particularly the story of the four soils.

4:11 The you to whom Jesus spoke was the group of his true followers. They had been given a special gift by God, for only they—among the crowds around Jesus—were permitted to understand the secret about the Kingdom of God. They understood, though only partially, the secret that God’s Kingdom had arrived among them in the person of Jesus. The Kingdom of God had been a “secret” to the prophets of the Old Testament because, though they wrote about it, they did not understand it (see Romans 16:25-26). The believers who knew Jesus personally received spiritual insight that illuminated the secret so that it was no longer a mystery to them.

Jesus was aware of the unbelief and outright hostility of many of his listeners. The outsiders have not yet accepted the message of salvation and may never do so. Thus, for them everything will remain concealed. Those “outside” (the religious leaders and the vast majority of the crowd) would never comprehend the secret, for they would not come to God for the answer. Choosing not to believe in Jesus as their Messiah, they would not be able to understand his Kingdom. The parables allowed Jesus to give spiritual food to those who hungered for it; but for the others, Isaiah’s prophecy would explain their situation.

4:12 God told Isaiah that people would see but not perceive, and hear but not understand (Isaiah 6:9); that same kind of reaction was witnessed by Jesus. The story of the farmer was an accurate picture of people’s reactions to all of Jesus’ stories. By quoting from the prophet Isaiah, Jesus was explaining to this inner group of followers that the crowd resembled the Israelites about whom Isaiah had written. God had told Isaiah that the people would listen but not learn from his message because their hearts had hardened beyond repentance. Yet God still sent Isaiah with the message because, even though the nation itself would not repent and would reap judgment, some individuals would listen. Jesus came to the Israelites hundreds of years after Isaiah, but the scenario was the same. Most would not repent because their hearts were hardened; but a few would listen, turn from their sins, and believe.

The deafness to the message did not mean the message was false or that the messenger was somehow at fault. It is not for us to understand why some believe and some do not; instead, we are simply to continue to trust in God and proclaim his message. Neither Isaiah’s nor Jesus’ audiences were denied the opportunity to turn from their sins and be forgiven. Instead, the point was clearly made that refusing to listen would mean inability to perceive and understand anything Jesus had to say.

4:13 People cannot see without the illumination of the Holy Spirit. To understand is like formerly blind eyes being made to see. By nature, humans are spiritually blind. But the spiritual insight given by the Holy Spirit illumines Jesus’ stories and indeed all of God’s word so that believers can truly “perceive” and “understand” what God has to say (4:9). Jesus was speaking to those to whom the “secret” had been revealed (4:11); thus, they shouldn’t have needed any explanation at all.

4:14 The farmer was Jesus (see Matthew 13:37) and—by extension—anyone after him who would bring God’s message. The seed that is sown is the word of God (4:3).

4:15 The story reveals people’s varying responses to the gospel message. The attitude or condition of their hearts would govern their response. The word makes no impression on the “hard-path” people. Satan (like the birds, 4:4) comes at once and takes it away. Perhaps the person feels no need in his or her heart, no desire for anything other than this life, no guilt of sin or need of forgiveness. Satan has no trouble with these people.

4:16-17 The “rocky-soil” people hear the message and receive it with joy (4:5). These people receive the Good News of the gospel because of the promises offered. They initially show some promise of growth. These people understand some of the basics but do not allow God’s truth to work its way into their souls and make a difference in their lives—their roots don’t go very deep and thus they wilt. When trouble comes (the hot sun, 4:6), they fall away.

4:18-19 “Thorny-ground” people hear and accept the Good News and allow it to take root in their hearts, giving hope of a harvest. But “thorns” grow up and choke out the growing seed—distractions and conflicts rob new believers of time to reflect on and digest God’s word in order to grow from it, as well as robbing guidance and support from interaction with other Christians. Jesus described the thorns: cares of this life, lure of wealth, and desire for nice things. Worldly cares (no matter how important or how minor), the false sense of security brought on by prosperity, and the desire for material things (including anything that serves to distract a person) plagued first-century disciples as they do us today. Daily routines overcrowd and materialistic pursuits distract believers so no crop is produced.

4:20 But other people are like the good soil—they hear, accept, and produce a huge harvest. These are the true disciples—those who have accepted Jesus, believed his words, and allowed him to make a difference in their lives.

4:21 In ancient Israel, a lamp was a lighted wick in a clay bowl that was full of oil. The lamp was not lit and then put under a closed place. Instead, the lamp was lit and placed on a stand, where its light will shine and illuminate the room. The disciples may have wondered why Jesus seemed to be deliberately hiding the truth of the gospel through his stories. Perhaps they thought that if the word was going to fall on hard hearts, then why should they sow it so liberally? Shouldn't they just limit their teaching to those who were ready and eager to listen? "No," explained Jesus, "I am not deliberately trying to hide the truth from people. That would be like lighting a lamp and then putting it under a bowl. Why then light the lamp at all? If I am hiding the truth, there is no reason for me to teach." The purpose of the stories was not to conceal the truth, but to reveal it; the stories explained spiritual truths in everyday terms. Thus the stories do not obscure, they clarify—but only to those who are willing to listen and believe.

4:22 Jesus continued his explanation for his use of parables. Although the truth may be hidden or secret for a while, it will not remain so. One day the truth will be brought to light. This could refer either to Jesus' resurrection and ascension (when his followers would fully understand Jesus' words) or the Second Coming. Jesus' followers did not understand everything about Jesus at that time, but all their questions would be answered one day.

4:23 This saying, which repeats 4:9, often concluded Jesus' important statements. As explained in 4:9 above, Jesus spoke of a deeper kind of listening: hearing not with the ears, but with the mind and heart. Only then could the hearers gain spiritual understanding from his stories.

4:24 Because the stories are so important in what they teach, Jesus warned the people to pay attention to his words. We must treasure the words of Jesus. Those who heard, understood, and then shared with others would be given even more understanding to pass along. Believers are responsible to use well their God-given understanding, insight, and opportunities to share the gospel. Whether they have little or much, that is not nearly as important as what is done with what they have. "The more you do this, the more you will understand"—a person's openness and perception of the Kingdom message will bring great rewards. Ultimately, believers will receive eternal blessings in heaven.

4:25 The people who listen and understand are those who are open to Jesus' teaching. To them God will give more understanding. They will continue to grow because they let God's word make a difference in their lives. In contrast, those who are not listening will lose whatever they had. Jesus' words here may have been directed to the Jews who had no understanding of Jesus and would lose even what they had—that is, their privileged status as God's people. Or Jesus might have meant that when people reject him, their hardness of heart drives away or renders useless even the little understanding they had. Eventually, any opportunity to share in God's Kingdom will be taken away completely.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE GROWING SEED / 4:26-29 / 79

Many of Jesus' stories sprouted from similes. He focused on what people knew or saw and then pointed to a similarity between that and a characteristic of the Kingdom of God. The way Jesus made use of his surroundings demonstrates that all of creation is filled with lessons and pointers. This story teaches us that spiritual growth cannot be measured by a stopwatch. The Kingdom of God may be planted in us in an instant, but its growth becomes apparent only with the passing of time and the practice of faithfulness.

4:26-28 This story about the Kingdom of God, recorded only by Mark, reveals that spiritual growth is a continual, gradual process that is finally consummated in a harvest of spiritual maturity. We can begin to understand the process of spiritual growth by comparing it to the slow but certain growth of a plant. Even though the farmer did not understand the actual process of growth, his ignorance does not stop it from happening—the seeds sprouted and grew. In the same way, the Kingdom of God begins in a person's life with a seed of understanding that takes root in the good soil of a ready heart. That seed sprouts and grows into strong faith. But how that happens is God's responsibility.

The disciples, wondering about the difficult mission ahead of them, were being told by Jesus that they need not worry about how the Kingdom would grow. That part was up to God. Their job was to plant the seed. With his coming to earth, Jesus planted the Kingdom of God, and God would bring that harvest to fruition.

4:29 The farmer lets the seed grow in the fields and goes about his other work (4:26-27), but as soon as the grain is ready, he has work to do. The farmer comes and harvests it with a sickle (a curved blade mounted in a short handle). Likewise, the time will come when God will intervene decisively into the world's affairs.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE MUSTARD SEED / 4:30-34 / 81

Mark concluded this sampling of Jesus' stories with a second lesson about the Kingdom of God. He began the chapter with the story of the four soils, which illustrates the variety of responses to the gospel. The two following stories focus on what happens when the truth finds a receptive heart. The story of the growing seed illustrates the growth rate of the Kingdom of God. The story of the mustard seed illustrates the surprising size of the growth from such a small beginning.

4:30 As if repeating from 4:26, Jesus prepared again to explain the Kingdom of God in a story. No one story could completely describe God's Kingdom in all its aspects, so Jesus employed several of them. The crowds, and even some of the disciples, were expecting the Messiah to be a political leader who would free Israel from Rome. The only "kingdom" they could picture was an earthly one. So Jesus attempted to clarify his Kingdom even further for them.

4:31-32 In this story, Jesus stressed that his Kingdom would have a small beginning—indeed, it began with Jesus alone and, upon his ascension, was left in the care of twelve apostles and a few hundred other followers. Jesus compared this beginning to the mustard seed, which was the smallest seed a farmer used. The mustard seed was so small that it would take almost twenty thousand seeds to make one ounce. From this very tiny seed would grow a large shrub—the largest shrub among all the herbs that the farmer would plant in his garden. A mustard shrub could grow ten to twelve feet in just a few weeks. Jesus' point was that just as a tiny seed can grow into one of the largest of plants, so God's Kingdom can begin with a few people who truly believe and grow into such greatness that, upon Christ's second coming, it will overpower the entire earth and rule supremely forever. For the disciples, and for us, this story meant that size or relative power does not indicate final results. God's Kingdom would take root and grow across the world and through the years. This would be no political coup; the Kingdom would grow slowly but surely in people's hearts, making a difference in people's lives and preparing them for life to come in God's eternal Kingdom.

4:33-34 Mark made clear that he did not record all of Jesus' stories—there were probably too many to record. Jesus adapted his methods to his audience's ability and desire to understand. He didn't speak in stories to confuse people, but to challenge sincere seekers to discover the meaning of his words. As explained in 4:2-3, Jesus spoke in stories to the crowds (see also 4:1), but when he was alone with his disciples, he explained the meaning to them (see also 4:10). The disciples here are specifically the Twelve.

JESUS CALMS THE STORM / 4:35-41 / 87

In this section, Mark has described the intense encounters between Jesus and various groups (religious leaders, crowds, his own family) and given us a series of teaching stories. In this section, he recalled a series of miracles that demonstrated Jesus' power over the natural elements, the spiritual realm, and the human body. He presented a strong case for Jesus' startling uniqueness and divine nature.

Mark's details of Jesus calming the storm are absent in the accounts of Matthew and Luke. These details indicate that Mark used Peter as a source. He gives intimate facts that only an eyewitness would have known. Believers today profess trust in Jesus' power over the storms of life, but many fall short of demonstrating that trust when the storms arrive. Saying we believe that Jesus can help us takes on a whole new meaning when we actually depend on him for help.

4:35 When evening came, Jesus suggested that he and the disciples cross to the other side of the lake—that is, to the east side of the Sea of Galilee. The boat probably belonged to one of the fishermen in the group, most likely to Peter. For Peter to set sail in the evening was not unusual because he was used to fishing at night (see John 21:3). Fishing was best then; storms usually came in the afternoon.

Thus, when Jesus finished speaking, the disciples pulled up the anchor and set sail. Jesus' ministry was never without purpose. He was crossing the sea in order to enter a new area of ministry. Along the way, the disciples would be taught an unforgettable lesson about his power.

4:36 A few people in the crowd probably expected Jesus to come ashore to offer more healing or teaching. But Jesus, human as he was, needed rest. So he left the crowds behind when the boat set sail.

The detail that other boats followed is recorded only in Mark and signifies an eyewitness account—perhaps from Peter who sailed the boat and had to watch out for these other boats as they made their way out into the lake. (Josephus, an ancient historian, wrote that there were usually more than three hundred fishing boats on the Sea of Galilee at one time.) The other boats accompanying Jesus may have been filled with persistent followers. The tiny detail gives us a picture of God's grace—many people on these other boats were also saved when Jesus stilled the storm.

4:37 The Sea of Galilee is an unusual body of water. It is relatively small (thirteen miles long, seven miles wide); but it is 150 feet deep, and the shoreline is 680 feet below sea level. Because it is below sea level and surrounded by mountains, it is susceptible to sudden storms. Winds sweeping across the land come up and over the mountains, creating downdrafts over the lake. Combined with a thunderstorm that appears suddenly over the surrounding mountains, the water stirs into violent twenty-foot waves. The disciples had not foolishly set out in a storm. In fact, they usually didn't encounter storms at night and did not see this one coming. Even though several of these men were expert fishermen and knew how to handle a boat, they had been caught without warning by this fierce storm. Their peril was real as they battled huge waves that nearly swamped their vessel.

4:38 While this was happening, Jesus was sleeping at the back of the boat. How Jesus could sleep during this storm indicates his complete exhaustion and reveals his human nature. That the noise, the violent rocking of the boat, and the cold spray of the water didn't awaken him gives us a glimpse of the physical drain on Jesus throughout his earthly ministry.

The disciples had embarked on this journey at Jesus' request after a long day. They were probably tired too, but they had set sail anyway. Then, of all things, a storm blew in—one that was threatening to sink the boat and drown them. And Jesus was sleeping through it! They woke him and asked, “Teacher, don't you even care that we are going to drown?” Their words were more of a criticism than a call for help. How easy it is for us to complain and criticize God for not coming to our aid, rather than making our request and then trusting him to answer.

Although the disciples had witnessed many miracles, they panicked in this storm. Added to that, they revealed that they completely misunderstood their teacher. They had seen Jesus perform great miracles of compassion, but they dared to ask if he cared about them at all. Their question was rude; their misunderstanding was deep.

4:39 Jesus, abruptly awakened from a deep sleep, arose and without speaking to the disciples spoke instead to the elements. Standing in the stern of the rocking ship, Jesus rebuked the wind and said to the water, “Quiet down!” The disciples' were shocked at the power of their teacher to speak and control the ocean waves. But they should not have been surprised. The storm was out of control, their fears were out of control, but Jesus was never out of control. He has power over all the forces of nature, and he listens to the appeals of those who love him.

4:40 The disciples had seen Jesus do incredible miracles, but they hadn't taken their knowledge of his power and carried it to its logical conclusion. Jesus responded, “Why are you so afraid? Do you still not have faith in me?” They wanted him to do something; he wanted them to trust him! Despite all that the disciples had seen and heard thus far, and despite their belief in Jesus as the Messiah, they still had not grasped that Jesus was himself God, given God's power and authority over all of creation.

4:41 But the disciples still didn't understand, as betrayed by their question, "Who is this man?" They should have known because this miracle clearly displayed the truth of Jesus' divine identity. Being with the human, compassionate Jesus was fine; being with the powerful and supernatural Son of God was terrifying.

When we become Christians, we enter a cosmic struggle because Satan hates people to believe in Jesus. Satan's limited power is launched against believers individually and the church in general, hoping to sink us to the depths of the sea. But we have the ultimate power on our side, and the final victory is assured. Jesus should be our Savior, to whom we turn with all our needs and fears, knowing that he does care and will help.

JESUS SENDS DEMONS INTO A HERD OF PIGS / 5:1-20 / 88

Though we may emphasize the love for the world that God expressed through Christ, we sometimes fail to apply it to individual people. That Jesus permitted the demons to enter the large herd of pigs strikes us as odd, and we might be surprised by Jesus' disregard for personal property. Jesus' action, however, demonstrated the value of the man possessed by the demons. The demons, not Jesus, incited the pigs in their suicidal stampede.

By any standard, the value Jesus places on each one of us cannot be measured. He did not hesitate to present his own life in exchange for our salvation. The story about the herd of pigs dramatically contrasts the purposes of God and the purposes of Satan for people. To Jesus, the crazed man was worth saving. To Satan, he was a soul targeted for destruction. Upon entering the pigs, the demons immediately revealed their destructive intent. They accomplished in the pigs what they had been doing in the man.

5:1 The land of the Gerasenes was located southeast of the Sea of Galilee. The precise location is uncertain because this area is sometimes written as "Gerasenes," "Gergesenes," or "Gadarenes" in various manuscripts. However, some scholars cite evidence that favors "country of the Gerasenes," probably referring to a small town called Gersa (modern-day Kersa or Kours). Others prefer "Gadarenes," citing the town of Gadara, one of the most important cities of the region. Gadara was a member of the Ten Towns (see 5:20). These ten cities with independent governments were largely inhabited by Gentiles, which would explain the herd of pigs (5:11). The Jews did not raise pigs because, according to Jewish law, pigs were unclean and thus unfit to eat.

Whatever the exact location of their landing, the point is that Jesus had planned to go there. This was Gentile territory, revealing a new direction for his ministry.

5:2 It is difficult to picture the awful sight of this man, with an evil spirit, bloody (5:5), out of control, and apparently strong and frightening (5:4). Having an "evil" or unclean spirit means being demon possessed. Although we cannot be sure why demon possession occurs, we know that evil spirits can use the human body to distort and destroy a person's relationship with God. These evil spirits (5:9) had entered the man's body and were controlling him.

5:3-4 This demon-possessed man's condition was clearly hopeless without Christ. He no longer had contact with society, but lived among the tombs. This could refer to a type of graveyard with caves hewn into the rock. People with hopeless conditions, such as this man, could find shelter in the caves. People had tried to restrain his violent acts. The man had been put into chains and shackles. But he snapped the chains and smashed the shackles, indicating power not his own, but derived from the demons that held him. This man was so strong that no one could control (or overpower) him.

5:5 His screaming was more of a shriek—the voices of the demons (see also 1:26). The hitting of his skin with sharp stones refers to gashing and hacking at his body, leaving him bloody and covered with scars. These horrible actions occurred constantly. He was indeed a frightening creature.

5:6 The man did not run to escape Jesus, but ran to confront Jesus and scare him away as he would do to anyone else who ventured into his territory. When he came close to Jesus, the man fell on his knees, not in worship, but in grudging submission to Jesus' superior power. The demons immediately recognized Jesus and his authority. They knew who Jesus was and what his great power could do to them (see James 2:19).

5:7 The demon's first question was a request that Jesus leave them alone, showing the demons' ultimate rebellion. Jesus and the demons were as far separated as anything could be. Jesus' purpose was to heal and give life; the demons wanted to kill and destroy. But Jesus would not leave this man in such a condition.

Like the demon who had possessed the man in Capernaum (1:24), this demon tried using Jesus' divine name to control him. This demon referred to him as Jesus, Son of the Most High God. This is the highest title used for Jesus in Mark's Gospel and shows that the demons recognized Jesus as God's divine Son. The words "Most High God" appear in the Old Testament, and often were used by Gentiles when speaking of the superiority of Israel's God over any idol.

Then the demon had the audacity to ask for Jesus' mercy so that he would not be tortured in hell! The word for torture is graphic and correct. The Bible says that, at the end of the world, the devil and his demons will be thrown into the lake of fire (Revelation 20:10). The question revealed that the demons knew their ultimate fate; they hoped that Jesus would not send them to their fate early.

5:8-9 Jesus' first command was to one evil spirit. When that one did not obey, Jesus commanded the demon to give him its name. The answer revealed that there were many demons. A legion was the largest unit of the Roman army; it consisted of three thousand to six thousand soldiers.

5:10 The demons knew they had no power over Jesus; so when they saw Jesus, they begged him again and again not to send them to some distant place or into the Bottomless Pit (see Luke 8:31). Why didn't Jesus just destroy these demons—or send them away? Because the time for such work had not yet come. Jesus healed many people of the destructive effects of demon possession, but he did not yet destroy demons. In this situation, Jesus wanted to show Satan's destructive power and intent over the two thousand pigs. The same question could be asked today—why doesn't Jesus stop all the evil in the world? His time for that has not yet come. But it will come. The book of Revelation portrays the future victory of Jesus over Satan, his demons, and all evil.

5:11 According to Old Testament law (Leviticus 11:7), pigs were “unclean” animals. This meant that they could not be eaten or even touched by a Jew. This incident took place southeast of the Sea of Galilee in the region of the Gerasenes (5:1), a Gentile area. A normal herd of pigs would be 150 to 300 head. So this herd was unusually large.

5:12 The evil spirits begged Jesus not to send them away, but to send them into those pigs. The demons knew they had to submit to Jesus' power and authority, and they knew that he could seal their fate by returning them to the abyss or sending them far away. Notice that they did not ask to be sent into the city; they knew Jesus would not allow them to inhabit other people. But on the hillside were enough physical animal hosts for all these demons to inhabit.

5:13 Jesus did not command the demons to go into the pigs; he gave them permission to do what they requested. Satan has no final authority but can do only what God permits. While Jesus granted the demons' request to enter the pigs and destroy the herd, Jesus stopped their destructive work in people, and particularly the man they had possessed. Jesus also showed his disciples, the townspeople, and even us who read these words today the absolute goal of Satan and his demons. They desire total and complete destruction of their hosts.

The demons' action proves their destructive intent—if they could not destroy the men, they would destroy the pigs. Jesus' action, in contrast to the demons', shows the value he places on each human life. Some people might have difficulty with the fact that all the pigs died, but Jesus considered the man to be more important than the pigs.

5:14-17 When Jesus performed this miracle, he again gained immediate publicity. The herdsmen, astonished at what had happened, ran and told the amazing story. Their story seemed unbelievable: Two thousand pigs floating on the edge of the lake would certainly be a sight, so those who heard the story rushed out to see for themselves. The crowd saw the pigs in the water, they saw Jesus and the disciples on the shore, and they saw the one who had been demon-possessed in his right mind. Jesus had restored this man's humanity; he was sane and self-controlled.

The people might have responded in several ways. They could have been overjoyed to see Jesus on their own shore, or they could have responded with joy that the demon-possessed man had been healed. However, Mark used one word for the people's response: frightened.

What were they afraid of? Perhaps such supernatural power as Jesus had displayed frightened them. Perhaps they thought Jesus would be bad for their economy (losing two thousand pigs in one day certainly cost someone). Perhaps they didn't want Jesus to change their status quo. In any case, their fear caused them to make a terrible mistake. They asked Jesus to go away and leave them alone. Unlike their own heathen gods, Jesus could not be contained, controlled, or appeased. They feared Jesus' supernatural power, a power that they had never before witnessed. And they were upset about losing a herd of pigs more than they were glad about the deliverance of the demon-possessed man. Unfortunately for them, Jesus did as they asked. And there is no biblical record that he ever returned. Sometimes the worst possible thing that can happen is for Jesus to answer one of our requests.

5:18-19 Having been freed, the man begged to go with Jesus. The man's request meant that he wanted to be one of Jesus' followers, with Jesus as a constant and close companion. But Jesus had other plans for him. As Jesus had done when he healed the leper (1:40-42) and the paralytic (2:11-12), Jesus gave this formerly demon-possessed man his life back. He could go home, something he could not do before. Certainly his family would rejoice to see him returned to sanity. When they would ask him what happened, the man was to tell them about the Lord's mercy.

Often Jesus asked those he healed to be quiet about the healing (1:43-45; 5:43), but he urged this man to "go and tell" what the Lord had done for him. Why the difference? This man was returning to his home in a Gentile region. Jesus knew the man would be an effective witness to those who remembered his previous condition and could attest to the miraculous healing. Through him, Jesus could expand his ministry into this Gentile area. Jesus would not remain in the region, but he did not leave himself without witness.

5:20 Although the man was healed and able to travel with Jesus, Jesus sent him on a mission. And the man wasted no time. He started off to visit the Ten Towns of that region. Ten cities, each with its own independent government, formed an alliance for protection and for increased trade opportunities. These cities had been settled several centuries earlier by Greek traders and immigrants. Jews were a minority in the area. Many people from the area followed Jesus (Matthew 4:25). This former madman may have been known throughout the region. So when he returned to that same region, his testimony had results—everyone who saw and heard him was amazed.

Mark often wove together events in Jesus' life. On the way to see an ailing child, Jesus met a suffering woman. While he was dealing with her crisis, the message arrived that the sick girl had died. The account rings with lifelikeness. We are familiar with the jumble of urgency, delays, obstacles, and disappointments in life. Mark demonstrates that Jesus knew the same experiences. The conclusion of this episode reintroduces Jesus' efforts to control his publicity. His compassion motivated him to constant action, but God's plan required that Jesus resist the pull of growing public acclaim.

5:21 Jesus went back across the Sea of Galilee, probably landing back at Capernaum (4:35). As always, a large crowd gathered (see also 1:33; 2:2; 3:7, 20; 4:1). The contrast with Jesus just having been asked to leave the Gerasene region is unmistakable. Unfortunately, although he was popular with the people in Capernaum, they really were no more receptive to his message.

5:22-24 The synagogue was the local center of worship (see the explanation on 1:21), and Jairus was a lay person elected as one of the leaders. Jairus held a position of high esteem in the town. For him to fall down before Jesus and plead for him to come heal his daughter was a significant and daring act of respect and worship.

We do not know the nature of the young girl's sickness; apparently nothing had helped her and she would soon die. But Jairus remembered someone who could help—someone whose touch had healed many people in Capernaum

(1:33-34). When Jairus heard that Jesus had returned to Capernaum, he was among the crowd on the seashore (5:21). He asked for Jesus' touch on his daughter, knowing that if Jesus were to come, his daughter would live. So Jesus went with him, with the curious crowd following along.

5:25-26 In the crowd that pressed on Jesus was another person in need of divine help. A woman who had had a hemorrhage (that is, bleeding; this may have been a menstrual or uterine disorder) for twelve years. The bleeding caused the woman to be in a constant condition of ritual uncleanness (see Leviticus 15:25-33). She could not worship in the synagogue, and she could not have normal social relationships, for anyone who came into contact with her would also become unclean. Thus, the woman was treated almost as severely as a leper. She had suffered and become destitute in trying to get a cure. There was no hope for alleviating her suffering, until she heard about Jesus.

5:27-28 The woman worked her way through the crowd and came up behind Jesus. She knew she only had to touch his clothing and she would be healed. The decision to touch Jesus' garment was due to the popular belief that the clothes of a holy man imparted spiritual and healing power (see 6:56; Acts 19:11-12). She may have feared that Jesus would not touch her if he knew her condition. Or she may have feared that if her disease became known to the crowd, the people who had touched her would be angry at having become unclean unknowingly. The woman knew she could be healed, but she tried to do it as unobtrusively as possible. She thought that she would just get healed and go away.

5:29 The moment the woman touched Jesus' garment, the bleeding stopped. The disease that had weakened her body for years suddenly disappeared. She felt the difference and knew not only that the pain had stopped, but that she was also completely healed of the disease. What a moment of incredible joy this must have been for this woman!

5:30 The healing had been immediate upon the woman's touch (5:29); Jesus' knowledge of the healing was also immediate. As the woman felt the healing of her body, Jesus felt the supernatural healing power go out of him. Someone had touched him in order to be healed, that person's faith had allowed the healing to take place, and Jesus perceived what had happened. Jesus' question, "Who touched my clothes?" had a definite purpose. Whether Jesus already knew who touched him or not is inconsequential. What mattered was that Jesus wanted to establish a relationship with this woman. She had hoped to go away undetected. Jesus, having healed her physically, wanted to heal her spiritually as well.

In the meantime, Jairus must have been exasperated; he was already in a hurry due to the severe illness of his daughter. No doubt the slow movement of the crowd was frustrating him. Then, of all things, Jesus stopped to ask a seemingly silly question. Little did Jairus know that through all these events, he would be learning a valuable lesson about Jesus' power.

5:31 The disciples were surprised by Jesus' question, so their reply seems almost rude. In effect they said, "How can you ask such a ridiculous question? Lots of people are touching you!" They did not understand that Jesus meant a different kind of touch.

5:32 Jesus looked around—the healed person could not have gone far, for Jesus had stopped immediately upon being touched. He knew that person was there. In his piercing gaze at the few people nearest him in the crowd was the unspoken demand that the person come forward. The crowd didn't understand what was happening, the disciples thought Jesus was being unreasonable, and Jairus was probably fuming. But one person did understand what Jesus meant by the question, and she knew she had no choice but to answer.

5:33 The woman told him what she had done—that she had been unclean and had come jostling through the crowd, that she had dared to touch him (a man) and did so in her unclean state, that she had hoped to remain undetected, and that she had been healed. To top it off, she had to say all of that in front of a crowd. No wonder the woman was frightened and trembling. According to Jewish law, a man who touched a menstruating woman became ceremonially unclean (Leviticus 15:19-28). This was true whether her bleeding was normal or, as in this woman's case, the result of illness. To protect themselves from such defilement, Jewish men carefully avoided touching, speaking to, or even looking at women. By contrast, Jesus proclaimed to hundreds of people that this "unclean" woman had touched him—and then he healed her. In Jesus' mind, this suffering woman was not to be overlooked. As God's creation, she deserved attention and respect.

5:34 Far from being angry, Jesus spoke to the woman in gentle words. She came for healing and received it. But she also received a relationship and peace with God himself because of her faith. Jesus explained that it was not his clothing that had healed her; rather, her faith in reaching out to the one person who could heal her had allowed that healing to take place. She not only had faith, but she had placed her faith in the right person.

The disciples, no doubt, received a profound lesson in the value of planting seeds in even the most unlikely places. The crowd, while seeming to be nothing more than a hindrance on the way, held one pocket of “good soil” in whom Jesus planted a seed.

5:35 The time taken by Jesus to seek out and speak to the woman was too long for the sick little girl at Jairus’s house. During the delay, she died. The message was delivered to Jairus, undoubtedly calling him to come home. The opportunity for healing had passed, so the Teacher would no longer be needed.

5:36 Death did not make Jesus too late, however; instead, it meant that Jesus would do an even mightier miracle. Jairus must have looked in despair at Jesus, but Jesus made no indication of changing his plans. He turned in the direction of Jairus’s house and told Jairus, “Don’t be afraid. Just trust me.” Jairus must have wondered what Jesus was going to do.

5:37 No doubt the curious crowd had every intention of staying with Jesus, having observed the healing of the diseased woman and hearing the words of the men from Jairus’s house. What would Jesus do next? Sensitive to Jairus’s pain, Jesus stopped the crowd. He planned to raise this little girl from the dead—a sign to his disciples of his true mission, of his power, and as a harbinger of his own resurrection. So he left the crowd and nine of his disciples behind, followed Jairus, and took along Peter and James and John. These three men became Jesus’ inner circle—his closest followers, the only ones to see this miracle, observe the Transfiguration (9:2), speak about the end times on the Mount of Olives (13:3), and know of Jesus’ agony in Gethsemane (14:33).

5:38 The five men finally reached Jairus’s house, and the commotion of loud weeping and wailing filled the air. Such cries were customary at a person’s death; lack of weeping and wailing was the ultimate disgrace and disrespect. Some people, usually women, made mourning a profession and were paid by the dead person’s family to weep over the body. Jairus, the leader of the synagogue, was an important person in the town. Thus, at the death of his only daughter, the town demonstrated their great love and respect for Jairus and his family by their weeping and wailing.

5:39 Jesus’ words, “The child isn’t dead; she is only asleep,” probably made

Jesus appear rather stupid—certainly anyone could distinguish death from sleep. Neither was she just in a coma from which Jesus would awaken her, as some have proposed. The girl was indeed dead, and everyone from the family to the paid mourners knew it. Jesus knew it too, but his words revealed to Jairus the hope beyond all hope of what Jesus was about to do. She was dead, but Jesus would bring her back to life, as if awakening her from sleep.

5:40 Jesus' words sounded ridiculous to the faithless crowd, so Jesus took charge in Jairus's house and used force to get rid of the jeering mourners. He had nothing further to say to them, and he had no use for their mourning or their scoffing.

Then Jesus took the girl's father and mother and the three disciples who had come (5:37) and went into an inner part of the house. Jesus had come to earth to conquer sin and death, and in this dramatic but quiet miracle, he would show his disciples that power. And two bereaved parents would receive back their beloved daughter.

5:41 Jesus did no incantations and spoke no magic words. He simply went to the girl's bedside and held her hand. The fact that Jesus touched the girl's hand would have amazed the proper synagogue leader and the disciples. Touching a dead body meant to become unclean. But Jesus had already dealt with a demon-possessed man and a woman with an incurable issue of blood and had touched and healed them. Touching the dead girl confirmed once again that compassion was more important than the letter of the law. Then Jesus spoke a simple command, "Get up, little girl!"

5:42 At Jesus' touch and command, the dead child awoke as if from sleep, immediately standing up and walking around. Just as the healings Jesus performed were always complete, so the rising of this young girl from the dead was complete. She didn't come back to life in the sick state in which she left; she came back well, whole, and able to walk around. The parents and the disciples were absolutely overwhelmed.

This was not the first time the disciples had witnessed the raising of a dead person. Luke 7:11-15 records Jesus raising a boy near the village of Nain. Yet, even in this instance, the disciples were amazed.

5:43 Jesus then gave two further commands. First, he commanded them (that is, the parents and the three disciples) not to tell anyone what had happened. Obviously the girl was not to be hidden for the remainder of her life; people would know she had recovered. Those in the unbelieving crowd would have to decide for themselves what had happened—no one would try to convince them. In fact, no one would even tell them what had happened.

Jesus told them to be quiet because he was concerned for his ministry. He did not want to be known as just a miracle worker; he wanted people to listen to his words that would heal their broken spiritual lives. Jesus' mission was to preach the Good News of the Kingdom of God. If crowds descended on him to see dead people raised, they would not be coming with the heart attitude needed to hear and respond to the gospel (see also 1:43-45). The disciples would talk about them and understand Jesus' miracles after his resurrection—then they could write them down for all of us to read and marvel as well.

Second, Jesus told them to give the girl something to eat. This is a good picture of Jesus' compassion and his understanding of human needs. The girl would be hungry and should be fed. This command also revealed to the parents and disciples that the girl was completely restored—she was well enough to eat.

THE PEOPLE OF NAZARETH REFUSE TO BELIEVE / 6:1-6 / 91

Following a section where great faith in Jesus is exhibited (5:21-43) is a story where there is great unbelief (6:1-6). Not only his own family, but Jesus' entire hometown, wondered what was wrong with their "son." Rather than offering welcome and expressing community pride, Jesus' townfolk were offended by his presence and his teaching. Familiarity bred contempt. As a result, their rejection limited his ministry.

6:1 After the previous incidents in Capernaum, where Jesus healed the bleeding woman and brought a dead girl back to life, Jesus returned with his disciples to Nazareth (1:9, 24), about twenty miles southwest of Capernaum.

Jesus had been born in Bethlehem, but raised in Nazareth (Matthew 2:19-23; Luke 2:39-40). This was not the first time he had spoken and taught in Nazareth; Luke 4:14-30 describes a visit when the people there had tried to kill him, but Jesus had walked away unharmed. Thus, this trip to Nazareth, recorded in Mark, is significant. The people of Nazareth were about to receive a second chance to believe; unfortunately, they again refused.

6:2 Synagogue services were conducted by lay people under the leadership of one or more synagogue "rulers" or leaders. For example, Jairus, the man whose daughter Jesus brought back to life, was a synagogue ruler (see 5:22). It was common for a visiting rabbi to be asked to speak in the local synagogue. Jesus, a well-known and popular speaker, had no trouble gaining an opportunity to teach in the synagogue on the Sabbath. As often happened when Jesus spoke, many who heard him were astonished (see also 1:22; 7:37; 10:26; 11:18) by his wisdom and his miracles.

6:3 Jesus was teaching effectively and wisely, but the people of his hometown saw him as only the carpenter whose family they also knew well. "He's no better than we are—he's just a common laborer," they said. Jesus was almost thirty years old before he began his public teaching ministry. For the years prior to that, he had been at home, learning the trade of carpentry from his father and probably helping to support himself and the family.

When the townspeople called him the son of Mary, it may have been a derogatory remark. While it may have been true that Joseph was already dead, in any normal situation Jesus would still have been called "son of Joseph." But Jesus was conceived prior to Joseph and Mary's wedding (while they were engaged, Matthew 1:18), and perhaps the townspeople had always regarded Jesus as not even being Joseph's son. Such was the stigma Mary continued to carry, even when Jesus was almost thirty years old. Apparently people saw Mary as less than honorable. Mary's obedience to God in carrying his blessed Son had changed the course of her life (Luke 1:26-38).

The listing of the brothers (probably some of whom had come earlier to try to take Jesus by force in 3:21, 31) indicates that the people knew the family well. Apparently they were all ordinary people and Jesus had experienced an ordinary childhood. Thus for Jesus to claim to be someone special (especially with what they considered his less than honorable beginnings) caused them to be deeply offended by his words. Thus they refused to believe in him.

Jesus' brother James later became a believer, a leader in the Jerusalem church (Acts 15:13; Galatians 2:9) and the author of the book of James. Judas may have been Jude, author of the book of Jude. Nothing else is known of the other brothers and sisters.

6:4 Jesus used a common proverb found in rabbinic literature. It is significant that Jesus applied the word prophet to himself. The word refers not to one who foretells future events (although that may be part of a prophet's ministry), but to one who speaks God's message. Jesus was not the first prophet to be rejected in his own hometown. Jeremiah experienced rejection in his hometown, even by members of his own family (Jeremiah 12:5-6). Jesus also experienced rejection by his relatives. His family thought he had gone crazy (3:21) and most of them didn't believe until after his resurrection (John 7:5; Acts 1:14).

6:5-6 That Jesus couldn't do any mighty miracles in Nazareth does not mean a restriction on his power. Rather, Jesus could have done greater miracles in Nazareth, but he chose not to because of the people's unbelief—unbelief which amazed him. Jesus' mighty works were meant to further the Kingdom of God, not to try to convince a group of stubborn people who had already thoroughly rejected him. To do miracles would be of no value because the people did not accept his message or believe that he was from God. Apparently even in Nazareth, a few sick people, humbled by their need, did come to Jesus for healing. And Jesus, always compassionate, healed them.

Jesus left his hometown and went out from village to village. He visited all the villages in the environs of Nazareth. This sentence gives us a transition from Jesus' leaving Nazareth to preparing his disciples to continue his itinerant ministry.

JESUS SENDS OUT THE TWELVE DISCIPLES / 6:7-13 / 93

When Jesus gave his disciples their first commission, he included directions about conduct and content. Even while Jesus was still with the disciples, he helped them to discover what it would be like to function without him. Mark already mentioned two other mission circuits that Jesus traveled (1:14, 39), indicating that at least some of the disciples had experience in itinerant ministry. For these Galilean towns, the disciples' visit may have provided another opportunity for exposure to the gospel.

6:7 The twelve disciples had been trained in both the teaching they should give and the reception they could expect. It was time for them to do their “student teaching.” Jesus could only travel so far and do so much. This sending out of six groups of disciples geographically multiplied his efforts (Jesus would later send out seventy-two others, also in pairs, see Luke 10:1-2). Jesus gave his disciples responsibility and authority to act as his representatives in both teaching and power. Jesus sent them out to witness. They also were given authority to cast out evil spirits. Matthew included the ability to cure disease and sickness (Matthew 10:1). This authority and power authenticated their message.

6:8-9 While these instructions—no food, no traveler's bag, no money—seem at first to be contrary to normal travel plans, they simply reveal the urgency of the task and its temporary nature. The disciples were sent out and then expected to return to Jesus with a full report. This was a training mission, and they were to leave immediately and travel light, taking along only minimal supplies. They were to depend on God and on the people to whom they were sent (6:10). Jesus allowed only the minimum: a walking stick and sandals. They were not even allowed to carry a bag because it was common for beggars to use such bags to solicit money. The disciples were not to be beggars, but were to live off the support of those who welcomed their message.

6:10 That a pair of disciples would be a guest in only one home meant that they had found a “worthy man” (Matthew 10:11)—a believer—and would either request or be invited to lodge in that person's home. By staying only in that home, they would not offend their hosts by even appearing to look for “better” lodging in a home that was more comfortable or socially prominent. To remain in one home would not be a burden for the host because the disciples' stay in each community would be short.

In a nutshell, Jesus instructed the disciples to depend on others while they went from town to town preaching the gospel. Their purpose was to blanket the area with Jesus' message, and by traveling light they could move quickly. Their dependence on others had other good effects: (1) It clearly showed that the Messiah had not come to offer wealth to his followers; (2) it forced the disciples to rely on God's power and not on their own provision; and (3) it involved the villagers and made them more eager to hear the message. Staying in homes was an excellent approach for the disciples' short-term mission; it was not intended, however, to be a permanent way of life for them. Yet the faith and simplicity that this way of life portrayed would serve them well in the future.

6:11 The disciples should also expect rejection, such as Jesus had faced in the Ten Towns (5:17) and in Nazareth (6:3). So Jesus further instructed that if any place did not welcome them (that is, take them in and offer hospitality) or listen to them, then they should shake off its dust from their feet as they left.

Shaking off dust that accumulated on one's sandals showed contempt for an area and its people, as well as the determination not to have any further involvement with them. Pious Jews shook dust from their feet after passing through Gentile cities or territory to show their separation from Gentile influences and practices. When the disciples shook the dust from their feet after leaving a Jewish town, it would be a vivid sign that they wished to remain separate from people who had rejected Jesus and his message.

Shaking off the dust of a place, Jesus said, would be a sign that the disciples had abandoned that village to its fate (see also 1:44). The act showed the people that the disciples had discharged their duty, had nothing further to say, and would leave the people to answer to God. By this statement, Jesus made it clear that the listeners were responsible for what they did with the gospel. The disciples were not to blame if the message was rejected, as long as they had faithfully and carefully presented it. Likewise, we are not responsible when others reject Christ's message of salvation, but we do have the responsibility to share the gospel clearly and faithfully.

6:12-13 The disciples went out as Jesus' representatives, continuing his message (1:14-15) and preaching that people should turn from their sins. The disciples not only brought the message of the gospel; they called for action in the form of repentance and belief. The gospel can only be life-changing if people allow it to change their lives. The change, for sinful humans, can begin only with turning from sin.

Jesus gave his disciples authority to cast out demons (3:15), as well as the power to heal the sick. Casting out demons extended Jesus' personal ministry, which was to confront Satan's power and destroy it. As the disciples went throughout Galilee, they would be announcing the arrival of the Kingdom of God through their preaching and healing.

Of all the Gospel writers, Mark alone included the words anointing them with olive oil in writing of the disciples' healing ministry. This "oil" was used often at that time as treatment (both internally and externally) for many illnesses. Medicines were few in these days, and olive oil had proven to have exceptional qualities.

HEROD KILLS JOHN THE BAPTIST / 6:14-29 / 95

The narrative about the disciples' preaching tour of Galilee continues at 6:30, interrupted with several verses telling the story of John the Baptist's death. John's imprisonment was mentioned in 1:14 when Jesus began his public ministry; 6:17-29 is a flashback. People were trying to explain Jesus' success. They were not ready to acknowledge him as the Son of God, but they were willing to call him a prophet. Some, like King Herod, were convinced that Jesus must be John the Baptist come back to life. Apparently, Herod was suffering pangs of guilt after ordering John's murder. He had gone along with his wife Herodias's scheme to take revenge on the irritating preacher by ordering him to be beheaded.

Told side by side, the success of the apostolic mission and the result of John's mission present a sobering lesson to those who obey God's calling: Sometimes discipleship means death.

6:14 The expanded ministry of the gospel by the disciples brought Jesus to the attention of King Herod Antipas, ruler over the territories of Galilee and Perea. John the Baptist had been arrested just prior to Jesus beginning his public ministry (1:14). The arrest marked the end of John's public ministry. He was imprisoned for some time prior to his death (see Matthew 11:2-6). At this point, the reader is to understand that John the Baptist had died at Herod's hands. (Mark will record the story in detail.)

The people, still trying to figure out where Jesus' miraculous powers came from, thought he was John the Baptist who had come back to life. Oddly enough, John had done no miracles; he had simply preached and prepared the way for Jesus. Among those who thought Jesus was John the Baptist was Herod himself (6:16). While Herod had succeeded in silencing John, he had not succeeded in silencing his own guilty conscience.

6:15 Others believed that Jesus was the ancient prophet Elijah, the great prophet who did not die but was taken to heaven in a chariot of fire (2 Kings 2:1-11). They applied the prophecy of Elijah's return in Malachi 4:5 to Jesus. (Later Jesus explained to his disciples that John had fulfilled Malachi's prophecy, see Mark 9:13.) Still others believed that Jesus was simply a prophet, someone in the tradition of Moses, Isaiah, or Jeremiah.

It was so difficult for the people to accept Jesus as the Son of God that they tried to come up with other solutions—most of which sound quite unbelievable to us. Very few found the correct answer, as Peter did (Luke 9:20). Many people today still cannot accept Jesus as the fully human yet fully divine Son of God, and they look for alternate explanations—a great prophet, a radical political leader, a self-deceived rabble-rouser. None of these explanations can account for Jesus' miracles or, especially, for his glorious resurrection; so these realities have to be rationalized. In the end, the attempts to explain away Jesus are far more difficult to believe than the truth.

6:16-17 Upon hearing about Jesus, Herod was certain that John, whom he had beheaded, had come back from the dead.

Mark explained how John's death came about. Herod, empowered by Rome over the region of Galilee, had simply sent soldiers to arrest and imprison John. The Jewish historian Josephus pinpointed this prison as Machaerus, a fortress (combination palace and prison) near the barren northeastern shore of the Dead Sea in the region of Moab. Herod did this as a favor to Herodias. She was Herod's brother Philip's wife. Herodias was the daughter of Aristobulus, another half brother. Thus Herodias was a half niece to both Philip and Herod (and they, in turn, were her half uncles). Herodias married her half uncle Philip and then divorced him to marry another half uncle, Herod. (Herod, meanwhile, had divorced his first wife.) Thus, in marrying, Herodias and Herod had committed adultery, as well as a type of incest. John the Baptist condemned Herod and Herodias for living immorally (6:18). Rebuking a tyrannical Roman official who could imprison and execute him was extremely dangerous, yet that is what John did.

6:18 John's denunciation of the marriage of Galilee's leader had been public as well as private. John had explained the obvious to Herod: It was against the law for Herod to be married to his brother's wife (not to mention that she was also his half niece). Leviticus 18:16 and 20:21 describe the laws that Herod was breaking. Herod was partly Jewish, and whether or not he cared about the Jewish law, he did care about a revolt against him by the Jews. John's public denunciation of the incest and adultery of Herod and Herodias was too much for them to bear, especially Herodias, whose anger turned to hatred.

6:19-20 Herodias was enraged. The phrase, in the imperfect tense, indicates that she never let up for one moment, but was waiting for her opportunity to have John killed in revenge. But Herod respected John, knowing that he was a good and holy man. So he protected John from Herodias's murderous intentions by locking him in prison. Perhaps he hoped that stopping John's public speaking would end the problem and quiet Herodias. Herod had little backbone. While he greatly respected John and liked to listen to him, he also kept John imprisoned for the sake of his evil wife and his incestuous and adulterous marriage. Herod was an evil man, so when he listened to John, he was disturbed.

6:21 That Herod had imprisoned John the Baptist was not enough for the angry Herodias. She continued to nurse her grudge against John for speaking publicly about her sins. Then on Herod Antipas's birthday, her chance finally came. Whenever we harbor guilt and hatred in our heart, Satan is busy creating opportunities for greater evil to happen. Herod gave a party for many notable men from governmental, military, and civil strata in Galilee. He hoped to entertain them, impress them, and win their respect and admiration by this elaborate party.

6:22-23 The daughter was a young woman in her middle teens. She performed a dance for Herod and his roomful of male (and probably drunken) dinner guests. She greatly pleased them all, so the king offered her anything she wanted. Herod continued to flaunt his power, desiring in this promise to show his ability to provide anything the girl might ask. Then he added that this gift could be up to half his kingdom. Herod and all his notables in the banquet hall knew that Herod had no kingdom to give. Herod's power came from Rome. Herod used a saying that revealed the scope of his offer but was not meant to be taken literally. But the young girl understood that she could ask for practically anything and receive it.

6:24-25 Any young woman might be prepared with a thousand possible suggestions to an offer such as Herod's, but the girl left the banquet hall to confer with her mother. Then she returned triumphantly with the gruesome request for the head of John the Baptist. Herodias wanted John killed and the gruesome proof of his death brought to the palace. Herod had no way out; John's death was sealed.

6:26-28 When the girl grandly gave her request to Herod in the hearing of all the important officials, Herod suddenly realized what he had done and was very sorry. Herod had made a promise (6:23). Such words were considered irrevocable. To break his oath would show his important guests that Herod was not a man of his word. So, out of regard for his reputation in front of the guests, Herod decided to show his power and authority by immediately fulfilling the girl's request. He sent an executioner to behead John and bring the grisly trophy back to the girl, who took it to her mother. Herodias had satisfied her lust for revenge.

Herod fulfilled his oath and saved face before his guests. But he had been shown up by his wife and was left with great fear over what he had done in killing a holy man. Herod's guilt could not be assuaged. Thus, when Jesus came upon the scene, he thought that John had come back to life (6:16).

6:29 John the Baptist apparently still had disciples (see Acts 19:1-5), even though many had left him to follow Jesus (John 1:35-37). When they heard that John had been beheaded, they came and buried him. They wanted to give their leader an honorable burial instead of having his body disposed of by the guards in the prison. Matthew added that after burying the body, "they told Jesus" (Matthew 14:12).

JESUS FEEDS FIVE THOUSAND / 6:30-44 / 96

The biographers of Jesus regarded the miraculous supply of food for a large crowd as a key event. Apart from the miracle of Jesus' resurrection, it is the only miracle recounted in all four Gospels. In Matthew and Mark, this miracle follows the account of Herod's tragic feast where John the Baptist was killed. The placement of the event creates a stark contrast between Herod's deadly orgy and the miraculous feast that Jesus provided for the multitude.

Like each of Jesus' miracles, the feeding of the five thousand demonstrated his control over creation, and it shows that God will provide when we are in need. Jesus was not transforming rocks into food, but multiplying bread and fish. He was doing instantly what he does constantly throughout nature. He was not breaking the "laws of nature," but was demonstrating that he was in control of these laws. Christ's power to feed a multitude, walk on water, and heal diseases all point to his identity as Lord of creation.

6:30 The word "apostle" means "one sent" as a messenger, authorized agent, or missionary. The word became an accepted title for Jesus' twelve disciples after his death and resurrection (Acts 1:25-26; Ephesians 2:20). Mark deliberately used the word because the apostles had completed their teaching mission (6:7-

13) and thus were official “sent ones.”

The pairs returned to Capernaum and reported to Jesus. This marked the first time the disciples had gone out on their own, so quite naturally, they were full of excitement upon their return. Jesus listened to their stories and answered their questions.

Perhaps it would be a great corrective for our furtive and sometimes foolish activities if we adopted the same practice of reporting our work to the Lord in prayer. We could ask him to sort out the wheat from the chaff, the important from the trivial. By so doing, we could seek his guidance for future activity.

6:31-32 Capernaum had never proven to be a place where Jesus and his disciples could find solitude. Indeed, so many people were coming and going that Jesus and his apostles didn’t even have time to eat. Jesus knew that his disciples were weary, so he kindly suggested that they all go away and rest. So they left by boat for a quieter spot. Luke tells us that they went to Bethsaida (Luke 9:10), probably landing at a solitary harbor apart from the city, or else they went on foot into the hills.

6:33 Popularity and recognition have their own pitfalls. The disciples, now almost as well known as Jesus after their preaching mission, were seen and recognized along with Jesus, and the crowds would not let them get away. Either the people somehow heard where the boat was headed, or perhaps the boat sailed not quite out of sight along the horizon so that the people could follow it. In any case, a crowd met them as they landed.

6:34 As they drew near to shore, no doubt the disciples realized that their time alone on the boat was all the rest time they would have. A vast crowd waited on the shore, some having walked for miles in order to be there when Jesus and the disciples arrived. This would provide another lesson for the disciples. Far from feeling impatience and frustration toward these needy people, Jesus had compassion on them. He knew these people were as pitiful as sheep without a shepherd. Sheep are easily scattered and lost; without a shepherd they are in grave danger. The people needed a true Shepherd who could teach them what they needed to know and keep them from straying from God. While Jesus had hoped to be alone with the disciples for a time of rest, he did not send away this needy crowd. He had compassion for the people and took it upon himself to meet their needs.

6:35-37 Jesus had been teaching the people until late in the afternoon (after

3:00 ^{P.M.}). Sunset was approaching, and the disciples wondered what Jesus planned to do with this crowd that had come far from their homes to be with them. The place where Jesus had been teaching was desolate, far from any town or village. The disciples thought Jesus would be wise to let the people go before it got dark in order for them to find food and lodging for the night. So they brought their suggestion to Jesus: “Send the crowds away.” No doubt, the disciples also hoped to soon get the rest they had anticipated when they had set out on this journey (6:31). Jesus’ answer both astounded and exasperated them: “You feed them.” The disciples summed up the situation and found it hopeless — “It would take a small fortune to buy food for all this crowd!” So what did Jesus mean, and why would he ask them to do something so obviously impossible?

6:38 In reply to their question about going and spending an extravagant amount of money on bread, Jesus told them first to check out their resources. John records that the five loaves (round barley cakes) and two fish they found were from the lunch of a young boy (John 6:9). Apparently, in their hurry, no one else in the crowd had thought to bring along food to eat, or they were unwilling to share it. The young boy offered his lunch to the disciples (specifically to Andrew, see John 6:8), but again the disciples could see only the impossibility of the situation.

6:39-40 Jesus did not answer the disciples, but set about organizing the people to sit down in groups. The men were probably separated from the women and children for the meal according to Jewish custom. So the people sat in groups of fifty or a hundred. In this wilderness, the Good Shepherd was about to feed his sheep (6:34).

6:41 Jesus, acting as the host of the soon-to-be banquet, took the five loaves and two fish, looked up to heaven, thanked God beforehand for the provision he was about to give, and then broke the loaves. As Jesus broke the loaves, the miracle occurred. The verbs in this verse are in different tenses in the Greek. The word breaking is in the aorist, implying an instantaneous act. The word giving is in the imperfect, implying a continuous act. Thus the miracle occurred in Jesus’ hands. He broke the bread and then kept on giving it to his disciples to then give to the people. The same thing happened with the fish. The disciples acted as waiters to the groups of hungry people seated on the grass, taking bread and fish, distributing it, and then returning to Jesus to get more. They continued to serve the crowd until everyone had had enough to eat (6:42).

The God who multiplied the bread was authenticating Jesus as his Son and portraying the Kingdom. Just as God provided manna to the Hebrews in the wilderness (Exodus 16), multiplied oil and meal for Elijah and the widow at Zarephath (1 Kings 17:7-16) and for Elisha (2 Kings 4:1-7), he was providing bread for the people on this day.

6:42-44 The five loaves and two fish multiplied so that they all ate as much as they wanted. Even the leftovers were more than they had begun with. The disciples picked up twelve baskets with the broken pieces of food. As if to cap off the record of this miracle, Mark added that five thousand men had eaten from those five loaves! If the readers weren't impressed already, now they should be astounded. The Greek word for men is andres meaning not "people," but "male individuals." Therefore, there were five thousand men in addition to the women and children. The total number of people Jesus fed could have been over ten thousand.

Jesus did what the disciples thought was impossible. He multiplied five loaves and two fish to feed over five thousand people. What he was originally given seemed insufficient, but in his hands it became more than enough. While we may feel that our contribution to Jesus is meager, he can use and multiply whatever we give him, whether it is talent, time, or treasure. When we give our resources to Jesus, they are multiplied.

JESUS WALKS ON WATER / 6:45-52 / 97

A long and stressful day was coming to a close. Jesus insisted that his disciples go on ahead in a boat while he dismissed the crowd. As people dispersed, Jesus went alone to pray. His time of silence and fellowship with his Father did not prevent his noticing the disciples struggling to make headway against the wind out on the lake. So Jesus ended his day (and began the next) by meeting the needs of his disciples as they floundered in the waves.

6:45 As soon as the crowd had been fed and the disciples had picked up the scraps, Jesus immediately got his disciples and the crowd moving. His sudden desire to dismiss the crowd and send the disciples off in their boat is explained in John's Gospel. Upon seeing the miracle of multiplied loaves and fish, the people "were ready to take [Jesus] by force and make him king," so Jesus "went higher into the hills alone" (John 6:15). Jesus' Kingdom would not be an earthly one, and he didn't want the enthusiasm of the crowd to deter him or his disciples from fulfilling their true mission. Before the crowd could become an unruly mob, Jesus made his disciples get back into the boat and return to Bethsaida while Jesus sent the people home.

6:46 Jesus then went up into the hills by himself to pray. During his ministry on earth, Jesus was in constant prayer with the Father—he may often have gone off alone to pray, so his desire to do so may not have surprised the disciples who left in the boat as instructed. Jesus had just left a crowd that wanted to make him their king. Popularity was a temptation in itself, for it could threaten to turn Jesus away from his mission—death on the cross to accomplish salvation. Jesus, in his humanity, may have continued to face the temptation to turn away from the difficult path and take the easier one. He constantly sought strength from God. Going into the wilderness, alone with the Father, helped Jesus focus on his task and gain strength for what he had to do.

6:47 The disciples had left sometime before sunset, so by the time evening came, they were well out in the lake. The disciples often fished during the night, so sailing out into the night was not unusual. However, a storm blew in (see Matthew 14:24; John 6:18). Once again (as in 4:35-39), Jesus had sent them out to sea, when they were already bone tired, right into a storm. At least previously Jesus had been in the boat with them. This time, he was alone on land, and the disciples were left to fend for themselves.

6:48-50 The disciples took down the sails and tried to keep control of the boat by strenuous rowing. For the entire night they fought the storm.

As Jesus prayed on the mountainside, he saw the disciples in serious trouble. Jesus came to them, walking on the water. While some might try to explain away this miracle by saying Jesus was simply on the shore, Mark clearly states that Jesus walked on the water. Not only that, but he had walked a great distance. John records that the disciples had gone three or four miles by the time Jesus came to them (John 6:19).

Much confusion surrounds the phrase, he started to go past them. While the text sounds like Jesus meant to walk on by and leave the disciples to their fate, obviously that was not the case because he did help them. Interpretations on the meaning of this phrase include: (1) Jesus “meant to pass beside” them as in providing a divine manifestation so to reveal to them his divine presence; (2) Jesus “was about to pass by” as he waited for the disciples to see him and call out to him for help; (3) the phrase was written from the disciples’ standpoint (from Peter’s eyewitness account) that, when they saw Jesus, it appeared to them that his intention was to “pass by them”; (4) the phrase means Jesus “intended to pass their way,” that is, to go to them, which is exactly what he did. When they all saw Jesus walking on the water, the disciples thought he was a ghost; so they screamed in terror. Once again, Jesus was doing the unexpected, the impossible, and they were terrified.

Jesus called out to the disciples over the storm, telling them not to be afraid. The literal reading for “I am here” is “I am”; it is the same as saying “the I AM is here” or “I, Yahweh, am here” (see Exodus 3:14; Isaiah 41:4; 43:10; 52:6). Jesus, the “I AM,” came with unexpected help and encouragement during the disciples’ time of desperate need.

6:51-52 Jesus then climbed into the boat with the disciples. Then, as had occurred once before when the disciples had been tossed about by a storm at sea, the wind stopped (see also 4:39). Jesus had revealed to them his complete mastery over nature.

The disciples had seen Jesus perform numerous healings, calm a raging sea, multiply food to feed over five thousand people, and walk to them on the water. Their responses to the last miracle had been fear and then amazement. While they had seen the miracles, they still didn’t understand them. They had seen the loaves multiplied, but they didn’t realize who Jesus was and what he could do. Mark explained that their hearts were hard. This was not merely misunderstanding; it was a hard-hearted refusal to believe (the word is used elsewhere only when describing unbelievers, see 3:5; 10:5). But why wouldn’t the disciples believe? Perhaps they simply couldn’t bring themselves to consider that this human being was actually God’s Son. Or maybe they thought that if and when the Messiah really did come, he wouldn’t choose them for followers. The disciples needed a good healthy dose of faith in order to be able to see and understand what their Master, the Messiah, so beautifully and amazingly continued to teach them.

JESUS HEALS ALL WHO TOUCH HIM / 6:53-56 / 98

Jesus had achieved celebrity status. Wherever he and his disciples showed up, crowds gathered to watch. The sick flocked for healing. Jesus healed all those who were brought to him. Some who benefited from Jesus’ healing touch went unchanged in other ways (Luke 17:11-19), but many were changed forever. Do you regard Jesus as an important, essential resource, yet still retain final control of your own decisions? Do you desire Jesus’ help and friendship, but still want to be lord of your own life?

6:55 The storm had blown the disciples off course, and they did not land at Bethsaida as planned (6:45). They arrived at Gennesaret, a small fertile plain located on the west side of the Sea of Galilee as well as the name of a small town there. Capernaum (from where they had sailed that morning, 6:32) sat at the northern edge of this plain. Jesus was well known in the region of Galilee, and his presence always created great excitement. Immediately upon getting out of the boat, people recognized Jesus, and a flurry of activity began. There still would be no rest for the weary. The news of Jesus' arrival spread like wildfire through the area. As Jesus moved through the region, people began carrying sick people to him so that he might heal them.

People may seek Jesus to learn valuable lessons from his life or to find relief from pain. But we miss Jesus' whole message if we look to him for help only in this life, rather than for his eternal plan for us. Only when we understand the real Jesus Christ can we appreciate how he can truly change our lives.

6:56 In a day when medicines and medical help were few and limited, sickness was rampant and constant. As Jesus walked through Galilee, people laid the sick in the market plazas. Perhaps the story had spread of the woman in Capernaum who had been healed by touching Jesus' cloak (5:27-29), for now the people begged to touch the fringe of his robe. No one missed out on Jesus' loving compassion—all who touched it were healed.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT INNER PURITY / 7:1-23 / 102

After the eye-opening demonstrations of Jesus' power in chapter 6, Mark provided a pause in the action by telling of another confrontation between Jesus and the Pharisees. Similar confrontations had already occurred (see chapters 2 and 3). Jesus' dramatic actions were met by determined resistance from groups that Mark identified as "Pharisees and teachers of religious law." Unable to overcome Jesus directly, their tactics shifted to the disciples. They were sure that the disciples were the weak point in Jesus' defenses.

7:1-2 Another delegation came from Jerusalem to investigate this new rabbi who was causing such a stir throughout the country. The Pharisees and teachers of religious law were ready to debate Jesus about the fact that his disciples did not follow all of the laws of the Pharisees' oral tradition. As these religious leaders scrutinized Jesus and his disciples, they noticed that some of Jesus' disciples failed to follow the usual Jewish ritual of hand washing before eating. This referred not to washing for cleanliness, but to a particular kind of washing that made a person "ceremonially clean" before eating.

7:3 Mark explained this "ritual of hand washing" for his Roman readers. The Pharisees did not eat until they had performed a ceremonial washing where water would be poured over their cupped hands. They did this so that they would not eat with "defiled" hands, for they believed that they then would become defiled. They scrupulously followed this law, thinking that this ceremony would cleanse them from any contact they might have had with anything considered unclean.

The origin of this ceremonial washing is seen in the laver of the Tabernacle, where the priests washed their hands and feet prior to performing their sacred duties (Exodus 30:17-21). That was part of God's law. But oral tradition extended this law to all Jews to be performed before formal prayers and then before eating. Thus, before each meal, devout Jews performed a short ceremony, washing their hands and arms in a specific way. But this was part of their ancient traditions, not a requirement of God's law.

Jesus discerned that the Pharisees' purpose was to keep up appearances, to demonstrate that they were not Gentiles, and to outdo the common people in priestly devotion. By their scrupulous observance of minute traditions and rituals, these religious leaders had completely lost their perspective on the reason the law of God had been given: to bring God's Kingdom to earth, to provide reconciliation between God and his people, and to bring peace.

7:4 Mark explained this Jewish ceremonial cleansing ritual a bit further for his Roman audience. The religious leaders were aware that in daily business they might unknowingly come into contact with a Gentile or an unclean Jew and thereby become defiled. If they were defiled, they would be unable to perform their religious duties. So they would not eat anything from the market before they had immersed their hands in water—another form of ceremonial washing. The devout leaders observed many traditions, including laws about how to wash their dishes. There were laws for everything; no wonder the common people didn't bother themselves with strictly following them. But the religious leaders kept all these laws because they believed their "cleanliness" equaled "godliness." In their minds, keeping these laws showed their devotion and service to God. But Jesus could not have disagreed more.

7:5 Picking up from 7:2, Mark continued the narrative. The religious leaders asked Jesus why his disciples did not follow the age-old customs, one of which was not eating without first performing the hand-washing ceremony. Their underlying question was, "If you are really a rabbi, as holy and righteous and versed in the law as we are, then you should know that we don't eat without first ceremonially washing our hands. That makes you no better than a common sinner, certainly not a rabbi whom all these people should be following!"

7:6-9 Jesus did not answer their spoken question, but their underlying one, by quoting the Scripture that they claimed to know so well. First, he called them hypocrites. A hypocrite is one who makes judgment from under a cover. The Pharisees pretended to be holy and close to God, thus judging all other people as sinners. But what they pretended on the outside was not true on the inside.

Jesus quoted from the prophet Isaiah. The Pharisees and teachers knew this Scripture. The prophet Isaiah criticized hypocrites (Isaiah 29:13), and Jesus applied Isaiah's words to these religious leaders. They might say all the right words and give lip service to God, but their hearts were far from him. Jesus attacked their true heart condition. The problem: They replace God's commands with their own man-made teachings and their own traditions. Their focus on minute rules of everyday life caused them to forget the scope of God's law and what it meant for the people. As leaders, they were especially culpable, for they should have been teaching the people about God. Instead, they looked down on the people as ignorant sinners and spent their time busily staying pure. Isaiah explained that their worship was a farce. They worshiped for appearances, not out of love for God.

7:10-12 Next, Jesus gave an example to illustrate how the tradition could be (and was being) used to negate God's law. Jesus first quoted Moses, an especially relevant choice because the religious leaders traced the oral law back to him (see Deuteronomy 4:14). Jesus chose an example about people's duty toward their parents. One of the Ten Commandments, Honor your father and mother (Exodus 20:12), states that people are to respect their parents in honor of who they are and what they have done. The commandment did not apply just to young children, but to anyone whose parents were living. Honor includes speaking respectfully and showing care and consideration.

The same law is written negatively in Exodus 21:17, Anyone who speaks evil of father or mother must be put to death (see also Leviticus 20:9). Speaking evil of one's parents is the opposite of honoring them. It means to speak ill of, to ridicule, to abuse verbally. The natural result of such behavior is that the person will not honor his parents for who they are, will not speak respectfully, and will certainly show no care or consideration to them. Such action carried a severe penalty.

The religious leaders knew Moses' words, but they found a way to completely sidestep God's command to honor parents. The words but you say demonstrated their opposition to what Moses had written (7:10). What Jesus described here was the practice of "Corban" (literally, "offering") where a person could dedicate something to God for his exclusive use by withdrawing it from profane or ordinary use by anyone else. People could dedicate money to God's Temple that otherwise would have gone to support their parents (based on Deuteronomy 23:21-23 and Numbers 30:1-16). Thus, a man could simply take the vow of Corban, saying that he had vowed to give to God what he could have given to his parents. He could still use his money any way he chose, but could use his Corban vow as an excuse to disregard his needy parents. Corban had become a religiously acceptable way to neglect one's parents. Although the action—dedicating money to God—seemed worthy and no doubt conferred prestige on the giver, these religious leaders were ignoring God's clear command to honor parents.

7:13 The Corban vow effectively put tradition above God's word. To be able to exempt oneself from one of God's commandments by taking a human vow meant that the Pharisees had attempted to break the law of God.

Jesus added that the Pharisees did many, many things like that. This was only one example of the premeditated selfishness of these religious leaders who set themselves above all the people and, in effect, destroyed the laws that they took so much pride in keeping. In his example, Jesus clarified to these hypocritical religious leaders that God's law, not oral tradition, should be the true authority over people's lives.

7:14-15 Jesus addressed the crowd and the disciples regarding the true nature of "defilement." The people had listened to Jesus' stinging accusation of the religious leaders; here Jesus called the crowd to listen . . . and try to understand, for he would make his final point and have the final say in this debate. The Pharisees thought that to eat with defiled hands meant to be defiled (7:5). Jesus explained that the Pharisees were wrong in thinking they were acceptable to God just because they were "clean" on the outside. He explained that defilement is not an external matter (keeping food laws, washing ceremonially, keeping Sabbath requirements), but an internal one.

7:17-19 (Verse 16 is not in the earliest manuscripts.) In private, the disciples (specifically Peter, Matthew 15:15) asked him what he meant. Jesus explained that what goes into a person cannot defile that person. Thus, to eat food with hands that may have touched a "defiled" person or article did not mean that a person was ingesting defilement. Logically, as Jesus explained, food goes in the mouth, passes through the stomach, and then goes out. It has no effect whatever on the moral condition of the heart. Sin in a person's heart is what defiles (see 7:14-15).

The Roman Christians, the primary audience of Mark's Gospel, may have been confused about the Jewish food laws and whether they had to follow them. These words, he showed that every kind of food is acceptable, clarified this issue for them (although it took the early church several years to fully understand; see Acts 10 and 15).

The bottom line: People are not pure because of adherence to ceremonial laws and rituals. We become pure on the inside as Christ renews our minds and transforms us into his image.

7:20-23 Defilement occurs because of sin. Sin begins in a person's heart—in the thought life—and what is in the heart comes out in words and actions. In Romans 6–8, Paul explained how this happens. Unless the Holy Spirit controls our sinful human nature, outbursts of the flesh will be prevalent. Evil thoughts begin within, in a person's heart. While most people work hard to keep their outward appearance attractive, what is in their hearts is even more important.

When people become Christians, God makes them different on the inside.

Jesus listed a catalog of twelve “evil thoughts” that begin in the heart. Six are evil individual actions; six are evil attitudes or principles. Notice that the evil attitudes, whether acted upon or not, are still considered sin.

Sexual immorality—Various kinds of extramarital sexual activity

Theft—Taking something that belongs to another

Murder—Taking the God-given life of another person

Adultery—A married person having sex with someone other than his or her spouse

Greed—Relentless urge to get more for oneself

Wickedness—Doing evil despite the good that has been received (malice)

Deceit—To trick or mislead by lying

Eagerness for lustful pleasure—Immoral behavior that is neither restrained nor concealed

Envy—Desire for something possessed by another

Slander—To destroy another’s good reputation

Pride—Making claims of superior intelligence or importance

Foolishness—Inability to discern between immorality and morality

All these vile things begin in a person’s heart. It is those evil actions and attitudes that cause defilement. Many of the words Jesus used could have described the Pharisees.

JESUS SENDS A DEMON OUT OF A GIRL / 7:24-30 / 103

Jesus’ actions never yielded to simple explanations. Those who thought they had him “figured out” were usually about to be stunned. His opponents tended to see the hurting people who came to Jesus as cases to be solved or examples of those who broke the law. Jesus treated them as valuable human beings, worthy of his attention. The presumption that Jesus was out to trample God’s law might have led Jesus’ opponents to expect him to quickly heal the daughter of this Gentile woman. But instead of adding this situation to his portfolio of unusual miracles performed, Jesus ignored the opportunity to make a statement; instead, he dealt with this woman as an individual whose own faith needed to be challenged and clarified.

7:24 Jesus traveled about thirty miles to the region of Tyre and then went to Sidon (7:31). These were port cities on the Mediterranean Sea north of Israel. Both cities had flourishing trade and were very wealthy. They were proud, historic Canaanite cities. In David’s day, Tyre was on friendly terms with Israel

(2 Samuel 5:11), but soon afterward the city became known for its wickedness. Its king even claimed to be God (Ezekiel 28:1ff.). Tyre rejoiced when Jerusalem was destroyed in 586 ^{B.C.} because without Israel's competition, Tyre's trade and profits would increase. Jesus and the disciples probably went to this Gentile territory thinking that they would be less well known and thus could obtain privacy and rest time. They went to someone's house (probably the home of a Jew who lived in that area) and did not want anyone to know they were there. But even in this Gentile territory, he couldn't keep his presence secret.

7:25-26 The word of Jesus' arrival had spread. One woman came to Jesus right away on behalf of her little girl who was possessed by an evil spirit. The woman fell at Jesus' feet and begged him to release her child from the demon's control. Mark added that this woman was a Gentile.

7:27 Jesus answered her in the language of a parable. Jesus used the word for dogs that referred to household pets. The simple parable meant that the children at the table are fed before the pets; it would not be right to take the children's food and throw it to the dogs. While it is true that in Jewish tradition Gentiles at times were referred to derogatorily as "dogs," that probably does not apply here. The Greek word used as a derogatory nickname applied to wild dogs or scavenger dogs, not household pets.

Jesus' ministry was first to his own family, the Jews. He would not take away from them to perform miracles for a Gentile. If that was what Jesus meant, we should realize that his words do not contradict the truth that God's message is for all types of people (Psalm 22:27; Isaiah 56:7; Matthew 28:19; Romans 15:9-12). Jesus was simply telling the woman that the Jews were to have the first opportunity to accept him as the Messiah because God wanted them to present the message of salvation to the rest of the world (see Genesis 12:3). Jesus may have wanted to test her faith, or he may have wanted to use the situation as another opportunity to teach that faith is available to all races and nationalities.

7:28 Unlike many of Jesus' Jewish listeners, this woman understood Jesus' parable. Her answer was wise, for she explained to Jesus, by extending his parable, that the children who love the pets often drop crumbs to them. Not all the Jews accepted Jesus, while some Gentiles chose to follow him. Why couldn't she have some of those "leftovers" that the Jews didn't "eat"? She adroitly pointed out that such "dogs" ate with (not after) the children. She did not ask for the entire meal, just for a few crumbs—or one crumb in particular—one miracle of healing for her daughter.

Ironically, many Jews would lose God's spiritual healing because they rejected Jesus, while many Gentiles, whom the Jews rejected, would find salvation because they recognized Jesus.

7:29-30 Jesus was delighted by the faith of the woman. He granted her request because of her humility and persistence. Her faith and understanding was in contrast to the misunderstanding of the disciples (6:52; 8:14-21). Her request had been made in faith that Jesus could perform the healing. His words had been meant to test her, and she had passed the test. She understood Christ's lordship and that, as a Gentile, she had no right to request mercy from Jesus. She also willingly accepted his conditions. On that basis, Jesus healed the woman's daughter. With his words, the demon left the little girl. This miracle showed that Jesus' power over demons is so great that he doesn't need to be present physically, or even to speak any word to the demon, in order to free someone. His power transcends any distance.

JESUS HEALS MANY PEOPLE / 7:31-37 / 104

The healing of the Gentile woman's daughter occurred during Jesus' northernmost travels. He concluded that mission by taking a long route back to Galilee. Then Jesus healed a deaf-mute.

Mark selected instances from Jesus' life to illustrate the many ways the Lord shows compassion for others. Mark seems to have made a connection between the deaf-mute here and the blind man in 8:22-26 with the deafness and blindness of the disciples described in 8:18. Jesus wants to open the ears and eyes of all who are deaf and blind so that they may receive the light of life.

7:31-32 The Ten Towns was a Gentile area, so this continues the emphasis of the previous miracle. Jesus had been in part of this region before (5:19-20). Mark alone recorded the miracle of the healing of this deaf and mute man. Apparently several of this man's friends brought him to Jesus; they had faith that Jesus could heal him. The key to Mark's recording of this miracle may be found in the Greek word translated speech impediment. That word is found only here and in the Greek Septuagint version of the Old Testament in Isaiah 35:6, where Isaiah wrote that one day "those who cannot speak will shout and sing." Mark saw the fulfillment of Isaiah's words in the healing ministry of Jesus.

7:33 Jesus wanted to heal this man, but again he wasn't looking for crowd acclaim in his healings. Thus, he took the man to a private place so they could be away from the crowd (see also 8:23). Jesus intended to deal with the man on a personal level—not use him as an advertisement of healing power.

Mark described this miracle in detail—apparently the disciples were with Jesus and the man. In this instance, Jesus put his fingers into the man's ears and then spit onto his own fingers and touched the man's tongue with the spittle. Jesus often used touch in his healings. In addition, spittle was commonly recognized in the ancient world as having healing properties. The man responded in faith and desire for healing.

7:34-35 Jesus looked upward to God (the source of his power) and sighed. The sigh was probably in sympathy for the suffering man. Whether Mark recorded these details to describe what always happened in healings or whether this was unusual, is uncertain. In any case, the healing took place. Jesus commanded that the man's ears and mouth be opened. Immediately upon Jesus' speaking the word, the deaf man could hear perfectly and speak plainly.

7:36-37 Even though the miracle had been done in private (7:33), its results were obvious to the waiting crowd. The man, formerly deaf and barely able to talk, suddenly could hear and speak. Jesus asked the people not to talk about this healing because he didn't want to be seen simply as a miracle worker. He didn't want the people to miss his real message. But the people simply could not keep quiet, and spread the news.

JESUS FEEDS FOUR THOUSAND / 8:1-10 / 105

Differences in detail distinguish this miracle from the feeding of the five thousand described in chapter 6. At that time, those fed were mostly Jews. This time, Jesus ministered to a mixed crowd of Jews and Gentiles in the predominantly Gentile region of the Ten Towns. Jesus also began with different quantities of bread and fish, and he did not require his disciples to admit their own inability to solve the problem.

Even in Israel, Jesus took the gospel to a mixed audience. Jesus' actions and message had a significant impact on large numbers of Gentiles right from the start. Mark had his readers in mind when he recorded these facts. Examples of Jesus' compassionate ministry to non-Jews would be very reassuring to Mark's primarily Roman audience.

8:1-3 Jesus was ministering in the region of the Ten Towns (7:31), where he had healed a deaf and mute man, causing his popularity to spread throughout the area. It comes as no surprise, then, that another great crowd had gathered. In this episode, the crowd had been following Jesus for three days, listening to his teaching and observing his miracles. Whatever supplies they had brought along were depleted, so most of them had nothing left to eat. Jesus was concerned about sending them away hungry. Although the disciples had seen Jesus feed five thousand people, they had no idea what Jesus would do in this situation.

8:4-5 As before, the crowd was in the wilderness (6:35), and the disciples asked the obvious question about how they were going to find enough food in such a place. Jesus had already found the resources in a previous remote place for an even larger crowd, and in this instance, when the disciples checked with the crowd, seven loaves were found. Yet the disciples were completely perplexed. Like the disciples, we often forget God's provision for us in the past.

8:6-9 Jesus took the seven loaves and gave thanks to God for the provision he was about to give. He broke apart the loaves and the disciples passed them out as before (6:41). The verbs could read, "Jesus kept on giving bread to the disciples and they kept on distributing it" to the crowd. A few small fish were found and after blessing them, Jesus ordered that these too should be distributed. As had happened before, each person in the crowd ate and was filled. The seven loaves and few fish multiplied so that even the scraps were more than they had begun with. As before, the Greek word used here for people is andres, meaning “male individuals.” Therefore, there were four thousand men; add to this number the women and children.

8:10 Once Jesus knew the people had eaten their fill and would not faint from hunger on their journey home (8:3), he sent them on their way. Jesus and the disciples once again got into a boat and sailed to the region of Dalmanutha. While there is no site identified as “Dalmanutha,” it may have been another name for Magdala or Magadan (Matthew 15:39), a town located on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee. This was Mary Magdalene’s hometown (Luke 8:2-3).

LEADERS DEMAND A MIRACULOUS SIGN / 8:11-13 / 106

Jesus had been able to escape the probing Pharisees for a while as he visited in Gentile areas (7:24–8:10). His last dealing with them had involved the issues of the law and ceremonial defilement, and Jesus had called the Pharisees hypocrites (7:6). But the Pharisees weren’t going to give up in their relentless attempts to discredit Jesus before the crowds. So they constantly demanded “proof”—even more than they had already seen.

We can anticipate similar tactics in our own efforts to communicate the gospel. We may be asked to “prove” the existence of God. Such approaches are rarely honest; they are attempts to derail our message. These demands for proof, like the ones Jesus heard, are usually smoke screens covering up a refusal to believe. Though he was constantly under attack, Jesus always received those who were genuine seekers.

8:11 Upon Jesus’ return to Jewish territory, the Pharisees came to argue with him. They demanded a miraculous sign from heaven—something beyond a mere miracle. A sign was used by God and his prophets to accomplish two purposes: (1) A sign showed trustworthiness or reliability—if a prophet said something would happen and it came to pass, it demonstrated that he was telling the truth from God. (2) A sign showed power—if a message was accompanied by a sign, it authenticated the power and authority of the prophet.

The Pharisees were asking for a sign to back up Jesus’ claims and miracles. Perhaps they regarded his other miracles merely as random occurrences. Using the principle from Deuteronomy 13:1-3 and 18:18-22, the Pharisees were trying to draw Jesus into a trap. If he could not produce a sign, they could accuse him of being a false prophet. They had already seen and heard about many miracles, but that was not enough for them.

8:12-13 Jesus' sigh was a groan from the depths of his spirit. The obstinate rejection by those who should have been most able and eager to recognize him deeply distressed Jesus. His rhetorical question reveals his amazement that this generation (represented by these stubborn religious leaders) would ask for a sign—they had already seen many miracles and heard incredible, life-changing teaching. But they chose to reject Jesus. He knew that he could have done any type of spectacular cosmic miracle and they would not believe in him for they had already chosen not to believe in him.

Jesus did not come to earth to convince people to come to him by performing wonders; he came inviting people to come to him in faith, and as a response to their faith, he performed great miracles. But for these self-righteous religious leaders there was little hope. After this encounter, Jesus left abruptly, got into the boat, and departed back toward the northeastern shore of the Sea of Galilee. This event marked the end of his public ministry in the region of Galilee.

Up to this point, Mark has conveyed the rejection of Jesus by his family and the religious leaders. At the same time, Mark has shown the inability of Jesus' closest followers to grasp his identity. With the two feeding miracles still fresh in their minds, the disciples failed to reach a conclusion about Jesus. The question Jesus asked the original disciples applies to us: "Don't you understand even yet?"

8:14-15 Jesus had left his confrontation with the Pharisees abruptly, and the disciples went along with him. Apparently, at some point out on the sea, they realized that they had forgotten to bring any food. As the disciples were worrying about bread, Jesus used the opportunity to teach of the danger of the yeast of the Pharisees and of Herod. Yeast is a key ingredient in bread, for it causes the dough to rise. "Yeast" in this passage symbolizes evil. Just as only a small amount of yeast is needed to make a batch of bread rise, so the evil teachings and hypocrisy of the religious and political leaders could permeate and contaminate the entire society. Jesus used yeast as an example of how a small amount of evil can affect a large group of people. The wrong teachings of the Pharisees were leading many people astray. Jesus warned his disciples to constantly beware of the contaminating evil of the religious leaders (see also 2 Corinthians 13:5; Galatians 5:9).

8:16 Jesus issued a warning, and the disciples quietly talked among themselves. They didn't understand the warning and interpreted Jesus' words in an odd manner. The phrase might also be translated, “But we have no bread at all.” In other words, “How can we be in danger of their yeast if we don’t even have any bread?” Their literal understanding missed Jesus’ point entirely.

8:17-18 Jesus was saddened that the Jewish religious leaders, the people who should have rejoiced at Jesus’ arrival, had completely rejected him. It angered him that these religious leaders had the power to spread their unbelief throughout the nation. Jesus’ disciples had not escaped the contamination, for even they consistently failed to realize who Jesus was. Jesus’ rebuke in these verses is a series of questions focusing on the disciples’ hardheartedness, blindness and deafness to the truth, and lack of memory regarding all that they had seen and experienced with Jesus. Each question was a stinging rebuke to the disciples.

8:19-20 Jesus quizzed the disciples further over their lack of perception. Did they even remember the feeding of the five thousand? When he had broken only five loaves and fed more than five thousand, how many baskets full of leftovers did they collect? They remembered that there were twelve baskets full. Then Jesus asked them what had just occurred when he had broken seven loaves and fed more than four thousand. The disciples knew that there were seven large baskets full. Both times they had collected more leftovers than food that they had at the beginning.

8:21 The disciples correctly answered Jesus’ questions (8:19-20). In doing so, the conclusion should have been obvious. His question, “Don’t you understand even yet?” was more of an appeal. The disciples needed to understand, and after all they had seen and heard, they should have reached the obvious conclusion that Jesus was their Messiah, the Son of God.

JESUS RESTORES SIGHT TO A BLIND MAN / 8:22-26 / 108

The miraculous healing of the blind man from Bethsaida showed how Jesus responded with compassion to an obvious need, and gave an “acted-out parable” to demonstrate that insight seldom comes instantly. The disciples’ struggle to grasp Jesus’ identity parallels the blind man’s experience of receiving his sight.

The healing of this blind man and the healing of the deaf-mute (7:31-37) are recorded only in Mark’s Gospel. In both miracles, Jesus took the man away from the crowd before performing the miracle, used saliva, touched him, and did not publicize the event. This healing of the blind man is unique because it is the only record of Jesus healing in stages.

8:22 Jesus and the disciples went back across the sea to Bethsaida. The miracle recorded in this section was recorded only by Mark and is a fitting story following the account of the disciples' persistent spiritual blindness in 8:14-21. Upon Jesus' arrival, some people brought a blind man and they begged Jesus to touch him.

8:23 Jesus led this blind man out of the village. Some have placed a great deal of symbolic significance on Jesus' special handling of this miracle, but the Bible text simply does not tell us for sure. It is uncertain why Jesus put saliva on the man's eyes. We do know that spittle was commonly recognized in these times as having healing properties. The Bible text also doesn't explain why Jesus did the healing in two stages. It may have been because of the man's lack of faith or to show that spiritual sight may be incomplete but can be restored gradually and fully by faith. We do know that Jesus was not faltering in his power or daunted by the man's blindness. He healed the man fully.

8:24 In response to Jesus' touch and question, the man replied that he saw people (the disciples and the people who brought him), but they were blurry, like trees. If the man had been blind from birth, he had never seen trees, but he knew the shapes from having touched them. The incomplete healing was not an indication of Jesus' inability to heal thoroughly the first time. Instead, it was a vivid teaching for the disciples. Sight was there, but it was not complete. The disciples too had spiritual sight, but it was far from complete. Jesus had rebuked the disciples for their lack of sight, but there was hope for them, just as there would be complete healing for this man.

8:25-26 After Jesus touched the man a second time, the man's sight was completely restored. Jesus told the blind man to return home, but not to go into village or tell anyone about what had happened. Obviously, people were going to find out, but Jesus did not want an immediate outpouring of sick people coming to him for healing. This gave Jesus time to move away from the area before the miracle was discovered. Jesus always had compassion on people in need, but he never lost sight of the fact that his mission was first and foremost the healing of people's souls.

PETER SAYS JESUS IS THE MESSIAH / 8:27-30 / 109

The previous eight chapters recorded enough evidence to make Peter's confession, described here, reasonable. Further evidence in the Gospel reveals that Peter was saying more than he knew for sure. Matthew's parallel account of this incident includes Jesus' statement that Peter had made this declaration with the Holy Spirit's help. The final eight chapters of Mark's Gospel point to Jesus' death. From this point on, the journey leads to Jerusalem, and to Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection. The full impact of Peter's declaration would not be understood until Jesus' resurrection. With that event, the central spotlight of history came to rest on the person of Christ.

8:27 Caesarea Philippi was located about twenty-five miles north of Bethsaida. The city lay in the territory ruled by Philip (Herod Antipas's brother, mentioned in 6:17). The influence of Greek and Roman culture was everywhere. The city was primarily non-Jewish, known for its worship of Greek gods and its temples devoted to the ancient god Pan. When Philip became ruler, he rebuilt and renamed the city after Caesar Tiberius and himself. As Jesus and the disciples walked toward Caesarea Philippi, Jesus asked his disciples what they had heard from the people regarding his identity.

8:28 The disciples answered with the common view that Jesus was one of the great prophets come back to life. This belief may have stemmed from Deuteronomy 18:18, where God said he would raise up a prophet from among the people. (For the story of John the Baptist, see 1:1-11 and 6:14-29. For the story of Elijah, see 1 Kings 17-21 and 2 Kings 1-2.) All of these responses were incorrect, revealing that Jesus' true identity was still unrecognized by the people. They didn't see that Jesus was the Messiah, the Son of God.

8:29 Mark's Gospel thus far has built up to this very question: "Who do you say I am?" Jesus had just recently asked the disciples, "Don't you understand even yet?" (8:21). Here they have their "final exam," their opportunity to show their understanding of Jesus, apart from what the crowds and religious leaders thought. Just as the disciples had to come to a personal understanding, acknowledgment, and acceptance of Jesus, so each person must do the same.

Peter, often the one to speak up, declared what he had come to understand, "You are the Messiah." In his declaration, Peter revealed his belief in Jesus as the promised King and Deliverer. The problem now was to help these disciples understand the kind of king Jesus would be. Peter, and indeed all Israel, expected the Messiah to be a conqueror-liberator who would free the nation from Rome. Jesus would be a totally different kind of conqueror-liberator who would conquer sin and free people from its grasp.

to him by telling them three times that he would soon suffer and die and then be raised back to life (8:31; 9:31; 10:33-34).

8:30 Jesus told his disciples not to tell anyone that he was the Messiah because at this point they didn't fully understand the significance of Peter's confession—nor would anyone else. Everyone still expected the Messiah to come as a conquering king. But even though Jesus was the Messiah, he still had to suffer, be rejected by the leaders, be killed, and rise from the dead. When the disciples saw all this happen to Jesus, they would understand what the Messiah had come to do. Only then would they be equipped to share the gospel around the world.

JESUS PREDICTS HIS DEATH THE FIRST TIME / 8:31–9:1 / 110

Matthew, Mark, and Luke connect Peter's declaration that Jesus was the Messiah with the Lord's teaching about his crucifixion. This comes as no surprise. After all, messianic expectations were in the air. A strong consensus had developed about the political role the Messiah would play once he made himself known. The idea that the Messiah would "save people from their sins" had gotten lost among the list of social and political evils that the Christ would correct. Ultimately, the people wanted a Messiah who would crush the Roman occupation and raise Israel to prominence among the nations. Instead, Jesus explained that the Son of Man must die. Peter's response to Jesus clearly indicates how difficult it was for people to accept the idea of a suffering, dying Savior.

8:31 This was the turning point in Jesus' instruction to his disciples. From then on he began teaching clearly and specifically what they could expect, so that they would not be surprised when it happened. Contrary to what they thought, he would not yet be the conquering Messiah because he first had to suffer, be rejected, be killed, and rise again. But one day he would return in great glory to set up his eternal Kingdom.

Son of Man was Jesus' preferred designation for himself (see also 2:10, 28), and the name most often used other than "Jesus" in the New Testament. The title "Son of Man" emphasized Jesus as the vindicated, authoritative, and powerful agent of God.

Jesus' teaching that the Son of Man must suffer corresponds to Daniel's prophecies that God was in complete control of the plan for redemption (see Daniel 7:13-14; 9:26-27). The suffering also recalls Isaiah's prophecy of the Suffering Servant in Isaiah 53. The fact of his being rejected looks back to the rejected "stone" in Psalm 118:22. Jesus knew exactly from what quarter the rejection would come: the leaders, leading priests, and teachers of religious law. These three groups made up the Council, the Jewish supreme court that ultimately sentenced Jesus to be killed (14:53, 64). Despite all this talk of impending death, a light shone through Jesus' words, for he also mentioned that he would be raised from the dead.

8:32 This was too much for Peter. Jesus had spoken openly, but his news was most unwelcome. If Jesus was going to die, what did this mean for the disciples? If he was truly the Messiah, then what was all this talk about being killed? So Peter took Jesus aside and told him he shouldn't say things like that.

8:33 Peter often spoke for all the disciples. In singling Peter out for rebuke, Jesus may have been addressing all of them indirectly. Peter had just recognized Jesus as Messiah; here, however, he forsook God's perspective and evaluated the situation from a human one. Peter was speaking Satan's words, thus Jesus rebuked Peter with the words, "Get away from me, Satan!" Unknowingly, the disciples were trying to prevent Jesus from going to the cross and thus fulfilling his mission on earth. The disciples were motivated by love and admiration for Jesus; nevertheless, their job was not to guide and protect Jesus, but to follow him. Only after Jesus' death and resurrection would they fully understand why he had to die.

8:34 These words applied to the disciples and to all who want to follow Jesus. This statement offered special comfort to the Christians in Rome to whom Mark was writing, for they often faced persecution for their faith. Jesus invites every person to follow, but one who desires to follow him must have two attitudes: (1) a willingness to put aside selfish ambition, and (2) a willingness to take up his or her cross.

To put aside selfish ambition means to surrender immediate material gratification in order to discover and secure one's true self and God's interests. It is a willingness to let go of selfish desires and earthly security. This attitude turns self-centeredness to God-centeredness.

To shoulder one's cross was a vivid illustration of the humility and submission Jesus asked of his followers. When Jesus used this picture of his followers taking up their crosses to follow him, the disciples, the people, and the Romans (Mark's original audience) knew what he meant. Death on a cross was a form of execution used by Rome for dangerous criminals. A prisoner carried his own cross to the place of execution, signifying submission to Rome's power. Following Jesus, therefore, meant identifying with Jesus and his followers, facing social and political oppression and ostracism, and no turning back. For some, taking up the cross might indeed mean death. But Jesus' words meant that his followers had to be prepared to obey God's word and follow his will no matter what the consequences for the sake of the gospel (8:35). Soon after this, Jesus would take up his own cross.

The initial decision to follow Christ and be his disciple is a once-for-all act. From then on the believer is no longer his or her own; that person belongs to Christ. To follow Christ is also a moment-by-moment decision, requiring denial of self and taking up one's cross. Following Jesus doesn't mean walking behind him, but taking the same road of sacrifice and service that he took. The blessing for us is that we can fellowship with him along the way.

8:35-36 The Christian life is a paradox: to attempt to keep your life means only to lose it. A person who keeps his or her life in order to satisfy desires and goals apart from God ultimately loses life. Not only does that person lose the eternal life, he or she loses the fullness of life promised to those who believe. By contrast, those who willingly give up their lives for the sake of Christ and of the gospel actually find true life. To give up one's life for Christ's sake refers to a person refusing to renounce Christ, even if the punishment were death. To be willing to put personal desires and life itself into God's hands means to understand that nothing that we can gain on our own in our earthly lives can compare to what we gain with Christ. Jesus wants us to choose to follow him rather than to lead a life of sin and self-satisfaction. He wants us to stop trying to control our own destiny and to let him direct us. This makes good sense because, as the Creator, Christ knows better than we do what real life is about.

8:36-37 To reinforce his words in 8:35, Jesus asked his listeners a rhetorical question. What good would it be for a person to gain the whole world (that is, to have power or financial control over the entire world system of which Satan is the head) but to lose his or her soul (that is, to lose eternal life with God)? Every person will die, even those most powerful or most wealthy. If they have not taken care to "save" their lives for eternity with God, then they have gained nothing and have lost everything. A world of pleasure centered on possessions, position, or power is ultimately worthless. Whatever a person has on earth is only temporary; it cannot be exchanged for his or her soul.

8:38 Jesus constantly turned the world's perspective upside down with talk of first and last, keeping and giving up. Here he offered his listeners a choice. If they chose to be ashamed of Jesus, then Jesus would be ashamed of them at his Second Coming (they would be rejected from eternal life with him). By extension, those who were not ashamed of Jesus and his words, in spite of the adulterous and sinful culture surrounding them, would be accepted by Christ when he returns in glory. Many are fearless in business, battle, or sports but cower at potential ridicule. Speak up for your faith, for your convictions, and for Christ.

Jesus, the Son of Man, will judge when he comes with the holy angels. Jesus Christ has been given the authority to judge all the earth (Romans 14:9-11; Philippians 2:9-11). Although his judgment is already working in our lives, there is a future final judgment when Christ returns (see Matthew 25:31-46) to review and evaluate everyone's life. (See 1 Thessalonians 5:4-11 on how we are to live until Jesus returns and 2 Thessalonians 1:5-10 on how God will judge those who trouble us.) This judgment will not be confined to unbelievers; Christians too will be judged. Their eternal destiny is secure, but Jesus will review how they handled gifts, opportunities, and responsibilities in order to determine their rewards in the Kingdom. At the time of judgment, God will deliver the righteous and condemn the wicked. Rejecting Christ may help us escape shame for the time being, but it will guarantee an eternity of shame later.

9:1 When Jesus said some would not die before seeing the Kingdom of God arrive, he may have been referring

- to Peter, James, and John, who would witness the Transfiguration a few days later
- to all who would witness the Resurrection and Ascension
- to all who would take part in the spread of the church after Pentecost

Jesus' Transfiguration, which immediately follows (9:2-8), was a preview of that coming glory. In the Transfiguration, Peter, James, and John saw Jesus' glory, identity, and power as the Son of God (see 2 Peter 1:16-18). Thus, certain disciples were eyewitnesses to the power and glory of Christ's Kingdom. Jesus' point was that his listeners would not have to wait for another, future Messiah because the Kingdom was among them, and it would soon come in power.

JESUS IS TRANSFIGURED ON THE MOUNTAIN / 9:2-13 / 111

Jesus revealed some of his most unusual demonstrations of power and divinity to his disciples alone. He stood up in their partly swamped boat and took command of the wind and the waves. He walked on water. On this occasion, he allowed three of them to witness his appearance without some of the limitations of his humanity. After teaching them the rigors of self-denial, he gave them a reassuring glimpse of his glory.

9:2-3 Rarely did Mark give exact times in his narrative, so his definite six days later is significant. This reference probably alludes to Exodus 24:16, where it is recorded that Moses waited for six days before meeting the Lord on Mount Sinai. The words also tie into 9:1, where Jesus probably was referring to his coming Transfiguration.

Jesus singled out Peter, James, and John. These three disciples comprised the inner circle of the group of Twelve. They were among the first to hear Jesus' call (1:16-19), they headed the list of disciples (3:16), they were present at certain healings where others were excluded (5:37), and they were with Jesus as he prayed in Gethsemane (14:33). Seeing Jesus transfigured was an unforgettable experience for Peter (see 2 Peter 1:16). Jesus took these three disciples to the top of a mountain—either Mount Hermon or Mount Tabor. Mount Hermon is about twelve miles northeast of Caesarea Philippi (where Jesus had been in 8:27); Mount Tabor is in Galilee. A mountain was often associated with closeness to God and readiness to receive his words (see Exodus 24:12-18; 1 Kings 19:8-18).

The Transfiguration was a brief glimpse of Jesus' true glory, God's divine affirmation of everything Jesus had done and was about to do. The Transfiguration clearly revealed not only that the disciples were correct in believing Jesus to be the Messiah (8:29), but that their commitment was well placed and their eternity was secure. Jesus was truly the Messiah, the divine Son of God.

The Greek word translated [Jesus'] appearance changed is metamorphothe, from which we get our word "metamorphosis." The verb refers to an outward change that comes from within. It was not a change merely in appearance, but it was a complete change into another form. On earth Jesus appeared as a man, but at the Transfiguration, Jesus' body was transformed into the glorious radiance that he had before coming to earth (John 17:5; Philippians 2:6) and which he will have when he returns in glory (Revelation 1:14-15). The glory shone out from him and his clothes became dazzling white. The white was not of this earth; it was a white that no human had seen. The words, unique to Mark's Gospel, reflect an eyewitness report (probably Peter's). These were the radiant robes of God, clothing "white as snow" (Daniel 7:9).

9:4 Elijah and Moses were considered the two greatest prophets in the Old Testament. Moses represented the law, or the old covenant. He had written the Pentateuch and had predicted the coming of a great prophet (Deuteronomy 18:15-19). Elijah represented the prophets who had foretold the coming of the Messiah (Malachi 4:5-6). Moses' and Elijah's presence with Jesus confirmed Jesus' messianic mission to fulfill God's law and the words of God's prophets (Matthew 5:17). Their appearance also removed any thought that Jesus was a reincarnation of Elijah or Moses. He was not merely one of the prophets. As God's only Son, he far surpassed them in authority and power. Also, their ability to talk to Jesus supports the promise of the resurrection of all believers.

9:5-6 There is no indication that Peter was addressed, but he impetuously interrupted when he suggested making three shrines, one for each of them. Peter had forgotten (or was hoping to put aside) Jesus' words that suffering and death would come before glory. Peter saw the fulfillment of Christ's glory for a moment, and he wanted the experience to continue. Also, Peter mistakenly made all three men equal. He had missed Jesus' true identity as God himself. Peter called Jesus "Teacher," obviously missing what Jesus was showing them by his revealed glory. His words, "This is wonderful," revealed a further lack of understanding. He desired to prolong the experience, to keep Moses and Elijah there with them. But that was not the point of the experience nor the lesson to be learned by it. Peter had spoken impetuously, perhaps because the three disciples were all terribly afraid.

9:7 A cloud suddenly appeared and enveloped this group on the mountain. This was not a vapor cloud, but was, in fact, the glory of God (see also Exodus 13:21; 19:9; 1 Kings 8:10). God's voice came from the cloud, singling out Jesus from Moses and Elijah as the long-awaited Messiah who possessed divine authority. As he had done at Jesus' baptism, God was giving verbal approval of his Son (see 1:11). At that time, the message had been addressed to Jesus ("You are my beloved Son") and had benefited John the Baptist; here, the voice spoke to Peter and the other two disciples ("This is my beloved Son"). The voice then commanded Peter and the others to listen to Jesus and not to their own ideas and desires about what lay ahead.

9:8 Peter may have wanted to keep Jesus and Elijah and Moses there in glory on the mountainside, but his desire was wrong. The event was merely a glimpse of what was to come—no more. Thus, suddenly the glory came and went, and the prophets were gone. Jesus had been revealed as God’s glorious divine Son, but his mission on earth still had to be completed.

9:9 Jesus told Peter, James, and John not to tell anyone what they had seen, presumably not even the other disciples because they would not fully understand it until after he had risen from the dead. After the Resurrection, these three disciples would understand the Transfiguration and be able to correctly interpret and proclaim it. They would then realize that only through dying could Jesus show his power over death and his authority to be King of all. They knew that Jesus was the Messiah, but they had much more to learn about the significance of his death and resurrection.

9:10 The three disciples kept it to themselves, but they didn’t understand what Jesus meant by “rising from the dead.” They certainly believed in a future resurrection, but Jesus clearly was speaking of some other event, something that would happen to only him. The necessity of Jesus’ suffering and death was beyond their grasp.

9:11 The appearance of Elijah on the mountain caused a question in the disciples’ minds. Based on Malachi 4:5-6, the Jewish teachers believed that Elijah must return before the Messiah comes. Elijah had appeared on the mountain, but he had not come in person to prepare the people for the Messiah’s arrival (especially in the area of repentance). The disciples believed that Jesus was the Messiah, but they wondered where Elijah was.

9:12-13 Jesus answered that Elijah would come first and set everything in order. That the Messiah would suffer and be treated with utter contempt was written in Scripture (for example, Psalm 22:14, 16-17; Isaiah 53:1-12). Jesus explained that, in fact, Elijah had already come. Matthew explained that the disciples realized that Jesus meant John the Baptist (Matthew 17:13), who had taken on Elijah’s prophetic role—boldly confronting sin and pointing people to God.

As “Elijah” then, John the Baptist was badly mistreated. Elijah was severely persecuted by King Ahab and Queen Jezebel and fled for his life (1 Kings 19).

John the Baptist had been beheaded (6:14-29). All of this occurred as the Scriptures predicted.

JESUS HEALS A DEMON-POSSESSED BOY / 9:14-29 / 112

When they descended from the mountaintop of transfiguration to the flatland of common experience, the three disciples and Jesus found a scene of confusion. The other disciples had been asked to perform a miracle but had failed. This instance became a testing of faith, both for the child's father as well as for the disciples. Christ regards even our weak faith. After all, it is not the quantity of our faith that makes the greatest difference, but the quality of him in whom our faith rests.

9:14 Jesus, Peter, James, and John came down from the mountain and returned to the other nine disciples. A great crowd surrounded the disciples and some teachers of religious law in a heated argument. The nature of the argument is not stated, but perhaps the teachers were arguing with the disciples about their power and authority, or the power and authority of their Master, because the disciples had tried and failed to cast out a demon (9:17-18).

9:15-17 When Jesus unexpectedly arrived on the scene, the people ran to greet him. Usually the people were in awe of his teaching and miracles; here they were in awe at his very presence with them (see also 1:27; 5:20). Jesus asked, “What is all this arguing about?” The word for “arguing” means “disputing.” The answer came from a man in the crowd, the father of the demon-possessed boy. He explained that he had come looking for Jesus to heal his son who was possessed by an evil spirit, making him unable to utter any sound (and he could not hear, see 9:25). This was not just a case of deafness and muteness; it was the work of an evil spirit, as the man explained.

9:18 The symptoms described by the father sound much like an epileptic convulsion, but the destructive intent of the demon described in 9:22 reveals that this was more than mere epilepsy. Having heard of Jesus' power to cast out demons, the father had come to Jesus, hoping for a cure for his son. Not being able to find Jesus, he had asked the disciples to cast out the evil spirit, an appropriate request since the disciples had been given this power and had recently returned from a preaching tour where they had demonstrated that power (6:7, 13). The disciples couldn't do it, however. This perplexed and upset them (Jesus explained why in 9:28-29). It also caused a commotion with the crowd and an argument with the Jewish leaders (9:14) who were seeking to discredit

Jesus.

9:19 Jesus cried out in exasperation (see 3:5; 8:12). His unusual words carry a biting rebuke. They parallel Moses' frustration as intercessor for God's people (Deuteronomy 32:5, 20) and portray God's frustration with his people (Numbers 14:11; Isaiah 63:8-10). The disciples had been given the authority to do the healing, but they had not yet learned how to appropriate God's power. The disciples were not singled out for criticism because Jesus did not rebuke them (9:28-29), but merely answered their question. Jesus would not leave the young boy in the power of the demon, so he told the father to bring the boy.

9:20-22 When the evil spirit saw Jesus, it knew that its rule over the boy would soon end. The demon responded with one last attack, throwing the boy into a violent convulsion. While it may seem odd that Jesus would ask how long the boy had been like this, Jesus asked it not for his own sake, but for the father's sake. By answering the question, the father was indicating just what a difficult and seemingly hopeless case this was. Jesus was truly the man's only hope. The boy had been possessed by the demon since he was very small. That this was not merely epilepsy is revealed in the demon's destructive intent as it made the boy fall into the fire or into water, trying to kill him. The poor father had probably saved his son's life numerous times, constantly having to watch the boy in order to protect him. Beyond that he had been unable to do anything. So he came to Jesus and pled, "Do something if you can."

9:23 Jesus repeated the father's words and turned them around to put doubt in the right place. In a sense, Jesus was saying that while he could do anything, it would depend on the father's belief. Spiritual power comes only when a person turns from self to God in faith. This father had placed limits on God's power, but with belief, anything is possible. Jesus' words do not mean that we can automatically obtain anything we want if we just think positively. Jesus meant that anything is possible if we believe because nothing is too difficult for God, even when our experience seems to indicate otherwise. We are free to ask whatever we want, as long as we realize that God will answer according to his will (1 John 3:21-22; 5:14).

9:24 Contrary to the patterns of confusion and unbelief the disciples had displayed, this father modeled the faith required of true discipleship. The father immediately understood Jesus' meaning. He had not meant to doubt the Master. The father instantly replied, "I do believe," declaring his faith in Jesus power.

Then he added honestly and humbly, “Help me not to doubt!” At the feet of the Master, the man cried out with tears, confessing both his faith and its weakness.

9:25-27 Jesus tried to keep the miracle from becoming a circus; so when he saw the crowd growing, he quickly rebuked the evil spirit, commanding it to come out and never return. After crying out and convulsing him terribly, it came out, and the boy was like a corpse. After the terrible convulsion, probably prolonged by the angered demon, the child’s exhausted body went limp as the demon left him. In fact, he was so still and quiet that most of the people in the crowd thought he was dead. Jesus took the child by the hand and helped him to his feet. That he stood up indicates not only that the demon had left, but that Jesus had given strength back to the child’s body. As always, the cure was complete.

9:28-29 The disciples must have been very perplexed. They had cast out demons before (6:7, 13); why hadn’t this demon responded? Jesus pointed to their lack of faith. Perhaps the disciples had tried to drive out the demon with their own ability rather than God’s. If so, their hearts and minds were not in tune with God, so their words had no power. Their question revealed their error; they centered on themselves (“we”), not on Christ. Jesus explained that this kind can be cast out only by prayer, and the disciples had not depended on God’s power through prayer. God’s power must be requested and relied upon in each instance. This presents a strong message to our present-day church: Arguing among ourselves disables (9:14); prayer enables. The disciples had been debating and not praying.

Prayer is the key that unlocks and reveals faith. Effective prayer needs both an attitude of complete dependence and the action of asking. Prayer demonstrates complete reliance on God. Thus, there is no substitute for prayer, especially in situations that seem impossible. Often the disciples would face difficult situations that could be resolved only through prayer. Their humiliation made this a painful lesson to learn.

JESUS PREDICTS HIS DEATH THE SECOND TIME / 9:30-32 / 113

Jesus clearly warned his disciples that he would eventually die. His assurance that death would only hold him three days did not allay the disciples’ confusion.

9:30-31 Jesus and the disciples left that region, perhaps somewhere near Caesarea Philippi (see 8:27), and passed through Galilee, going toward Capernaum (9:33). Jesus had ended his public ministry and thus began his final journey toward Jerusalem. Jesus desired to avoid all publicity so that he would have time to focus on teaching the disciples. He needed to equip them to carry on the ministry when he returned to heaven and to prepare them for coming events so they would not be taken by surprise.

The disciples had persisted in their resistance to Jesus' predictions of his suffering and death. He had already told them that he would die (8:31), so this was the second time he clearly told the disciples that he would be betrayed and killed. Whereas Jesus had spoken before about being rejected, this time he added the element of betrayal. He again said that he would rise from the dead after three days. There was always the assurance of victory, although the disciples seemed to miss this point in their concern over Jesus' talk of death.

9:32 The disciples didn't understand why Jesus would keep talking about dying because they expected him to set up a political kingdom. They didn't know that Jesus' death and resurrection would make his spiritual Kingdom possible. If Jesus died, the kingdom as they imagined it could not come. But they were afraid to ask him what he meant.

Although this incident is included in the first three Gospels, each one recorded the exchange from a slightly different perspective. Though Mark does not record Jesus' comments about the humility of a little child, Jesus' use of the child as an example provided a clear rebuke to the petty arguments about status among his followers.

9:33-34 Jesus and the disciples arrived in Capernaum. Apparently the disciples had kept somewhat to themselves as they followed Jesus along the road, but Jesus knew they were having a heated discussion. They had been arguing about which of them was the greatest. Apparently Jesus already knew what the disciples had been discussing; for even though he asked the question, they didn't answer him. But he then gave them an unforgettable lesson in true greatness.

9:35 Clearly Jesus had his work cut out for him in teaching these disciples who would be responsible to carry on his mission. So he sat down in the house and called the disciples to sit at his feet. In a sentence, he taught the essence of true greatness, "Anyone who wants to be the first must take last place and be the servant of everyone else" (see 10:45). Greatness is determined by servanthood. The true leader willingly serves, as Jesus exemplified in his life and in his death.

Being a “servant” did not mean occupying a servile position; rather it meant having an attitude of life that freely attended to others’ needs without expecting or demanding anything in return. Seeking honor, respect, and the attention of others runs contrary to Jesus’ requirements for his servants. An attitude of service brings true greatness in God’s Kingdom.

9:36-37 When Jesus took a little child in his arms, the explanation of greatness was made even more distinct. Only Mark mentions Jesus taking the child in his arms. When we receive Jesus, we actually “enter” or are “received into” his Kingdom. The way into this Kingdom is to turn to God from sin in the same spirit of humility that a child exhibits when he shows simple trust in someone he loves. We must humbly recognize that Jesus already paid the price for our entrance into his Kingdom. Any greatness we might have comes only from humble service to our Savior and Lord.

The disciples had become so preoccupied with the organization of Jesus’ earthly kingdom that they had lost sight of its divine purpose. Instead of seeking a place of service, they were seeking positions of advantage. Jesus used a child to help his self-centered disciples get the point. They were to have servant attitudes, being not “childish” (arguing over petty issues), but “childlike,” with humble and sincere hearts.

In addition, Jesus taught the disciples to welcome children. This was a new approach in a society where children were usually treated as second-class citizens. Jesus equated the attitude of receiving children with a willingness to receive him. Hidden in this statement is a profound truth of Jesus’ identity: Anyone who welcomes me welcomes my Father who sent me. Jesus and God the Father are one.

THE DISCIPLES FORBID ANOTHER TO USE JESUS’ NAME / 9:38-41 / 116

Minor conflicts over leadership positions among the disciples also had their public aspect. In this case, the disciples displayed the tendency to become a closed group. They challenged the “credentials” of an outsider. But Jesus rebuked their attempt to be exclusive. We must welcome and encourage all who serve in the name of Christ. Having the same Lord covers a multitude of differences.

9:38 John, brother of James the son of Zebedee, one of the inner circle of three among the disciples, told Jesus of a recent event. They had seen a man casting out demons by using Jesus’ name and had told the man to stop because he was not one of the group, that is, not one of the chosen Twelve. The incident has special irony considering that this unknown man apparently had success driving out demons while the disciples, who had been given special power to do so, had recently failed (9:18).

9:39 The disciples had been incorrect to stop the man from exorcising demons in Jesus' name; and incidentally, they were also incorrect in their supposition that they alone should have a monopoly on Jesus' power. Jesus explained that no one would do such a miracle as exorcising a demon in Jesus' name and then turn around and publicly speak evil against Jesus. The man, whatever his motivation, had at least done a deed of mercy for a possessed person and had stood against Satan. When Jesus had been accused of casting out demons because he was in league with Satan, he had said that Satan would not work against himself (3:22-29). The man, therefore, was on Jesus' side.

9:40 Jesus explained to his disciples, "Anyone who is not against us is for us." By this statement, he was pointing out that neutrality toward him is not possible. His followers would not all resemble each other or belong to the same groups. People who are on Jesus' side have the common goal of building up the Kingdom of God, and they should not let their differences interfere with this goal.

9:41 Not only did the man who exorcised demons serve Christ's Kingdom in his stand against Satan, but even someone who offered a cup of water to a person because he belongs to the Messiah was also serving the Kingdom. Good treatment of Christ's representatives is important to God (9:37). The Twelve did indeed have a special calling, but God willingly uses all people and all gifts for furthering his Kingdom. There are no "trivial" or unimportant services to God.

JESUS WARNS AGAINST TEMPTATION / 9:42-50 / 117

This teaching ties closely to the two preceding ones. In 9:33-37, Jesus held up a child as an example of servanthood and a standard for judging our openness. In 9:38-41, Jesus confronted exclusions of others who name Christ as Lord. Failure in any of the cases above puts believers in danger of causing others to lose faith (9:42).

9:42 While even small acts of kindness to believers carry great rewards, so acts of misguidance toward believers carry great penalties. Little ones could mean children or anyone considered to be insignificant or weak in faith. To cause a child or someone weak in the faith to lose faith means to purposely put a stumbling block in the way to make him or her trip and fall. Jesus warned that anyone who turns someone away from him will receive severe punishment. A millstone was a heavy, flat stone used to grind grain. To have a millstone tied around one's neck and then be thrown into the sea meant certain death. Even the horror of such a death was minor compared to what this person would face in eternity.

9:43, 45, 47 The Greek word for to sin is the same one used in 9:42 translated "to lose faith." In this verse, it seems as though Jesus was adding even more condemnation to the disciples' ambition. While prideful ambition is bad, Jesus' statement here includes anything that might cause another person to stumble.

All who desire to follow Jesus must remove any stumbling blocks that cause sin. Jesus did not mean to literally cut off a part of the body; he meant that any relationship, practice, or activity that leads to sin should be stopped. As a person would submit to losing a diseased appendage (hand or foot) or a sense (eyes) in order to save his or her life, so believers should be just as willing to "cut off" any temptation, habit, or part of their nature that could lead them to hold onto this world and turn away from Christ. Just cutting off a limb that committed sin or gouging out an eye that looked lustfully would still not get rid of sin, for that begins in the heart and mind. Jesus was saying that people need to take drastic action to keep from stumbling.

The reason? Jesus explained that it would be better to have lost some worldly possession, attitude, or action than to keep it and be thrown into hell because of it. This is true, radical discipleship. While none of us will ever be completely sin-free until we get new bodies, what God wants is an attitude that renounces sin instead of one that holds on to sin. (Verses 44 and 46 are not included in the best manuscripts.)

9:48 Still describing "hell," Jesus spoke of a place, like the garbage dump in the valley outside of Jerusalem, where the worm never dies and the fire never goes out. With these strange words, taken from Isaiah 66:24, Jesus pictured the serious and eternal consequences of sin and the absolute destruction of God's enemies (see also Matthew 3:12; 5:30). Worms and fire represented both internal and external pain. Hell will be a place of unbearable and unending torment reserved for those who refuse to believe in Jesus Christ and the salvation and eternal life he offers.

9:49 This verse, exclusive to Mark, has received dozens of interpretations. The most probable are included here. Some have suggested that everyone refers to every person. Thus, the meaning would be that every person will be purified with fire somehow—either with the unquenchable fire of hell or with the painful but life-giving power of self-discipline for the sake of the Kingdom.

Another view is that everyone refers to believers who will be purified with the fire of trials in order to purify them. The fire that purified them probably referred to trials and persecutions that made them fit for service (see Matthew 5:10-12; 1 Corinthians 3:13; 1 Peter 1:7; 4:12). This third view is most probable in light of the following verse.

9:50 Jesus carried on his metaphor from 9:49. Salt can purify; it also symbolizes the disciples and the work they were called to do.

“Salt is good for seasoning,” Jesus said, for in the ancient world salt was both a condiment and a preservative for food. Jesus had said to the disciples, “You are the salt of the earth” (Matthew 5:13). They were to be life-producing agents in a dying world; they were to be preservatives in a world spoiled by sin. However, if salt loses its flavor, the flavor cannot be returned and it is of no value to anyone. Jesus stressed the responsibility of each disciple toward God. The disciples will be held accountable by God to maintain their “saltiness” (that is, their usefulness) by maintaining a close relationship with him. Finally, the disciples were told to have the qualities of salt. They must allow God’s purifying work to be done in them. They, in turn, would be purifying agents in the community and in the world. The result, then, would be peace with each other. If the disciples had the “salt” in themselves, then they would not be arguing about who would be the greatest in Christ’s Kingdom (9:34). They must not allow the salt within them to be made useless by their wrangling over position and concerns of this world. Instead, they must serve Christ; then they would be doing their duty in the world and be at peace with each other. This peace among the disciples would be of vital importance after Christ’s return to heaven (see 1 Thessalonians 5:13). The future of the gospel and of Christianity would be left in their hands.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE / 10:1-12 / 173

This chapter notes the geographic shift in Jesus' ministry from Galilee to Judea. The occasional travels to Jerusalem became a single-minded movement toward the Cross.

The religious leaders did not let up in their attempts to trap Jesus. This time they came with a question regarding divorce. The leaders defined this theological issue in all-male terms. Mark alone added the note that Jesus applied God's rules both to men and women. Jesus held men to a standard of conduct; he gave women dignity. He saw women not as property for keeping or disposal, but as full partners.

10:1 After a quiet time of teaching his disciples, Jesus continued his journey southward toward Jerusalem. They crossed into the area east of the Jordan River, arriving in the region of Perea. John the Baptist had ministered there, and crowds had come to Jesus from the region earlier (see 3:8). Jesus was already well known, and on his arrival there, crowds of people came to him, and he taught them.

10:2 The Pharisees hoped to trap Jesus by getting him to choose sides in a theological controversy and incriminate himself in the process. They came with a hot topic: "Should a man be allowed to divorce his wife?" If Jesus supported divorce, he would be upholding the Pharisees' procedures; they doubted that Jesus would do that. If Jesus chose sides in the controversy, some members of the crowd would dislike his position, for some may have used the law to their advantage to divorce their wives. Or, if he spoke against divorce altogether, he would appear to be speaking against Moses' law (which allowed divorce).

10:3 With these words, Jesus removed any possible condemnation of laxity about divorce or ignorance of God's law. Jesus turned the Pharisees from their wrangling about his possible answers and sent them directly to the Pentateuch (the books of Genesis through Deuteronomy). He asked, "What did Moses say about divorce?" From their answer in 10:4, the Pharisees thought Jesus was referring to Moses' writing in Deuteronomy 24:1-4; but Jesus' response reveals that he was referring to Moses' words in Genesis about the ideal state of creation and particularly of marriage.

10:4 In their answer, the Pharisees summarized the law recorded in Deuteronomy 24:1-4. Moses permitted divorce, recognizing its presence and giving instructions on how it should be carried out. Because sinful human nature made divorce inevitable, Moses instituted laws to help its victims. Under Jewish law, only a husband could initiate and carry out a divorce. The civil laws protected the women who, in that culture, were quite vulnerable when living alone. Because of Moses' law, a man could no longer just throw his wife out—he had to write an official letter of divorce so she could remarry and reclaim her dowry. This was a radical step toward civil rights, for it made a man think twice before sending his wife away. Moses' words gave protection to the wife and limited abuses of divorce.

10:5 In Moses' day, as well as in Jesus' day, the practice of marriage fell far short of God's intention. Jesus said that Moses gave this law only because of the people's hard-hearted wickedness; in other words, they were completely insensitive to God's will for marriage. Many refused to follow through with their marriages as God had intended, so God allowed divorce as a concession to their sinfulness. Divorce was not approved, but it was preferred to open adultery. But God wants married people to consider marriage to be permanent.

10:6-8 The Pharisees quoted Moses' writings in Deuteronomy; Jesus also quoted from Moses' writings (Genesis 1:27; 2:24), but he went back to Genesis, the beginning of creation, to God's ideal in creating male and female. God's plan was that in marriage the husband and wife are united into one, an intimate closeness that cannot be separated. The wife is not property to be disposed of, but an equally created person. Jesus was drawing a distinction: God's creation of marriage and his absolute command that it be a permanent union versus the human injunction written hundreds of years later tolerating divorce because of people's sinfulness.

10:9 The Pharisees saw divorce as a legal issue rather than a spiritual one, regarding marriage and divorce as transactions similar to buying and selling land (with women being treated as property). But Jesus condemned this attitude, clarifying God's original intention—that marriage bring oneness that no one should separate, especially not the husband by simply writing a "letter."

Jesus recognized Moses' law, but held up God's ideal for marriage and told his followers to live by that ideal. Jesus also was saying to the self-righteous Pharisees who had hoped to trick him with the question, "True followers of God will hold his ideals above any laws—and especially those laws written as a concession to hardheartedness and sin.”

10:10 Mark continued his theme of the disciples’ misunderstanding of Jesus’ teaching. Once they were again in privacy in the house, the disciples asked Jesus what he had meant in his answer to the Pharisees’ question. Matthew records their comment that the standard Jesus upheld was so impossible that it would be better for people not to get married than to get into the unbreakable covenant of marriage (Matthew 19:10).

10:11-12 Jesus had clearly explained that divorce dissolved a divinely formed union. These people were divorcing in order to get remarried. Here he explained that marriage after divorce is adultery. To say that a man could commit adultery against his wife went beyond Jewish teaching and elevated the status of the wife to a position of equality. Women were never meant to be mere property in a marriage relationship; God’s plan had always been a partnership of the two becoming “united into one” (10:8).

The rabbis’ interpretation of Moses’ law permitted remarriage after divorce, but Jesus said that was committing adultery. Matthew recorded the same words of Jesus but added that he gave one exception: “unless his wife has been unfaithful” (Matthew 19:9, see also Matthew 5:32). Scholars agree that Jesus’ words refer to both husband and wife; that is, the unfaithfulness of one could be grounds for divorce by the other, because Jesus then added, “And if a woman divorces her husband and remarries, she commits adultery.” These were earth-shaking words to Jewish ears. In Jewish society, only men had the right to divorce. Mark alone recorded these words, probably with his Roman audience in mind. They would not have been shocked, for in Roman society a woman could initiate a divorce.

God created marriage to be a sacred, permanent union and partnership between husband and wife. When both husband and wife enter this union with that understanding and commitment, they can provide security for each other, a stable home for their children, and strength to weather any of life’s storms or stresses.

There is a natural progression from Jesus’ teaching on the permanence of marriage to his insistence on bringing children to him for blessing. Jesus declared the value of children and his love for them by his actions. And he used their receptivity as a guideline for the kind of response required of anyone who would want to enter the Kingdom of God.

Jesus' words forcefully confront parents and all those in contact with children: Are we helping or hindering children from coming to Christ? Are we, ourselves, receiving the Kingdom of God with childlike trust?

10:13 It was customary for people to bring their children to a rabbi for a blessing. Thus, people were bringing children to Jesus so that he could touch them and bless them. The disciples, however, thought the children were unworthy of the Master's time. In the first century, Jewish households were patriarchal—men came first, women and children next. Considering their inability to have any quiet time together, the disciples may have viewed these parents and children as another intrusion and drain of time and energy. So they told the parents not to bother Jesus. Once again Mark emphasized that the disciples misunderstood both Jesus' compassion and his mission.

10:14-15 When Jesus saw his disciples rebuking the people for bringing their children, he was very displeased with their insensitivity. They thought children were a waste of time, but Jesus welcomed them. He, in turn, rebuked the disciples, giving them in a double command to let the children come and don't stop them. Jesus explained that little children have the kind of faith and trust needed to enter the Kingdom of God. Anyone of any age who exhibits their kind of faith and trust is promised access to Jesus and to the Kingdom. Children represent the essence of discipleship, coming to Jesus in humility and receiving his blessing as a gift. Unless we can completely trust in God, we will never get into the Kingdom of God.

10:16 One by one, Jesus took each child into his arms, placed his hands on their heads (rather than just "touching" them as he had been asked, 10:13), and blessed them. Jesus took time with each child. Jesus did not rush through the process or pass it off as unimportant. It probably brought him great joy to spend time with little children whose faith and trust were so pure and simple. The receptiveness of these children was a great contrast to the stubbornness of the religious leaders, who let their education and sophistication stand in the way of the simple faith needed to believe in Jesus, and the dullness of the disciples, whose self-centeredness continued to blind them to Jesus' true mission.

JESUS SPEAKS TO THE RICH YOUNG MAN / 10:17-31 / 175

Jesus stopped in an unnamed town for several days. He was questioned about divorce and made a point to bless little children. But it was time to move on because he had an appointment with the cross. Jesus was on his way out of town when a young person flagged him down with a question. Apparently, this young man was trying his best but knew it wasn't enough. He lacked something and wanted Jesus to tell him what he had missed.

This episode with the rich young man contrasts sharply with the previous episode of Jesus' blessing of the children. The children are an example of faith and trust; they do nothing to gain eternal life, but they receive it because of their simple faith. The rich young man thought he could gain eternal life by what he did, only to find that he could not have it.

10:17 Jesus was continuing his journey toward Jerusalem when a man came running up to him. He called Jesus “Good Teacher” (not the more common “rabbi”) and eagerly asked a pressing question. This rich young man wanted to be sure of eternal life, so he asked what he could do to get it. He viewed eternal life as something that one achieves. While he had kept the commandments (or so he thought, 10:20), he still had some concern about his eternal destiny. He thought Jesus would have the answer.

10:18 Jesus did not at first address the man's question, but instead challenged him to think about God. Goodness is not measured by one's works; in fact, only God is truly good. Jesus wanted the man to turn his attention from himself and from Jesus (whom he thought was merely a “Good Teacher”) and think about God's absolute goodness. If he truly did so, he would conclude that he could do nothing to inherit eternal life. Jesus was also saying, “Do you really know the one to whom you are talking?” Because only God is truly good, the man, without knowing it, was calling Jesus “God.”

10:19 Having established the nature of true goodness (and recognizing that the man did not have a real understanding of God and how he gives eternal life), Jesus rehearsed six of the Ten Commandments—those dealing with people's relationships with one another. That the man kept these laws was the easily verifiable outward proof—an answer to what the man could do. Jesus' list showed that he was focusing on the man's actual lifestyle and not just his knowledge of these commandments. But Jesus would show the man that the law had far deeper meaning than just a list of rules to be kept.

10:20 The young man replied that he had obeyed all the commandments since his childhood. The man sincerely believed that he had not broken any commandments, so he wanted Jesus to guarantee his eternal life. Such is the condition of one who tries to attain eternal life or a relationship with God by his or her own merit. Even if it seems that the person has kept all the laws perfectly, he or she still needs assurance. Jesus would reveal to this man what he lacked.

10:21 Jesus lovingly broke through the young man's pride with a challenge that answered the question of what the man lacked: "Sell all you have and give the money to the poor." This challenge exposed the barrier that could keep this young man out of the Kingdom: his love of money. Money represented his pride of accomplishment and self-effort. Ironically, his attitude made him unable to keep the first commandment, one that Jesus did not quote: "Do not worship any other gods besides me" (Exodus 20:3; see also Matthew 22:36-40). The young man did not love God with his whole heart as he had presumed. In reality, the man's wealth was his god, his idol. If he could not give it up, he would be violating the first commandment.

The task of selling all his possessions would not, of itself, give the man eternal life. But such radical obedience would be the first step for this man to become a disciple. Jesus' words were a test of his faith and his willingness to obey. The man thought he needed to do more; Jesus explained that there was plenty more he could do, but not in order to obtain eternal life. Instead, he needed an attitude adjustment toward his wealth. Only then could he submit humbly to the lordship of Christ. By putting his treasure in heaven and "following" Jesus along the road of selflessness and service to others, the man could be assured of his eternal destiny.

10:22 This man's wealth made his life comfortable and gave him power and prestige. When Jesus told him to sell everything he owned, Jesus was touching the very basis of the man's security and identity. He could not meet the one requirement Jesus gave—to turn his whole heart and life over to God. The one thing he wanted, eternal life, was unattainable because he deemed the price too high. The man came to Jesus wondering what he could do; he left seeing what he was unable to do. No wonder he went sadly away. How tragic—to be possessed by possessions and miss the opportunity to be with Jesus.

10:23 Jesus looked at his disciples and taught them a lesson from this incident with the rich young man. Jesus explained that it is hard for rich people to get into the Kingdom of God (not impossible, but hard). This is true because the rich, with most of their basic physical needs met, often become self-reliant. When they feel empty, they can buy something new to dull the pain that was meant to drive them toward God. Their abundance and self-sufficiency become their deficiency. People who have everything on earth can still lack what is most important—eternal life. They have riches, but they don't have God's Kingdom.

This young man may have been very wealthy, but any of us who own anything could also be considered wealthy by someone else's standards. Whatever you own could become a barrier to entering the Kingdom if it comes between you and God.

10:24 Jesus' words amazed the disciples, and so he repeated them. As Jews, these disciples regarded wealth as a sign of God's blessing (see, for example, Job 1:10; 42:10; Psalm 128:18; Isaiah 3:10). Thus, they thought wealth came from God and would bring a person closer to God; it certainly did not pose an obstacle. The rich young man, with all his advantages, probably seemed like perfect "Kingdom material." Yet he went away empty-handed. What kind of Kingdom was this if those most blessed and advantaged would have difficulty entering? What did that mean for the disciples? It seemed to them that if the rich had a hard time, the disciples would never make it.

10:25 Jesus used a common Jewish proverb describing something impossible and absurd. With all their advantages and influence, rich people may find it difficult to have the attitude of humility, submission, and service required by Jesus. Thus Jesus explained that it would be easier to get a camel (the largest animal in Palestine) through the eye of a sewing needle than for a person who trusts in riches to get into the Kingdom of God.

10:26 The disciples were astounded almost to the point of exasperation. Again, they wondered what Jesus meant. If the rich—those who from the disciples' vantage point seemed to be first in line for salvation—cannot be saved, then who in the world can be saved?

10:27 In reality, it is not just the rich who have difficulty, for salvation is impossible for anyone from a human standpoint. No one can be saved by his or her wealth or achievements or talents. But the situation is not hopeless, for God had an entirely different plan: Everything is possible with God. No one is saved on merit; but all can be saved who humbly come to God to receive salvation.

10:28 Peter, once again acting as spokesman for the Twelve, contrasted the disciples with the rich young man. The disciples had given up everything to follow Jesus; they had done what the rich young man had been unwilling to do. Matthew recorded Peter's question to emphasize this fact: "What will we get out of it?” (Matthew 19:27). They had done the ultimate in self-denial and had followed Jesus’ call. Wouldn’t they then receive some great reward for having done so?

10:29-30 Peter and the other disciples had paid a high price—leaving their homes and jobs and secure futures—to follow Jesus. But Jesus reminded them that following him has its benefits as well as its sacrifices. Although they had to leave everything (10:28) to follow him, Jesus assured them that anyone who gave up something valuable for his sake would be repaid a hundred times over, although not necessarily in the same form. For example, someone may be rejected by his or her family for accepting Christ, but he or she will gain the larger family of believers with all the love it has to offer.

Along with these rewards, however, persecutions must be expected because the world hates God. Jesus emphasized persecution to point out to the disciples that they must not selfishly follow him only for the rewards. This fact was also important for Mark’s Roman readers who may have been facing persecution, or would soon be. The pressure of persecution did not mean that God wasn’t keeping his promises or that the disciples had been wrong in putting faith in him. Rather, during persecution, God still blesses all those who believe in him.

Here was the answer to the rich young ruler’s question about how to obtain eternal life (10:17). Jesus explained that by giving up anything that hinders following him, each person can have eternal life. For each person the sacrifice may be different, though no less difficult. We may have little or much, but are we willing to give it all up in order to have eternal life?

10:31 In the world to come, the values of this world will be reversed. Those who have desired to be Christ’s disciples and have humbly served others are most qualified to be great in heaven. Rewards in heaven are given not on the basis of merit or “time served” or other earthly standards. What matters in heaven is one’s commitment to Christ.

JESUS PREDICTS HIS DEATH THE THIRD TIME / 10:32-34 / 177

As if to underscore his destination, Jesus once again spoke to the disciples about his impending death. He included the Resurrection in his prediction. This prediction was the most graphic, which made it memorable when it was finally understood weeks later after the Resurrection.

10:32 Jesus and the disciples continued toward Jerusalem. This is the first mention in Mark of their destination. Jesus had just spoken to them about facing persecution and had told them of his impending death twice before. Thus, the disciples were filled with dread that he so steadfastly headed toward Jerusalem. This was the third time Jesus told the disciples about his impending death (see also 8:31; 9:30-31). This time he gave much more detail about what was coming.

10:33-34 Jesus' death and resurrection should have come as no surprise to the disciples. Here Jesus clearly explained that he would be betrayed (someone who had loved him would turn on him) to the Jewish leaders who would hand him over to the Romans. Because Israel was occupied territory, they had to submit to Rome's authority in cases of capital punishment. They could punish lesser crimes, but only Rome could execute an offender. The Romans would show great contempt for their prisoner, mocking and beating him before killing him.

Jesus repeated that after three days he would rise again, but the disciples heard only his words about death. Because Jesus often spoke in parables, the disciples may have thought that his words on death and resurrection were another parable they weren't astute enough to understand. The Gospels include Jesus' predictions of his death and resurrection to show that these events were God's plan from the beginning and not accidents.

Jesus devoted much of his final time on earth to two objectives: to prepare the disciples for his own death and resurrection, and to prepare the disciples for life together without his physical presence. James and John's special request provides another view of the disciples' overall state of mind. They didn't understand what Jesus was saying; instead, they were convinced that great events were about to occur. They were jostling for position. Greatness, as defined and illustrated by Jesus' words and life, finds its clearest expression in service.

10:35-36 Two of Jesus' disciples, James and John (brothers who along with Peter made up the inner circle of disciples, 9:2) came to Jesus. They requested that Jesus promise to fulfill a favor. They may have misconstrued Jesus' promise that the twelve disciples would "sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matthew 19:28). Jesus was thinking about what he would face in Jerusalem and the death he knew awaited him there. Yet he showed remarkable patience with these two beloved disciples who came with a request. Jesus made no promises, but simply asked what they wanted him to do.

10:37 The disciples, like most Jews of that day, had the wrong idea of the Messiah's Kingdom as predicted by the Old Testament prophets. They thought Jesus would establish an earthly kingdom that would free Israel from Rome's oppression. As the disciples followed Jesus toward Jerusalem, they realized that something was about to happen; they certainly hoped Jesus would be inaugurating his Kingdom. James and John wanted to sit in places of honor next to Christ in his glory. In ancient royal courts, the persons chosen to sit at the right and left hands of the king were the most powerful people in the Kingdom. James and John were asking for the equivalent of those positions in Jesus' court. They understood that Jesus would have a Kingdom; they understood that Jesus would be glorified (they had seen the Transfiguration); and they approached him as loyal subjects to their king. However, they did not understand that Jesus' Kingdom is not of this world; it is not centered in palaces and thrones, but in the hearts and lives of his followers. None of the disciples understood this truth until after Jesus' resurrection.

10:38 Jesus responded to James and John that in making such a self-centered request, they did not know what they were asking. To request positions of highest honor meant also to request deep suffering, for they could not have one without the other. Thus, he asked first if they were able to drink from the bitter cup of sorrow that he would drink. The "cup" to which Jesus referred was the cup of suffering that he would have to drink in order to accomplish salvation for sinners. Then Jesus asked if they were able to be baptized with the baptism of suffering he would face. The reference to "baptism" picks up an Old Testament metaphor for a person being overwhelmed by suffering. The "cup" and the "baptism" refer to what Jesus would face on the cross. In both questions, Jesus was asking James and John if they were ready to suffer for the sake of the Kingdom.

10:39-40 James and John replied confidently to Jesus' question. Their answer may not have revealed bravado or pride as much as it showed their willingness to follow Jesus whatever the cost. They said they were willing to face any trial for Christ. Jesus replied that they would indeed be called upon to drink from Jesus' cup and be baptized with his baptism of suffering: James died as a martyr (Acts 12:2); John lived through many years of persecution before being forced to live the last years of his life in exile on the island of Patmos (Revelation 1:9).

Although these two disciples would face great suffering, that still would not mean that Jesus would grant their request for great honor. Jesus would not make that decision; instead, those places were prepared . . . for the ones he has chosen. God's omniscience is revealed in the statement that he already knew who would gain those places of great honor.

10:41-42 The ten other disciples were indignant, probably because all the disciples desired honor in the Kingdom. The disciples' attitudes degenerated into pure jealousy and rivalry. Jesus explained to them the difference between the kingdoms they saw in the world and God's Kingdom, which they had not yet experienced. The kingdoms of the world (an obvious example being the Roman Empire) have tyrants and high officials who lord it over people, exercising authority and demanding submission.

10:43-45 Jesus' Kingdom had already begun right there in that group of twelve disciples. But the Kingdom was not set up with some who could lord it over others. Instead, the greatest person would be the servant of all. A real leader has a servant's heart, willingly helping out others as needed. Servant leaders appreciate others' worth and realize that they're not above any job. They aren't jealous about someone else's gifts, but gladly fulfill their duties. The disciples could not mistake Jesus' explanation that they were to serve sacrificially. Only with such an attitude would the disciples be able to carry out the mission of sharing the gospel across the world. Jesus was their perfect example of a servant leader because he came here not to be served but to serve others, and to give [his] life as a ransom for many. Jesus' mission was to serve—ultimately by giving his life in order to save sinful humanity. His life wasn't "taken"; he "gave" it, offered it up as a sacrifice for people's sins. A ransom was the price paid to release a slave from bondage. Jesus paid a ransom for us, and the demanded price was his life. Jesus took our place; he died the death we deserved.

JESUS HEALS A BLIND BEGGAR / 10:46-52 / 179

The healing of Bartimaeus was the final event before the Passion Week. Chapter 9 focused on wrong perceptions of Jesus by the disciples and the crowds. Jesus responded, not to Bartimaeus's understanding of Jesus' lordship, but to the boldness of his faith. Bartimaeus believed, not because of the clarity of his sight, but as a response to what he heard. Blind Bartimaeus asked for mercy and received his sight.

10:46 Jesus and the disciples arrived in the city of Jericho. The Old Testament city of Jericho had been destroyed by the Israelites (Joshua 6:20). But during Herod the Great's rule over Palestine, he had rebuilt the city (about a mile south of the original city) as a site for his winter palace. Jericho was a popular and wealthy resort city, not far from the Jordan River, about eighteen miles northeast of Jerusalem. Jesus was on his way to Jerusalem (10:32), and after crossing over from Perea, he would naturally enter Jericho. Jesus passed through the city, accompanied by his disciples and a great crowd (probably made up of Jews also on their way to Jerusalem for the Passover). They came upon a blind beggar sitting by the roadside. Beggars often waited along the roads near cities, because that was where they were able to contact the most people.

10:47 The blind man could not see, but he heard that Jesus of Nazareth was at the head of the approaching crowd. Bartimaeus called Jesus Son of David because he, along with all Jews, knew that the Messiah would be a descendant of King David (see Isaiah 9:6-7; 11:1; Jeremiah 23:5-6). This blind beggar could see that Jesus was the long-awaited Messiah, while so many who witnessed Jesus' miracles were blind to his identity, refusing to open their eyes to the truth. Seeing with one's eyes doesn't guarantee seeing with the heart.

10:48 The crowd tried to get the man to be quiet. It was most natural for the people, even Jesus' disciples, to attempt to shield Jesus from being harassed by beggars. But this only caused Bartimaeus to shout louder in an attempt to gain Jesus' attention. And it worked.

10:49-50 Although Jesus was concerned about the coming events in Jerusalem, he demonstrated what he had just told the disciples about service (10:45) by stopping to care for the blind man. Blindness was considered a curse from God for sin (John 9:2), but Jesus refuted this idea when he told the people to call the man to him. Bartimaeus threw aside his coat, jumped up, and came to Jesus.

10:51-52 Obviously Jesus already knew what Bartimaeus wanted. Jesus' question was not to gain information, but to allow Bartimaeus to specify his need and, in the process, to declare his faith that Jesus could meet that need. "I want to see" is literally "I want to recover my sight." The blind man had at one time been able to see. The result of Bartimaeus's request was that he could see. His faith (evidenced in his persistence) had made him well. Bartimaeus then followed Jesus.

JESUS RIDES INTO JERUSALEM ON A DONKEY / 11:1-11 / 183

As in the other Gospels, the story slows now, from Jesus' entry into Jerusalem until his resurrection a week later. Until this point, the Gospels present a sampler of Jesus' life and ministry. But the closing chapters of each account present powerful details.

The crowd that accompanied the Lord into Jerusalem was made up of Jesus' followers and pilgrims on their way to Passover. Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead. The crowd joyfully escorted Jesus into Jerusalem, perhaps hoping that this would be the time when he would declare his political intentions and expel the Romans.

11:1-2 After passing through Jericho and healing the blind man (10:46), Jesus and the disciples drew near Jerusalem and came to the towns of Bethphage and Bethany. These two villages were about one mile apart, one and two miles respectively from the eastern wall of Jerusalem, and sat on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives. Bethany was the home of Jesus' dear friends Mary, Martha, and Lazarus; he often stayed there with his disciples (see John 11:1). He may have returned to their home each night after his visits to Jerusalem during the days of this final week. The Mount of Olives is a ridge about two and a half miles long on the other side of the Kidron Valley east of Jerusalem. The view from the top of this twenty-nine-hundred-foot ridge is spectacular—one can see the whole city. From this site, Jesus discussed the coming destruction of the city and Temple (13:1-4).

They were probably in Bethphage when Jesus sent disciples to the other village (Bethany) to get the colt and bring it back. The specification that this be a colt that has never been ridden is significant in light of the ancient rule that only animals that had not been used for ordinary purposes were appropriate for sacred purposes (Numbers 19:2; Deuteronomy 21:3; 1 Samuel 6:7).

This was Sunday of the week that Jesus would be crucified, and the great Passover festival was about to begin. Jews came to Jerusalem from all over the Roman world during this week-long celebration to remember the great Exodus from Egypt (see Exodus 12:37-51). Many in the crowds had heard of or seen Jesus and were hoping he would come to the Temple (John 11:55-57).

11:3-6 Mark emphasized Jesus' supernatural knowledge and control in this incident. He knew the disciples would be asked why they were taking the colt.

Donkeys and their colts were valuable; this could be compared to borrowing someone's car. By this time Jesus was extremely well known. Everyone coming to Jerusalem for the Passover feast had heard of him, and Jesus had been a frequent visitor in Bethany. The Lord needs it and will return it soon was all the two disciples had to say, and the colt's owners (Luke 19:33) would gladly let them take the animal. The disciples went and found everything just exactly as Jesus had said.

11:7 The two disciples walked the colt back to Bethphage. The colt, having never been ridden (11:2), did not have a saddle, so the disciples threw their garments (coats) on its back so that Jesus could sit on it. The action of placing the garments on the donkey and Jesus riding it connotes majesty (see 2 Kings 9:13).

11:8 Crowds had already gathered on this stretch of road a mile outside of Jerusalem, going to the city for the Feast of Unleavened Bread and Passover. When Jesus mounted the colt and headed toward the city, they recognized that he was fulfilling the prophecy in Zechariah 9:9. All pilgrims walked the final ascent to Jerusalem; Jesus' riding was a clear sign. The crowd's spontaneous celebration honored Jesus. They spread their coats on the road for him to ride over, and cut leafy branches from the fields. These branches were used as part of the pilgrimage into Jerusalem.

11:9-10 The crowd chanted words from Psalm 118:25-26. "Long live the King" was the meaning behind their joyful shouts because they knew that Jesus was intentionally fulfilling prophecy. The expression, the coming kingdom of our ancestor David, recalls God's words in 2 Samuel 7:12-14. This was Jesus' announcement that he was indeed the long-awaited Messiah.

11:11 Jesus entered the great city and went to the Temple, entering its outer courts. Mark notes that Jesus looked around carefully at everything. This seems somewhat pointless until we read of Jesus' actions in the Temple the next day (11:15-17) and understand that Jesus had already cleared the Temple of these racketeers on an earlier Passover week (John 2:12-25), only to find here that they had returned. He and the disciples returned to Bethany for the night, perhaps to the home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus. It was not safe for Jesus to stay in the city. His only night in the city was the night of his arrest. Jesus' dear friends must have been a great comfort to him during this final week.

JESUS CLEARS THE TEMPLE AGAIN / 11:12-19 / 184

Jesus was patient with ignorance, but he confronted arrogance. He was in constant conflict with those who knew better but did wrong. Jesus once again faced the desecration of the Temple by the peddlers and parasites he had expelled during a previous visit had returned (see John 2:12-25). When a cleansed Temple isn't filled up with goodness, it is soon restocked with evil.

Mark bracketed this account of the Temple cleansing with the cursing of a fig tree. Jesus' cleansing of the Temple and cursing of the fig tree both demonstrate divine judgment on the apostasy of Israel.

11:12-14 This next morning was Monday. Jesus and the disciples got up and headed back into Jerusalem. They spent the nights in Bethany and went into Jerusalem during the day. Bethany was about two miles outside of Jerusalem.

Somewhere along the way, Jesus mentioned that he felt hungry. Fig trees were a popular source of inexpensive food in Israel. In March, the fig trees had small edible buds; in April came the large green leaves. Then in May the buds would fall off, replaced by the normal crop of figs. This incident occurred in April, and the green leaves should have indicated the presence of the edible buds which Jesus expected to find on the tree. However, this tree, though full of leaves, had no buds. The tree looked promising but offered no fruit.

Jesus did not curse this fig tree because he was angry at not getting any food from it. Instead, this was an acted-out parable intended to teach the disciples. They didn't know that Jesus was on his way to once again cleanse the Temple of the people who were desecrating it. By cursing the fig tree, Jesus was showing his anger at religion without substance. Jesus' harsh words to the fig tree could be applied to the nation of Israel and its beautiful Temple. Fruitful in appearance only, Israel was spiritually barren.

11:15-16 Jesus and the disciples arrived in Jerusalem and went straight to the Temple. He had some "cleansing" to do, and he began to drive out those who were buying and selling there.

People came to the Temple in Jerusalem to offer sacrifices. God had originally instructed the people to bring sacrifices from their own flocks (Deuteronomy 12:5-7). However, the religious leadership had set up markets on the Mount of Olives where such animals could be purchased. Some people did not bring their own animals and planned to buy one at the market. Others brought their own animals, but when the priests managed to find the animal unacceptable in some way (it was supposed to be an animal without defect, Leviticus 1:2-3), worshipers were forced to buy another. One such market was set up in the Court of the Gentiles, the huge outer court of the Temple. This was the only place Gentile converts to Judaism could worship, but the market filled their worship space with merchants. Because both those who bought and those who sold were going against God's commands regarding the sacrifices, Jesus drove them all out.

The money changers did big business during Passover. Those who came from foreign countries had to have their money changed into Jewish currency because this was the only money the merchants accepted and the only money accepted for payment of the Temple tax. The inflated exchange rate often enriched the money changers, and the exorbitant prices of animals made the merchants wealthy. Jesus became angry because God's house of worship had become a place of extortion and a barrier to Gentiles who wanted to worship.

11:17 Obviously Jesus' actions stunned the many people crowded into the Temple area. Jesus quoted from Isaiah 56:7 and explained God's purpose for the Temple: a place of prayer for all nations. These were important words in light of Jesus' concern for the Gentiles who had come to worship, and considering the Gentile audience to whom Mark was writing. God welcomed the Gentiles into his Temple to worship, but they were unable to do so because of the animals bellowing and merchants haggling.

Not only that, but all these merchants were no more honest than thieves who had turned the Temple into their den. This was a horrible desecration. No wonder Jesus was so angry.

11:18-19 The leading priests were mostly Sadducees (the wealthy, upper class, priestly party among the Jewish political groups); the teachers of religious law were usually Pharisees (legal experts). These two parties had great contempt for each other. That these two groups could agree on anything was highly out of the ordinary. But Jesus was becoming a real problem: undermining their authority in the Temple, performing great miracles of healing, and teaching the people in such an exciting manner. So these religious leaders began planning how to kill him. But Jesus was so popular with the crowds that they dared not make a move immediately. In short, they were afraid of him.

With the religious leaders plotting to kill him, Jerusalem would hardly be a safe place for Jesus to spend the night. So when evening came on that Monday night, Jesus and the disciples left the city and most likely returned to Bethany as before (because they passed the same fig tree the next morning, 11:13, 20).

JESUS SAYS THE DISCIPLES CAN PRAY FOR ANYTHING / 11:20-26 /

Mark split his account of Jesus cursing the fig tree into two parts: the curse itself as an acted-out parable about God's judgment of fruitless Israel, and the disciples' response. Our perspective tends to be different than that of the disciples. They accepted the cursing of the fig tree, but wondered how Jesus had caused the plant to wither. We take Jesus' power for granted but want to know why Jesus did it. The parallel between Jesus cursing the tree and cleansing the Temple reveals his motive. The power of faith and prayer can make us effective. For our prayers to be effective, we must have faith and we must forgive others.

11:20-21 The next morning, Tuesday, Jesus and his disciples passed by the same fig tree they had passed the day before (11:13-14). Jesus had cursed the tree, saying that no one would ever eat from it. By the next day, in the morning light, they could see that the tree had withered. This parable of judgment on spiritually dead Israel revealed a severe punishment. The early church later applied this parable to the total destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

11:22-23 Jesus did not explain why he cursed the fig tree, and we don't know whether the disciples understood Jesus' meaning. Yet his words to them could mean that despite the coming judgment on spiritual laxity in Israel, they would be safe if they had faith in God. Their faith should not rest in a kingdom they hoped Jesus would set up, in obeying the Jewish laws, or in their position as Jesus' disciples. Their faith should rest in God alone.

Jesus then taught them a lesson about answers to prayer. Jesus had cursed the fig tree; the fig tree had died; the disciples had expressed surprise. Then Jesus explained that they could ask anything of God and receive an answer. This mountain (referring to the Mount of Olives on which they stood) could be sent into the sea (the Dead Sea, that could be seen from the Mount). Jesus' point was that in their petitions to God they must believe and not doubt (that is, without wavering in their confidence in God). The kind of prayer Jesus meant was not the arbitrary wish to move a mountain; instead, he was referring to prayers that the disciples would need to endlessly pray as they faced mountains of opposition to their gospel message in the years to come. Their prayers for the advancement of God's Kingdom would always be answered positively—in God's timing.

11:24 This verse was not a guarantee that the disciples could get anything they wanted simply by asking Jesus and believing. God does not grant requests that violate his own nature or will. Jesus' statement was not a blank check. To be fulfilled, requests made to God in prayer must be in harmony with the principles of God's Kingdom. They must be made in Jesus' name (John 14:13-14). The stronger our faith, the more likely our prayers will be in union with Christ and in line with God's will; then God would be happy to grant them. God can accomplish anything, even if it seems humanly impossible.

11:25 Jesus gave another condition for answered prayer—this one referring to believers' relationships with others. He told the disciples that when they stood praying, if one of them held a grudge against someone, he ought to first forgive that person before praying. Why would this matter? Because all people are sinners before God. Those who have access to him have it only because of his mercy in forgiving their sins. Believers should not come to God asking for forgiveness or making requests, all the while refusing to forgive others. To do so would reveal that they have no appreciation for the mercy they have received. God will not listen to a person with such an attitude. God wants those who are forgiven to forgive others.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS CHALLENGE JESUS' AUTHORITY / 11:27-33 / 189

At this point, Mark began an extended section (11:27–12:34) that shows Jesus under constant attack yet emerging victorious over his opponents. With the one exception of the teacher who asked Jesus about the greatest commandment (12:28), Jesus' opponents tried desperately to catch him in a wrong answer. In each case, Jesus turned their question around with a question of his own. He showed that their motives were evil and their premises were wrong.

11:27-28 The teaching recorded in 11:22-26 transpired on Tuesday morning, as Jesus and the disciples were on their way back into Jerusalem. They returned to the Temple, where Jesus had thrown out the merchants and money changers the day before. The religious leaders were afraid to act on their plot to kill Jesus in the public surroundings of the Temple. He was safe in the Temple courts among the people with whom he was so popular.

But a delegation of religious leaders stopped Jesus to question him regarding his actions the day before. This group of leaders was already plotting to kill Jesus (11:18), but they couldn't figure out how to do it. His popularity was far too widespread and his miracle-working powers too well known. So they continued to try to trap him. They asked for his credentials and demanded that he tell them who gave him the authority to drive out the merchants from the Temple.

If Jesus were to answer that his authority came from God, which would be tantamount to saying he was the Messiah and the Son of God, they would accuse him of blasphemy (blasphemy carried the death penalty; see Leviticus 24:10-23). If Jesus were to say that his authority was his own, they could dismiss him as a fanatic and could trust that the crowds would soon return to those with true authority (themselves). But Jesus would not let himself be caught. Turning the question on them, he exposed their motives and avoided their trap.

11:29-30 To expose the leaders' real motives, Jesus countered their question with a question. Jesus' question seems totally unrelated to the situation at hand, but Jesus knew that the leaders' attitude about John the Baptist would reveal their true attitude toward him. In this question, Jesus implied that his authority came from the same source as John the Baptist's. So Jesus asked these religious leaders what they thought: Did John's authority to baptize come from heaven, or was it merely human authority?

11:31-33 The interchange recorded among these factions of the religious leaders revealed their true motives. They weren't interested in the truth; they didn't want an answer to their question so they could finally understand Jesus—they simply hoped to trap him. But they found themselves in a position of looking foolish in front of the crowd. If they answered that John's baptism had come from heaven, then they would incriminate themselves for not listening to John and believing his words. If they rejected John as having any divine authority, then they also were rejecting Jesus' authority and would be in danger of the crowd, since everyone thought that John was a prophet. If they accepted John's authority, they would then have to admit that Jesus also had divine authority. The leaders couldn't win, so they hoped to save face by refusing to take either alternative. Thus, Jesus was not obligated to answer their question. The religious leaders had already decided against Jesus, carrying on a long tradition of the leaders of Israel rejecting God's prophets. This is the point Jesus makes in the following parable (12:1-12).

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE EVIL FARMERS / 12:1-12 / 191

Jesus was presumably still in the Temple, where the Jewish leaders had come to question him. They had failed in their first attempt at tricking Jesus (11:27-33). In the parable of the wicked farmers, Jesus used a strong image of judgment from the Old Testament (Isaiah 5:1-7). Isaiah's ancient poem incriminated Jerusalem by name. The religious leaders immediately heard the charges leveled against them.

12:1 Jesus' stories, also called parables, always used something familiar to help people understand something new. This method of teaching compels listeners to discover truth for themselves. The moment Jesus spoke of a vineyard, the well-versed religious leaders surely recognized the correlation with Isaiah 5:1-7, where Isaiah described Israel as a vineyard. Isaiah's parable described judgment on Israel; Jesus' parable described judgment too. The situation pictured in this parable was by no means unusual. Galilee had many such estates with absentee owners who had hired tenant farmers to care for the fields and crops. The tenant farmers paid their "rent" by giving a portion of the crop to the landowner, who would send servants at harvesttime to collect it.

The main elements in this parable are (1) the man who planted the vineyard—God, (2) the vineyard—Israel, (3) the tenant farmers—the Jewish religious leaders, (4) the landowner's servants—the prophets and priests who remained faithful to God and preached to Israel, (5) the son—Jesus, and (6) the others to whom the vineyard was given—the Gentiles.

Israel, pictured as a vineyard, was the nation that God had cultivated to bring salvation to the world. The religious leaders not only frustrated their nation's purpose; they also killed those who were trying to fulfill it. They were so jealous and possessive that they ignored the welfare of the very people they were supposed to be bringing to God. By telling this story, Jesus exposed the religious leaders' plot to kill him, and he warned them that their sins would be punished.

12:2-5 When the grape harvest came, the absentee landowner sent servants to collect the rent—generally this amounted to a quarter to a half of the crop. All of these servants were either beaten up or killed. In Jesus' parable, the servants that were sent to the tenants refer to the prophets and priests whom God had sent over the years to the nation of Israel. Instead of listening to the prophets, the religious leadership had mistreated them and had stubbornly refused to listen.

12:6 With all the servants having been mistreated or killed, the landowner had only one messenger left—his beloved son. This son was sent to collect the fruit in hopes that the farmers would respect the son. This son refers to Jesus. This is the same description God used at Jesus' baptism (1:11) and at the Transfiguration (9:7). The son was sent to the stubborn and rebellious nation of Israel to win them back to God.

12:7-8 The tenants probably thought that the arrival of the son meant that his father (the landowner) had died. In Palestine at that time, "ownerless" or unclaimed land could be owned by whoever claimed it first. Thus they reasoned that if they murdered the son, they could get the estate for themselves.

12:9 What would the landowner do in this case? All agreed that the landowner would come, kill the tenants, and lease the vineyard to others who would care for it.

Over hundreds of years, Israel's kings and religious leaders had rejected God's prophets—beating, humiliating, and killing them. Most recently, John the Baptist had been rejected as a prophet by Israel's leaders (11:30-33). Next Jesus, the beloved Son of God, already rejected by the religious leaders, would be killed. Jesus explained that the Jewish leaders would be accountable for his death because in rejecting the messengers and the Son, they had rejected God himself.

God's judgment would be spiritual death and the transfer of the privileges of ownership to others, namely, the Gentiles (see Romans 11:25-32). In this parable Jesus spoke of the beginning of the Christian church among the Gentiles. God would not totally reject Israel; in ancient times he always preserved a remnant of faithful people.

12:10-11 Jesus quoted from Psalm 118:22-23. Like the son who was rejected and murdered by the tenant farmers, Jesus referred to himself as the stone rejected by the builders. The cornerstone is the most important stone in a building, used as the standard to make sure the other stones of the building are straight and level. Israel's leadership, like the builders looking for an appropriate cornerstone, would toss Jesus aside because he didn't seem to have the right qualifications. They wanted a political king, not a spiritual one. Yet God's plans will not be thwarted. One day that rejected stone will indeed become a "cornerstone," for Jesus will come as a king to inaugurate an unending Kingdom. And he had already begun a spiritual Kingdom as the cornerstone of a brand-new "building," the Christian church (Acts 4:11-12; 1 Peter 2:7). Jesus' life and teaching would be the church's foundation.

12:12 When the Jewish leaders realized that they were the wicked farmers in Jesus' parable, they wanted to arrest him. But the presence of all those people, hanging on Jesus' every word, caused these religious leaders to fear a riot if they were to forcibly take Jesus away. There was nothing to do but go away somewhere to gather new ideas and think of new questions to try to trap Jesus.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS QUESTION JESUS ABOUT PAYING TAXES / 12:13-17 / 193

The retreat mentioned in 12:12 was only temporary. Soon the attacks against Jesus resumed. The religious leaders sent a delegation with the purpose of trapping Jesus with the same kind of question he used on them earlier (11:29-33). They set up a conflict between the honor due to God and the honor due human authorities. By living under the authority and monetary system of the Romans, the people were obligated to follow through on their responsibilities under that human structure while still being accountable to God. Where they saw an impossible conflict, Jesus described parallel duties. They presented Jesus with a question that they were sure would trap him, but he snared them in their own trap.

12:13 The Jewish leaders would not be put off because they were so intent on killing Jesus. The Pharisees were a religious group opposed to the Roman occupation of Palestine. The supporters of Herod were a political party that supported the Herods and the policies instituted by Rome. These groups with diametrically opposed beliefs usually had nothing to do with each other. But these two groups found a common enemy in Jesus. Despite Jesus' solemn warning to the Jewish leaders in his previous parable, they didn't let up. More delegates arrived whose intent was to trap Jesus into saying something for which he could be arrested.

12:14 The men in this delegation, pretending to be honest men, flattered Jesus before asking him their trick question, hoping to catch him off guard. They asked, "Is it right to pay taxes to the Roman government or not?" Judea had been a Roman province since 63 B.C., but the Jews had fairly recently been forced to pay taxes or tribute to Caesar. This was a hot topic in Palestine. The Pharisees were against these taxes on religious grounds; the Herodians supported taxation on political grounds. The Jewish people hated to pay taxes to Rome because the money supported their oppressors and symbolized their subjection. This was a valid (and loaded) question, and the crowd around Jesus certainly waited expectantly for his answer. For Jesus, either a yes or a no could lead to trouble. If Jesus agreed that it was right to pay taxes to Caesar, the Pharisees would say he was opposed to God and the people would turn against him. If Jesus said the taxes should not be paid, the Herodians could hand him over to Herod on the charge of rebellion.

12:15-16 Jesus knew this was a trap. These leaders didn't care about Jesus' opinion; this was merely a trick question. But Jesus would answer. He asked someone to give him a Roman coin, probably a denarius, the usual day's wage for a laborer. It was a silver coin with Caesar's picture and title on it. The tax paid to Rome was paid in these coins.

12:17 Jesus said, "Give to Caesar what belongs to him"—that is, the coin bearing the emperor's image should be given to the emperor. In their question, the religious leaders used the word didomi, meaning "to give." Jesus responded with the word apodidomi, meaning "to pay a debt." In other words, having a coin meant being part of that country, so citizens should acknowledge the authority of Caesar and pay for the benefits accorded to them by his empire. The Jews may not have been happy about the situation, but God had placed Caesar on the throne and Judea under his rule. The Pharisees and Herodians tried to make it appear that it was incompatible to be a Jew and pay taxes to a pagan emperor who claimed to be divine. But Jesus explained that no such incompatibility existed because God was ultimately in control. They would lose much and gain little if they refused to pay Caesar's taxes (see Romans 13:1-7; 1 Timothy 2:1-6; 1 Peter 2:13-17).

However, paying the taxes did not have to mean submission to the divinity claimed by the emperor. The words on the coins were incorrect. Caesar had the right to claim their tax money, but he had no claim on their souls. The Jews had a responsibility to remember that everything that belongs to God must be given to God. While they lived in the Roman world, the Jews had to face the dual reality of subjection to Rome and responsibility to God. Jesus explained that they could do both if they kept their priorities straight. The tax would be paid as long as Rome held sway over Judea, but God has rights on people's souls. To Jesus, this was the crucial issue. Were they giving to God their lives? Were they loving God with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength (12:30)? These Jews (and especially the self-righteous Pharisees) claimed to be God's chosen people. But were they even "rendering" to God what truly belonged to him—themselves?

RELIGIOUS LEADERS QUESTION JESUS ABOUT THE RESURRECTION / 12:18-27 / 194

No sooner had one delegation withdrawn from Jesus (in amazement) than another appeared to take up the cause. The Sadducees did not believe in the resurrection. They thought they had a thorny problem from God's word that would make the very idea of life beyond death ludicrous. This was probably a standard challenge posed by the Sadducees to those who believed in the resurrection, such as the Pharisees.

12:18 The Sadducees were at odds theologically with the Pharisees (the other major group of Jewish leaders) because they honored only the Pentateuch—Genesis through Deuteronomy—as Scripture, and because they rejected most of the Pharisees' traditions, rules, and regulations. The Sadducees said there is no resurrection after death because they could find no mention of it in the Pentateuch. Apparently, the Pharisees had never been able to come up with a convincing argument from the Pentateuch for the resurrection, and the Sadducees thought they had trapped Jesus for sure. But Jesus was about to show them otherwise.

12:19 Obviously, since the Sadducees recognized only the books attributed to Moses (Genesis through Deuteronomy), their question came from Moses' writings. In the law, Moses had written that when a man died without a son, his unmarried brother (or nearest male relative) should marry the widow and produce children. The first son of this marriage was considered the heir of the dead man (Deuteronomy 25:5-6). The main purpose of the instruction was to produce an heir and guarantee that the family would not lose their land. The book of Ruth gives us an example of this law in operation (Ruth 3:1–4:12; see also Genesis 38:1-26). This law, called levirate marriage, protected the widow (in that culture widows usually had no means to support themselves) and allowed the family line to continue.

12:20-23 The Sadducees took their hypothetical situation to a rather ridiculous length as they tried to show the absurdity of believing in the resurrection. The book of Tobit (an apocryphal book not accepted by Protestants as part of the Old Testament canon but highly regarded by Jewish scholars at that time) includes the story of a woman who was married to seven men successively without ever having children. In Tobit the men are not brothers.

The woman in the situation they described had been married seven times to seven different men, all according to the law. The Sadducees reasoned that since this was in the law, there could not be a resurrection. When all eight of them were resurrected (the seven brothers and the woman), “Whose wife will she be?” The Sadducees erroneously assumed that if people were resurrected, it would be back to a continuation of life on earth—and that would be too confusing to be possible. They were incapable of understanding that God could both raise the dead and make new lives for his people, lives that would be different than what they had known on earth. The Sadducees had brought God down to their level. Because they could not conceive of a resurrection life, they decided that God couldn’t raise the dead. And Moses hadn’t written about it, so they considered the “case closed.”

12:24 Jesus wasted no time trying to deal with their hypothetical situation, but went directly to their underlying assumption that resurrection of the dead was impossible. Jesus clearly stated that they were wrong about the resurrection for two reasons: (1) They didn’t know the Scriptures (if they did, they would believe in the resurrection because it is taught in Scripture), and (2) they didn’t know the power of God (if they did, they would believe in the resurrection because God’s power makes it possible, even necessary). Ignorance on these two counts was inexcusable for these religious leaders.

12:25 Furthermore, Jesus said, when the dead rise (not “if” but when), they will not rise to an extension of their earthly lives. Instead, life in heaven will be different. Believers will be like the angels in heaven regarding marriage. Believers do not become angels, for angels were created by God for a special purpose. Angels do not marry or propagate; neither will glorified human beings. On earth where death reigns, marriage and childbearing are important, but bearing children will not be necessary in the resurrection life because people will be raised up to glorify God forever—there will be no more death. Those in heaven will no longer be governed by physical laws but will be “like the angels”; that is, believers will share the immortal nature of angels.

Jesus’ statement did not mean that people will not recognize their partners in heaven. Jesus was not dissolving the eternal aspect of marriage, doing away with sexual differences, or teaching that we will be asexual beings after death. We cannot tell very much about sex and marriage in heaven from this one statement by Jesus. He simply meant that we must not think of heaven as an extension of life as we now know it. Our relationships in this life are limited by time, death, and sin. We don’t know everything about our resurrection life, but Jesus affirmed that relationships will be different from what we are used to here and now. The same physical and natural rules won’t apply.

12:26-27 Because the Sadducees accepted only the Pentateuch as God's divine word, Jesus answered them from the book of Exodus (3:6). God would not have said, "I am the God of your ancestors" if he thought of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as dead (he would have said, "I was their God"). Thus, from God's perspective, they are alive. This evidence would have been acceptable in any rabbinic debate because it applied a grammatical argument: God's use of the present tense in speaking of his relationship to the great patriarchs who had been long dead by the time God spoke these words to Moses. God had a continuing relationship with these men because of the truth of the resurrection. Therefore, the Sadducees had made a serious error in their assumption about the resurrection.

Several defined groups had taken their best shot at Jesus. As each antagonist engaged him in debate, the others apparently looked on with mixed emotions. On one hand, they had a common purpose in destroying Jesus. On the other, each group wanted to claim supremacy by being the one who eliminated the troublemaker.

Matthew hints at the background tension (Matthew 22:34). He provides a brief account of this exchange between Jesus and the teacher. He reported only the original question and Jesus' response. Mark's version fills in the picture and adds a positive note to the conflict. Jesus' responses did not always antagonize his opponents. Often they expressed amazement (12:17) and even agreement (12:32). Jesus was looking for greater commitment from people, not that they merely knew the right answers. Jesus told this teacher that he had the truth but had not yet expressed his trust. Knowing God's requirement of wholehearted faith and surrendering ourselves to him are separate steps of entering into the Kingdom.

12:28 This discussion continued within the Temple courts. Jesus and the disciples were surrounded by a crowd of people, while various groups of religious leaders came and went with their questions. This time, however, a teacher (a Pharisee, Matthew 22:34-35) brought a sincere question: "Of all the commandments, which is the most important?"

The reference to "the commandments" focused on a popular debate about the "more important" and "less important" of the hundreds of laws the Jews had accumulated. The Pharisees had classified over six hundred laws and spent much time discussing which laws were weightier than others. As a Pharisee himself, the man had in mind the debates over the relative importance of ritual, ethical, moral, and ceremonial laws, as well as the positive versus negative laws. Jesus' definitive answer about the resurrection caused this man to hope he might also have the final answer about all these laws. He wouldn't be disappointed.

12:29-30 Among all the Gospel writers, only Mark recorded Jesus' quote from Deuteronomy 6:4, which is the first part of what the Jews know as the Shema (referring to the opening word of the sentence in Hebrew). The Shema is made up from Deuteronomy 6:4-9; 11:13-21; Numbers 15:37-41 and is the major creed of Judaism that was recited twice daily (morning and evening) by devout Jews. The teachers of the law could debate all they wanted, but Jesus brought them back to the basics by giving new life to the oft-repeated words, The Lord our God is the one and only Lord. What mattered were not laws and their relative importance; what mattered was a relationship with the one true God.

Jesus then answered the man's question by explaining what those words should mean in the daily lives of the Jews. Because they believed that there was one God (as opposed to other religions, such as the Romans with their pantheon of gods), they ought to love the one true God with every part of their being: "Love the Lord your God with all your heart, all your soul, all your mind, and all your strength" (see also Deuteronomy 6:5). A person's total being must be involved in loving God. To love God in this way is to fulfill completely all the commandments regarding one's "vertical" relationship.

12:31 In addition to the law quoted in 12:30, there is a second and equally important law. This law focuses on "horizontal" relationships—our dealings with fellow human beings. A person cannot maintain a good vertical relationship with God (loving God) without also caring for his or her neighbor. For this second law, Jesus quoted Leviticus 19:18: "Love your neighbor as yourself." The word "neighbor" refers to fellow human beings in general. The love a person has for himself or herself (in the sense of looking out for oneself, caring about best interests, etc.) should be continued, but it should also be directed toward others.

The Ten Commandments and all the other Old Testament laws are summarized in these two laws. By fulfilling these two commands to love God totally and love others as oneself, a person will keep all the other commands.

12:32-33 The man commended Jesus for his true and insightful answer. The man realized that after all the Pharisees' wrangling about the laws, the answer had been amazingly simple. The man reaffirmed the Shema (12:29) quoted from Deuteronomy, saying, “There is only one God.” He then added, “and no other,” echoing Deuteronomy 4:35 (see also Exodus 8:10; Isaiah 45:21). This man understood that the laws of love for God and love for neighbor were more important than all of the burnt offerings and sacrifices required in the law. In other words, love was more important than all the ritual and ceremonial laws. This man, one of the few among the Pharisees, was able to see that loving God with all one’s heart, understanding (substituted for “mind”), and strength, and to love one’s neighbors revealed a level of love and obedience that went far beyond the offering of sacrifices.

12:34 Jesus was pleased by the man’s response and told him that he was not far from the Kingdom of God. This man had caught the intent of God’s law as it is so often stressed in the Old Testament—that true obedience comes from the heart. Because the Old Testament commands lead to Christ, the man’s next step toward obtaining God’s Kingdom was faith in Jesus himself. This, however, was the most difficult step to take.

The questions ended, for no one dared to ask any more. But this did not end the opposition. The leaders continued in their plot to kill Jesus.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS CANNOT ANSWER JESUS’ QUESTION / 12:35-37 / 196

Jesus did not settle for a silent, seething truce with the religious leaders. He continued to teach. He demonstrated that God’s word had not been fully examined regarding the identity of the Messiah. His provocative questions brought delight to the crowds, thoughtfulness to the attentive, and continued anger to his enemies.

12:35 This was still Tuesday of Jesus’ final week, and he was teaching in the Temple. The Pharisees expected a Messiah (the Christ, the Anointed One), but they erroneously thought he would be only a human ruler who would reign on King David’s throne, deliver them from Gentile domination by establishing God’s rule on earth, and restore Israel’s greatness as in the days of David and Solomon. They knew that the Messiah would be a son (descendant) of David, but they did not understand that he would be more than a human descendant—he would be God in the flesh.

12:36 The Jews and early Christians knew the Old Testament was inspired by God, bearing his authority in its teachings. Jesus quoted Psalm 110:1 to show that David, speaking under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, understood the Messiah to be his Lord (that is, one who had authority over him), not just his descendant. The Messiah would be a human descendant of David, but he would also be God's divine Son. That he sits at God's right hand means the Messiah will sit in the place of highest honor and authority in God's coming Kingdom. In ancient royal courts, the right side of the king's throne was reserved for the person who could act in the king's place. The picture of enemies humbled beneath his feet describes the final conquering of sin and evil.

12:37 If the great King David himself called the coming Messiah his Lord in Psalm 110:1, then how could he be merely David's son (meaning "descendant") at the same time? David himself didn't think the Messiah would be just a descendant; instead, David, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, realized that the Messiah would be God in human form and would deserve due respect and honor.

JESUS WARNS AGAINST THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS / 12:38-40 / 197

This section offers a preview and provides a transition to the Olivet discourse in chapter 13. Here Jesus explained why such judgment will occur. As we read and think about Jesus' scathing evaluation of the teachers of religious law, we ought to keep our own behavior in mind. Some of the religious leaders liked the show. They were doing nothing more than playacting, pretending to be religious and righteous. Jesus confronted their lack of heartfelt obedience. What would he say about ours?

12:38-39 This denunciation of the religious leaders (specifically the teachers of religious law) probably occurred right in the Temple and was spoken to the surrounding crowd that had been "listening to him with great interest" (12:37). Matthew has an entire chapter of such denunciations—seven "woes" to the teachers of religious law and Pharisees whom Jesus unhesitatingly called "hypocrites" (Matthew 23). Mark recorded a shortened version, signaling Jesus' final break with the religious leaders.

Having silenced the questioning of the religious leaders, Jesus turned to the crowd and told them to beware of these men. While they had education and authority, Jesus denounced their conduct. Their actions revealed their desire for attention and honor. They had lost sight of their priority as teachers of religious law and were enjoying their position merely because of the "perks" it offered. Jesus condemned this attitude.

12:40 Not only did the teachers walk around expecting perks and honor, they also actively abused their position. Because they received no pay, they depended on the hospitality of devout Jews. It was considered an act of piety for people to help these teachers. That they cheat widows out of their property was a vivid picture of these religious men using their position to defraud the gullible. Some people would even go so far as to place all their finances in the teacher's control (especially widows who trusted them). As the nation's lawyers, these men were often employed in handling the money a widow received from her father's dowry. Some abused their trusted positions by unethically obtaining the dowry for the Temple and then keeping it themselves. They were in a position to exploit people, cheating the poor out of everything they had and taking advantage of the rich. How could they deserve anything but punishment!

A POOR WIDOW GIVES ALL SHE HAS / 12:41-44 / 200

Almost unheard in the clash of ideas and the noisy crowd, the ring of the widow's small coins became an eloquent example of truth. Her act sharply contrasted with the much more obvious giving of others and with the teachers who cheated widows such as she (12:40). But it also represented an alternative to business-as-usual in the Temple. All around her were large examples of meaningless worship, shallow honor given to God, frivolous giving, and downright evil. But this woman's act of sacrifice spoke volumes about herself and her faith.

12:41 Jesus completed his teaching and sat in the area of the Temple called the Court of Women. The treasury was located there or in an adjoining walkway. In this area were seven collection boxes in which worshipers could deposit their Temple tax and six boxes for freewill offerings. From his vantage point, Jesus watched as the crowds dropped in their money. A lot of money came into the Temple treasury during Passover; the increased crowds meant increased money amounts in the coffers. Surely the large amounts from the rich people clattered loudly into the boxes.

12:42 In contrast, a poor widow came with a freewill offering (that is, she was not paying a required tax, but rather giving a gift). As a widow, she had few resources for making money. If a widow in New Testament times had no sons, no protector, and remained unmarried, she was often destitute. Since there was no social security or public aid for widows, a widow would often be without financial support. This widow's offering totaled only two pennies. Her small gift was a sacrifice, but she gave it willingly.

12:43-44 Jesus seized the opportunity to teach his disciples an important lesson in giving. In Jesus' eyes, the poor widow had given more than all the others—even the rich people who had contributed large amounts to the treasury. Though her gift was by far the smallest in monetary value, it was the greatest in sacrifice. The value of a gift is not determined by its amount, but by the spirit in which it is given. The rich had given a tiny part of their surplus, but she had given everything, trusting God to care for her. Jesus wanted the disciples to see this lesson in total surrender of self, commitment to God, and willingness to trust in his provision.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT THE FUTURE / 13:1-23 / 201

Chapter 13 has a conversation between Jesus and his disciples as they left the Temple and Jerusalem, walking back to Bethany where they spent their nights. Jesus took advantage of this “teachable moment.” A casual remark about the magnificent Temple by a disciple led Jesus to make a startling prophetic statement about the fate of the Temple. The group paused on the Mount of Olives, where they could glance back across the valley toward Jerusalem. Perhaps they watched the sun set behind the ancient city.

Several disciples chose that moment to ask two curious questions: When will these things happen? What will be the sign? With his answers, Jesus prepared his disciples for the difficult years ahead. He warned them about false messiahs, natural disasters, and persecutions. But he also assured them that he would be with them to protect them and make his Kingdom known through them. Jesus promised that, in the end, he would return in power and glory to save them.

13:1 Jesus and the disciples were leaving the Temple (this may have been either Tuesday or Wednesday evening of the week before the Crucifixion). This was Jesus’ last visit to the Temple area. He would do no more preaching or public teaching. One of the disciples remarked on the incredible beauty of the Temple. Although no one knows exactly what this Temple looked like, it must have been magnificent, for in its time it was considered one of the architectural wonders of the world. This was not Solomon’s Temple—it had been destroyed by the Babylonians in the seventh century B.C. (2 Kings 25:8-10). This Temple had been built by Ezra after the return from exile in the sixth century B.C. (Ezra 6:14-15), desecrated by the Seleucids in the second century B.C., reconsecrated by the Maccabees soon afterward, and enormously expanded by Herod the Great.

The Temple was impressive, covering about one-sixth of the land area of the ancient city of Jerusalem. It was not one building, but a majestic mixture of porches, colonnades, separate small edifices, and courts surrounding the Temple proper—hence the comment about the tremendous buildings. Outside these courts were long porches. Solomon’s porch was 1,562 feet long; the royal porch was decorated with 160 columns stretching along its 921-foot length. The Temple’s foundation was so solid that it is believed that some of the original footings remain to this day. The Jews were convinced of the permanence of this magnificent structure, not only because of the stability of construction, but also because it represented God’s presence among them. The massive stones the disciple mentioned were huge white stones, some of them measuring twenty-five by eight by twelve feet and weighing more than one hundred tons.

13:2 Jesus made a startling statement: These magnificent buildings would be completely demolished. The destruction of the Jews' beloved Temple would be God's judgment against them for turning away from him. This happened only a few decades later when the Romans sacked Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Gazing at the massive stones, the disciples surely found it difficult to believe that not one of the stones would be left on top of another. Because the Temple symbolized God's presence among them, the Jews would be horrified to see it destroyed.

13:3-4 The Mount of Olives rises above Jerusalem to the east. As Jesus left the city to return to Bethany for the night, he would have crossed the Kidron Valley and then headed up the slopes of the Mount of Olives. From this slope, he and the disciples could look down into the city and see the Temple, with the sun setting behind it to the west. Four disciples came to Jesus privately because they wanted to understand what Jesus meant and when this terrible destruction would happen. Their question had two parts: (1) They wanted to know when this would happen (especially the destruction of the Temple), and (2) what sign would show that Jesus' words will be fulfilled. The second part of their question referred to the end of the age. In the disciples' minds, one event would occur immediately after the other. They expected the Messiah to inaugurate his Kingdom soon, and they wanted to know the sign that it was about to arrive.

Jesus gave them a prophetic picture of that time, including events leading up to it. He also talked about far future events connected with the last days and his Second Coming, when he would return to earth to judge all people. Like much of Old Testament prophecy, Jesus predicted both near and distant events without putting them in chronological order. The coming destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple only foreshadowed a future destruction that would ultimately usher in God's Kingdom. Jesus was predicting the destruction of Jerusalem and the end times.

13:5-6 Jesus first answered the disciples' second question about the end of the age and the coming Kingdom. The disciples wondered what sign would reveal these things, but Jesus warned them against seeking signs, "Don't let anyone mislead you." Jesus knew that if the disciples looked for signs, they would be susceptible to being deceived. There would be many who would come claiming to be the Messiah. Jesus predicted that before his return, many believers would be led astray by false teachers claiming to be Christ.

In every generation since Christ's resurrection, certain individuals have claimed to be the Christ or to know exactly when Jesus would return. Obviously, no one else has been Christ, and no one has been right about the timing of the Second Coming. According to Scripture, the one clear sign of Christ's return will be his unmistakable appearance in the clouds, which will be seen by all people (13:26; Revelation 1:7). In other words, believers never have to wonder whether a certain person is the Messiah.

13:7-8 The key phrase in this verse comforts all believers, "Don't panic." As political situations worsen, as wars and rumors of wars ravage the world, Jesus instructed his disciples and all his followers not to be afraid that somehow God had lost control of his creation or that his promises would not come true. Just as false messiahs and religious frauds come and go, so do worldly crises. Even when the world's situation gets worse, God is in control. These things must come as part of God's divine plan. However, the wars and rumors of wars do not signal the end of the world. The disciples probably assumed that the Temple would only be destroyed at the end of the world as part of God establishing his new Kingdom. Jesus taught that horrible events would happen, but the end won't follow immediately. Instead, this is only the beginning of the horrors to come; in other words, these would be preliminary sufferings. Jesus' words subtly explained to the eager disciples that there would be a span of time before the end of the age and the coming Kingdom—it would not happen this week, or immediately upon Jesus' resurrection, or even right after the destruction of Jerusalem. Instead, much suffering would occur as a part of life on earth, while history is moving toward a single, final, God-planned goal—the creation of a new earth and a new Kingdom (Revelation 21:1-3).

13:9 Jesus personalized his prophecy by explaining that the disciples themselves would face severe persecution; thus, they must be on their guard in order to stay true to the faith. Being handed over to the courts referred to the local Jewish courts held in the synagogues. They would also find themselves standing trial before Gentile governors and kings. But such trials would have a purpose—the disciples were to tell them about Jesus.

13:10 Jesus said that before his return, the Good News of the Kingdom (the message of salvation) would be preached to every nation. This was the disciples' mission—and it is ours. Jesus talked about the end times and final judgment to emphasize to his followers the urgency of spreading the gospel. By the time Mark's readers would hear these words, Jesus' prediction had already begun to happen. It occurred at Pentecost (Acts 2:5-11) and was spreading to all the world.

13:11 Not if the disciples would go on trial, but when they are arrested and stand trial, they were not to worry about defending themselves, but instead they were to concentrate on proclaiming the gospel. The Holy Spirit would give them God's peace and the words to say. These words would help the disciples be bold witnesses as they made their defense before the rulers (13:9). Notice that Jesus did not guarantee acquittal. James, one of the disciples here listening to Jesus, would be killed because of his faith (Acts 12:1-2).

13:12 Jesus warned that in the coming persecutions his followers would be betrayed by their family members and friends, as well as by religious and civil authorities. Certainly this was a reality for the Roman believers to whom Mark was writing. The fear of being killed for one's Christian faith would pit family members against one another.

13:13 Jesus' followers will face the reality that everyone will hate them because of their allegiance to Christ. For a Jew to convert to Christianity would soon become very dangerous because it would lead to hatred and ostracism. And Jesus' words looked forward to the time of the end when hatred of Christians would again occur. To believe in Jesus and endure to the end will take perseverance because our faith will be challenged and opposed. Severe trials will sift true Christians from fair-weather believers. Enduring to the end does not earn salvation for us; it marks us as already saved. The assurance of our salvation will keep us going through the times of persecution. While some will suffer and some will die, none of Jesus' followers will suffer spiritual or eternal loss.

13:14-18 Jesus warned against seeking signs, but as a final part of his answer to the disciples' second question (13:4), he gave them the ultimate event that would signal coming destruction. The sacrilegious object that causes desecration refers to the desecration of the Temple by God's enemies. Mark's phrase, reader, pay attention, may have been a sort of code for his Roman readers. A more precise explanation might have been dangerous for them if the Gospel fell into the wrong hands, so Mark urged them to understand Jesus' words in light of the prophecy from the Old Testament prophet Daniel (see Daniel 9:27; 11:31; 12:11). The sacrilegious object refers to pagan idolatry and sacrifice (see Deuteronomy 29:16-18; 2 Kings 16:3-4; 23:12-14). The sacrilege would occur in the Temple itself (standing where it should not be) and cause it to be abandoned.

The first fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy occurred in 168 B.C. by Antiochus Epiphanes. He sacrificed a pig to Zeus on the sacred Temple altar. This act incited the Maccabean wars. The second fulfillment occurred in A.D. 70 when the Roman army would destroy Jerusalem and desecrate the Temple. Some scholars say that the third fulfillment is yet to come. Jesus' words may also look far forward to the end times when the Antichrist will commit the ultimate sacrilege by setting up an image of himself in the Temple and ordering everyone to worship it (2 Thessalonians 2:4; Revelation 13:14-15).

Many of Jesus' followers (including Mark's readers) would live during the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple in A.D. 70. Jesus warned his followers to get out of Jerusalem and Judea and flee to the hills across the Jordan River when they saw the Temple being profaned. The Jewish historian Josephus wrote that from A.D. 66, Jewish Zealots clashed with the Romans. Many people realized that rebellion would bring the wrath of the Empire, so they fled to Pella, a town located in the mountains across the Jordan River. As Jesus had said, this proved to be their protection, for when the Roman army swept in, the nation and its capital city were destroyed.

The people were to leave immediately, without trying to pack bags or even to return from the field to the city to get a coat (a most basic necessity). They should leave everything behind as they fled from the coming crisis. Jesus expressed sympathy for those who will have difficulty fleeing because they are pregnant or have small children. Jesus told the disciples to pray that the crisis would not break in winter. Swollen rivers would make passage difficult across the usually small streams, as well as across the Jordan River.

13:19 Jesus gave this warning to get out quickly for these will be days of greater horror than at any time since God created the world. This language, while sounding like an exaggeration, is not unusual in Scripture when describing an impending disaster. The Jewish historian Josephus recorded that when the Romans sacked Jerusalem and devastated Judea, one hundred thousand Jews were taken prisoner and another 1.1 million died by slaughter and starvation. So many Jews were crucified that the hills were emptied of trees in order to build enough crosses.

While Jesus' words could be taken as referring to the coming destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in A.D. 70, they are so emphatic and clear that they must point ultimately to the final period of tribulation at the end of the age, because, as he stated, it will never happen again.

13:20 Many interpreters conclude that Jesus, talking about the end times, was telescoping near future and far future events, as the Old Testament prophets had done. Many of these persecutions have already occurred; more are yet to come. While a certain amount of persecution happened in the destruction of Jerusalem, Jesus may also have envisioned the persecution of believers throughout history. The persecution will be so severe that unless the Lord shortens that time, that is, if it had not had a specific ending time, no one would survive. This refers to physical survival (as opposed to 13:13, which speaks of spiritual survival). The time would be cut short for the sake of his chosen, the believers. The shortening of the time will limit their duration so that the destruction will not wipe out God's people and thus their mission. God is ultimately in charge of history and will not allow evil to exceed the bounds he has set.

When the time of suffering comes, the important point for the disciples and all believers to remember is that God is in control. Persecution will occur, but God knows about it and controls how long it will take place. He will not forget his people.

13:21-23 The Old Testament frequently mentions false prophets (see 2 Kings 3:13; Isaiah 44:25; Jeremiah 23:16; Ezekiel 13:2-3; Micah 3:5; Zechariah 13:2) who claimed to receive messages from God, but they preached what the people wanted to hear, even when the nation was not following God as it should. There were false prophets in Jesus' day, and we have them today. They are the popular leaders who tell people what they want to hear—such as “God wants you to be rich,” “Do whatever your desires tell you,” or “There is no such thing as sin or hell.” Jesus also said that false messiahs would come, and he warned his disciples, as he warns us, not to be deceived by whatever signs and wonders they might produce. They will be able to perform miracles designed to convince people that their claims are true. But their “power” will be by trickery or from Satan, not from God. Both false and true prophets can work miracles (see Deuteronomy 13:1-5; 2 Thessalonians 2:1-12; 1 John 4:1-3; Revelation 13:11-18).

Yet will they be so convincing that they might even lead God's chosen ones astray? Is it possible for Christians to be deceived? Yes, and Jesus pointed out the danger (see also Galatians 3:1). The arguments and proofs from deceivers in the end times will be so convincing that it will be difficult to be faithful. If we are prepared, Jesus says, we can remain faithful. With the Holy Spirit's help, believers will not give in and will be able to discern what the deceivers say as false.

Spiritual vigilance is a major theme of the Olivet discourse. Spiritual alertness and moral preparation are taught by Jesus and portrayed by Mark throughout chapters 13 and 14: Beware that no one misleads you (13:5); watch out (13:9, 23, 33); keep a sharp lookout (13:35); do not be found asleep (13:36); keep watch (14:34); keep alert and pray (14:38).

In the previous paragraphs, Jesus painted a picture of hardship, confusion, and waiting. But when it seems as though things can't possibly get any worse, they will. Heaven and earth will be irreversibly changed. There will be a sunset, but no sunrise. That completely dark stage will make the arrival of the Son of Man visible to all.

13:24-26 The phrase, at that time, signaled that Jesus was talking specifically about the end times. After the time of tribulation, nature itself would experience change. As taught in Romans 8 and 2 Peter 3, the entire universe became involved in humanity's sin predicament; thus, the entire universe will be changed when humanity is changed. The changes in the heavens will be an intended contrast to the pseudo "signs and omens" (13:22) of the false messiahs. These words also recall the words of the prophets (Isaiah 13:10; Joel 2:10-11) and what John saw in his vision (Revelation 6:12-14).

After these cosmic events, all the people on earth will see the Son of Man arrive on the clouds. Jesus' return will be unmistakable; no one will wonder about his identity. Jesus' Second Coming will not be as a humble, human carpenter, but as God's Son with great power and glory.

13:27 Upon his return to earth, Jesus will send out his angels to gather together his chosen ones from all over the world. The angels' gathering of the elect signifies the triumphant enthronement of the Son of Man, who will be revealed in all his power and glory. When he comes, the whole world will know that Jesus is Lord, and Christians' hope and faith will be vindicated.

13:28-29 In the form of a parable, Jesus answered the disciples' question regarding when the events he spoke about would happen (13:4). So far in this lengthy discourse, Jesus has traced two key themes: (1) the disciples' suffering and (2) their need to be watchful.

The disciples, like anyone living in Palestine, knew how to interpret the coming of summer from the buds and leaves of the fig trees. In the same way, when the disciples see the events (described in 13:5-23), they would know that his return is very near. The fulfillment of Jesus' prophecy would assure the disciples that the other prophecies he had given regarding the end times would also come true.

13:30-31 There are three views of the meaning of this verse: (1) It refers only to those alive at this time who would be alive also at the destruction of Jerusalem; (2) it refers to the end times only; (3) it refers both to the destruction of Jerusalem and the end times.

Jesus singled out this generation, using the Greek word genea, which can refer both to those living at a given time as well as to race or lineage (therefore, he was speaking of the Jewish race). That makes the third view above most likely. Jesus used “generation” here to mean that the events of 13:5-23 would occur initially within the lifetime of Jesus’ contemporaries. Jesus explained that many of those alive at that time would witness the destruction of Jerusalem. In addition, the Jewish nation would be preserved and remain on earth, so Jews also would witness the end-time events.

There could be no doubt in these disciples’ minds about the certainty of these prophecies. While heaven and earth as we know them would eventually disappear, Jesus’ words (including all his teachings during his time on earth) will remain forever.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT REMAINING WATCHFUL / 13:32-37 / 203

Regarding the “when,” of his Second Coming, Jesus’ answer was blunt. He then pointed out that the mark of a disciple was not having inside information, but serving Christ faithfully. Spiritual vigilance becomes the essential theme of the entire chapter. Jesus’ servants must be so busy that they have no time to speculate about his schedule.

13:32-33 While Jesus had given general “signs” to observe regarding the coming of the end, he clearly explained to the disciples that the exact day or hour was not known by the angels or the Son (Jesus himself). When Jesus said that even he did not know the time of the end, he was affirming his humanity (see Philippians 2:5-8). Of course, God the Father knows the time, and Jesus and the Father are one. But when Jesus became a man, he voluntarily gave up the unlimited use of his divine attributes. On earth, Jesus laid aside his divine prerogatives and submitted to the Father’s will. Thus, only the Father knows the exact time of Jesus’ return. The emphasis of this verse is not on Jesus’ lack of knowledge, but rather on the fact that no one knows. It is God the Father’s secret to be revealed when he wills. No one can predict by Scripture or science the exact day of Jesus’ return. Jesus was teaching that preparation, not calculation, was needed.

Because no one except the Father knows when Christ will return, Jesus explained that believers must stay alert and keep watch, ready for his return to happen at any moment. Christ's Second Coming will be swift and sudden. There will be no opportunity for last-minute repentance or bargaining. The choice that people have already made will determine their eternal destiny.

13:34-36 In this parable of watchfulness, Jesus described himself as a man who left home to go on a trip (Jesus would be returning to heaven). The disciples are the employees left behind to carry on their work. The gatekeeper is commanded to keep watch for the master's return. The employees understand that they are in charge of themselves, had their own work to do, and would not want the homeowner to return suddenly and find them being lazy. Because they do not know when the homeowner will return, these employees must keep a sharp lookout so as not to be found sleeping.

Jesus' followers would want to be found spiritually lax, but instead conscientiously going about the work given by God for them to do. Each of us has enough assigned work to do that we shouldn't be neutralized or paralyzed by fear or doubt. We do not need to worry about how other employees compare to us; instead, we should devote ourselves to doing what God has given us to do.

13:37 Jesus had spoken this discourse to only four of his disciples (13:3). Here he instructed them to carry these words to the rest of the disciples, for their truth was of vital importance. By extension, the words were meant for all believers. Even today, we do well to watch for his return—watching out for false teaching and watching expectantly for Christ's return as we do his work in the world.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS PLOT TO KILL JESUS / 14:1-2 / 207

Mark's account of the final acts in Jesus' ministry begins with a simple summary of the scene. It was almost Passover. Jesus' enemies were looking for a way to kill him. Their concern about timing had to do with keeping control of the people. They wanted to kill Jesus without anyone noticing. But God had a different purpose in the timing of events.

14:1-2 The Passover commemorated the night the Israelites were freed from Egypt (Exodus 12), when God "passed over" homes marked by the blood of a lamb. This was the last great plague on Egypt; in the unmarked homes the firstborn sons died. After this horrible disaster, Pharaoh let the Israelites go.

The day of Passover was followed by the seven-day Festival of Unleavened Bread. This, too, recalled the Israelites' quick escape from Egypt when, because they wouldn't have time to let their bread rise, they baked it without leaven (yeast). All Jewish males over the age of twelve were required to go to Jerusalem for this festival (Deuteronomy 16:5-6). Jews from all over the Roman Empire would converge on Jerusalem, swelling the population from 50,000 to 250,000 people.

The Jewish leaders plotted secretly to kill Jesus. They had already decided that Jesus must die (see John 11:47-53); they just needed the opportunity. They did not want to attempt to arrest Jesus during the Passover because they feared that the crowd would riot on his behalf. They feared that such an uprising might bring the wrath of Rome.

A WOMAN ANOINTS JESUS WITH PERFUME / 14:3-9 / 182

Matthew and Mark put this event just before the Last Supper, while John included it just before the Triumphal Entry. Of the three, John placed this event in the most likely chronological position. Mark sandwiched this beautiful event between two sections dealing with the plot to eliminate Jesus. This act of devotion by Mary, who is a true heroine in this narrative, is contrasted with the treachery of the villains—the religious leaders and Judas.

14:3 Bethany was located on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives (Jerusalem is on the western side). This town was the home of Jesus' friends Lazarus, Mary, and Martha (who were also present at this dinner, John 11:2). Jesus had been returning to Bethany from Jerusalem each night during this final week (11:11). This night, Jesus was a guest of Simon. He did not have leprosy at this time, for lepers had to live separately from people because of the extreme contagiousness of the disease. Jesus may have healed Simon.

This woman was probably Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus, who lived in Bethany (John 12:1-3). She brought a beautiful jar of expensive perfume, which she poured on Jesus' head. It was a common custom at some Jewish meals for the honored guests to be anointed with oil (see Luke 7:44-46), but it would not be so expensive. Such an anointing, with expensive oil, pictured a royal (messianic) anointing.

14:4-5 Where Mark says some, John specifically mentions Judas (John 12:4-5). This indignation over Mary's act of worship would not have been based on concern for the poor, but on greed. Because Judas was the treasurer of Jesus' ministry and had embezzled funds (John 12:6), he no doubt wanted the perfume sold so that the proceeds could be put into his care. This event probably pushed Judas over the edge in his determination to betray Jesus.

14:6-8 Jesus reprimanded the disciples, but comforted Mary. The expensive ointment poured on Jesus had been a good thing to do for him—a beautiful, acceptable, appealing act of love and sacrifice—and Jesus declared it to be so. This was a unique act for a specific occasion—an anointing that anticipated Jesus' burial and a public declaration of faith in him as Messiah. Jesus was not saying that we should neglect the poor, nor was he justifying indifference to them. (For Jesus' teaching about the poor, see Matthew 6:2-4; Luke 6:20-21; 14:13, 21; 18:22.) Jesus was affirming Mary's unselfish act of worship. The essence of worshiping Christ is to regard him with utmost love, respect, and devotion, as well as to be willing to sacrifice to him what is most precious.

Jesus' purpose in these words was to explain that the opportunity to show him such devotion and to anoint him with oil (in preparation for burial) would soon be past. The phrase, "I will not be here with you much longer," meant that Jesus would soon be gone from them physically. However, they could and should show kindness to the poor, and opportunities to do so would continue, "You will always have the poor among you."

Jesus' words should have taught Judas and the disciples the valuable lesson that devotion to Christ is worth more than money. Unfortunately, Judas did not take heed; soon he would sell his Master's life for thirty pieces of silver.

14:9 Mary's unselfish act would be remembered forever. This has come true because we read about it today. While the disciples misunderstood Jesus' mission and constantly fought about places in the Kingdom and while the religious leaders stubbornly refused to believe in Jesus and plotted his death, this one quiet woman so loved Jesus and was so devoted to him that she considered no sacrifice too great for her beloved Master. She is an example to us all of unselfish devotion to our Savior.

JUDAS AGREES TO BETRAY JESUS / 14:10-11 / 208

Each of the Gospel writers reported Judas's treachery with remarkable restraint. Their treatment of Peter's denial actually seems harsher than their references to the betrayer. Mark, the shortest account, conveys the simple facts. The enemies of Jesus were delighted. We're not told how Judas felt at this point. Since Mark was reflecting Peter's account, the reticence about Judas may indicate Peter's shame in recalling his own treatment of Jesus. We are much more likely to present a fair picture of the flaws and faults of others if we keep our own clearly in sight.

14:10 Why would Judas Iscariot want to betray Jesus? Very likely, Judas expected Jesus to start a political rebellion and overthrow Rome. As treasurer, Judas certainly assumed (as did the other disciples—see 10:35-37) that he would be given an important position in Jesus' new government. But when Jesus praised Mary for pouring out the expensive perfume, Judas finally began to realize that Jesus' Kingdom was not physical or political. Judas knew the leading priests had it in for Jesus, and he knew they would have the power to arrest Jesus. So that was where he went. Judas's greedy desire for money and status could not be fulfilled if he followed Jesus, so he betrayed him in exchange for money and favor from the religious leaders.

14:11 Obviously the leading priests were delighted to have discovered a traitor among Jesus' followers. They had been having difficulty figuring out how to arrest Jesus (14:1-2); so when an offer of help came from this unexpected corner, they took advantage of it. They promised Judas a reward, and Judas began looking for the right opportunity—when there would be no Passover crowds to prevent Jesus' capture and no possibility of a riot (14:2).

DISCIPLES PREPARE FOR THE PASSOVER / 14:12-16 / 209

Jesus and his disciples had been together long enough to celebrate Passover several times. Apparently, despite the gloominess of Jesus' predictions and the tension of constant scrutiny by the religious leaders, the disciples tried to keep a semblance of normality. They asked Jesus for instructions about Passover. His response indicates that he had planned their itinerary in advance.

14:12 The Passover took place on one night and at one meal, but the Feast of Unleavened Bread, which was celebrated with it, continued for a week. The first day of the feast was technically the day after Passover, but the two were often equated. Thus, this was either Wednesday night (the day before Passover) or Thursday of Jesus' last week (the night of the Passover meal). The highlight of the festival was the Passover meal, a family feast with the main course of lamb. The sacrifice of a lamb and the spilling of its blood commemorated Israel's escape from Egypt when the blood of a lamb painted on their door frames had saved their firstborn sons from death. This event foreshadowed Jesus' work on the cross. As the spotless Lamb of God, his blood would be spilled in order to save his people from the penalty of death brought by sin.

Jesus' disciples assumed that they would eat the Passover meal together with Jesus. However, the meal had to be eaten in Jerusalem, so the disciples asked Jesus where they should go in order to make preparations.

14:13 The two disciples Jesus sent were Peter and John (Luke 22:8). Whether Jesus had supernatural knowledge in this instance or if he had made arrangements in advance is unclear (as in the incident with his Triumphal Entry, see 11:1-6). It seems that in this instance this room had been reserved previously and kept secret—none of the disciples knew where they would eat this meal. Jesus already knew that Judas would be looking for an opportunity to betray him without crowds around, so Jesus may have made these arrangements and kept them secret.

The two disciples were dispatched in the morning from Bethany to Jerusalem to prepare the Passover meal. Jesus told them that as they entered the city, they would meet a man carrying a pitcher of water. Ordinarily women, not men, went to the well and brought home the water. So this man would have stood out in the crowd. This may have been a prearranged signal, or Jesus may have supernaturally known that this man (most likely a servant) would be there and would lead them to the right house.

14:14-16 The owner of this home was probably one of Jesus' followers. He knew exactly who the Teacher was and probably knew the disciples by sight. Tradition says this may have been Mark's home, so this would have been Mark's father. Many homes had upstairs rooms large enough to accommodate Jesus and his twelve disciples. As before, when two disciples went to get the donkey for Jesus to ride into Jerusalem (11:1-6), these two disciples found everything just as Jesus had said. The preparations for the Passover would have included setting the table, buying and roasting the Passover lamb, and making the unleavened bread, sauces, and other ceremonial food and drink that were a traditional part of every Passover meal.

JESUS AND THE DISCIPLES SHARE THE LAST SUPPER / 14:17-26 / 211

We know from John's Gospel that a great deal was said during the Passover meal. But Mark mentioned only two central events that occurred during the supper itself. First, Jesus disclosed that there was a betrayer among them. Then he instituted the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

14:17 On that evening (Wednesday or Thursday), Jesus arrived in Jerusalem with the twelve disciples. The meal was not to be eaten until after sunset and was supposed to be finished by midnight.

14:18-20 As Jesus and the disciples were eating, Jesus spoke the stunning words, "One of you will betray me." The betrayer was one of his own chosen twelve disciples, one with whom the meal was being shared. Jesus' words caused quite a stir among the disciples. They had heard Jesus tell them three different times that he would soon die, but that one of them would actually betray Jesus saddened them greatly.

Although the other disciples were confused by Jesus' words, Judas knew what he meant. Apparently Judas was not the obvious betrayer. After all, he was the one the disciples trusted to keep the money (John 12:4-6). So the disciples asked Jesus who the betrayer was; "I'm not the one, am I?" each one asked in turn. Matthew records that even Judas asked this question (Matthew 26:25).

14:21 Jesus would indeed be betrayed and would indeed die as he had already told his disciples. His death would not occur merely because of the betrayer, for the Son of Man had to die to complete God's plan and fulfill Scripture (for example, Psalm 41:9-13; Isaiah 53:1-6).

But how terrible it will be for the one who betrayed Jesus. Again Jesus' words were reminiscent of Psalm 41, this time verses 10-12, where the sufferer was vindicated by God and his enemies punished. Jesus knew that Judas was going to betray him, and he also knew that Judas would not repent.

Luke wrote that "Satan entered into Judas Iscariot" before he went to the religious leaders (Luke 22:3). However, Satan's part in the betrayal of Jesus does not remove any of the responsibility from Judas. In God's sovereign will and according to his timetable, he uses sinful men. But that doesn't excuse their sin.

All people will be held accountable for their choices and actions. Whatever Judas thought, Satan assumed that Jesus' death would end Jesus' mission and thwart God's plan. Like Judas, Satan did not know that Jesus' death and resurrection were the most important parts of God's plan all along.

John records that upon this pronouncement, Jesus told Judas to "hurry. Do it now" (John 13:27). Then Judas went out into the night. He was not present for the remaining words Jesus spoke.

14:22 Jesus and the disciples were eating the bread, and Jesus took the loaf of unleavened bread, asked God's blessing on it, and broke it. Jesus told the disciples to "Take it, for this is my body." His words "this is my body" symbolize the spiritual nourishment believers obtain from a personal relationship with the Savior.

Christians differ in their interpretation of the meaning of the commemoration of the Lord's Supper. There are three main views: (1) The bread and wine actually become Christ's body and blood; (2) the bread and wine remain unchanged, yet Christ is spiritually present by faith in and through them; and (3) the bread and wine, which remain unchanged, are lasting memorials of Christ's sacrifice. No matter which view they favor, all Christians agree that the Lord's Supper commemorates Christ's death on the cross for our sins and points to the coming of his Kingdom in glory. When we partake of it, we show our deep gratitude for Christ's work on our behalf, and our faith is strengthened.

Just as the Passover celebrated deliverance from slavery in Egypt, so the Lord's Supper celebrates deliverance from sin by Christ's death.

14:23-24 The celebrations in the Christian church (Communion, Eucharist, the Lord's Supper) have first a sharing of bread (including a repetition of Jesus' words, "This is my body"), and then a sharing of wine (including a repetition of Jesus' words, "This is my blood, poured out for many").

As with the bread, Jesus spoke words in figurative language. "This is my blood" means "This wine represents my blood." Jesus' blood, poured out on behalf of sinners, sealed the covenant between God and his people. In later manuscripts, the word "new" has been inserted before "covenant." This insertion is based on Luke 22:20 and 1 Corinthians 11:25, where the word "new" appears in all Greek manuscripts. The word "covenant" refers to an arrangement established by one party that cannot be altered by the other party. In other words, God established the covenant and humans can only accept or reject it; they cannot alter it in any way.

What did Jesus mean by a "new covenant"? In Old Testament times, God had agreed to forgive people's sins if they would bring animals for the priests to sacrifice. When this sacrificial system was inaugurated, the agreement between God and human beings was sealed with the blood of animals (Exodus 24:8). But animal blood did not in itself remove sin, and animal sacrifices had to be repeated day by day and year after year.

Jesus instituted a "new covenant," or agreement, between humans and God. This concept is key to all New Testament theology and forms the basis for the name of the New Testament portion of the Bible. Under this new covenant, Jesus would die in the place of sinners. The old covenant was a shadow of the new, pointing forward to the day when Jesus himself would be the final and ultimate sacrifice for sin. Rather than an unblemished lamb slain on the altar, the perfect Lamb of God was slain on the cross as a sinless sacrifice so that our sins could be forgiven once and for all. Those who accept Christ's sacrifice and believe in him receive forgiveness. Now all people can come directly to God through faith because Jesus' death has made us acceptable in God's eyes (Romans 3:21-24).

14:25 Again Jesus assured his disciples of his victory over his imminent death and of a future in the Kingdom of God. The next few hours would bring apparent defeat, but soon they would experience the power of the Holy Spirit and witness the great spread of the gospel message.

14:26 The hymn they sang was most likely taken from Psalms 116–118, the second part of the Hallel that was traditionally sung after eating the Passover meal. John included a lengthy discourse that Jesus had with his disciples (John 13:31–17:26) before he and the eleven remaining disciples left the upper room and went out to the Mount of Olives, located just to the east of Jerusalem. Leaving the room did not surprise the disciples, for they had not been staying in Jerusalem at night and had left the city every evening to return to Bethany. This time, however, Jesus went only as far as the southwestern slope, to an olive grove called Gethsemane, which means "oil press."

JESUS AGAIN PREDICTS PETER'S DENIAL / 14:27-31 / 222

Both Luke and John reported that Jesus predicted both the disciples' abandonment and Peter's denial while they were still having supper. True to form, Peter reacted strongly to Jesus' prediction. He could not imagine the disciples abandoning Jesus. Least of all himself. But before we criticize Peter, we should first see ourselves in him. Peter reminds us how easy it is to profess our faith and how difficult it is to remain loyal under pressure.

14:27-28 This was the second time in the same evening that Jesus predicted the disciples' denial and desertion, which probably explains their strong reaction (14:31). (For Jesus' earlier prediction, see Luke 22:31-34 and John 13:36-38.) That the disciples would desert him means that they would take offense at him and turn away. Fearing what would befall Jesus, they would not want to experience the same treatment. Jesus would go to the cross totally alone. The disciples' desertion would also occur just as it had been predicted in Scripture, specifically Zechariah 13:7. In Zechariah, God commanded that the Shepherd be struck down. As a result, the sheep will be scattered. Without a shepherd and on their own, the sheep would go through a period of great trial and be refined. The refining process would strengthen them and create a new, faithful people for God. The disciples would be overwhelmed by what would happen to Jesus, but Jesus' death would ultimately produce their salvation.

After his prediction of their desertion, Jesus then predicted their reunion after he would be raised from the dead. Jesus promised that he would go ahead of them into Galilee and meet them all there.

14:29-30 Peter, always ready to speak up at inopportune moments, declared that his allegiance to Jesus would prove to be much stronger than the others. Jesus explained, however, that instead of being the only loyal disciple, Peter would prove himself the least so. Not only would he desert Jesus, he would also deny him—not once, but three times. And this would happen in the space of the next few hours. Before the night was over, that is before the rooster crowed a second time, Peter would deny the Master to whom he claimed such loyalty. Only Mark recorded a second crowing of the rooster (see also 14:72). If Peter was, in fact, Mark's source for this Gospel, he certainly remembered this minor detail.

14:31 Peter did not think it possible for him to actually deny any relationship with Jesus. Perhaps he was worried that he was the betrayer Jesus had mentioned during their meal (14:18). Not only Peter, but all the disciples declared that they would never deny Jesus. A few hours later, however, they all scattered.

JESUS AGONIZES IN THE GARDEN / 14:32-42 / 223

Apart from the Cross itself, the moments in Gethsemane were the most intense in Jesus' life. He experienced the crushing weight of the task he was about to undertake. He witnessed the weakness that his disciples demonstrated by falling asleep. He saw the betrayer coming. And he sensed with anguish that the cup would not pass. He would drink it alone. The Cross did not catch Jesus by surprise. His self-sacrifice was deliberate, calculated, and undertaken with a great flow of human emotions that we can see in the garden.

14:32 After eating the meal, the disciples left Jerusalem and went out to Gethsemane (see John 18:1-2). The garden was in the Kidron Valley just outside the eastern wall of Jerusalem and just below the Mount of Olives. Jesus told eight of the disciples to sit down while he went farther in to pray.

Plenty of drama surrounds Mark's terse account. The elders of Jerusalem were plotting to kill Jesus and had already issued a warrant for his arrest. Jesus left Jerusalem under cover of darkness in order to pray. The disciples must also have been physically and emotionally exhausted from trying to comprehend what would transpire. Instead of watching, they gave in to their exhaustion and fell asleep.

14:33-34 Jesus took three disciples, his inner circle, farther into the garden with him. To these closest friends, Jesus revealed his inner turmoil over the event he was about to face. The divine course was set, but Jesus, in his human nature, still struggled (Hebrews 5:7-9). His coming death was no surprise; he knew about it and had even told the disciples about it so they would be prepared. Jesus knew what his death would accomplish. As the time of this event neared, it became even more horrifying. Jesus naturally recoiled from the prospect.

Jesus asked Peter, James, and John (14:33) to stay and watch with him. Jesus knew Judas would soon arrive, and Jesus wanted to devote himself to prayer until that time came.

14:35 Jesus went still farther into the garden to be alone with God. His agony was such that he threw himself on the ground before God in deep spiritual anguish, praying that if possible the awful hour awaiting him might pass him by—that his mission might be accomplished some other way. Hour figuratively refers to the entire event Jesus was facing. The “hour” and the “cup” were used synonymously. Yet Jesus humbly submitted to the Father's will. Luke tells us that Jesus' sweat resembled drops of blood. Jesus was in terrible agony, but he did not give up or give in. He went ahead with the mission for which he had come.

14:36 Abba was Aramaic for “father” and implied familiarity and closeness. Only Jesus could have used the word Abba in a prayer to God, because Jesus had a special Father-Son relationship with him. Jesus' using it showed his surrender to and faith in the Father's will. Children addressed their fathers as Abba, but the term was far too familiar for adult Jews to use in speaking to God. Paul used the term in Romans 8:15 and Galatians 4:6, showing that the early church picked up the term from this prayer of Jesus.

The words, everything is possible for you, indicate God's omnipotence. He could accomplish anything. Jesus was affirming God's sovereign control over the coming suffering (see 10:27). With the words, take this cup of suffering away from me, Jesus was referring to the agony, the separation from God, and the death he would have to endure in order to atone for the sins of the world. Jesus, as God's Son, recoiled from sin, yet part of his task would be to take the sins of the whole world upon himself. This was a cup he truly hated to drink. The physical suffering would be horrible enough, but what God's Son feared most was the cup of spiritual suffering—taking on sin and being separated from God (Hebrews 5:7-9). Yet Jesus reaffirmed his desire to do what God wanted by saying, “Yet I want your will, not mine.”

God did not take away the “cup,” for to judge the sins of the world was his will. Yet he did take away Jesus' extreme fear and agitation. Jesus moved serenely through the next several hours, at peace with God, knowing that he was doing God's will.

14:37-38 Jesus got up from his prayer to return to the three disciples. He had told them to stay and keep watch (14:34), but instead of showing support for Jesus by remaining awake with him and praying themselves for strength in the coming hours, they had fallen asleep. The hour was very late, perhaps after midnight.

Jesus spoke to Peter, calling him Simon, his name before he had met Jesus. Apparently Peter's recent boasting (14:31), present sleepiness, and coming denial rendered him less than Peter, the “rock” (see John 1:42). Peter had said he would never leave Jesus; yet when Jesus needed prayer and support, Peter had fallen asleep. Thus, Jesus rebuked him for his failure to keep watch for even one hour. Only Mark mentions the Lord's words to Peter. Perhaps Peter wanted Mark to tell this part of the story.

Jesus told the disciples that this was the time to keep alert and pray, for soon difficult temptation would come. Jesus wanted them to pray that their faith would not collapse. The word temptation can mean testing or trial. Jesus wanted his disciples to pray for strength to go through the coming ordeal. The disciples were about to see Jesus die. Would they still think he was the Messiah? The disciples' strongest temptation would undoubtedly be to think they had been deceived. Their spirit might be willing, but their body would be weak. Their inner desires and intentions would be, as they had previously boasted, to never deny Jesus and to die with him. Yet with all their human inadequacies, fears, and failures, the disciples would have difficulty carrying out those good intentions.

14:39-40 Jesus left the three disciples and went back to his previous pleadings with the Father (14:35-36). When he returned to them, they were asleep again. Despite his warning they just couldn't keep their eyes open. Apparently Jesus again awakened them, and in their embarrassment, they didn't know what to say.

14:41-42 Jesus went away to pray a third time, only to come back and find the disciples still asleep. The disciples had not taken the opportunity to pray, and there would be no more time to do so—the time had come. Thus Jesus did not again tell them to pray. Jesus had spent the last few hours dealing with the Father, wrestling with him, and humbly submitting to him. Now he was prepared to face his betrayor and the sinners who were coming to arrest him.

All four Gospels describe the moment of betrayal, but Mark's version is the shortest. He moved rapidly through the sequence of events. Mark alone added the description of a young man wrapped in a sheet who left his only covering behind in his hurry to escape. Many think this was Mark's own, somewhat humorous, signature to the Gospel.

In spite of all they had seen and heard with Jesus, when the moment of truth arrived, the disciples all fled. When we feel safe in our surroundings or we take life lightly, it is easy to consider ourselves prepared for anything. The disciples trusted in Jesus all right, but their trust came and went with what they saw and felt. As long as the Lord was in control, everything was fine. But when external circumstances changed, the weakness of their faith was revealed. Hardships open our eyes and enable us to deal with our true character.

14:43 Even as Jesus spoke to his disciples to rouse them from their sleep, Judas arrived. The leading priests had issued the warrant for Jesus' arrest, and Judas was acting as Jesus' official accuser. The mob, armed with swords and clubs, came in the middle of the night when most of the people were asleep and they could arrest Jesus without commotion. Although there were no crowds to worry about, Jesus was surrounded by eleven loyal followers who the Temple guards feared might put up a fight.

14:44 Judas had told the crowd to arrest the man to whom he would give the kiss of greeting. This was not an arrest by Roman soldiers under Roman law, but an arrest by the religious leaders. Judas pointed Jesus out, not because Jesus was hard to recognize, but because Judas had agreed to be the formal accuser in case a trial was called. A kiss on the cheek or hand was a common form of greeting in the Middle East, so this was not unusual.

14:45 Judas had expected to find Jesus and the disciples in Gethsemane. He entered the garden followed by the armed band and walked up to Jesus. In a friendly gesture of greeting and affection, Judas called Jesus “Teacher” and then gave him a kiss (on the cheek or on the hand), a sign of respect.

14:46 The religious leaders had not arrested Jesus in the Temple for fear of a riot. Instead, they had come secretly at night, under the influence of the prince of darkness, Satan himself. Jesus offered no resistance and was grabbed and arrested. Although it looked as if Satan were getting the upper hand, everything was proceeding according to God’s plan. It was time for Jesus to die.

14:47 According to John 18:10, the person who pulled out a sword was Peter, who cut off the right ear of a servant named Malchus. Peter was trying to prevent what he saw as defeat. He wasn’t going to let this crowd arrest Jesus without putting up a fight. Luke 22:51 records that Jesus immediately healed the man’s ear and prevented any further bloodshed. Jesus then told Peter to put away his sword and allow God’s plan to unfold. Peter didn’t realize that Jesus had to die in order to gain victory. But Jesus demonstrated perfect commitment to his Father’s will. His Kingdom would not be advanced with swords, but with faith and obedience.

14:48-49 Jesus protested, not his arrest, but the way he was arrested. They did not need to come against him with weapons, for he was voluntarily surrendering himself. Jesus was not a dangerous criminal leading a rebellion; he was a religious teacher who had been teaching in the Temple daily during the past week. Jesus also mocked their show of worldly power. He who could summon angels was not afraid of swords. Did the guards imagine that swords would intimidate Jesus? They didn’t understand who he was. Jesus knew why the events were unfolding as they were—to fulfill what the Scriptures say. Judas’s treachery, the coming mockery of a trial against Jesus, and its ultimate outcome had all been prophesied (see, for example, Psalms 22:7-8, 14, 16-17; 41:9; Isaiah 50:6; 53:7-8).

14:50 Just hours earlier, these disciples had vowed never to desert Jesus (14:31).

Judas's kiss marked a turning point for the disciples and Jesus' loyal disciples deserted him and ran away. The teacher who had held forth in the Temple was now under arrest. The treasurer had become a traitor. The garden sanctuary that had always been "safe" was turned into the place of confrontation. What confusion! The disciples' primary loyalty to Jesus should have kept them from running. But fear took its toll.

14:51-52 Only Mark records the incident of this young man who also fled the scene. Tradition says that this young man may have been John Mark, the writer of this Gospel, in whose home the Last Supper may have taken place. If that is true, at some point Mark had awakened from sleep (he had probably been sleeping in a linen nightshirt or had a sheet wrapped around him) and had followed the disciples to the garden. Perhaps soldiers had come to the house looking for Jesus and this young man had attempted to warn Jesus before the soldiers reached him. But in Gethsemane, the crowd had already arrested Jesus and the disciples had fled. Someone grabbed this young man, perhaps hoping to use him as a witness. At that, the young man escaped and ran away naked.

CAIAPHAS QUESTIONS JESUS / 14:53-65 / 226

Only John records the events immediately following Jesus' capture. The other Gospels go right to the preliminary hearing at Annas's house. All of the accounts convey that the religious leaders had already decided Jesus' fate. Jesus' opponents merely wanted to solidify their case against him. The parade of false witnesses highlighted the murderous intent of the religious leaders. They eagerly acted out their hatred for Jesus with spitting, striking, and taunting. Injustice turned to brutality.

14:53 By now it was very early Friday morning, before daybreak. Jesus was taken under guard from the garden back into Jerusalem. First he was questioned by Annas, the former high priest and father-in-law of Caiaphas. Annas had been Israel's high priest from A.D. 6 to 15, when he had been deposed by Roman rulers. Then Caiaphas had been appointed high priest. He held that position from A.D. 18 to 36 / 37. According to Jewish law, the office of high priest was held for life, but the Roman government had taken over the process of appointing all political and religious leaders. Caiaphas served for eighteen years, longer than most high priests, suggesting that he was gifted at cooperating with the Romans. Caiaphas was the first to recommend Jesus' death in order to "save" the nation (John 11:49-50). However, many Jews still considered Annas to be the high priest.

Annas may have asked to question Jesus after his arrest and was given first rights to do so. This hearing is described in John 18:12-24.

After that preliminary hearing, Jesus was taken to the high priest's home. That all the religious leaders had been speedily assembled shows that this was a trial by the Jewish council of religious leaders consisting of seventy members plus the high priest. Because of their haste to complete the trial and see Jesus die before the Sabbath, less than twenty-four hours later, the religious leaders first met in Caiaphas's home at night to accomplish the preliminaries before their more formal meeting in the Temple at daylight. They finally had Jesus where they wanted him, and they were determined to accomplish their plans as quickly as possible.

The trial by the Jewish leaders had two phases. This first phase occurred during the night (recorded here in 14:53-65); then another meeting was held "very early in the morning" (15:1) to satisfy a law that allowed trials only during the daytime. That meeting was a mere formality held at daybreak, during which the verdict was given and Jesus was led off to the Roman procurator for sentencing. The Jewish council was the most powerful religious and political body of the Jewish people. Although the Romans controlled Israel's government, they gave the people power to handle religious disputes and some civil disputes; so the council made many of the local decisions affecting daily life. But a death sentence had to be authorized by the Romans (John 18:31).

14:54 Although all the disciples had fled when the soldiers arrested Jesus, two of them, Peter and another disciple (perhaps John), returned to where Jesus was taken (John 18:15). The high priest's residence was a palace with gates and outer walls enclosing a courtyard. Here a charcoal fire was burning, around which the servants and guards were warming themselves against the early morning chill. Peter's story continues at 14:66.

14:55-56 Upstairs in the high priest's palace, the leading priests and the entire high council (meaning the group of seventy-one leaders of the Jews—priests and respected men) assembled in the middle of the night to get this trial under way, but they had a dilemma on their hands. They were trying to find witnesses who would testify against Jesus, so they could put him to death, but they couldn't find any—only false witnesses who contradicted each other. The obvious conclusion should have been that Jesus was innocent of any crime. But this was not a trial for justice; it was a trial to accomplish an evil purpose. These leaders held a trial, in keeping with all the trappings of their law, while their whole purpose was to kill Jesus. Ironically, these religious guardians of the law were breaking one of the Ten Commandments, “Do not testify falsely” (Exodus 20:16).

14:57-59 Finally they found some men who would testify against him with a lie regarding Jesus’ words about the Temple. These men twisted Jesus’ words because their testimony, even on this same point, did not agree.

The witnesses claimed that Jesus had said he could destroy the Temple in Jerusalem—a blasphemous boast. Such a claim would bring wrath from even the Romans because destroying temples was considered a capital offense throughout the Roman Empire. However, Jesus had not spoken in the first person (“I will destroy”); nor had he said anything linking his words with the Temple building. Instead, Jesus had spoken in the second person plural, issuing a command, “Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up” (John 2:19). Jesus, of course, was talking about his body, not the building. Ironically, the religious leaders were about to destroy Jesus’ body just as he had said, and three days later he would rise from the dead.

14:60 Caiaphas, the high priest, was getting frustrated. Now his only hope was to get Jesus to say something that would give them evidence to convict him. The religious leaders had tried and failed on prior occasions to trap Jesus with trick questions (12:13-34); Caiaphas tried to make up in intimidation what was lacking in evidence. He asked Jesus to answer his accusers and then to explain the accusations against him.

14:61 Jesus refused to say anything. He had nothing to say to the group of liars who had spoken against him, and he had no reason to explain a bunch of false accusations. So he made no reply. This had been prophesied in Scripture (Isaiah 53:7). With Jesus’ silence, the court proceedings ground to a halt. But Caiaphas had another tactic up the sleeve of his priestly robe. He decided to ask Jesus point blank, “Are you the Messiah?” The council must have held its collective breath in anticipation. Here was the question that could make or break the entire plot. Would Jesus outright claim to be the Messiah, the Son of the blessed God? We may wonder why Jesus refused to answer the first question and then chose to answer this one. Matthew’s account points out that Caiaphas put Jesus under oath (Matthew 26:63) so that Jesus would be forced to answer by law (Leviticus 5:1); thus he would be forced to incriminate himself. Caiaphas’s action was unlawful in trial proceedings, but no one voiced that fact to him. As mentioned above, this trial had nothing to do with justice; it was merely a ploy to get rid of Jesus.

14:62 To the first questions (14:60), Jesus made no reply because the questions were based on confusing and erroneous evidence. Not answering was wiser than trying to clarify the fabricated accusations. But if Jesus had refused to answer the second question (14:61), it would have been tantamount to denying his deity and his mission. So Jesus answered without hesitation, “I am.” The two words, “I am,” both answered the high priest’s question and alluded to Jesus divinity (“I am” being God’s self-designation, see Exodus 3:14).

Then Jesus spoke startling words: the Son of Man, sitting at God’s right hand, refers to Psalm 110:1, and coming back on the clouds of heaven recalls Daniel 7:13-14. The clouds represented the power and glory of God. Both verses were considered to be prophecies of the coming Messiah, and Jesus applied them to himself.

14:63-64 Tearing one’s clothing was an ancient expression of deep sorrow (see Genesis 44:13). The law forbade a priest from tearing his garments over personal grief (Leviticus 10:6; 21:10), but it was appropriate in an instance when blasphemy had been spoken in his presence. Blasphemy was the sin of claiming to be God or of attacking God’s authority and majesty in any way. Caiaphas tore his clothing to signify his horror at the audacity of the claims of this mere teacher from Nazareth. These religious leaders thought that Jesus was leading the people astray and bringing dishonor to God’s holy name. For any other human being, this claim would have been blasphemy; in this case, the claim was true.

Blasphemy was punishable by death (Leviticus 24:15-16). “Why do we need other witnesses?” asked Caiaphas without expecting any answer. Jesus had incriminated himself. Caiaphas asked for their verdict. The Jewish leaders had the evidence they wanted, so they all condemned him to death.

14:65 Next some of the members of the council acted in a most brutish way. Jesus was blindfolded, and they took turns hitting him and then asking him to tell who it was that hit him. When they finished with Jesus, the guards came and also beat Jesus. Yet even this had been prophesied in Scripture (Isaiah 52:14). Jesus suffered great pain, humiliation, and brutality to take away our sin.

PETER DENIES KNOWING JESUS / 14:66-72 / 227

As soon as Peter opened his mouth, he gave himself away. His accent was Galilean. He was an out-of-towner who couldn’t explain his presence in the high priest’s courtyard. The disciple’s earlier brash confidence wilted under pressure. Each denial distanced Peter farther from Jesus: First, he denied being with Jesus in any way; second, he denied being one of Jesus' followers; third, he strenuously denied even knowing Jesus.

Few of us get repeated opportunities, as Peter did, to profess or reject our allegiance to Christ. More often, our first denial of Jesus would keep away any further inquiries. But it is not our identification with Peter's weakness that helps us most. Rather, what happened later becomes our source of hope. Peter's repentance and the Lord's restoration of him give us confidence that God can handle our failures.

14:66-68 This servant girl was actually guarding the gate to the inner courtyard (John 18:16). She had seen Peter enter. Jesus' trial had been held in an upper story of the high priest's palace; thus, Peter was below in the courtyard. When the girl saw Peter's face more clearly in the light of the fire, she looked at him closely and recognized him as one who had been with Jesus (that is, one of Jesus' disciples). This put Peter in a difficult position. Standing among the soldiers and servants right there in enemy territory, Peter did not necessarily want to be identified with the man in an upstairs room on trial for his life. So Peter made a natural and impulsive response—he lied. He simply got out of this sticky situation by saying he didn't understand what the girl was talking about; then he scooted out into the entryway, away from the fire. Temptation came when Peter least expected it, and this warns us to be prepared. Peter had been ready to fight with a sword but not to face the accusations of a servant.

14:69-71 Once again Peter was put to the test. Another servant girl (Matthew 26:71) saw him. She didn't question him; she began telling the others around that Peter was indeed one of them, meaning one of Jesus' disciples. But he denied it again. This was Peter's second denial.

About an hour passed (Luke 22:59) and some other bystanders also recognized Peter by his Galilean accent (Matthew 26:73). Peter's dialect was closer to Syrian speech than to that of the Judean servants in that Jerusalem courtyard. While Peter may have hoped to seem a natural part of the group by joining in the conversation, instead he revealed, by his speech, that he did not belong there. Once again Peter lied, this time more vehemently. So Peter decided to make the strongest denial he could think of by denying with an oath, "I swear by God, I don't know this man." This was the third denial (14:30).

14:72 Immediately upon Peter's final words, the rooster crowed the second time. When Peter heard the rooster crowing and then saw Jesus look down at him from the upper story where the trial was being held (Luke 22:61), Jesus' previous words flashed through his mind. Peter had indeed denied Jesus three times before the rooster crowed.

Peter broke down and cried, not only because he realized that he had denied his Lord, the Messiah, but also because he had turned away from a very dear friend. Unable to stand up for his Lord for even twelve hours, he had failed as a disciple and as a friend.

Fortunately, the story does not end there. Peter's tears were of true sorrow and repentance. Peter reaffirmed his love for Jesus, and Jesus forgave him (see 16:7; John 21:15-19). From this humiliating experience, Peter learned much that would help him later when he became leader of the young church.

Mark's writing took on an added urgency as he neared the climax of his story. He stated the verdict of the council as an inevitable decision. The next steps the council took were mere administrative necessity. Because a death sentence required Roman approval, Pilate awakened one morning to the sounds of an angry mob outside his window.

15:1 The entire high council of Jewish leaders had already reached their verdict (14:64), but they had to make the decision at a meeting during the daytime in accordance with their law. Thus very early in the morning, they made it official that Jesus was worthy of death. So Jesus was bound like a common criminal and sent off to Pilate, the Roman governor. The council had to get permission from Pilate in order to carry out the death penalty.

Pontius Pilate was the Roman governor for the regions of Samaria and Judea from A.D. 26–36. Jerusalem was located in Judea. Pilate's normal residence was in Caesarea on the Mediterranean Sea, but he was in Jerusalem because of the Passover festival. With the large crowds that flocked to the city for that celebration, Pilate and his soldiers came to help keep the peace. He stayed in his headquarters, called the Praetorium. Pilate was a harsh governor who felt nothing but contempt for the Jews; they, in turn, felt the same about him. Pilate was not popular, but the religious leaders had no other way to get rid of Jesus. So they interrupted his breakfast on this early Friday morning, bringing a man whom they accused of treason against Rome! Ironically, when Jesus, a Jew, came before Pilate for trial, Pilate found him innocent.

JESUS STANDS TRIAL BEFORE PILATE / 15:2-5 / 230

The Jewish leaders had arrested Jesus and desired his death on theological grounds—but their charge of blasphemy would be thrown out of the Roman court. They had to come up with a political reason for Jesus' death. Their strategy was to show Jesus as a rebel who claimed to be a king and thus a threat to Caesar. The charge against Jesus in the Roman court was treason.

15:2 Pilate asked Jesus directly if he claimed to be King of the Jews. Jesus' answer was yes, but with a qualification attached (see John 18:36). Jesus did claim to be a king—to remain silent would be denying it (see also 14:62). But he wasn't claiming kingship in any way that would threaten Pilate, Caesar, or the Empire. Jesus' kingship was spiritual. Pilate could sense that the council's case was embarrassingly weak and that the solemn rabbi standing before him was unlikely to lead a revolt against Rome.

15:3-5 Luke records the essence of these charges in Luke 23:1-2. The Jewish leaders had to fabricate new accusations against Jesus, so they accused Jesus of many crimes. These accusations were false, but the religious leaders were determined to have Jesus killed. Pilate knew the charges were preposterous, and he obviously expected Jesus to say something in self-defense against the false charges. But Jesus said nothing. Jesus' silence had been prophesied in Scripture (Isaiah 53:7). Jesus had no reason to try to prolong the trial or save himself. Nothing would stop Jesus from completing the work he had come to earth to do.

Luke recorded a middle phase in all of this action. When Pilate found that Jesus was from Galilee, he sent him off to Herod Antipas, who was also in town for the Passover. But Herod only mocked Jesus and returned him to Pilate (Luke 23:6-12).

PILATE HANDS JESUS OVER TO BE CRUCIFIED / 15:6-15 / 232

In the custom of pardoning a criminal during Passover, Pilate saw an opportunity to avoid responsibility for the death of a man whom he perceived to be innocent. That Jesus died for Barabbas represents yet another example of the purpose of Jesus' death: to take the place, not just of one condemned man, but of all who stand condemned before God's perfect standard of justice.

15:6-7 Each year, during the Jews' Passover festival, Pilate had made it a custom to release any prisoner they requested. Barabbas had taken part in a murder during an insurrection against the Roman government. Although he was a murderer, he may have been a hero among the Jews. Barabbas had no hope of acquittal, so he must have been surprised when the guards came to get him on that Friday morning.

15:8 The proceedings of this hearing by Pilate were held in public, so a crowd was hearing all that transpired, and the crowd probably grew larger as news spread. Perhaps this was all part of the religious leaders' plan—to incite the crowd to ask that Pilate release a prisoner as usual, but that it be someone other than Jesus.

15:9-10 Pilate asked if the people wanted the King of the Jews released. This is the second time Pilate used that title for Jesus (see 15:2), and he would use it again (see 15:12; see also 15:18 and 15:26), probably in mockery. In any event, Pilate could see that this was a frame-up. Why else would these people, who hated him and the Roman Empire he represented, ask him to convict of treason and give the death penalty to one of their fellow Jews? Pilate understood that the Jewish leaders had arrested Jesus out of envy.

15:11-12 The power of the religious leaders took precedence with the Jewish crowd who would hardly side with the Roman governor. The leading priests stirred up the mob to demand the release of Barabbas. This left Pilate wondering what to do with Jesus.

15:13 The people made their choice, stated their preference, and confirmed their sin. This is just what the Jewish religious leaders wanted. Only slaves or those who were not Roman citizens could be executed by crucifixion. If Jesus was crucified, he would die the death of a rebel and slave, not of the king he claimed to be. In addition, crucifixion would put the responsibility for killing Jesus on the Romans; thus, the crowds would not blame the religious leaders.

15:14 The region of Judea where Pilate ruled as governor was little more than a hot and dusty outpost of the Roman Empire. Because Judea was so far from Rome, Pilate was given just a small army. The Roman government could not afford to put large numbers of troops in all the regions under their control, so one of Pilate's main duties was to do whatever was necessary to maintain peace. We know from historical records that Pilate had already been warned about other uprisings in his region. Although he may have seen no guilt in Jesus and no reason to condemn him to death, Pilate wavered when the Jews in the crowd threatened to report him to Caesar (John 19:12). Such a report, accompanied by a riot, could cost him his position and hopes for advancement. Pilate became afraid. His job was in jeopardy. The last thing Pilate needed was a riot in Jerusalem at Passover time, when the city was crowded with Jews from all over the Empire. Pilate asked the people to specify some crime that would make Jesus worthy of death. But the mob kept on shouting more wildly to crucify Jesus.

15:15 Pilate decided to let the crowds crucify Jesus. Although Pilate washed his hands of responsibility (Matthew 27:24), the guilt would remain. Pilate had no good excuse to condemn Jesus, but he was wanted to please the crowd. So he released Barabbas, then flogged Jesus before handing him over to the Roman soldiers to crucify him.

The flogging Jesus received could have killed him. The usual procedure was to bare the upper half of the victim's body and tie his hands to a pillar before whipping him with a lead-tipped whip. The whip was made of leather thongs that connected pieces of bone and metal like a chain. The continued lashing with these sharp instruments tore at the victim's skin, even baring the bones. This torture by flogging always would precede execution; thus, Jesus was flogged before he was sent to the cross. The Romans did it to weaken the prisoner so he would die more quickly on the cross.

ROMAN SOLDIERS MOCK JESUS / 15:16-20 / 233

Jesus was placed in the hands of men who probably knew little or nothing about him other than the fact that he had just been condemned to die. In their eyes, Jesus represented the stiff-necked Jews who resented the power of Rome. Jesus had to endure their pent-up hatred. He was taunted, tortured, and killed by brutal and vulgar men who were ignorant of his true identity and mission. This makes it all the more remarkable that one of these soldiers later confessed, "Truly, this was the Son of God!" (15:39).

15:16 The Romans had to execute Jesus, so the soldiers took him from the post where he had been flogged and led him, beaten and bleeding, back inside the Praetorium (Pilate's headquarters). The entire battalion was called together, probably about two hundred men who had accompanied Pilate from Caesarea.

15:17-19 Someone found a purple robe and threw it around the shoulders of this supposed "king." Someone else, with a brutal sense of humor, twisted some long, sharp thorns into a crown that was then jammed onto Jesus' head. Matthew added that they put a stick in his hand, like a king's scepter (Matthew 27:29). They beat him, striking him on the head. They insulted him by spitting on him and kneeling down in mock worship. Yet even all of this had been prophesied (Isaiah 50:6; 52:14–53:6).

15:20 After having their fun, the soldiers took off the purple robe and put Jesus' own clothes on him again. Then he was taken out to be crucified. Probably only four soldiers under the command of an officer (15:39) actually went out to the site to perform the execution because John mentions that the soldiers at the cross divided his clothing "among the four of them" (John 19:23).

JESUS IS LED AWAY TO BE CRUCIFIED / 15:21-24 / 234

Jesus bore our sins on the cross, but was unable to bear his cross to the crest of Golgotha. He had been flogged and abused repeatedly since his arrest the previous night. A stranger was drafted to carry the timber for Jesus. Meanwhile, the soldiers who had just nailed three men to crosses gambled for the meager possessions they took from the condemned. Their gambling for the worthless benefits from their grisly work stands in stark contrast to the immeasurable benefits the Lord was making available to them as he hung dying above their heads.

15:21 Colonies of Jews existed outside Judea. Simon was from Cyrene, in northern Africa (see Acts 2:10), and was either on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem for the Passover, or he was originally from Cyrene but resided in Palestine. His two sons, Alexander and Rufus, are mentioned as if Mark's readers in Rome knew them. Rufus may be the same man mentioned by Paul in Romans 16:13. If so, this could mean that Simon became a Christian through this incident. Simon, on his way into the city, was randomly picked out of the crowd and forced to carry Jesus' cross.

15:22 Some scholars say Golgotha (translated Skull Hill) derived its name from its appearance, a hill with a stony top that might have been shaped like a skull. Golgotha is the Hebrew word for "skull." The familiar name "Calvary" is derived from the Latin calvaria (also meaning "skull"). Golgotha may have been a regular place of execution in a prominent public place outside the city along a main road. Executions held there served as examples to the people and as a deterrent to criminals.

15:23 Wine drugged with myrrh was offered to Jesus to help reduce his pain. Myrrh is generally understood to be a narcotic that was used to deaden pain. Tradition says women of Jerusalem prepared and offered this drink to condemned men. This also may allude to Psalm 69:21. But Jesus refused to drink it. He chose to suffer fully conscious and with a clear mind.

15:24 Mark's words are simple and direct: They nailed him to the cross. Indeed, Mark's Roman readers needed no elaborate description; they knew it all too well. Crucifixion, instituted by the Romans, was a feared and shameful form of execution. Death came by suffocation as the person lost strength and the weight of the body made breathing more and more difficult.

Contrary to the discreet paintings of the Crucifixion, Jesus was crucified naked. Roman soldiers had the right to take for themselves the clothing of those crucified, so they gambled for Jesus' clothes. This act had also been prophesied (Psalm 22:18).

JESUS IS PLACED ON THE CROSS / 15:25-32 / 235

An execution could provide hours of grisly entertainment for spectators. The Gospels describe various responses within the crowd as Jesus was dying. Some openly taunted him. His opponents gloated. Those who had the most information about Jesus rejected his claims, while one prisoner who had very little information placed his trust in him (see Luke 23:40-43).

15:25-26 Jesus was placed on the cross at nine o'clock in the morning. A signboard stating the charge against him was fastened on his cross as a warning. Because Jesus was never found guilty, the only accusation placed on his sign was the "crime" of calling himself King of the Jews. This sign was meant to be ironic. A king, stripped and executed in public view, had obviously lost his kingdom forever. But Jesus, who turns the world's wisdom upside down, was just coming into his Kingdom. His death and resurrection would strike the deathblow to Satan's rule and would establish Christ's eternal authority over the earth. Few people reading the sign that bleak day understood its real meaning, but the sign was absolutely true. Jesus is king of the Jews—and the Gentiles, and the whole universe.

A person who wants to be close to Jesus must be prepared to suffer and die as he himself was doing. The way to the Kingdom is the way of the cross. If we want the glory of the Kingdom, we must be willing to be united with the crucified Christ.

15:29-30 Insult was literally added to injury when it came to public crucifixion. People passing by shouted abuse at Jesus. They again used the twisted accusation that had been brought against Jesus at the council (14:58), taunting him that if he could boast of building the Temple in three days, surely he had the power to save himself from the fate of the cross. Ironically, Jesus was in the very process of fulfilling his own prophecy. His body was being destroyed, but in three days he would rise again. Because Jesus is the Son of God who always obeys the will of the Father, he did not come down from the cross to save himself. If he had done so, he could not have saved us.

15:31-32 Apparently the religious leaders had followed the executioners out to Golgotha, eager to see their plot finally completed in Jesus' death. Not content to have brought him to an unjust death, they also mocked him as they talked among themselves. They mockingly dismissed his healings and miracles because even though he saved others, he could not save himself. They taunted him to come down from the cross, and if he did that, they would believe him. They did not believe that Jesus was the Messiah, nor the king of Israel, but they taunted him with these names. Obviously Jesus wasn't the Messiah, they thought, because he was dying just like the cursed robbers. Mark recorded that the two criminals also ridiculed Jesus; but Luke states that later one of these criminals repented (Luke 23:39-43).

Mark recorded the final scene of Jesus' earthly life with graphic imagery. The dark sky was pierced by an anguished cry of abandonment. Those watching were gripped with awe.

15:33 Jesus had been put on the cross at nine o'clock in the morning. Death by crucifixion was slow and excruciating, sometimes taking two or three days. Three hours passed while Jesus put up with abuse from bystanders. Then, at noon, darkness settled over the land for three hours. We do not know how this darkness occurred, but it is clear that God caused it. Nature testified to the gravity of Jesus' death, while Jesus' friends and enemies alike fell silent in the encircling gloom. The darkness on that Friday afternoon was both physical and spiritual. All nature seemed to mourn over the tragedy of the death of God's Son.

15:34 Jesus did not ask this question in surprise or despair. He was quoting the first line of Psalm 22, a prophecy expressing the deep agony of the Messiah's death for the world's sin. Jesus knew that he would be temporarily separated from God the moment he took upon himself the sins of the world, because God cannot look on sin (Habakkuk 1:13). This separation was the "cup" Jesus dreaded drinking, as he prayed in Gethsemane (14:36). The physical agony was horrible, but the spiritual alienation from God was the ultimate torture. Jesus suffered this double death so that we would never have to experience eternal separation from God.

15:35 The bystanders misinterpreted Jesus' words and thought he was calling for Elijah. Because Elijah had ascended into heaven without dying (2 Kings 2:11), there was the popular belief that Elijah would return to rescue those suffering from great trouble.

15:36 John records that Jesus said he was thirsty (John 19:28-29). In response, one man filled a sponge with sour wine (this was not the same as the drugged wine offered to Jesus earlier). He put the sponge on a long stick and held it up so as to reach Jesus' lips. Thinking Jesus had called for Elijah (15:35), the people watched to see if Elijah would come to rescue Jesus.

15:37 Jesus' loud cry may have been his last words, "It is finished!" (John 19:30). Jesus' loud cry climaxed the horror of this scene and showed his sudden death after over six hours on the cross. Jesus did not die the normal death of a crucified person who would merely breathe his last breath. Usually crucifixion caused a person to lapse into a coma from extreme exhaustion. Jesus, however, was completely conscious to the end. His cry exclaimed his victory.

15:38 This significant event symbolized what Christ's work on the cross had accomplished. The Temple had three main parts—the courts, the Holy Place (where only the priests could enter), and the Most Holy Place, a place reserved by God for himself. It was in the Most Holy Place that the Ark of the Covenant, and God's presence with it, rested. The room was entered only once a year, on the Day of Atonement, by the high priest as he made a sacrifice to gain forgiveness for the sins of all the nation (Leviticus 16:1-34). The curtain in the Temple was between the Holy Place and the Most Holy Place. Symbolically, the curtain separated the holy God from sinful people. By tearing the curtain in two, God showed that Christ had opened the way for sinful people to reach the holy God.

15:39 A Roman officer had accompanied the soldiers to the execution site. Undoubtedly, he had done this many times. Yet this crucifixion was completely different—the unexplained darkness, the earthquake, even the executed himself who had uttered words of forgiveness (Luke 23:34). The officer observed Jesus' alertness throughout the crucifixion and his relatively quick death. This Gentile Roman officer realized something that most of the Jewish nation had missed: "Truly, this was the Son of God!" Whether he understood what he was saying, we cannot know. He may simply have admired Jesus' courage and inner strength, perhaps thinking that Jesus was divine like one of Rome's many gods.

While the Jewish religious leaders stood around celebrating Jesus' death, a lone Roman soldier was the first to acclaim Jesus as the Son of God after his death.

15:40-41 There had been many people at the cross who had come only to mock and taunt Jesus or, like the religious leaders, to revel in their apparent victory. But some of Jesus' faithful followers were at the cross as well. Among the disciples, only John was there, and he recorded in his Gospel in graphic detail the horror he observed. Several women were also there watching from a distance. John wrote that Jesus' mother, Mary, was present, and that Jesus spoke to John from the cross about taking care of Mary (John 19:25-27).

Mark mentions that Mary Magdalene was there. She had been released from demon possession by Jesus (Luke 8:2). Another Mary is distinguished (from Mary Magdalene and Mary Jesus' mother) by the names of her sons who may have been well known in the early church. Salome was the mother of the disciples James and John and was probably Jesus' mother's sister. These women had come from Galilee with Jesus for the Passover. They had come with him to Jerusalem and had witnessed the Crucifixion.

Although Mark mentioned only Joseph of Arimathea, John mentioned both Joseph and Nicodemus, two secret disciples of Jesus who took action to ensure his burial (John 19:38-42). Their commitment to Jesus forced them out of hiding. The Gospels carefully note that Jesus was clearly dead. Pilate checked. One soldier made sure (John 19:34). Two men who had followed Jesus from a distance undertook the compassionate task of removing Jesus' body from the cross and placing it in a tomb, while several women watched.

15:42-43 The Sabbath began at sundown on Friday and ended at sundown on Saturday. Jesus died just a few hours before sundown on Friday. It was against Jewish law to do physical work or to travel on the Sabbath, so the day before was the day of preparation for the Sabbath. It was also against Jewish law to let a dead body remain exposed overnight (Deuteronomy 21:23). As evening and the Sabbath approached, Joseph from Arimathea (a town about twenty miles from Jerusalem) asked for Jesus' body so he could give it a proper burial. Although an honored member of the high council, Joseph was a secret disciple of Jesus (John 19:38). That he was waiting for the Kingdom of God suggests that Joseph was a Pharisee, who hoped for God's deliverance. Joseph gathered his courage and went to Pilate to ask for Jesus' body in order to bury it. He went directly to Pilate who alone could give permission to take down the body.

He had to hurry; Sabbath was fast approaching.

15:44-45 Pilate was surprised that Jesus had died so quickly, so he asked an official to verify the report. He summoned the officer who had been at the execution site (15:39). Only Mark recorded Pilate's questioning of the officer, perhaps to show his Roman readers that Jesus' death had been verified by a Roman military officer. No officer so trained in execution could make such a basic error.

15:46 Joseph bought a linen cloth; Nicodemus brought spices (John 19:39). The body was carefully taken down from the cross, wrapped in layers of cloth with the spices in between, and laid in a tomb. Jesus was given a burial fit for a king.

This tomb was probably a man-made cave carved out of one of the many limestone hills in the area around Jerusalem. It was large enough to walk into (John 20:6). Matthew records that this was Joseph's own previously unused tomb (Matthew 27:60). Joseph and Nicodemus wrapped Jesus' body, placed it in the tomb, and rolled a stone across the entrance. The religious leaders also watched where Jesus was buried. They stationed guards by the tomb and sealed the stone to make sure that no one would steal Jesus' body and claim he had risen from the dead (Matthew 27:62-66). All of these actions give us verification that Jesus truly had died.

15:47 Two of the women who had been at the cross (15:40) followed these men as they carried Jesus' body to the tomb. They wanted to know where Jesus' body was laid because they planned to return after the Sabbath with their own spices to anoint Jesus' body (16:1).

JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD / 16:1-8 / 239

The resurrection of Jesus from the dead is the central fact of Christian history. Jesus' resurrection is unique. Other religions have strong ethical systems, concepts about paradise and afterlife, and various holy scriptures. Only Christianity has a God who became human, literally died for his people, and was raised again in power and glory to rule his church forever.

Christians can look very different from one another, and they can hold widely varying beliefs about politics, lifestyle, and even theology. But one central belief unites and inspires all true Christians—Jesus Christ rose from the dead!

16:1 Mary Magdalene and the other Mary had been at Jesus' cross and had followed Joseph so that they would know where he had been buried (15:47). Salome had also been at the cross; she was probably the mother of the disciples James and John. The women went home and kept the Sabbath as the law required, from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday. So they purchased burial spices before returning to the tomb early Sunday morning. Anointing a body was a sign of love, devotion, and respect. Bringing spices to the tomb would be like bringing flowers to a grave today. Since they did not embalm bodies in Israel, they would use perfumes as a normal practice. The women undoubtedly knew that Joseph and Nicodemus had already wrapped the body in linen and spices. They probably were going to do a simple external application of the fragrant spices. Since Jesus' body was buried so rapidly after he was crucified, they had been unable to perform the anointing before Jesus' burial.

16:2 Sabbath had ended at sundown on Saturday, so very early on Sunday morning, the women left their homes, arriving at the tomb just at sunrise. They wasted no time. This further illustrates their misunderstanding of Jesus. He had told them that he would rise from the dead, yet they expected nothing.

16:3 Two of these women had seen where the body had been placed and knew that a huge stone had been rolled across the entrance to the tomb (15:46). Apparently, they were unaware that the tomb had been sealed and a guard set outside it (Matthew 27:62-66). So as they approached the tomb, they remembered that the stone would be a problem. They wondered aloud who might be able to roll the stone away so that they could get in.

16:4 The women needn't have worried about the stone. Jesus had said he would rise again after three days. In the Jewish reckoning of time, a day included any part of a day; thus, Friday was the first day, Saturday was the second day, and Sunday was the third day. When the women arrived at daybreak, Jesus had already risen.

When they arrived at the tomb, they saw that the large stone had already been rolled aside. Matthew records that there had been an earthquake and an angel of the Lord had descended from heaven, had rolled back the stone, and had sat on it.

16:5-6 The women entered the tomb. Once inside they were startled to see a young man clothed in a white robe. We learn from Matthew and John that this was an angel. When angels appeared to people, they looked like humans.

The angel spoke reassuringly to the women. They were looking for Jesus the Nazarene, the human being who had been crucified. But Jesus was not there; he had been raised from the dead.

The angel invited the women to look into the inner burial chamber and see where they (Joseph and Nicodemus, 15:46) laid his body. John records that the linen cloths that had been wrapped around Jesus' body were left as if Jesus had passed right through them. The handkerchief was still rolled up in the shape of a head, and it was at about the right distance from the wrappings that had enveloped Jesus' body (John 20:6-7).

16:7 The women who had come to anoint a dead body were given another task, that of proclaiming the Resurrection to the frightened disciples. The disciples had deserted Jesus in the hour of trial, but the angel's words held hope of renewal and forgiveness. The disciples were invited to meet Jesus in Galilee—there was work to do. The angel made special mention of Peter to show that, in spite of Peter's denials, Jesus had not deserted him.

The angel told the disciples to meet Jesus in Galilee just as he told you before he died. This was exactly what Jesus had told them during the Last Supper, that he would go ahead of them into Galilee after his resurrection (14:28). But the disciples, filled with fear, remained behind locked doors in Jerusalem (John 20:19). Jesus met them first in Jerusalem (Luke 24:36) and later in Galilee (John 21).

16:8 The women fled from the tomb, realizing that they had seen the results of an awesome miracle in the empty tomb and had been in the presence of an angel. They either went straight to the disciples with the news, saying nothing to anyone along the way, or for a time they said nothing out of fear, perhaps expecting the response of disbelief that they eventually did receive from the disciples when they told the story (Luke 24:11).

JESUS APPEARS TO MARY MAGDALENE / 16:9-11 / 240

While the material included in 16:1-8 is universally regarded as being original to Mark's manuscript, the section of 16:9-20 is not considered to have been original. Most scholars believe that verses 9-20 were added sometime in the second century or later; whoever added these verses borrowed heavily from the resurrection accounts in the other Gospels. There are four other different additions to the ending of Mark as found in a few other ancient manuscripts. But the earliest and best Greek manuscripts do not contain these verses, and testimony of the early church fathers indicates that these verses were not part of the original text of Mark's Gospel. Most modern translations note that these verses are absent from our earliest manuscripts but include them anyway.

16:9-11 After the women had told the disciples about the Resurrection, and Peter and another disciple (presumably John) had gone to see for themselves (John 20:3-9), Mary Magdalene apparently had returned to the tomb and was weeping (John 20:11).

Although Mary Magdalene has been mentioned earlier in this Gospel as one of the women at the cross and at the tomb (15:40, 47; 16:1), Mark reminded his readers of the reason for her devotion to Jesus: He had cast out seven demons from her (see also Luke 8:2). This devoted woman was the first person who saw the resurrected Christ.

Jesus told Mary to return and tell the disciples. The disciples did not believe the women who came to them; Peter and John saw the empty tomb and still did not understand what had happened. They continued their grieving and weeping. Mary returned to the disciples with the news that she had actually seen and talked to the risen Jesus, but they didn't believe her.

JESUS APPEARS TO TWO BELIEVERS TRAVELING ON THE ROAD / 16:12-13 / 243

Luke's description of Jesus' encounter with the two disciples on the road to Emmaus should be read when studying this brief paragraph—Luke 24:13-35.

16:12-13 At another point, Jesus appeared to two of the disciples who had disbelieved Mary's report of seeing the resurrected Jesus. They were walking from Jerusalem to the small town of Emmaus (west of Jerusalem). These disciples knew that the tomb was empty but didn't understand that Jesus had risen. To compound the problem, they were walking in the wrong direction—away from the fellowship of believers in Jerusalem. They didn't recognize Jesus when he appeared beside them because he had changed his appearance.

After talking with these two disciples along the road and reprimanding them about their lack of knowledge of the Scriptures that described all that happened, Jesus revealed himself and then vanished (Luke 24:31). When they realized who he was, they immediately returned to Jerusalem and reported that they too had seen Jesus. But still, no one believed them.

JESUS APPEARS TO THOMAS / 16:14 / 245

The disciples' reluctance to believe was resolved by Jesus' appearance to them all at one time. The common theme in Mark's list of appearances was the disciples' reluctance to believe.

16:14 Jesus finally appeared to the eleven disciples together (Judas Iscariot, the betrayer, had killed himself). Jesus rebuked them for their unbelief. Jesus had foretold his own resurrection. Every time he had told them he would die, he had also told them that he would rise again. The Old Testament prophesied all that had happened to Jesus and also spoke of his resurrection. The disciples had no excuse for the stubborn refusal to believe.

JESUS GIVES THE GREAT COMMISSION / 16:15-18 / 248

This paragraph represents a change of scene. This was another post-Resurrection appearance, the last to the remaining eleven disciples and other followers. This paragraph outlines Jesus' final charge to his followers (see also Matthew 28:16-20). The Gospel of Mark is a record of the gospel (or Good News) from its beginning (1:1). As the book closes, the gospel does not end, but continues in the lives of Jesus' followers. Jesus' command is to go everywhere and preach the Good News.

16:15 This is the Great Commission. The disciples had been trained well, and they had seen the risen Lord. God had given Jesus authority over heaven and earth. On the basis of that authority, Jesus told his disciples to make more disciples as they preached, baptized, and taught. With this same authority, Jesus still commands us to tell everyone everywhere the Good News.

16:16 The disciples were commanded to baptize people because baptism unites a believer with Jesus Christ in his or her death to sin and resurrection to new life.

It is not the water of baptism that saves, but God's grace accepted through faith in Christ. Because of Jesus' response to the criminal on the cross who died with him, we know it is possible to be saved without being baptized (Luke 23:43). Jesus did not say that those who were not baptized would be condemned, but that anyone who refuses to believe will be condemned. Baptism symbolizes submission to Christ, a willingness to live God's way, and identification with God's covenant people.

16:17-18 As the disciples fulfilled their commission, and indeed as others believed and went on to spread the gospel, miraculous signs would accompany them. As with Jesus' miracles, these signs would authenticate the source of their power and draw people to belief. At times, God would miraculously intervene on behalf of his followers. While some people have misinterpreted the notion of "picking up snakes" as thinking that one's faith is demonstrated by handling rattlesnakes, the writer seems to have in mind incidents like the one described in Acts 28:1-6, where Paul was bitten by a poisonous snake without being harmed. The same could happen for someone who accidentally drank deadly poison. This does not mean, however, that we should test God by putting ourselves in dangerous situations.

JESUS ASCENDS INTO HEAVEN / 16:19-20 / 250

Even though it is questioned as having been from Mark's pen, this ending provides an effective closure to the book. Jesus resumed his place with God and was exalted to "the right hand of God." Meanwhile, those who were left behind carried the gospel everywhere, accompanied by the Lord's presence.

16:19 These final verses end where the book of Acts begins. Luke wrote in Acts that Jesus appeared to various people over a period of forty days before he ascended (Acts 1:9). As the disciples stood and watched, Jesus was taken up into heaven. Jesus' physical presence left the disciples, but the Holy Spirit soon came to comfort them and empower them to spread the gospel (Acts 2:1-4). Jesus' work of salvation was completed, and he sat down in the place of honor at God's right hand where he has authority over heaven and earth (see also Romans 8:34; Hebrews 1:3; 8:1).

16:20 While Jesus' work on earth was completed, the disciples' work was just beginning. This verse compacts the book of Acts. These doubting, stubborn disciples turned into powerful preachers who went everywhere and preached. God worked with them—giving them peace, strength through persecutions, and confirmation of their message with miraculous signs (16:17-18; Hebrews 2:4).

Mark's Gospel emphasizes Christ's power, as well as his servanthood. Jesus' life and teaching turned the world upside down. The world sees power as a way to gain control over others. But Jesus, with all authority and power in heaven and earth, chose to serve others. He held children in his arms, healed the sick, acted patiently with his hardheaded disciples, and died for the sins of the world. Following Jesus means receiving this same power to serve. As believers, we are called to be servants of Christ. As Christ served, so we are to serve.

LUKE

INTRODUCTION

Precision. Accuracy. Truth.

Certain men and women make it their business to deal only with the facts. No hearsay. No speculation. No rumor.

Scientists belong in this category. Checking the data and conducting experiments, they test theories and draw conclusions. Detectives, too, work hard to discover the truth. Carefully gathering and analyzing evidence, they follow the clues to solve the crime. Add to the mix judges who weigh testimony, hear arguments, and consider the law before rendering just verdicts. Historians also strive to be accurate—to know precisely what happened at a certain time and place. And surely doctors stand with this group. With informative tests and diagnostic expertise, they examine patients, draw conclusions, and prescribe cures.

Luke wanted only the truth. As a historian, Luke's research would be meticulous, interviewing reliable witnesses and primary sources. As a doctor, a man of science, he would carefully consider all the facts before rendering an opinion. That is exactly what he did. Addressing Theophilus, Luke wrote, "Having carefully investigated all of these accounts from the beginning, I have decided to write a careful summary for you, to reassure you of the truth of all you were taught" (Luke 1:3-4). To "reassure" his friend and other believers who never had the opportunity to see Jesus themselves, Luke's investigation included reading "accounts about the events" (1:1) and analyzing "reports . . . from the early disciples and other eyewitnesses" (1:2). Thus, Luke sought and found the truth. Then he recorded it to affirm this truth in writing and to point his readers to the Truth, Jesus Christ.

As you read Luke's Gospel, carefully investigate the facts for yourself. Analyze the evidence presented, follow the clues, and render your judgment. No doubt, you too will discover that Jesus is Christ, the Savior, God's Son.

AUTHOR

Luke: doctor, Gentile Christian, traveling companion of Paul, and writer of the book of Acts

Although the texts of this Gospel and Acts make no mention of Luke, the early church fathers, without dispute or exception, identified him as the author. Justin Martyr (c. A.D. 100–165), Irenaeus (c. A.D. 175–195), and Tertullian (c. A.D.

160–230) all agree. Even the Muratorian Canon (c. A.D. 170–180), an early list of biblical books considered as inspired by God, includes Luke.

One of the oldest copies of this Gospel (Bodmer Papyrus XIV), dated to around A.D. 200, includes Luke in the title as the author.

What makes this unanimous testimony so remarkable is that Luke was a relatively unknown figure in the writings of the early church. Paul only mentions Luke three times (Colossians 4:14; 2 Timothy 4:11; Philemon 24). Most significant is the fact that Luke was not an original disciple, an eyewitness follower of Christ. This fact is freely admitted at the outset of the Gospel, as the author explains the necessity of relying on eyewitnesses for his investigation about Jesus' life (1:2-4). Assuming that Luke is the author, his close relationship to the apostle Paul and other church leaders undoubtedly would have given him access to a wealth of evidence about the life of Christ (see Acts 20:5-15; 27:1–28:16).

In addition to being one of Paul's traveling companions, Luke was a doctor (Colossians 4:14). Many have attempted to prove Luke's authorship of this Gospel by identifying medical terminology in it. In a few places, Luke presents more exact descriptions of diseases than Matthew or Mark. The Greek style of Luke does not prove that the author was a physician, but it does not disprove it and certainly seems consistent with what a doctor would write.

Luke is not included among the Jews in Paul's final greetings in Colossians (see Colossians 4:11, 14). From this omission, many have concluded that Luke was a Gentile, probably the only Gentile author of a New Testament book. A careful study of the Greek style of both Luke and Acts agrees with the conclusion that the author, Luke, was a Gentile. For example, these books consistently avoid Aramaic expressions, such as rabbi, and include, instead, words that would be more familiar to Gentiles, such as teacher.

Although Luke's historical accuracy has been called into question by critical scholars on certain points (especially the census of Quirinius in 2:1-2 and references to the priesthoods of Annas and Caiaphas in 3:2), it is clear that Luke, more so than Matthew and Mark, took great pains to verify the historical accuracy of the accounts that he was retelling. Historical references abound in the Gospel. For example, Luke dated Jesus' birth by mentioning the reigning Roman emperor and the local governor (2:1); he even dated the beginning of John the Baptist's ministry in the same way (3:1). This Gospel, along with the numerous details in Acts, reveals the careful and diligent research of a precise historian.

Although not much is known about Luke, it is evident that he was Paul's loyal and faithful friend. He quietly supported Paul, both when he was valiantly preaching the Good News and when he was sitting in prison. Toward the end of Paul's life, when everyone else had deserted him, Luke was by his side, encouraging and supporting the apostle during his last days (2 Timothy 4:11). Perhaps during these long hours at Paul's side, Luke quietly took up a pen and started writing down the results of his meticulous research of Jesus' life.

As you read Luke, look for the accuracy and precision with which Luke presents the teaching and ministry of Jesus. But also look beyond this to the Jesus whom Luke presents. Luke's careful research uncovered a person with a revolutionary message, a person who expressed love and compassion that could come only from God. Convinced of the truth of Jesus' message, Luke dedicated all his talents to furthering that message. What is your response to Jesus and his teachings? What can you do to spread the Good News?

DATE AND SETTING

Probably written from Caesarea, around A.D. 60–61. The best clue to the date for this Gospel is the last recorded event in the book of Acts, Paul's first Roman imprisonment. Acts ends on an unexpected note, with Paul a prisoner in Rome, awaiting his trial. It is an abrupt ending, with no mention of the trial's results and subsequent events. This seems to indicate that Luke was writing Acts right up to the present. If that is so, then Acts was probably written around A.D. 61–62 because Paul's first imprisonment is usually dated A.D. 62 and his second imprisonment and subsequent execution, much later. Clearly identifying his Gospel as the first of his two books (Acts 1:1), Luke probably wrote it around A.D. 60–61, perhaps when he was staying with Paul during his imprisonments in Caesarea (Acts 23:33) and in Rome (Acts 28:14-16).

After accompanying Paul on parts of his second and third missionary journeys, Luke remained with him when Paul was arrested in Jerusalem (Acts 21). Luke did not abandon Paul even when he was brought to Caesarea under heavy Roman guard (to protect him from his Jewish accusers, Acts 23:23-35). Also, Luke most likely endured, with Paul, the treacherous sea journey to Rome (Acts 27–28). It was during those long months, as Paul awaited trial, first before Felix (Acts 24:1-27), then Festus (Acts 25:1-22), then Agrippa (Acts 25:23–26:32), and finally Caesar himself (Acts 28:15-31), that Luke probably wrote this Gospel (and the book of Acts). Especially during the imprisonment at Rome, Paul enjoyed a measure of freedom. He lived in his own rented house, under the constant watch of a Roman guard, and welcomed guests and friends to tell them about the Good News concerning Jesus Christ and salvation (Acts 28:30-31). During this somewhat mild imprisonment, it appears that Luke stayed with Paul (Paul mentions Luke in the letters he wrote during that time—see Colossians 4:14 and Philemon 24).

In addition to staying with Paul and supporting him, Luke was diligently compiling the facts relating to Jesus' life—the testimonies of eyewitnesses, the written histories, and the stories of the Messiah's life that Paul had employed in his preaching. Luke wrote a history of Jesus' life that would become more influential than the Roman Empire itself. Luke's history would survive the fall of that powerful empire and would help establish the truth about Christ.

This date (A.D. 60–61) is fairly close to the time that the other two synoptic Gospels were written—Mark being the first, around A.D. 55–60, and Matthew following, around A.D. 60. Because of this proximity, some critics have maintained a later date for Luke and Acts—in the mid-eighties. Their reasons, however, are far from persuasive. The common assumption of these critics, that Luke would not have access to Mark's Gospel until several decades after Mark wrote it, is very doubtful because Paul mentioned in both Philemon 24 and 2 Timothy 4:11 that Luke and Mark were together. (Philemon was written in A.D. 60, and 2 Timothy was written in A.D. 66 or 67.)

In addition, Acts makes no mention of the destruction of Jerusalem which occurred in A.D. 70. Surely this catastrophic event would have been included in any history of the early church. In fact, Luke reported Jesus' predictions that Jerusalem would be utterly demolished (19:41-44; 21:20-24). Mentioning the fulfillment of Jesus' prophecy would have been especially appropriate since Luke wrote of Stephen's martyrdom (Acts 6:8–7:60) and Paul's arrest (Acts 21:26-36), both events having occurred in Jerusalem. Note also that Luke wrote of the fulfillment of Agabus's prophecy (Acts 11:28). Certainly the omission in Acts of the destruction of Jerusalem points to an earlier date for the Gospel.

Most likely, Luke took advantage of the prolonged imprisonment of Paul in both Caesarea and Rome to collect information relating to Jesus' life and to record Paul's memories of his four missionary journeys that had spanned the previous decade.

AUDIENCE

Theophilus (“one who loves God”), Gentiles, and people everywhere

Luke addressed both of his books—the Gospel and the book of Acts—to Theophilus (1:1; Acts 1:1). Because “Theophilus” literally means “one who loves God” or “friend of God,” some have speculated that the name does not refer to an actual person but, rather, to all people who love God. “Most honorable” (the words preceding the name), however, was a title often used in addressing a Roman official. This has led most scholars to conclude that Theophilus was an actual person, probably someone of rank in Roman society.

Beyond that brief mention in Luke and Acts, however, nothing else is known of Theophilus. The name appears nowhere else in Scripture.

The name “Theophilus” suggests a Gentile. This is consistent with the content of both Luke and Acts, which seem to be written to a predominately Gentile audience. Luke took the trouble to explain common Jewish customs, such as the Passover, to his readers, who were apparently Gentiles (see 22:1-7). In addition, Luke omitted the teachings of Jesus that involved the intricacies of Mosaic law and Jewish customs, such as divorce regulations (see Mark 10:1-12), customs surrounding oaths (see Matthew 5:33-37), praying (see Matthew 6:5-6), and fasting (see Matthew 6:16-18). On the other hand, Luke underscored Jesus’ mission to the Gentiles (2:32; 24:47) by tracing his genealogy back to Adam instead of just to Abraham (compare 3:23-38 with Matthew 1:1-17) and by highlighting the Roman soldier’s remarkable faith (7:1-10). Luke’s concern for Gentile inclusion into the community of faith becomes even more clear in the book of Acts, where he charted the spread of the gospel among the Gentiles (Acts 10:1–11:18; 13:46-48).

Although written to a specific individual, Luke probably also had a larger audience in mind. Certainly a new Christian questioning his or her faith would gain much from reading this Gospel. Jews and Jewish Christians would benefit from seeing that despite numerous invitations by God to participate in the new covenant, Israel had rejected God’s invitations and their Messiah. Gentiles, especially, would benefit from this Gospel, especially those feeling out of place in what originally was a Jewish movement. Growing numbers of Gentiles were coming to Christ in Asia Minor and Greece, evangelized, for the most part, by Paul (as described in Acts). Luke offered reassurance that they belonged, as Christ’s followers and God’s people. Clearly, through Luke, God was communicating his message to all who love God.

What tensions do you face in your faith? What doubts about Jesus and the Christian faith nibble at the edges of your mind? Apparently Theophilus did not conceal his questions; instead, he went to his trusted and knowledgeable friend and asked for information and answers. Luke responded to Theophilus with two books, filled with the results of his careful research about Jesus. As you read, dive into this God-inspired history of Jesus with your hard questions. You will find answers.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

To present an accurate account of the life of Christ and to present Christ as the perfect man and Savior

Luke’s purpose for writing is stated in his preface to the book. Luke wrote this account to provide Theophilus with a history of Jesus that could hold up to the standards of historical investigation. Luke knew that his account of Jesus' life must do more than report the Master's words and deeds. Jesus' actions certainly could speak for themselves. Healing the sick (5:12-16), exorcising thousands of demons (8:26-39), calming the waves (8:22-25), and raising people from the dead (8:40-56) surely could not be attributed to a mere human being. Only God could possess that type of control over nature, diseases, the spirit world, and even death. Yet Luke did not stop there. He connected Old Testament Scriptures with Jesus' actions, showing how Jesus fulfilled the prophecies concerning the Messiah (3:4-6; 7:22-23; 20:17). Jesus was the One about whom the prophets had spoken.

Luke did not leave Theophilus wondering how he should respond to Jesus. He described the various reactions of those who saw and heard Jesus—from amazement, joy, and wholehearted belief to fear, skepticism, and coldhearted rejection (compare 4:16-30 and 9:18-20). Luke highlighted the appropriate responses: fervent belief in Jesus as the Son of God (9:18-20) and willingness to sacrifice everything to follow him (9:23-27). Anyone who responded to the gospel message, repenting of sin and trusting in Christ, could become a member of the community of faith.

With two well-researched volumes, Luke answered Theophilus's hard questions about Christian faith. By retelling the life and teachings of Jesus, Luke presented Jesus as a real man, an extraordinary Jewish teacher in his own right. By recounting the miracles and the prophecies connected to Jesus' life, Luke portrayed him as a divine being, the Messiah sent by God. By tracing the growth of the Christian church throughout the known world at that time, Luke presented the Good News of salvation, applicable to every person—from the lowliest slave to the most respected nobleman, from orthodox Jews to pagan Greeks and Romans. When you sit down to read Luke, don't let your familiarity with the Gospel stories rob the freshness and vividness of Luke's account. Like Theophilus, approach Luke with questions. Who is Jesus? Why should I care about a Jewish teacher? Let Jesus' words speak directly to you, challenging you to repent and believe.

RELATIONSHIP TO THE OTHER GOSPELS

It is commonly accepted that Luke had access to Mark's Gospel when he was composing his account, for he seems to have adapted Mark's material in large blocks (see chapters 4, 5, 8, 9, 19–21; compare 18:15-17 and Mark 10:13-16 for the similar wording of the two Gospels). Parts of the rest of Luke's narrative have close affinities with portions of Matthew, but the striking differences at times suggest that Luke may not have had direct access to Matthew's Gospel. Around thirty percent of the Gospel is entirely unique. Most of this is parables:

- The rich man and Lazarus—16:19-31
- The humble servant—17:7-10
- The persistent widow—18:1-8
- The Pharisee and the tax collector—18:9-14

A theme emerges in a study of the parables unique to Luke: the emphasis on the spiritual importance of prayer and generosity. The parables of the persistent friend, the persistent widow, and the Pharisee and the tax collector all teach the power of prayer. Prayer is highlighted throughout Jesus' ministry—from his baptism (3:21) to his choosing of the disciples (6:12-13) to the night he was betrayed (22:40-46).

The parables of the rich man and Lazarus, the rich fool, the two debtors, the shrewd manager, and the good Samaritan emphasize the importance of generosity. Luke drives this point home by recording Jesus' straightforward confrontation of a rich man's spiritual arrogance (18:22).

Among all of the Gospel writers, Luke highlighted the high ethical demands Jesus made on his followers. Jesus did not mince words, commanding any who wanted to follow him that they had to take up the cross (9:23). As you read Luke, consider whether you are committed to taking up your cross each day. Do you dedicate time to God, praising him and praying for his will for your life? Have you committed all your resources to his purposes?

MESSAGE

Luke's story begins with angels appearing to Zechariah and then to Mary, telling them of the upcoming births of their sons. From Zechariah and Elizabeth would come John the Baptist, who would prepare the way for Christ. And Mary would conceive a child by the Holy Spirit and bear Jesus, the Son of God. Soon after John's birth, Caesar Augustus declared a census, and so Mary and Joseph traveled to Bethlehem, the town of David, their ancient ancestor. There the child was born. Angels announced the joyous event to shepherds, who rushed to the manger. When the shepherds left, they were praising God and spreading the news. Eight days later, Jesus was circumcised and then dedicated to God in the Temple, where Simeon and Anna confirmed Jesus' identity as the Savior, their Messiah.

Luke gives us a glimpse of Jesus at age 12—discussing theology with the Jewish teachers at the Temple (2:41-52). Eighteen years later Jesus went out in the wilderness to be baptized by John the Baptist before beginning his public ministry (3:1-23). At this point, Luke traces Jesus' genealogy on his stepfather Joseph's side, through David and Abraham back to Adam, underscoring Jesus' identity as the Son of Man (3:23-38).

After the temptation (4:1-13), Jesus returned to Galilee to preach, teach, and heal (4:14ff). During this time, he began gathering his group of 12 disciples (5:1-11, 27-29). Later, Jesus commissioned the disciples and sent them out to proclaim the Kingdom of God. When they returned, Jesus revealed to them his mission, his true identity, and what it means to be his disciple (9:18-62). His mission would take him to Jerusalem (9:51-53), where he would be rejected, tried, and crucified.

While Jesus carried his own cross to Golgotha, some women in Jerusalem wept for him, but Jesus told them to weep for themselves and for their children (23:28). Luke's Gospel does not end in sadness, however. It concludes with the thrilling account of Jesus' resurrection from the dead, his appearances to the disciples, and his promise to send the Holy Spirit (24:1-53). Read Luke's beautifully written and accurate account of the life of Jesus, Son of Man and Son of God. Then praise God for sending the Savior—our risen and triumphant Lord—for all people.

The main themes in the Gospel of Luke include: Jesus Christ the Savior, History, People, Social Concern, and the Holy Spirit.

Jesus Christ the Savior (1:26-38; 2:1-52; 3:21-23; 4:1-44; 5:1-39; 6:1-11, 46-49; 7:1-50; 8:22-56; 9:18-45, 57-62; 10:16, 21-24; 11:14-32; 12:8-12, 35-59; 13:31-35; 14:15-35; 17:20-37; 18:18-34; 19:28-48; 20:1-47; 21:25-36; 22:14-71; 23:1-56; 24:1-53). Luke's Gospel describes how God entered human history. Jesus, the sinless Son of God was born of a virgin (2:1-7), grew and matured as a human boy and young man (2:52), resisted Satan's temptations (4:1-13), taught and ministered among the people (4:14-21:38), was betrayed by Judas and deserted by his closest followers (22:1-62), was convicted and executed as a common criminal (22:63–23:56), rose from the dead (24:1-49), and ascended into heaven (24:50-51). Jesus is an exemplar for all people. After a perfect ministry, he provided a perfect sacrifice for our sin so that men and women of all races and nations could be saved.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Jesus is the unique Son of God, humanity's perfect leader and only Savior. He offers forgiveness to all who will accept him as Lord of their lives and who believe that what he says is true. Christians know this profound truth. Christ has changed their lives, forever. They also have the great responsibility to share the Good News with others. The world is lost, with millions heading for eternal separation from God. These men, women, and children need to meet and know the Savior. If you know the truth about the Truth, your Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, what are you doing to share the gospel with others?

History (1:1-4; 2:1-3; 3:1-2, 23-38; 13:1-4; 23:6-7). Luke was a medical doctor and historian. He put great emphasis on dates and details, connecting Jesus to events and people in history. Luke made sure that what he was writing was historically accurate. He wanted believers, especially Theophilus, to be confident and secure in their faith. Inspired by the Holy Spirit, Luke faithfully recorded God's message for his first-century audience and for believers throughout the ages.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Christians today can believe in the reliability of Luke's history of Jesus' life. Even if approached as a secular document, this Gospel presents solid evidence for its historicity and accuracy. What is most important, however, is that the historical facts point to the divinity of Christ. When assailed by questions or doubts about your faith, open up and read Luke's Gospel. You can believe with certainty that Jesus is God.

People (4:42-44; 5:5-11, 27-32; 6:13-15, 27-42; 7:18-28, 36-50; 8:1-3, 19-21; 9:10-17, 47-48; 10:38-41; 12:1, 22-34; 18:15-17; 19:1-10; 21:5-24, 37-38; 23:42-43; 24:13-52). Jesus was deeply interested in relationships. He treated people with care and concern, not merely as potential converts. Jesus enjoyed strong friendships with his disciples, other followers, and special families (for example, Mary, Martha, and Lazarus, 10:38-42). He reached out to all types of people: outcasts such as lepers (17:12-19), alienated Samaritans (9:52), despised tax collectors (5:27; 19:1-10), women (8:1-3), and children (18:16). He showed warm concern for his followers and friends.

Of special note is Jesus' friendships with women. Luke seems to have made a point of highlighting this aspect of the Lord's ministry. Luke 8:1-3, for example, lists several women as close followers and supporters. This fits, of course, with Greek and Roman culture where women were active participants in business, politics, and household management (see, for example, Acts 16:13-15; 17:4, 12). It would have been almost scandalous, however, in Jewish culture where men and women were separated in the synagogue and only men could be taught by the rabbis.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Jesus' love for people is Good News for everyone. His message is for all people in every nation, and each person has the opportunity to respond to him in faith. In addition, Jesus' example teaches that his followers should love people, regardless of their sex, race, age, or worldly status. Christians should be known by their love. You may feel as if you are a second-class citizen in your community or neighborhood, but not in Jesus' eyes. Regardless of your status in society, know that you are important to him. Also, as you relate to neighbors, coworkers, and others, think of how you can show genuine concern and care for them and their families. Determine to reflect Christ in your life, to be known as a person of love.

Social Concern (4:31-41; 5:12-26; 6:6-10, 17-19; 7:1-17; 8:28-39, 41-56; 9:1-2; 10:25-37; 13:10-17; 14:1-6; 16:19-31; 17:11-19; 18:35-43; 22:50-51). As a perfect human, Jesus showed tender sympathy to the poor, the despised, the hurt, and the sinful. No one was rejected or ignored by him. Jesus healed the sick, diseased, and crippled. His compassion reached across racial lines and broke with convention (for example, healing on the Sabbath, 6:6-10). Luke paid special attention to Jesus' treatment of the poor and his teachings about poverty and wealth. Jesus also emphasized God's special interest in the poor and he commanded his followers to help the poor.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Obeying his teachings, Christ's followers should check their lives for materialism and love of money. Is financial security the focus of your life? Do you think more about what you can get or what you can give? Also, as they emulate their leader, Christ's followers should reach out to the hurting and disenfranchised in society, offering loving care, emotional support, and material assistance. What poor or infirm people can you help? Consider how you can "sell what you have and give to the poor," using your resources to make a difference in their lives. Finally, Jesus' compassion shows that he is more than an idea or teacher; he tenderly cares for each person. Know that only his kind of deep love can satisfy you. Whatever your need, bring it to the Savior.

The Holy Spirit (1:15, 35, 41, 67-79; 2:25-32; 3:16, 22; 4:1, 14; 10:21; 11:12). The Holy Spirit was present at Jesus' birth, baptism, ministry, and resurrection. Jesus lived in dependence on the Holy Spirit. This emphasis is carried over into Luke's sequel, the book of Acts, where we see Christians thoroughly immersed and motivated by the Holy Spirit.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The Holy Spirit was sent by God as confirmation of Jesus' authority. The Holy Spirit is given to enable people to live for Christ. Believers can now have the Holy Spirit's presence and power to witness and to serve. Don't try to live the Christian life in your own strength. Just as you trusted Christ to save you, rely on the Holy Spirit to give you the power to live for him.

Luke begins his account in the Temple in Jerusalem, giving us the background for the birth of John the Baptist, then moves on to the town of Nazareth and the story of Mary, chosen to be Jesus' mother (1:26ff). As a result of Caesar's call for a census, Mary and Joseph had to travel to Bethlehem, where Jesus was born in fulfillment of prophecy (2:1ff). Jesus grew up in Nazareth and began his earthly ministry by being baptized by John (3:21-22) and tempted by Satan (4:1ff). Much of his ministry focused on Galilee: He set up his "home" in Capernaum (4:31ff), and from there he taught throughout the region (8:1ff). Later he visited Gerasa (also called Gadara), where he healed a demon-possessed man (8:36ff). He miraculously fed more than five thousand people on the shores of the Sea of Galilee near Bethsaida (9:10ff). Jesus always traveled to Jerusalem for the major festivals, and he enjoyed visiting friends in nearby Bethany (10:38ff). He healed ten men with leprosy on the border between Galilee and Samaria (17:11) and helped a dishonest tax collector in Jericho turn his life around (19:1ff). The little villages of Bethphage and Bethany on the Mount of Olives were Jesus' resting places during his last days on earth. He was crucified outside Jerusalem's walls, but he would rise again. Two of Jesus' followers walking on the road leading to Emmaus were among the first to see the resurrected Christ (24:13ff).

LUKE'S PURPOSE IN WRITING / 1:1-4 / 1

Luke opens his Gospel with the explanation that, though he was not himself an eyewitness of Jesus' ministry, he wanted the eyewitness accounts to be preserved accurately and the foundations of Christian belief transmitted intact to the next generations. This is evident in his Gospel, for thirty percent of it is new information—not contained in the other three Gospels. As you read this Gospel, watch the way Luke carefully presents all the evidence surrounding Jesus' life, death, and resurrection to Theophilus, a Gentile Christian.

1:1-2 The first four verses of the Gospel of Luke are one sentence in Greek. Luke's sophisticated Greek writing style, revealed in this preface, set his work apart from the other three Gospels. The Gospels of Matthew and Mark were written at about the same time as Luke, and apparently many other witnesses and writers had also written about the events that took place during Jesus' life and ministry, using as their source material the reports circulating from the disciples and other eyewitnesses. Luke perceived a need to put the facts from these other written sources into an account written especially for a Gentile believer who needed to understand Jesus' story. Believers today owe the Gospels and the book of Acts to writers who, like Luke, took the carefully preserved oral information from eyewitnesses and wrote it down.

Theophilus literally means "one who loves God." While this may be a general term for all believers, it is a proper name and with the title, most honorable, indicates a person of some rank or distinction. The book of Acts, also written by Luke, is likewise addressed to Theophilus (Acts 1:1).

1:3-4 Luke, as an educated Gentile believer and a medical doctor, paid attention to details: he carefully investigated all of these accounts from the beginning, and then wrote a careful summary. Luke wanted to reassure Theophilus of the truth of all he had been taught.

AN ANGEL PROMISES THE BIRTH OF JOHN TO ZECHARIAH / 1:5-25 / 4

Luke started at "the beginning" (1:3). But for Jesus' life, the beginning was not his birth, but instead the announcement of the birth of John the Baptist—the person who would prepare the way for Jesus.

1:5 As a good historian should, Luke gave his readers the historical setting. The story begins when Herod was king of Judea. This was Herod the Great, confirmed by the Roman Senate as king of the Jews but never accepted by the Jewish people as their king (although half-Jewish, Herod was not part of the royal line of David). For the Jews living in Judea, this was a time of oppression. Although they were not in slavery, they were not completely self-governing either. Herod had expanded and beautified the Jerusalem Temple, but he had placed a Roman eagle over the entrance and also had built pagan Temples. When he helped the Jews, it was for political purposes—not because he cared about them or their God. Evil and ruthless, Herod the Great later ordered a massacre of infants in a futile attempt to kill the infant Jesus, whom some were calling the new “king of the Jews” (Matthew 2:1-2). Herod the Great ruled from 37–4 B.C.

Zechariah was a priest, a minister of God who worked at the Temple managing its upkeep, teaching the people the Scriptures, and directing the worship services. At this time there were about twenty thousand priests throughout the country. Priests were divided into twenty-four separate groups of about one thousand each, according to David’s instructions (1 Chronicles 24:3-19). Zechariah was a member of the order (or division) of Abijah. Each division served in the Jerusalem Temple twice each year for one week.

Zechariah’s wife, Elizabeth, was also from the priestly line of Aaron. Elizabeth descended directly from Aaron, brother of Moses and Israel’s first high priest (Exodus 28:1). As a priest, Zechariah would have been required to marry a virgin Israelite, but not necessarily one from a priestly family. Zechariah was especially blessed to have a wife with such a background.

1:6-7 Zechariah and Elizabeth both were righteous in God’s eyes. This does not mean that they were sinless, but that they loved God and obeyed him. But they had no children. To ancient readers, this would have seemed like a contradiction. Children were considered to be God’s greatest blessings. Certainly such God-fearing and God-honoring people as Zechariah and Elizabeth should have been blessed with children. But Elizabeth was barren. Not only that, but Luke adds the detail that they were both very old, meaning that they could not expect any change in their situation. For Elizabeth, being childless in old age would be painful and lonely; but during this time she remained faithful to God.

1:8-9 Zechariah’s division of priests was on duty in the Temple during this particular week (see 1:5). Each morning, one of the priests would enter the Holy Place in the Temple to burn incense, which was burned twice daily. Lots were cast to decide who would enter the sanctuary, and one day during that week Zechariah was chosen by lot. Offering the incense before the Lord was considered a great privilege. A priest was allowed to do so only once in his lifetime; many priests never had the opportunity. But it was not by chance that Zechariah was on duty and that he was chosen that day to enter the Holy Place.

1:10 The other priests and people would wait outside for the chosen priest to offer the incense and pray on behalf of the nation. When the people would see the smoke from the burning incense, they would pray. The smoke drifting heavenward symbolized their prayers ascending to God's throne. This great crowd were the faithful in Israel who were waiting and praying for deliverance. Faithful believers had been doing this since their captivity in Babylon six centuries before. This time, their prayers received a very special answer.

1:11 As Zechariah discharged his duty in the Holy Place, an angel of the Lord appeared. That the angel was standing to the right of the incense altar indicates a position of favor or blessing, perhaps indicating that the message was good. The exact location where the angel stood is a detail passed along by Zechariah himself and kept intact by writers (1:1-3). Gabriel (1:19) delivered a special message to Zechariah. This was not a dream or a vision; the angel was a royal herald of God. The angel appeared in visible form and spoke audible words to the priest.

1:12-13 Angels are powerful beings, certainly awesome in their appearance. No wonder Zechariah was overwhelmed with fear. So the angel's first words to him were, "don't be afraid." While Zechariah had been burning incense on the altar, he had also been praying, most likely for Israel's deliverance and for the coming of the Messiah. The angel's awesome words must have astounded him: "God has heard your prayer." Then the angel made a seemingly unrelated statement: "Your wife, Elizabeth, will bear you a son." The angel even told Zechariah what to name the baby. John means "the LORD is gracious." Through the birth of this son, God was gracious to Zechariah and Elizabeth, and ultimately to all people, for this son would prepare people's hearts for the Messiah.

1:14-15 The special son to be born to Zechariah and Elizabeth would fulfill a predetermined purpose before God. John was to be set apart for special service to God. He may have been forbidden to drink wine as part of the Nazirite vow, an ancient vow of consecration to God (see Numbers 6:1-8).

This is Luke's first mention of the Holy Spirit, the third person of the Trinity. Luke refers to the Holy Spirit more than any other Gospel writer does; it was a major focus for him (see 1:35, 41). That John would be filled with the Holy Spirit, even before his birth, indicates a special choice of this child. This also signals the restoration of the prophetic work of the Holy Spirit that had not been present in Israel for over four hundred years (since the days of the prophet Malachi).

1:16-17 John's role was to be almost identical to that of an Old Testament prophet—to encourage people to turn away from sin and back to the Lord. The angel explained to Zechariah that John would go before God with the spirit and power of Elijah, a great prophet who was known for not mincing words and for standing up to evil rulers (1 Kings 17–19; 2 Kings 2:9, 15; see also Matthew 11:14; 17:10-13).

John's mission would be turn the hearts of the fathers to their children. This phrase comes directly from the prophecy of the Messiah's forerunner found in Malachi 4:5-6. The meaning of the phrase is not immediately clear, but it may mean that John's messages of repentance would unify broken family relationships, help fathers in their parental responsibilities, or change the lives of disobedient children so that their fathers would approve of them. In light of the Malachi reference, "fathers" may refer to the patriarchs, great men of faith who would be greatly displeased with their descendants' faithlessness toward God. John's call to repentance would change the disobedient minds to accept godly wisdom by bringing many of his contemporaries back to God.

1:18 Zechariah's response to the angel's word came perilously close to doubt. Zechariah wanted more than the word of this heavenly visitor, he wanted a sign: How can I know this will happen? Zechariah saw only the obstacle—he and Elizabeth were both past childbearing years, so he reminded the angel of this fact as if it had somehow been overlooked. Contrast his response with that of Mary who saw the opportunity and merely asked how God would perform the miracle (1:34).

1:19 The angel explained that he himself was sign enough for Zechariah. "I am Gabriel," he exclaimed, "I stand in the very presence of God." Gabriel had come with an extremely important message—Gabriel himself described it as good news. The old priest ought not have doubted anything the angel said.

1:20 Unbelief ultimately results in punishment. Zechariah asked for a sign, and received it. He would be unable to speak until the child is born (in light of 1:62, it appears that he was deaf as well as mute). The angel's words would certainly come true at the proper time, whether Zechariah believed or not. God's plan had been set in motion, and nothing could stop it.

1:21-22 The people were waiting outside (1:10) for Zechariah to come out and pronounce the customary blessing upon them as found in Numbers 6:24-26. It seemed that the priest was taking an unusually long time in the Holy Place, so they became anxious. Finally, when Zechariah appeared, he could not pronounce the blessing because he couldn't speak to them. The angel's words had already begun to come true; the sign of fulfillment had taken place right in Zechariah's life. Apparently he made gestures to them and they realized that he must have seen a vision. Zechariah knew that God was moving forward in his plans to bring the Messiah to his people. But Zechariah would remain silent until his promised son arrived.

1:23-24 Zechariah completed his term of service (a week) and then returned home to the hill country (see 1:39) south of Jerusalem. The promise of a son to Zechariah and Elizabeth came even before this child was conceived. But, true to the angel's words, Elizabeth became pregnant. She may have gone into seclusion until her condition would be obvious to others.

1:25 Zechariah and Elizabeth had been childless for many years, but God was waiting for the right time to encourage them and take away their disgrace. Elizabeth realized that in this impossible pregnancy, God had performed a miracle. She praised God for taking away her disgrace of having no children (see 1:7).

AN ANGEL PROMISES THE BIRTH OF JESUS TO MARY / 1:26-38 / 5

Luke placed the story of the announcement of Jesus' birth right after the announcement of John's birth. By doing so, he highlighted the similarities and differences between the two births.

1:26-27 Six months after Gabriel delivered God's message to Zechariah (1:11-20), God sent the angel with another message, this time to a virgin named Mary. The angel Gabriel had also appeared to the prophet Daniel more than five hundred years earlier (Daniel 8:15-17; 9:21). Each time Gabriel appeared, he brought important messages from God. This time was no exception.

Nazareth in Galilee was Joseph's and Mary's hometown. Mary was not a prophet or a priest; she was not in God's Temple performing acts of service. Instead, she was simply a young woman who was living at home and planning her wedding, for she was engaged to be married to a man named Joseph. In ancient Jewish marriages, the word “engaged” (or “betrothed”) had a different meaning than today. First, the two families would agree to the union and negotiate the betrothal, including a price for the bride which would be paid to the bride’s father. Next, a public announcement would be made. At this point, the couple was “pledged” to each other. This is similar to engagement today, except that it was much more binding. At this point, even though the couple was not officially married, their relationship could be broken only through death or divorce. Sexual relations were not yet permitted. This second step lasted for a year. During that time, the couple would live separately, with their parents. This waiting period would demonstrate the bride’s purity. If she were found to be pregnant during that time, the marriage could be annulled. After this waiting time, the couple would be married and begin living together. What Mary was about to hear from the angel would have significant impact on her engagement.

That Joseph was a descendant of King David is important for Joseph’s journey to Bethlehem (2:1-4) and for the fact that Jesus would be born into the royal line of David. (Although Joseph was not his father, Jesus would be considered in the royal line through the rights of adoption.)

1:28-29 When Gabriel appeared to Mary, he called her favoured woman because she would be a special recipient of God’s grace. This young maiden was confused and disturbed as to why she was being greeted in such a way by this heavenly visitor.

1:30-33 Gabriel told Mary that God had decided to bless her. The words did not point out any special virtue in Mary—she was not sinless. God chose Mary, blessed her, and she humbly accepted his call to be the mother of Jesus. The result of this blessing came in God’s choice of Mary to be the mother of Jesus. Gabriel explained that this child would grow in her womb, be born as all human children are born, and be named Jesus. This son will be very great and will be called the Son of the Most High. The word “Son” was a designation of the Messiah, the long-awaited Savior (Genesis 49:10; 2 Samuel 7:9-16; Psalm 2:7; Isaiah 7:14; 9:1-7; 11:1-3). Jesus, a Greek form of the Hebrew name Joshua, was a common name meaning “Yahweh saves.” Just as Joshua had led Israel into the Promised Land (see Joshua 1:1-2), so Jesus would lead his people into eternal life. The symbolism of Jesus’ name was not lost on the people of his day, who took names seriously and saw them as a source of power. In Jesus’ name people would be healed, demons would be banished, and sins would be forgiven.

Centuries earlier, God had promised David that his kingdom would last forever (2 Samuel 7:16). This promise was fulfilled in the coming of Jesus, a direct descendant of David (1:27). Jesus was born in the line of David and thus could be a king to reign over Israel forever. His will be an eternal Kingdom that will never end. God had promised to continue the dynasty of David forever. David's earthly dynasty ended four centuries after his reign, but Jesus Christ, a direct descendant of David, was the ultimate fulfillment of this promise (Acts 2:22-36). Christ will reign for eternity—now in his spiritual Kingdom and in heaven, and later, on earth, in the new Jerusalem (Luke 1:30-33; Revelation 21).

1:34 Unlike Zechariah who desired a sign as proof of the angel's words (1:18), Mary's question displayed her faith. She merely asked how this miraculous event could occur because she was a virgin. She was engaged to be married and probably planned on having children. Engagements usually occurred when girls were in their early teens. Mary may have been as young as thirteen when this event took place. Her question reveals spiritual perceptiveness; she understood that Gabriel was referring to a miracle child to be born while she was still a virgin, prior to her marriage to Joseph. She naturally wondered how this was going to occur.

The birth of Jesus to a virgin is a miracle that many people find difficult to believe. Jesus' miracles, transfiguration, and resurrection were all actual, historical events that defy explanation. They were acts of God in a human world. Christians' faith, however, rests not on the virgin birth—indeed two of the four Gospels don't even mention it. Faith rests on the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, not on his virgin birth. However, the virgin birth reveals two important facts: (1) In Jesus, God began a "new creation," for through Jesus' life, death, and resurrection, sin's power would be broken. In Jesus, people can come to God for a personal relationship and be freed from the power of sin. (2) Jesus was God's Son before he was even conceived in Mary's womb. He did not become God's Son at a later time. He was not accepted as God's Son because of good behavior or obedience. He was not a man promoted to that position. God's Son was born God's Son. In the birth of Jesus, God himself became human and entered the world—for fallen human beings! Therein lies the miracle! People are not meant to explain it, prove it, or ignore it—they are meant to believe it and worship God who made it happen.

1:35 Gabriel explained how Mary would become pregnant and yet remain a virgin. The Holy Spirit will come upon you, and the power of the Most High will overshadow you—these words picture the powerful presence of God coming upon Mary (see Matthew 17:5; Mark 9:7; Luke 9:34). This would indeed be a special baby, for he will be holy. Jesus was born without the sin that had entered the world through Adam. He was born holy, just as Adam had been created sinless. Believers must be careful not to explain that Jesus was sinless simply because he did not have a human father. To do so would mean that Mary would have been sinless, which she was not. Jesus' sinlessness rests not on his miraculous birth to a virgin girl, but on the basis of his position with God. Through the birth of Jesus, God himself entered the world in human form.

The title, Son of God, shows that Jesus has a special role in God's purpose, and that he is the expected Messiah. The mention of the Holy Spirit gives the name greater significance for it shows that God, through the Spirit, has a special role in creating this child. The connection of "Son of God" to "Son of the Most High" states Jesus' divinity. In contrast to Adam, who disobeyed God, Jesus would completely obey his Father, enabling him to absolve the sins of the world (Romans 5:14-19).

1:36-37 Mary did not ask for a sign, but it seems that Gabriel gave her one by stating that Mary's relative Elizabeth was also pregnant as the result of God's grace. Gabriel gave Mary a person to whom she could go for support during what could prove to be a difficult time for Mary as she humbly fulfilled God's will. This also illustrated for Mary the fact that nothing is impossible with God.

1:38 God's announcement of a child to be born was met with various responses throughout Scripture. Sarah, Abraham's wife, laughed (Genesis 18:9-15). Zechariah doubted (1:18). By contrast, Mary submitted, knowing that she was merely the Lord's servant. She believed the angel's words and agreed to bear the child, even under humanly impossible circumstances, even with difficult social consequences. A young unmarried girl who became pregnant risked disaster. She risked losing Joseph, her family, and her reputation. And her story about being made pregnant by the Holy Spirit risked her being considered crazy as well. Still Mary said, despite the risks, "May everything you have said come true." She took the risk of faith, for she knew that God was asking her to serve him.

MARY VISITS ELIZABETH / 1:39-56 / 6

Mary is the type of woman who puts her faith into action. She not only says "Lord, your will be done" (see 1:38), but she also "hurries" to see God at work in the life of her relative Elizabeth. The journey to Judea that Mary undertook was not a simple drive to the next town; it was a difficult journey that would have taken at least three days at that time. Mary did not let that stop her from going to Elizabeth, rejoicing with her, and praising the Lord for fulfilling his promises.

1:39-40 Elizabeth and Mary were related (1:36). Perhaps Mary felt the need to take her news to someone who would understand. So Mary left Nazareth and hurried to the hill country of Judea, although the town where Zechariah lived is unknown. The trip from Nazareth to the hill country was probably fifty to seventy miles—a major trip for a young woman alone and on foot.

1:41 The visit from Mary no doubt came as a surprise, but the Holy Spirit made Elizabeth suddenly aware of both Mary's pregnancy and the identity of Mary's baby. The beautiful interweaving of the lives of Elizabeth and Mary before their children were born is a touching picture of God's grace upon his servants. Mary stayed with Elizabeth for three months (1:56). How they must have talked, wondering at what God was doing in their lives and what he was planning for their very special children.

1:42-45 Elizabeth had not even yet been told that Mary was pregnant. Elizabeth spoke words given to her by the Spirit (1:41) as she recognized Mary's blessed condition, knowing that Mary had been specially chosen by God, much as Elizabeth had. As Mary had rushed off to visit her relative, she must have been wondering whether the events of the last few days were real. Elizabeth's greeting surely strengthened her faith. Mary's pregnancy may have seemed impossible, but her wise relative believed in the Lord's faithfulness and rejoiced in Mary's condition. The Spirit also showed Elizabeth the identity of Mary's child, for she knew that this child was also blessed—God's Son, the promised Messiah, with a unique identity and role to fulfill. Mary would be the mother of the Lord. Only the Holy Spirit could have revealed this to Elizabeth. Mary and Elizabeth (and Zechariah—although he had been stricken deaf and mute, 1:20) were the first people on earth to see God's hand moving to fulfill hundreds of years of promises.

Under inspiration of the Spirit, Elizabeth interpreted the movement in her womb as the child's joy at hearing Mary's greeting. Elizabeth repeated that Mary was blessed because she believed that the Lord would do what he said.

1:46-50 This song is often called the "Magnificat," the first word in the Latin translation of this passage. Mary's song has often been used as the basis for choral music and hymns. Like Hannah, the mother of Samuel (1 Samuel 2:1-10), Mary glorified God in song for what he was going to do for the world through her. Notice that in both songs, God is pictured as a champion of the poor, the oppressed, and the despised.

As Mary journeyed from Nazareth to visit her relatives, she had much time to think about what she had heard from the angel and what she understood about God's plan for the Jewish people. When she arrived and Elizabeth spoke to her, Mary's joy overflowed and she could say with her whole heart, "How I rejoice in God my Savior!" Mary humbly understood that she was just a lowly servant girl chosen by God. She recognized that what he was doing in her life would have a profound impact on the world and future generations. Mary focused on God's power, holiness, and mercy. Her insight into God's character formed the basis for her confidence in him.

1:51-53 The arm of God is used in the Old Testament to describe his strength and power (see, for example, Exodus 6:6; Isaiah 51:5). Mary pictured God's strength being revealed to the sinful world as he scatters the proud, brings down the princes, and sends the rich away with empty hands. By contrast, God's power shows in his mercy to his own—lifting up the lowly and filling the hungry with good things. The tense of the verbs indicates that, while yet future, Mary was speaking prophetically of these events so certain to occur that they could be spoken of as having already happened.

1:54-55 The words he has helped . . . Israel are in the same verb tense as the previous verses—this is a future event so certain that it is mentioned in the past tense. This "help" for Israel is the Messiah, who will come according to the promise God made to the Jews' ancestors, specifically Abraham (Genesis 22:16-18). Jesus' birth fulfilled the promise, and Mary understood this as the Spirit revealed it to her. Some of God's promises to Israel are found in 2 Samuel 22:50-51; Psalms 89:2-4; 103:17-18; Micah 7:18-20.

1:56 Because travel was not easy, long visits were customary. Mary must have been a great help to Elizabeth, who was experiencing the discomforts of being pregnant in her old age. In addition, Elizabeth certainly helped Mary. During these three months, Mary surely discussed with Elizabeth how to handle what would be an extremely difficult social predicament. She would have to return home and explain her pregnancy to her family and her fiancé. Hopefully, when Mary went back to her own home, three months pregnant, she was even more strengthened in her faith by Elizabeth's faith (1:6), ready to face all that the future would hold.

JOHN THE BAPTIST IS BORN / 1:57-80 / 7

Zechariah's song prophesied about the coming Messiah—Jesus. He was the promised One from David's royal household, the One who would provide salvation for all of God's people. Zechariah's son, John, would be the one who would prepare the way for Jesus (1:76).

1:57-58 Elizabeth gave birth to a boy, just as the angel had said (1:13). From the wording of this verse, it seems that no one had known about Elizabeth's pregnancy. So when the neighbors and relatives heard that the Lord had been very kind to her, they rejoiced.

1:59-60 In observance of the law, when the baby was eight days old, he was circumcised. God had commanded circumcision when he was beginning to form his holy nation (Genesis 17:4-14), and he had reaffirmed it through Moses (Leviticus 12:1-3). The circumcision ceremony was an important event for the family of a Jewish baby boy. This ceremony was a time of joy when relatives and friends came to celebrate the baby's becoming part of God's covenant nation.

The day of circumcision was also the day when parents would formally announce the child's name. Family lines and family names were important to the Jews. The people naturally assumed the child would receive Zechariah's name or at least a family name. Thus, they were surprised that Elizabeth wanted to name the boy John. Apparently Zechariah had communicated to Elizabeth all that the angel had told him, so she knew what the child's name was to be (1:13). Zechariah and Elizabeth knew what family and friends did not know—that John had been given his name by God, and that he had a God-given mission to fulfill.

1:61-64 After Elizabeth gave the surprising name to her son, the relatives and friends took the situation to the head of the household who had been unable to speak since the day he had seen the vision in the Temple (1:20). It was customary to name a child after his father or grandfather, especially when they were esteemed men. The people could not believe that Elizabeth would choose a name that no one in the family had ever had. Apparently Zechariah had been stricken deaf as well, because they had to communicate to him by making gestures, asking him to name the child. In writing, Zechariah agreed with his wife in naming their son "John." After fulfilling God's command spoken through the angel that he name the child John, instantly Zechariah could speak again. With his first words, he began praising God. The last words Zechariah had spoken months before had been words of doubt; his first words when all was being fulfilled, even the name of the child, were words of praise to God for all God had done and all he would do through this special child.

1:65-66 This baby's birth to an elderly couple, their strange insistence on an unusual name, the supernatural muteness and then the instantaneous cure caused wonder to fall upon the whole neighborhood. Unusual news travels fast, and as the story spread, everyone reflected on these events. Certainly this was a special child with a special destiny. It was obvious to everyone that the hand of the Lord was on John in a special way.

1:67-68 Zechariah praised God with his first words after months of silence. In a song that is often called the "Benedictus" after the first words in the Latin translation of this passage, Zechariah, filled with the Holy Spirit (see also 1:41) gave a prophecy of the coming of a Savior who would redeem his people. All the Old Testament prophecies were coming true—no wonder Zechariah praised God. These words were a common way to introduce a thanksgiving (see 1 Kings 1:48; 1 Chronicles 16:36; Psalms 41:13; 72:18; 106:48), thus Zechariah's words offered thanksgiving to God. Like Mary, Zechariah spoke of the coming redemption of Israel as though it was occurring: God has visited his people and redeemed them. Indeed, the Messiah was already on the way—although few people knew it. In Zechariah's song is a reminder that Jesus came as the fulfillment of all God's purposes and promises in the Old Testament.

The word redeemed literally means "accomplished redemption." In the Old Testament, "redemption" pictured the rescue by God of the Israelites from Egypt and their return from captivity in Babylon (see Deuteronomy 7:8; Jeremiah 31:11). "Redemption" means recovery of something or someone upon payment of a ransom. The climate of Israel in the first century was again a "captivity," for the Jews were subject to the Romans. The Jews were looking for a political Messiah to "redeem" them once again. But Messiah's redemption would be different from current expectations. Jesus would bring redemption from sin.

1:69-71 Zechariah praised God because he has sent us a mighty Savior from the royal line of his servant David. Again, Zechariah was speaking in the past tense about an event still future, albeit in the near future. The Messiah was already being "sent," for God had begun to set his plan into motion. The "royal line of . . . David" refers to the ancestral line through whom the Messiah was to come, as God had said through his holy prophets (see, for example, 2 Samuel 7:11-13, 26; Psalms 89; 132:17; Ezekiel 34:23-24; Amos 9:11-12; Hebrews 1:1).

The words, saved from our enemies and from all who hate us, clearly indicate what was happening in that society. Zechariah prophesied that the Messiah would bring deliverance. The Jews were eagerly awaiting the Messiah, but they thought he would come to save them from the powerful Roman Empire. They were ready for a military Savior, but not for a peaceful Messiah who would conquer sin. Zechariah's words would come true, but in a different manner than most expected. Thirty years later, when Jesus began his public ministry, he would be misunderstood and rejected for not being the mighty warrior for whom the Jews had been hoping.

1:72-75 Through the coming Savior, God has been merciful to the Jewish people and their ancestors by remembering his sacred covenant with them, specifically the covenant that he gave to Abraham. Recorded in Genesis 22:16-18, the oath to Abraham promised that the enemies of Abraham's descendants would be subdued and that blessing to his descendants would result from Abraham's obedience. God keeps his promises (see Micah 7:20). Yet the fulfillment of these promises means opportunity for God's people—that they might serve God without fear, in holiness and righteousness forever.

1:76-77 After recalling hundreds of years of God's sovereign work in history, beginning with Abraham and going on into eternity, Zechariah personalized the story. His son had been chosen for a key role in the drama of the ages. Although God has unlimited power, he chooses to work through frail humans who begin as helpless babies. Zechariah proclaimed what the angel had told him (1:16-17), words that Zechariah had at first doubted. John will be called the prophet of the Most High. Zechariah speaks these same amazing words in a land where the voice of prophecy had been silent for over four hundred years. John would prepare the way for the Lord, as had been predicted by Israel's last prophet, Malachi (Malachi 3:1; 4:5-6), telling his people how to find salvation through forgiveness of their sins. The "salvation" referred to in 1:69-71 is here spelled out as "forgiveness of sins." John would explain this to people as he prepared the way for the Messiah. His message would be "repent," for only through repentance can sinners find forgiveness (see 3:3-18).

1:78-79 The light from heaven refers to that visitation of God to humanity in the form of the Messiah. These words echo Old Testament promises (Isaiah 9:2-3). This message of light to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death was fulfilled in the birth of Christ and the establishment of his eternal Kingdom. He came to deliver all people from their slavery to sin. (See also Isaiah 58:8, 10; 60:1-3.) He will also guide us to the path of peace. This peace would not merely be political, but spiritual. All of this would occur because of God's tender mercy and compassion on sinful humankind.

1:80 Luke briefly gave a glimpse of John's growing-up years. Became strong in spirit could refer to moral development, but could also refer to strengthening in God's Spirit. That John lived out in the wilderness refers to his isolation from people as he prepared for ministry. His parents, already old when he was conceived, presumably did not live very long into his growing-up years. John would have been on his own. Some scholars have suggested that John may have joined the community of the Essenes (a Jewish sect that required communal living) after his parents passed away. While possible, there is no direct evidence to support this.

JESUS IS BORN IN BETHLEHEM / 2:1-7 / 9

Luke is the only Gospel writer who related the events he recorded to world history. His account was addressed to a predominantly Greek audience that would have been interested in and familiar with the political situation of those times.

2:1-4 The Romans ruled Palestine; Augustus, the first Roman emperor, was one of the greatest of all Roman rulers. He was a good administrator and was fastidious about the financial accounting of his empire. Augustus ended the civil war in the land and brought peace and prosperity throughout the empire. He reigned from 27 B.C. to A.D. 14.

A Roman census (registration) was taken to aid military conscription or tax collection. The Jews didn't have to serve in the Roman army, but they could not avoid paying taxes. Augustus's decree went out in God's perfect timing and according to God's perfect plan to bring his Son into the world. No one had a choice about participating in the census. Thus all returned to their own towns to register. Joseph went to Bethlehem, a journey of about seventy or eighty miles. Bethlehem was where King David grew up (1 Samuel 16; 17:12; 20:6).

God controls all history. By the decree of Emperor Augustus, Jesus was born in the very town prophesied for his birth (Micah 5:2), even though his parents did not live there. Joseph and Mary went to Bethlehem because Joseph was a descendant of King David. In fact, both Joseph and Mary were descendants of David. Old Testament prophets predicted that the Messiah would be born in David's royal line (see, for example, Isaiah 11:1; Jeremiah 33:15; Ezekiel 37:24; Hosea 3:5).

2:5 Luke does not explain why Mary made this difficult trip with Joseph. Perhaps they simply both saw the outworkings of God's plan and traveled to Bethlehem where the promised child was to be born (Micah 5:2). At this point, Joseph and Mary were engaged.

2:6-7 In simple, direct language, Luke presented the Christmas story: no trees or lights, just a manger and animals and a too-crowded inn. It isn't surprising that there was no room for them in the village inn considering the number of travelers flocking to various cities during the time of this census.

At some time during their visit in Bethlehem, the promised child was born.

Mary wrapped the baby in strips of cloth, which were bands of cloth that were used to keep a baby warm and give it a sense of security. These cloths were believed to protect its internal organs. This custom of wrapping infants is still practiced in many Mideastern countries. Then Mary laid him in a manger, an animal's feeding trough. She may have filled the manger with hay to make a soft bed. This mention of the manger is the basis for the traditional belief that Jesus was born in a stable. Stables were often caves with feeding troughs (mangers) carved into the rock walls. Despite popular Christmas card pictures, the surroundings were dark and dirty. Everything pointed to obscurity, poverty, and even rejection. Luke showed the King of kings born into poor and humble circumstances—born as a human, born to serve.

SHEPHERDS VISIT JESUS / 2:8-20 / 10

The angel Gabriel had announced the coming births of John and Jesus (1:5-20, 26-38); here a host of angels announced the “good news” of Jesus’ birth to ordinary shepherds. The angels also gave the shepherds a sign. They would find their Savior in “a manger”—not only a sign of Jesus’ identity but also his humble circumstances.

2:8 From the dirty manger, Luke moved to the fields outside the village. It was night. Shepherds were there, guarding their flocks of sheep. Among the occupations, shepherding had a lowly place. They were outcasts, not allowed in the city and not trusted by the general public, for often they were thieves. Luke gave this story about the shepherds for a reason. Jesus would come, not to the proud and powerful, but to the outcasts, the humble, those considered “last” on the social lists. To these men God brought the first news of his Son’s arrival.

2:9-10 As these shepherds were living in the fields under the sky, suddenly a bright light broke through the darkness. An angel of the Lord appeared among them, and the radiance of the Lord’s glory surrounded them. “Glory” refers to the majesty and splendor accompanying God’s presence (see also Exodus 16:7; 24:17; Psalm 63:2; Isaiah 40:5).

The stunning display of God’s glory and the appearance of the angel naturally frightened these shepherds. The angel encouraged the shepherds, saying he had come with good news of great joy for all people. This news comprised everything for which the Jews had been hoping and waiting—the Savior had come. Some of the Jews were waiting for a savior to deliver them from Roman rule; others hoped that the Christ (Messiah) would deliver them from physical ailments. But Jesus, while healing their illnesses and establishing a spiritual Kingdom, delivered them from sin.

2:11 The angel explained the substance of the “good news” that he brought: A child had just been born in Bethlehem (see commentary on 2:4).

The child is the Savior, a word used to refer to Jesus only two times in the Gospels: here as the angels proclaimed his birth, and in John 4:42 by the Samaritans who came to believe in Jesus as “the Savior of the world.” In the Old Testament, the same word (sometimes translated “deliverer” in some versions) is used for certain individuals, as well as for God (Judges 3:9, 15; 1 Samuel 10:19; 2 Samuel 22:2-3; 2 Kings 13:5; Isaiah 19:20). For the Greeks and Romans, the word “savior” could be applied to their gods as well as to great military or political leaders. Julius Caesar was called a “savior.” The basic meaning of the word was readily understood by the Jews as well as Gentiles.

The title Messiah is Greek for “anointed one.” To be anointed meant to be set apart for some special purpose. Moses anointed Aaron and his sons as the first priests of Israel (Exodus 28:41); the prophet Samuel anointed both Saul and David as kings of Israel (1 Samuel 10:1; 16:3). The title was applied to that future one whom God would raise up. The Jews were awaiting this special deliverer, one who would be the anointed one of God, the Messiah, the Christ.

The word Lord refers here to deity. That this tiny baby was the “Lord” means that God had arrived in human form. Thus the angel gave no doubt as to the identity of this child. He was the one for whom all Israel had been waiting.

2:12 The angel apparently expected the shepherds to immediately go looking for this child, so he told them what to look for. The baby would be wrapped snugly in strips of cloth and lying in a manger. Not only would this sign help the shepherds find the right baby, it would also attest to the truth of the angel’s words to the last detail. While there might be other newborn babies in Bethlehem wrapped in strips of cloth, there would be only one “lying in a manger.”

The shepherds were not told to look in a palace or in a wealthy home—indeed, they would not have gotten past the gates if they had. But they could go to the poor stable, receive acceptance from a poor couple, and discover the miracle baby.

2:13-14 After the angel gave the great news of God’s arrival on earth, suddenly all heaven broke into praise, for the angel was joined by a vast host of others—the armies of heaven. John’s vision of heaven recorded in Revelation reveals that there are innumerable angels in heaven (Revelation 5:11). One of the angels’ key roles is to offer continuous praise to God. The arrival of God’s Son on earth caused all of heaven to join in an anthem of praise to God. Glory to God focuses the praise on the One who set these events in motion, the One who controls all events on earth. He is in the highest heaven and is sending peace on earth to all whom he favors. The peace referred to is the peace that only the Messiah can bring—not peace after war or conflict, but peace between sinful humanity and the holy God. Those whom God favors are those to whom he will graciously reveal his truth.

2:15-16 After their anthem of praise, the angels returned to heaven (see also 24:51; Acts 1:11), and the shepherds wanted to go and see this wonderful thing that has happened. They hurried into the village of Bethlehem to find the baby.

2:17-18 The shepherds told everyone what had happened and what the angel had said—thus becoming the first witnesses of the gospel message. They told about the child and all that the angels had said about him, and all who heard . . . were astonished. Most likely, the “everyone” and “all” refer to the people at the inn. Everyone was astonished at the shepherds’ story.

2:19 Surely the shepherds told Mary and Joseph what the angels had said. Mary quietly treasured these things in her heart. “Treasured” means deep reflection, keeping in mind or safely storing up; that she thought about them often refers to mulling over, seeking to understand and interpret. Mary had a lot to think about as she gazed into the face of her tiny child. Gabriel had told her that the little boy would reign forever (1:31-33); the shepherds reported the angel’s words—he is the Savior, Christ the Lord (2:11). As Mary held this tiny baby, she must have wondered at all that God was doing, and who her son would grow up to become.

2:20 The shepherds had to get back to their fields and flocks before their sheep wandered off into the night. As they did so, they were glorifying and praising God. They knew that they had received a special message and had been privileged to be the first to see the promised child.

MARY AND JOSEPH BRING JESUS TO THE TEMPLE / 2:21-40 / 11

Just as the story of John the Baptist’s birth began in the Temple (1:5-25), so the story of Jesus’ birth culminates in the Temple. In obedience to the dictates of Jewish law, Mary and Joseph presented Jesus to God (see Exodus 13:2-16), and they offered a sacrifice for the ritual purification of Mary (see Leviticus 12:2-6).

2:21 Every Jewish boy was circumcised and named on the eighth day after birth (Leviticus 12:3; Luke 1:59-60). Circumcision symbolized the Jews' separation from Gentiles and their unique relationship with God (Genesis 17:9-14). So eight days later, Mary and Joseph took the child to be circumcised. They named him Jesus, just as the angel had told Mary (1:31). They did not go to Jerusalem for this ceremony; instead, a local priest most likely performed it.

2:22-24 For forty days after the birth of a son and eighty days after the birth of a daughter, the mother was ceremonially unclean and could not enter the Temple. The purification offering was given at the end of her time of separation. Mary and Joseph were to bring an offering—a lamb for a burnt offering and a dove or pigeon for a sin offering. The priest would sacrifice these animals and declare the woman to be clean. If a lamb was too expensive, the law said that the parents could sacrifice “either a pair of turtle doves or two young pigeons.”

In addition to the purification offering, another ceremony took place. A firstborn son was presented to God one month after birth (Exodus 13:2, 11-16; Numbers 18:15-16). The ceremony included buying back—“redeeming”—the child from God through an offering. Through this, the parents would acknowledge that the child belonged to God, who alone has the power to give life. Luke explained for his Gentile audience that this command came from the law of Moses (see Exodus 13:2, 12, 15; Numbers 18:15). So Mary and Joseph took Jesus to Jerusalem to present him to the Lord.

2:25-26 Luke introduced another person who would be divinely told of the Messiah's arrival and who would confirm the baby's identity. Simeon was spiritually in tune with God: righteous, devout, expecting the Messiah to come. He had all his life held on to God's promise of a coming deliverer, so through the Holy Spirit, God promised that Simeon would not die before seeing the Lord's Messiah.

2:27-32 When Mary and Joseph brought Jesus to the Temple to present him to the Lord (2:22), Simeon was there—having been led by the Spirit to be at the Temple on that particular day. God was ordaining this meeting, in keeping with his promise to Simeon (2:26).

Mary and Joseph arrived in the Temple to present the baby Jesus to the Lord as the law required. This obedience to the Old Testament law is mentioned several times in Luke. It points out Jesus' credentials as one who obeyed the law, even from birth, because his parents did exactly as they were commanded. At the Temple, Mary and Joseph met an old man who took the baby Jesus in his arms and praised God. The Spirit led Simeon to recognize this baby as the Savior.

Simeon's song is often called the "Nunc Dimittis," the first words of its Latin translation. Simeon praised God that he had done what he promised. Luke, writing to Gentiles, pointed out that from the very beginning God's plan was to offer salvation to all people—Gentiles as well as to Jews.

2:33-35 Joseph and Mary were amazed that this stranger in the Temple recognized their small son as the Savior. Simeon blessed Mary and Joseph and then prophesied that Jesus would have a paradoxical effect on Israel. He would bring light and salvation, but his coming could also cause division. There would not be overwhelming acceptance of the promised Messiah—in fact, many would not recognize him and would reject him altogether. With Jesus, there would be no neutral ground: people would either joyfully accept him or totally reject him. Simeon told Mary that a sword would pierce her soul. As Jesus' mother, Mary would be grieved by the widespread rejection he would face; she would experience great pain when he died. Although she could not have known it and Simeon had only a hint of it, Mary would be the only person on earth who would witness both his birth and his death.

2:36-38 Another person who recognized this special baby arrived on the scene, as Simeon was giving his words of prophecy to Joseph and Mary. This was Anna, a prophet, indicating that she was close to God. Prophets did not necessarily predict the future. Their main role was to speak for God, proclaiming his truth. While the tribe of Asher does not stand out in Old Testament history (see Genesis 30:12-13; 35:26) and nothing is known of Phanuel, her father, apparently these details were important in establishing her credentials and her Jewishness. Anna had been a widow for most of her life; never remarrying but instead focusing her attention on worshiping God with fasting and prayer. That "she never left the Temple" means that she made her life occupation to be at worship whenever the doors of the Temple were open (see 24:53). Her lifestyle of worshiping, fasting, and praying indicates a woman of faith and strict devotion. While Luke did not record any exact words spoken by Anna, he wrote that she began praising God. As a second witness to the identity of this child, Anna praised God, as she perceived that this baby was the promised King to come and deliver Jerusalem (echoing Isaiah 52:9). Like Simeon, she, in her old age, was privileged to see the Messiah.

2:39 Luke again mentioned the fact that Joseph and Mary had fulfilled all the requirements of the law of the Lord (see 2:22-24). Jesus was the Son of God, but his earthly parents had fulfilled everything that God's law required regarding the birth of firstborn sons.

They then returned home to Nazareth in Galilee, from where they had come to register for the census (2:4). Did Mary and Joseph return immediately to Nazareth, or did they remain in Bethlehem for a time (as implied in Matthew 2)? Apparently there is a gap of several years between verses 38 and 39—ample time for them to find a place to live in Bethlehem, flee to Egypt to escape Herod's wrath (Matthew 2:1-18), and return to Nazareth when it was safe to do so (after Herod had died, Matthew 2:19-23).

2:40 Jesus' life gave the evidence of being filled with the Spirit. He grew physically, became strong spiritually, was filled with wisdom, and was the object of God's favor. Wisdom and God's favor indicated the presence of the Holy Spirit in his life. Jesus, like any child, developed from an infant to a toddler to a young child. He learned to crawl, sit up, walk, and finally to run. He learned to eat and talk. In many ways he was probably a typical child. Yet he was sinless in nature and certainly had uncanny wisdom for his years, as the next section reveals. For more on Jesus' growth, see 2:52.

JESUS SPEAKS WITH THE RELIGIOUS TEACHERS / 2:41-52 / 15

In first-century Israel, the age of twelve was considered the time when a child was beginning to reach adulthood. This section of Luke contains an incident at this crucial juncture in Jesus' childhood to give readers an indication of what Jesus' life would center on: the teachings of God, his true Father.

2:41-42 According to God's law, every male was required to go to Jerusalem three times a year for the great festivals (Exodus 23:14-17; Deuteronomy 16:16). In the spring, the Passover was celebrated, followed immediately by the week-long Festival of Unleavened Bread. Passover commemorated the night of the Jews' escape from Egypt when God had killed the Egyptian firstborn but had passed over Israelite homes (see Exodus 12:21-36). Every year, along with other Jewish families, Jesus and his parents went to Jerusalem for the Passover festival. Again there is attention to the law—Jesus grew up in a home where God's laws were obeyed and annual festivals observed. So, the year when Jesus was twelve years old was no different, and the family set off for the festival as usual.

2:43-44 Those who attended the festivals usually traveled in caravans for protection from robbers along the Palestine roads. It was customary for the women and children to travel at the front of the caravan, with the men bringing up the rear. A twelve-year-old boy conceivably could have been in either group, and both Mary and Joseph assumed Jesus was with the other one. Their caravan probably included a large number of people. So it was not until they were ready to strike camp that Mary and Joseph checked for Jesus among the other travelers, only to discover that he was not in the crowd but had stayed behind in Jerusalem.

2:45-47 When Mary and Joseph discovered that Jesus was not among the travelers, they went back to Jerusalem to search for him. The three days that elapsed probably refers to one day in travel away from the city, one day for them to return, then finding him on the third day. Certainly to their great relief, they found him in the Temple.

The Temple courts were famous throughout Judea as places of learning. At the time of the Passover, the greatest rabbis of the land would assemble to teach and to discuss great truths among themselves. The coming Messiah would no doubt have been a popular discussion topic, for everyone was expecting him. Jesus would have been eager to listen and to ask probing questions. It was not his youth, but the depth of his wisdom, that amazed these teachers.

2:48 Mary and Joseph knew the true identity of their son, yet that did not keep them from being typical concerned parents. Their son had been gone from them for three days, yet that seems not to have bothered him at all; he was absorbed in discussions at the Temple. Mary was worried, anxious, and overwhelmed by what had happened and her frustrating search for Jesus. Mary's words indicate a hint of scolding, "Why have you done this to us?" She explained that they had been frantic ever since he turned up missing.

2:49-50 Jesus surely felt bad that he had caused his parents distress, but it made perfect sense to him that he would be in his Father's house, that is, in the Temple. This is the first mention of Jesus' awareness that he was God's Son (he called God "my Father"). His relationship with his Father in heaven superseded his human family and even his human home. While he probably went to school and studied along with other boys in the synagogue in Nazareth, to be in the Temple with many learned teachers was a great opportunity for Jesus. He took full advantage of his time there, and it seems that he thought his parents would know where he would be.

Jesus' parents didn't understand what he meant about his Father's house.

They didn't realize that he was making a distinction between his earthly father and his heavenly Father. Jesus knew that he had a unique relationship with God. Although Mary and Joseph knew he was God's Son, they didn't understand what his mission would involve. Besides, they had to rear him, along with his brothers and sisters (Matthew 13:55-56), as a normal child. They knew Jesus was unique, but they did not know what was going on in his mind. They had to learn and observe the complex outworkings of Jesus' special identity and calling even as he lived in their family.

2:51 Jesus returned to Nazareth . . . and was obedient. Jesus understood his identity with God, but also was not yet supposed to go about his earthly ministry (that did not happen until he was thirty years old). Jesus' behavior was not disobedient, but precociously acting out his true identity which he would one day fulfill. In the meantime, Jesus lived a human life, obeying his parents, growing up, studying, and learning. As she had with the words of the shepherds at Jesus' birth (2:19), Mary stored all these things in her heart. She did not completely understand her son, but she remembered these events, thought them over, and sought to find their meaning. One day, it all would be clear. One day her son would become her Savior, and she would understand.

2:52 The Bible does not record any events of the next eighteen years of Jesus' life, but Jesus undoubtedly was learning and maturing. As the oldest in a large family, he assisted Joseph in his carpentry work. Joseph may have died during this time, leaving Jesus to provide for the family. The normal routines of daily life gave Jesus a solid understanding of the Judean people.

The second chapter of Luke shows us that although Jesus was unique, he had a normal childhood and adolescence. In terms of development, he went through the same progression we do. He grew physically (in height) and mentally (in wisdom), he related to other people (loved . . . by all who knew him), and he was loved by God. A full human life is balanced. It was important to Jesus—and it should be important to all believers—to develop fully and harmoniously in each of these key areas: physical, mental, social, and spiritual.

JOHN THE BAPTIST PREPARES THE WAY FOR JESUS / 3:1-18 / 16

When John began preaching in the wilderness, a group of eager listeners gathered around him. The Israelites considered John to be a great prophet. God had not sent a prophet to Israel for around four hundred years, so people noticed John.

3:1 Once again Luke gave his Roman audience a historical context for his narrative (as in 2:1-2). Tiberius, the Roman emperor, ruled from A.D. 14–37. Pilate was the Roman governor responsible for the province of Judea from A.D. 26–36. Originally, Archelaus, son of Herod the Great, had been assigned this portion to rule after his father died, but he ruled so poorly that his subjects petitioned for him to be removed. The Romans installed a governor in A.D. 6 and eventually Pilate held this post. Herod Antipas, ruler over Galilee, and his brother (actually half brother) Philip, were sons of the cruel Herod the Great. Herod Antipas was in power from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39. Philip ruled over the regions of Iturea and Traconitis from 4 B.C. to A.D. 33 or 34. Lysanias, ruler over Abilene is otherwise unknown. The region of Abilene was north of the other regions mentioned. Herod Antipas, Philip, Pilate, and Lysanias apparently had equal powers in governing their separate territories. All were subject to Rome and responsible for keeping peace in their respective lands.

3:2 Under Jewish law there was to be only one high priest. He was to be appointed from Aaron's line, and he would hold his position for life. Apparently the Roman authorities had deposed the Jewish-appointed Annas (who ruled from A.D. 6–15). Five of Annas's sons became high priest; Caiaphas was his son-in-law, who held the high priesthood from A.D. 18–36. Caiaphas, therefore, actually held the office, but Annas retained his title (see Acts 4:6) and probably much of the power and influence it carried.

It was during this time that a message from God came to John. There had not been a prophet in Israel for more than four hundred years. It was widely believed that when the Messiah would come, prophecy would reappear (Joel 2:28-29; Malachi 3:1; 4:5). With the arrival of John, prophecy returned to Israel, and this was a sign to the people. God gave John his message, and from that point, John brought that message to the people. The narrative here picks up from 1:80. John lived in the wilderness until he began his preaching.

3:3 News that a prophet had burst onto the scene excited the people. John went from place to place on both sides of the Jordan River, taking the message that God had given him (3:2). That message was that people should be baptized to show that they had turned from their sins and turned to God to be forgiven. “Baptism,” “turning from sin,” and “forgiveness” go hand in hand. John used an act to symbolize the cleansing from sin that occurs when one confesses and is forgiven: “baptism.”

His baptism was new in that he was asking the Jews themselves to be baptized as a sign of repentance. They considered themselves “clean” as descendants of Abraham; only “unclean” Gentiles needed baptism. But John explained that sin makes everyone “unclean,” and they all needed cleansing and forgiveness. For baptism, John needed water, so he remained in the region around the Jordan River.

3:4 In John’s day, before a king took a trip, messengers would tell those he was planning to visit to prepare the roads for him. Similarly John told his listeners to make their lives ready so the Lord could come to them.

The prophet Isaiah also called his people to repentance. The second half of the book of Isaiah focuses on the promise of salvation—the coming of the Messiah and the arrival of a man who would announce this coming (Isaiah 40:3). John the Baptist was, in fact, that voice shouting in the wilderness. John was merely God’s “voice” for the important message that God was sending to his people (3:2). What was that message? “Prepare a pathway of the Lord’s coming!” Part of “preparing the pathway” is to make a straight road for him. John’s audience, the people in Israel who came to see this prophet in the wilderness, were faced with a life-changing message. If they would prepare themselves—clear away the spiritual debris and straighten any “crooked” moral paths—the way would be ready for their King and Messiah to come.

3:5-6 While both Matthew and Mark quoted from Isaiah 40:3, Luke also quoted the two following verses, Isaiah 40:4-5. As the “pathway” is being prepared (3:4), seemingly impossible tasks must be done—such as valleys filled in and mountains leveled, curves straightened and rough places smoothed. The images of these words reflect a powerful construction force grinding up everything in its path. God’s highway will roll over every obstacle of unbelief or idolatry. As people prepare for the King, they will “straighten out” their lives through repentance from sin. The important words quoted from Isaiah, then all people will see the salvation sent from God, showed Luke’s non-Jewish audience that salvation was for all people, not just the Jews (see also Isaiah 52:10). John the Baptist called all humankind to prepare to meet Jesus.

3:7 John was the first prophet Israel had heard in over four hundred years. When news spread that a prophet was preaching in the wilderness, crowds came out to hear him, and apparently many also believed his message and came for baptism. This sample of his preaching sounds harsh; Matthew tells us that John spoke these words specifically to “Pharisees and Sadducees,” distinguished men who had come to John not to be baptized but simply to find out what was going on (Matthew 3:7). John called them a brood of snakes (Jesus also used this term, see Matthew 12:34; 23:33), conveying how dangerous and cunning these religious leaders were and suggesting that they were Satan’s offspring (see Genesis 3; John 8:44). John asked them, “Who warned you to flee God’s coming judgment?” The Jews, and especially their self-righteous religious leaders, applied God’s judgment to the Gentiles; John warned that judgment was coming on them. John’s astonishing frankness made him popular with the people but unpopular with the religious establishment.

3:8 Confession of sins and a changed life are inseparable. Faith without deeds is dead (James 2:14-26). Those who believe must also truly turn from sin, proving by the way they live that they have really turned from their sin and turned to God.

The Jews thought that as descendants of Abraham, they were guaranteed God’s blessings and that the promise given to the patriarchs was guaranteed to all their descendants, no matter how they acted. John explained, however, that relying on Abraham as their ancestor would not qualify them for God’s Kingdom. John probably pointed at stones nearby and said, “God can change these stones here into children of Abraham.” John may have used a play on the Aramaic words for “stone” and “children” in making his point that God can make a nation for himself from whomever he chooses.

3:9 God’s message hasn’t changed since the Old Testament—people will be judged for their unproductive lives. Just as a fruit tree is expected to bear fruit, God’s people should produce a crop of good deeds (3:8). John said that people who claim to believe God but don’t live for God are like unproductive trees that will be cut down. The ax of God’s judgment is poised and ready to do its work, cutting down those trees that do not bear good fruit (see Psalm 74:5-6; Jeremiah 46:22). Not only will the trees be chopped down, but they will be thrown into the fire, signifying complete destruction.

3:10-11 John's preaching elicited responses from the crowd. Many asked, "What should we do?" in order to "produce good fruit" (3:8; see also Galatians 5:22-23). John responded that they could readily show compassion, such as sharing food and clothing with people in need. The word for coats is actually "tunic," referring to a short garment worn for extra warmth under the longer robe. The person with two tunics ought to share; the same with extra food, so that no one is hungry.

3:12-13 Tax collectors were notorious for their dishonesty. Romans gathered funds for their government by farming out the collection privilege. Tax collectors earned their own living by adding a sizable sum—whatever they could get away with—to the total and keeping this money for themselves. Obviously the Jews hated fellow Jews who were tax collectors. Yet, said John, God would accept even these men; God desires to pour out mercy on those who confess, and then to give strength to live changed lives. So when these men came to be baptized, they too asked what they should do to act on their repentance. John told them to collect no more taxes than was required by the government, to stop enriching themselves at the expense of their countrymen. John did not ask them to quit their jobs, only to do them honestly. Both Matthew and Zacchaeus were tax collectors (5:27-28; 19:2).

3:14 John's powerful message even reached soldiers. Luke does not specify, but most scholars agree that these were not Roman soldiers, but Jewish soldiers who served to help keep the peace. Like the tax collectors, they stood in a separate and privileged position over the common people, capable of using their power for good or for taking advantage of people. So when the soldiers asked what they should do, John told them to quit some of their activities—such as extorting money from people and accusing people of things they didn't do. As with the tax collectors, they were told to control their greed by being content with their pay.

3:15 John was obviously a great prophet, and people were sure that the eagerly awaited age of the Messiah had arrived. Some, in fact, were eager to know whether John might be the Messiah. John spoke like the prophets of old, saying that the people must turn from their sin to avoid punishment and turn to God to experience his mercy and approval.

3:16 John's baptism with water symbolized the washing away of sins. His baptism coordinated with his message of repentance and reformation. Baptism was an "outward" sign of commitment. To be effective, it had to be accompanied by an “inward” change of attitude leading to a changed life. John’s baptism did not give salvation; it prepared a person to welcome the coming Messiah and receive his message and his baptism. Although John was the first genuine prophet in four hundred years, Jesus the Messiah would be infinitely greater than he. So much so that John would not even be worthy to be his slave.

The coming of the Spirit had been prophesied as part of the Messiah’s arrival. He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire revealed the identity of the promised Messiah (see Isaiah 44:3; Jeremiah 31:31-34; Ezekiel 36:26-27; Joel 2:28-29). The Old Testament promised a time when God would demonstrate his purifying power among people (Isaiah 32:15; Ezekiel 39:29). The prophets also looked forward to a purifying fire (Isaiah 4:4; Malachi 3:2). This looked ahead to Pentecost (Acts 2). The baptism with fire also symbolizes the work of the Holy Spirit in bringing God’s judgment on those who refuse to repent. The experience would not necessarily be like that recorded in Acts 2, but the outcome would be the same. This baptism would purify and refine each believer. When Jesus would baptize with the Holy Spirit, the entire person would be refined by the Spirit’s fire.

3:17-18 Threshing was the process of separating the grains of wheat from the useless outer shell called chaff. This was normally done in a large area called a threshing floor, often on a hill, where the wind could blow away the lighter chaff when the farmer tossed the beaten wheat into the air. A winnowing fork is a pitchfork used to toss wheat in the air in order to separate wheat from chaff. The grain is the part of the plant that is useful; chaff is the worthless outer shell. Chaff is burned because it is useless; grain, however, is gathered.

“Winnowing” is often used in the Bible to picture God’s judgment. Jesus used the same analogy in a parable (Matthew 13:24-30). John spoke of repentance, but he also spoke of judgment upon those who refused to repent. Those who refuse to live for God are chaff, the useless outer husk of the grain. By contrast, those who repent and reform their lives are like grain. Those who refuse to be used by God will be discarded because they have no value in furthering God’s work. Those who repent and believe, however, hold great value in God’s eyes because they are beginning a new life of productive service for him.

The warnings coupled with John’s announcement of the Good News made John’s message all that much more riveting.

HEROD PUTS JOHN IN PRISON / 3:19-20 / 26

John’s courageous ministry in the wilderness led to his imprisonment and eventually his execution.

3:19-20 While John proclaimed the Good News and warnings of judgment, he also apparently had a no-nonsense attitude toward the morality of the day. He publicly criticized Herod Antipas, ruler of Galilee (see 3:2), because he had married Herodias, his brother's wife. Besides being his brother's wife, Herodias was also Herod's own niece. So Herod was committing both adultery and incest. John publicly protested these sins, as well as many other wrongs Herod had done, and so he greatly angered both Herod and Herodias. Herod put John in prison, presumably to silence him. The Herods were renowned for their cruelty and evil (Herod the Great had ordered the murder of the babies in Bethlehem, Matthew 2:16). Putting John in prison was simply adding this sin to his many others. The imprisonment of John the Baptist was only one evil act in a family filled with incest, deceit, and murder. (The full story is told in Matthew 14:1-12.)

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS / 3:21-22 / 17

Luke emphasized Jesus' human nature. This baptism recorded here was the first public declaration of Jesus' ministry. Instead of going to Jerusalem and identifying with the established religious leaders, Jesus went to a river and identified himself with those who were repenting of sin.

3:21-22 The words in 3:20, recording that Herod put John in prison, explained what would happen later in John's ministry as a result of his willingness to denounce sin where he saw it. In these verses, he was still out in the wilderness, preaching and baptizing (3:16). One day, when many people were being baptized, Jesus came for baptism too.

If John's baptism was for repentance from sin, why was Jesus baptized? Jesus didn't need to admit sin—he was sinless (John 8:46; 2 Corinthians 5:21; Hebrews 4:15; 1 John 3:5). Although Jesus didn't need forgiveness, he was baptized for the following reasons: (1) to confess sin on behalf of the nation, as Isaiah, Ezra, and Nehemiah had done (see Isaiah 6:5; Ezra 9:2; Nehemiah 1:6; 9:1ff.); (2) to fulfill all righteousness (Matthew 3:15) in order to accomplish God's mission and advance God's work in the world; (3) to inaugurate his public ministry to bring the message of salvation to all people; (4) to show support for John's ministry; (5) to identify with the penitent people of God, thus with humanness and sin; (6) to give an example to follow.

Jesus, the perfect human being, didn't need baptism for sin, but he accepted baptism in obedient service to the Father. God showed his approval, for as he was praying, the heavens opened. Then, the Holy Spirit descended on Jesus in the form of a dove. This emphasized the way the Holy Spirit related to Jesus. The descending Spirit portrayed a gentle, peaceful, but active presence coming to anoint Jesus. It was not that Jesus needed to be filled with the Spirit (as if there were any lack in him) because he had the Holy Spirit (1:35) since his conception. Rather, this was Jesus' royal anointing (see Isaiah 11:2; 42:1).

The Spirit descended and a voice from heaven proclaimed the Father's approval of Jesus as his divine Son: "You are my beloved Son, and I am fully pleased with you." The words spoken by the voice from heaven echo two Old Testament passages. First, Psalm 2:7, a messianic psalm that describes the coronation of Christ, the eternal King. The rule of Christ described in the psalm will begin after his crucifixion and resurrection and will be fulfilled when he comes to set up his Kingdom on earth. Second, Isaiah 42:1-17 describes the Servant-Messiah who would suffer and die as he served God and fulfilled his mission of atoning for sin on behalf of humanity. Thus, in the two phrases spoken, the voice from the throne of heaven described both Jesus' status as the Servant who would suffer and die for all people, and as the King who would reign forever.

Jesus did not become the Son or the Messiah at this baptism. Jesus already had his divinity from eternity past. The opened heavens, the dove, and the voice revealed to John the Baptist (and to readers of this story) that Jesus was God's Son, come to earth as the promised Messiah to fulfill prophecy and bring salvation to all who believe.

In 3:21-22, all three persons of the Trinity are named as present and active. The doctrine of the Trinity, which was developed much later in church history, teaches that God is three persons and yet one in essence. God the Father speaks; God the Son is baptized; God the Holy Spirit descends on Jesus. God is one, yet in three persons at the same time. This is one of God's incomprehensible mysteries. Other Bible references that speak of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are Matthew 28:19; John 15:26; 1 Corinthians 12:4-13; 2 Corinthians 13:13; Ephesians 2:18; 1 Thessalonians 1:2-5; and 1 Peter 1:2.

THE RECORD OF JESUS' ANCESTORS / 3:23-38 / 3

Although many Bible readers either skip over the extensive genealogies in the Bible or read through them quickly (Genesis 4-5; 1 Chronicles 1-9), it is important to pause at these genealogies and recognize their significance. Unlike Matthew, who provides a genealogy to Abraham (Matthew 1:1-17), Luke provides a genealogy that reaches back to the beginning of human history—to Adam himself (3:38). This is the point: Jesus is not only the fulfillment of the promises given to Abraham (3:34) and to King David (3:31), but the embodiment of perfect humanity.

3:23 Jesus began his public ministry at the time when he was baptized by John (3:21-22). He was about thirty years old at that time. Thirty was the prescribed age for priests to begin their ministry (Numbers 4:3).

Matthew included a genealogy of Jesus at the very beginning of his Gospel because his Jewish audience would have wanted to know Jesus' heritage. A person's family line proved his or her standing as one of God's chosen people, so Matthew showed that Jesus was a descendant of Abraham, the father of all Jews, and a direct descendant of David, fulfilling Old Testament prophecies about the Messiah's line. While it is impossible to completely harmonize the genealogies recorded by Matthew and Luke, believers can trust, as they can with all Scripture, that this is factual information obtained from different sources. While most of Matthew's names can be found in the Old Testament, Luke's names came from other sources, perhaps personal interviews or written registries of the day.

Luke's genealogy begins by saying that Jesus was known as the son of Joseph . . . the son of Heli. Genealogies were always traced through the fathers, so Luke begins with the man who was "thought" to be Jesus' father, Joseph. Although God was Jesus' Father, God had a reason for placing him in this particular line with Mary as his mother and Joseph as his legal father. According to Matthew 1:16, Joseph's father was Jacob. The answer to this apparent discrepancy may lie in the ancient custom of "levirate marriage" by which the widow of a childless man could marry his brother. A son born to that union would be considered the son of the deceased man.

3:24-25 Nothing is known of the men listed here. They should not be confused with Old Testament people with the same names.

3:26-27 There is Old Testament information on Zerubbabel who was born in Babylon during the Jewish captivity there, and then returned to Judah under the decree of Cyrus (Ezra 1:1-2:2). He led the first group of Jewish exiles back to Jerusalem and oversaw the rebuilding of God's Temple. The Old Testament often lists him as Zerubbabel, son of Shealtiel (see, for example, Ezra 3:2, 8; 5:2; Nehemiah 12:1).

3:28-29 Again, nothing is known of any of these people. They should not be confused with Old Testament people with the same names.

3:30-31 The mention of David brings the line of Jesus Christ directly back to the great king of Israel to whom the promise of an eternal Kingdom had been made in 2 Samuel 7:16. David's story is recorded in 1 Samuel 16–1 Kings 2 (also 1 Chronicles 11–29). David himself was seen as an archetype of the coming Messiah King (Isaiah 9:6-7; 11:1-2; Ezekiel 34:23-24; 37:24-25). David's most famous son, Solomon, who sat on the throne, is referenced in Matthew's genealogy. Luke, however, has been tracing, up to this point, David's line through his third son, Nathan.

3:32-33 Jesse had several sons, one of whom had been anointed by the prophet Samuel to be the next king of Israel after King Saul (see 1 Samuel 16:5-13). The book of Ruth tells the story of Boaz and a young woman named Ruth, who had come to Israel from the nearby nation of Moab. Boaz married Ruth, and they became the parents of Obed (Ruth 4:13-17). Obed later became the father of Jesse (Ruth 4:21-22). See also 1 Chronicles 2:12.

Salmon is mentioned again only in the genealogy in Ruth 4:18-22. Nahshon and Amminadab are mentioned in Exodus 6:23 and 1 Chronicles 2:10-11. Nahshon is mentioned in Numbers 1:7 and 7:12-17. Not much is known about Arni and Hezron. Hezron is mentioned in Genesis 46:12, Numbers 26:21, and 1 Chronicles 2:5. Arni (or Ram) is mentioned in Ruth 4:19, 1 Chronicles 2:9-10. Judah, one of Jacob's sons, was patriarch of the tribe of Judah. His story is told in Genesis 29:35; 38:1-30; and 44:18-34. He actually had twin sons named Perez and Zerah (see also 1 Chronicles 2:4).

3:34-35 Judah had been one of the twelve sons of Jacob. Jacob had many sons by his wives Rachel and Leah. Jacob's twelve sons became the twelve tribes of Israel (see Genesis 49:1-28). Jacob's story is told in Genesis 25–50.

Jacob was the son of Isaac, who had been the miracle child, born to Abraham and Sarah in their old age, through whom God had promised to bless Abraham (Genesis 12:2-3). The line of Jesus would naturally go back through Isaac, this promised son. Jesus would ultimately fulfill God's promise to Abraham. Isaac's story is told in Genesis 17:15–35:29. Abraham's story is told in Genesis 11–25. (He is also mentioned in Exodus 2:24; Acts 7:2-8; Romans 4; Galatians 3; Hebrews 2; 6–7; 11.)

These three men—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—are often named together as the “patriarchs,” fathers of the nation and receivers of God's covenant (see Genesis 50:24; Exodus 3:16; 33:1; Numbers 32:11; Deuteronomy 1:8; 6:10; 9:5, 27; 29:13; 30:20; 34:4; 2 Kings 13:23; Jeremiah 33:26; Matthew 8:11; Luke 13:28; Acts 3:13; 7:32).

For the names listed from Terah through Arphaxad (3:36), Luke seems to have drawn upon Genesis 11:10-26 and 1 Chronicles 1:24-27. Terah, father of Abraham, first took his family to Haran. There, God had called Abraham to travel to the land that would be given to his descendants. Apart from the listing of these names in the Old Testament passages noted above, nothing else is known of these men.

3:36-37 Cainan and Arphaxad are known only from the Old Testament passages that list their names. Arphaxad was the third son of Shem. Shem was one of the three sons of Noah from whom the Jews were descended. Noah, by his righteousness, spared his family from the flood that destroyed the earth (see Genesis 6–9). His sons and their wives repopulated the earth after the flood. Noah's father was Lamech (see Genesis 5:25, 28; 1 Chronicles 1:3). Methuselah reportedly lived 969 years, the longest anyone has ever lived (see Genesis 5:27; 1 Chronicles 1:3). Enoch was a righteous man who did not die but was taken up to heaven after walking with God for 365 years (Genesis 5:23-24; Jude 14). For Jared, see Genesis 5:15; 1 Chronicles 1:2. Mahalalel is also mentioned in Genesis 5:13 and 1 Chronicles 1:2. For Kenan, see Genesis 5:9; 1 Chronicles 1:2.

3:38 For the record of Enosh, see Genesis 4:26, 5:6 and 1 Chronicles 1:1. Seth was born to Adam and Eve after Cain killed Abel (Genesis 4:25). Adam, the first man, fathered the entire human race. Luke called him the son of God. While Jesus is God's true and only Son, all the human race is considered sons of God because they were created by him and owe their very existence to his divine will.

Luke accomplished his goal for this genealogy—to establish for his Gentile readers Jesus' direct connection, not only with the promises recorded in the Jewish scriptures, but also with the entire human race. Jesus came for all people.

SATAN TEMPTS JESUS IN THE WILDERNESS / 4:1-13 / 18

This section shows Jesus as the Son of God defeating Satan in open combat. No argument or temptation could daunt the Lord Jesus. This temptation by Satan also reveals that, though Jesus was human and subject to human temptations, he was perfect because he overcame all the temptations that Satan presented to him. The story of Jesus' temptation is an important demonstration of his power and sinlessness. He faced temptation and did not give in. His followers should trust in him as they face temptations that will test their faithfulness to God.

4:1-2 The word “then” picks up the story from 3:22. Jesus left the Jordan River . . . to go out into the wilderness. Jesus took the offensive against the enemy, the Devil, by going into the wilderness to face temptation.

The word “devil” in Greek means “accuser”; in Hebrew, the word “Satan” means the same. The Devil, who tempted Adam and Eve in the garden, also tempted Jesus in the wilderness. Satan is a real being, a created yet rebellious fallen angel, and not a symbol or an idea. He constantly fights against God and those who follow and obey God. Satan is not omnipresent, nor is he all-powerful. Through the evil spirits under his dominion, Satan works everywhere attempting to draw people away from God and into his own darkness.

The verb tempted describes continuous action; Jesus was tempted constantly during the forty days. The Spirit compelled Jesus into the wilderness where God put Jesus to the test—not to see if Jesus was ready, but to show that he was ready for his mission. Satan, however, had other plans; he hoped to thwart Jesus' mission by tempting him to do evil. Why was it necessary for Jesus to be tempted? Temptation is part of the human experience. For Jesus to be fully human, he had to face temptation (see Hebrews 4:15). Jesus had to undo Adam's work. Adam, though created perfect, gave in to temptation and passed sin on to the whole human race. Jesus, by contrast, resisted Satan. His victory offers salvation to Adam's descendants (see Romans 5:12-19).

During those forty days, Jesus ate nothing, so at the end he was very hungry. Jesus' status as God's Son did not make this fast any easier; his physical body suffered the severe hunger and pain of going without sustenance. The three temptations recorded here occurred when Jesus was at his most physically weakened state.

4:3 On the surface, this might seem to be a fairly harmless act, even a compassionate suggestion. Jesus was very hungry, so why not use the resources at his command and change a stone into a loaf of bread? In this case, however, the sin was not in the act but in the reason behind it. The Devil was trying to get Jesus to take a shortcut, to solve his immediate problem at the expense of his long-range goals, to seek comfort at the sacrifice of his discipline. Satan often works that way—persuading people to take action, even right action, for the wrong reason or at the wrong time. The fact that something is not wrong in itself does not mean that it is good for someone at a given time. Many people sin by attempting to fulfill legitimate desires outside of God’s will or ahead of his timetable.

4:4 Jesus answered Satan with what the Scriptures say. In all three quotes from Deuteronomy, found in Luke 4:4, 8, and 12, the context shows that Israel failed each test each time. Jesus showed Satan that while the test may have caused Israel to fail, it would not work with him. Jesus understood that obedience to the Father’s mission was more important than food. Making himself bread would have shown that he had not quite set aside all his powers, had not humbled himself, and had not identified completely with the human race. But Jesus refused, showing that he would use his powers only in submission to God’s plan.

4:5-7 The Devil arrogantly hoped to succeed in his rebellion against God by diverting Jesus from his mission and winning his worship. Satan tempted Jesus to take the world as an earthly kingdom right then, without carrying out the plan to save the world from sin. For Jesus, that meant obtaining his promised dominion over the world without experiencing the suffering and death of the cross. Satan offered a painless shortcut. But Satan didn’t understand that suffering and death were a part of God’s plan that Jesus had chosen to obey.

That Jesus could see all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time supports the view that this experience was visionary. The focus is not on the mountain, but on those kingdoms that were (and are) under Satan’s dominion (John 12:31). Satan offered to give dominion over the world to Jesus. This challenged Jesus’ obedience to God’s timing and will. Satan’s temptation was, in essence, “Why wait? I can give this to you now!” Of course, the offer had a catch: “If you will bow down and worship me.”

4:8 Again, Jesus replied to Satan with Scripture. For Jesus to gain rule over the world by worshiping Satan would not only be a contradiction (Satan would still be in control), but it would also break the first commandment, “You must worship the Lord your God; serve only him” (Deuteronomy 6:4-5, 13). To accomplish his mission of bringing salvation to the world, Jesus would take the path of submission to God.

4:9-11 The Temple was the tallest building in Jerusalem, and the highest point was probably the corner wall that jutted out of the hillside. Whether the Devil physically took Jesus to Jerusalem, or whether this occurred in a vision is unclear. In any case, Satan was setting the stage for his next temptation.

Jesus had quoted Scripture in response to Satan's other temptations. Here Satan tried the same tactic with Jesus: he used Scripture to try to convince Jesus to sin! Satan was quoting from Psalm 91:11-12 to support his request. The psalm describes God's protection for those who trust him. Obviously Satan was misinterpreting Scripture, making it sound as though God protects even through sin, removing the natural consequences of sinful acts. Jumping from the roof in order to test God's promises would not have been part of God's will for Jesus. In context, the psalm promises God's protection for those who, while being in his will and serving him, find themselves in danger. It does not promise protection for artificially created crises in which Christians call to God in order to test his love and care.

4:12 Jesus responded from the Scriptures again; however, he used Scripture with an understanding of the true meaning. The facts were that while God promises to protect his people, he also requires that they not test him. In the passage in Deuteronomy 6:16, Moses was referring to an incident during Israel's wilderness wanderings, recorded in Exodus 17:1-7. The people were thirsty and ready to commit mutiny against Moses and return to Egypt if he did not provide them with water. For Jesus to jump from the pinnacle of the Temple would have been a ridiculous test of God's power, and it would have been out of God's will. Jesus knew that his Father could protect him; he also understood that all his actions were to be focused on fulfilling his Father's mission.

4:13 This would only be the first of many encounters that Jesus would have with Satan's power. Jesus' personal victory over Satan at the very outset of his ministry set the stage for his command over demons throughout his ministry, but it did not dissuade Satan from continuing to try to ruin Jesus' mission. His defeat of the Devil in the wilderness was decisive but not final, for the Devil left him until the next opportunity.

JESUS' MINISTRY IN GALILEE / 4:14-15 / 30

Just as God's Spirit had led Jesus into the wilderness to be tempted (4:1), the Spirit next led Jesus to begin his teaching ministry among the people of Galilee. Luke did not yet mention anything that Jesus did in his ministry, but the other Gospels reveal much that had happened in the interim. Jesus already had his followers, he had turned water into wine (John 2:1-12), he cleared the Temple (John 2:12-25), and he had ministered in Samaria (John 4:1-42).

4:14-15 Jesus, filled with the Holy Spirit's power, returned to Galilee. He spoke often in Jewish synagogues. These gathering places for worship grew up during the exile when the Jews no longer had their Temple. Synagogues were established as places of worship on the Sabbath and as schools for young boys during the week. They continued to exist even after the Temple was rebuilt. Any town with at least ten Jewish families could have a synagogue. The synagogue was administered by one leader and an assistant. Often the leader would invite a visiting rabbi to read from the Scriptures and to teach. Thus Jesus, traveling from town to town, teaching, preaching, and doing miracles, would be a popular person to invite into a town's synagogue. Everyone praised this new rabbi. His teaching was fresh—as Matthew recorded (Matthew 7:29).

JESUS IS REJECTED AT NAZARETH / 4:16-30 / 32

Jesus' cruel rejection by the people of his hometown in Nazareth is highlighted to characterize Jesus' initial teaching ministry in Galilee. Isaiah 61, the passage Jesus read in the synagogue of Nazareth, speaks of the anointing of the Spirit on a prophet who would preach the Good News of salvation to the poor. This inaugural sermon at Nazareth is not recorded in the other Gospels. Luke begins his portrayal of Jesus' ministry with this account. It sets the tone for the importance of social concerns as found in the rest of Luke.

4:16 Jesus had been on a preaching tour of Galilee (4:14-15), and at last came to Nazareth, his boyhood home. Although Jesus had been born in Bethlehem (2:4-7), his parents had fled to Egypt to protect their son from King Herod (Matthew 2:7-18). After King Herod's death, Joseph had brought his family back to Israel, to the district of Galilee, to live in a town called Nazareth (Matthew 2:22-23).

Jesus went as usual to the synagogue on the Sabbath. Even though he was the perfect Son of God, Jesus attended services every week. As a visiting rabbi, Jesus was invited to read the Scriptures. The synagogue service usually included recitation of the Shema (Numbers 15:37-41; Deuteronomy 6:4-9; 11:13-21), benedictions, a psalm, a priestly blessing (Numbers 6:24-26), prayers, a reading from the Law (the Torah, Genesis through Deuteronomy) and then from the Prophets, and then an interpretation of the reading.

4:17-21 After the Law had been read, the scroll containing the messages of Isaiah the prophet was handed to Jesus. Scrolls were ancient “books” made of papyrus sewn together to make a long strip which was then wound around sticks at each end. Jesus unrolled the scroll until he found the place from which he wanted to read.

Jesus read from Isaiah 61:1-2. Isaiah’s words pictured the deliverance of Israel from exile in Babylon as a Year of Jubilee, when all debts were to be canceled, all slaves freed, and all property returned to original owners (Leviticus 25). But the release from Babylonian exile had not brought the fulfillment that the people had expected; they were still a conquered and oppressed people. Isaiah was prophesying a future messianic age, a time when one would come in the Spirit of the Lord to do many wonderful things. This passage offered great expectations to an oppressed people. After reading, Jesus said, “This Scripture has come true today before your very eyes!” When Jesus spoke these words, he was proclaiming himself as the One who would bring this Good News to pass.

As Jesus read this passage from Isaiah to the people in the synagogue, he stopped in the middle of 61:2 after the words, the time of the Lord’s favor has come. (The next phrase in Isaiah 61:2, however, is “and with it, the day of God’s anger against their enemies.” This will not be fulfilled until Jesus returns to earth again. We are now under God’s favor; his wrath is yet to come.)

4:22 The listeners in the synagogue that day were impressed by Jesus. They spoke well of him, meaning that at first they were impressed at his manner and his teaching. Their question, “Isn’t this Joseph’s son?” reveals their amazement that this man who had grown up among them was making such claims. This amazement, however, did not give way to faith.

4:23-24 Jesus understood what the people were thinking, so he quoted that proverb, “Physician, heal yourself.” Nazareth was Jesus’ hometown; shouldn’t he most certainly take care of all the needs there—even before he did so in other cities? Jesus was right in thinking that the people wanted him to do miracles in Nazareth like those he did in Capernaum (John 4:46-54). Apparently, Jesus had already been through that city and done miracles, just as he soon would do more miracles there (Luke 4:33-41). If he were going to say that he was the one about whom Isaiah wrote—recovery of sight, releasing of oppression—then he ought to do so for them.

However, Jesus had not come to Nazareth to put on a show for all his friends and neighbors. In fact, his purpose was quite the opposite, for he understood the truth that no prophet is accepted in his own hometown. This was certainly true of many Old Testament prophets. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Micah, and Amos suffered martyrdom.

4:25-26 Jesus stood in a long line of people sent by God specifically to Gentiles and rejected by their own countrymen. Jesus cited the experience of the prophet Elijah who was sent, not to any of the Israelite widows, but instead to a widow of Zarephath—a foreigner in the land of Sidon (1 Kings 17:8-16). Jesus' mission to the Gentiles is reemphasized here.

4:27 Elijah's successor, Elisha, met with similar guidance from God in one particular instance. God sent Elisha to cleanse only one person, Naaman, a Syrian, a hated Gentile (2 Kings 5). Syria was Israel's neighbor to the north. Syria had oppressed Israel, yet God had done a miracle for a commander in their army.

Jesus' message to the people was shocking. He did his work through lepers, Gentiles, and women just as Elisha did. Elijah and Elisha condemned Israel for their lack of faith; Jesus, too, confronted their unbelieving hearts. Israel often rejected the prophets and they were about to reject Jesus. Here Jesus implied that his work would be done outside his homeland among those who believe.

4:28-30 Why did the people of Nazareth react this way? Jesus' words made them furios because he was saying that God would reach out to Gentiles as well as to Jews. The Jews expected their Messiah to come and minister to them—free them from oppression, heal them, usher in a glorious Kingdom. They also expected that with his coming, the evil Gentiles would be vanquished. Instead, Jesus, who had just claimed to be the Messiah about whom Isaiah prophesied, illustrated his mission by way of the prophets who had shown kindness to Gentiles. Jesus' words implied that his hearers were as unbelieving as the citizens of the northern kingdom of Israel in the days of Elijah and Elisha, a time notorious for great wickedness. People became so angry that they tried to push him over the cliff. But it was not yet Jesus' time to die, so he simply slipped away through the crowd. There is no record that Jesus ever returned to Nazareth.

In this second snapshot of Jesus' ministry in Galilee (the first being 4:14-30), the Gospel presents a glimpse of the cosmic battle that was occurring. A demon challenges Jesus. But Jesus—unruffled—commands the demon to leave. Jesus' teaching style was clearly different than the rabbis, who cited past religious teachers to bolster and support their various interpretations of Scripture. In contrast, Jesus taught straight from Scripture, applying it directly to his listeners' own lives.

4:31 Jesus left his home in Nazareth and went to Capernaum, about twenty miles farther north. Capernaum became Jesus' home base during his ministry in the northernmost region of Palestine, Galilee. Jesus had already been in Capernaum (as suggested in 4:23). It has already been established that Jesus' custom was to go to the synagogue every Sabbath (4:16). The setting was probably much the same as it had been in Nazareth. He would be invited to read a portion of the Scripture and then teach on it. The fact that this was a Sabbath day is important to the event to follow.

4:32 The people were completely amazed by Jesus' authority in his teaching. The Jewish teachers whom the people were used to hearing usually quoted from well-known rabbis or gave the opinions of predecessors in order to give their words more authority. Jesus did not merely give his opinion; he proclaimed his authority.

4:33-34 This is the first of Jesus' miracles that Luke recorded. Jesus was teaching the people in the synagogue on the Sabbath (4:31). A man possessed by a demon had also made his way into the synagogue. Demons are ruled by Satan. They work to tempt people to sin. They were not created by Satan because God is the Creator of all. Rather, demons are fallen angels who joined Satan in his rebellion. The demon had entered the man's body, had taken up residence, and controlled him. In every case where demons confronted Jesus, however, they lost their power. God limits what demons can do. During Jesus' life on earth, demons were allowed to be very active to demonstrate once and for all Christ's power and authority over them.

Luke emphasized Jesus' conflict with evil powers to show his superiority over them, so he recorded many stories about Jesus driving out demons. Jesus' power over demons reveals his absolute power over Satan. Jesus didn't have to conduct an elaborate exorcism ritual. His word was enough.

This demon inside the man knew two facts—that Jesus had indeed come to destroy them (and their power) and that Jesus was the Holy One sent from God. All demons, and Satan himself, knew that Jesus was the Messiah. While the people in the synagogue were astounded at Jesus' teaching and wondered who this man could be, the demon knew.

4:35 Jesus did not respond to the demon's comment, except to rebuke him by telling him to be silent. Why would Jesus want the demon to be silent—the demon knew more about who he was than the rest of Jesus' audience did. Jesus wanted to restrain any enthusiasm for a political messiah. He did not wish to be the people's king in the way they desired, nor did he want to be a military leader. Also, to confess Jesus' deity without a proper understanding of his crucifixion would be partial and invalid. Jesus did not want people to wildly proclaim him to be God's Son unless they understood the meaning of his death for them on the cross. Even Jesus' disciples lacked understanding until his resurrection.

To silence the demon was not enough, for Jesus wanted to free the man possessed by the demon. Jesus commanded the demon to come out of him. The demon threw the man to the floor. The demon went, but not quietly. This could have been a severe spasm or a blow that thrust the man to the ground. This behavior reveals the true purpose of demons in their possession of people. Demons want only to do violence and destroy anything made in God's image. But this one left the man without hurting him further.

4:36-37 Jesus displayed power that no one had ever experienced before. He had authority and power so that with his words alone he could make a demon flee in fear. This amazed the people in the synagogue that day. Their amazement became headline news as the story spread like wildfire.

JESUS HEALS PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW AND MANY OTHERS / 4:38-41 / 35

After his clash with the demon in Capernaum, Jesus demonstrated his supernatural power to heal the sick by healing Peter's mother-in-law of a fever. Thus, by evening, the sick and demon possessed crowded Jesus, seeking his attention. Almost as an afterthought, Luke noted that Jesus was commanding the demons not to identify him. His goal was not to draw attention to himself, but to meet the real needs of others.

4:38 Jesus left the synagogue and went to Simon's home. Simon was another name for Peter. Obviously Jesus had met some of the men who would be his disciples. Luke did not write of the meeting, but Matthew and Mark recorded Jesus' call of the first four disciples (Matthew 4:18-22; Mark 1:16-20).

Simon Peter's mother-in-law was very sick with a high fever. There is no mention of a specific illness, but a malaria-type of fever was common to this region because of marshes near the mouth of the Jordan River. The Greek word for “fever” in the noun form is also the word for “fire”; thus, she was burning with a severe fever. Jesus’ reputation for healing had spread so much that the people with him knew just what to do. They begged Jesus to heal her.

4:39 Jesus “rebuked” the fever, and her temperature returned to normal at his command. Jesus’ power and authority were again emphasized as Luke pointed out what Jesus did with only a word. Jesus healed Simon’s (Peter’s) mother-in-law so completely that not only did the fever leave, but her strength was restored, and she got up at once and prepared a meal for them. Her healing was so complete it was as if she had never been ill.

4:40 The people came to Jesus as the sun went down because this was the Sabbath (4:31), their day of rest. Sabbath lasted from sunset on Friday to sunset on Saturday. The people didn’t want to break the law that prohibited travel on the Sabbath, so they waited until the Sabbath hours were over before coming to Jesus.

News had spread quickly about Jesus’ healing powers, so the people brought sick family members to Jesus. The verb is in the imperfect tense, signifying continuous action. A steady stream of sick and demon possessed people (4:41) were being carried to Jesus. Luke, the doctor, noted that no matter what their diseases were, they came to Jesus and the touch of his hand healed every one. No sickness stumped him, no disease was beyond his ability to cure; no sickness was too disgusting for the touch of his hand.

4:41 The demons came out shouting what they knew about Jesus. While their words were true, Jesus told them to be silent (see 4:35). The knowledge of the demons would soon become an ironic contrast to the misunderstanding of Jesus’ own disciples, the fickleness of the crowds, and the stubborn blindness of Israel’s own religious leaders.

JESUS PREACHES THROUGHOUT GALILEE / 4:42-44 / 36

Jesus had just spent a Sabbath day in feverish activity—healing the sick and exorcising demons. He had done practically everything except rest. Early in the morning of the next day, he set aside a time of prayer, by himself. He was careful to spend time maintaining his intimate fellowship with his Father. By the time the people found him, he was ready to face the next challenge. Believers should follow Christ’s example by carving out time in their busy schedules for worship and prayer. Ability to serve will be hindered if believers neglect times of spiritual replenishment.

4:42 Early the next morning refers to the hours before the sun had come up because Mark wrote that it was still dark (Mark 1:35). Jesus went out into the wilderness. During his ministry on earth, Jesus was in constant contact with the Father. Jesus had to get up very early just to get some time alone. If Jesus needed solitude for prayer and refreshment, how much more is this true for Christians today?

Apparently the people in Capernaum continued to arrive at Simon Peter's house the next morning hoping to hear more of Jesus' teaching and see him perform more miracles. When Jesus didn't appear, the crowds searched everywhere for him. When the people finally tracked him down, they begged him not to leave them. Who would want to lose this kind man who could heal any sickness with just a word or a touch?

4:43-44 Jesus' primary mission was to bring people to a place of decision to have faith in God, not merely to remove their pain. The word must conveys Jesus' sense of call and urgency. The Good News of the Kingdom of God was the core of Jesus' teaching. This is the Kingdom where God reigns—it is a present reality and a future hope. Today Jesus Christ reigns in the hearts of believers, but the Kingdom of God will not be fully realized until all evil in the world is judged and removed. Jesus came to earth first as a suffering Servant; he will come again as King and Judge to rule victoriously over all the earth. The Kingdom of God was good news! It was good news to the Jews because they had been awaiting the coming of the promised Messiah ever since the Babylonian captivity. It is Good News for people today as well because it means freedom from slavery to sin and selfishness. The Kingdom of God is here and now because the Holy Spirit lives in the hearts of believers. Yet it is also in the future because Jesus will return to reign over a perfect Kingdom where sin and evil no longer exist. The phrase “That is why I was sent” stresses Jesus' understanding of who was in charge.

Thus Jesus continued to travel around. Jesus had the call and the message; he had the power and authority. Wherever Jesus went, he also healed many people and cast out many demons. These miracles revealed Jesus to be the Messiah for whom the Jews had been waiting. The miracles also demonstrated Jesus' compassion for hurting people. Many people needed to hear Jesus proclaim the Good News of the Kingdom of God.

JESUS PROVIDES A MIRACULOUS CATCH OF FISH / 5:1-11 / 37

Some scholars consider this incident to be the same as in Matthew 4:18-22 and Mark 1:16-20, which record Jesus' first encounter with the fishermen, Peter, Andrew, James, and John at the Sea of Galilee. Matthew and Mark then describe how Jesus called them to follow him. However, other scholars see Luke as giving an account of Jesus' second call to these disciples because there are several differences in the accounts. If Luke was recording a second call, the disciples must have gone back to their occupation of fishing in the interim. Some of the disciples did the same after Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection (see John 21:1-14).

5:1-3 Jesus continued his teaching tour, and one day . . . was preaching on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. Word about Jesus had spread everywhere (4:14), so great crowds pressed in on him to listen to the word of God. Jesus could stand on the shore and the people could sit on the hillsides to listen. On this occasion, the crowds were pushing in and around him, practically backing him into the lake! Then he noticed two empty boats; the fishermen had left them and were washing their nets. Nets had to be kept in good condition, so they were washed to remove weeds and then mended in preparation for the next fishing expedition.

Jesus got into one of the boats, called to its owner, Simon (Peter), and asked him to push it out into the water. From this position, Jesus sat and taught the crowds.

5:4-5 Simon had spoken with Jesus and had even been called to be a follower (Matthew 4:18-22; Mark 1:16-20); he had seen Jesus perform great miracles. Even Simon's own family had benefited from Jesus' compassion and power (4:38-41). Jesus then suggested that they go out where it is deeper and do more fishing, Simon explained that they had worked hard all the night before and didn't catch a thing. Night fishing was very common on the Sea of Galilee. Fishing was usually best during the night while the fish were active and feeding closer to the surface where their nets could more easily trap them. If Simon and the others had been throwing out and pulling in nets over and over all night long and had caught nothing, surely they were tired and frustrated. Jesus said, however, "You will catch many fish." For Simon to answer Jesus, "But if you say so, we'll try again," shows deference to Jesus and budding faith in what Jesus could do.

5:6-7 The words, and this time, occurred after Simon had rounded up his partners and other workers, put the huge net they had been cleaning (5:2) back into the boat, rowed out to the deeper water, spread the net, and then begun to row and draw the net together. Nevertheless, they followed Jesus' instructions and their nets were so full they began to tear! Simon and his workers began to haul in the catch of fish, but the weight of the nets was too much. So they shouted for help from their partners in the other boat, and pulling together they began to dump the fish into the both boats until they were on the verge of sinking. Obviously this was not an ordinary catch by any standards, judging from Peter's response in the following verse.

5:8 Simon had seen people cured and had heard Jesus' teachings, but this miracle reached directly into his life and grabbed him. Simon had been fishing all his life. When he saw what Jesus did in supplying such a huge haul of fish, he recognized Jesus as the Messiah. He had called him "Master" in 5:5, but here he called him Lord. Recognizing Jesus' identity and thus his inherent holiness made Simon painfully aware of his own sinfulness. Simon knew he was looking at the Messiah, and his sin and unworthiness caused him to fall to his knees before Jesus and ask him to leave. Simon realized that he had witnessed a true miracle and did not feel worthy to be in Jesus' presence or to be the recipient of Jesus' special favor.

5:9-11 The others with Simon included those who helped on the fishing boats, as well as Simon's partners, James and John (see Mark 1:19, 29). All were awestruck by the size of their catch. Jesus spoke reassuringly to Simon. Indeed, the central focus of this story is not so much the miraculous catch as it is the picture it gives of Jesus' call to Simon to be his disciple and begin fishing for people. While James and John also followed, Luke focused on Simon, as he did in much of this Gospel, most likely because Simon Peter figured prominently in the early church (Luke's second volume is the book of Acts) and because his Gentile readers would have been familiar with him.

When the fishing party landed, they left behind the biggest catch they had ever seen and followed Jesus. Jesus had not come along with them to give them a good catch and a good day's wage; Jesus had come to change their professions and priorities forever. They understood the picture he had given them of what he was calling them to do, and they left their ships and nets behind and followed.

JESUS HEALS A MAN WITH LEPROSY / 5:12-16 / 38

After recording the story of Peter's call, Luke placed a story of another person—this time, a leper—who with a spirit of brokenness ran to the mercy of Jesus, literally falling at his feet (5:8, 12).

5:12 This man took a great risk when he came near to Jesus because he had an advanced case of leprosy. Leprosy was a feared disease because there was no known cure for it, and some forms of it were highly contagious. Leprosy had a similar emotional impact and terror associated with it, as AIDS does today. (Sometimes called Hansen's disease, leprosy still exists today in a less contagious form that can be treated.) If a person contracted the contagious type, a priest declared him a leper and banished him from his home and city. This also excluded him from participating in any social or religious activities (according to the law in Leviticus 13–14). The leper went to live in a community with other lepers until the disease went into remission or he or she died. Quarantine was the only way the people knew to contain the spread of the contagious forms of leprosy. Because leprosy destroys the nerve endings, lepers often would unknowingly damage their fingers, toes, and noses. This man with leprosy had an advanced case, so he undoubtedly had lost much bodily tissue. The man believed that Jesus could heal every trace of the disease; he only wondered if Jesus would want to.

5:13 Lepers were considered untouchable because people feared contracting their disease. Yet Jesus reached out and touched the man who was covered with leprosy, assuring him that he did want to heal him. Then he spoke the words, “Be healed!” That Jesus' touch precedes his pronouncement of healing indicates his sovereignty over the Jewish law not to touch a leper (Leviticus 5:3; 13:1-46; Numbers 5:2). In touching the leper, Jesus became “unclean,” but he did not worry about becoming ritually unclean when he could reassure this social outcast. Jesus also exposed himself to the disease. Most likely no one had touched this man in years. Jesus' touch showed great compassion. When Jesus spoke the words, instantly the leprosy disappeared.

5:14 Jesus healed the man, but also gave him two warnings: First, he was instructed not to tell anyone what had happened. Jesus' mission was to preach the Good News of the Kingdom of God; he did not want the crowds descending on him to see miracles or to benefit from his power.

The law required a priest to examine a healed leper (Leviticus 14). Then the healed leper was to give an offering at the Temple. Jesus adhered to these laws by telling the man to go right to the priest and let him examine him, thereby demonstrating high regard for God's law. Jesus wanted this man to give his story firsthand to the priest to prove that his leprosy was completely gone. This would allow him to be restored to his family and community. Next the man was to take along the offering required in the law of Moses for those who have been healed of leprosy.

The man was not to proclaim his healing, but the priest's pronouncement would give proof to everyone that the man had been healed. Most important, however, the testimony would reveal that the one who heals lepers had come. People believed that healing leprosy was a sign of the Messiah's arrival (see Matthew 11:5).

5:15-16 Mark recorded that the man disobeyed Jesus' warning (Mark 1:45). Thus, the report of Jesus' power spread even faster. The healed man's disobedience to Jesus' command, even if from good motives, hindered Jesus' work because the publicity Jesus received severely hampered his ministry in the synagogues. Vast crowds came to hear him preach and to be healed of their diseases; Jesus' notoriety as a healer made it impossible for him to teach and speak because people pressed on him, seeking special favors. Instead of enjoying his newfound fame and success (at least according to the world's standards), Jesus often withdrew to the wilderness for prayer.

JESUS HEALS A PARALYZED MAN / 5:17-26 / 39

This is the first record in Luke of Jesus' interplay with the Jewish religious leaders of the day. Jesus was making headline news in ancient Israel, so obviously those in religious power wanted to see him for themselves.

5:17 Religious leaders came from every village in all Galilee and Judea, as well as from Jerusalem to listen to Jesus and see if everything they heard about him was true. Mark wrote that this event took place in Capernaum (Mark 2:1).

Two main groups of religious leaders, the Pharisees and the Sadducees, unofficially ran the religious affairs of the country. Although Palestine was occupied by Rome, the Jews had a certain amount of self-government, especially regarding their religion. By far the most influential, the Pharisees zealously followed the Old Testament laws, as well as their own religious traditions. They were highly respected in the community, but unfortunately many became so proud of their "righteousness" that they felt set apart from the common people. They pledged to obey every minute detail, not only of God's law, but also of all the traditions and rules for life (over six hundred of these details came to be as important or more important than the word of God).

The teachers of religious law were the legal specialists of the day. Many teachers of the law were also Pharisees. They often handled correspondence for people or managed their financial accounts. By the time of Jesus, they had become a fairly powerful class.

Pharisees and teachers of religious law arrived to check out Jesus, and Luke immediately moved to the central point of this narrative, a healing. The Lord's healing power was strongly with Jesus (for more on Jesus' power, see 4:14; 6:19; 8:44-46). Through the Holy Spirit who had been given to Jesus, the power of God resided in him, which could flow out to those whom Jesus touched. Healing was one of the key signs of the Messiah (4:18-21; Isaiah 61:1-2). Jesus healed and these religious leaders saw it with their own eyes, but they refused to believe.

5:18-19 Jesus was teaching and the building was filled to capacity with people standing outside (Mark 2:2). Some men came carrying a paralyzed man on a sleeping mat. They wanted to gain access to Jesus. When they could not get in, they went up to the roof. In Bible times, houses were built of stone and had flat roofs made of mud mixed with straw. In addition, some homes had stone slabs underneath the mortar mixture—this was probably the case here, for the text mentions tiles. Outside stairways led to the roof. These men carried their friend up the stairs to the roof where they took apart a portion of the roof and lowered the sick man down into the crowd, still on his mat, right in front of Jesus.

5:20 Jesus saw their faith acted out in their determination—the faith of all the men who came, but he spoke directly to the paralyzed man, saying, “Son, your sins are forgiven.” Jesus spoke first to the man's spiritual condition. All sickness and death are the result of evil and sin in the world. That does not mean that a person's spiritual health can be measured by looking at his or her physical health. It means that every person is sinful and that every person, whether healthy, sick, or paralyzed, needs forgiveness of sins. A healthy spiritual life with God is always far more important than a perfectly healthy body. The man needed spiritual healing, so Jesus forgave his sins.

5:21 When the Pharisees and teachers of religious law heard Jesus tell the paralyzed man that his sins were forgiven, they were shocked. “Who does this man think he is?” they asked incredulously. “This is blasphemy!” Blasphemy is the act of claiming to be God or to do what only God can do, as well as to curse, revile, or insult the name of God. In Jewish law, blasphemy was punishable by death (Leviticus 24:16).

Forgiveness of sins was a sign that the messianic age had come (Isaiah 40:2; Joel 2:32; Micah 7:18-19; Zechariah 13:1), and these lifetime students of God's word should have known this. In labeling Jesus' claim to forgive sins as blasphemous, the religious leaders showed they did not understand that Jesus is God and that he has God's power to heal both the body and the soul. Because only God can forgive sins, Jesus was claiming to be God. Unfortunately, these religious leaders' reaction was anger and hatred, instead of honestly considering that perhaps this man was indeed their Messiah.

5:22-23 Jesus did not hear the men's amazed words, but he knew what they were thinking as part of his divine nature. While Jesus walked as a human on this earth, he never ceased to be God. As a man, however, Jesus was subject to place, time, and other human limitations. Yet he could still see each person's thoughts, intents, and motives. So Jesus asked them point-blank, "Why do you think this is blasphemy?"

The teachers knew about Jesus' ability to heal, and they probably had expected Jesus to immediately heal the paralyzed man. Instead, Jesus forgave the man's sins. To the teachers, this sounded like blasphemy. Anyone can just say someone's sins are forgiven, but it would take someone with great power and authority to heal a paralyzed person. Jesus would show that he had the power to forgive sins by also showing that he had the power to make a paralyzed person get up and walk. Jesus was offering to do an easier task (healing the man) as public evidence that the more difficult, "secret" task (forgiveness of sin) also had been accomplished.

5:24-25 The implied answer to the question Jesus asked in 5:23 is that it would certainly be easier to just say, "Your sins are forgiven" (who would know whether it had happened or not) than to perform a healing in public view. So to prove that he had power to forgive sins, Jesus showed them his power to heal. Speaking to the religious leaders, Jesus said, "I will prove that I, the Son of Man, have the authority on earth to forgive sins." Using the messianic title "Son of Man" (Daniel 7:13) gave them no doubt of who he claimed to be.

Turning back to the paralyzed man still lying on the mat in front of him, Jesus said, "Stand up, take your mat, and go on home, because you are healed!" Immediately he jumped to his feet and did as Jesus said. The religious leaders who had questioned Jesus' ability to forgive sins saw the formerly paralyzed man get up and walk. Such a healing would have been impossible apart from God's power. There could be no mistaking the connection—Jesus had the power to make the paralyzed man walk; thus, he also had the authority to forgive his sins.

5:26 The phrase, everyone was gripped with great wonder and awe, refers to the crowd in the house and implies amazement as well as fear. Such awe was appropriate in the presence of one who displayed the authority to heal and to forgive sins. As a result, the people praised God.

JESUS EATS WITH SINNERS AT MATTHEW'S HOUSE / 5:27-32 / 40

The next clash between Jesus and the religious leaders revolved around the company he kept. Not only was Jesus not separating himself from distasteful characters, he was seeking them out. Jesus wasn't accused of accepting sinners as his friends; he was charged with befriending sinners.

5:27 In Mark and Luke, Matthew is called Levi. Most people in this day had two or three names: a Jewish name, a Roman name, and possibly a Greek name. Levi was his Jewish name, Matthew his Roman name. Levi was a Jew who worked for the Romans as the area's tax collector. He collected taxes from the citizens as well as from merchants passing through town. Capernaum was a customs post on the caravan route between Damascus to the northeast and the Mediterranean Sea to the west. Most Jews hated tax collectors because of their reputation for cheating, their support of Rome, and their constant contact with "unclean" Gentiles. Tax collectors took a commission on the taxes they collected, so most of them overcharged the people and kept the profits.

Everyone in Capernaum knew Matthew, and anyone passing through the city who had to pay taxes could find him easily, for he sat at the tax-collection booth, an elevated platform or bench. This would not have been the first time that Jesus had seen Matthew, for Jesus had often walked along the shore of the Sea of Galilee. Certainly Matthew had seen Jesus before and, with the crowds, probably had been impressed and intrigued with this man. So one day when Jesus walked right up to Matthew's booth and said, "Come, be my disciple!" Matthew lost no time in responding. This was not a request, but a command; not an invitation, but a call to discipleship.

5:28 Levi responded as Jesus would want all his followers to do—he got up, left everything, and followed him. Levi left a lucrative tax-collecting business to follow the Lord. That Levi left everything was no small matter. Matthew was probably very wealthy, so when he walked away from his booth, he left behind a lifetime of potentially great wealth. Several of the other disciples could always return to fishing, but Matthew could never turn back.

5:29 Levi called his friends together to meet Jesus too. He held a banquet in his home with Jesus as the guest of honor so that his fellow tax collectors and other guests could meet Jesus. This was a crowd that Jesus could not reach in the synagogues, for they had been excommunicated (their profession was seen as traitorous). Jesus loved them and had a message for them too—the Good News of the Kingdom of God.

5:30 The religious leaders had apparently continued to follow Jesus all the way to Matthew's house and watched the feast. According to the Pharisees and their teachers of religious law, contact with such scum made a Jew unclean. The Pharisees regarded these people as wicked and opposed to the will of God because they did not observe the rituals for purity which enabled them to eat with others. Thus, to eat and drink with such people was particularly heinous. The Pharisees would have nothing to do with such people. But not so with Jesus. How could Jesus make the claims he did and hang out with the worst elements of society?

5:31-32 The disciples, perhaps wondering about this themselves, brought the question to Jesus. The first part of Jesus' answer was from a common proverb on the healthy and the sick. Healthy people don't need a doctor—the physician's waiting room is filled with sick people. They recognize their need and come to the one who can make them well. The Pharisees were appalled that Jesus ate with sinners and outcasts. Their love of principle and position motivated them to drive a wedge between God's law and common people. Jesus carried the proverb a step further and explained his messianic mission: "I have come to call sinners to turn from their sins, not to spend my time with those who think they are already good enough." Jesus was saying, "I am here because these are the people who realize their need and welcome me." This was Jesus' audience. Jesus, the Great Physician, healed people of physical illnesses, but he knew that all people are spiritually sick and in need of salvation. He was not lowering the standards; he was reaching out to seeking souls in order to bring them the salvation for which they sought.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS ASK JESUS ABOUT FASTING / 5:33-39 / 41

By this time, the Pharisees were constantly skirmishing with Jesus. Two confrontations have preceded this section: one over Jesus' authority to forgive sins (5:17-26) and the other over Jesus' friendship with unsavory characters

(5:27-31). The parables of the cloth and the wineskins (5:37-38) apply to more than just fasting or to the Pharisees; they speak of Jesus' entire mission and the new era he inaugurated by his entrance into human history.

5:33 John the Baptist's disciples refers to the remaining disciples of John the Baptist; the disciples of the Pharisees were probably Pharisees-in-training who would observe the older men and attempt to also practice all the rules and regulations. The Pharisees wanted to know why their own followers, as well as those of John the Baptist, would always fast and pray. "Fasting" refers to going without food in order to spend time in prayer. The Old Testament law set aside only one day a year as a required day of fasting for all Jews—the Day of Atonement (Leviticus 16:29). The Pharisees, however, fasted on Mondays and Thursdays (see 18:12) as an act of piety, so their followers did the same. Jesus' disciples, however, were out of step.

5:34-35 In the Old Testament, people would fast in times of disaster and as a sign of their humility and repentance. Fasting represented mourning. During that time, the people approached God with humility and sorrow for sin (see, for example, Judges 20:26; 1 Kings 21:27; Ezra 8:21; Joel 1:14; Jonah 3:5). In the New Testament, the Pharisees fasted as a show of piety; the disciples of John the Baptist fasted as a sign of mourning for sin and to prepare for the Messiah's coming. Jesus' disciples, however, did not need to fast because the Messiah was with them!

Jesus compared himself to a groom and his time on earth as a time of feasting and celebration. His guests (those who had come to believe in him) did not need to fast while he was with them. Jesus did not condemn fasting—he himself fasted (4:2). He emphasized that fasting must be done at the right time for the right reasons.

Jesus also knew that someday the groom will be taken away from the people, referring to his death. Then they will fast in sorrow. Although Jesus was fully human, he knew he was God and why he had come—to die, paying the penalty for sin.

5:36 Jesus then told the questioning Pharisees a parable—a short story that uses familiar scenes and everyday objects and relationships to explain spiritual truths. Jesus' arrival on earth ushered in a new covenant between God and people. The New Covenant called for a new way of expressing personal faith. The newness of the gospel could not be combined with the legalism of the Pharisees any more than a piece of cloth from a new garment should be used to patch an old garment. When the garment would be washed, the patch would shrink, pull away from the old garment, and leave a worse tear than before.

Jesus did not come to patch up the old religious system of Judaism with its rules and traditions. His purpose was to fulfill the law and start something new, though it had been prophesied for centuries. The “new” cannot fit with the “old” patterns of thought. Jesus Christ, God’s Son, came to earth to offer people forgiveness of sins and reconciliation with God. The gospel did not fit into the old rigid legalistic system of religion. The gospel offered grace; Judaism offered law and rule keeping.

5:37-38 In Bible times, people would store wine in goatskins sewn around the edges to form watertight bags (called wineskins). New wine expands as it ferments; thus new wine must be put into new wineskins. Old wineskins would become brittle and wouldn’t stretch anymore; if someone put new wine into an old wineskin, the old wineskin would burst and spill the wine.

The Christian church was never meant to be a sect or adaptation of Judaism. Instead, Christ fulfills the intent of the Old Testament Scripture. The law reveals the nature and will of God; Jesus Christ reveals the nature and will of God. But while the law could only point out sin and condemn people, Jesus Christ gave his life to bring forgiveness of sin and salvation. These parables speak of Jesus’ entire mission and the new era he inaugurated by his entrance into human history.

The new wine was the newness of the gospel as exemplified in the person of Jesus Christ (John 2:1-11). Like old wineskins, the Pharisees and indeed the entire religious system of Judaism had become too rigid to accept Jesus who could not be contained in their traditions or rules. Their understanding of faithfulness to the law had become unsuitable for the fresh, dynamic power of Christ’s message. They were the self-appointed guardians of the “old garment” and the “old wineskins.”

5:39 Jesus could have quoted another well-known parable for our day, “You can’t teach an old dog new tricks.” Jesus realized that many people are so content with the old wine that they don’t even want to try the new wine. “The old is better,” they say. Many tragically stick with the good when God wants to give them the best. Many of the Pharisees would investigate Jesus’ teaching but cling to the old traditions. Many who check out Christianity will reject it, preferring their old ways. Loyalty to the old life may prevent people from believing and certainly will keep them from growing.

THE DISCIPLES PICK WHEAT ON THE SABBATH / 6:1-5 / 45

The end of chapter 5 has the parables of the unshrunk cloth and the new wine. These were Jesus' explanation of how the message of the Good News could not be confined within the rigid rules and traditions of the Pharisees.

6:1-2 As these leaders continued to follow Jesus, they observed him one Sabbath day as he was walking through some grainfields. Roads often went right through fields. The disciples broke off heads of wheat, rubbed off the husks in their hands, and ate the grains. On any other day but the Sabbath, this would have been acceptable. God's law said that farmers were to leave the edges of their fields unplowed so travelers and the poor could eat (Deuteronomy 23:25). This day was a problem, however, because the religious leadership had set up strict laws regarding how to observe the Sabbath. They had set up thirty-nine categories of forbidden activities—and harvesting was one of them. According to the religious leaders, however, the disciples were technically “harvesting” because they were picking wheat and rubbing it in their hands. The disciples were not breaking God's law as recorded by Moses. Instead, they were only violating one of the Pharisees' many rules.

6:3-4 The Pharisees would have been taken aback by Jesus' question, “Haven't you ever read in the Scriptures . . . ?” Of course they had read this story about what King David did when he and his companions were hungry. Jesus explained his disciples' action on the grounds that they were hungry and that their need superseded the technicalities of ceremonial law.

The story is recorded in 1 Samuel 21:1-6. Each week twelve consecrated loaves of special bread, representing the twelve tribes of Israel, would be placed on a table in the house of God, the Tabernacle. At the end of the week, the bread would be replaced with fresh loaves, and the old loaves were reserved for the priests to eat (Leviticus 24:9). On one occasion, the high priest gave this special bread to David and his men to eat as they were fleeing from Saul. The priest understood that their need was more important than ceremonial regulations. The loaves given to David were the old loaves that had just been replaced with fresh ones. Although the priests were the only ones allowed to eat this bread, God did not punish David because his need for food was more important than the priestly regulations.

By comparing himself and his disciples to David and his men, Jesus was saying, in effect, “If you condemn me, you must also condemn David.” Jesus was not condoning disobedience to God’s laws. Instead, he was emphasizing discernment and compassion in enforcing the ceremonial laws, something the self-righteous Pharisees did not comprehend. People’s needs are more important than technicalities.

6:5 When Jesus said that he, calling himself Son of Man, was master even of the Sabbath, he was claiming to be greater than the law and above the law. Jesus meant that he had the authority to overrule the Pharisees’ traditions and regulations because he had created the Sabbath—and the Creator is always greater than the creation. Jesus claimed the authority to correctly interpret the meaning of the Sabbath and all the laws pertaining to it. Who created the Sabbath? God did. Therefore, because Jesus, the Son of Man, is God’s Son, given authority and power by God himself, he is also master of the Sabbath.

JESUS HEALS A MAN’S HAND ON THE SABBATH / 6:6-11 / 46

The ongoing debate about the Sabbath would continue to escalate as Jesus continued with his mission, regardless of the day of the week. Obviously Jesus taught and healed throughout the week, but the Gospel writers present several incidents that occurred on the Sabbath in order to highlight the animosity of the religious leaders. This healing is the last in a series of five confrontations with the Pharisees in this section. The Pharisees had already objected to Jesus forgiving sins (5:17-26), associating with “sinners” (5:29-32), and challenging their traditions involving fasting (5:33-39) and the Sabbath (6:1-5).

6:6-7 On another Sabbath day, Jesus was in the synagogue . . . teaching. At this particular time, a man with a deformed right hand came into the synagogue. There seems to be no question that Jesus could heal the man. The Pharisees were concerned only to see whether Jesus would heal the man on the Sabbath. What difference should that make? Luke explains that they were eager to find some legal charge to bring against him. How unfortunate that they could not rejoice in a healing; instead, they hoped to use the healing to bring a charge against Jesus. It was more important for them to protect their laws than to free a person from suffering. God’s law prohibited work on the seventh day of the week (Exodus 31:14-17); thus, the religious leaders allowed no healing to be done on the Sabbath unless a person’s life was in danger. Healing, they argued, was practicing medicine, and they had a law that a person could not practice this profession on the Sabbath.

The man’s condition was not life threatening. Jesus could have avoided conflict by waiting until the next day to heal the man. But Jesus, as Lord of the Sabbath, had the authority to overrule the Pharisees' traditions and regulations. If he had waited another day, he would have been submitting to the Pharisees and showing that their made-up rules were indeed equal to God's law. But God's law for the Sabbath was never meant to keep people in bondage. When Jesus saw a need, he filled it, regardless of the day or time.

6:8 Again the text reveals the divine perception that Jesus retained while on earth: he knew their thoughts (see also 5:22). Jesus would make a public display of this healing, so he said to the man with the deformed hand, "Come and stand here where everyone can see." Jesus would make the important point that he could not and would not be bound by the Pharisees' burdensome laws.

6:9 Jesus' question should have been obvious—even to these religious leaders, "Is it legal to do good deeds on the Sabbath, or is it a day for doing harm?" The Pharisees' own laws allowed people to do good and to save life on the Sabbath—a farmer could rescue a sheep from a pit on that day, even though such an act would clearly be considered "work" (Matthew 12:11-12). How absurd, then, to refuse to allow a person to do good to another person on the Sabbath.

6:10 Jesus did not receive an answer to his question, so he turned his attention back to the man, telling him to reach out his hand. When the man did so, his hand became normal again. As with the leper (5:12-13) and the paralyzed man (5:24-25), Jesus gave this man new life.

6:11 No particular action of Jesus is recorded; he told the man to move, and with that movement, healing arrived. Jesus did nothing that could be called "work," but the Pharisees would not be swayed from their purpose. They became wild with rage. Jesus had looked them in the eyes and then had flouted their laws, overruled their authority, and exposed the hatred in their hearts to the entire crowd in the synagogue. When Jesus exposed their attitudes, he became their enemy, and they began to discuss what to do with him. Matthew and Mark state that their discussion focused on how they might kill Jesus (Matthew 12:14; Mark 3:6). Ironically, their hatred, combined with their zeal for the law, was driving them to plot murder—an act that was clearly against the law.

After a night dedicated to prayer, Jesus chose twelve men to be his apostles—his representatives. Whatever Jesus’ specific reasons for choosing each disciple, as a group they were often hot-tempered, unbelieving, and “clueless” about the spiritual realities behind Jesus’ ministry. The better that Christians come to know the weaknesses of the disciples, the more they can see that God has freely chosen them, also.

6:12 Jesus’ enemies had revealed their stubborn hearts and refusal to see him for who he was; his ministry was increasing as people crowded in to hear him. Jesus knew that he would not be long on the earth, so the continuing task of spreading the Good News of the Kingdom would be entrusted to a group of human beings whom he must choose. This was a daunting task and Jesus needed the Father’s help. So Jesus went to a mountain to pray, and he prayed to God all night. This was not a quick call for help while Jesus followed his instincts; this was an intense conversation as Jesus sought his Father’s guidance in this supremely important task.

6:13-14 At daybreak, after his night in prayer, Jesus called together all of his disciples. Of the many who were following him at this time, he chose twelve of them to be apostles. Jesus did not take volunteers; he chose those whom God had directed him to choose.

The choice of twelve men is highly symbolic. The number twelve corresponds to the twelve tribes of Israel (Matthew 19:28), showing the continuity between the old religious system and the new one based on Jesus’ message. Jesus looked upon this as the gathering of the true people of God. These men were the righteous remnant who would carry on the work the twelve tribes were chosen to do—to build the community of God (see 22:28-30). The Gospels and Epistles stressed the ministry of the twelve men together and its significance. The number was so important that when Judas Iscariot killed himself, another man was chosen to replace him (see Acts 1:15-26). The apostles formed Jesus’ inner circle. He gave them intense training and sent them out with his own authority. These were the men who started the Christian church. In the Gospels, these twelve men are usually called the disciples, but in the book of Acts they are called apostles. This is a rare instance of the term “apostles” in the Gospels.

The first name recorded was Simon, whom Jesus also called Peter (see John 1:42). He became one of three in Jesus’ core group among the disciples, and he recognized that Jesus was the Messiah (9:18-20). Although Peter would deny ever knowing Jesus, this Gospel alone has Jesus’ prayer on behalf of Peter that his faith would not fail (22:31-32). The risen Christ made a special appearance to Peter (24:34). He would become a leader in the Jerusalem church, write two letters that appear in the Bible (1 and 2 Peter), and be crucified for his faith.

Andrew was Peter's brother and also a fisherman (Matthew 4:18). Andrew had been a disciple of John the Baptist, and had accepted John the Baptist's testimony. He had left John to follow Jesus, and then had brought his brother Simon to Jesus (John 1:35-42).

James and John had also been fishermen and, incidentally, Peter and Andrew's partners (5:10). Along with Peter, the three of them became Jesus' inner circle. James would become the first martyr for the Christian faith (Acts 12:2). John would write the Gospel of John, the letters of 1, 2, and 3 John, and the book of Revelation.

John wrote about Philip (John 1:43). Philip probably knew Andrew and Peter because they were from the same town, Bethsaida (John 1:44). This is not the same Philip mentioned in Acts 7. Philip then brought Bartholomew (also called Nathanael) as recorded in John 1:45. Bartholomew was an honest man (John 1:47). Bartholomew at first rejected Jesus because Jesus was from Nazareth. But upon meeting Jesus, his attitude changed (John 1:49).

6:15 Matthew was also known as Levi. He had been a tax collector who, at Jesus' call, had given up everything in order to follow him (5:27-28). He would later write the Gospel of Matthew.

Thomas is often remembered as "Doubting Thomas" because he doubted Jesus' resurrection (John 20:24-25). Thomas loved Jesus and understood what Jesus' mission entailed (John 11:16).

This James was called son of Alphaeus to differentiate him from James the son of Zebedee (and brother of John) in 6:14.

Simon (the Zealot) was probably not a member of the party of Zealots, for that political party was not identified as such until A.D. 68. Most likely the word "Zealot" used here indicates zeal for God's honor and fervent nationalism that characterized Simon before he followed Jesus. Most likely, it was an affectionate nickname.

6:16 Judas (son of James) is also called Thaddaeus (Mark 3:18). He is also mentioned in Acts 1:13. Rounding out the list is Judas Iscariot, with the footnote that he is the one who later betrayed Jesus. The name "Iscariot" is probably a compound word meaning "the man from Kerioth." Thus, Judas' hometown was Kerioth in southern Judea (see Joshua 15:25), making him the only one of the Twelve who was not from Galilee. It might seem strange that Jesus would spend an entire night in prayer to pick this group, and then end up choosing Judas. Did Jesus make a mistake? No. The plan had been set in motion from the beginning of time, and this was part of the plan that would eventually come to its final conclusion in Judas' betrayal of Jesus and suicide. The betrayal fulfilled prophecy and helped to bring Jesus to the cross. There was no mistake. That was the way of salvation.

JESUS GIVES THE BEATITUDES / 6:17-26 / 49

This section is similar to the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5–7). It has been widely debated whether the two are the same sermon or different ones. It is very likely that Jesus taught the same truths twice, if not more.

6:17-19 Jesus' popularity had continued to grow, for there is not only many of his followers, but also crowds. People had come from Judea (the southernmost region of Israel), Jerusalem (the key city of Israel, in Judea), and the seacoasts of Tyre and Sidon (Gentile cities to the far north on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea). Word of Jesus' authoritative teaching and healing power had spread, so many had come long distances to hear him, to be healed, and to have Jesus cast out evil spirits. No one went away disappointed; they were all cured.

6:20 Most likely, Jesus gave these teachings primarily to the disciples with the crowds listening in. Jesus' newly chosen disciples, the twelve men who would be his closest associates, might have become tempted to feel proud and important. After all, Jesus' popularity continued to grow, as seen in the multitude with them at that moment. The disciples, riding on the wave of Jesus' popularity, needed to first understand the priorities of God's Kingdom. In addition, many of these disciples were confused about what exactly Jesus was going to do. The Gospels present a group of men who, while believing, never quite understood Jesus' coming death and resurrection until they witnessed it for themselves. So Jesus told them here, in no uncertain terms, that they should not expect fame and fortune in this world, for that is not what Jesus came to bring. They would indeed be "blessed," but by a different Kingdom's standards.

These verses are called the Beatitudes, from the Latin word meaning "blessing." They describe what it means to be Christ's follower. They are standards of conduct; they contrast Kingdom values with worldly values, showing what Christ's followers can expect from the world and what God will give them. They contrast fake piety with true humility; they show how Old Testament expectations are fulfilled in God's Kingdom. The word "blessed" means more than happiness; it means favored and approved by God.

The first “blessing” is reserved for you who are poor. These are the people who have nothing but God on whom to depend. They realize that they have nothing of their own to give to God and therefore must depend on his mercy. Jesus says, “The Kingdom of God is given to you.” Notice that he does not say, “will be given,” but “is given.” Accepting Jesus into one’s heart brings that person into the Kingdom, even as he or she lives on earth.

Jesus was not exalting poverty; instead, he was clarifying that these are the results of discipleship and that the disciples would ultimately be blessed because they could count on Jesus, the Son of Man. In these Beatitudes, Jesus was not cursing all that is part of life—such as laughter, fun, happiness, money, food—but if these become the focus of life without regard to God, then a person cannot be “blessed” by God.

6:21 The hunger about which Jesus spoke is a hunger based on poverty because of one’s lot in life or for taking a stand with Christ. The word hungry pictures an intense longing that needs to be satisfied; people who do not get food will eventually die of hunger. Jesus’ promise to those with this kind of hunger is “you will be satisfied.” Jesus will completely satisfy those with spiritual hunger.

Jesus promises that those who weep now . . . will laugh with joy. Scholars differ on the exact nature of this “weeping.” Jesus may have been referring to the nation of Israel weeping for its sins; others interpret this more personally, explaining that it refers to those who weep for their own sins or even for personal grief or oppression. Still other scholars see in the word “weeping” a picture of God’s people who suffer because of their faith in him. Most likely it refers to people who are sensitive to the world’s sin and resultant suffering. While their pain is real, they can know the end of the story and laugh.

6:22-23 To be surrounded by hateful people would hardly make a person feel like the object of blessing. But Kingdom values are the opposite of this world’s values. Jesus explained to his disciples that not only would they, like anyone else, experience poverty and sorrow in this life, but they also would be actively persecuted. They would be hated, excluded, mocked, and cursed—the one common factor would be that this would occur because they believed in Jesus. Surely this must have sounded strange to the disciples on the mountainside, surrounded by literally a multitude of people desiring to get close to Jesus. Yet Jesus saw what the future held, and he warned them accordingly.

Jesus also comforted them by saying that when they faced persecution, they were to rejoice. No matter what those who hate Jesus attempt to do to his followers on earth, a great reward awaits them in heaven. Jesus placed his disciples in a long line of God's followers who lived righteously and spoke truthfully—only to suffer for it. The Jews held the ancient prophets of God in high esteem; to be placed among them was a great honor. Jesus explained that to live and speak for God in the face of unjust persecution, as did the ancient prophets, would bring great reward in heaven.

6:24 The next three verses contain sorrows that give the flip side of the “blessings” in the previous verses. While most in the world see riches as desirable and as a sign of God's blessing, Jesus says the opposite. He pronounces sorrows on those who are rich. Jesus probably addressed these comments to his audience at large. Jesus does not decry riches themselves but their effect on people. Riches cause people to feel self-sufficient and to feel that they have found the happiness for which they were seeking. Those who choose present comfort over God's way have their only happiness now. Those who try to find fulfillment through wealth will find that wealth is the only reward they will ever get and that it does not last.

6:25 The words satisfied and prosperous refer to those who have everything that this world offers. They lack nothing. Their material possessions and financial “security” cause them to think that they have no need for God. One day, however, they will face a time of awful hunger. This may not occur in this life, but they will find that for eternity, when it really matters, they will be the ones who suffer. The Gospel later records a parable of a rich man and a poor man that illustrates this point (see 16:19-31).

In much the same way, those who laugh carelessly will one day face mourning and sorrow that will last for eternity. Jesus was not against laughter—indeed, laughter is one of the greatest gifts God has given to his people. Jesus was pointing at the same attitude carried by those who are rich and self-satisfied in this life and give superficial laughter at any mention of God or of eternity. They will find that they were wrong, and they will mourn and weep forever.

6:26 Jesus points out a serious problem facing those who are praised by the crowds. While being spoken well of is certainly a worthy goal, rarely can a person be spoken well of by everyone and have everyone completely agree with him or her on every topic. One cannot be pleasing to everyone in that way without sacrificing some principle here or another there. Such a person must waffle in all areas of life so everyone will like him or her.

One group in the Old Testament was praised by everyone, from the king to the common people—they were the false prophets. The ancestors of these Israelites listening to Jesus had spoken well of the false prophets. They were praised by kings and crowds because their predictions—personal prosperity and victory in war—were exactly what the people wanted to hear. Unfortunately, their words were shown to be lies as the nations of Israel and later Judah lost their freedom and their homeland when they were taken into captivity. Popularity is no guarantee of a person's truthfulness; human flattery does not bring God's approval. Sadness lies ahead for those who chase after the crowd's praise rather than God's truth.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT LOVING ENEMIES / 6:27-36 / 57

While the Pharisees sought Jesus' death because he refused to keep their regulations regarding cleanliness and the Sabbath observance, Jesus was teaching standards of living that were far higher than anything the Pharisees could imagine. The difference was that the Pharisees were performing their acts in order to be good enough for God; Jesus knew the standards were impossible to reach on human strength alone. Jesus did not ask people to act this way in order to be good enough for God. But people who have accepted Christ as Savior have the Holy Spirit's help to accomplish what would otherwise be impossible.

6:27-28 Jesus taught that love must not be selective. His followers are to love all people, regardless of how unlovely or even hostile they may be. They also must act on that love by being willing to do good when it is in their power to do it. There are several words for love in Greek. The word used here is agape, meaning the kind of love shown even when the one loved has no merit for that love. It is love that must be chosen and willed.

All people have experienced agape from God. God loved the world even while people were sinful and rebellious. God willed to love his people and sent his Son to die for them, not because they deserved it or had any merit, but only because of God's love. Those who have experienced God's love understand what it means to be loved undeservedly. People who were once enemies of God and have joined his family can understand what it means to love your enemies. Only with the help of God's Spirit can his people do good to those who hate them, pray for the happiness of those who curse them, and pray for those who hurt them (see Romans 12:14-21). When believers are hated, cursed, and hurt, they are to respond with love.

6:29-30 How can anyone respond to persecution in love? Jesus offered a couple of examples. If you get slapped, turn the other cheek. The normal response would be to slap back, but Jesus offers another option—the attitude that says, “I will not seek revenge. In fact, if need be, I am ready to take another blow.” The attitude is not so much to offer to be hit again as it is to offer forgiveness.

The same attitude is illustrated regarding the coat and the shirt, referring to the outer garment and the undergarment. If someone demanded the one, offer the other as well. The point is not so much being passive when being robbed as it is being compassionate for another’s need. If someone needs to steal a coat, then perhaps that person also needs your shirt.

In fact, the more general principle could be stated: Give what you have to anyone who asks you for it; and when things are taken away from you, don’t try to get them back. Such an attitude completely confounds the world. It doesn’t understand non-retaliation, forgiveness, and a loose hold on possessions. But believers, citizens of a future heavenly Kingdom, are freed to forgive and to give. The point is not that giving is always the correct answer, but that believers’ actions are rooted first in love, not in regard for honor or possessions.

6:31 This is commonly known as the Golden Rule. Many religions teach a negative version of this statement. Confucius said, “What you do not want done to yourself, do not do to others.” But Jesus stated this in a positive manner, making it even more powerful. While it may be possible to not do evil to others, it is much more difficult to take the initiative to actually do for others as you would like them to do for you. A person may be able to keep the negative form of the law by avoiding sin, but to keep the positive form requires action. This is the key to the radical discipleship that Jesus wants.

6:32-34 In these short statements, Jesus explained his commands that he had just given by showing how his followers must be different from sinners, that is, those who do not believe in him. How would God’s people be any different from the world if they only loved people who love them? How would they be any different from the world if they only did good to people who could do good to them in return? Sinners love, sinners do good, sinners lend money—the difference is that God’s people are willing to love, do good, and lend even when there is no promise of return. Such actions will mark Jesus’ followers as different.

6:35-36 Because his followers are to be different, Jesus sums up their actions as love your enemies, do good to them, and lend to them. To make them different from the world, God’s people will do those actions without expecting to get anything back. Their lives reflect the attitude of God himself; thus their reward will be great, and they will be acting as children of the Most High. God's people do these actions not so that they can be God's people, but because they are God's people. Their attitudes and values reflect God's attitudes and values. To be compassionate means to refuse to inflict just vengeance, as well as to show kindness.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT JUDGING OTHERS / 6:37-42 / 63

Jesus not only commanded his disciples to be loving and compassionate, he also went on to explain to them what true love entails. First he emphasized that true love does not judge others or withhold forgiveness.

6:37 While the word “judge” can mean to evaluate or analyze, Jesus did not mean his people should refuse to think critically or make decisions, nor was he attempting to abolish the legal system or disciplinary measures. Believers must be discerning and make certain judgments. Jesus was referring to the judgmental attitude that focuses on others' faults, criticizing and tearing them down.

The believers' special position with Christ does not give them license to take God's place as judge. Those who judge in that manner will find themselves judged by God. Neither should they criticize or they will face criticism. The practice of forgiveness leads also to forgiveness by God. Those who refuse to forgive show that they do not understand what God has done for them. God's children must be ready and willing to forgive, just as God has forgiven them.

6:38 Generosity in giving, both of material goods as well as love, compassion, and forgiveness of others will result in returned generosity. Jesus wants his disciples to be merciful and loving, not selfish or spiteful. He does away with retaliation and the concept of demanding an eye-for-an-eye recompense for wrongdoing. The picture is of blessings being returned in a bushel basket, filled to the brim, pressed down and shaken together to make room for more, then running over. Jesus wants our measure of mercy to overflow. Those who give easily will find goodness coming back to them. Those who are stingy and reluctant givers will receive in the same way.

6:39-40 In this parable, Jesus explained that, while his followers were to give, love, and refuse to be judgmental, they must also be discerning and careful whom they follow. Obviously, a blind person cannot lead a blind person because both of them will end up in a ditch. Then Jesus explained what he meant: a student is not greater than the teacher. Those who lead others must have clear vision, willingness to learn and understand, and no arrogance or self-righteousness. Such a standard would disqualify the Pharisees who, in this instance, were the blind guides leading people into disaster. Jesus explained that his disciples should not go beyond what they learned from him; instead, they should aim to be like him. Watch out whom you follow. No matter how many human teachers you may have, your ultimate authority must be Christ and his word.

6:41-42 How well Jesus understood human nature. He knew that human beings find it easy to worry about a speck in someone else's eye, but not be able to see a log in their own eye. It is easy for people to overlook their own sins yet easily spot sin in others. It's true that the sin that people most clearly see in others is also present in them. Sometimes they may offer help, but there is a crucial flaw, for they will do great damage when they can't see past the log still lodged in their eye. Jesus used hyperbole to show that someone attempting to help a brother or sister with a "speck" when that person is carrying around a "log" makes him or her a hypocrite. The person has criticized and found fault in another without applying the same standards to himself. Before that person can be of any assistance, he must first get rid of the log that is in his own eye, and then maybe he can see well enough to deal with the speck in the other person's eye.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT FRUIT IN PEOPLE'S LIVES / 6:43-45 / 66

With a couple of proverbs derived from the agricultural setting of ancient Israel, Jesus showed his audience why hypocritically judging others (6:41-42) is foolish. Just as a good tree will eventually bear good fruit, so a person's heart will eventually bear fruit—a good heart producing good works and an evil heart bringing forth evil. Everyone's heart will eventually be exposed for what it is; and a strong indicator of the character of a person's heart is what one says.

6:43-45 Figs and grapes were two of the main agricultural products of Israel. A person knows a tree by its fruit. A good (or healthy) tree can't produce bad fruit, and likewise, a bad (or unhealthy) tree can't produce good fruit.

Claims are easier to make or fake than results. Even Jesus' claims would have been ludicrous if he hadn't backed them up with results. He pointed out that the principle applies universally: You can tell a lot about a tree from its fruit! Jesus warned that people are like trees: Examine their "fruit" closely. Jesus reminded his listeners that their deeds and speech (what they say) would reveal their true underlying beliefs, attitudes, and motivations. The good impressions people try to make cannot last if their hearts are deceptive. What is in the heart will come out in a person's speech and behavior.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT BUILDING ON A SOLID FOUNDATION / 6:46-49 / 67

Jesus was not content with letting his audience ponder his profound thoughts. His teaching is not meant for academic discussion and debate. Instead, Christians should build their entire lives around his teachings, applying them to every facet of life. If they don't, they will not be able to withstand the pressures and temptations of this world and will be swept away to their destruction. Jesus calls believers to take the time they have now—before the floodwaters come—to reevaluate the way they live in light of his teachings.

6:46-47 To call Jesus Lord means to have committed oneself to following him and his teaching. Why would someone call Jesus “Lord” and then refuse to obey his teachings? Jesus' true followers not only hear his words, but they act on his words, allowing his message to make a difference in their lives. The following parable will show Jesus' listeners what it's like when a person comes, listens, and then obeys.

6:48 Jesus explained that his true followers were like a person who builds a house on a strong foundation laid upon the underlying rock. Jesus pictured Palestine's climate in these words. There were few rainfalls all year, but during the rainy season, heavy rains with excessive flooding could wash away poorly grounded homes. But those houses with their foundations on solid rock would be unaffected by the rising waters and beating winds. When the “storms of life” come (perhaps the hatred and persecution Jesus warned his followers to expect) only the person who builds his or her life on the “strong foundation” of Jesus Christ will be able to “stand firm.” When life is calm, the foundation doesn't seem to matter. But when crises come, the foundation is tested. Be sure your life is built on the solid foundation of knowing and trusting Jesus Christ.

6:49 In contrast is the person who listens and doesn't obey. While both of these people may have built houses that looked identical, the crucial difference was in the foundation. The person who won't listen to Jesus will be like a person who builds a house without a foundation. When the floods sweep down against that house it cannot stand firm. The sand beneath the house will be driven away and the house will crumble into a heap of ruins. As character is revealed by fruit (6:43-45), so faith is revealed by storms. The wise person, seeking to act upon God's word, builds to withstand anything.

A ROMAN OFFICER DEMONSTRATES FAITH / 7:1-10 / 68

The story of the officer's extraordinary faith in Jesus reiterates a dominant theme in Luke's writings (this Gospel and the book of Acts): the inclusion of the Gentiles in the family of faith. The faith of this officer foreshadows the faith of another officer, Cornelius, the first Gentile convert to Christianity (see Acts 10).

7:1 Capernaum had become Jesus' "home base" while he was in Galilee. Located on the northwestern shore of the Sea of Galilee, Capernaum was the largest of the many cities surrounding the lake. Far more than just a fishing village, it was the economic center of Galilee and sat near a major trade route and thus was a wealthy city. The city housed a contingent of Roman soldiers.

7:2-3 A Roman army officer had a highly valued slave who was sick and near death. The officer wanted him to be healed. Why so much concern about a slave? The Jewish historian Josephus wrote that Roman soldiers had many slaves who actually trained and fought with them. So this slave may have been the officer's personal attendant with whom he felt a close bond. The officer had heard about Jesus, so he certainly knew of Jesus' healing power. He sent a request for healing to Jesus apparently because he believed Jesus was sent from God. He may have known about the healing of the official's son (which probably occurred earlier, see John 4:46-54). He knew that Jesus had the power to heal his slave. Matthew 8:5 says the Roman officer visited Jesus himself, while Luke says he sent some respected Jewish leaders to present his request to Jesus. In those days, dealing with a person's messengers was considered the same as dealing with the one who had sent them.

7:4-5 The animosity between the Jews and the Romans was no secret. The Jews hated the occupation army; the Romans, in turn, hated the Jews. Yet in this story we find a different sort of Roman soldier—a man who seems to have been a God-fearing man. He loved the Jewish people, and he built a synagogue (meaning that he funded it and certainly had genuine interest in it and the God worshiped there). That this officer could request a favor of these Jewish elders and have them respond so willingly would normally come as a surprise. That the elders earnestly begged Jesus to come on behalf of this officer was even more out of character with normal Jewish / Roman relations.

7:6-8 Jesus responded to the request brought by the Jewish elders and went with them. Just before they arrived at the house, the officer sent another message by way of some friends, “Lord, don’t trouble yourself by coming to my home . . . Just say the word from where you are, and my servant will be healed.” The officer understood that since he was a Gentile, he was considered unclean by the Jews. He may also have felt himself unworthy to have Jesus enter his home. This Gentile understood more than most of the Jews of Jesus’ day; he saw Jesus’ superiority. He saw that Jesus’ authority was greater than his own and that Jesus did not have to personally visit his home. Jesus’ word would be enough.

The officer was accustomed both to obeying and to being obeyed. He may have understood that Jesus’ power and authority came from God. When Jesus spoke, God spoke. Jesus did not need rituals or medicines or even his touch or presence to accomplish a healing. The officer applied his understanding of authority to Jesus.

7:9 The Jews who had been looking for Jesus couldn’t see him for who he was, yet this Gentile did. Jesus was amazed and exclaimed to the crowd that he had not seen faith like this in all the land of Israel. This did not mean that no one in Israel had faith, but many did not accept the Good News (Romans 10:16). Without the benefit of really knowing the Old Testament Scriptures and learning from esteemed Jewish leaders, this Gentile man understood the need to depend totally on Jesus’ power. He knew, without a doubt, that Jesus could do what seemed impossible. Such faith both astonished and pleased Jesus.

7:10 Luke did not even record another word spoken by Jesus, but emphasized that the officer’s faith had been well placed. The officer’s friends returned to his house and found the slave completely healed.

JESUS RAISES A WIDOW’S SON FROM THE DEAD / 7:11-17 / 69

With a touch and his word, Jesus gave life. He had already healed a number of maladies: demon possession (4:35), sin (5:20), and all kinds of diseases (5:13, 15). Here Jesus clearly demonstrated his power over death.

7:11-12 The village of Nain was a few miles southeast of Nazareth and about a day’s journey from Capernaum. Upon approaching the gate, they came upon a funeral procession. A woman led the procession, followed by the dead man being carried out, and then many mourners. A funeral procession—the relatives of the dead person following the body that was wrapped and carried on a kind of stretcher—would make its way through town. As the procession passed, bystanders would be expected to join. In addition, hired mourners would cry aloud and draw attention to the procession. What made this funeral especially sad was that the dead boy was the only son of a widow.

7:13 This woman had already lost her husband, and here her only son was dead—her last means of support. The crowd of mourners would go home, and she would be left penniless and alone. The widow was probably past the age of childbearing and would not marry again. Unless a relative would come to her aid, her future was bleak. In the first century, it was very difficult for a woman to earn her own living. Without anyone to provide for the widow, she would be an easy prey for swindlers, and she would likely be reduced to begging for food. No wonder when the Lord saw this sad sight and the tearful woman, his heart overflowed with compassion. In fact, as Luke repeatedly emphasized, Jesus cares about people's deepest needs. As Jesus' crowd met the crowd of mourners, Jesus went to the woman and gently said, "Don't cry." This would be an empty statement under most circumstances; however, Jesus, Lord over death itself, was going to change the circumstances. Jesus has the power to bring hope out of any tragedy.

7:14 Jesus again reached out to someone in need with compassion, risking becoming unclean. To touch even the bier would have made him unclean. Risking ceremonial defilement according to the law (Numbers 19:11-22), Jesus touched the coffin. Jesus approaching the procession and touching the coffin was highly unusual, so the bearers stopped. Then Jesus spoke directly to the body, "Get up."

7:15 Suddenly the boy who had been dead sat up and began to talk. What he said is left to our imagination, but the important point is that Jesus gave him back to his mother. Jesus did the ultimate act of compassion—he did what no human being could have done. These words are almost identical to 1 Kings 17:23 when the great Old Testament prophet Elijah brought a widow's only son back to life.

7:16 The miracle of raising a widow's son to life brought to the people's minds the story of Elijah and the widow of Zarephath. The people praised God, and exclaimed that a mighty prophet had arrived among them. The people thought of Jesus as a prophet because, like the Old Testament prophets, he boldly proclaimed God's message and performed great miracles. Both Elijah and Elisha had raised children from the dead (1 Kings 17:17-24; 2 Kings 4:8-37). The people were correct in thinking that Jesus was a prophet, but he was much more—he was God himself. That they recognized the hand of God at work probably does not mean that they recognized Jesus as God. Instead, they were using an Old Testament expression that often denoted blessing (as in Ruth 1:6; 1 Samuel 2:21).

7:17 The obvious result of Jesus' miraculous act of raising a dead person to life meant that the report of what Jesus had done that day spread everywhere. The town of Nain is actually in the region of Galilee, so the word Judea is used here not for the region, but for the entire "land of the Jews" (as in 4:44). Word about Jesus went all over the country and beyond.

JESUS EASES JOHN'S DOUBT / 7:18-35 / 70

At this time, John the Baptist was in prison (see 3:19-20). King Herod, also known as Herod Antipas, had married his own sister-in-law, and John the Baptist had publicly rebuked Herod's blatant sin. In an attempt to quiet him, Herod had imprisoned him (see also Matthew 4:12; 14:1-5). "Are you the Messiah we've been expecting?" (7:19). Luke used John the Baptist's simple question as a springboard for exploring Jesus' identity. He was not merely a prophet (as the people recognized in the preceding section; 7:16), he was the Prophet, the promised Messiah.

7:18-20 John the Baptist had his own disciples who apparently were keeping in touch with him during his imprisonment. They told him about everything Jesus was doing—healing people, raising some from the dead, and teaching about a coming Kingdom. This caused John to wonder, so he called two of his disciples and sent them back to Jesus with a question, "Are you the Messiah we've been expecting, or should we keep on looking for someone else?" John had baptized Jesus, seen the heavens open, and heard the voice of God (3:21-22), yet something caused him to doubt. Perhaps John was wondering why Jesus brought blessing but little judgment, for John had preached that Jesus would baptize with the Holy Spirit and fire and separate the "wheat" from the "chaff" (3:15-17). Jesus' peaceful teaching and healing ministry may not have seemed to measure up. Maybe John wondered that if Jesus was the promised Messiah, why he didn't just say so. John, like the rest of the Jews, expected Jesus to be the conquering Messiah-King. What did all the parables and veiled teachings mean?

7:21 The acts listed here that Jesus was doing consist of observable deeds that Jesus' contemporaries had seen and have reported for people to read today. The prophets had said that the Messiah would do these very acts (see Isaiah 35:5-6; 61:1). These physical proofs helped John—and will help people today—to recognize who Jesus is.

7:22-23 Jesus answered John's doubts by telling John's disciples to go back to John and tell him what you have seen and heard. Jesus gave specific examples of miracles he had done—some are recorded in the Gospels, probably many more are not. Jesus' actions revealed who he was—and Jesus knew that by telling the messengers to say this, John would come to the right conclusion. Then, as if in a postscript, Jesus told the messengers to tell John, “God blesses those who are not offended by me.” The word for “offended” suggests closing a trap. God's blessing would come to those who accepted Jesus' credentials and believed in him rather than being “caught and trapped” by their false expectations and thus missing him completely.

7:24 After John's messengers left, Jesus talked to the crowd about John. In case anyone got the wrong impression of John or thought that Jesus was rebuking him, Jesus set the record straight by explaining John's ministry. In the following verses, Jesus asks three questions and gives three answers. When John the Baptist began his ministry, he was preaching out in the wilderness, and people went out to see and hear him (3:3). Jesus asked if the people had found a man weak as a reed. A “reed” is the cane-like grass that grows on the banks of the Jordan River. To compare a person to a reed was to say that the person was without moral fiber or courage, easily tossed about by various opinions, never taking a stand on anything. The people did not see a weak and fearful person. Instead, the people witnessed John's fiery preaching and willingness to speak out against sin.

7:25 In a second question, Jesus asked if the people had trekked out into the wilderness expecting to see a man dressed in expensive clothes. Again, Jesus gave the answer—John's rough attire made of camel's hair (Matthew 3:4) was hardly expensive or beautiful. Someone dressed like that would be found in palaces, not in the wilderness.

7:26-27 In this third question, Jesus pinpointed the reason that the people had gone into the wilderness—they went out to see a prophet. In fact, they had seen, Jesus said, more than a prophet. Jesus described John as “more” because John alone had inaugurated the messianic age and had announced the coming Kingdom of God. More than being a prophet, John had been the subject of prophecy, fulfilling Malachi 3:1. Jesus changed the words “before me” to “before you,” showing that the wording refers to Jesus as the Messiah. John was the last to function like the Old Testament prophets, the last to prepare the people for the coming Messianic age. John came to announce the arrival of the Kingdom; with Jesus Christ, the Kingdom arrived.

7:28 Of all people, no one fulfilled his God-given purpose better than John the Baptist. His role as forerunner of the Messiah put him in a position of great privilege with none greater. Yet in God’s Kingdom, all who come after John have a greater spiritual heritage because they have clearer knowledge of the purpose of Jesus’ death and resurrection. The most insignificant person in the Kingdom of God is a faithful follower who participates in the Kingdom. John would die before Jesus would be crucified and rise again to inaugurate his Kingdom. Because they will witness the Kingdom’s reality, Jesus’ followers will have privilege and place greater than John’s. Jesus was not contrasting the man John with individual Christians; he was contrasting life before Christ with life in the fullness of Christ’s Kingdom.

7:29-30 The obvious contrast here cannot be missed. The words are simple but their significance is profound. All the people, referring to the crowds, and even the tax collectors had come to understand an important truth. When these common, ordinary people, and these evil, self-serving tax collectors heard Jesus’ words, they agreed that God’s plan was right. Certainly John had done his job—these people were ready to accept Jesus because they had been prepared. They had listened to John’s preaching (3:7-18) and had been baptized by him.

But the group who should have been most ready and most accepting had refused John’s baptism. They had refused the repentance and confession that John had required (probably because they felt themselves already righteous and did not need to do so). The Pharisees and experts in religious law had rejected the forerunner of Jesus; the obvious result was that they also had rejected their own Messiah. Luke explained that in so doing, they had rejected God’s plan for them. While they may have understood God’s law, they had missed his purpose.

7:31-32 This generation referred to the people, many of whom were the religious leaders (7:30), who had rejected John the Baptist and so also rejected Jesus. Jesus condemned their attitudes. No matter what Jesus said or did, they took the opposite view. Jesus compared them to children playing a game in the central part of town where the town’s business was conducted. These children played games, perhaps copying adults in either celebrating as at a wedding dance or wailing as at a funeral. Some wanted to play “wedding” and calling out to others to join them, but their companions ignored their invitation and didn’t want to play. Then the children suggested playing “funeral,” but the others again refused to play. Nothing they did could get their friends to join them; neither extreme pleased them. Jesus’ generation, like the children in the square, did not respond to the calls issued by John the Baptist and by Jesus.

7:33-34 The religious leaders criticized John the Baptist because he didn’t drink wine and he often fasted. Because he was so different, the religious leaders assumed that he was demon possessed. By contrast, Jesus (here calling himself the Son of Man) would feast and drink. But that did not satisfy the Jews either. They simply labeled him as a glutton and a drunkard who hung out with the lowest sort of people. Many of the Jews in Jesus’ generation, including most of the religious establishment, simply refused to listen to either John or Jesus. Neither John’s asceticism nor Jesus’ enjoyment of life could please the stubborn people who chose not to believe, no matter what was offered.

7:35 God’s wisdom is seen in Jesus’ deeds. People could see the Kingdom’s power through Jesus’ miracles. These miracles proved Jesus’ teaching to be right. People might reject both the miracles and the teaching, but that will not change their truth nor will it hinder the Kingdom’s arrival. Those who follow wisdom are the followers of Jesus and John. These followers lived changed lives. Their righteous living demonstrated the validity of the wisdom that Jesus and John taught.

A SINFUL WOMAN ANOINTS JESUS’ FEET / 7:36-50 / 72

In this section, Luke continued to explore the two radically different reactions to Jesus’ ministry (see 7:29, 30). In this passage, the blatant arrogance of the Pharisees and the wise humility of a sinful woman stand side by side.

7:36 While Jesus did dine with tax collectors and others whom the religious elite thought to be “sinners” (5:29-30; 7:34), he also would share a meal with a Pharisee (see also 11:37; 14:1). This Pharisee was named Simon (7:40). When guests came to a home, they would remove their sandals; then their feet would be washed by servants.

7:37 This immoral woman, who may have been a prostitute, went to see Jesus.

A meal such as this was not a private affair; people could come in, sit around the edges, watch what went on, and listen to the conversation. Thus, this woman could have gotten in, although her reputation would precede her and she would not necessarily be welcome among this company of people. So it probably took her great courage. The woman brought a beautiful jar filled with expensive perfume. Many Jewish women wore a small perfume flask on a cord around their neck. This jar of perfume would have been valued very highly by this woman.

7:38 Although the woman was not an invited guest, she entered the house anyway and knelt behind Jesus at his feet. These people were reclining as they ate, so the woman anointed Jesus' feet without approaching the table. She began weeping, and as her tears fell on his feet, she wiped them off with her hair. This woman understood that Jesus was very special. Perhaps she, as a sinner, had come to Jesus with great sorrow for her sin. Perhaps she had followed John the Baptist and had confessed her sins. She may have been in the crowds that had been following Jesus and had come to believe in him. She may have come to Jesus grateful for being forgiven and so offering him the gift of her valuable perfume. To wash Jesus' feet was a sign of deep humility—it was the job of a slave.

7:39 The Pharisee looked over from his meal and saw what was happening—that is, he saw this woman with a notorious reputation in his house, near his table, weeping and pouring perfume on the feet of his guest. Any self-respecting rabbi would have realized this woman's sinful nature and recoiled at being touched by her—for to be touched by a sinner would make Jesus unclean and the Pharisees avoided any contact with "uncleanness." This Pharisee concluded, "If God had really sent Jesus, he would know what kind of woman is touching him" and would have told her to go away.

This religious leader had no concern for this woman's plight, no desire to lift her from her sinful life, or to help her become a better Jewish woman. Instead, he judged her as a sinner, shoved her aside, and presumed that any other rabbi (and especially one who was a "prophet") would do the same.

7:40 Jesus knew the Pharisee's thoughts and so spoke up and answered them (see also 5:22; 6:8). Simon had already made a judgment of Jesus and probably felt morally superior to him as well. But Jesus had asked for his attention, so he acted like the good host. "All right, Teacher," Simon replied, "go ahead."

7:41-43 This creditor had one man who owed him five hundred pieces of silver, and another who owed him fifty pieces. It would not be difficult for Simon to see which debtor would love the creditor more if he forgave them both their debts. “That’s right,” Jesus said.

7:44-46 Simon had committed several social errors in neglecting to wash Jesus’ feet (a courtesy extended to guests because sandaled feet got very dirty), offer him the kiss of greeting, and anoint his head with oil. The sinful woman, by contrast, lavished tears, expensive ointment, and kisses on Jesus. In this story it is the grateful prostitute, and not the self-righteous religious leader, whose sins were forgiven.

7:47 This woman’s act of humility and love show that she had been forgiven. Jesus did not overlook her sins. He did, in fact, know that this woman was a sinner (7:39), and he knew that her sins were many. But the fact that her many sins were forgiven caused her to overflow with much love for Jesus. The woman’s love did not cause her forgiveness, for no one can earn forgiveness. Her faith in Jesus, despite her many sins, saved her (7:50). By contrast, self-righteous people, like Simon, feel that they have no sins that need to be forgiven, therefore they also have little love to show for it.

7:48 Although it is God’s grace through faith that saves, and not acts of love or generosity, this woman’s act demonstrated her true faith, and Jesus honored her faith by telling her in no uncertain terms, “Your sins are forgiven.” Jesus supported this woman and treated her with dignity. Believers need to demonstrate Jesus’ approach in dealing with people.

7:49-50 The Pharisees believed that only God could forgive sins, so they wondered why this man Jesus was saying that the woman’s sins were forgiven. They asked each other, “Who does this man think he is, going around forgiving sins?” They did not grasp the fact that Jesus was God and therefore did have the authority to forgive sins. But Jesus simply looked at the woman and said, “Your faith has saved you; go in peace.” This woman’s humility did not save her, nor did her tears or her expensive perfume. It was her faith, her complete trust in the only one who could forgive her sins and save her. When people trust Christ, he changes their lives, gives them freedom from sin, and gives them peace with God.

WOMEN ACCOMPANY JESUS AND THE DISCIPLES / 8:1-3 / 73

In a culture where women played invisible roles, the fact that Luke mentioned the support of three women and highlighted a number of women in his Gospel indicates the interest Luke took in showing how women were involved in Jesus' ministry.

8:1-3 Jesus continued his mission to announce the Good News concerning the Kingdom of God (see 4:43; 7:22). The twelve disciples (named in 6:13-16) traveled with him—Jesus poured much of his ministry into them. As Jesus traveled and preached the Good News, he was also training the Twelve, preparing them for future ministry. The picture of women traveling with Jesus and his disciples would have been completely uncharacteristic of rabbis in ancient times. Rabbis refused to teach women because they were generally considered to be inferior. Jesus, however, lifted women up from degradation and servitude to the joy of fellowship and service. By allowing these women to travel with him, Jesus was showing that all people are equal under God. These women supported Jesus' ministry with their own money. They owed a great debt to him because he had healed some of them and had cast out evil spirits from others.

Mary Magdalene was from a town called Magdala or Magadan (see Matthew 15:39). Jesus had cast out seven demons from her. The number of demons indicates the severity of the possession from which Jesus freed her. Mary stayed at the cross, went to the tomb, and was the first person to see the resurrected Christ (24:10; Mark 15:40, 47; 16:1, 9; John 19:25; 20:1, 18).

Joanna was the wife of Chuza, who was Herod's business manager (or steward). He may have been in charge of one of Herod Antipas's estates. Joanna is also mentioned in 24:10 as one of the women, along with Mary Magdalene, who told the disciples the news of Jesus' resurrection. Otherwise, nothing else is known of her; Joanna's husband is mentioned only here. Perhaps Luke's Gentile readers knew of this man and the exact nature of the office that he held. Susanna is found nowhere else in Scripture, and nothing is known about her. Perhaps Luke highlighted these three women because they would have been known to his readers.

Besides these women there were many others who were contributing from their own resources to support Jesus and his disciples. This provides an insight into how Jesus and his disciples met their basic needs. John 13:29 reveals that Jesus and the disciples had a common pool of money from which they bought food and gave to the poor, and that Judas Iscariot acted as treasurer. This passage tells the origin of that pool of money. People, like the women listed here, gave money to Jesus and the disciples out of gratefulness for what Jesus had done for them.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE FOUR SOILS / 8:4-8 / 77

Jesus began teaching in parables to get his listeners to think. These parables hid the truth from those who had their minds made up, having already chosen to reject Jesus. Yet those who truly wanted to know Jesus could listen carefully and learn more about the Kingdom of God.

8:4 Jesus often communicated spiritual truth through short stories or descriptions that take a familiar object or situation and give it a startling new twist—often called “parables.” Jesus’ parables compelled listeners to discover the truth for themselves, and they concealed the truth from those too lazy or dull to understand.

8:5 In this parable, Jesus used a familiar picture to illustrate an important truth about the Kingdom of Heaven. In ancient times, when a farmer went out to plant some seed, he walked across the field and scattered handfuls of seed from a large bag slung across his shoulders. The farmer scattered the seed liberally—and some seed fell on a footpath. The hard and compacted soil of the path meant that the seed did not sink into the ground and so it sat on top where it was stepped on and where the birds came and ate it. In 8:12 Jesus explains that the devil comes and takes away the gospel message from hard hearts so that those people cannot hear or be saved.

Jesus was speaking to the crowds about the Kingdom, explaining through this parable that the religious leaders’ rejection of the Messiah did not change the truth. Jesus and the gospel were truth; there was no problem with them as there was no problem with the farmer or his seed. The only variable was the land (or the hearts) where the seed (the message) fell.

8:6 Other handfuls of seed fell on shallow soil with underlying rock. The footpath had no soil at all. But on the shallow soil, the seed began to grow. This type of soil was probably found in every farmer’s field—most of the land in Palestine is very rocky, filled with stones of all sizes. Soil on top of rocks traps the moisture so that plants can grow quickly, but the roots cannot go deep. The hot sun then dries up the water, causing the young plant to wither and die for lack of moisture. In 8:13, Jesus explains that those with hearts like this may hear the word and at first receive it with joy. But, like the crowds who followed, when the going gets tough, they fall away.

8:7 Thorns rob sprouts of nutrition, water, light, and space. Thus, when the thorns grew (weeds grow faster than wheat), the good seed was choked out and could not grow to maturity. In 8:14, Jesus explains that those with “thorny” hearts may receive the message, but then find it choked out by life’s worries and attractions.

8:8 Some seed may be lost, but other seed fell on fertile soil. This soil had been plowed by the farmer and the seed had ample sunlight, depth, and moisture to be able to grow. The seed produced a crop one hundred times as much as had been planted. Normal yield for good seed would be seven- to ten-fold. Any farmer would be overjoyed at such a tremendous yield, for it would mean even more seed to plant and harvest during the next year. In 8:15 Jesus explains that “fertile soil” people are those disciples who hear the word, hold on to it, and share it with others.

Jesus understood that not everyone who heard him speak would listen and understand, referring to a different kind of hearing, a deep listening with the mind and heart that opens a person to spiritual understanding. Jesus’ words, like the farmer’s seed, fell on various types of hearts.

JESUS EXPLAINS THE PARABLE OF THE FOUR SOILS / 8:9-18 / 78

The meaning of the parable of the four soils reinforces Jesus’ differentiation between those who are given the secrets of the Kingdom and those who are not. The secrets of God’s Kingdom are for those whom God has prepared.

8:9-10 This explanation probably occurred after Jesus and the disciples were away from the crowd. “Disciples” here probably refers to the Twelve and other true followers, such as the women described in 8:1-3. As soon as they were alone with Jesus, his followers asked him what the story (told in 8:4-8) meant. Jesus’ stories were not always easy to understand, even to those closest to Jesus. The disciples may have thought that they should have understood the story without an explanation.

Jesus explained first that understanding of the secrets of the Kingdom of God comes as a gift to those he has chosen. That this knowledge is permitted reveals God’s sovereignty. The word translated “secrets” refers to the “hidden” revelation of God, given to his true people at the proper time. The Kingdom of God was like an unknown secret to the prophets of the Old Testament—they wrote about it, but they did not understand it (as Romans 16:25-26 explains). The believers received spiritual insight that illuminated the secret so that it was no longer a mystery to them.

The parables allowed Jesus to give spiritual food to those who hungered for it. Isaiah's prophecy explains the situation of the outsiders. God told Isaiah that people would hear without understanding, and see without perceiving (Isaiah 6:9). That kind of reaction confronted Jesus. By quoting the prophet Isaiah, Jesus was telling his inner group of followers that the crowd resembled the Israelites about whom Isaiah had written. God had told Isaiah that the people would listen but not learn from his message because their hearts had hardened beyond repentance. Yet God still sent Isaiah with the message because, even though the nation itself would not repent and would reap judgment, some individuals would listen. Jesus came to the Israelites hundreds of years after Isaiah, but the words to Isaiah still applied. Most would not repent because their hearts were hardened; but a few would listen, turn from their sins, and believe.

8:11-12 Jesus' closest followers may not have immediately understood the meaning of his parable, but that did not mean they were hard-hearted. Jesus explained that the seed that the farmer sowed represents God's message to the people—the Good News of the Kingdom. The seed that fell on the hard path represents those, like the religious leaders, who hear, but the message cannot penetrate their hearts. The element of spiritual warfare is revealed here because the Devil himself comes and steals the message and prevents them from believing and being saved. “Footpath” people, like many of the religious leaders, refused to believe God's message. Satan locked their minds and hearts and threw away the key. Though not beyond God's reach, their hardness will make it very difficult for them to ever believe.

8:13 Those who are like rocky soil are those who hear the message with joy. These people believe for a while, but Jesus explains that their roots don't go very deep, so when difficulty comes, they fall away.

8:14 The same seed also fell in the thorny ground. These people hear and accept the message. But as they go on their way, the message is crowded out by the cares and riches and pleasures of this life. These distractions and conflicts rob new believers of growth—they do not spend time in God's word or with God's people. So even though the seed has grown, it can never grow into maturity. Daily routines overcrowd and materialistic pursuits distract them, choking out God's word so that it yields nothing.

8:15 Of course, some of the seed falls on good soil or the farmer would not plant in that area at all. Good soil can be found—hearts open to the gospel message wherever the seed of God’s word is sown. Those with hearts like “good soil” are those who hear God’s message, cling to it, and steadily produce a huge harvest. These people have truly believed and are willing to let Jesus make a difference in their lives. Because of this, they also “produce a harvest” because they are willing to share what Jesus has done for them.

Sometimes people’s lives can represent several different types of soil at once. A person may react like good soil to God’s teaching regarding one part of life, but be “thorny” in another area. Believers are called to be like “good soil” all the time in all areas of life. Then God can continue to teach them, they can continue to mature, and they can share the message with others.

8:16 These listeners would have understood Jesus’ reference to a lamp as being a lighted wick in a clay bowl that was full of oil. It would be ludicrous to light a lamp and then cover it up or put it under a bed. A lit lamp is meant to light up the room.

8:17 Although the truth may be hidden or kept secret for a while, it will not remain so. One day the truth will be brought to light and made plain to all. Jesus was speaking of the days of his ministry as the time of using parables and being rejected by many. The time of revelation and coming to light could refer either to Jesus’ resurrection and ascension (when his followers would fully understand his words) or the Second Coming. Jesus’ followers did not understand everything about Jesus at that time, but one day all their questions would be answered.

8:18 Because the teachings in the parables were so important for his followers to understand, Jesus warned them to pay attention. They needed to listen with understanding and then apply what Jesus said to their daily lives. To the people who listen and understand, more understanding will be given because their openness and perception of the Kingdom message will bring great rewards. They will continue to grow because they let God’s word make a difference in their lives. Ultimately, of course, they will receive eternal blessings.

Those who are not listening will lose whatever they had—it will be taken away. Jesus’ words here may have been directed to the Jews who had no understanding of Jesus and would lose even what they had—that is, their privileged status as God’s people. Or Jesus might have meant that when people reject him, their hardness of heart drives away or renders useless even the little understanding they had.

Jesus' proverbial remark, that his true family members are those who listen to God's word and obey it, reinforces the point of the preceding sections (8:8, 15, 18). Studying the Bible and applying it to all aspects of our lives are important marks of faithful followers of Christ.

8:19-20 Jesus' mother was Mary (1:30-31), and his brothers were the other children Mary and Joseph had after Jesus was born (see also Mark 6:3-4). According to Mark, the reason Jesus' mother and brothers came to see him was because they thought he was out of his mind (Mark 3:21). His mother and brothers couldn't get to him because of the crowds. Apparently Mary had gathered her family, and they had gone to find Jesus. Mary was hoping to use her personal relationship with Jesus to influence him. Standing at the edge of the crowd, Mary and the brothers relayed a message to Jesus. They thought that because of their relationship with him, he would make his way out to see them.

8:21 Jesus gave a respectful rebuke to his overly concerned mother; he was not severing ties with his earthly family. Through this incident, Jesus gave another lesson to his followers by explaining that spiritual relationships are as binding as physical ones. This would be the basis for the new community that Jesus was building—the Christian family. Therefore, Jesus told them that his mother and brothers, that is, those closest to him, are all those who hear the message of God and obey it. Jesus offers people an intimate family relationship with him. The types of people who can have a relationship with Christ are those who do the Father's will. They listen, learn, believe, and follow.

Obedience is the key to being part of God's family. Knowledge is not enough—the religious leaders had that and still missed Jesus. Following is not enough—the crowd did that but still didn't understand who Jesus was. Those who believe are brought into a family. In these words, Jesus was explaining that in his spiritual family, relationships are ultimately more important and longer-lasting than those formed in one's physical family.

JESUS CALMS THE STORM / 8:22-25 / 87

Following a section emphasizing obedience and faith in God's word, Luke placed a powerful demonstration of Jesus' supernatural power. Only God controls nature (Psalm 107:23-32), and here Jesus demonstrated his complete control over the wind and the sea, leaving his disciples thoroughly dumbfounded.

8:22 Jesus asked his disciples to cross over to the other side of the lake. Capernaum sat on the northwestern shore of the Sea of Galilee (also called a “lake” because it is inland). So Jesus and the disciples got into a boat (perhaps Peter’s fishing boat) and began to cross to the eastern shore. Jesus’ ministry was never without purpose. He was crossing the lake in order to enter a new area of ministry. Along the way, the disciples would be taught an unforgettable lesson about his power.

8:23 Mark explained that it was evening when they finally set sail (Mark 4:35). Setting sail in the evening was not unusual because Peter was used to fishing at night (see John 21:3). As the boat set out, Jesus fell asleep.

That a fierce storm developed was not necessarily unusual. The Sea of Galilee is relatively small (13 miles long, 7 miles wide), 150 feet deep, and the shoreline is 680 feet below sea level. Storms appear suddenly over the surrounding mountains, stirring the water into violent twenty-foot waves. The disciples had not foolishly set out in a storm. They usually did not encounter storms at night and did not see this one coming. Even though several of these men were experienced fishermen and knew how to handle a boat, they had been caught without warning by this squall and they were in real danger.

8:24 The disciples were in great danger, so they went to Jesus, waking him to tell him that they were all going to drown! Jesus rebuked the wind and the raging waves. The verb “rebuked” may indicate that there was an evil force behind the storm because the Greek words are the same as Jesus used when he told the demons to be silent. With his rebuke, the storm stopped and all was calm.

8:25 Jesus’ words to the disciples, floating in their boat on the now-quiet sea, were simply, “Where is your faith?” They ought not to have been afraid—they were with Jesus. They had seen him heal people, but power over a furious storm may not have crossed their minds. But they should have readily made the connection and have come to Jesus in faith, not in fear. This demonstration of power filled them with awe and amazement.

They asked the question to which they should have known the answer, “Who is this man?” This miracle clearly displayed Jesus’ divine identity. Yet despite all that they had seen and heard thus far, and despite their love for Jesus, they still did not grasp that he was himself God, and thus had power and authority over all of creation.

JESUS SENDS THE DEMONS INTO A HERD OF PIGS / 8:26-39 / 88

The elements of nature and the evil beings of the spiritual world do not ignore Jesus' command, but people do. The Pharisees rejected God's plan (7:30), and the Gerasenes were more concerned about the economic loss of a herd of pigs. But all was not lost, for the man who had been liberated from the clutches of demons listened—intently. His soul was the “good soil” about which Jesus had spoken. Knowing this, Jesus commanded this man to stay in this Gentile region, testifying to God's goodness and producing an abundant harvest of faith.

8:26 After Jesus had calmed the storm, the boat arrived at its intended destination, for Jesus wanted to go to the land of the Gerasenes. This region was across the lake from Galilee, a Gentile region probably southeast of the Sea of Galilee, home of the Decapolis, or the Ten Cities. These were Greek cities that belonged to no country and were self-governing. This was Gentile territory (there would not have been a herd of pigs in Jewish territory, for Jews considered pigs to be unclean, see 8:32 and Leviticus 11:7) and that Jesus had planned to go there. Luke would want to show his readers Jesus' desire to go into Gentile territory with his message.

8:27 As soon as Jesus was climbing out of the boat, he met with demonic opposition. A man came out to meet him, but not as a welcoming party, for he was possessed by demons who probably wanted to scare away Jesus and the disciples.

A demon-possessed person lived in isolation and agony. This man was homeless. (Mark's Gospel describes him as uncontrollable, so he could not live anywhere, see Mark 5:3-5.) He was naked and lived in a cemetery. In those days it was common for cemeteries to have many tombs carved into the hillside, making cave-like mausoleums. There was enough room for a person to live in such tombs. Finally, the text says that he had been in this condition for a long time.

8:28-29 The demons saw Jesus and recognized him and his authority immediately. So the demons caused the man to fall down before Jesus, not in worship but in grudging submission to Jesus' superiority. The man shrieked, and demanded, “Why are you bothering me?” Such a question shows the demons' ultimate rebellion. Jesus and the demons were as far separated as anything could be. Jesus' purpose was to heal and give life; the demons' purpose was to kill and destroy. The demon used Jesus' divine name, Jesus, Son of the Most High God and begged Jesus saying, "Don't torture me!" Demons recognize Jesus, understand who he is, know his power, and also seem to know their ultimate fate. Jesus has the power to "torture" them (see also 8:31). Their "torture" will be no more than the consequences for the rebellion (see Revelation 20:10).

Jesus had already commanded the evil spirit to come out of him. The power of the demon is revealed in that when the man was shackled with chains, he simply broke them. Although Satan is not as powerful as God, for he is a created being, he still exerts great power over this world. Satan's demons (there were more than one in this man) could cause this man to break iron shackles that were intended to hold him. Then the demons would drive him into the wilderness. Finally, the story also shows Satan's cruelty. For all that Satan might promise (see what he wanted to give Jesus, 4:6), he is a cruel and ruthless master. Those under his control face complete ruin under a master bent on destroying even those who serve him.

8:30 Whether Jesus was asking this poor man for his name or asking the demon for its name is uncertain. But the demon answered, saying that its name was Legion. A "legion" was the largest unit in the Roman army, having between three thousand and six thousand soldiers. Thus this man was filled with many demons.

8:31 The demons undoubtedly knew that Jesus planned to free their prisoner. Their concern at this point was where Jesus would send them. They knew where they did not want to go. They also knew that they had no power over Jesus and would have to submit to him. When the demons realized that they were face-to-face with Jesus himself, they begged Jesus not to send them into the Bottomless Pit. Also mentioned in Revelation 9:1 and 20:1-3, the Bottomless Pit is the place of confinement for Satan and his demons.

Why didn't Jesus just destroy these demons—or send them far away? Matthew 8:29 says that the demons asked not to be sent to the Bottomless Pit before the appointed time. They knew their ultimate fate, but the time for such work had not yet come. The same question could be asked today—why doesn't Jesus stop all the evil in the world? His time for that has not yet come. But it will come. The book of Revelation portrays the future victory of Jesus over Satan, his demons, and all evil.

8:32-33 The Gospel of Mark reports that this large herd of pigs numbered about two thousand (Mark 5:13). The demons pled with Jesus to let them enter into the pigs, so Jesus gave them permission. Satan has no final authority but can do only what God “permits” for the short time that he is allowed to be “god of this world” (2 Corinthians 4:4). Why Jesus gave them permission is as uncertain as why the demons wanted to enter the pigs. While Jesus could have sent them away, he did not do so because the time for final judgment had not yet come. Yet it is clear from this story that Jesus valued this one man far more than any number of pigs. The demons’ ultimate destructive intent cannot be missed in the picture of the whole herd (about two thousand pigs!) running headlong down the steep hillside into the lake, where they drowned.

8:34 The herdsmen on the hill, responsible for the safety of the pigs, were astounded when their herd suddenly ran away, down the hill, and into the Sea of Galilee. Terrified, surprised, and afraid that they would somehow be blamed for the disaster, they fled to the nearby city and the surrounding countryside, spreading the news as they ran. Certainly those who heard the news had to go and see for themselves, so a crowd soon surrounded Jesus, the disciples, and the newly freed man.

8:35 One would think that the people would have rejoiced that this man who had terrorized them for so long had been completely cured. But their response was quite different. They did not respond in joy or relief or welcome—instead, the whole crowd was afraid.

8:36-37 There could be no mistaking it, the demon-possessed man had been healed. But the people, overcome with fear told Jesus that they wanted him to leave. If they were afraid because of the loss of their livestock, it was foolish for them to value possessions, investments, and even animals above human life. Unfortunately for them, Jesus did as they asked—returned to the boat and left. And there is no biblical record that he ever returned. Sometimes the worst that can happen is for Jesus to answer a poorly considered request.

8:38-39 While the townspeople wanted Jesus gone, the formerly possessed man begged to go with Jesus, meaning that he wanted to become one of Jesus’ followers. Jesus had other plans for him, saying, “No, go back to your family and tell them all the wonderful things God has done for you.” This man would be returning to his home in a Gentile region. Jesus knew that this man would be an effective witness to those who remembered his previous condition and could attest to the miraculous healing. Through him, Jesus’ ministry would expand into this Gentile area. Jesus would not remain in the region, but he did not leave himself without a witness, for this man went all through the city telling about the great thing Jesus had done for him. The Gentiles may have sent Jesus away, but they could not send away his message or the irrefutable miracle evidenced by this healed man. Luke's Gentile audience would have been glad to know that although Jesus had been sent away from this Gentile region, Jesus still had compassion and a desire for their salvation by leaving behind this man to be his witness.

In this story, Jesus took the timid faith of a woman and transformed her into a powerful, public testimony of him. Then he gently encouraged the grief-stricken Jairus to believe in him.

8:40-42 Jesus returned across the Sea of Galilee, back to Jewish territory, probably landing at Capernaum. In contrast to the crowd on the eastern shore that had asked him to leave, here the crowds received Jesus with open arms. A man in the crowd had apparently been waiting for Jesus to return. Jairus was a leader of the local synagogue. The synagogue was the local center of worship, and Jairus was a lay person elected as one of the leaders. The leaders were responsible for supervising worship services, caring for the scrolls, running the daily school, keeping the congregation faithful to the law, distributing alms, administering the care of the building, and finding rabbis to teach on the Sabbath.

Despite his status, Jairus came and fell down at Jesus' feet, begging him to come home with him. This would have been an unusual scene, but Jairus was desperate because his only child was dying, a little girl twelve years old. Jairus's position as a loving father overshadowed his position as a leader. He put aside any concern for himself and went directly to the man who had healed so many (perhaps even in his own synagogue, 6:6-11). Jesus went with Jairus; as usual, the crowds went along.

8:43-44 One woman also had been awaiting Jesus' return. Perhaps she had hoped to reach out to him when he came back and thus be healed. But Jairus got to Jesus first, and now they were walking away from her. Perhaps she thought this would be her only chance—she might not be able to talk to Jesus, but she knew she wanted to be healed.

Luke, the physician, wrote that the woman had had a hemorrhage for twelve years. Many doctors had tried to cure her, but with no success (Mark 5:26). The bleeding caused the woman to be in a constant condition of ceremonial uncleanness (see Leviticus 15:25-33). She could not worship in the synagogue, and she could not have normal social relationships, for under Jewish law, anyone who touched her also would become unclean. Thus, the woman had been treated almost as severely as a leper. That she was in the crowd at all was a courageous move on her part. If all those people bumping against her in the crowd had known her condition, she would have been in for some rough treatment.

Nevertheless, she also desperately needed Jesus. So she pressed her way through the crowd, came up behind Jesus and touched the fringe of his robe for she believed, as did many people, that the clothes of a holy man imparted spiritual and healing power (see Mark 6:56; Acts 19:11-12). She may also have feared that Jesus would not touch her if he knew her condition because she would make him unclean. And she certainly did not want the pressing crowd to know that she had ventured among them. So she hoped to touch Jesus and then get away as unobtrusively as possible. The moment that she touched Jesus, the bleeding stopped. Immediately her pain was gone and she knew that she was healed.

8:45 The woman had hoped to disappear into the crowd. But Jesus knew about the healing the moment it happened. He asked the seemingly absurd question, “Who touched me?” While the whole crowd had been pressing up against him, no one close by had deliberately touched him. It wasn’t that Jesus didn’t know who had touched him. He wanted the woman to step forward and identify herself. Jesus wanted to teach her that his cloak did not contain magical properties, but that her faith in him had healed her.

8:46 Jesus persisted. He stopped the entire crowd, determined to find out who touched him. Jesus was talking about a different kind of touch—not the press of a person in the crowd but the deliberate touch of someone who wanted to be healed. Jesus knew it because power had gone out from him.

8:47 The woman realized that to try to slip away at that point would have been impossible. The woman came forward, trembling, and fell down before Jesus. She explained to the crowd why she had touched him. This was not a simple act—for she would have to explain how she—unclean and filled with a dreadful disease—had come in among the crowd, had reached out and touched a man (a rabbi) in her unclean state, and had hoped to slip away. All these were huge infractions of social laws and would have probably been grounds for anger from any other rabbi and any other crowd. But this was no ordinary rabbi, for she also explained that when she had touched Jesus, she had been immediately healed.

8:48 The woman may have been afraid of an angry backlash for her actions, but Jesus spoke to her in gentle words. She came for healing and received it, but she also received a relationship and peace with God himself because of her faith. Jesus explained that it was not his clothing that had healed her; rather, her faith in reaching out to the one Person who could heal her had allowed that healing to take place. Not only did the woman have faith, but she had also placed her faith in the right person.

The words “Go in peace” are more literally, “Go into peace.” With this healing, Jesus gave this woman her life. Her cure was permanent. Jesus wished her peace of both body and soul—renewed health for her body and eternal salvation for her soul.

8:49 During this interval, Jairus had been waiting. Jesus was still speaking to this woman who had interrupted his walk to Jairus’s house when a messenger arrived. What Jairus feared most had happened. His dear little girl had died. It was too late for the Teacher to heal her, so there was no longer any reason to bring Jesus to his home. Apparently Jairus hadn’t heard that Jesus could raise the dead (7:11-15)—or perhaps he thought it would be too much to ask.

8:50 Upon hearing the news, Jairus surely reacted in great sorrow. It seemed that the delay had been too long, and it was now too late. But Jesus turned to the grieving man and said, “Don’t be afraid. Just trust me.” In the presence of Jairus, the woman had been commended for her faith. Here in the presence of the woman, Jairus was told to have faith. He had believed that Jesus could heal his daughter; Jesus wanted him to continue to believe that his daughter would be all right. The fact that the daughter had died did not change anything for Jesus.

8:51 Apparently Jairus did continue to believe, for he led Jesus the rest of the way to his house. The crowd still followed, perhaps all the more curious wondering what Jesus would do in this seemingly impossible situation. When they arrived at the house, however, Jesus took control and made everyone stay outside. The only people who entered with him were Peter, James, John, and the child’s parents. These three particular disciples had become Jesus’ inner circle to whom he gave special teaching and consideration (they were the only ones to see his transfiguration, see Matthew 17:1; also Mark 13:3; 14:33).

8:52-53 The house full of people probably included relatives and neighbors, as well as professional mourners who may have already arrived. Lack of weeping and wailing was the ultimate disgrace and disrespect. Jairus, the leader of the synagogue, was an important person in the town. Thus, at the death of his only daughter, the townspeople demonstrated their great love and respect by their intense grief. Yet their weeping turned to derisive laughter at Jesus' words that the girl was not dead, only asleep. She was indeed dead, but Jesus would bring her back to life, as if awakening her from sleep. Jesus used the image of sleep to indicate that the girl's condition was temporary and that she would be restored. For Jesus, death is nothing more than sleep, for he has power and authority over death.

8:54-55 Again Jesus went against all ceremonial law and took the dead girl by the hand. Touching a dead body would make a person unclean, but Jesus often would go past such laws in order to show compassion on those in need. He could have raised the girl without touching her (as he did Lazarus, John 11:43-44), but in this case, he chose to take her hand. Jesus' words were simple and direct, "Get up, my child!" While Mark recorded the words in Aramaic (Mark 5:41), as Jesus most likely said them, Luke translated for his Gentile audience. With those words, her life returned. She came back well, whole, and able to walk around. She was even well enough to eat, for Jesus gave her parents instructions to give her something to eat.

8:56 The young girl's parents were overwhelmed and certainly overjoyed. Jesus told the parents not to tell anyone about their daughter's healing because he knew that the facts would speak for themselves. Jesus was not attempting to keep this a secret, for the crowd outside was waiting and would see what had happened. Jesus was concerned for his ministry. He probably was asking them to keep to themselves the details of what he had done. He did not want to be known as just a miracle-worker; he wanted people to listen to his words that would heal their broken spiritual lives. Jesus' mission was to preach the Good News of the Kingdom of God. If crowds descended on him to see dead people raised, they would not be coming with the attitude needed to hear and respond to the gospel.

JESUS SENDS OUT THE TWELVE APOSTLES / 9:1-6 / 93

After giving examples of Jesus' pattern of preaching about the Kingdom of God and of his power through all types of miracles, Luke reported how Jesus sent out the Twelve to continue this work. This begins two missionary trips (9:1; 10:1). Luke is the only Gospel writer that includes two trips, and the disciples probably were sent on other trips as well. Jesus gave the Twelve some instructions and then sent them on a "training mission." They would soon be the ones left to carry on Jesus' work after he was gone.

9:1-2 Jesus had chosen twelve disciples for special training (6:13-16). The men had traveled with Jesus, observed him, and listened to his teaching. Now they were to take a more active part in Jesus' ministry; they themselves would go out to tell everyone about the coming of the Kingdom of God. More than that, Jesus also gave them power and authority to cast out demons and to heal all diseases. That was important because these miracles backed up the message. Jesus sent out his twelve apostles and gave them this power. The message of the Good News was of primary importance, but the healings showed God's great compassion and fulfilled the ancient prophecies of the Messiah's arrival (4:18-19).

9:3-4 The disciples were to travel light. The urgency of their task required that they not spend time preparing for the trip. Besides, it was to be a short trip after which they would come back and report to Jesus. As disciples sent by God, they were to depend on him and on the people to whom they ministered to meet their needs. In addition, whatever home showed them hospitality was the home where they were to stay until they left that town. The disciples were not to offend their hosts by moving to a home that was more comfortable or socially prominent. To remain in one home was not a burden for the homeowner because there would only have been two together at a time and their stay in each community would be short.

The disciples were instructed to depend on others while they went from town to town preaching the gospel. This had a good effect: (1) it clearly showed that the Messiah had not come to offer wealth to his followers; (2) it forced the disciples to rely on God's power and not on their own provision—they carried no outward symbols of authority, only the inward power that Christ gave them; (3) it involved the villagers and made them more eager to hear the message. This was an excellent approach for the disciples' short-term mission; it was not intended, however, to be a permanent way of life for them. Jesus' instructions pertained only to this particular mission, so this would not be a command for missionaries today. Different times and situations would call for different measures, both then and now.

9:5 The disciples could be sure of finding hospitality from some people, but Jesus told them to also expect places where they would not be welcomed. Jesus' instructions for such a town was that as the disciples were leaving, they were to shake off its dust from their feet. Shaking off dust that had accumulated on one's sandals showed extreme contempt for an area and its people, as well as the determination not to have any further involvement with them. Pious Jews would do this after passing through Gentile cities to show their separation from Gentile practices. If the disciples shook the dust of a Jewish town from their feet, it would show their separation from Jews who rejected their Messiah. This action also showed that the disciples were not responsible for how the people responded to their message.

9:6 Six teams of two began their circuit of the villages—perhaps going back to villages in which Jesus had already preached, or going where he did not have time to go (4:14-15, 43-44). They went with Jesus' authority and power—preaching the Good News and healing the sick.

The ministry of Jesus and his disciples was effective. The gospel message even reached Herod, leaving him questioning: "Who is this man?"

9:7-8 Herod Antipas was the king who had imprisoned and executed John the Baptist, and he would later hear Jesus' case before the crucifixion (23:6-12). Herod was worried and puzzled because a man and his disciples were traveling around doing miracles and teaching a message that, once reported to Herod, sounded eerily like the message that John the Baptist had taught. In addition, some were saying that John had come back to life again. Herod thought that John had come back to life to trouble him some more. Others thought that Elijah or some other ancient prophet had risen from the dead. While John the Baptist had been widely regarded as a prophet (and the first prophet to the nation in over four hundred years), the people had refused to listen to him.

9:9 For the story of how Herod had beheaded John, see Matthew 14:1-12 and

Mark 6:14-29. Herod may have had some guilt-pangs, for he had beheaded an innocent man who had done no more than speak the truth. So it bothered Herod that this good man, considered by everyone to be a prophet, may have come back to life. This certainly caused Herod to think twice about this man and try to see him—perhaps Herod thought he might be able to recognize him or talk to him. Luke did not include the details surrounding John’s death, focusing instead on Herod’s question, “Who is this man about whom I hear such strange stories?”

JESUS FEEDS FIVE THOUSAND / 9:10-17 / 96

Apart from Jesus’ resurrection, this is the only miracle that appears in all four Gospels, showing its importance to Jesus’ ministry and to the early church. While many people have tried to explain away the incident, it is clear that all the Gospel writers saw this as a marvelous miracle.

9:10 The word “apostle” means “one sent” as a messenger, authorized agent, or missionary. The word became an accepted title for Jesus’ twelve disciples after his death and resurrection (Acts 1:25-26; Ephesians 2:20). The apostles had completed their teaching mission (9:6) and thus were official “sent ones.” They returned to Capernaum and told Jesus everything they had done. Jesus wanted to hear how their training mission, their “student teaching,” had gone. In order to do this, he needed to get them away from the crowds. So they withdrew by themselves to the town of Bethsaida.

9:11 The disciples needed rest; Jesus wanted quiet teaching time with them, but this was not to be. The crowds found out where he was going, and they followed him. Matthew wrote that they had gone by boat, and the crowds went on foot and met Jesus when he landed (Matthew 14:13-14). Far from being upset by the interruption of their plans, Jesus welcomed the people, using the opportunity afforded by their interest to teach them about the Kingdom of God.

9:12 Jesus’ teaching about the Kingdom of God (9:11) lasted until the evening. As the day was drawing to a close, the disciples certainly wondered when they would have time alone with Jesus. So they went to Jesus and suggested that he send the crowds away so they would have time to get food and lodging in the surrounding villages. The place where Jesus had been teaching was deserted, far from any town or village. It was near Bethsaida, east of the lake about four miles from Capernaum.

9:13 These disciples, already tired, meant to be compassionate in their request for Jesus to send the crowd away to get food before nightfall. Jesus' response certainly surprised them, for he said, "You feed them." A check of the resources had yielded five loaves of bread and two fish—John's Gospel explains that these belonged to a boy (John 6:9). The disciples had just come back from a teaching tour in which they had used Jesus' authority to preach and heal. But apparently they couldn't see past the obvious in this situation.

9:14-15 No wonder the disciples were a little dismayed at Jesus' command to feed this crowd. Luke fills us in on the detail that there were about five thousand men there. The Greek word translated "men" is andres, meaning not "people" but "male individuals." Therefore, there were five thousand men in addition to the women and children.

The disciples didn't understand what Jesus wanted them to do, so he gave them a job and prepared to show them that little is much when God is in charge. The disciples followed Jesus' instructions to have everyone sit down on the ground in groups of about fifty each. The people, perhaps realizing that this would be worth staying for, all sat down.

9:16 Jesus took the small lunch provided by the boy and asked God's blessing on the food. Then he gave the bread and fish to the disciples to give to the people. As Jesus broke the loaves, a miracle happened. The disciples began serving the groups of people, and the supply never diminished.

This miracle certainly helped a hungry crowd, but it had a higher purpose and theology. God, who multiplied the bread, was authenticating Jesus as his Son and portraying the munificent blessings of the Kingdom. Just as God had provided manna to the Hebrews in the wilderness (Exodus 16), had multiplied oil and meal for Elijah and the widow at Zarephath (1 Kings 17:7-16) and for Elisha (2 Kings 4:1-7), and had multiplied twenty loaves to feed one hundred men (2 Kings 4:42-44), he was providing bread for the people on this day. This also points to the prophesied feast that the Messiah will abundantly provide for people in the wilderness (see also 13:29; 14:15-24; Isaiah 25:6, 9).

9:17 The disciples continued serving food, and the food continued to be supplied in abundance. They all ate as much as they wanted. Not only that, but there were enough leftovers to fill twelve baskets. The disciples collected the leftovers and may have taken them along for their own provision for a couple of days. While Jesus could have, he did not make a habit of supplying food out of nothing for himself and the disciples.

PETER SAYS JESUS IS THE MESSIAH / 9:18-20 / 109

Peter's confession that Jesus is the Christ, the promised Messiah, marks a turning point in this Gospel. Luke had been meticulously recording the reactions of people to Jesus and his message and their questions revolving around Jesus' identity. Peter gave a clear answer to Jesus' identity.

9:18 Apparently the disciples and Jesus did at times get to be alone, for here we find Jesus and his disciples together, away from the crowds. Jesus was alone, praying. That the Son of God often took time to pray was certainly an example to his disciples, as well as to all who follow him (see also 3:21; 6:12; 11:1).

Then he asked his disciples, “Who do people say I am?” What had the disciples heard—perhaps this information would come from what they had learned on their preaching tour (9:6).

9:19 The disciples' answer echoes what the crowds had been saying and what Herod had heard (9:8). This belief may have come from Deuteronomy 18:18, where God said he would raise up a prophet from among the people. (For the story of John the Baptist, see Mark 1:1-11; 6:14-29. For the story of Elijah, see 1 Kings 17-21 and 2 Kings 1-2.) All of these responses were incorrect, revealing that the people still didn't recognize Jesus' true identity.

9:20 People may have had various opinions and ideas about Jesus' identity, but Jesus was concerned about what his chosen twelve believed about him. So he asked, “Who do you say I am?” The word “you” is plural; Jesus was asking the entire group. But Peter, who often acted as their spokesman, answered. Peter's ready answer reveals a deep insight into Jesus' identity, for he said, “You are the Messiah sent from God!” Peter did not understand the exact nature of Jesus' ministry, but he knew one fact for sure—Jesus was the Messiah.

JESUS PREDICTS HIS DEATH THE FIRST TIME / 9:21-27 / 110

Jesus responded to Peter's confession that he was the Messiah with a prophecy of his own death and resurrection. Most Jews at this time were expecting a political messiah, a person who would deliver them from their subjection to the Romans. To correct this, Jesus depicted his suffering and death at the hands of the religious leaders (see 9:43-45).

9:21-22 Jesus warned his disciples not to tell anyone that he was the Christ because at this point they didn't fully understand the significance of that confession of faith. Even though Jesus was the Messiah, he still had to suffer many terrible things, be rejected, and be killed. Jesus then added that after all those tragic events occurred, three days later he would be raised from the dead. When the disciples saw all this happen to Jesus, they would understand what the Messiah had come to do and the kind of Kingdom he was preparing. Jesus here called himself Son of Man, a title emphasizing that he had power and authority from God himself. The Son of Man was the figure prophesied by Daniel to come as God's agent to gather his people and to be their judge. Only then would they be equipped to share the gospel around the world.

9:23 Jesus didn't make following him sound very easy. To his disciples who may have been hoping to have special positions in Jesus' earthly kingdom (22:24), these would have been hard words to hear. Denying one's personal desires and taking up a cross in order to follow this man was not what most of them had bargained for.

To put aside one's selfish ambition means a willingness to let go of selfish desires and earthly security. "Self" is no longer in charge; God is. Too often this has been interpreted to mean that believers should have no self-esteem. Some discipleship or "deeper life" strategies have advocated stripping oneself of all dignity or anything that contributes to a sense of self-worth. Jesus' view of denial was immediate and practical. They would need this attitude in the days ahead. They would need a willingness to set aside their own desires in order to spread the Good News.

To shoulder one's cross daily means to follow Jesus to the death if necessary. When Jesus used this picture of his followers taking up their crosses, everyone knew what he meant. Death on a cross was a form of execution used by Rome for dangerous criminals. A prisoner would carry his own cross to the place of execution, signifying submission to Rome's power. Following Jesus, therefore, meant identifying with Jesus and his followers, facing social and political oppression and ostracism, and no turning back. And this would not be a once-for-all deal—believers would need to be willing to take up this cross "daily" as they faced new situations, new people, new problems.

To follow Jesus means recognizing that belief is only the beginning of discipleship. Following Jesus doesn't mean walking behind him, but taking the same road of self-denial and self-sacrifice. Because Jesus walks ahead, he provides an example and stands with his followers as encourager, guide, and friend.

9:24 As the Messiah must suffer and die (9:21-22), so his followers must realize that they must not grasp selfishly onto their own lives. Those who want to keep life for themselves strive to get only the best for themselves. Such people will try to hold on to earthly rewards and security only to find that in the end, they lose. By contrast, however, those who generously give up their lives, willing to lose them if necessary for the sake of Jesus and the Kingdom, will find true life. That person will have given up in order to gain, and what is gained is of greater value indeed for it is eternal. Those who invest their life for Christ and his Kingdom will receive eternal life, as well as the satisfaction of serving God on earth. Those who give up control to God find that he fills their lives with himself.

9:25 Many people are willing to turn away from Christ in order to stay in a relationship, hold on to a sin, or stay on a career path. Jesus explained, however, that even if someone could gain the whole world, it would be of no benefit if it means losing his or her soul in the process. The answer to Jesus' question, then, is that nothing is so valuable that it can be exchanged for one's soul. In order to gain the whole world, one would have to worship the ruler of this world—Satan—because this is the offer he made to Jesus (4:5-7). Even if a person could gain the whole world, that person would lose his or her soul—and the soul counts for eternity.

9:26 If people are ashamed of Jesus and his message, he will be ashamed of them at his second coming (they would be rejected from eternal life with him). In the Bible, “ashamed” means more than embarrassment. It refers to the judgment of God (Isaiah 44:11), repentance (Ezekiel 43:10), or submission before God (Micah 7:16). When Jesus judges unbelieving people, his “being ashamed of them” means that he will reject them when he returns in glory. This indicates the Second Coming—the time of future judgment when present life ceases and everyone will be judged for their decisions about Jesus Christ.

9:27 When Jesus said that some of those who were with him would not die before seeing the Kingdom of God, he may have been referring to: (1) Peter, James, and John, who would witness the Transfiguration eight days later, or in a broader sense (2) all who would witness the resurrection and ascension, or (3) to all who would take part in the spread of the church after Pentecost. Jesus' listeners would not have to wait for another, future Messiah—the Kingdom was among them, and it would soon come in power. Jesus' Transfiguration, which follows, previewed the Kingdom of God.

Drowsily, Peter, James, and John awoke to an extraordinary sight—Moses and Elijah, with Jesus, standing together in a moment of glorious heavenly splendor. Stunned—Peter blurted out that he would build three shrines. Peter’s instant reaction was to commemorate this moment of glory, at this very site. But God himself answered Peter. No shrines were needed; instead the disciples needed to recognize Jesus’ unique identity—that he was God’s Son—and obey what he told them to do.

9:28 Three of Jesus’ disciples did indeed get a glimpse of the Kingdom of God within days of Jesus’ pronouncement (9:27). Jesus singled out Peter, James, and John for this special revelation of his glory and purity. These three disciples comprised the inner circle of the Twelve (see 8:51; Mark 14:33). Jesus took them with him and went to a mountain to pray. This “mountain” is traditionally considered to have been either Mount Hermon or Mount Tabor.

9:29 As Jesus was praying, the appearance of his face changed, and his clothing became dazzling white. This revealed Jesus’ true glory and purity. While Luke avoided the word “transfiguration,” what occurred was an outward change that came from within—he appeared glorious because he was divine. On earth, Jesus appeared as a man; at this time, he was transformed into the glorious radiance that he will have in heaven.

9:30-31 Moses and Elijah appeared with Jesus. Both of these men had, during their time on earth, met with God on a mountain (Exodus 24; 1 Kings 19). Both men also had departed from this earth in an unusual way—Elijah was taken up into heaven in a whirlwind (2 Kings 2:11); Moses was buried by the Lord (Deuteronomy 34:6), and the location of his body became a matter of great speculation (Jude 9). These men represented the sweeping vista of God’s plan of salvation across the ages. Moses represented the Law, or the Old Covenant. He had written the Pentateuch and had predicted the coming of a great prophet (Deuteronomy 18:15-19). Elijah represented the prophets who had foretold the coming of the Messiah (Malachi 4:5-6).

These men were speaking of how Jesus was about to fulfill God’s plan by dying in Jerusalem. Jesus’ death would accomplish true freedom for all people who believe in him. It would happen according to God’s divine plan (see 1 Peter 1:19-20).

9:32-33 Apparently Jesus had been spending a long time in prayer; Peter, John, and James had fallen asleep. The display of dazzling glory awakened them.

When it seemed that Elijah and Moses were going to leave, Peter spoke up and suggested making three shrines. Peter wanted to keep Moses and Elijah with them. But this was not what God wanted. While these three disciples got a glimpse of Jesus' future glory, they had to realize that this did not erase Jesus' previous words of suffering and death for himself (9:21-22). Peter also mistakenly treated these three men as equals—he was missing Jesus' true identity as God himself. He called Jesus Master (meaning “Teacher”), when this glorious display should have shown him that Jesus was far more. No shrines would be built; no one was going to stay. Moses and Elijah would return to glory; Jesus would walk back down the mountain and head toward Jerusalem. There would be no shortcuts.

9:34-35 Even as Peter was blurting out words that he shouldn't have been saying, a cloud came over them and covered them. This “cloud” was actually the glory of God—the same glory that had guided Israel out of Egypt (Exodus 13:21), had appeared to the people in the wilderness (Exodus 16:10; 24:15-18; 34:5; 40:34-38), had appeared to Moses (Exodus 19:9), and had filled the Temple (1 Kings 8:10). No wonder terror gripped the three disciples. Then, as had happened at Jesus' baptism, a voice came from the cloud—the voice of God himself (3:22). God gave divine approval of his Son, separating him from Moses and Elijah by saying that Jesus was the Son, the Chosen One and that the disciples must listen to him. The voice affirmed, both at the Baptism and at the Transfiguration, that Jesus was the one sent by God and the one whose authority came directly from God.

9:36 The glory disappeared, the cloud went away, the voice finished speaking, Moses and Elijah left, and Jesus looked once again like an ordinary man. Jesus was there alone with his disciples. Jesus would return to glory, but he would first follow the path of suffering and seeming defeat on this earth. Only then could he fully accomplish the plan of salvation.

The three disciples kept quiet about this entire experience, not telling anyone what they had seen until long after. Matthew and Mark wrote that Jesus ordered the disciples not to tell anyone about this until he had risen from the dead—then they could talk about it, presumably because then they would better understand it (Matthew 17:9; Mark 9:9).

JESUS HEALS A DEMON-POSSESSED BOY / 9:37-43A / 112

Luke closely tied the Transfiguration to this healing of a demon-possessed boy. The ignorance and unbelief of the disciples was the same issue that God had spoken about on the mountain. He had commanded Peter, James, and John to “listen” to Jesus. There was no reason for the disciples to be defeated by any demon; all they needed to do was to believe in Jesus and dedicate themselves to prayer (see Matthew 17:20; Mark 9:29).

9:37 Jesus, Peter, James, and John came down from the mountain. A huge crowd met Jesus. This crowd included the rest of Jesus’ disciples, some teachers of religious law, and a group of followers and onlookers. Mark wrote that the disciples and the religious leaders were in an argument (Mark 9:14), which probably focused on the fact that the disciples had tried and failed to cast out a demon (9:40). The religious leaders may have been questioning the disciples’ power and authority.

9:38-39 A man had brought his only son who was possessed by an evil spirit. While the symptoms described by the father sound much like an epileptic convulsion, the destructive intent of the demon was described by the father—the demon was injuring his son. This was more than mere epilepsy; it was indeed a case of demon possession. Mark’s Gospel reveals that the boy could neither speak nor hear (Mark 9:17, 25).

9:40 This desperate man wanted his child to be freed from the demon, so he brought his son to Jesus and his disciples (the disciples had been given authority to heal demon possession, 9:1). But the disciples couldn’t do it. The text does not explain the reason for their failure. Matthew explained it as the disciples’ lack of faith (Matthew 17:19-20), Mark as a need for prayer (Mark 9:28-29). The disciples certainly tried, but the demon did not respond.

9:41 Jesus saw the failure of the disciples to cast out this demon as merely one more indication of the stubbornness and faithlessness surrounding him. The disciples were not singled out for rebuke, but they reflected an attitude prevalent in their society. Jesus would not stay with them forever; one day he would leave and the Spirit would come. The Spirit could help soften stubborn hearts. In the meantime, Jesus would battle this unbelief, but he would not leave this young boy in his horrible condition, so Jesus told the father to bring his son.

9:42-43a As if to show its anger that Jesus was now involved, the demon knocked the boy to the ground and threw him into a violent convulsion. It did not yell Jesus’ name as did other demons, for this one was mute (4:34; 8:28; Mark 9:17), but it showed its displeasure. Jesus, however, simply rebuked the evil spirit, and it had no choice but to obey. As the boy was healed and returned to his father, the people realized that this was a display of God's power and they were filled with awe.

JESUS PREDICTS HIS DEATH THE SECOND TIME / 9:43B-45 / 113

While Jesus was still in the limelight, while the people were still marveling over his recent exorcism, Jesus took time to reiterate to his disciples that the path he was traveling was the way of suffering—the way of the cross (9:23-27). Jesus calls all his followers to that path.

9:43b-44 Jesus did not let this healing fill him with pride, for he knew that the path ahead did not hold earthly glory and honor. As the crowd murmured their wonder at Jesus, he turned to his disciples and reminded them a second time (see 9:21-22 for the first) that he was going to die. This time he added the element that he would be betrayed.

9:45 The disciples didn't know what Jesus meant about his death. They still thought of Jesus as only an earthly king, and they were concerned about their places in the Kingdom that he would set up (9:46-48). If Jesus died, the Kingdom as they imagined it could not come. Consequently, they preferred not to ask him about his predictions.

THE DISCIPLES ARGUE ABOUT WHO WOULD BE THE GREATEST / 9:46-48 / 115

This argument among the disciples about who would be the greatest highlights how they did not understand Jesus' mission (9:45). Jesus was trying to prepare these men for the suffering and rejection that would come. At the same time, however, the disciples were enjoying all the attention and even disputing with each other over who was the greatest. So Jesus called over a little child—considered the most lowly person in first-century society—to show them their false priorities.

9:46 Apparently this argument among the disciples was occurring away from Jesus, but they could not hide it from him (9:47). The disciples, still not understanding the true nature of Jesus' mission, were having an argument . . . as to which of them would be the greatest. Either they ignored Jesus' words about his death as they planned for the coming Kingdom, or they took his words to heart and wondered who would be in charge after he had died.

9:47-48 Jesus used this opportunity to teach his disciples a lesson about the “greatness” about which they were so concerned. He brought a little child as a visual aid. Jesus suggested that he and this child were peers—“Anyone who welcomes a little child like this on my behalf welcomes me.” Jesus equated the attitude of welcoming children with a willingness to welcome him. This was a new approach in a society where children were usually treated as second-class citizens. Jesus equated the attitude of receiving children with a willingness to receive him. Even more important is the profound truth of Jesus’ identity—“Anyone who welcomes me welcomes my Father who sent me.” Jesus was saying that he and God the Father were one.

The disciples had become so preoccupied with the organization of Jesus’ earthly kingdom that they had lost sight of its divine purpose. Instead of seeking a place of service, they were seeking positions of advantage. Jesus used a child to help his self-centered disciples get the point. They were to have servant attitudes, being not “childish” (arguing over petty issues), but “childlike,” with humble and sincere hearts. Greatness would be measured by attitude toward service—“Whoever is the least among you is the greatest.” True greatness means to deny oneself, willingly serve others, and then follow and obey the Master.

Here the disciples displayed their tendency to be a closed group. Jesus rebuked their attempt to be exclusive. His ministry was to empower and encourage all those who do good, not to limit and restrict. Christians must welcome and encourage all who serve in the name of Christ. Having the same Lord should cover a multitude of differences.

9:49-50 John was one of the inner circle of three, along with his brother James and Peter. Apparently he needed to clear something with Jesus—he may have felt concerned that they had done wrong, especially after this illustration about greatness through serving. They had seen someone using Jesus’ name to cast out demons and they had tried to stop him. This was not an evil man, for apparently God was blessing him—the man was having success (as opposed to the disciples, nine of whom had just failed, 9:40). But the disciples stopped the man for one reason—he isn’t in our group.

Jesus explained that they should not stop such a person; instead, they should have been thrilled that there were other people through whom God was working, others who were on Jesus’ side. Jesus made the point that with him there would be no middle ground—“Anyone who is not against you is for you.” The disciples had been wrong to stop the man from exorcising demons in Jesus’ name; and they were also wrong to think that they alone had a monopoly on Jesus’ power. Jesus explained that no one would do such a miracle as exorcising a demon in Jesus’ name and then turn around and publicly speak against Jesus. The man, whatever his motivation, had at least done a deed of mercy for a possessed person and had stood against Satan in so doing.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE COST OF FOLLOWING HIM / 9:51-62 / 122

Luke began an extended section of his Gospel presenting the teaching and parables of Jesus that, for the most part, focus on the cost of discipleship and the coming suffering that Jesus would endure. Jesus was preparing his disciples for the rejection, suffering, and death that he would experience.

9:51 Jesus knew that his time on earth was ending and that the time drew near for his return to heaven. In other words, Jesus knew that he would soon die and that this death awaited him in Jerusalem. As if needing to arrive on time for a pre-planned appointment, Jesus resolutely set out for Jerusalem.

9:52-53 Jesus was journeying from Galilee to Jerusalem, so he had to travel south. Samaria lay between Galilee and Judea, thus he would have to travel through that region. The animosity between the Jews and the Samaritans was so great that many Jews would go out of their way not to travel through Samaria, instead opting to cross the Jordan River and travel on the other side until they could recross. Jesus held no such prejudices, so he sent messengers ahead to go into a Samaritan village and prepare for his arrival (presumably to secure lodging for Jesus and the Twelve). Because the men were heading toward Jerusalem, however, the people in the Samaritan village refused to welcome him.

9:54-56 When the messengers reported back, James and John were furious. The disciples had been told that if they faced rejection in a certain town, they were to shake the dust from their feet as a testimony against the people (9:5). James and John did not want to stop there—they asked Jesus if they should order down fire from heaven to burn them up. Jesus rebuked their suggestion. The point here was that the village was not consciously rejecting Jesus; instead, they were rejecting this group of thirteen or more because they were Jews on their way to Jerusalem (9:53). The disciples were to take this rejection in stride and go on to another village. Whether this other village was in Samaria is unknown. There was no stopping Jesus; he continued resolutely toward Jerusalem.

9:57-58 Someone approached and wanted to follow Jesus. Matthew wrote that this man was a teacher of religious law (Matthew 8:19). Most of these leaders became Jesus' enemies, but at least one apparently recognized Jesus' authority and wanted to be his disciple. Jesus' reply, however, pointed out to the man the cost of becoming a disciple. Jesus did not grab onto disciples, eagerly taking anyone who wanted to follow. Those who truly wanted to be his disciples needed to understand that it would cost them something. While most of God's creatures have warm places in which to live and to sleep, the Son of Man had no home of his own, no place to lay his head. To be Jesus' disciple, a person must willingly put aside worldly security. The words are recorded for believers' benefit. Have you counted the cost of following Jesus? Do you understand that following Jesus is far more valuable than anything this world offers?

9:59-60 The previous man came on his own to Jesus (9:57-58); this time, however, Jesus asked another man to be his disciple. But this man explained that he first needed to return home and bury his father. The man was asking for permission to wait until his father died—an indefinite delay. The reason is not given, but whatever it was, the man wanted to do it “first.” Whether his concern was fulfilling a duty, having financial security, keeping family approval, or something else, he did not want to commit himself to Jesus just yet.

Jesus' response: “Let those who are spiritually dead care for their own dead” points out that those who want to follow him should count the cost and set aside any conditions they might have. In other words, let those who are spiritually dying (those who have not responded to the call to commitment) stay home and handle responsibilities such as burying the dead. This may sound insensitive, but it had precedents. A high priest and those who had taken the Nazirite vow were required by the law to avoid the corpse of even a parent (Leviticus 21:11; Numbers 6:6-8). A later Jewish precedent says that if there were enough people in attendance, a student of the Torah should not stop his studying to bury the dead. Jesus placed commitment to God even above these precedents. As God's Son, Jesus did not hesitate to demand complete loyalty. Even family loyalty was not to take priority over the demands of obedience to the command to go and preach the coming of the Kingdom of God. Jesus' direct challenge forces believers to evaluate their priorities.

9:61-62 A third person approached and this one, like the first, expressed his desire to follow Jesus. However, this man also had something he wanted to do first. Jesus ascertained in this potential follower a sense of reluctance and an unfortunate willingness to put something else ahead of following Jesus. This was not the type of follower Jesus needed.

The picture of a person putting a hand to the plow and looking back can be compared with Elijah's call of Elisha in 1 Kings 19:19-21. Elisha was called to be a prophet right in the middle of plowing a field—and he never looked back. In fact, he slaughtered the oxen so that there would be no temptation to return. Elisha then moved wholeheartedly into the ministry to which he had been called. Jesus explained that service in the Kingdom of God was of such vital importance that his followers must make it their top priority. They must step out in faith to serve him, without looking back.

What does Jesus want from his followers? Total dedication, not halfhearted commitment. His followers must accept the cross along with the crown, judgment as well as mercy. They must count the cost and be willing to abandon everything else that has given them security. Nothing should distract them from service for the Kingdom.

JESUS SENDS OUT SEVENTY-TWO MESSENGERS / 10:1-16 / 130

Luke is the only Gospel to record the sending out of seventy-two disciples. In this passage, Luke highlighted and anticipated the universal mission of Jesus—the gospel would go to all people.

10:1 Far more than twelve people had been following Jesus. According to 1 Corinthians 15:6, Jesus had at least five hundred followers by the time he had finished his ministry. A group of 120 of these followers went to Jerusalem to begin the church there (Acts 1:15). Here Jesus designated a group of seventy-two to prepare a number of towns for his later visit.

The number 72 is found in the earliest Greek manuscripts. This number is significant for it was, according to Genesis 10, the traditional number of nations in the world, according to the Septuagint. Other Greek manuscripts read 70. This alternative reading may have been influenced by the Hebrew Old Testament, which lists seventy names in Genesis 10. By choosing and sending out seventy-two disciples, Jesus was symbolically showing that all nations in the world would one day hear the message. This would include the Gentiles—an important point for Luke's Gentile audience.

10:2 Jesus was sending thirty-six teams of two to reach the many towns and villages that he had not yet been able to visit. Jesus compared this work to a harvest—the gathering of new believers into his Kingdom (see also John 4:35). To have a harvest, however, one must have workers in the field. So many people need to hear the message, but there are so few workers willing to gather it in. Even as Jesus had sent the Twelve, and now seventy-two more, he told them to ask the Lord to send out more workers for his fields. In Christian service, there is no unemployment. God has work enough for everyone. No believer should sit back and watch others work because the harvest is great.

10:3 The world into which these seventy-two were going was not a pleasant place. The harvest was going to involve intensive labor and possibly danger. Jesus commanded them to go, explaining that they were going out as lambs among wolves. The use of the word “lambs” refers to their vulnerability (see Isaiah 11:6; 65:25). But the important point is the four words, “I am sending you.” If Jesus were not sending them, then they would be attempting to go on their own plans, their own power, their own itinerary, being lambs among wolves would be like asking to be slaughtered. But because Jesus was sending them, they might face danger from the opposition. Their very defenselessness would cause them all the more to depend on God.

10:4 These instructions are basically the same as those given to the Twelve in 9:3-4. The reason was the same—they were to travel light, spend no time preparing for the trip, and depend upon God and those to whom they ministered to meet their basic needs. So urgent is their task that they are not to stop to greet anyone on the road. Jesus did not mean for them to be impolite to people whom they passed, but rather that they were not to spend precious time on dallying by the wayside. They had to remain focused on their task.

10:5-6 The home that a pair of disciples would enter would be the home from which they would receive hospitality during their stay in a particular town. When they entered a house, they should give the characteristic blessing. This blessing conveyed the messianic peace promised in the Old Testament and stressed the authority based on power from God that was behind the missionary. If the householders were worthy (had a proper attitude toward God), then the blessing would stand. Such people would be open to the gospel message. But if the people were not worthy, the blessing would return to the one who had given it.

10:7 Jesus had also directed the Twelve to remain with their original hosts in any town (9:4). This instruction avoided certain problems. For the two disciples to move around from home to home could offend the families who first took them in. In addition, by staying in one place, the disciples would not have to worry continually about getting good accommodations. They could settle down and do their appointed task. The disciples were to willingly eat and drink what their hosts provided because those who work deserve their pay. Jesus told his disciples to accept hospitality graciously because their work entitled them to it. Ministers of the gospel deserve to be supported, and it is believers' responsibility to make sure they have what they need.

10:8-9 When the pairs of disciples entered a town, received a welcome, and entered a home, Jesus told them to eat whatever is set before them. It may well be that they would be welcomed into non-Jewish homes where the meals might not satisfy all the ceremonial laws of the Jews. Jesus told them not to be sidetracked about what they ate. Instead, they should do what they came to do—heal the sick (which was a signal that the Kingdom had arrived) and proclaim to the people that the Kingdom of God is near (see also 10:11; 21:31). This “nearness” meant both “already here” and “soon to come.” The Kingdom Jesus began on earth would not overthrow Roman oppression and bring universal peace right away. Instead, it was a Kingdom that began in people’s hearts and was as near as people’s willingness to make Jesus king over their lives.

10:10-11 Jesus also gave instructions if the disciples should enter a town and not be welcomed. He made it clear that they would face rejection in some places. But the rejection of their message would not change the message. Even if the people refused it, the Kingdom of God was still near, but those who refused it would miss it. Jesus repeated the instruction of wiping the dust of that town from their feet as a public announcement of their doom (9:5).

10:12 Sodom was a wicked city that God destroyed because of its great sinfulness (Genesis 19:24-28). The city’s name is often used to symbolize evil and immorality. Sodom will face God’s wrath at judgment day, but cities that rejected the Messiah and his Kingdom will face even worse wrath from God. A city as evil as Sodom would be better off than these towns because they had been given the opportunity to believe the Messiah—they had seen great miracles and had the Good News preached to them—but they had turned away and had refused salvation.

10:13-14 The mention of cities that might reject the Messiah (10:10-11) leads to a message of those who already had. Korazin and Bethsaida were cities near Capernaum, at the north end of the Sea of Galilee. Jesus had concentrated his ministry in and around Capernaum, so he must have performed miracles in these cities. These miracles are not recorded in the Gospels—there is much about Jesus’ ministry that is unknown. Tyre and Sidon were pagan cities in Phoenicia, the territory north of Galilee. They had rebelled against God and had been judged and punished for their wickedness and opposition to God’s people (see Isaiah 23:1-18; Jeremiah 25:22; 47:4; Ezekiel 26–28; Joel 3:4-8; Amos 1:9-10). Yet Jesus explained that, though these people were evil and rebellious, if he had come to them and had done miracles, they would have sat in deep repentance. The mention of sackcloth and ashes depicts mourning and repentance. A person humbled himself or herself by wearing only this rough cloth made of goat hair and sitting in a pile of ashes. Tyre and Sidon had not had that opportunity, while Korazin and Bethsaida had been visited by the Messiah who had done miracles among them; yet they rejected him. The punishment these cities would suffer on the judgment day would be far worse than what Tyre and Sidon experienced.

10:15 Capernaum was Jesus' base for his Galilean ministry (Matthew 4:13; Mark 2:1). Jesus had performed many miracles there, and apparently the people were feeling a certain amount of pride in their connection with Jesus. But many people of Capernaum did not understand Jesus' miracles or believe his teaching. Instead of being exalted to heaven as they might have thought because Jesus chose to live among them, they would be brought down to the place of the dead because they had seen the Messiah and rejected him. The language is reminiscent of Isaiah 14:12-15, where the prideful attitude of the king of Babylon is condemned. The Greek word translated, "place of the dead," is Hades, the dwelling place of the condemned wicked people (16:23; Revelation 20:13-14). This pictured fiery judgment on this city that rejected Christ. Today the site of ancient Capernaum is desolate—a stunning picture of Jesus' words here.

10:16 Jesus' messengers are important people. They are sent with authority. In ancient times, when a person dealt with a messenger, it was the same as dealing with the person who had sent him (for example, see 7:3 and commentary). Therefore, people who accepted the message of Jesus' disciples were accepting Jesus. Likewise, people who rejected Jesus' disciples' message were rejecting Jesus. Because Jesus and God are one, anyone who rejects Jesus is rejecting God who sent him. These messengers could take their mission seriously because Jesus did—he was sending them out with his message and his authority.

THE SEVENTY-TWO MESSENGERS RETURN / 10:17-24 / 131

This passage continues the theme of discipleship (started at 9:51). Here the seventy-two returned, rejoicing. Jesus rejoiced with them, praising God for the defeat of Satan and the fact that he had chosen to use these humble followers to advance his Kingdom.

10:17 Some time had passed between 10:16 and 10:17. The seventy-two disciples completed their mission to various towns and villages (10:1) and returned with joy. They had seen tremendous results as they ministered in Jesus' name and with his authority. They were elated by the victories they had witnessed—that even the demons had submitted to them in Jesus' name. Probably they were able to heal demon-possessed people, and this thrilled them.

10:18-19 This could mean that Jesus saw, as in a vision, Satan falling from heaven as a flash of lightning (that is, from a place of power) during the ministry of these disciples. Satan suffered a notable defeat as these thirty-six pairs of men went around the countryside casting out demons.

Satan might attempt to discourage and harm Jesus' disciples, but when they were on this mission, nothing could harm them. Jesus had given them authority over all the power of the enemy. To walk among snakes and scorpions may allude to Psalm 91:13 where snakes are listed among dangerous creatures from which God protects the people of Israel. See also Deuteronomy 8:15 where scorpions and snakes are connected.

10:20 Such power and authority can be a heady experience, so the disciples were warned not to rejoice just because evil spirits had obeyed them. The main reason to rejoice was that their names were registered as citizens of heaven. Their ministry was not to become an experience of power leading to pride, but an experience of servanthood out of love for God and out of the desire for more people to join them in the Kingdom.

10:21 Jesus praised God, his Father, for making spiritual truth available to the childlike. Those who willingly submit themselves to God and do not depend upon their own wisdom will have the truth revealed to them. So often the wise and clever in this world refuse to submit themselves to God. They may not see their need for him, or they may think that their wisdom and learning have placed them in a separate class. These words of Jesus reveal God's sovereignty and initiative regarding who will receive divine truth. God has chosen to hide it from those who refuse and reject it (see 8:10), and instead reveals it to those who may not seem wise and learned but have trusting hearts (like little children, 9:47-48).

10:22 Jesus further identified his special and unique relationship with God the Father. So close and intimate, so completely trusting, that Jesus said, "My Father has given me authority over everything." The Father and the Son have an exclusive relationship that humanity at large cannot fathom. (Luke brought it up again in 20:41-44; 22:69; Acts 2:29-38.) Jesus' mission was to reveal God the Father to people. His words brought salvation down to earth. He explained God's love through parables, teachings, and, most of all, his life. By examining Jesus' actions, principles, and attitudes, those chosen by him are enabled to understand God more clearly. As used here, the word chooses does not refer to predestination; rather, it refers to Jesus' divine status and authority to reveal saving knowledge to people.

10:23-24 Old Testament men of God such as David and the prophet Isaiah made many God-inspired predictions that Jesus fulfilled. As Peter later would write, these prophets wondered what their words meant and when they would be fulfilled (1 Peter 1:10-13). In Jesus' words, they longed to see and hear what the disciples were seeing and hearing, but they could not. Despite their privileged positions as part of God's people and God's plan, many prophets and kings were not as blessed as this little band of disciples or all the "simple" people who came in faith to Jesus.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN / 10:25-37 / 132

Jesus had just praised God for hiding the secrets of the Kingdom from the wise and learned (10:21). Next an expert in Old Testament law asked Jesus a question that revealed the lawyer's profound ignorance about central issues of the faith—eternal life and the basic command to love one's neighbor.

10:25 This expert in religious law was a man who had made it his business to know and understand the details of the Jewish religion. He had studied the Scriptures (the Old Testament—the Law, the Psalms, and the Prophets). He also knew all the traditions. The fact that this man wanted to test Jesus does not necessarily indicate hostility. He wanted to know what he had to do to receive eternal life.

10:26-28 This expert in the law obviously would have known the law of Moses. In his answer, he quoted from Deuteronomy 6:5 and Leviticus 19:18. He correctly understood that the law demanded total devotion to God and love for one's neighbor. To love God in this way is to fulfill completely all the commandments regarding one's "vertical" relationship. But another command from the law says to love your neighbor. This refers to "horizontal" relationships—among people. A person cannot maintain a good vertical relationship with God without also caring for his or her neighbor. The word "neighbor" refers to fellow human beings in general.

The expert in the law had it right. Jesus explained that people only needed to obey these commands; in doing so, they would fulfill all the rest of them. But with these abrupt words, Jesus was subtly making the point that no one can obey these commands. Do this and you will live sounds simple—in reality, however, those commands are impossible to keep in our human strength alone. This would be the lifestyle of Kingdom people—but they would not have to "do" it in order to be saved. Instead, they would be saved and then enabled by the Holy Spirit to obey these impossible demands. Jesus would show this to the man in the following story.

10:29 The expert in the law would not leave the encounter there. He wanted to justify his actions. It is unclear if he wanted to justify the question he had asked by asking the teacher to delve deeper into the topic, or whether he wanted Jesus to give an answer that he could then say he had fulfilled. He may have been attempting to pin down and limit the law's demand, thereby limiting his responsibility. So he pressed Jesus further, "And who is my neighbor?"

10:30 Jesus answered this legal expert by telling a story. The rest of his listeners could easily picture this Jewish man who was traveling from Jerusalem to Jericho. The distance was about seventeen miles on a road that was notoriously dangerous because it curved through rocky and desolate terrain with many hiding places for bandits. As the listeners may have anticipated, the man in this story, who was traveling alone, was attacked and left half dead.

10:31-32 Jesus told a story about three different people, also traveling alone on this road. This priest served in the Temple and probably offered sacrifices. The Temple assistant also served in the Temple. Both of these servants of God saw the man lying there, but both passed by without helping. Perhaps it was concern over defilement, for a Jew would become "unclean" if he came into contact with a dead body. This would render him unable to worship. The man on the road may have appeared dead, so they did not want to risk defilement if there was nothing they could do. Either way, they deliberately refused to help.

10:33-35 The next person to come along was a despised Samaritan. Jews hated Samaritans, so when Jesus introduced this Samaritan man into the story, the Jewish listeners would not have expected him to help a Jewish man. But in great detail, Jesus described all that the Samaritan did for this man. This Samaritan is pictured as understanding what it meant to help someone in need, to be a neighbor, regardless of racial tensions.

10:36-37 Having finished the story, Jesus asked the expert in the law who had been a neighbor to the wounded man. The legal expert had no choice but to answer that the one who showed him mercy—the Samaritan—had been the true "neighbor." The Samaritan traveler and the Jewish man were far apart in distance and spiritual heritage, but the Samaritan had loved his neighbor far better than the hurt man's own religious leaders. Jesus said that the legal expert had answered correctly and should go and do the same. Jesus taught that love is shown by action, that it must not be limited by its object, and that at times it is costly.

JESUS VISITS MARTHA AND MARY / 10:38-42 / 133

This short story follows the parable of the good Samaritan because it involves another reversal. Mary was sitting at Jesus' feet listening to his teaching, while Martha was busying herself fixing a meal. Although intently listening to Jesus was Mary's way of expressing her love and devotion to God, in the first century, this would be quite unusual for a woman. Learning at a rabbi's feet was a privilege typically reserved for young men. Thus, Martha assumed that Jesus would honor her request that he rebuke Mary. Instead, Jesus commended Mary, welcoming her to learn from him.

10:38 The village where these people lived was Bethany, located about two miles outside of Jerusalem. Martha had a sister named Mary (10:39, who was probably younger because this home is described as belonging to Martha) and a brother named Lazarus (whom Jesus later raised from the dead, John 11).

10:39-40 Jesus did not come alone—he had twelve disciples with him who all needed to have their feet washed, to be made comfortable, and to have a meal prepared for them. A respectable hostess in the ancient world would extend all of these courtesies to his or her guests. The impression here, however, is that Martha was overdoing it. She wanted something extra special for the Master, but she let herself get to the point where she was worrying, overworked, and unable to enjoy these guests. In attempting to serve Jesus, she did not understand or attend to Jesus' reason for being there. Mary, however, sat at the Lord's feet, listening to what he taught. She was taking advantage of the opportunity to hear Jesus. Martha, for her part, wanted to give her guests the royal treatment—and she should not be criticized for that. However, she allowed her worry to turn to irritation. She went to Jesus and asked him to tell Mary to get up and get to work. There is a touch of reproach in her words.

10:41-42 Jesus did not blame Martha for being concerned about preparing the meal, nor did he scold her for attempting to make him and his disciples welcome. But he did want her to understand that because she was so upset, she was not making time for what was most important, shown in Mary's attitude. Jesus wanted Martha to rearrange her priorities. It is possible for service to Christ to degenerate into mere busywork that is no longer full of devotion to God. There was nothing wrong with Martha's desire to serve—someone had to do it or no one would have eaten. Perhaps she could have laid out a less lavish feast so that she too could have had time to sit at Jesus' feet and digest his teaching. But Jesus was not going to send Mary away to attend to housework.

She had chosen to be at Jesus' feet, and Jesus knew that he would not be on this earth forever. His time would be short, and he would not send away those who wanted to listen and learn.

JESUS TEACHES HIS DISCIPLES ABOUT PRAYER / 11:1-13 / 134

This passage highlights one of Luke's most prominent themes: prayer (see 1:9-10; 3:21; 6:12; 9:18, 28-29). Here the disciples asked Jesus about prayer—interestingly enough, it was after Jesus had been praying. Jesus gave them an example of a prayer and two stories that emphasize the importance of seeking God in prayer.

11:1 Once again, Jesus had been out praying. Luke has presented several instances where Jesus was praying, making it clear that prayer was a regular part of his life (3:21; 5:16; 6:12; 9:18, 28-29; 18:1; 22:41, 44). Something about Jesus' prayer life prompted one of his disciples to approach him as he finished. He wanted Jesus to teach them to pray, just as John taught his disciples. It was common for religious leaders to teach their followers how to pray. To be able to pray as their Master prayed would give them assurance of expressing themselves correctly to God.

11:2 The prayer Jesus taught his disciples was not a formulaic prayer; rather, it was a “how to” prayer. These were not meant to be magical words prayed like an incantation over and over. Instead, he was giving the disciples a pattern. Luke's form of the Lord's Prayer is shorter than Matthew's (Matthew 6:9-13). Most likely they were two distinct prayers on two different occasions. The differences in the prayers show that Jesus did not utter a rote prayer every time he prayed. Different occasions call for different utterances.

Notice the order in this prayer. First Jesus praised God; then he made his requests. The first person plural pronouns indicate that the believers could pray this prayer corporately. The pattern of praise, intercession, and request helps believers understand the nature and purpose of their personal prayers in their relationship with their Father. Because Jesus taught it to his followers, it is a prayer pattern for believers today as well.

The phrase, Father, may your name be honored, focuses on God as majestic and transcendent and says that the person praying is committed to honoring God's holy name. Christians, God's children who bear his name, must be responsible to “honor” God in every aspect of their lives. When believers pray for God's name to be “honored,” they pray that the world will honor his name and look forward to the day when that will be a reality.

May your Kingdom come soon refers to God's spiritual reign. To say this is to pray that more and more people will enter the Kingdom; it is also a petition for all evil to be destroyed and for God to establish a new heaven and earth, thereby revealing his glory to all nations.

11:3 This request, give us our food day by day, is for a personal need to be met. “Food” could refer to spiritual “food.” The words “day by day” reveals that God’s provision is daily, and that believers do not need to worry from one day to the next. Christians dare not be self-satisfied. Instead, believers should live in a state of continual dependence on God.

11:4 As God’s people need daily provision, they also need daily forgiveness. When Jesus taught his disciples to pray, he made forgiveness the cornerstone of their relationship with God. God has forgiven believers’ sins; they must now forgive those who have sinned against them. To remain unforgiving shows that the person has not understood that he or she deeply needs to be forgiven. The meaning of this sentence focuses on the true repentance of a believer who understands the greatness of the forgiveness that he or she has received. This believer willingly extends such forgiveness to others for their wrongs. To refuse to forgive others can impede the forgiveness needed daily from God (see 6:37; Matthew 6:14-15; 18:23-35; Mark 11:25).

Finally, there is the request that God would help believers refuse to yield to temptation. The Greek word translated “temptation” means “enticement” or “test” or “trial.” This is a request for spiritual protection from trials and temptations.

11:5-6 This parable points out, with a touch of humor, that God’s people must persist in their prayers, and that God is always ready to give. The setting is midnight. A journeying friend has arrived, presumably unexpected. Social custom dictates providing food, but the bread is gone and the person has nothing for him to eat. The person knows that another friend has some bread, so he goes to him and asks to borrow three loaves of bread.

11:7-8 The friend would not be happy to be interrupted at this late hour, having already gone to bed. Jesus explained that although the friend might not get up for the sake of the friendship, if you keep knocking long enough, he will get up. Because of the persistence of the person knocking, the request will be answered.

Boldness in prayer overcomes the praying person’s apathy, not God’s perceived insensitivity. To practice persistence changes the hearts and minds of those praying, and it helps them understand and express the intensity of their need. Persistence in prayer helps them recognize God's work. By praying persistently, believers are not trying to get a reluctant God to answer their prayers; instead, they are showing that they are very serious about their request.

11:9-10 Highlighting the importance of persistent and consistent prayer, Jesus encouraged his disciples, who wanted to be taught to pray (11:1), to keep on asking, keep on looking, and keep on knocking. Only through prayer can believers stay in contact with God, know what he wants them to do, and then have the strength to do God's will in all areas of life. God will answer believers who persistently ask, look, and knock. In all these cases, God is accessible and willing to respond. Jesus promised, "For everyone who asks receives. Everyone who seeks, finds. And the door is opened to everyone who knocks." (See also Jeremiah 29:13). Believers must not take Jesus' words as a blank check however; prayer is not a magical way to obtain whatever we want. Requests must be in harmony with God's will, accepting his will above our desires.

11:11-13 Jesus explained that his followers can depend on God to answer their prayers. If human beings who are sinful would not think of giving a child a snake instead of a fish, or a scorpion instead of an egg, then how much more will a holy God acknowledge and answer Christians' requests? In these words, Jesus revealed the heart of God the Father. God is not selfish, begrudging, or stingy; his followers don't have to beg or grovel when they come with their requests. He is a loving Father who understands, cares, comforts, and willingly gives the Holy Spirit to those who ask him. Because the Holy Spirit is God's highest gift and he will not refuse giving him to those who ask, believers can trust in God's provision for all their lesser needs as well. How much better the perfect heavenly Father treats his children! The most important gift he could ever give is the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:1-4), whom he promised to give all believers after his death, resurrection, and return to heaven (John 15:26).

JESUS ANSWERS HOSTILE ACCUSATIONS / 11:14-28 / 135

In this passage, Luke underscores two different negative reactions: (1) those who reject Jesus, accusing him of being associated with the Devil, and (2) those who sit on the fence, waiting for yet another sign. Jesus confronted those who rejected him, by clearly asserting that his miracles were evidence of his connection to God. There is no middle ground, no room to withhold judgment. A person is either against him or for him.

11:14-15 On another occasion, Jesus cast a demon out of a man who couldn't speak, thus enabling the man to speak. But some in the crowd said that Jesus was casting out demons because he got his power from Satan, the prince of demons. Jesus exposed the absurdity of this accusation.

11:16 Some wanted to make accusations, but others wanted to test Jesus. As if all the healings and miracles and sending demons from people were not enough, they asked for a miraculous sign from heaven to see if he was from God. If they thought that the exorcism just witnessed might be by the power of Satan, then they felt that they needed something “from heaven” as proof of Jesus' identity. The irony, of course, is that no matter what kind of sign Jesus might have given, they would have stubbornly refused to believe (see Matthew 12:38-42).

11:17-18 Jesus' first response was to the accusation recorded in 11:15. He explained that any kingdom at war with itself is doomed, and likewise with a divided home. If Jesus were driving out demons by Satan, then the conclusion would be that Satan is fighting against himself. If that were true, it would mean civil war in the kingdom of evil. No king would throw his own soldiers out of his kingdom; neither would Satan throw his soldiers out of a person they had possessed. Such a kingdom could not stand.

11:19-20 Jesus was not the first person to exorcise demons. In the first century, exorcism was thriving in both Jewish and pagan societies (Mark 9:38; Acts 19:13-14). Many Jewish exorcists were Pharisees. Jesus asked, “If I am empowered by the prince of demons, what about your own followers” who were also casting out demons? If it took Satan's power to drive out demons, then those Pharisees who drove out demons were also working under Satan's power.

But if it isn't by Satan's power that demons were fleeing, then it had to be by the power of God. Jesus' exorcisms were specific evidence of the presence of Kingdom power. They showed that the hoped for time of God's Kingdom had come in the power of Jesus' authority. That Jesus was powerfully casting out demons and plundering Satan's kingdom revealed that the Kingdom of God had arrived.

11:21-22 Jesus explained his words in 11:19-20 with a parable. Here Satan is fully armed with all kinds of demons guarding his palace. This whole scene changes, however, when someone who is stronger attacks and overpowers him, as Jesus had just done in sending the demon out of the man (11:14, and had done many times previously). Satan cannot stand against God or against Christ. Jesus overpowers Satan.

11:23 The line has been drawn. There are two kingdoms—God’s and Satan’s. Satan is active and powerful in the world, but God’s Kingdom is far stronger and will eventually triumph. People cannot be neutral in this matter. Either they choose to side with God, or they do not. That is the meaning of Jesus’ ominous words, “Anyone who isn’t helping me opposes me.” In this battle, if a person is not on God’s side, he or she is on Satan’s.

11:24 To further illustrate the danger of attempting to be neutral about him, Jesus explained what can happen to such people. Unfilled and complacent people are easy targets for Satan. The evil spirit was not “cast out,” but for some reason had left a person. The desert was believed to be the habitation of demons. Because demons need a resting place (that is, someone or something living that they can enter and torment), this demon returned to the person it came from. Jesus was making a serious point about people’s spiritual destiny—they must make a decision about him.

11:25-26 In the demon’s absence, the home (the person’s life) had been swept and made clean, but it is still empty. In fact, the accommodations are now so inviting that the demon finds seven other spirits more evil than itself, and they all enter the person and live there. The “owner” of the “house” is now filled with eight demons instead of one; definitely, that person is worse off than before.

Jesus was illustrating an unfortunate human tendency—personal desire to reform often does not last long, and attempts to take care of life end in disaster. It is not enough to be emptied of evil; the person must then be filled with the power of the Holy Spirit to accomplish God’s new purpose in his or her life (see also Matthew 12:43-45; Galatians 5:22).

11:27-28 Jesus was speaking to people who highly valued family ties. Their genealogies guaranteed that they were part of God’s chosen people. A man’s value came from his ancestors, and a woman’s value came from the sons she bore. Jesus’ response to the woman meant that a person’s obedience to God is more important than his or her place on the family tree (see 8:21).

JESUS WARNS AGAINST UNBELIEF / 11:29-32 / 136

After admonishing his listeners to follow him (11:23), Jesus clearly described the consequences of not believing him. The request for a sign revealed wicked unbelief.

11:29-30 Here Jesus was responding to the request made in 11:16. The people had asked Jesus for a sign from heaven to prove that he was from God. Instead of giving a sign (beyond the miracles and healings he had performed), Jesus explained that no miraculous sign would be given except the sign of the prophet Jonah. God had asked Jonah to preach repentance to the Gentiles (non-Jews)—he had been sent by God to the Assyrian city of Nineveh (see the book of Jonah). Jonah preached to the city and saw it repent. With the words, “what happened to him was a sign to the people of Nineveh that God had sent him,” Jesus was affirming Jonah’s message. Salvation is not only for Jews, but for all people. The “sign” granted to them may refer to the Resurrection, for Jesus said, “What happens to me will be a sign that God has sent me, the Son of Man, to these people.” Jesus’ resurrection would prove that he was the Messiah. Three days after his death Jesus would come back to life, just as Jonah had been “brought back” to life after spending three days in the fish. Jonah’s presence was a sign to the people of Nineveh; they repented at his teaching. Jesus’ return to his people after his death would also be a sign to the people of his generation. Some would repent; many would not.

11:31 The queen of Sheba had traveled from southern Arabia to hear the wisdom of Solomon (1 Kings 10:1-10). Someone greater than Solomon was there with the people—the Messiah himself—but they refused to believe. As a result, this queen will rise up at the judgment and condemn the people of Jesus’ generation. She, an unbelieving Gentile, had recognized true wisdom when it was presented to her, unlike Jesus’ audience who refused the truth and wanted signs instead.

11:32 The cruel, warlike men of Nineveh, capital of Assyria, repented at the preaching of Jonah—even though Jonah did not care about them. By contrast, Jesus, the perfect Son of God, had come to people that he loved dearly—but they were rejecting him. Thus God’s chosen people were making themselves more liable to judgment than a notoriously wicked nation. The people of that nation will rise up at the judgment and condemn Jesus’ generation.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE LIGHT WITHIN / 11:33-36 / 137

Jesus next exhorted each person to focus his or her eyes on the light: Jesus himself. The people had requested a sign (11:16, 29), but Jesus explained that the light of his perfect life should be enough of a sign.

11:33 These words are very close to 8:16; however, in 8:16 the “lamp” that had been lit refers to the person who hears Jesus’ message, responds to it, and spreads it to others. In this teaching situation, it seems that Jesus was describing his own ministry and message as lighting a lamp that was not hidden or put under a basket, but was done in public with a message available for all to accept. All refers to Jesus’ mission to reach all the world, not just the Jews.

11:34 The lamp is Christ’s message, and “light” is the truth of his revelation and guidance (11:33); the eye represents spiritual understanding and insight that is filtered through the “good” or the “bad” in a person. When eyes are pure, that is, when they are operating properly, the illumination makes it easy for the body to function. Those with “pure eyes” are those true disciples who listen and respond to Jesus’ guidance. By contrast, when eyes are evil, that is, when they are not operating properly, the result is impaired functioning for the rest of the body. Those with “evil eyes” are those who reject Jesus’ words; all they have is the darkness and futility of their own evil ways.

11:35-36 To have the light within actually be darkness would be a dismal condition. That would mean that no goodness would be left, for even what might have been light would actually be dark—what good should have been there would actually be evil. But with Jesus, and with the filling of the Holy Spirit, a person can be filled with light, with no dark corners. This cannot happen from within—for the light does not originate there. It has an outside source, as though a floodlight is shining on you.

JESUS CRITICIZES THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS / 11:37-54 / 138

Placed after Jesus’ teaching about the inner light is an example of those caught in darkness: the Pharisees and the experts in religious law. These religious leaders had meticulously cleaned the outside of the “cup,” but had not bothered to look at the filthiness of their souls.

11:37-38 Again Jesus was invited to a meal with a Pharisee (see also 7:36). Jesus offended his host, however, because he did not first perform the ceremonial washing. This washing was done not for health reasons but as a symbol of washing away any contamination from touching anything unclean. Not only did the Pharisees make a public show of their washing, but they also commanded everyone else to follow a practice originally intended only for the

11:39-40 Obsessed about ceremonial “purity,” the Pharisees neglected their own internal defilement. They washed on the outside, like one would wash a cup or a dish, but they left the inside full of greed and wickedness, never bothering to deal with those sins. They were no more pure than a dirty cup. Jesus condemned the Pharisees and religious leaders for outwardly appearing saintly and holy but inwardly remaining full of corruption. Jesus accordingly castigated these Pharisees as fools. God who made the outside of each person also made the inside. In other words, God is just as concerned with the inside as with the outside. He is not only concerned about what you do, but also about who you are.

11:41 The Pharisees loved to think of themselves as “clean,” but their stinginess toward God and the poor proved that they were not as clean as they thought. Jesus wanted to stress the importance of the inward over the outward, here focusing on the importance of a right attitude when giving to the poor. The inner attitude must match the outward act in order for them to be clean all over.

11:42 Jesus pronounced how terrible it would be for the Pharisees because although they were keeping the tiniest details of law, ceremony, custom, and tradition, they were forgetting justice and the love of God. Jesus did not condemn the practice of tithing, even of small amounts if one chose to do so. Jesus condemned the Pharisees for being scrupulous in less important matters while completely neglecting the larger issues that were far more important—such as dealing correctly and fairly with people and building a relationship with God.

11:43 Jesus condemned the Pharisees for their love of public importance and honor. The elders sat on the seats of honor in the synagogues, at the front, near the place where the scrolls of the Torah were kept. Those seats faced the congregation. To receive respectful greetings was a highly treasured honor. Jesus condemned the attitude that focused on the “perks” of position, while they forgot their responsibility to be teachers. The Pharisees loved to receive honor and deference from ordinary people; yet they did not love or desire to serve those people. Instead, they often showed contempt for them as “lower” than themselves.

11:44 This third condemnation pictures the Pharisees, for all their ceremonial cleanliness, as actually typifying the worst sort of uncleanness. The Old Testament laws said a person who touched a grave was unclean (Numbers 19:16). Sometimes a body might be buried in an unmarked grave, causing an unwary traveler to become ceremonially unclean by walking over it. Jesus accused the Pharisees of actually being hidden graves who made others unclean by their spiritual rottenness. Like graves hidden in a field, the Pharisees corrupted everyone who came in contact with them.

11:45-46 Jesus did not back down from what was being taken as insults, nor did he leave these legal experts without condemnation. Jesus condemned them for crushing people beneath impossible religious demands. These “demands” were the details the Pharisees had added to God’s law. To the commandment, “Remember to observe the Sabbath day by keeping it holy” (Exodus 20:8), for example, they had added instructions regarding how far a person could walk on the Sabbath, which kinds of knots could be tied, and how much weight could be carried. Instead of teaching God’s law so that people could love, understand, and obey the God who gave it, they turned the law into such a confused maze of do’s and don’ts that it had become a burden to the people. The legal experts refused to lift a finger to help the people.

11:47-48 The tombs of the prophets were revered. People even decorated the graves of those long dead who seemed worthy of such honor. Building tombs over the graves of the martyrs was ironic because most of these prophets had been killed by the ancestors of this present religious establishment. In essence, these religious leaders were agreeing with the deeds of their ancestors in killing these prophets. Jesus was saying that these leaders were no different from their ancestors who had killed God’s messengers because, in a sense, they were simply completing their work. The attitude of hatred for God’s messengers would carry through, and Jesus himself would face it as well.

11:49-51 God’s prophets have been persecuted and murdered throughout history. But this generation was rejecting more than a human prophet—they were rejecting God himself. This quotation is not from the Old Testament. Jesus, the greatest Prophet of all, was directly giving them God’s message.

Jesus gave two examples of martyrs in the Old Testament. Abel’s death is recorded in Genesis 4:8—he was the first martyr, the first to die because of his faithfulness to God. Zechariah’s death is recorded in 2 Chronicles 24:20-22 (the last book in the Hebrew canon). Zechariah is a classic example of a man of God who was killed by those who claimed to be God’s people. The current religious establishment would be guilty of all of their deaths, for they would be guilty of murdering the Messiah and would face judgment for that act. The destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 was a partial fulfillment of Jesus' words.

11:52 The experts in religious law were effectively locking people out of God's Kingdom. Their rejection of Jesus and emphasis on their petty demands had the effect of making them unable to enter the Kingdom and then preventing those who might otherwise want to enter. Anyone who might have gotten in through a saving relationship with God was stopped short by their erroneous interpretations of Scripture and their added man-made rules. Then, as they prided themselves in their "understanding," they themselves missed God's message. Caught up in a religion of their own making, they could no longer lead the people to God. They had closed the door of God's love to the people and had thrown away the keys.

11:53-54 It may come as no surprise that these leaders were furious at Jesus. He had challenged these professed experts, so they hoped to trip him up and arrest him for blasphemy, heresy, or lawbreaking. They had to find a legal way to get rid of Jesus, so they grilled him with many hostile questions, trying to trap him. Jesus had pointed out the blatant hypocrisy of so much of Israel's leadership, and there would be no turning back. The opposition was mounting; Jesus had become a threat to the establishment.

JESUS SPEAKS AGAINST HYPOCRISY / 12:1-12 / 139

After denouncing the religious leaders for hypocrisy, Jesus warns his disciples of the same pernicious problem. With the limelight of fame shining on them, they were beginning to follow the Pharisees on a path of hypocrisy—acting religiously superior and judging others, while harboring jealousy, greed, and pride within their souls. This type of hypocrisy was utterly repugnant to Jesus.

12:1 Even as Jesus began to infuriate the religious leaders, his popularity continued to grow, for the crowds grew into the thousands. As Jesus watched the huge crowds waiting to hear him, he warned his disciples against hypocrisy—trying to appear good when their heart was far from God. Just as yeast works its way through dough, so a small amount of evil can affect a large group of people. The yeast of the Pharisees—their hypocrisy—could permeate and contaminate society, leading the entire nation astray.

12:2-3 Hypocrisy can happen when certain actions or attitudes are hidden. One day, however, everything will be revealed. The Pharisees could not keep their attitudes hidden forever. Their selfishness would act like “yeast” (12:1), and soon they would expose themselves for what they really were—power-hungry impostors, not devoted religious leaders. The time of this “revelation” could be the final judgment day when the true attitude of these hypocrites will be exposed (see Romans 2:16; 1 Corinthians 4:5).

12:4-5 Jesus explained that his followers (his dear friends) might face death for their faith in him, but he also told them not to be afraid of people who could kill them or even of death itself. Evil people may be able to kill the body, but they cannot do any more. Jesus knew that fear of opposition or ridicule could weaken their witness for him because the natural human tendency is to cling to peace and comfort, even at the cost of one’s walk with God. Jesus said that there is only one whom all people should fear—God alone. He controls eternal consequences. It is more fearful to disobey God than to face martyrdom.

The word translated hell here is Gehenna. The name was derived from the Valley of Hinnom, south of Jerusalem, where children had been sacrificed by fire to the pagan god Molech (see 2 Kings 23:10; 2 Chronicles 28:3; Jeremiah 7:31; 32:35).

12:6-7 While Jesus' followers should "fear" God because of his awesome power, they are not to be afraid of him because they are more valuable to him than a whole flock of sparrows. A person could buy five sparrows for a small amount of money; they were the cheapest type of living food sold in the market. Even so, God does not forget a single one. God loves his people so much that he cares about the smallest details of their lives—down to knowing the number of hairs on their heads.

12:8-9 God sent his Son to die for people worldwide, and salvation is offered to all people. But individuals still must choose whether or not to accept God's offer. Jesus clearly explained that anyone who publicly confesses faith in and allegiance to him will find that the Son of Man will openly acknowledge that person in the presence of God's angels. By contrast, the person who denies any relationship to Jesus will face denial by Jesus in heaven. These words refer to those whose lack of allegiance will be revealed under pressure. Most likely, this does not refer to an incident where lack of courage might cause a believer not to speak up, but rather to a person who totally rejects Christ and lives a life of denial. The astounding statement is that each person's standing before God is based on his or her relationship to Jesus Christ.

12:10 While 12:8-9 deals with apostasy, 12:10 focuses on people who have not yet come to believe. These words mean that speaking against the person of Jesus can be forgiven because the insult may be based in ignorance of his true identity (before the resurrection, not even Jesus' disciples completely understood who he was). But anyone who speaks blasphemies against the Holy Spirit—continually rejects the Holy Spirit's message about Jesus and his convicting influence—will never be forgiven because he is beyond redemptive help. Whoever rejects the prompting of the Holy Spirit removes himself from the only force that can lead anyone to repentance and restoration with God. That act has eternal consequences.

This sin of blasphemy against the Holy Spirit has worried many sincere Christians. The unforgivable sin means attributing to Satan the work that the Holy Spirit accomplishes. Thus the "unforgivable sin" is deliberate and ongoing rejection of the Holy Spirit's work and even of God himself. A person who has committed this sin has shut himself off from God so thoroughly that he is unaware of any sin at all. A person who fears having committed this sin shows by his very concern that he has not sinned in this way.

12:11-12 Jesus told the disciples that when (not "if") they would be brought to trial in the synagogues and before rulers and authorities, they need not worry about what to say in their own defense. They would not be left unprepared—Jesus promised that the Holy Spirit would supply the right words at the very moment they were needed. This promise of the Spirit's help, however, does not compensate for lack of preparation. Remember that these disciples had three years of teaching and practical application. Study God's word, then God will bring his truths to mind when you most need them, helping you present them in the most effective way.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE RICH FOOL / 12:13-21 / 140

Perhaps because of Jesus' constant insistence on justice (11:42), a person from the crowd asked him to arbitrate a dispute. Instead of addressing the injustice, Jesus exposed the greedy motives of the man and revealed God's perspective on the foolishness of greed. The simple parable Jesus told describes a person who is solely concerned with himself—his welfare, pleasure, and security. He possessed no gratitude toward God or a willingness to share with those less fortunate. His ingratitude invoked God's anger and led to the man's downfall.

12:13 A person in the crowd appealed to Jesus as an authority. He wanted Jesus to settle a dispute over his father's estate. The Old Testament laws covered most cases (see, for example, Numbers 26–27; 33:54; 36; Deuteronomy 21:17), but sometimes an issue would arise that needed intervention in order to make a decision. Problems like this were often brought to rabbis for them to settle (see 10:38-42).

12:14-15 Jesus used the man's request as an opportunity to teach his listeners about the pitfalls of being greedy. "Greed" is the excessive and consuming desire to have more possessions or wealth. He explained that the good life has nothing to do with being wealthy; real life is not measured by how much we own. This man apparently thought that the division of the inheritance would solve his problems. But Jesus wanted him to deal with deeper issues.

12:16-18 Jesus proceeded to illustrate his point that life consists of more than wealth and possessions. This story includes a rich man who had a productive year on his farm. He tore down his barns and built bigger ones so that he could store everything. While there was nothing wrong with the man's rejoicing in his crop or building to make storage, his basic flaw was in focusing completely on his wealth and on his own enjoyment. In Greek, this story includes the word "my" four times and the word "I" eight times. As this story reveals, the man's joy came from his things—but things do not last forever.

12:19-20 The rich man was concerned for no one else, and he had no care for God. With no eternal perspective, the man's life was completely focused on the temporal. His goal to take it easy and to eat, drink, and be merry reveals his desire for mere self-indulgence. He thought that, with his barns storing up mountains of wealth for the future, he had everything completely under control. The rich man had made a fatal flaw: he had forgotten to put God at the center of his life. Concerned for no one but himself, when the time came for him to stand before God, he was nothing more than a fool.

12:21 The moral of the story: fools spend all their time storing up earthly wealth but neglect to have a rich relationship with God. The turning point is for whom the treasures are being accumulated. If for oneself, then the evils of wealth will be turned loose. Being rich toward God means using wealth as he provides it to fulfill his priorities. People who are “rich” in this way love God and are filled with a passion to obey and serve him and to give to others. In this way, the “treasures” a person may gain in this life can be gladly handed back over to God for his use in furthering his Kingdom.

JESUS WARNS ABOUT WORRY / 12:22-34 / 141

Luke placed Jesus' teaching about believers and possessions right after the negative example of the rich fool (12:13-21). Instead of hoarding possessions, believers should give them away. Such generosity builds an eternal inheritance in God's Kingdom. Christians should completely trust in God's loving provision for them; this should free them to show generosity.

12:22-23 Jesus continued to highlight the priorities of those who want to follow him. Again, these words were directed not to the crowd in general, but to his disciples. Just as their attitude toward money should differ from the world's (12:15), so their life view should be different. All the goals and worries in life can be entrusted to the loving heavenly Father who promises to meet every need. The command, don't worry, does not imply lack of concern, nor does it imply that people should be unwilling to work to supply their own needs and thus have to depend on others. Instead, Jesus was saying that worrying about food and clothing should never take priority over serving God. Worriers immobilize themselves and focus on their worries. They refuse to trust that God can supply their most basic needs.

12:24 Jesus had already explained that God's care for the sparrows shows that he cares for his people (12:6-7). Here Jesus explained God's care for people's basic needs by asking the disciples to look at the ravens. The birds don't have elaborate farming systems by which to supply food for themselves; God feeds them. God makes sure that the birds, who do no worrying about their food supply, always have food to eat. The raven (or crow) was considered to be "unclean" (Leviticus 11:13-15), yet even unclean animals received God's care. The conclusion, of course, is that God's people are far more valuable to him than any birds. God's children can know that their Father will care for their needs as well.

12:25-26 Worry accomplishes nothing; it is wasted effort. While worry cannot add a single moment to a person's life, it can damage that person's health, cause the object of worry to consume one's thoughts, disrupt productivity, negatively affect the way the person treats others, and reduce the ability to trust in God.

12:27-28 Like the ravens who do not store up food for themselves in barns, neither do the lilies work to array themselves. If God feeds the birds and clothes the earth with beauty that surpasses the fine garments of King Solomon, then will God not also clothe his people?

Jesus was not condoning laziness while waiting for God to provide. He wanted his disciples to understand that they should place their lives in God's hands, refusing to worry about basic needs. It shows little faith to worry over what God has promised to provide.

12:29-30 Eating and drinking are necessary for survival, but God's people know that life is more than what they eat or drink, more than their clothing or possessions. If they worry about these things, they will find themselves motionless for God, accomplishing nothing for the Kingdom. God's people are to be different. Believers have an eternal perspective that is focused on the Kingdom to come; they trust their Father to know their needs for their time on the earth.

12:31 Jesus told his disciples to make the Kingdom of God their primary concern. This means to submit to God's sovereignty today, to work for the future coming of his Kingdom, to represent God here and now, and to seek his rule in our hearts and in the world. So many spend their time worrying about the basics of life, but Jesus says to think about the Kingdom first, and God will give you all you need from day to day. Christ's promise is not that Kingdom seekers will get everything they desire, but that the necessities for faith and service will be in abundance. When God's children have their priorities right, they can trust that God will always care for them. They may not become rich, but they will not lack what they need.

12:32 The Kingdom is worth making a priority (12:31), for one day God the Father will give it to those who faithfully follow him. The Kingdom is a certain reality, so God's people need not be afraid. Fear and worry will be constant companions to those who devote their lives to getting, achieving, and protecting what they have. No bank and no medical plan can protect a person from death or from present harm. Only those whose true treasure is in heaven (12:33-34) can be truly secure. Not only does God promise to give believers his Kingdom, but it is his great happiness to do so. God the Father (12:30) wants to share his Kingdom with them.

12:33-34 Because of their eternal perspective (12:29-30) and because of the future Kingdom they will possess, God's people are free to give. They can hold their possessions lightly. In fact, they can sell them and give to those in need. In so doing, they will provide for themselves treasure that cannot disappear, for it rests in heaven. Jesus was not telling his followers to sell all their possessions, but rather to sell whatever they could to make giving to the poor possible. This "treasure" in heaven includes, but is not limited to, tithing money. Believers add to it as they bring others to Christ and act out their obedience to God. The "treasure" is the eternal value of whatever is accomplished on earth. Acts of obedience to God, stored in heaven, cannot be stolen nor will they decay. Nothing can affect or change them; they are eternal. Wherever your treasure is, there your heart and thoughts will also be means that whatever occupies a person's thoughts and consumes his or her time—that is the person's "treasure." The heart will be with the treasure.

JESUS WARNS ABOUT PREPARING FOR HIS COMING / 12:35-48 / 142

The teaching about the end times in Luke does not entail a detailed description of what will occur, but it portrays a secure conviction that the Son of Man will return in judgment. This knowledge should motivate Christians to be faithful servants or stewards, to do what God has commanded them to do, and to use their talents and resources effectively.

12:35-38 Because of the certainty of the Kingdom coming and because it would be coming in the future, waiting for it requires both faith and vigilance. God's people must be dressed for service and well prepared. Faithful servants would stay awake while waiting for their master's return from the wedding feast. They are dressed so that they can do service for him should he require it. No matter how late the master may come, the servants are prepared to open the door immediately upon his arrival. In the same way, God's people must be awaiting his arrival so they too can welcome him the moment he arrives. Servants who are ready and waiting for the master's arrival will be rewarded. The master will be so pleased upon his arrival that he will serve them. Such a reversal of roles likely will not happen in the world, but in God's Kingdom such a welcome will await those who were ready.

12:39-40 This story describes the need for constant vigilance as believers await the Kingdom. A homeowner does not know when a burglar is coming to break into the house; if the homeowner did, he would be ready and would not permit it to happen. Likewise, God's people must be ready all the time. Jesus referred to himself as the Son of Man and left no doubt that he would be the one who will come when least expected (1 Thessalonians 5:2; 2 Peter 3:10; Revelation 16:15). God's people should be ready and waiting.

Christ's return at an unexpected time is not a trick by which God hopes to catch his people off guard. In fact, God is delaying his return so that more people will have the opportunity to follow him (see 2 Peter 3:9). Before Christ's return, believers have time to live out their beliefs and to reflect Jesus' love as they relate to others. Christians have time to bring more people with them into the Kingdom.

12:41-42 Peter wondered to whom Jesus was addressing the previous parable about being prepared for the Kingdom's arrival. Perhaps Peter was wondering about the disciples' responsibilities. They still did not understand what this Kingdom would be like. Peter wondered what their roles would be in comparison with the crowds in general.

Jesus answered Peter's question with another question that focused the disciples' attention on what it meant to be put in charge, and what their roles should be as leaders. They should be like a faithful, sensible servant, left in charge by the master. In this story, there is one faithful servant (12:42-44) and three unfaithful ones (12:45-48).

12:43-44 The master is Jesus, who would leave his servants in his household (the earth) to serve while he would be gone. All the servants must work, although some are given more responsibility and thus more accountability (12:48). Those servants who have done a good job when the master returns will have a reward and be given more responsibility.

12:45-46 However, with the master gone, a slave might think to himself that he can do as he likes, taking advantage of his position of authority. The master would return unannounced, catch him in the act, and banish him for being irresponsible to his task in the master's absence. The words with the unfaithful probably pictures the end-time judgment, wherein the faithful enter God's Kingdom and the unfaithful are sent away (Matthew 25:31-46).

12:47-48 Those who fail to do their duty can expect punishment. More responsibility, and thus more severe punishment, however, will come to those who knew their duty but refused to do it. Those who are not aware that they are doing wrong will be punished only lightly. Each person is responsible to seek out God's will and to obey; however, God will demand more from those who have been given many gifts and entrusted with much responsibility for the Kingdom. Clearly, leadership in God's Kingdom—no matter how small or large one's responsibilities in comparison to others—is taken very seriously by God. Those placed in positions where they will guide, influence, and care for others have been given much, and therefore much more is required for their moral, spiritual, and ethical lives. They must show themselves to be examples and must stay close to the Lord so he can guide them. Their responsibilities involve the eternal destinies of others—a job description that should cause them to be ever vigilant and watchful of God's will.

JESUS WARNS ABOUT COMING DIVISION / 12:49-53 / 143

These verses introduce a section in which Jesus calls the Jews to accept him before their time runs out (12:54–13:8). It is a quick summary of Jesus' earthly mission. Jesus came to earth to bring division, not peace. That is because Jesus confronts everyone with a choice. Will you side with him? There is no middle ground (11:23).

12:49-50 Fire stands for God's judgment and the coming of the Holy Spirit (see 3:16-17 for more on Jesus' baptism being one of Spirit and fire). Judgment is coming, and Jesus is the one to bring it. Jesus' arrival has caused upset and division among people across the centuries. No one can sit on the fence about Jesus; decisions have to be made to believe or not to believe, inevitably dividing even families (see 12:51-53). Jesus wished that his task were already completed, meaning that he desired that God's purpose for the earth already be fulfilled. Judgment would come through Jesus and after that he would reign. But Jesus waits for God's timing.

Here Jesus anticipated the outworking of God's plan through a terrible baptism, which here refers to his coming suffering at the cross. Despite Jesus' distress, he knows that through it the work of salvation can begin in people's hearts.

12:51-53 Jesus promises peace, but it is not the kind of peace the world gives or tries to give (John 14:27). Peace on earth, universal peace, will not come until Jesus' second coming when evil is destroyed and he reigns forever. Instead, Jesus' first coming and the time now as believers await his return is a time of strife and division between God's forces and Satan's forces. There is no middle ground with Jesus. Because he demands a response, family groups may be torn apart when some choose to follow him and others refuse to do so. Loyalties must be declared and commitments made, sometimes to the point of severing relationships with those who reject Jesus or who try to substitute him with someone else.

JESUS WARNS ABOUT THE FUTURE CRISIS / 12:54-59 / 144

"Hypocrites!" With this harsh word, Jesus tried to startle his listeners to the urgency of their plight, which was terrible. But Jesus, God's only Son, was offering them a way out—the free gift of salvation to all who believe in him. In effect, Jesus was saying, "Wake up! Destruction is around the corner. Come to me for salvation."

12:54-56 Jesus turned back to the crowd and spoke to them. For most of recorded history, the world's principal occupation has been farming. Farmers depend directly on the weather for their livelihood. They need just the right amounts of sun and rain to make a living. Such people were skilled at interpreting natural signs. The people knew that clouds forming in the west over the Mediterranean Sea would bring rain. Wind blowing in from the desert to the south would bring hot weather. People interpreted these signs and then prepared themselves accordingly.

But these same people were ignoring the signs of the coming Kingdom. Thus Jesus said, "You hypocrites!" Jesus was announcing an earthshaking event that would be much more important than the year's crops—the coming of God's Kingdom. Like a rainstorm or a sunny day, there were signs that the Kingdom would soon arrive. While people could successfully discern the signs of the weather by watching the sky and predicting fair weather or storms, they were intentionally ignoring the signs of the times.

12:57-59 With the signs of the Kingdom around them and as Jesus stood among them, he asked his listeners, “Why can’t you decide for yourselves what is right?” Why weren’t they taking advantage of this opportunity to make peace with God? They ought to do so, for waiting could be disastrous, just as the man on his way to court would be wise to settle the matter beforehand. In Jesus’ day, a person who couldn’t pay a debt would be thrown in jail. How much better to attempt to settle the matter on the way to court (under Roman law, the plaintiff went with the defendant to court) than to wait for the judge’s verdict to be handed down.

God’s judgment is irreversible. Each person must decide what to do about Jesus. That decision should be made now.

JESUS CALLS THE PEOPLE TO REPENT / 13:1-9 / 145

In Jesus' previous exhortation, he admonished the people to realize their predicament, that judgment was around the corner. Here Jesus took the sudden and terrifying deaths of some innocent people to illustrate their tragic situation. Still stunned by the grisly murders, the people were, in effect, told by Jesus that they faced a similar fate—eternal death, much worse than physical death.

13:1 Pilate was last mentioned in 3:1. The city of Jerusalem, the site of the Jews' Temple, lay in his jurisdiction. While no other historical source refers to this incident where some people from Galilee were murdered at Pilate's orders, it is completely in character for this man. Galilee was a hotbed for fanatics who sought to bring down Rome by force. Galilee was out of Pilate's jurisdiction, but when some Galileans arrived in Jerusalem, they were murdered.

13:2-3 Jewish theology attributed individual suffering to individual sin. While the Pharisees would also have liked to see Israel freed from Roman control, they were against the use of force that many in Israel (such as a group called the Zealots) were advocating. Some people, such as the Pharisees and their followers, would have thought that these Galileans that were murdered must have been worse sinners than other people from Galilee because they had suffered. The Pharisees, who were opposed to using force to deal with Rome, would have said that the Galileans deserved to die for rebelling.

Jesus explained, however, that suffering has nothing to do with one's spiritual state. In fact, all people are sinful and, unless people repent, they all will perish. This doesn't mean that everyone will be killed in such a manner. It could mean that death will be sudden with no second chance to repent, or it could mean that Jesus' listeners would suffer at the hands of the Roman conquerors (which the entire nation did in A.D. 70 when Jerusalem was destroyed and millions of Jews were killed).

13:4-5 Just as suffering is no indicator of one's spiritual state, neither is tragedy. The Pharisees would have seen the previous incident as God's judgment on the Zealots, but the Zealots would have seen this incident as God's judgment against those who had compromised with Rome. Again, popular thought would have concluded that the eighteen men who died when the Tower of Siloam fell on them must have been the eighteen worst sinners in Jerusalem, otherwise they would not have suffered such a fate. The Zealots, a group of anti-Roman terrorists, would have said that the aqueduct workers deserved to die for cooperating. The Zealots would have considered Jews working on a Roman project such as this as traitors and deserving of God's punishment.

Again, Jesus explained that all people are sinners who must repent or they too will perish—spiritual death with eternal consequences. He said that neither the Galileans nor the workers should be blamed for their calamity. Instead of blaming others, everyone should consider his or her own day of judgment. Whether a person is killed in a tragic accident or miraculously survives is not a measure of righteousness. Everyone has to die; that's part of being human.

13:6-7 After highlighting the need for repentance, Jesus used an illustration to show the people that while God is gracious in giving people time to repent, come to him, and grow in him, that patience will not go on forever. In the Old Testament, a fruitful tree was often used as a symbol of godly living (see, for example, Psalm 1:3 and Jeremiah 17:7-8). Jesus pointed out what would happen to the other kind of tree—the kind that took valuable time and space and still produced nothing for the patient gardener. In this way, Jesus warned his listeners that God would not tolerate forever their lack of productivity. (See 3:9 for John the Baptist's version of the same message.) A fig tree in fertile soil should certainly have produced fruit—a tree that did not produce for three years was probably not going to produce at all. The farmer gave the command to cut it down so another, more fruitful tree, could be planted in its place.

13:8-9 The gardener intervened and asked the owner to give the tree one more chance. He even offered to give it special attention and fertilizer. Jesus had come to the nation; the time for repentance had come. The extra attention and love had been showered on the nation in the presence of their Messiah. God's judgment had been graciously held back. But if the people continued to refuse to "bear fruit" for God—if they continued to refuse to live for and obey him—the end would come. The tree would be cut down. There would be no more chances. God is merciful toward sinners. But for those who reject him, he will not be merciful forever. They will be punished.

JESUS HEALS THE CRIPPLED WOMAN / 13:10-17 / 146

The story of healing this woman is unique to Luke. It reveals the unfruitfulness of the nation of Israel to which Jesus' parable of the unfruitful tree alludes (in the previous passage, see 13:6-8). Instead of finding love, justice, humility, and mercy among God's people, Jesus found an arrogance that didn't even allow healing a woman on the Sabbath, the day set aside for the God of mercy.

13:10-11 Jesus had already come into conflict with the religious leaders over how the Sabbath should be used. At this particular time, as Jesus looked over the crowd, he saw a woman who had been bent double for eighteen years. The text explains that this was the work of an evil spirit. She may not have been demon-possessed, because a demon didn't speak and Jesus did not cast out any demon. Instead, this woman's painful affliction is attributed to Satan's work (see 13:16).

13:12-13 The woman did not ask; instead, Jesus called her. He touched her and she was instantly healed. She stood up straight for the first time in eighteen years. No wonder her first response was to praise and thank God!

13:14 Jesus had performed a great miracle with God's power; a woman had been set free from years of suffering and was praising God! But the synagogue leader was indignant. Why? Because Jesus had healed her on the Sabbath. The synagogue leader, who was addressing his remarks to the crowd and not to Jesus, could not see beyond the law to Jesus' compassion in healing this crippled woman. He simply concluded that if Jesus wanted to heal people, he should reserve his healings for the other six days of the week. Jesus did not need to abide by those laws, for they did not fulfill God's intention for the Sabbath and were burdensome on the people.

13:15-16 Jesus shamed this synagogue ruler and the other leaders by pointing out their hypocrisy. They would untie their animals and care for them on the Sabbath. Yet these same people refused to see that care for humans is far more important. Jesus attributed the woman's illness to Satan and bondage by him. Whatever the immediate cause of an illness, its original source is Satan, the author of all the evil in the world. The good news is that Jesus is more powerful than any devil or any disease. He often brings physical healing in this life; and when he returns, he will put an end to all disease and disability.

13:17 When Jesus made this point, all the people rejoiced. They probably appreciated a rabbi who stood up for them against the burdensome laws that the religious leaders had placed on them in every area of life. Jesus had shamed his enemies. This humiliation would cause such intense hatred that they would plot to kill him.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE KINGDOM OF GOD / 13:18-21 / 147

First-century Jews expected the Kingdom of God to come all at once, in great glory and power. But Jesus corrected their perception, by the illustrations of the mustard seed and yeast. Both are small; but one grows into a huge tree and the other eventually permeates an entire loaf. Jesus' ministry began small, but the gospel would eventually grow to cover the entire globe (a story Luke begins to tell in the book of Acts).

13:18-19 Jesus used a variety of parables to describe what the Kingdom of God is like. Nothing on earth can completely explain the Kingdom or give us an adequate picture of it, for the Kingdom will be far beyond anything anyone could ever imagine. Jesus used this parable to explain that his Kingdom would have a small beginning. The general expectation among Jesus' hearers was that the Messiah would come as a great king and leader, freeing the nation from Rome and restoring Israel's former glory. But Jesus said that his Kingdom was beginning quietly. The mustard seed was so small that it would take almost twenty thousand seeds to make one ounce. From one tiny seed would grow a tree. A mustard shrub could grow ten to twelve feet in just a few weeks. No other seed so small produced such a large plant. While that is not technically a "tree," Jesus used its rapid growth to stress both the insignificance and magnificence of the Kingdom. Like the tiny mustard seed that becomes a large plant, the Kingdom of God would eventually push outward until the whole world would be changed.

Jesus' mention of birds added color and showed how large the shrub could become, but they probably had no allegorical meaning. Some commentators, however, think the birds may represent the Gentiles becoming part of God's Kingdom (see prophecies such as Ezekiel 17:22-24; 31:6).

13:20-21 Another symbol of something small producing something much larger occurs with yeast. In some Bible passages, "yeast" is used as a symbol of evil or uncleanness (12:1). Here it pictures positive growth. Although yeast is a minor ingredient (only a small amount is used), it is responsible for the dough rising. Although God's Kingdom had small beginnings, it would grow to have a great impact on the world.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT ENTERING THE KINGDOM / 13:22-30 / 153

Jesus answered a person who asked whether only a few would be saved. Jesus turned this theoretical question into a practical question. Instead of letting the questioner analyze who would be entering heaven, and by implication judge the process and then those who would enter, Jesus asked that person: "Are you saved?”

13:22 This is the second reminder that Jesus was intentionally pressing on toward Jerusalem (the other time is in 9:51). Jesus knew he was on his way to die, but he continued traveling and teaching. The prospect of death did not deter Jesus from his mission.

13:23-27 The question about whether only a few or many people would be saved was a topic of debate and much speculation among the rabbis. Jesus refused to be drawn into taking a side in this argument; instead, he urged his listeners to be among those who would be saved, no matter what the final number might be. He told his audience to work hard to get in. The word “work” means to put one’s whole self into the task of listening and responding. Jesus did not explain the narrow door, but the picture is of a way that one must seek out and then enter into while it is still open. Although many people know something about God, only a few have acknowledged their sins and accepted his forgiveness. Just listening to Jesus’ words or admiring his miracles is not enough—all must turn from sin and trust in God for salvation. Regardless of how many would be saved, Jesus said that many will try to enter, but it will be too late. The time for decision would pass them by.

Familiarity with Jesus will not count when God’s Kingdom arrives and people rush to be a part of it. When the door is locked, the time for salvation will have passed, and they will not be able to enter. While many will claim to have eaten with him and listened to his teaching, they had not turned to him in faith for salvation. Such people will be utterly rejected, for Jesus will simply say, “I do not know you.” Such words will be the final pronouncement of rejection on those who rejected him. They will be sent away from God and the Kingdom.

13:28 When the door is shut and they are sent away, there will be intense sorrow (weeping and gnashing of teeth). Jesus pictured them looking in the windows at the ancestors on whom they had depended for their salvation—the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They will also see all the prophets, many of whom had been slain for speaking God’s messages. These men had not had the opportunity to see the Messiah, but they had loved God, believed his promises, and trusted that he would accomplish what he said. Thus, they received places in the Kingdom. By contrast, many of these Jewish people, who did have the opportunity to eat and drink with and then listen to the teachings of the Messiah himself (13:26), subsequently rejected him. For such rejection they would be thrown out of the Kingdom.

13:29-30 God's Kingdom will include people from all over the world. Israel's rejection of Jesus as Messiah would not stop God's plan. True Israel includes all people who believe in God (see Isaiah 49:12). The inclusion of Gentiles in God's Kingdom had been prophesied, but it still would have astounded Jesus' Jewish audience to hear of the Gentiles being involved in God's Kingdom at all. This was an important fact for Luke to stress because he was directing his Gospel to a Gentile audience (see also Romans 4:16-25; Galatians 3:6-9). Even worse for these Jews, however, was the statement that some of them might not have places at the feast.

JESUS GRIEVES OVER JERUSALEM / 13:31-35 / 154

Luke placed Jesus' grieving over Jerusalem right after a discussion about salvation, those being first (the Jews who were chosen by God) being placed last (or excluded from God's heavenly Kingdom). Jesus mourned Jerusalem's rejection of God's message and salvation.

13:31 The motives of these Pharisees remain unknown. Perhaps they were simply trying to get him out of their area. They thought that telling Jesus of Herod's plan (whether true or not) would cause Jesus to be afraid and run. Herod Antipas had killed John the Baptist and had been perplexed about who Jesus was (9:7-9). It is highly possible that he did want to kill Jesus. But Jesus' life, work, and death were not to be determined by Herod or the Pharisees. His life was planned and directed by God himself, and his mission would unfold in God's time and according to God's plan.

13:32 Jesus was hardly going to run in fear of Herod; in fact, the message he sent to him was filled with contempt, calling Herod that fox. Jesus clearly explained that Herod would have absolutely no control over Jesus' life and ministry. Jesus would continue doing miracles until the day when he would accomplish his purpose.

13:33-34 Jesus knew that he must proceed on in his ministry until the very moment appointed for his death. The words, it wouldn't do for a prophet of God to be killed except in Jerusalem, have a stinging sound—Jesus knew he was to die and he knew he would die in Jerusalem. Jerusalem had a history of rejecting God's prophets (1 Kings 19:10; 2 Chronicles 24:19-21; Jeremiah 2:30; 26:20-23), and it would reject the Messiah just as it had rejected his forerunners. Thus Jesus mourned for the city. Jesus' emotional words reveal his compassion and love for the people to whom he had come. Like a mother hen who protects her chicks beneath her wings, Jesus would have gathered and protected his people. Several places in the Old Testament picture the loving God protecting his people under his “wings” (see Ruth 2:12; Psalms 17:8; 36:7; 57:1; 61:4; 63:7; 91:4). But they wouldn’t let him.

13:35 House could refer to the city itself or to its Temple. The nation had rejected their promised Messiah and invited the final result of such rejection. They would be empty (or forsaken). In Jeremiah 12:7, Jeremiah prophesied the coming destruction of the Temple by the Babylonians. The nation’s sin had sealed their punishment, and God’s presence had left the Temple. When Jesus Christ came, God himself again stood in the Temple. But the people’s refusal to accept him would have severe consequences, for he would leave again. The Temple stood for the people’s relationship with God; an empty Temple meant separation from God (see Matthew 23:38).

The Jews understood their Temple to be the dwelling place of God on earth. The city was intended to be the center of worship of the true God and a symbol of justice to all people. No wonder Jesus loved the city and grieved over it. But the people had become blind to God. They had killed the prophets and would put to death the One about whom the prophets had testified. In that very city, the Messiah would be rejected and put to death (13:33). God’s presence would leave what was supposed to have been the holy city. The city would not see him again until the words of Psalm 118:26 would be fulfilled, “Bless the one who comes in the name of the Lord!” While some take this to refer to Jesus’ Triumphal Entry, Matthew recorded these same words as being spoken after the Triumphal Entry (Matthew 23:39). The solemn prediction of desolation would come true, but as always, God would have compassion. A day would come when some of God’s people would recognize him as their Messiah (Romans 11:25-26).

JESUS HEALS A MAN WITH SWOLLEN LIMBS / 14:1-6 / 155

To illustrate how Israel rejected Jesus (13:31-35), Luke recorded another example of the Pharisees' opposition to Jesus. In the face of repeated miracles, the Pharisees stood stone-faced. They did not rejoice with the healed man; instead, they accused and condemned Jesus, for having compassion and doing good.

14:1-3 A leader of the Pharisees invited Jesus to his home, but the people were watching Jesus closely. It may be surprising to see Jesus on the Pharisees' turf after he had denounced them so many times. Perhaps this Pharisee actually wanted to learn from Jesus or was interested in a discussion with him. But the fact that Jesus was being watched seems to reveal that the religious leaders were hoping to trip up Jesus. Because it was another Sabbath, perhaps they again hoped to find Jesus violating their Sabbath rules, for it seems quite suspicious that a man was there in front of Jesus whose arms and legs were swollen. This certainly makes one wonder if this man were not there on purpose—as if planted by the religious leaders so they could again catch Jesus in the act of healing on the Sabbath. It is also possible that the man was an outsider who came in near Jesus, as had the woman who had anointed Jesus' feet at another Pharisee's house (7:37-38). Also called "dropsy," this disease had an abnormal accumulation of fluid in bodily tissues and cavities causing swelling.

Jesus knew what his "watchers" were thinking, so he asked them the question that had caused friction between him and them before, "Is it permitted in the law to heal people on the Sabbath day, or not?" (For more on Sabbath healings, see commentary on 6:1-9; 13:10-17.)

14:4-6 The religious leaders refused to answer Jesus' question. Why didn't they explain that it was not lawful and then patiently tell him why? Because they knew Jesus would heal the man and because they were hoping to use it against him. The men had no more concern for their rules at this moment than Jesus did. The rules did not serve the purpose, so they refused to answer. So Jesus touched the sick man and healed him and sent him away. Jesus explained that when it served their purposes, these religious leaders did work on the Sabbath. They could go pull a son or a cow out of a pit if need be, but they were ready to condemn Jesus for touching a man and healing him from a disease. Jesus pointed this out to them, but they had no answer.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT SEEKING HONOR / 14:7-14 / 156

Jesus wasn't one to mince words; he didn't wait for a discreet time to teach and preach. In the midst of his enemies (the Pharisees were carefully watching him to see if they could trap him in any way), Jesus admonished them for their arrogance.

14:7-9 In Jesus' day, Jewish custom at a dinner was to arrange couches in a U shape with a low table in front of them. Guests reclined on the left elbow, and they would be seated according to status, with the place of honor being the seat at the center of the U. The seats would decline in status the farther away from that seat of honor. If arrivals had placed themselves in the best seat and then someone more respected arrived, they would be asked to move to lower seats. By then, the only seat that would still be open would be at the foot of the table.

This may seem like an odd bit of social manners given by Jesus, but his meaning went much deeper. This wedding feast pictures the Messiah's Kingdom. Those who seek honor for themselves will be disgraced. Jesus explains that honor cannot be taken, it must be given by God. He will not honor those who seek to honor themselves.

14:10-11 Jesus explained that people should sit at the foot of the table. This would show that the person had not overestimated his or her own importance. Then, the host may ask that person to move to a better place. Then, instead of being disgraced, the person would be honored. The principle would be true in that situation, and in the Kingdom of God—the proud will be humbled, but the humble will be honored. The host, God himself, will make the final seating arrangements in his Kingdom. People dare not presume upon their own importance; how much better to be honored by God.

14:12-14 While guests ought not presume upon their importance in the eyes of their host (14:7-11), hosts should not be exclusive about whom they invite. Jesus explained that they shouldn't invite only people who can pay them back. Instead, they should invite the poor, the crippled, the lame, and the blind. When God's people can do good, without expecting reward or repayment, they will have truly served him unselfishly. God will reward those who so willingly serve him.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE GREAT FESTIVAL / 14:15-24 / 157

The tie between this parable and the previous one is the resurrection. The host who invites the poor, the crippled, the lame, and the blind will be rewarded at the resurrection. Jesus went on to explain that God himself, the heavenly host of the messianic banquet, would offer the same invitation.

14:15 Jesus' words about the resurrection sparked a comment from a man sitting at the table (apparently a Pharisee or teacher, 14:1-3). This Pharisee assumed that he and his fellow Pharisees and other leaders would have the privilege to share in the Kingdom of God. They counted on their ancestry and their law-keeping to have reserved places for them. Jesus would shatter this preconception.

14:16-17 It was customary to send two invitations to a party—the first to announce the event. Thus, this man prepared a great feast and sent out many invitations. It does not appear that anyone had declined, so the man made final preparations in order to have enough for everyone. The second invitation told the guests that everything was ready. In this case, the man's servant personally notified all the guests that it was time for them to come.

14:18-20 The guests in Jesus' story insulted the host by making excuses when he issued the second invitation. The guests decided that other matters were more important at the time. The point is that nothing should become an excuse to put off joining God's Kingdom. All pursuits, no matter how valid they seem, can rob people of the great celebration with Jesus. Let nothing stand in the way of following Christ.

14:21-23 Upon learning how his invitations had been snubbed, the master of the house was angry. But his banquet was ready, the food had been prepared. Instead of abandoning the whole prospect, he sent his servant to bring into the banquet hall the poor, the crippled, the lame, and the blind (see also 14:13). This done, the servant reported back that there was still room for more. So the master again dispatched the servant to go throughout the country lanes and behind the hedges and fill the house. This story would seem scandalous to Jesus' audience. No ancient wealthy person would ever invite the poor. This startling statement told Jesus' hearers that God's Kingdom is especially for the poor. Not a morsel of food was to go to waste. If the previously invited guests would not accept the hospitality of the master, then he would invite those who would.

14:24 In Israel's history, God's first invitation came from Moses and the prophets; the second came from his Son. Jesus' listeners, the religious leaders, accepted the first invitation. They believed that God had called them to be his people. But they insulted God by refusing to accept his Son. They would miss the banquet completely because they refused to accept the Son's invitation—they would not get even the smallest taste of what had been prepared for them. Thus, just as the master in the story sent his servant into the streets to invite the needy to his banquet, so God was sending his Son to the whole world of needy people (Jews and Gentiles) to tell them that his Kingdom had arrived and was ready for them.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE COST OF BEING A DISCIPLE / 14:25-35 / 158

This collection of Jesus' teachings about discipleship suggests a turning point in Luke's narrative of the journey to Jerusalem begun at 9:51. From this point to the end of this "Jerusalem section" around chapter 18, the Gospel contains materials that focus on discipleship.

14:25-26 Great crowds were still following Jesus. Perhaps all these casual followers considered themselves "disciples" of this popular teacher. Jesus explained what it meant to truly be his disciple. His disciples had to love him more than their own family members. Certainly this caused a stir among the people. Who would possibly ask his followers to love him that way?

Jesus was not going against the fifth commandment to honor father and mother (Exodus 20:12). Nor was he attempting to subvert the natural love that exists among family members. Instead, he was saying that his followers' love for him should be so complete and wholehearted that their love for family members and for life itself would pale in comparison. In first-century Jewish family settings, deciding for Jesus could mean alienation from the family. Jesus warned the would-be disciples that they must be clear about their true allegiance. Those who cannot make that kind of commitment cannot be his disciple.

14:27 Besides being willing to love Jesus more than any others and more than life itself, the true disciple must be ready to carry his own cross and follow Jesus (see also 9:23 and commentary there). Jesus gave this teaching to get the crowds to think through their enthusiasm for him. He encouraged those who were superficial either to go deeper or to turn back. Following Christ means total submission to him—perhaps even to the point of death.

14:28-30 Jesus promised his followers a Kingdom, but he also said that they would face difficulty and suffering because of their faith. Those on the fence needed to count the cost. When a builder doesn't count the cost or estimates it inaccurately, his building may be left half-completed. What are those "costs" to believers? Christians may face loss of social status or wealth. They may have to give up control over their money, time, or career. They may be hated, separated from their family, and even put to death. All people must carefully count the cost of becoming Christ's disciple so that they will know what they are getting into and won't be tempted to turn back when the going gets tough.

14:31-32 In this second example, Jesus described a wise king's decision to consider whether his ten thousand soldiers could defeat twice that number coming against him. He has to act, but should he fight or ask for peace? To rush out with his soldiers, without first discussing the options, would invite disaster for his nation. Far better to think it through beforehand. So those who want to follow Jesus should carefully consider their decision.

14:33 The cost to be counted is giving up everything for Jesus. To be preoccupied with money or possessions is to miss the demands and joys of true discipleship, as with the people who refused the host's invitation to the Kingdom (14:18-20). Again Jesus painted no rosy picture of a high-paying job with all the benefits. He said that the way would be rough and would be a way of self-sacrifice. Oddly enough, however, this is the only way to true fulfillment and satisfaction.

14:34-35 In the ancient world, salt was used as a seasoning and as a preservative. The salt came mostly from salt marshes in the area southwest of the Dead Sea. This impure salt was susceptible to deterioration and could lose its flavor, leaving only useless crystals. Such salt was simply thrown away. Jesus' question, "How do you make it salty again?" did not require an answer—for once salt has deteriorated, nothing is left but worthless residue.

Many Christians blend into the world and avoid the cost of standing up for Christ. But Jesus says if Christians lose their distinctive "saltiness," they become worthless. Just as salt flavors and preserves food, Christ's disciples are to preserve the good in the world, help keep it from spoiling, and bring new flavor to life. This requires careful planning, willing sacrifice, and unswerving commitment to Christ's Kingdom. Being "salty" is not easy, but if Christians fail in this function, they fail to represent Christ in the world. The person who is willing to hear should be able to understand these words and apply them.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE LOST SHEEP / 15:1-7 / 159

This passage of Luke begins with the opposition of the Pharisees, just like the previous section (14:1). Here the Pharisees grumbled about Jesus consorting with “sinners,” as they had done before (5:30; 7:39). Luke placed three parables together that speak of the joy of God at the repentance of a single sinner. For Christians today, this parable of the lost sheep is not only an invitation to rejoice with God at the repentance of sinners but a reminder to follow Jesus’ example in searching for the lost.

15:1-2 Jesus’ association with notorious sinners in the eyes of the Pharisees has already been documented (5:30; 7:34). Tax collectors were Jews who worked for the Roman Empire in collecting Rome’s taxes from their countrymen. Yet these people came to listen to Jesus teach. These were the very people Jesus had come to reach—those who needed help. In that culture, sitting down and having a meal with a person showed a certain amount of identification and welcome. If Jesus were eating with such horrible people, then he was guilty by association. The Pharisees would not even go near such people, not even to teach them the law or point them to God.

15:3-5 The religious leaders were to picture themselves as shepherds (in reality, as leaders of the nation, they should have been serving as shepherds of God’s people). Each shepherd has one hundred sheep—a typical number for the average flock of sheep. Shepherds counted their sheep every night, for sheep would easily stray away and get lost. When this shepherd counted, he was missing one sheep. Jesus used the shepherd’s concern for each sheep to set up the question, “Wouldn’t you leave the ninety-nine others to go and search for the lost one?” The answer was obvious to these listeners—any caring shepherd would do so. He would search, find the lost sheep, carry it back to the flock, and rejoice.

God’s love for each individual is so great that he seeks each one out and rejoices when he or she is “found.” Jesus associated with sinners because he wanted to bring the lost sheep—people considered beyond hope—the Good News of God’s Kingdom. Just as the shepherd took the initiative to go out and find the sheep, so Jesus actively seeks lost souls. These tax collectors and sinners (15:1) with whom Jesus was associating were like sheep who had strayed away from God and needed to be returned. More than that, they needed the salvation that Jesus offered.

15:6-7 The shepherd did not rejoice alone. He even called his friends and neighbors to rejoice with him that he found his lost sheep. In reality, the shepherds would not have had a party over one found sheep. Jesus used this element in the story to stress his Kingdom's reality and the value of one lost person. God rejoices when one lost sinner is found and returns to God.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE LOST COIN / 15:8-10 / 160

In this parable, Jesus portrays God's love for someone who falls into a life of sin. They are lost, disconnected from their true owner, God himself. But their owner doesn't give up on people. Instead, he compassionately searches for them, freely offering them forgiveness through his Son, Jesus Christ.

15:8-9 Palestinian women would often receive ten silver coins as a wedding gift. Besides their monetary value, these coins held sentimental value like that of a wedding ring; to lose one would be extremely distressing. The ten coins could have been this woman's life savings, meant to support her in a time of need. Upon discovering that one of the coins was missing, the woman would light a lamp in order to see into the dark corners, and sweep every part of the dirt-packed floor in hope of finding it. Although the woman still had nine coins, she would not rest until the tenth was retrieved. Her search was rewarded. Like the shepherd, she shared her joy with her friends and neighbors so they could rejoice with her.

15:10 Just as a shepherd would rejoice over finding a lost sheep and a woman would rejoice at finding her lost coin, so all heaven rejoices over a repentant sinner. Each individual is precious to God. He actively seeks those lost ones, and when they are found, there is joy in the presence of God's angels. Through these two parables, Jesus was explaining to his detractors that, while they were not pleased with him, God was pleased that Jesus was seeking the lost souls and bringing them the Good News of the Kingdom.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE LOST SON / 15:11-32 / 161

The previous two parables—the one of lost sheep and the lost coin—build up to the climax, the parable of the lost son, a parable that is unique to Luke. Through the parable of the lost son, Jesus presents a vivid illustration of God and his mercy for repentant sinners.

15:11-12 Jesus continued with another parable to illustrate the point further that God rejoices when lost sinners repent and find forgiveness. A man had two sons, the younger of whom wanted his share of his father's estate (inheritance). This would have been one-third of the total estate, with the older son receiving two-thirds, a double portion of the other as prescribed by the law (Deuteronomy 21:17). In most cases, the son would have received this at his father's death, although fathers sometimes chose to divide up their inheritance early and retire from managing their estates. What is unusual is that the younger son initiated the division of the estate. This showed arrogant disregard for his father's authority as head of the family.

15:13-14 Within just a few days, the younger son was on his way—indicating that this had been his plan when he had asked for his inheritance in the first place. He packed all his belongings and traveled to a distant land. The young man apparently had wanted to live his own way, be his own master, get out from under the rules of his home and his father. Money was his ticket out, so he took it and ran.

In this distant land, he wasted all his money on wild living. But then his money ran out. To make matters worse, a great famine swept over the land and the boy did not even have money for food.

15:15-16 The young man became so desperate that he began to work feeding pigs. According to Moses' law, pigs were unclean animals (Leviticus 11:2-8; Deuteronomy 14:8). To protect themselves from defilement, Jews would not even touch pigs. For a Jew to stoop to feeding pigs would have been a great humiliation. The pods were the seeds of the carob tree, which grows around the Mediterranean Sea. That no one gave him anything shows that he was neglected and insignificant; he had truly sunk to the depths.

15:17-19 Sitting among pigs that were better fed than he was, he reflected on life back home. With no money, no dignity, and, so he thought, no claim to sonship in his father's household, he decided to go home to his father, confess his sin, and ask to be taken on as a hired man. At least there he would not go hungry. The key lies in the words that he planned to say to his father, "I have sinned against both heaven and you." He wanted to tell his father he was sorry. He wanted to repent of the selfishness that had led him to leave and spend all the money that his father had set aside for his future. Even if it meant living as a hired man in his own home, he would return there in order to say these things to his father.

15:20-21 So the son returned home to his father, not knowing what to expect—the best he could anticipate was a cold shoulder, a halfhearted welcome, or a chance to be hired as a slave. The father, however, seemed to have cast his eyes on the horizon many times since his son had left, hoping one day to see him returning. Finally, his father saw him coming even while he was far away. The father ran, embraced, and kissed his son. He was filled with love and compassion at the sight of his son who had come home. The son began to give his father the speech he had prepared (15:19), but he didn't even get to the part about asking to be hired, for the father wanted to welcome his son back into his home with a grand celebration.

In the two preceding stories, the seeker actively looked for the sheep and the coin, which could not return by themselves. In this story, the father watched and waited. He was dealing with a human being with a will, but he was ready to greet his son if he returned. In the same way, God's love is constant and patient and welcoming. He will search and give people opportunities to respond, but he will not force them to come to him. Like the father in this story, God waits patiently for people to come to their senses.

15:22-24 The father immediately restored this destitute and humbled young man as his son. Then the calf that was being fattened up for the time when a special feast should be prepared was to be killed—the father could think of no more fitting celebration. His son had been as good as dead to him, but now had returned to life. He had been lost, but now was found. As the shepherd celebrated upon finding the lost sheep (15:6), and the woman upon finding her lost coin (15:9), so this father celebrated at “finding” his “lost” son.

15:25-27 The older son, according to tradition, would have received a double inheritance. He probably had continued to be under his father's authority, working on the estate. While he would inherit it, this would not take place until his father's death. So he was in the fields working, being responsible to do the work that he should do, patiently following the typical plan for passing on the family inheritance. Imagine this other brother's surprise at returning from a day of hard work to the sound of a grand celebration going on in the house. Naturally he wondered what was going on. The servant simply replied with the facts—the wayward brother had returned, the calf had been killed, the feast had been prepared, and everyone was celebrating the brother's safe return.

15:28-30 At the report of the news, the older brother was angry and wouldn't go in to join the celebration. The older son was quite reasonable in his list of complaints. The father could have consented, pacifying his older son with additional gifts and rewards. But relationships prosper on love, not on fairness. Love is the dynamic that sweeps “reasonable claims” into secondary concerns here. When relationships need love, we often must let fairness take a second seat.

While the resentment of this older brother is easy to understand, his volley of words reveals the same sort of self-righteousness that afflicted the religious leaders of Jesus’ day. The key to understanding this story is found in the context of 15:1-2. The younger son stands for the tax collectors and sinners, the waiting father is God, and the older brother represents the religious leaders. The younger son had lived as a notorious sinner, so the brother wanted nothing to do with him. Yet the loving father, who had gone out to meet his younger son, also came out to plead with his elder one who would not take a moment to understand that he would inherit everything that he was working for and that he was dearly loved by his father. He only felt angry that his father was celebrating for an irresponsible person.

The religious leaders, claiming how hard they “slaved” for God, were attempting to keep myriad rules and regulations, many of which God never even demanded. They had the Father’s love, but had chosen to reject it in favor of hard work and self-denial. So when God eagerly welcomed the sinful, common people into the Kingdom, the religious leaders were refusing to join the celebration. But God rejoiced that these sinful people had come “home,” and he invited even these religious leaders to join the party. They had only anger and resentment that their efforts had not earned a party.

15:31-32 The father spoke kindly to his overheated son; the son had not been displaced as the firstborn—he had his relationship with his father (who obviously loved him very much), and he still had his inheritance. The younger son had squandered his, and had gone through great suffering before coming to his senses. The wild life the younger son had sought had brought him only to ruin, and he returned home with no inheritance, humbled from having suffered some hard knocks. The older son needed to get his perspective, be grateful that he had not had to go through such pain, and celebrate this happy day of his brother’s safe return.

Desperate sinners, notorious outcasts, difficult people—all have been offered salvation. God’s people must not stand aside and above, but must join in heaven’s celebration when those who were lost have been found.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE SHREWD MANAGER / 16:1-18 / 162

This passage of Luke begins a section dealing with the wise use of one's possessions. This parable is one of the most difficult to interpret, but it explains how Jesus' followers ought to use worldly wealth. Jesus was pointing out that everyone, fully warned of the coming divine judgment, should follow this manager's example. All people are in a worse predicament than this manager because their eternal destinies hang in the balance. Instead of frantically holding on to possessions which soon will disappear, possessions should be given away, especially to those in need (12:33). Money will not last, but people, God's word, and his Kingdom will. Will your investments reap eternal dividends?

16:1-2 This manager handled financial matters for the rich man. He had extensive authority over the rich man's financial affairs, even the ability to make contracts in the master's name. A person in such a position should have complete integrity. Unfortunately, this manager did not. He was thoroughly dishonest. Having been informed of the problems, the rich man called him in and demanded a financial report. As a consequence, the rich man would strip the manager of his authority, but first he required that the steward prepare the documents. This would take some time, and the manager used this time to his advantage.

16:3-4 The manager just lost his livelihood, but he had a window of time before being fired. So he thought about how best to handle his coming unemployment. Having been a manager, he did not want to dig ditches, he had too much pride to beg, and his mismanagement of his master's funds would cause no one else to hire him for such a position. So he came up with a plan whereby others would take care of him. By plying upon the code of reciprocity, the manager could find food and housing and possibly a job from those whose debts were reduced.

16:5-7 Much discussion has arisen around exactly what this money manager was doing in this situation. Some commentators suggest that what the manager was doing was removing the interest and his own earnings from each of the debts. Most likely, this manager was acting very shrewdly in figuring out a way to put his master's debtors in his own debt. The debts here involved are very high, thus these probably would have been commercial transactions—perhaps involving lease arrangements on pieces of land. The manager summoned all his master's debtors and reduced their debts by a substantial amount. In this fraudulent way, the manager earned their good will. Once the debts had been dishonestly reduced, the master could do nothing, but social custom would require these debtors to reciprocate such kindness to the manager.

16:8-9 The commendation for the dishonest rascal raises questions. Why would dishonesty be commended? The manager had cut down the debts, legally made them binding with a third party, and indebted others to him. Thus, there was nothing left for the master to do than to commend the manager for his shrewdness. He had solved his problem—albeit at expense to his master. The commendation seems odd, unless the master was simply appreciating the farsightedness of the plan.

Actually, Jesus did not want his listeners to focus on the details as much as on the lesson to be learned, which he includes here. The citizens of this world are more shrewd than the godly are. Citizens of this world refers to unbelievers, who are neither committed to God nor his eternal standards. The godly refers to the disciples and followers of Jesus. The shrewd manager sized up his situation, made some decisions, came up with a strategy, and did what was needed. Jesus was not commending dishonesty, but rather the manager's foresight and diligence to follow through and make friends. The manager did not profit directly in reducing the debts, but he used the principle of reciprocity to gain favor with the debtors. By doing a favor for them, the manager could require a favor from them.

Then Jesus added, "I tell you, use your worldly resources to benefit others and make friends. In this way, your generosity stores up a reward for you in heaven." Believers are to make wise use of their financial opportunities, not to earn heaven, but to use their resources to make friends by helping the poor. If believers use their money to help those in need or to help others find Christ, their earthly investment will bring eternal benefit. Those who obey God will find that the unselfish use of their possessions will follow. Soon Jesus would spell out some of the applications for gaining friends (16:10-13).

16:10-12 How people handle their worldly wealth shows their trustworthiness. If a person can be trusted with a little bit, if he or she maintains integrity even in small matters, then that person has proven trustworthiness for large matters. The reverse is also true—the one who would willingly steal a dollar may also be willing to steal thousands. Trustworthiness goes to a person's very core.

16:13 Money often takes the place of God in people's lives. How a person handles money indicates how much mastery money has attained in that person's life. Jesus explained that no one can serve two masters. From a spiritual standpoint, all people will serve someone or something; here Jesus spoke of two choices, God and money. People can choose to serve money—in essence, this means serving themselves and all the pleasure and power money can buy—or they can choose to serve God. But no one can do both, for the two choices are diametrically opposed. No one can seek selfish pleasure and be able to give money away. When money is one's master, there can be no room for God who requires single-hearted obedience and devotion.

Avoid mistaken judgments here. Many rich people are genuine, mature Christians. Wealth is not the issue. Many mature Christians work hard and expect to be paid. That's not the issue either. Money for these people is only a means to an end. Yet some people tragically have made wealth an end in itself—the thing to serve, their god. For Christians, money is always a means of service, never an ultimate goal. Money is God's loan to you for smart stewardship, never a measure of your real worth.

16:14-15 Because the Pharisees loved their money, they scoffed at Jesus' teaching. They may not have thought that they were serving money (16:13), but their laughing at Jesus' words shows that Jesus had touched a sensitive area. The Pharisees acted piously to get praise from others, but God knew their evil hearts. They considered their wealth to be a sign of God's approval. God detested their wealth, however, because it caused them to abandon true spirituality. What this world honors is an abomination in the sight of God. People who focus their lives on outward appearance and impressing others serve the wrong master and therefore cannot serve God.

16:16-17 Jesus emphasized that his Kingdom fulfilled the law; it did not cancel it (Matthew 5:17). The Good News of the Kingdom of God was not a new system but the culmination of the old. The same God who had worked through Moses was working through Jesus. John the Baptist's ministry was the dividing line between the Old and New Testaments (John 1:15-18). Up until his time, the only revelation of God available to people came through the laws of Moses and the messages of the prophets. The Good News was the culmination of all that the Law demanded and the Prophets foresaw. Those who recognized his true identity realized that the Kingdom had come and were forcing their way in, so desiring to be part of it.

16:18 Jesus had just made the point that his coming fulfilled the law and the prophets. That did not mean, however, that the law was no longer valid. In fact, in many cases, Jesus took the law and required even higher standards for those who would follow him (Matthew 5:21-22, 27-28, 33-35, 38-39, 43-44). Divorce was a hot topic of debate. Stricter than any of the then-current schools of thought, Jesus' teachings shocked his hearers (see Matthew 19:10), just as they shake today's readers. Jesus stated in no uncertain terms that marriage is a lifetime commitment, and he explained that divorce dissolves a divinely formed union. He also explained that marriage after divorce is adultery. (Matthew 19:9 gives one exception: marital unfaithfulness.) While the application of Jesus' words requires interpretation to specific situations, one truth is inescapable: God created marriage to be a sacred, permanent union and partnership between husband and wife. Anyone who takes this lightly forgets God's law and his plan for marriage from the very beginning.

Through this statement about divorce, Jesus was showing the unbelieving religious leaders that his words do not violate the law. He also wanted to point out to them their hypocrisy in attempting to keep the letter of the law while failing to fulfill its moral obligations.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT THE RICH MAN AND THE BEGGAR / 16:19-31 / 163

In Jesus' parable of a rich man and a poor man, their fortunes were exactly reversed at death: the poor man went to paradise, while the rich man suffered in hell. In agony, the rich man cried out for help, asking Abraham to send Lazarus to warn his brothers of this tragic, irreversible fate.

16:19-21 Finally, regarding the Pharisees' attitude toward money (they "dearly loved" it, 16:14), Jesus gave an illustration that vividly portrays the value of money in light of future judgment. This Lazarus should not be confused with the Lazarus whom Jesus raised from the dead in John 11. Incidentally, this is the only person in any of Jesus' stories who is given a name. The rich man in this parable lived out the lifestyle afforded to the wealthy who lived in the Roman Empire. Splendid clothing, delicious food of all types, and days lived in luxury could be had by those with enough money.

In contrast, there is a poor diseased beggar. Ancient Rome had no middle class—there were the very rich and the very poor. Often the poor were reduced to begging in order to survive. This man, Lazarus, was sick, hungry, and abandoned, so he lay at the rich man's door, longing for scraps from the rich man's table. Leftovers were all he desired, and the rich man could easily have shared from his extravagance by sending a servant out with a plateful. But the rich man chose to spend his money on himself, refusing to share, probably not even taking notice of the poor man at his door. His wealth was not sinful, but his selfishness was. While he had everything he could possibly want, Lazarus lay hungry with even the dogs licking his open sores.

16:22-23 In time, both the rich man and Lazarus died, for death takes everyone regardless of social station or wealth. The rich man ended up in torment in the place of the dead, the destiny of those who have refused to believe. The “torment” is described in 16:24 as “flames.” Added to the torment was the rich man’s ability to see paradise, with Abraham and Lazarus in peace and luxury. The role reversal is obvious—as Lazarus once lay in pain outside the door of the rich man’s house watching him feast, so here the rich man was in torment watching the joy far away in heaven.

In contrast, Lazarus must have been a God-fearing man, despite the fact that God had not allowed him an easy or pleasant lifetime on earth. When Lazarus died, the angels carried him to be with Abraham, another way of describing the Kingdom.

A theology of heaven and hell should not be based on Jesus’ words here. Pressing the details too much will take us away from the main point of the illustration, which is to teach about the danger of pursuing wealth, as well as the finality of God’s judgment.

16:24-25 Not only could the rich man in this story see into heaven’s bliss from his torment, but he could call out to those in paradise as well. He spoke to Father Abraham, a title any Jew would use for Abraham, the father of their nation (John 8:39). The request for Abraham to send Lazarus to dip the tip of his finger in water shows that the rich man’s basic attitude had not changed. For all his deference to Abraham, he still thought of Lazarus as no more than a messenger who could be sent by Abraham to do the rich man a favor.

Abraham sent an answer, but not the one that the rich man wanted or even expected. The rich man may have thought there was a mistake. He had been rich, and if wealth was a sign of God’s blessing, why would he be in agony? Abraham explained that, during their time on earth, the rich man had everything, but Lazarus had nothing. While the rich man could have helped the poor within his reach (such as Lazarus), he chose only personal pleasure. The roles for eternity would be reversed. Lazarus went from pain and hunger to comfort; the rich man went from pleasure and merriment to anguish. This would have unnerved the Pharisees who were listening to this parable. To them, wealth was a sign of God's blessing, poverty a sign of God's disfavor. So they enjoyed their wealth and did not attempt to bridge the chasm that separated them from the "disfavored ones." But Jesus was explaining that another chasm would develop, and they would find themselves on the wrong side.

16:26 Abraham explained to the rich man that he couldn't send Lazarus because between them and him was a great chasm and no one can cross over. The ultimate fates cannot be changed. God's decision upon death is final. There is only one life on this earth, and that is the time of decision. People cannot wait until eternity to make their relationship right with God—it will be too late. The judgment will have been made on the basis of their choices, and it will be irreversible.

16:27-29 The rich man still thought Lazarus could be sent on messenger duty. If Lazarus could not come to help him, then he wanted Lazarus sent to warn his five brothers about the place of torment so they wouldn't have to go there when they died. Abraham simply explained that they could read the words of Moses and the prophets (that is, the Old Testament) and there find the warnings about the place of torment. If those brothers hadn't heeded the major message of God in his word, they would not heed a messenger.

16:30-31 Perhaps the rich man knew his brothers only too well. The suggestion that they read God's word (or listen to it read in the synagogue) met with a no. It just wouldn't happen—probably for the same reasons that the rich man himself never had heeded the warnings therein. So the rich man begged that someone from the dead go back to them. Surely, then, they would turn from their sins. Abraham answered that if these brothers did not listen to Moses and the prophets, then they won't listen even if someone rises from the dead and appears to them.

Notice the irony in Jesus' statement; on his way to Jerusalem to die, he was fully aware that even when he had risen from the dead, most of the religious leaders would not accept him. They were set in their ways, and neither Scripture nor God's Son himself would shake them loose.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT FORGIVENESS AND FAITH / 17:1-10 / 164

After the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke collected four of Jesus' teachings that involve discipleship. In these teachings, Jesus addressed his followers' relationship with each other and their relationship with God. They are sharp words of truth from the Savior—a firm prod to reevaluate all of life in light of these principles.

17:1 Since 16:14, Jesus had been focusing his comments toward the Pharisees. The following samples of teaching, whether chronological or not, were focused toward his disciples. Because people are sinful and because people live in relationship with one another, they will tempt each other to sin. The Greek word skandala used here denotes any hindrance that causes another person to fall into sin, whether through temptation or false teaching. Jesus explained that while there would always be temptations, that did not excuse the person who does the tempting. Jesus may have been referring to the religious leaders who taught their converts their own hypocritical ways (see Matthew 23:15). These leaders were perpetuating an evil system through their false teaching. A person who teaches others has a solemn responsibility (James 3:1).

17:2 Leading another person astray is very serious. Jesus explained that the consequences were so severe that it would be better to have a millstone tied around one's neck and be thrown into the sea than for a person to face God after causing others to stumble. A "millstone" was a heavy, flat stone used to grind grain. To have a millstone tied around the neck and be dumped into the sea pictured a horrifying death by drowning. Even such a death would be minor, however, compared to what this person would face in eternity. Jesus used the term little ones to refer not just to children but to his followers. Those who turn people away from God will receive severe punishment.

17:3-4 Careful leadership is important for Jesus' followers, but so is constant forgiveness. When there is sin among God's people, they are responsible to rebuke one another. To "rebuke" does not mean to point out every sin, for Jesus also warns against being judgmental (6:37). To "rebuke" (always in love) means to bring sin to a person's attention with the purpose of restoring that person to God and to fellow humans. In context here, this refers to sin that could pull that person or others away from God, and thus result in the horrible judgment Jesus spoke of in 17:2. When a person feels that he or she must rebuke another Christian for a sin, it is wise for that person to check his or her attitudes and motivations first. Unless rebuke is tied to forgiveness, it will not help the sinning person. Jesus explained, in fact, that if the other person repents, the rebuker must forgive. And that forgiveness extends constantly.

17:5-6 The disciples told Jesus, “We need more faith.” Jesus didn’t directly answer their question because the amount of faith is not as important as its genuineness. What is faith? It is total dependence on God and a willingness to do his will.

A mustard seed is small, but it is alive and growing. Like a tiny seed, a small amount of genuine faith in God will take root and grow. The apostles didn’t need more faith; a tiny seed of faith would be enough, if it were alive and growing.

Jesus pointed to a nearby mulberry tree and said that even small faith could uproot it and send it into the sea. Mulberry trees grow quite large (as high as thirty-five feet). Matthew’s Gospel records a similar teaching when Jesus said that a mountain could be told to throw itself into the sea (Matthew 21:21). It is the power of God, not faith, that uproots trees and moves mountains, but faith must be present for God to work. Even a small “seed” of faith is sufficient. There is great power in even a little faith when God is there 17:7-10 When Jesus’ followers obey, they have only done their duty and should regard it as a privilege. They should not expect thanks, for they were only doing what they were supposed to do. Jesus used the example of a slave who renders service and does not expect to be thanked. Obedience is not something extra done for God; it is the duty of anyone who desires to be Christ’s follower. Before God, all people are sinners, saved only by God’s grace, but believers are saved and therefore have great worth in God’s Kingdom. They must lay aside selfishness and treat others with respect and common courtesy.

With these words, Jesus was not rendering service as meaningless or useless, nor was he doing away with rewards. He was attacking unwarranted self-esteem and spiritual pride—perhaps such as many of the religious leaders were exhibiting, or what the disciples themselves might be tempted to fall into as they would seek to serve God. Jesus’ followers focus their eyes on God with their goal only to serve and please him. They don’t work for recognition or rewards or even for God to praise them for their hard work. They understand that their duty is to serve the Master.

Ten lepers were healed, but only one leper—a Samaritan—returned to thank Jesus. This story, unique to Luke, highlights the faith of a foreigner in Israel. One of the major themes of Luke is the remarkable faith of Gentiles. Although many of the Jewish religious leaders rejected Jesus, a number of foreigners wholeheartedly placed their trust in him (7:1-10).

17:11-13 Jesus was traveling along the border between Galilee and Samaria. Galilee was Jewish; Samaria was occupied by Samaritans who were despised by the Jews. The exact location is unknown, but that Jesus was near the border accounts for a Samaritan in the group of lepers. People who had leprosy were required to try to stay away from other people and to announce their presence if they had to come near. Thus these ten lepers were standing at a distance, outside the city, and they were crying out to Jesus for mercy. They called Jesus Master—they knew who he was and what he could do for them. They did not try to get close, however, perhaps because of the crowd that was probably still following Jesus (14:25).

17:14 Jesus sent the ten lepers to the priests (as prescribed by the law, Leviticus 14) before they were healed, and as they went, their leprosy disappeared. Jesus did not touch these men or even speak words of healing as he had done for most of his healings. This time he simply gave them the command to go show themselves to the priests. Jesus was asking the men to respond in faith so that, by their obedience, what they desired would happen. All the men responded in faith, and Jesus healed them on the way.

17:15-16 Jesus healed all ten lepers, but only one of them returned to thank him. It is possible to receive God's great gifts with an ungrateful spirit—nine of the ten men did so. Only the thankful man, however, learned that his faith had played a role in his healing; and only grateful Christians grow in understanding God's grace. God does not demand that his people thank him, but he is pleased when they do so. And he uses their responsiveness to teach them more about himself. The surprise of this story is that this Samaritan, used to being despised by Jews (except perhaps for his fellow lepers), would dare to go to this Jewish healer and prostrate himself before him. But this man's faith went deep enough that he saw God's hand in the healing. Once again Luke was pointing out that God's grace is for everybody.

17:17-19 Jesus had been distressed many times with his own people's lack of acceptance and faith (7:9; 8:25; 12:28). This time was no different. Ten men had been healed, but only one, the foreigner (referring to the man from Samaria), came back to give glory to God. Jesus was not so much concerned about being thanked as he was about the men's understanding of what had happened. The other nine went off, free from leprosy but not necessarily free from sin through the salvation Jesus could offer. This one man was freed, so Jesus sent him on his way with the knowledge that his faith had made him well. He not only had a restored body, his soul had been restored as well.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD / 17:20-37 / 170

Here Luke placed a series of Jesus' teachings about the Kingdom of God in order to present a concise summary of it. This passage, plus 21:15-38, parallel the Olivet discourse of Matthew 24 and Mark 13. In answering the Pharisees' question about the Kingdom, Jesus pointed out that the Kingdom was already among them. With his ministry, Jesus had already inaugurated the Kingdom of God. But Jesus also warned his disciples (17:22) that the complete realization of the Kingdom of God was still in the future.

17:20-21 Up to this point in the chapter, Jesus was explaining how his followers should live. From 17:20–18:8, as a response to a question brought by the Pharisees, Jesus discussed when the Kingdom of God would come. The Pharisees did not understand that the Kingdom of God had already arrived with Jesus. Jesus had made this clear in 11:20. In 19:11-27, he will explain that the full expression of God's Kingdom is yet to come (and is still to come). These are the days "between"—the Kingdom has arrived in Jesus Christ, yet it has not arrived in its fullness. Believers are waiting for it, as Jesus has already described (12:35-48), knowing that it could come at any moment. So Jesus' words here explain the nature of the Kingdom now.

Jesus explained that the Kingdom isn't ushered in with visible signs; in other words, no one can project when it will come by looking for supernatural signs. Nor will anyone be able to point to anything that proves that the Kingdom is here or there. The Kingdom of God was among the people because Jesus was among them. When Jesus returned to heaven, the Kingdom remained, and continues today, with the work of God's Spirit in people's lives and in relationships. Still, today, believers must resist looking to institutions or programs for evidence of the progress of God's Kingdom. Instead, they should look for what God is doing in people's hearts. Rather than looking for signs or trying to figure out timetables, each person should look into his or her own heart to be sure to be ready. When the Kingdom arrives, will you be ushered in or sent

17:22 Jesus turned his attention back to his disciples and explained that days would come when they would long to share in the days of the Son of Man, but they won't be able to. We are not certain whether this longing on the disciples' part would be for the return of the days when Jesus was among them physically (for he would soon be gone physically), or if their longing looked ahead to the "days" of the end times when the Kingdom would arrive and Jesus would return. Most likely their "longing" would be looking ahead for what had been promised (because the following verses concern the Second Coming). That they won't be able to share in it means that they would not see his arrival in their lifetimes. There would be an intervening time between Jesus' first and second comings.

17:23-24 In these intervening days, after Christ has returned to heaven and as his followers await his return, there will be much speculation. Some will attempt to pinpoint exactly when Jesus will return; others will attempt to mock believers' expectations. Some will claim to be the Messiah; others will say that Jesus has returned—and people will believe them. Jesus warned believers never to take such reports seriously, no matter how convincing they may sound. When Jesus returns, his power and presence will be evident to everyone, like lightning that flashes across the sky. No one will need to spread the message because all will see for themselves.

17:25 Before this great return occurs, however, Jesus would return to heaven from earth. In order for that to occur, he would suffer terribly and be rejected, and then be crucified. This would happen soon, for it would be this generation who would do it, specifically this generation of religious leaders who would arrange for Jesus to be put to death (9:21-27, 37-44; 18:31-34).

17:26-27 To illustrate the suddenness of his return, Jesus used two examples, the first being the flood (see Genesis 6–7). In the days before the flood, life went on as usual for most people, with the exception of Noah who had been building a huge boat for many years. Then, it began to rain, the flood came, and everyone drowned.

Jesus was warning against false security. Although life will continue as usual until the day of Christ's return, believers must always be ready to go at a moment's notice. When Christ returns, there will be no second chances. Some will be taken to be with him; the rest will be left behind.

17:28-29 The second example of the suddenness of Christ's return is the destruction of the city of Sodom (recorded in Genesis 18–19). Sodom, along with the nearby city of Gomorrah, was destroyed by God because of their great wickedness. Lot, Abraham's nephew, had chosen to settle in the city of Sodom (Genesis 13:11-13). The people of Sodom, wicked as they were, went about their daily business. Then, the morning Lot left Sodom, the city was destroyed. The destruction came so suddenly that only Lot and his family escaped. Angels came and spared Lot and his family from the fire and burning sulfur.

In the time between Christ's first and second comings, some may be lulled into complacency by the fact that life continues with its normal activities. Many today see life moving ahead with no interruptions. But Jesus made it clear that judgment would come, unexpectedly, without warning, in the middle of what would begin as a routine day.

17:30-32 When the Son of Man returns, there will be no time to return home for anything. Those outside should not go back inside to try to pack; those working out in the field must not return to town. Jesus exhorted his listeners to remember what happened to Lot's wife! When angels led Lot and his family out of the city, the angels warned them not to look back (Genesis 19:17). Surely the sound of destruction reached their ears, but they were not to turn around. Lot's wife looked back, and she became a pillar of salt (Genesis 19:26). Clinging to the past, she was unwilling to completely leave the evil of the city and the comfort of her possessions.

The time for deciding about Christ will pass in a single moment. Those who were waiting and longing to see that day (17:22) will rejoice at its arrival. Those who did not believe it would happen will not have time to do anything about it. It will be too late.

17:33 Christ's return will cause great upheaval and danger. This is described in other prophecies regarding the end times, such as chapter 21 and the book of Revelation. The person looking for the Kingdom will be able to run with joy to welcome it, willingly forfeiting home and possessions in order to have eternal life. However, whoever clings to this life will lose it, for nothing in this life will remain. When God's Kingdom comes, everything will change. Clinging to this world is foolish, for it will pass away. Clinging to life is foolish, for it too will pass away. Jesus said much the same thing in 9:24 (see commentary there). (See also Matthew 10:39; 16:25; Mark 8:35; John 12:25.)

17:34-35 The sudden return of Christ and the sudden end of all chances to change one's decision about him will result in sudden separation of his followers from those who chose not to follow. People may be close enough in this world—even sleeping in the same bed or working together at the same job. (Note: The best manuscripts do not include 17:36.) While these people may have looked no different from the outside, one difference will separate them forever. When Jesus returns, he will take his followers to be with him (see 1 Thessalonians 4:14-17).

17:37 Those listening to Jesus' words of warning wanted to know where all of this would take place. To answer the disciples' question, Jesus quoted a familiar proverb. One vulture circling overhead does not mean much, but a gathering of vultures means that a dead body is nearby. Likewise, one sign of the end may not be significant, but when many signs occur, the Second Coming (the end) is near.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE PERSISTENT WIDOW / 18:1-8 / 171

This parable, unique to Luke, illustrates the importance of prayer for Christians (a theme of Luke's, see 5:16; 6:12; 11:1-13). In the same way as the widow, Christians should not give up praying to God even when facing indifference and powerful opposition.

18:1 The need for constant prayer and the injunction to never give up should be interpreted in light of the preceding chapter and its focus on the coming Kingdom. Jesus had been discussing with his listeners the aspects of the “in between” time as they lived in a sinful world and awaited the Kingdom. The problem of evil and suffering and the need for justice would plague Jesus' followers as they experienced pain and awaited vindication. As they wrestled with these difficulties, they could know that their heavenly Father listened and understood and that the answer to their prayers for relief and justice is coming in his time.

18:2-5 Jesus was not comparing God to this unjust and contemptuous judge, as though he would treat believers in this manner. Instead, this story shows that if even an evil man can be made to deal justly by a persistent woman, how much more would God, who loves his people, care for their requests.

The scene pictures a judge who is godless and contemptuous. He should have been championing those who needed justice, but when a widow came for help, he ignored her. Widows and orphans were among the most vulnerable of all God's people, and both Old Testament prophets and New Testament apostles insisted that these needy people be properly cared for. (See, for example, Exodus 22:22-24; Isaiah 1:17; 1 Timothy 5:3; James 1:27.) This woman had little hope of gaining the justice she sought, so she used the only weapon she had—persistence. With nothing to lose, she made herself an irritant to the judge. To get rid of her, he saw to it that she got justice.

18:6-8 If an unjust judge will respond to constant pressure, how much more will a great and loving God respond to his people? They know he loves them; they can believe he will hear their cries for help. They can trust that one day God will give a just decision in the end. As God's people seek to be obedient in this sinful world, they can know that God will not keep putting them off. It may seem for a time that their cries go unheard. But one day, God will grant justice.

to them quickly. But Christ has not yet returned. Jesus had made it clear that there would be an intervening time. This would be the church age, the present time. During these years, God's people help others find the Kingdom and are themselves strengthened in their faith. Their needs cause them to be on their knees constantly, knowing that God alone is their help. Jesus gave no indication of how long this intervening time would last or when he would return. Indeed, he said no one knows (Matthew 24:36), so believers are always to be ready. But Jesus asked, “When I, the Son of Man, return, how many will I find who have faith?” Will people have persisted in faith? Will they be ready and waiting when he comes?

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF TWO MEN WHO PRAYED / 18:9-14 / 172

After encouraging the disciples to be persistent in prayer (18:1-8), Jesus taught them, with a parable, how to pray. This parable sharply contrasts the prayer of a Pharisee with that of a tax collector.

18:9-10 Prayer is important (18:1-8), but the attitude of prayer is vitally important. The people who had great self-confidence and scorned everyone were the Pharisees and other religious leaders who saw themselves as the only ones righteous enough to be acceptable to God. To these people, Jesus told a story about two men who went to the Temple to pray. These two men were as different as could be: the one was a law-keeping and religious Pharisee, and the other was a dishonest tax collector.

18:11-12 This Pharisee's actions and his prayer provide a picture of his life and occupation—he was a separatist, but his separatism and desire to remain clean before God had hardened into a lifestyle of self-righteousness. He stood by himself and prayed.

The words of this prayer, however, while probably true, were not prayed in the correct attitude of humility before God. He thanked God that he was not a sinner like everyone else. While the Pharisee was probably not like everyone else in a lot of ways, he erred in thinking that he was “not a sinner.” This Pharisee knew that he was far better than the tax collector he saw praying across the way. Tax collectors were not noted for their honesty, so this Pharisee compared himself favorably, telling God that he himself had never cheated or sinned or committed adultery. And, by the way, he also fasted twice a week and tithed from his income.

This Pharisee was confident of himself and his righteousness, while at the same time despising this other man, even though he too was in the Temple praying to the same God. The Pharisee did not welcome the tax collector who may have been seeking God; instead, the Pharisee gloated that he was so much more righteous.

18:13-14 The focus shifts to the tax collector who had come to the Temple and seems to have known full well the extent of his sin. He felt so low that he did not think he could even lift his eyes to heaven into God's face; instead he beat his chest (a sign of sorrow), praying for God to be merciful to him. He recognized himself as a sinner. He had been convicted of his sin and had come to the one place where he could find forgiveness. He had come to God, humbly recognizing that he did not deserve mercy.

Surprisingly enough, only the tax collector returned home justified before God. The word "justified" means God's act of declaring people "not guilty" of sin. Only the tax collector recognized his sin; therefore, he was the only one God justified. The self-righteous Pharisee had said that he had no sin; therefore, there was nothing for God to justify for him. He returned home no different than when he had entered.

The principle is that no one has anything of value to bring to God in order to deserve salvation, mercy, justification, or even a second glance from God. The proud will be humbled, but the humble will be honored. Acceptance before God cannot be achieved by good deeds, piety, or any amount of self-proclaimed righteousness.

JESUS BLESSES THE CHILDREN / 18:15-17 / 174

Jesus used a child's humility as a striking picture of the appropriate attitude with which to approach God. That type of humility was demonstrated by the tax collector in the previous parable (18:9-14).

18:15 In the first century, Jewish households were patriarchal—men came first, followed by women and children. Adult men were the key members of society, women quite secondary, and children were to be seen but not heard. It was customary, however, for parents to bring their children (the Greek word for "children" is paidia, meaning children ranging in age from babies to pre-teens) to an elder or a scribe so he could touch (or lay hands on) and bless them. The disciples apparently viewed this as an intrusion and a drain of time and energy. So they told the parents not to bother Jesus.

18:16-17 Instead of being too busy for children, Jesus called for them and wanted them to come to him. No one should be stopped from coming to Jesus, no matter how young or old. Jesus explained that the Kingdom of God belongs to such as these, not meaning that heaven is only for children but that people need childlike attitudes of trust in God. The receptiveness of little children was a great contrast to the stubbornness of the religious leaders who let their education and sophistication stand in the way of a simple faith. Anyone who doesn't have their kind of faith will never get into the Kingdom of God. Childlike faith means trusting God no matter what, always knowing that he has your best in mind. You love him because he loves you. You trust completely because the One you trust is completely trustworthy.

JESUS SPEAKS TO THE RICH YOUNG MAN / 18:18-30 / 175

This episode with the rich young man differs greatly with Jesus' blessing of children in the previous section. The children are an example of innocent faith and trust. The rich young man thought he could gain eternal life by what he did, only to find that he could not have it.

18:18-19 This religious leader addressed Jesus as good teacher (not the more common "rabbi") and eagerly asked a question about what he should do to get eternal life. He viewed eternal life as something that a person could achieve or earn through certain works or good deeds, and he wanted to make sure that he did everything necessary.

Instead of answering the man's question, Jesus first took issue with the way the man addressed him. This may have been no more than a flippant attempt at flattery, but Jesus forced the man to think about it. Because only God is truly good, the man had made a statement about Jesus that he probably did not even realize. By asking this question, Jesus was saying, "Do you really know the one to whom you are talking?" The man was correct in calling Jesus good for he was good and also God.

18:20-21 Regarding the man's question, Jesus at first pointed him back to the commandments (meaning the Ten Commandments). Jesus listed only five of them—those dealing with human relationships. He did not list any of the first four commandments that deal with a person's relationship to God. All of the ones listed could be easily identified—the man probably could honestly say that he had not committed adultery or murder, had not stolen or lied, and had honored his parents. To keep the letter of these laws would be relatively easy for a wealthy young Jewish man. Yet he still felt strongly that something was lacking in his life. So he asked if there were more he should do. The point is that even if a person could keep all these commandments perfectly, which this man claimed to have done, there would still be a lack of assurance of salvation.

18:22-23 The man saying that he had kept all the commandments led Jesus to focus on the man's relationship to his material possessions (alluding to the last commandment not to covet) and on his relationship to God (the first four commandments that Jesus had not mentioned). Jesus perceived an area of weakness—his wealth—and so said that it was the money itself that was standing in the way of his reaching eternal life. So Jesus told him to sell everything he owned, give away his money to the poor, and then follow him. This challenge exposed the barrier that would keep this man out of the Kingdom: his love of money. Ironically, his attitude made him unable to keep the first commandment: "Do not worship any other gods besides me" (Exodus 20:3). The young man did not love God with his whole heart as he had presumed. In reality, his many possessions were his god.

The task of selling every possession would not, of itself, give the man eternal life. But such radical obedience would be the first step. The emphasis was not so much on "selling" as on "following." Jesus' words to this rich young man were a test of his faith and his willingness to obey. The man thought he needed to do more; Jesus explained that there was plenty more he could do but not in order to obtain eternal life. Instead, he needed an attitude adjustment toward his wealth; only then could he submit humbly to the lordship of Christ. By putting his treasure in heaven and following Jesus along the road of selflessness and service to others, the man could be assured of his eternal destiny. But the young man became sad when he heard this.

Jesus does not ask all believers to sell everything they have. He does ask each person, however, to get rid of anything that has become more important than God. If your basis for security has shifted from God to what you own, you may need to get rid of those possessions.

18:24-25 Offered discipleship, the man chose to return to his possessions. Jesus sadly pointed out to his disciples that it is hard for rich people to get into the Kingdom of God. This was contrary to conventional wisdom. Most Jews believed that wealth was a sign of God's blessing on people. Here Jesus explained that riches can often prove to be a stumbling block. Rich people often don't feel the deep spiritual hunger needed to seek out and find God. They can use their money to buy possessions, trips, and helpers so that they don't perceive any needs in their lives. With all their advantages and influence, the rich often find it difficult to have the attitude of humility, submission, and service required by Jesus. Because money represents power and success, the rich often miss out on the fact that power and success on earth cannot provide eternal salvation. Even if they use their money to help good causes, they can still miss out on God's Kingdom.

Jesus used a well-known Jewish proverb to describe the difficulty faced by the rich; he said, “It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich person to enter the Kingdom of God.” The Greek word refers to a sewing needle. Jesus' image was for hyperbolic effect. The camel, the largest animal in Palestine, could get through the eye of a sewing needle easier than a rich person could get into God's Kingdom. These are indeed sobering words for those whose money and possessions are extremely important to them.

18:26-27 Because the Jewish people saw riches as a sign of God's special blessing, they were astounded when Jesus said that riches actually worked against people finding God. So they asked, “Then who in the world can be saved?”

Jesus answered that what is impossible from a human perspective is possible with God. People cannot save themselves, no matter how much power, authority, or influence they buy. Salvation comes from God alone. Both rich and poor can be saved, and human impossibilities are divine possibilities. The rich need to hold their riches loosely, remembering that every penny comes from God. And they should willingly use what God has given to advance his Kingdom. This does not come easily for anyone, rich or poor. Money can be a major stumbling block, but God can change anyone.

18:28-30 Peter and the other disciples had paid a high price—leaving their homes and jobs—to follow Jesus. They had done what the rich man had been unwilling to do. They had abandoned their former lives.

Jesus reminded Peter that following him has its benefits as well as its sacrifices. Any believer who has had to give up something to follow Christ will be repaid in this life as well as in the next. For example, if you must give up a secure job, you will find that God offers a secure relationship with himself now and forever. If you must give up your family's approval, you will gain the love of the family of God. For each person the sacrifice may be different, though no less difficult. No matter how much or how little you have, no matter how difficult the sacrifice may be, are you willing to do whatever it takes to have eternal life?

For the third time, Jesus predicted his death; this time, he graphically described his rejection by the religious leaders and even predicted his own resurrection. Luke placed these predictions within his long section that recounts Jesus' journey to Jerusalem. He placed the first two predictions at the beginning of the journey (9:22, 43-45) and this third prediction toward the end, showing that Jesus was heading to Jerusalem to fulfill these predictions (see 12:50; 13:32-33; 17:25).

18:31 As a warning to his disciples, he gathered them around himself and explained that when they arrived in Jerusalem all the predictions of the ancient prophets concerning the Son of Man will come true. Some of those predictions about what would happen to Jesus are in Psalm 41:9 (betrayal); Psalm 22:16-18 and Isaiah 53:4-7 (crucifixion); Psalm 16:10 (resurrection). Jesus explained that the plans had already been in place for thousands of years and soon would be fulfilled.

18:32-34 The first time Jesus told of his impending death, he focused on his rejection by Israel's leaders (9:21-27); the second time, he added the element of betrayal (9:44-45). Here Jesus mentioned the foretelling of these events by the prophets and the involvement of the Romans. While the Jewish leaders would reject Jesus (as reported in 9:21-27), they had to submit to Rome's authority in cases of capital punishment. They could punish lesser crimes, but only Rome could call for and enact an execution.

So sad were these words that it seems the disciples didn't even hear the last sentence—on the third day, he would rise again. Their ignorance and blindness were simply because they could not grasp the scope of God's plan in Jesus. The disciples didn't understand Jesus, apparently because they were focusing on what he said about his death. Even though Jesus spoke plainly, they would not grasp the significance of his words until they had seen the risen Christ face-to-face (see 24:13-35).

JESUS HEALS A BLIND BEGGAR / 18:35-43 / 179

The healing of the blind man is the last miracle before the Passion Week. On his approach to Jerusalem, Jesus went through Jericho. Here a blind man, a person considered insignificant by others, cried out for mercy and expressed his faith in Jesus as the Messiah who could save him. His bold faith was rewarded.

18:35-36 Continuing on their journey toward Jerusalem, Jesus and the disciples approached Jericho. The Old Testament city of Jericho had been destroyed by the Israelites (Joshua 6:20), but during his rule over Palestine, Herod the Great had rebuilt the city (about a mile south of the original city) as a site for his winter palace. Jericho was a popular and wealthy resort city, not far from the Jordan River, about eighteen miles northeast of Jerusalem.

They came upon a blind beggar who was sitting beside the road. Beggars often waited along the roads near cities because that was where they were able to contact the most people. Usually disabled in some way, beggars were unable to work for a living. Thus, beggars had little hope of escaping their degrading way of life.

18:37-39 When the blind man heard that Jesus of Nazareth was going by, he shamelessly cried out for Jesus' attention. He called "Son of David," a title for the Messiah (Isaiah 11:1-3). This means that the blind man understood Jesus to be the long-awaited Messiah. The crowds tried to hush the man, perhaps trying to keep Jesus from being harassed by beggars. But that only made the blind man more persistent.

18:40-41 Any normal human being, heading toward certain death, would be extremely preoccupied and probably not necessarily in the mood to help others. But Jesus did not reject the man as the crowd had done. He ordered that the man be brought to him, then asked him to voice his request. The man replied unhesitatingly, "I want to see!" How many times in his life had he voiced that desire? Probably thousands. But here he stood before the one person in the universe who could actually make his desire a reality. And he would not have asked if he had not believed that it could be so.

18:42-43 Jesus recognized the man's faith. As a result of such faith, Jesus healed him. All Jesus did was speak the words and instantly the man could see. He immediately joined the crowd of followers, staying with Jesus, and praising God. This was also the response of the people in the crowd. There were no healings of the blind recorded in the Old Testament, so the Jews believed that such a miracle would be a sign that the messianic age had begun (Isaiah 29:18; 35:5). Jesus healed other blind people as well, so these people knew something special was happening. A poor and blind beggar could see that Jesus was the Messiah, and the crowds understood that God was to be praised for such miracles. But the religious leaders who saw his miracles were blinded to his identity and refused to recognize him as the Messiah.

JESUS BRINGS SALVATION TO ZACCHAEUS'S HOME / 19:1-10 / 180

In Jericho, Jesus invited himself to the home of Zacchaeus, the chief tax collector. Apparently Zacchaeus was a corrupt tax collector. Although he was despised and hated, he became an impressive example of a rich man coming to salvation. With Zacchaeus, Jesus accomplished the impossible. He sought out a wealthy sinner and called him to repentance and salvation.

19:1-2 After healing a blind man outside the city (18:35-43), Jesus entered Jericho. Zacchaeus was a tax collector, influential and very rich. To finance their great world empire, the Romans levied heavy taxes on all nations under their control. The Jews opposed these taxes because they supported a secular government and its pagan gods, but they were still forced to pay. Some of their own countrymen became tax collectors, lured by the wealth such a position promised.

19:3-4 Zacchaeus, like the rest of the people in Jericho, was curious to see this man whose healings and teachings had been astounding people all over the country. Moments earlier, a blind man sitting on the side of the road had been healed (18:42-43). The news had spread, and Zacchaeus wanted to get a look at Jesus. The text reveals another detail about this wealthy tax collector: he was so short that he could not see over the people in the crowd. Zacchaeus would not be put off. He ran on down the road and climbed a sycamore tree. The sycamore tree was easy to climb, it was like an oak tree with wide lateral branches.

19:5-7 Up in the tree, Zacchaeus watched the approaching crowd. He wanted to see Jesus, and apparently Jesus wanted to see him. Many places in Luke reveal Jesus having knowledge of people's inner thoughts and needs (see 5:22; 6:8; 7:39-40; 8:46; 9:47). As always, every act of Jesus was part of a divine plan—he said he must go to Zacchaeus's home. Zacchaeus climbed down quickly and took Jesus home.

But why Zacchaeus? In fact, many in the crowd were unhappy with Jesus' choice of hosts: the crowds were displeased that he had gone to be the guest of a notorious sinner. Zacchaeus must have been a pretty bad character, for the crowd reacted with great displeasure that Jesus would have chosen him out of everyone. No one else in the crowd could have known that Jesus' visit would change this tax collector's life.

19:8 Some grumbled, but Jesus knew that Zacchaeus was ready for a change in his life. After Jesus took the initiative with him, Zacchaeus took the initiative to follow wherever the path of obedience to Jesus might lead. The rich young man had come asking and had gone away empty, unable to give up his money and possessions (18:18-23). Zacchaeus, however, was able to give away his wealth in order to follow Jesus. This is the heart attitude that Jesus was looking for. Perceiving it in Zacchaeus, he quickly brought this man the Good News. So eager was Zacchaeus to rid himself of the shackles of wealth that he said he would pay back four times as much of the overage that he had charged people. His attitude was correct, and his actions showed his inner desire to obey. Zacchaeus was setting his priorities right and he would be ready for the Kingdom.

19:9-10 This tax collector was perceived as a traitor by his people, so they would not have considered him a son of Abraham. Yet, by opening his heart to Jesus, he proved himself to be not only a son of Abraham in the sense of a Jew looking for the Kingdom, but also a son of Abraham in the truest sense of the word because he experienced salvation. Salvation came to Zacchaeus, not because he did good deeds, but because he truly believed in Jesus and set aside anything that might get in the way of obeying him. To the grumblers, detractors, and self-righteous, to those who thought they were saved simply because they were descendants of Abraham, Jesus explained his mission—he came to seek and save those like Zacchaeus who are lost.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE KING'S TEN SERVANTS / 19:11-27 / 181

Because the crowd was expecting the coming Kingdom of God, Jesus told them a parable that corrected their misunderstanding about the nature of the Kingdom. Here, as in 12:35-40 (the parable of the servants waiting for their master), Jesus tied responsible stewardship of resources to the coming Kingdom of God. The first parable emphasized the importance of being alert and watchful, for the master may return suddenly and at any time. This parable encourages listeners to wisely use their resources for the master's benefit. The implication is clear. Christians are accountable to Jesus for the way they use their time, money, and abilities.

19:11 The people still hoped for a political leader who would set up an earthly Kingdom and get rid of Roman domination. The fact that Jesus had been steadily heading toward Jerusalem fueled speculation that he was going there to begin the Kingdom of God. So Jesus wanted to correct this wrong impression. This story showed Jesus' followers what they were to do during the time between Jesus' departure and his second coming. Because believers today live in that time period, it applies directly to them as well. Christians have been given excellent resources to build and expand God's Kingdom. Jesus expects them to use these talents so that the Kingdom grows.

19:12-13 In the world of the Roman Empire, when a man was going to become king, he would go to Rome to receive the appointment, and then return to his land to begin his rule. This nobleman was called away. Since this trip could take several months, the man in this parable made sure that his financial situation did not become stagnant while he was gone. He gathered ten servants and gave them ten pounds of silver to invest for him while he was gone, each servant receiving one pound.

In these words, Jesus was making it clear that there would be a time interval between his presence with them and the time when he would come to set up his Kingdom. Like this king, he would go away to a distant country (heaven) and would be gone for an undetermined amount of time. In the meantime, his servants here would be given responsibilities to handle.

19:14-15 The king in this parable had subjects who hated him and did not want him made king. After his return, he called in the servants to give an accounting for what they had done with the money and what their profits were. He fully anticipated that they had made more money with his money through wise business and investments.

19:16-17 The first servant reported a tremendous gain—he took the money entrusted to him and made ten times the original amount. The king, knowing that his servant had been trustworthy and wise with that fairly small amount of money, told this servant he would be entrusted with far more responsibility. So the king made him governor of ten cities. The servant would share in his master's rule because he had shown faithfulness with the little that had been entrusted to him (see also 16:10).

A time of accounting will come for all believers. Christians can know they are saved and will be with God in his Kingdom, but they will be judged for how they have used what God has entrusted to them during his absence and their time on earth. God will reward faithful servants.

19:18-19 The second servant also had a gain—not as much as the first, but still he had done a fine job and was commended by the king. This servant also was rewarded in proportion to his ability—five cities for earning five times the original amount.

19:20-21 We are not told of the other seven servants, but this third servant received mention because of his failure to do what his master had expected of him. There would have been only two groups: those who used the master's money well (the amount they made seems to have been inconsequential), and those who did nothing, as this servant here who brought back only the original amount. He had hid it and kept it safe. This servant was afraid of the master, and that fear had led him to inactivity. He was afraid that his master expected too much, so he did nothing at all. Perhaps there was a bit of anger that he had to do all the work, while the master took the profits—taking what wasn't his.

19:22-23 If the servant had been so afraid, he should have at least put the money in the bank in order for it to earn some interest. There were several reasons for his failure and for the king's anger. The king punished the man because he didn't share his master's interest in the Kingdom; he didn't trust his master's intentions; his only concern was for himself; and he did nothing to use the money.

Like the king in this story, God has given you gifts to use for the benefit of his Kingdom. Some people, like this servant, don't mind being identified in a nominal way with Jesus, but when given responsibility or expectations, they refuse to do anything and do not want to be made accountable to God. Are you willing to use faithfully what he has entrusted to you? The results, the "earnings," are ultimately in God's hands, but believers are responsible to use what they have to glorify God.

19:24-27 The king took the money away from the faithless servant and gave it to the one who had proved to be responsible with it. Although the others standing around wondered why the king would give more to the one who already had the most, the king was acting wisely in giving more resources to the most effective servant. To those who use well what they are given, even more will be given so they can continue to produce. Those who are unfaithful because they refuse to take advantage of any opportunities they have—will end up losing even what they had been given.

The parable ends with the ultimate judgment on those who had actively rebelled against the king. They would be slaughtered. When Jesus returns, his enemies will be judged and sentenced to eternity without him.

JESUS RIDES INTO JERUSALEM ON A DONKEY / 19:28-44 / 183

Until this point, Luke presented a sampling of Jesus' ministry—his teaching and his miracles. But with this description of Jesus' final entry into Jerusalem, Luke, just like the other Gospel writers, slowed down his narrative, taking time to present the powerful details of Jesus' final week leading up to the cross.

19:28-31 Jesus and the disciples approached Bethphage and Bethany, two towns about one mile apart, situated on the Mount of Olives to the east of Jerusalem. Bethany was the home of his friends Mary, Martha, and Lazarus whom Jesus had visited before (10:38; see also John 11:1). When Jesus spoke these words, they were probably in Bethphage, sending two disciples to bring a colt. By this time Jesus was extremely well known. Everyone coming to Jerusalem for Passover had heard of him, and, for a time, the popular mood was favorable toward him. The Lord needs it was all the disciples had to say, and the colt's owners gladly turned their animal over to them. The specification that this be a colt that has never been ridden is significant in light of the ancient rule that only animals that had not been used for ordinary purposes were appropriate for sacred purposes (Numbers 19:2; Deuteronomy 21:3; 1 Samuel 6:7).

19:32-35 The two disciples did as they were told, and found the colt exactly as they were told. Donkeys and colts were valuable; what the disciples did amounted to coming along and taking someone's car. But they said what Jesus told them to say. Mark wrote that Jesus also said the colt would be returned (Mark 11:3). The owners let the colt go, and the disciples brought it to Jesus. In Matthew, a donkey and a colt are mentioned (Matthew 21:2). This was the same event, but Matthew focused on the prophecy in Zechariah 9:9 which indicates a donkey and a colt, thus affirming Jesus' royalty. The disciples then threw their garments over the colt, making a seat for Jesus. With this act of entering Jerusalem on a donkey's colt, Jesus was fulfilling prophecy and affirming his messianic royalty. He came in royal fashion, not as a warring king on a horse or in a chariot, but as a gentle and peaceable king on a donkey's colt.

19:36-37 The custom of spreading coats on the ground ahead of a royal personage can also be seen in 2 Kings 9:12-13. This was Sunday of the week that Jesus would be crucified, and the great Passover festival was about to begin. Jews would come to Jerusalem from all over the Roman world during this week-long celebration to remember the great Exodus from Egypt (see Exodus 12:37-51). Many in the crowd had heard of or had seen Jesus and were hoping he would come to the Temple (John 11:55-57). People lined the roads, and Jesus already had a crowd of followers who, when they saw what he was doing, began to shout and sing as they walked along. According to the other Gospels, many others joined the celebration of praise. The Gospel of John (12:13) also describes the people cutting down branches from the trees, probably from olive or fig trees, to wave in welcome.

19:38 The expression “Bless the King who comes in the name of the Lord” may have been recited as part of the Passover tradition—as a blessing given by the people in Jerusalem to the visiting pilgrims (see Psalm 118:25-26). The people lined the road, praising God, waving branches, and throwing their cloaks in front of the colt as it passed before them. “Long live the King” was the meaning behind their joyful shouts because they knew that Jesus was intentionally fulfilling prophecy.

19:39-40 The Pharisees thought that the crowd’s words were sacrilegious and blasphemous. They asked Jesus to keep his people quiet. But Jesus said that if the people were quiet, the stones would burst into cheers (see Habakkuk 2:11).

19:41-42 Only Luke recorded this lament by Jesus. In contrast to the great joy of the crowd, the man on the donkey began to cry at the sight of the city. The name of the city has “peace” as part of its meaning (Hebrews 7:2), but the people of the city did not know what would bring them peace. The “city of peace” was blind to the “Prince of Peace” (Isaiah 9:6). If the people had known what was truly happening and had recognized it for what it was, they could have found peace. But the Jewish leaders had rejected their Messiah (19:39, 47); they had refused God’s offer of salvation in Jesus Christ when they were visited by God himself. Now the truth would be hidden, and soon their nation would suffer.

19:43-44 About forty years after Jesus said these words, they came true. In A.D. 66, the Jews revolted against Roman control. Three years later Titus, son of the Emperor Vespasian, was sent to crush the rebellion. Six hundred thousand Jews were killed during Titus’s onslaught. This would occur as judgment because though some of the people believed (such as the disciples and other faithful followers), most had rejected the opportunity God offered them. But God did not turn away from the Jewish people who obeyed him. He continues to offer salvation to both Jews and Gentiles.

JESUS CLEARS THE TEMPLE AGAIN / 19:45-48 / 184

Jesus directly confronted those who dared to try to make an exorbitant profit in the very Temple of God. He had expelled these people before (John 2:12-25). Here Jesus again stood for what was right, confronting those who dared to participate in wickedness under the guise of religiosity.

19:45-46 This is the second time that Jesus cleared the Temple and drove out the merchants from their stalls. These “merchants” were the people who sold goods to worshipers. Jesus told them, in no uncertain terms, why he was so angry and why he acted as he did in throwing these merchants out of the Temple. He quoted from Isaiah 56:7 explaining that God’s purpose was for the Temple to be a place of prayer, but the merchants had turned it into a den of thieves. Their treatment of pilgrims who had traveled and needed to count on them for service, their exorbitant rates, and their cheating of the customers had made them no better than thieves hiding out together in a “den.” But this “den” was God’s Temple—no wonder Jesus was angry.

19:47-48 During his last week on earth, Jesus was still busy—teaching daily in the Temple. He traveled into the city each morning, then retired out to the environs, perhaps to the home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus in Bethany (Matthew 21:17; Mark 11:11). Jesus had many enemies who kept looking for a way to kill him. These enemies were the Jewish religious leaders themselves—the people who, above everyone else, should have been the first to recognize and rejoice in the arrival of their Messiah. The leaders of the people probably included wealthy leaders in politics, commerce, and law. They had several reasons for wanting to get rid of Jesus. He had damaged business in the Temple by driving the merchants out. In addition, he was preaching against injustice, and his teachings often favored the poor over the rich. Further, his great popularity was in danger of attracting Rome’s attention, and the leaders of Israel wanted as little as possible to do with Rome.

Despite their plans, however, these people could not do anything. The man they wanted to kill came daily to the Temple, but he was far too popular with the people.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS CHALLENGE JESUS' AUTHORITY / 20:1-8 / 189

With Jesus' entrance into Jerusalem (19:28-44), Luke began an extended section (19:45–21:4) that highlights the growing controversy between Jesus and the Jewish religious leaders. In this first clash after Jesus' cleansing of the Temple, the representatives of the Jewish council struck at the heart of the issue between them: Who had the authority? Jesus was implicitly asserting his own authority over the Temple, a challenge to the council's power.

20:1-2 Soon after Jesus' cleansing of the Temple, Jesus returned to the Temple to teach and preach. While he was there, a delegation of leading priests, teachers of religious law, and other leaders stopped Jesus. These were representative of the three groups that made up the Jewish ruling council (Jesus already had predicted that the Jewish religious authorities would reject him, see 9:22). Apparently the council had met after the clearing of the Temple, enraged by Jesus' actions, but unable to decide how to handle him. They then sent this representative group to question Jesus regarding his actions, hoping he would say something treasonous or blasphemous. They demanded to know by whose authority he had thrown out the merchants from the Temple.

20:3-4 Jesus countered the Jewish religious teachers' question with a question. Jesus knew that the religious leaders' attitude toward John the Baptist would reveal their attitude toward him. With this question, Jesus was implying that his authority came from the same source as John the Baptist's. John had called the people to repentance, and the people had expressed their repentance through baptism, a symbol of the cleansing of one's sins. So Jesus asked these religious leaders what they thought: Did John's baptism come from heaven, thus, from God, or was it merely human?

20:5-8 These leaders weren't interested in Jesus' authority or in the truth. They really didn't want an answer; instead, they wanted to trap Jesus. But they found themselves looking completely foolish. If they answered that John's baptism had come from heaven (with God's authority), then they would be incriminating themselves for not listening to John. On the other hand, if they rejected John as having any divine authority and said that his baptism was merely human, they would infuriate the crowd. So they remained silent, but their silence spoke volumes. Because they refused to answer, Jesus said that he too would refuse to answer their question. By his silence, Jesus had already answered. His authority was the same as John the Baptist's. John was clearly a prophet of God, and Jesus also was commissioned by God to call all who would listen to him.

JESUS TELLS THE PARABLE OF THE EVIL FARMERS / 20:9-19 / 191

After his confrontation of the Jewish religious leaders, Jesus told a parable that revealed the spiritual realities behind his conflict with them. The parable indirectly answered their question about his authority, showed them that he knew about their plan to kill him, and revealed the judgment that awaited them.

20:9 The characters in this story are easily identified. The owner of the vineyard is God; the vineyard is Israel; the tenant farmers are the religious leaders; the servants are the prophets and priests God sent to Israel; the son is the Messiah, Jesus; the others are the Gentiles. The comparison of Israel to a vineyard is common in the Old Testament (Psalm 80:8-13; Isaiah 5:1-7; Jeremiah 12:10; Hosea 10:1). It pictures God's work (someone has to plant a vineyard) and patient care in tending and caring for his people.

Jesus described a common business method of the time—an absentee owner who hired tenant farmers to care for the fields and crops. The tenant farmers paid their “rent” by giving a portion of the crop to the landowner, who would send servants at harvest time to collect it. Tensions often arose; records exist of bitter disputes between landowners and their tenants.

20:10-12 When the grape harvest came, the landowner sent one of his servants to collect the “rent”—namely his share of the crop. The “servants” represented the prophets and priests whom God had sent over the years to the nation of Israel. The picture of angry farmers beating the landowner's servants and sending them on their way without any “rent” pictured the religious leaders who were entrusted with the care of the vineyard. Instead of listening to the prophets, they had treated them shamefully and sent them away, stubbornly refusing to listen. Some had been beaten (Jeremiah 26:7-11; 38:1-28), and some had been killed (tradition says that Isaiah was killed; John the Baptist had been killed, Matthew 14:1-12), and some had been stoned (2 Chronicles 24:21). Jesus was reminding the religious leaders that God's prophets often had been ridiculed and persecuted by God's people.

20:13 The fact that this landowner had not already punished the farmers for their treatment of his servants shows a man of great patience. This pictures God, who has been very patient with his people over the centuries, even when they stubbornly refused to listen to his messages through the prophets. So the landowner sent his son to collect the fruit of the vineyard in hopes that the farmers would give him due honor and respect. This “son” refers to Jesus (see also 3:22; 9:35). With these words, Jesus implicitly answered the religious leaders’ question regarding the source of his authority (20:2). Like the son in this parable, Jesus had been sent on behalf of the Father. He was acting with God the Father’s authority. The son had been sent to the stubborn and rebellious nation of Israel to win them back to God.

20:14-16 The historical situation behind this section reflects the law that property would go to anyone in possession of it when the master died. The tenants probably thought that the arrival of the son (the heir) meant that his father had died. They reasoned, therefore, that if they killed the son, they could claim the property (the estate) as their own. So they murdered the son. With these words, Jesus was revealing to the religious leaders his knowledge of their desire to kill him.

Jesus asked his listeners what they thought the owner would do to his tenant farmers when he found out that they had killed his son. The answer: He will come and kill those tenants. Over hundreds of years, Israel’s kings and religious leaders had rejected God’s prophets—beating, humiliating, and killing them. Most recently, John the Baptist had been rejected as a prophet by Israel’s leaders. Finally Jesus, the beloved Son of God, already rejected by the religious leaders, would be killed. Jesus explained that the Jewish leaders would be punished for his death because in rejecting the messengers and the Son, they were rejecting God himself.

Jesus added that not only would the wicked tenant farmers be killed, but that the owner would lease the vineyard to others. God’s judgment on the Jewish people who rejected him would result in the transfer of the privileges of ownership “to others,” namely, the Gentiles. Jesus was speaking of the beginning of the Christian church among the Gentiles.

20:17-18 Quoting Psalm 118:22, Jesus showed the unbelieving leaders that even their rejection of the Messiah had been prophesied in Scripture. Psalm 118 was a key part of the Passover Service—all the pilgrims coming to Passover would recite 118:25-26 as they came to Jerusalem. The religious leaders had been reciting this passage for years without understanding or applying it (see John 5:39-40). In Jesus’ quotation, the “son” of the parable became the stone of this prophecy; the “tenant farmers” of the parable became the builders. Rejecting the cornerstone was dangerous. A person could be tripped or crushed (judged and punished).

Jesus used this metaphor to show that one stone can affect people different ways, depending on how they relate to it (see Isaiah 8:14-15; 28:16; Daniel 2:34, 44-45). Ideally they will build on it; many, however, will trip over it. Although Jesus had been rejected by many of his people, he would become the “cornerstone” of his new building, the church (see Acts 4:11 and 1 Peter 2:6-7).

20:19 This delegation that had been sent to demand answers from Jesus (20:1-2) realized that Jesus was pointing at them—they were the farmers in the story. They would have arrested Jesus on the spot, but he was still surrounded by crowds of eager listeners, and they were afraid there would be a riot. There was nothing to do but go away to gather new ideas and think of new questions to try to trap Jesus.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS QUESTION JESUS ABOUT PAYING TAXES / 20:20-26 / 193

Although the religious leaders had been outwitted by Jesus once (20:1-8), they did not give up. They returned with another carefully thought-out question to trap him. This new question related to taxation: to pay or not to pay taxes to Rome. If Jesus answered in the affirmative either way, he would be in a predicament. It was a perfect trap, or so the Pharisees thought.

20:20 The religious leaders continued their attempts to get Jesus to say something that could be reported to the authorities. They sent secret agents pretending to be honest men. These men addressed Jesus as if he were a mediator, inviting him to settle their dispute regarding whether or not to pay taxes to Caesar.

20:21-22 Pretending to be honest men (20:20), these spies flattered Jesus before asking him a question that was a hot topic in Palestine at the time, “Is it right to pay taxes to the Roman government or not?” Obviously it was lawful according to Caesar, but was it lawful according to God’s law? The Jews hated having to pay taxes to Rome. If Jesus said they should pay taxes, they would call him a traitor to their nation and their religion. But if he said they should not, the religious leaders could report him to Rome as a rebel. The crowd waited expectantly for Jesus’ answer. Jesus’ questioners thought they had him this time, but he outwitted them again.

20:23-25 Jesus asked someone in the crowd to show him a Roman coin. This would have been a silver coin with a picture of the reigning Caesar on it. The tax paid to Rome was paid in these coins. The title referred to Caesar as divine and as “chief priest.” The Caesars were worshiped as gods by the pagans, so the claim to divinity on the coin itself repulsed the Jews. In addition, Caesar’s image on the coins was a constant reminder of Israel’s subjection to Rome.

Jesus’ answer surprised everyone: “Give to Caesar what belongs to him. But everything that belongs to God must be given to God.” Having a coin meant being part of that country, so citizens should acknowledge the authority of Caesar and pay for the benefits accorded to them by his empire (for example, peace and an efficient road system). They would lose much and gain little if they refused to pay Caesar’s taxes (see Romans 13:1-7; 1 Timothy 2:1-6; 1 Peter 2:13-17).

Paying the taxes, however, did not have to mean submission to the divinity claimed by the emperor through the inscription on the coins. Caesar had the right to claim their tax money, but he had no claim on their souls. The Jews had a responsibility to give to God what was his. While they lived in the Roman world, the Jews had to face the dual reality of subjection to Rome and responsibility to God. Jesus explained that they could do both if they kept their priorities straight. The tax would be paid as long as Rome held sway over Judea, but God had rights on eternity and on their lives.

20:26 In his reply, Jesus did not show rebellion against Caesar, nor did he show any disloyalty to God and his law. This answer amazed and silenced Jesus’ questioners. Their amazement showed that Jesus had been victorious over his opponents. They had tried to trap him, but he stayed one step ahead of them (see also 20:39-40).

RELIGIOUS LEADERS QUESTION JESUS ABOUT THE RESURRECTION / 20:27-40 / 194

Jesus had already evaded two traps laid by the Jewish religious leaders—one involving his authority and then one on Roman taxation. They were determined to embarrass Jesus. The Sadducees used a standard theological question they had often used to discredit the idea of a resurrection, which was a belief of the Pharisees. Jesus rose to this occasion, as well, and he exposed the Sadducees’ ignorance of the Scripture and of God’s infinite power.

20:27 No sooner had one delegation withdrawn from Jesus in amazement than another appeared to take up the cause. The Sadducees were a group of conservative Jewish religious leaders who honored only the Pentateuch—

Genesis through Deuteronomy—as Scripture. They did not believe in a resurrection of the dead because they could find no mention of it in those books.

20:28 In the law, Moses had written that if a man were to die without a son, his unmarried brother (or nearest male relative) should marry the widow and produce children. The first son of this marriage would be considered the heir of the dead man (Deuteronomy 25:5-6). The main purpose of the instruction was to produce an heir and guarantee that the family would not lose their land. The book of Ruth gives an example of this law in operation (Ruth 3:1–4:12; see also Genesis 38:1-26). This law, called “levirate” marriage, protected the widow (in that culture widows usually had no means to support themselves) and allowed the family line to continue.

20:29-33 In order to show what they perceived as the absurdity of believing in the resurrection, the Sadducees offered a hypothetical situation in which the same woman married and outlived seven brothers, but never had any children. This particular woman would have had a real problem because when she and her seven husbands would be resurrected, the Sadducees asked, “Whose wife will she be?” Their problem lay in their view of resurrection, and the God who, throughout Scripture, promised it. The Sadducees had brought God down to their level and decided that because they could not make sense out of resurrection life, God couldn’t raise the dead. They did not consider for a moment that God, Creator and Sustainer of all life, could not only raise the dead, but create entirely new lives that would be different from what people had on this earth.

20:34-36 Jesus pointed out that there are differences between life in this age and life in the age to come. The resurrection life in heaven will not be merely a continuation of life on this earth. Here in this world, people marry and are given in marriage. However, those who do get to heaven will find that their lives are not merely extended into eternity, but that everything is different. They won’t be marrying or being given in marriage (as per the Sadducees question). They will never die again. Believers anticipate a resurrection to a life of no more tears or sorrow (Revelation 21:4).

In the new heaven and new earth, marriage will no longer be needed. Inheritance laws and property rights will be irrelevant. It is important to human beings in this world, but it will not be a needed feature of the Kingdom. In addition, marriage is needed in this world in order to produce children and thereby continue the human race. This also will not be needed in the Kingdom because no one can die there. Death will have been banished and will not affect people in the Kingdom (Revelation 20:14).

Believers will be like angels regarding marriage. Having been raised to new life, those in heaven will no longer be governed by physical laws but will be like angels; that is, believers will share the immortal and exalted nature of angels, living above physical needs.

Jesus was not teaching that people will not recognize their spouses in heaven, thereby dissolving the eternal aspect of marriage. Nor was he doing away with sexual differences or teaching that people will be asexual beings after death. Nor was he teaching that the angels are asexual. Little can be learned about sex and marriage in heaven from this one statement by Jesus. His point was simply that people must not think of the next life as an extension of life as they now know it. Relationships in this life are limited by time, death, and sin; in the new heaven and new earth they will be different from here and now.

20:37-38 After addressing their question about marriage, Jesus answered the Sadducees' assumption about the resurrection which was the real issue. Jesus based his answer on the writings of Moses, an authority the Sadducees respected. Even Moses proved that there is a resurrection for when he wrote about the burning bush, he wrote of the patriarchs as though they were still alive (Exodus 3:6). Thus, from God's perspective, they were alive. God had a continuing relationship with these men because of the truth of the resurrection. In Matthew and Mark, the entire quote from Exodus 3:6 is used, with God saying, "I am the God of . . ."—with the argument being that God, speaking in the present tense, was affirming his continuing relationship with these men. Therefore he is the God of the living, not the dead. God continues his relationship with them because they are all alive to him. Death separates people from their loved ones on earth, but it cannot separate believers from God.

20:39-40 The teachers of religious law (Pharisees), who also had been attempting to trick Jesus, had to congratulate Jesus on this answer to the Sadducees. This question had probably stumped the Pharisees for some time, and at last the Sadducees had been duly silenced. At this time, the questions ended, for no one dared to ask any more.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS CANNOT ANSWER JESUS' QUESTION / 20:41-44 / 196

Jesus had already emerged victorious over his opponents on three separate occasions (20:1-8, 20-26, 27-40). Jesus took the offense, challenging his opponents with a question of his own: Who is the Son of David? With this question, Jesus identified the weakness of the religious teachers' thinking. They had not sufficiently examined what the Scripture said about the coming Messiah.

20:41-44 Jesus asked the leaders a question about the Messiah's identity. He turned to Psalm 110:1 and asked how the Messiah is said to be the son of David. Jesus quoted these words, explaining what the religious leaders should have understood. David wrote, "The Lord said to my Lord." The first "Lord" is Yahweh, the Hebrew name for God the Father. The second "Lord" in Hebrew is Adonai and refers to David speaking of the coming Messiah as his "Lord." The phrase, sit in honor at my right hand, means that the Messiah would sit at the right side of God's throne, the place of highest honor and authority in God's coming Kingdom. "Until I humble your enemies" describes the final conquering of sin and evil. There is an inherent problem in the prophecy because it makes no sense that David would call the Messiah "Lord" when the Lord was also his "son." The only way to understand this is to see the Messiah as more than a mere human being (see Romans 1:2-4). David himself didn't think the Messiah would be just one of his descendants; instead, David, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, said that the Messiah would be God. The answer to Jesus' question is that David was clearly saying the Messiah was his Lord. By this statement, Jesus was revealing his divine identity. The divine Messiah had, indeed, come in human form; he was standing among them.

JESUS WARNS AGAINST THE RELIGIOUS LEADERS / 20:45-47 / 197

Luke, like the other Synoptic writers (see Matthew 23:1-12; Mark 12:38-40), concluded this section, which describes the confrontation between Jesus and the religious leaders (19:45–21:4), with Jesus' severe condemnation of the teachers of religious law. Their concern for outward appearances over the condition of their own hearts, especially their total inattention to justice and mercy, was despicable in God's eyes.

20:45-47 The teachers of religious law loved the benefits associated with their position, and they sometimes cheated the poor in order to get even more benefits. Jesus warned his followers to beware of them. They were supposed to be just what their title implied—teachers who led people into the truth of God; instead, they loved the "perks" of their position and did just the opposite. They led people away from God.

The reference to parading in flowing robes and being bowed to in the marketplaces pictured these religious leaders who went through the market in their long robes receiving bows of respect from everyone. These actions were motivated by vanity. They loved the seats of honor in the synagogues and at banquets because those seats were reserved for the most important people. The accusation of cheating widows out of their property pictured the teachers' abuse of their trusted position. Because they received no pay for their services, they depended on the hospitality of devout Jews. It was considered an act of piety for people to help them. But some of these religious men were using their position to defraud the gullible. They were in a position to exploit people, cheating the poor out of everything they had, and taking advantage of the rich. How could they deserve anything but condemnation! Their lengthy public prayers, Jesus said, amounted to no more than a cover up. Their long prayers were not conversations with the Lord, but were merely ploys to make people think they were especially holy. Through their pious actions they hoped to gain status, recognition, and respect.

The punishment for these leaders would be especially severe because as teachers they were responsible for shaping the faith of the people. Jesus solemnly announced, "Their punishment will be the greater."

A POOR WIDOW GIVES ALL SHE HAS / 21:1-4 / 200

After warning his disciples about the greed of the teachers of religious law (20:46), Jesus pointed out a poor widow as an example of extraordinary faith.

21:1-2 Jesus spent much time during his last week on earth in the Temple, teaching, preaching, and dealing with religious leaders (19:45–20:47). At some point during one of his days there, Jesus watched people put their gifts into the collection box for the Temple treasury. Jesus was in the area of the Temple called the court of women. The treasury was there or in an adjoining walkway. Seven boxes were in this area. Worshipers could deposit their Temple tax in these boxes. In addition, six boxes more collected freewill offerings like the one this woman gave. A lot of money came into the Temple treasury during Passover.

The rich people put their gifts into the treasury—large gifts that clattered into the boxes. Then a poor widow came and dropped in two pennies. As a widow, she had few resources for earning money, and may have been without financial support. But she put her coins into the freewill offering box, meaning that this was not a required tax, but a gift.

21:3-4 Jesus judged the poor woman's gift not by how much she gave, but by how much she had left after giving. The rich did well to give out of their abundance, but they had plenty left. Yet she gave everything and therefore had given more than all the rest of them. The widow could have kept back one coin, but she willingly gave both coins. She gave everything and trusted God to care for her. Jesus wanted the disciples to see this lesson in total surrender of self, commitment to God, and willingness to trust in God's provision. For more on giving, see 1 Corinthians 16:1-4; 2 Corinthians 8:1-5.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT THE FUTURE / 21:5-24 / 201

A disciple's casual remark concerning the splendor of the Temple gave Jesus the opportunity to make an alarming prophecy about the Temple and the end times. This section, along with 17:20-37, parallel the Olivet discourse given in Matthew 24:1-25 and Mark 13:1-23. Jesus spoke of the end times in order to realign his disciples' priorities and to caution them about being deceived.

21:5-6 Jesus and the disciples would leave Jerusalem every evening of that final week and walk the couple of miles back to Bethany. As they left the city on one of those evenings, some of the disciples commented on the beauty of the Temple itself. The Temple that the disciples were admiring was not Solomon's Temple—that had been destroyed by the Babylonians in the seventh century B.C. This Temple had been built by Ezra after the return from exile in the sixth century B.C., desecrated by the Seleucids in the second century B.C., reconsecrated by the Maccabees soon afterward, and enormously expanded by Herod the Great over a forty-six-year period. It was a beautiful, imposing structure with a significant history. Although no one knows exactly what it looked like, it must have been magnificent, for in its time it was considered one of the architectural wonders of the world.

Jesus used the disciples' comments about the Temple to give them a prophetic statement about the fate of the Temple: it will be completely demolished. This happened only a few years later when the Romans sacked Jerusalem in A.D. 70. The Romans fulfilled Jesus' words to the letter. After fire raged through the Temple, Emperor Titus ordered the leveling of the whole area so that no part of the original walls or buildings remained. Titus considered this punishment for the Jewish rebellion in A.D. 66. The Temple has never been rebuilt; the stones that we can see today, commonly called the "wailing wall" are part of the foundation. Truly the Temple was leveled.

21:7-9 The disciples' question had two parts. They wanted to know when the destruction would take place and if there would be any sign ahead of time. Jesus first answered the disciples' second question about signs. Jesus warned them against false messiahs. He knew that if the disciples looked for signs, they would be susceptible to deception. Many false prophets would display counterfeit signs of spiritual power and authority. Jesus predicted that before his return, many believers would be misled by false teachers coming in his name—that is, claiming to be the Messiah. Jesus said clearly, "Don't believe them." According to Scripture, the one clear sign of Christ's return will be his unmistakable appearance in the clouds that will be seen by all people (Matthew 24:30; Revelation 1:7). Believers never have to wonder whether a certain person is the Messiah. When Jesus returns, believers will know beyond a doubt because he will be evident to all.

Just as false messiahs and religious frauds come and go, so do political and natural crises. However, these do not signal the end of the world. The disciples probably assumed that the Temple would be destroyed only at the end of the age as part of God establishing his new Kingdom. Jesus taught that horrible events would happen, but the end won't follow immediately. Believers should not panic. God will not lose control of his creation, and his promises will come true.

21:10-11 Jesus' words indicated that there would be a span of time before the end of the age and the coming Kingdom. First, much suffering would occur as a part of life on earth, including wars and natural disasters. These, along with miraculous signs in the heavens, will mean only that history is moving toward a single, final, God-planned goal—the creation of a new earth and a new Kingdom (Revelation 21:1-3). Today we must guard against preoccupation with signs, such as frequency of earthquakes. Instead, we must focus on doing God's will.

21:12 Without hesitation, Jesus explained that his followers would not escape suffering. Persecution soon began; Luke recorded such in the book of Acts. Jesus didn't say it, but the disciples would learn that loyalty to Christ meant separation from Judaism. Not only would Jesus' followers be in trouble with Jews, they would also find themselves standing trial before Gentile kings and governors because of being Jesus' followers.

21:13-15 These trials in the synagogues and before Gentile rulers would give the disciples an opportunity to testify about Jesus. Standing before Jewish or Roman leadership would be intimidating, but Jesus explained that they could trust him to give them words and a wisdom that would astound their opponents. Notice that Jesus did not guarantee acquittal. James, one of the disciples here listening to Jesus, would be killed because of his faith (Acts 12:1-2).

21:16-19 Not only would the disciples face hatred from religious and civil leaders, as well as their own families, they also would be hated by everyone. For Jews to convert to Christianity would soon become very dangerous because they would be hated and ostracized. Jesus' words also looked forward to the time when hatred of Christians would again occur. Jesus gave a promise however: “But not a hair of your head will perish! By standing firm, you will win your souls.” This does not mean that standing firm earns salvation; instead, it marks those who are already saved. Assurance of salvation will keep believers going through the times of persecution.

What assurance was Jesus giving in light of the eventual martyrdom of James and Peter? Some have taken the reality of the words about being put to death (21:16) and not a hair of one's head perishing to mean that some will be taken and others will be preserved. But this seems to nullify the whole tone of assurance. Most likely, “not a hair of your head will perish” refers to ultimate deliverance and salvation in Christ's Kingdom. Some will suffer and some will die, but none of Jesus' followers will suffer spiritual or eternal loss. On earth, everyone will die, but believers in Jesus will be saved for eternal life.

21:20 Luke 21:20-24 refers not to the end times (the warning for that is recorded in 17:30-36), but to the coming destruction of the city of Jerusalem that would occur in A.D. 70. The verb surrounded pictures the coming siege of the city. Jesus' words in the next verses explain what the people should do quickly before the city would be completely surrounded and put under siege.

21:21-22 With the armies coming to surround the city, the people who are outside should flee to the hills, those in the city should escape, those in the country should not enter the city. This was the opposite of the usual advice—generally, in time of war, the people outside would go to the city for protection. But not this time. The time of God's vengeance will have arrived; the city would face the full punishment for its history of unfaithfulness and rebellion against God.

Many of Jesus' followers would live to see this happen. The Jewish historian Josephus wrote that from A.D. 66, Jewish Zealots clashed with the Romans. Many people realized that rebellion would bring the wrath of the Empire, so they fled to Pella, a town located in the mountains across the Jordan River. As Jesus had said, this proved to be their protection, for when the Roman army swept in, the nation and its capital city were destroyed.

21:23-24 Jesus expressed sympathy and concern for those who would have difficulty fleeing because they were pregnant or had small children. These people literally would be running for their lives from the great distress. If they didn't get away, they would be brutally killed by the sword or sent away as captives. According to the historian Josephus, ninety-seven thousand people were taken prisoner during the war and over one million were killed.

Jerusalem, the holy city, will be conquered and trampled down by the Gentiles until the age of the Gentiles comes to an end. These would have been horrifying words to any Jew. The "age of the Gentiles" began with Babylon's destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. and the exile of the Jewish people. No longer an independent nation, Israel was under the control of Gentile rulers. In Jesus' day, Israel was governed by the Roman Empire, and a Roman general would "trample" the city in A.D. 70. Jesus was saying that the domination of God's people by his enemies would continue until God decided to end it. The "times of the Gentiles" refers not just to the repeated destructions of Jerusalem, but also to the continuing and mounting persecution of God's people until the end.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT HIS RETURN / 21:25-33 / 202

After predicting Jerusalem's destruction, Jesus described his second coming (21:27). It will be accompanied by all kinds of cosmic signs, instilling terror in those who are unprepared for the end but inspiring hope in those who are anticipating his return. Don't be caught unprepared; commit yourself to follow Jesus wholeheartedly and to pray fervently (21:34-36).

21:25 The disciples had asked if there would be a sign (21:7); here Jesus gave the answer. Jesus spoke of his return in full glory without any of the limitations he had taken on by becoming human. Jesus was not speaking of his immediate resurrection but of his eventual, glorious return. Some of the signs would be in nature, for nature itself would experience change. As taught in Romans 8 and 2 Peter 3, the entire universe had become involved in humanity's fallen predicament; thus, the entire universe will be changed when humanity is changed. There will be a variety of changes—the sun going dark, the moon not being seen, stars falling, heavenly bodies being shaken (see Matthew 24:29). Roaring seas shows that nature will be in chaos from one end of the earth to the other (see Psalm 46:2-4; Isaiah 17:12). These words also recall the words of the prophets (Isaiah 13:10; Joel 2:10-11). What Jesus described here, John saw in his vision (Revelation 6:12-14).

21:26 Persecutions and natural disasters will cause great sorrow in the world—people will falter. When believers see these events happening, they should realize that the return of their Messiah is near and that they can look forward to his reign of justice and peace. Rather than being terrified by what is happening in the world, believers should confidently await the Lord's return, an event that will shake the very heavens.

21:27 The signs will occur, and afterwards everyone will see the Son of Man arrive on the clouds with power and great glory. Jesus' return will be unmistakable. To the Jews, clouds signified divine presence (Exodus 13:21; 19:9; Psalm 97:1-2; Daniel 7:13). Jesus will return as the powerful, glorious, and divine Son of Man. There will be no doubt as to his identity.

21:28 When believers see these events happening, they will know that the return of their Messiah is near, and they can look forward to his reign of justice and peace. Rather than being terrified by what is happening in the world, believers should confidently await Christ's return to bring justice and restoration to his people.

21:29-31 Here Jesus answered the disciples' other question about "when" the events would occur (21:7). People knew when summer was coming by looking at the fig tree. Seeing the dry, brittle branches becoming tender, filled with sap, and beginning to bud, people knew that summer was near. Just as people can interpret the seasons by watching the signs in nature, so they can know that when they see the events he has been describing taking place, then the Kingdom of God is near. The second coming of Jesus is both certain and near. The fulfillment of Jesus' prophecy would assure the disciples that the other prophecies he had given regarding the end times would also come true.

21:32 There are three main views of the meaning of this generation will not pass: (1) It refers only to those alive at the time Jesus spoke and who still would be alive at the destruction of Jerusalem; (2) it refers only to those who would experience the end times; (3) it refers both to the destruction of Jerusalem and the end times—the destruction of Jerusalem contains within itself the elements of the final end times and thus serves a precursor. The Greek word for "generation" is genea; it refers both to those living at a given time as well as to race or lineage (therefore, Jesus would have been speaking of the Jewish race). This makes the third view most likely.

21:33 Everything may change, and eventually everything will disappear. But one truth is absolutely, eternally certain: Jesus' words will remain forever. Everything he said will come true.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT REMAINING WATCHFUL / 21:34-38 / 203

Jesus concluded his teaching on the end times (21:5-38) with a grave warning to his disciples. They were to guard against letting the worries of this life or the pleasures of the world distract them from the truth—especially, the truth that the Son of Man would return, in judgment. They were to be always prepared for his return. They could be fully prepared by praying that God would help them persevere in faith until Christ's return.

21:34-36 Believers know that Jesus will indeed return. But because no one knows when this great event will occur (Matthew 24:36), Jesus told his followers to watch out, and not let the temptations or worries of this life distract them from being ready. That day will come unexpectedly, and it will come upon everyone—no exceptions. There will be no opportunity for last-minute repentance or bargaining. The choice that each person has already made will determine his or her eternal destiny.

For Jesus' followers to keep a constant watch and pray pictures an attitude toward life that seeks to stay away from evil and to follow and obey Jesus. Both watching and praying are volitional actions—as believers await Jesus' return, they work to further his Kingdom. Only with a focus on him can believers escape the horrors to come. Only through obedience to him will they be able to stand before the Son of Man when he returns.

21:37-38 During this final week on the earth, Jesus went every day to the Temple to teach the people (samples of that teaching have been recorded in chapters 20–21). He left the city in the evening and spent the night on the Mount of Olives, probably in the city of Bethany (Matthew 21:17). He returned the next morning, and already crowds of people had gathered to hear him.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS PLOT TO KILL JESUS / 22:1-2 / 207

Luke began the final section of his Gospel (22:1–24:53) with a short statement of the evil intentions of the chief priests and the teachers of religious law. They were diligently looking for an opportunity to have Jesus arrested and executed.

22:1 All Jewish males over the age of twelve were required to go to Jerusalem for Passover. This would be followed by a seven-day festival called the Festival of Unleavened Bread (Exodus 12:15-20). For these festivals, Jews from all over the Roman Empire would converge on Jerusalem to celebrate one of the most important events in their history. Passover took place on one night and at one meal, but the Festival of Unleavened Bread would continue for a week. The Passover celebration commemorated the night the Israelites were freed from Egypt (Exodus 12).

22:2 The religious leaders' opposition to Jesus had grown to such a point that they were actively plotting Jesus' murder. There is a certain irony in seeing these leaders celebrating the Exodus while plotting to kill one of their own at the same time. But they had a problem: they greatly feared the people. Jesus was a popular teacher, and there were many Galileans in the city who would have rioted if Jesus had been taken captive. The religious leaders felt that they had to kill him because of his growing popularity (20:19; 22:6).

JUDAS AGREES TO BETRAY JESUS / 22:3-6 / 208

The Jewish religious leaders had opposed Jesus from the beginning (6:7; 7:29-30; 11:53; 19:47), and their opposition had grown more fierce in the last couple of days (see 20:1-8, 20-26, 27-40). But here the plot thickened. Judas struck a deal with the Jewish council to betray Jesus for money.

22:3-4 The leaders' opportunity to get to Jesus came in a manner they least expected. One of Jesus' twelve disciples came to them willing to act as betrayer and accuser. Luke explained that Satan entered into Judas Iscariot (see also John 12:6; 13:2, 27). Satan assumed that Jesus' death would end Jesus' mission and thwart God's plan. Like Judas, Satan did not know that Jesus' death and resurrection were the most important parts of God's plan all along.

22:5-6 Naturally these leaders were delighted at this unexpected defection from Jesus' ranks. Matthew alone recorded the exact reward—thirty pieces of silver, the price of a slave (Exodus 21:32; Matthew 26:15). The religious leaders had planned to wait until after the Passover to take Jesus, but with Judas's unexpected offer, they accelerated their plans. Judas, in turn, began looking for an opportunity to betray Jesus when there would be no Passover crowds to prevent Jesus' capture and no possibility of a riot.

DISCIPLES PREPARE FOR THE PASSOVER / 22:7-13 / 209

Jesus and the disciples were one group out of thousands needing a place to celebrate the Passover meal in Jerusalem. Jesus' instructions to Peter and John reveal God's complete control over all the events surrounding Jesus' final days on earth. The room where the disciples would celebrate the Last Supper had been prepared (22:12), and Jesus knew every detail, even how Peter and John would find the room (22:10).

22:7-8 Jesus and his disciples had been together long enough to celebrate Passover several times. Disciples often ate this celebratory meal with their teacher, so it was not unusual for Jesus to send Peter and John to prepare the Passover meal for him and his disciples.

22:9-11 Peter and John needed to know where they should go to prepare the Passover meal. They would need a location big enough for Jesus and the twelve disciples. Jesus' answer indicates that he had, in advance, made many of these preparations. Jesus knew that he needed safety and security in order to avoid being taken prematurely. The time in the upper room was a precious time for Jesus and his disciples, as the record of the conversation and teaching shows (recorded in John 13–17).

As the two disciples entered Jerusalem, they would see a man carrying a pitcher of water. Ordinarily, women, not men, went to the well and brought home the water. So this man would have stood out in the crowd. They should follow this man to his house, and the owner of that house would show them to the room where they would eat together. This private location kept the plans secret—even Judas would not know their destination until they arrived.

Tradition says that this may have been Mark's home (the writer of the Gospel). If this speculation is true, the owner of the house would have been Mark's father and one of Jesus' followers. He knew exactly who the Teacher was and probably knew the disciples by sight. The disciples did as Jesus directed and made preparations for the others.

22:12-13 The owner of the house would take Peter and John upstairs to a large room already set up. Many homes had large upstairs rooms, sometimes with stairways both inside and outside the house. This room was large enough to accommodate Jesus and his twelve disciples for a banquet at a large table with reclining couches. It seems that Jesus had prearranged this because he already knew what the room looked like—it was large, furnished, and ready.

As before, when two disciples went to get the donkey for Jesus to ride into Jerusalem (19:29-32), they found everything just as Jesus had said. The preparations for the Passover would have included setting the table, buying and roasting the Passover lamb, and making the unleavened bread, sauces, and other ceremonial food and drink that were a traditional part of every Passover meal.

JESUS AND THE DISCIPLES SHARE THE LAST SUPPER / 22:14-30 / 211

Although the Gospel of John goes into great detail recounting what Jesus said and did during his last Passover meal (see John 13:1–17:26), Luke’s Gospel merely highlights Jesus’ institution of the Lord’s Supper (22:17-20), his prediction of his betrayal (22:21-23), his teaching on service (22:24-27), and his prediction of Peter’s denial (22:31-34).

22:14 Peter and John had been sent ahead to prepare the meal, then at the appointed time to eat, Jesus and the twelve apostles arrived and assumed their seats at the table. The Passover meal was supposed to be eaten in Jerusalem after sunset and finished before midnight. The disciples and Jesus took their places on the reclining couches around the table. During such an important meal as the Passover, everyone would recline at the table, symbolizing the freedom the people had gained after the very first Passover and their subsequent release from slavery in Egypt.

22:15-16 Jesus had looked forward to this quiet time with his disciples. We know from John’s Gospel that a great deal was said during the Passover meal. These would be Jesus’ “last words”—thus words of vital importance to these to whom he was entrusting the carrying on of his work. Jesus knew that his time of suffering would soon come, and that he would not celebrate this event again until it comes to fulfillment in the Kingdom of God. The mention of “fulfillment” reveals the complete and ultimate significance of the entire Passover celebration. While Passover commemorated a past event, it also foreshadowed Jesus’ work on the cross. As the spotless Lamb of God, his blood would be spilled in order to save his people from the penalty of death brought by sin. At that time, those who belong to Christ will sit down at a glorious banquet

(see 13:29; 14:15-24; Isaiah 25:6-8; Revelation 19:7-9). Jesus will not celebrate Passover until God's plan is complete.

22:17-18 This Gospel mentions two cups of wine. In the traditional Passover meal, the wine is served four times. A fourth cup of wine would conclude the meal. Jesus made the vow to abstain from wine before the fourth cup. Jesus reserved the drinking of this cup for the future restoration. Because Jesus would be raised, so his followers will be raised. One day all believers will be together again in God's new Kingdom (see 11:2) The Kingdom of God refers to the time of the complete fulfillment of the rule of God. When Jesus celebrates with his people, all God's promises, power, and authority will be fully realized.

22:19 Jesus took the loaf of unleavened bread, thanked God, and broke it. Because bread was considered a gift from God, it was irreverent to cut bread with a knife, so bread would be torn (or broken) with the hands. Jesus gave the bread to the disciples to eat with the sauce. As he did so, he gave this Passover practice an entirely new meaning. Just as the Passover celebrated deliverance from slavery in Egypt, so the Lord's Supper celebrates deliverance from sin by Christ's death. Jesus told the disciples: "This is my body, given for you." Jesus used literal terms to describe a figurative truth. Just as he had so many times said, "I am" the door, the bread, the light, the vine, so the bread symbolized Jesus' work of salvation on behalf of humanity. That his body would "be given" pictures the cross on which Jesus gave his body in death, allowing it to be broken so that believers could receive life.

Jesus told the disciples to eat the broken bread in remembrance of me. He wanted them to remember his sacrifice, the basis for forgiveness of sins, and also his friendship that they could continue to enjoy through the work of the Holy Spirit.

22:20 As noted above, in a traditional Passover meal, wine is served four times. Most likely, the cup mentioned in this verse was the third cup; the words of 22:17-18 were spoken about the fourth and final cup that Jesus did not drink, vowing first to complete his mission before drinking again of wine. Jesus took this cup and explained, "This wine is the token of God's new covenant to save you."

In Old Testament times, God agreed to forgive people's sins if they brought animals for the priests to sacrifice. When this sacrificial system was inaugurated, the agreement between God and sinful humanity was sealed with the blood of animals (Exodus 24:8). But animal blood did not in itself remove sin (only God can forgive sin), and animal sacrifices had to be repeated day by day and year after year. Jesus instituted a “new covenant” or agreement between humans and God. Under this new covenant, Jesus would die in the place of sinners. Unlike the blood of animals, his blood would seal the agreement between God and people to remove the sins of all who put their faith in him.

22:21 Verses 3-6 revealed that the man who will betray Jesus is Judas Iscariot. Although the other disciples were confused by Jesus’ words, Judas knew what he meant. The betrayer was there among them, joining them in the meal, one of Jesus’ chosen twelve disciples. Jesus’ words allude to Psalm 41:9.

22:22 Jesus’ death was part of the divine purpose; Jesus recognized that. But this does not remove responsibility from the betrayer. Judas allowed his desires to place him in a position where Satan could manipulate him (22:3). In betraying Jesus, Judas made the greatest mistake in history. But the fact that Jesus knew Judas would betray him does not mean that Judas was a puppet of God’s will. Judas made the choice. God knew what that choice would be and confirmed it. Judas didn’t lose his relationship with Jesus; rather, he had never found Jesus in the first place. Judas, by his own choice, betrayed God’s Son into the hands of soldiers, but Judas’s betrayal was part of God’s sovereign plan (Psalm 41:9; Zechariah 11:12-13; Matthew 20:18; 26:20-25; Acts 1:16, 20).

It must be remembered that while Judas betrayed him, all the disciples fled, and Peter even denied ever knowing Jesus. But all those disciples came to Jesus for forgiveness; Judas never took that opportunity. Instead, he killed himself (Matthew 27:3-5).

22:23 Apparently, Judas was not obvious as the betrayer. After all, he was the one the disciples were trusting to keep the money (John 12:4-6). So the disciples began to ask each other which of them would ever do such a thing. Only Judas knew that Jesus had identified him as the betrayer. Judas had been able to keep his treachery a secret from everyone, except the one he would betray.

22:24 The most important event in human history was about to take place, and the disciples were still arguing about their prestige in the Kingdom! The disciples, wrapped up in their own concerns, did not perceive what Jesus had been trying to tell them about his approaching death and resurrection. The disciples had already had this discussion (9:46) and Jesus had told them that they should be like children—the least among them would be the greatest (9:48). As before, they were either ignoring his words about his death, or they were wondering who would take over when Jesus died.

22:25-26 The world's system of leadership varies greatly from leadership in God's Kingdom. But among Christians, the master is to be like a servant. There are different styles of leadership—some lead through public speaking, some through administering, some through relationships. Whatever the style, every Christian leader needs a servant's heart. Jesus immediately corrected his disciples' attitudes, for they would be unable to accomplish their mission if they did not love and serve one another.

22:27 Jesus did not come to sit at the table and be served; he came as a servant. Greatness is determined by servanthood. The truly great leader places his or her needs last, as Jesus exemplified. Because Jesus served, his disciples must also seek to serve, not seeking to occupy better positions. Being a "servant" did not mean occupying a servile position; rather, it meant having an attitude of life that freely attended to others' needs without expecting or demanding anything in return. An attitude of service brings true greatness in God's Kingdom.

22:28-30 The disciples had remained true to Jesus throughout the three years of ministry and the hardships it often entailed (9:58). They had been willing to be servants, sharing the gospel message and healing people through Jesus' power (9:1-6). The words, "I now grant you the right to eat and drink at my table in that Kingdom," refer to Jesus' promise that because of their faith in him, they would enjoy the promised messianic banquet with him. This would happen, not immediately, but in due time. They would receive all that he had promised. In addition, they would also sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. The "thrones" and "tribes" can be understood in different ways. (1) If taken literally, the twelve apostles will rule the tribes of Israel at Christ's return (although this leaves open the question of Judas's betrayal, the addition of Matthias as a disciple to replace Judas, and the role of Paul's apostleship). (2) If not taken literally, then the disciples will oversee the church, which will have a prominent place in God's plan. (3) This may be a promise to Jesus' closest disciples (probably Paul would be included), who will have a special place of authority in God's Kingdom. But the entire church, meaning all believers, is included.

The second understanding (the disciples will oversee the church) seems likely. Jesus Christ gave the Kingdom to the new Israel, his church—all faithful believers. His coming ushered in the Kingdom of God with all believers as its citizens. God may allow persecution to continue for a while, but the destiny of his followers is to possess the Kingdom and live with him forever. The apostles, and all believers, can trust that Jesus will surely accomplish all that he promised.

JESUS PREDICTS PETER'S DENIAL / 22:31-38 / 212

After describing the disciples' glorious roles in the Kingdom of God (22:29-30), Jesus turned to the immediate trials they would face. First, Jesus warned Peter of his future denial. Second, Jesus warned them all to prepare themselves for the coming troubles.

22:31-32 Luke alone recorded these solemn words to Simon (Peter) and described Satan's role in the upcoming difficulties all the disciples, but especially Peter, were soon to face. Satan asked to sift them like wheat, meaning a severe trial. These words recall when Satan asked God for permission to test Job (Job 1:7; 2:2). Satan wanted to crush Simon Peter and the other disciples like grains of wheat. He hoped to find only chaff and blow it away. But Jesus assured Peter that although his faith would falter, it would not be destroyed, "But I have pleaded in prayer for you, Simon, that your faith should not fail. So when you have repented and turned to me again, strengthen and build up your brothers." Jesus prayed for faith, not the removal of the test. Apparently, he knew that Peter would fail; otherwise, there would be no need for Peter to repent. Yet Jesus was confident of this turning back, and also understood that, having faced this trial, Peter would be able to strengthen fellow believers. Indeed, the book of 1 Peter deals entirely with encouragement for believers who are undergoing trials and difficulties. Peter became a source of strength to many who needed it.

22:33-34 Peter seemed to ignore Jesus' words regarding intercession on his behalf and simply answered with bravado. Peter considered his loyalty to exceed anyone's, for he declared that suffering and death could not dissuade him. Peter surely wanted to believe that his loyalty to Jesus would be strong, but Jesus already knew that Peter would initially fail the test. Instead of being the only loyal disciple, Peter would, in fact, prove to be more disloyal than the other ten. Not only would he desert Jesus, but he would also deny three times that he even knew Jesus. And this would happen before the night was over.

22:35-36 Here Jesus would reverse his earlier advice regarding how to travel (9:3). Before, Jesus had sent the disciples out without extra resources, wanting them to depend on God and on other believers to meet their basic needs. The disciples remembered that they did not lack anything during that preaching tour.

But now, Jesus explained, the situation was different. His followers needed to be prepared.

22:37-38 Jesus quoted from Isaiah 53:12 and said that those very words were about to be fulfilled. Jesus would take the place of transgressors, taking their punishment for them. Because of all that was about to happen to Jesus, the disciples would be in danger too. The disciples did not understand. The “fulfillment” of which Jesus spoke referred to his death, but the disciples were busy checking for arms with which to defend themselves. They came up with two swords, hardly enough to defend them all. But Jesus said, “That’s enough,” meaning either that this was not the time to think of using swords or that he’d had enough of their discussion. In either case, mention of a sword vividly communicated the trials they soon would face.

JESUS AGONIZES IN THE GARDEN / 22:39-46 / 223

Throughout his Gospel, Luke highlighted Jesus’ consistent prayer life. This section provides an intimate look at Jesus’ dependence on prayer, right before his greatest hour of need. For Jesus, prayer was not an escape, but a respite; not a way to avoid difficulty, but a way to strengthen himself to endure it.

22:39 The disciples and Jesus finished the Passover meal and the lengthy teaching recorded in John (John 13:31–17:26); then they left the upstairs room and went as usual to the Mount of Olives. Apparently, this was a favorite place for Jesus and the disciples. Up to this point, Jesus and the disciples had been returning each night to Bethany; but this time, Jesus only went as far as the Mount of Olives, located just to the east of Jerusalem. Jesus went up the southwestern slope to an olive grove called Gethsemane.

22:40 Jesus asked the disciples to pray that they would not be overcome by temptation because he knew that he would soon be leaving them. Jesus also knew that they would need extra strength to face the temptations ahead—temptations to run away or to deny their relationship with him. They were about to see Jesus arrested and then crucified. The disciples’ strongest temptation would undoubtedly be to think that they had been deceived.

22:41-42 Jesus walked away, knelt down, and prayed. Jesus exposed his dread of the coming trials, but he also reaffirmed his commitment to do what God wanted. In deep anguish, he asked the Father to let the mission be accomplished some other way not requiring the agony of crucifixion, when he would become sin and be separated from the Father. The cup of suffering meant the terrible agony he knew he would endure—not only the horror of the crucifixion but, even worse, the total separation from God that he would have to experience in order to die for the world’s sins. The “cup” in the Old Testament could be a symbol of blessing (Psalms 16:5; 23:5) or of cursing (Psalms 11:6; 75:8). A whole nation could “drink a cup” of either blessings or curses (Isaiah 51:22; Jeremiah 25:15; 49:12; Ezekiel 23:31-33).

Jesus was not trying to get out of his mission, however. He reaffirmed his desire to do what God wanted by saying, “Yet I want your will, not mine.” Jesus’ human will was distinct from God’s will, but it did not oppose God’s will. His prayer reveals his terrible suffering, but he willingly placed himself in his Father’s hands.

22:43-44 This portion is often bracketed and/or noted in most modern English versions because it does not appear in many of the earliest manuscripts. Here an angel from heaven appeared and strengthened Jesus. Angels are God’s emissaries, sent to do his bidding, ministering to people on earth. God sent an angel to be with Jesus in this horrible time of fear, and perhaps even temptation far worse than what Satan tried. In his humanity, Jesus suffered terribly during this night, battling what he knew had to happen. Jesus was in extreme agony; his prayer reveals his terrible suffering. Luke was speaking metaphorically. Jesus did not sweat blood, but rather the emotional agony he felt caused the perspiration to fall like clotted blood. The focus of this prayer was probably not so much on the painful death but on the agony of being separated from God. God did not take away the “cup,” for the cup was his will. Yet he did take away Jesus’ extreme fear and agitation. Jesus moved serenely through the next several hours, at peace with God, knowing that he was doing his Father’s will.

22:45 Jesus got up at last from praying—how long he struggled in prayer is not revealed, but the hour was late. Matthew wrote that Jesus went back and forth three times between praying and checking on the disciples, each time finding them asleep (Matthew 26:40-45). Jesus needed his friends to support him with their prayers, but they were asleep, exhausted from grief. It had been a long day and the reality of Jesus’ impending death left them emotionally exhausted.

22:46 Jesus told the disciples that this was the time to get up and pray, for very soon they would face the temptation to run away or to deny their relationship with him. They would need extra strength so that these temptations would not overpower them. The word “temptation” can mean testing or trial. Jesus wanted his disciples to pray for strength to go through the coming ordeal.

JESUS IS BETRAYED AND ARRESTED / 22:47-53 / 224

Despite all of Jesus' warnings about the coming trouble, the disciples were unprepared for it when the moment arrived. Judas, formerly one of them, appeared and betrayed Jesus with a kiss. The disciples attempted to defend Jesus, and then fled, as Jesus gave himself over to an illegal arrest.

22:47 Even as Jesus spoke the words about not being overcome by temptation (22:46), a mob approached. The leader was Judas, who had gone to the Jewish religious leaders in order to betray Jesus (22:3-4). He was at the Last Supper with Jesus and the other disciples (Matthew 26:25) and then had abruptly left, apparently to let the leaders know where to find Jesus (John 13:27). Judas came up to Jesus and greeted him with a kiss. Judas had told the crowd to arrest the man whom he would kiss (Matthew 26:48).

22:48 With this kiss of greeting, Judas showed himself to be the ultimate traitor. He had eaten with Jesus only hours before, and here he used a sign of friendship and affection in his betrayal. Apparently Jesus understood that this greeting had been designated as a signal. Jesus asked, “Judas, how can you betray me, the Son of Man, with a kiss?” This was the height of disloyalty and hypocrisy.

22:49-51 Apparently the arrival of the mob had awakened the sleeping disciples, and they came fully awake and ready to fight. One of them slashed at the high priest's servant and cut off his right ear. The Gospel of John reveals that the man who cut off the servant's ear was Peter and that the servant's name was Malchus (John 18:10). Peter may have thought that this was the time to fight, the time to defend themselves, but Jesus told Peter, “Don't resist anymore.” Peter should put away his sword and allow God's plan to unfold. Jesus' time of prayer had made him serene in God's will. He would comply with God's plan. So he healed the man's ear. Even as Jesus was being led away to face what would be the most difficult of trials, he first stopped to care for this member of the mob, restoring his ear.

22:52-53 Apparently many of the religious leaders had come together to take part in this arrest. Jesus pointed out the ridiculous picture of all these men coming after him with swords and clubs. Jesus also pointed out the basic cowardice in their actions. He had been among them every day in the Temple, but they had not laid a hand on him. We know from 20:19 and 22:2 that they had not arrested Jesus in the Temple for fear of a riot. Instead, they came secretly at night, under the influence of the prince of darkness, Satan himself. Although it looked as if Satan was getting the upper hand and that darkness was in control, everything was proceeding according to God's plan. It was time for Jesus to die.

PETER DENIES KNOWING JESUS / 22:54-65 / 227

Peter's confidence and courage had wilted under pressure. Only several hours before, he had courageously asserted that he would follow Jesus to prison—or even to death. At this point, however, he was repeatedly denying any association with Jesus. Each denial distanced Peter further from him. The best part of this sad story is that it did not end here.

22:54 Jesus did not resist arrest, his disciples had turned and run (Mark 14:50), so Jesus was led away to the high priest's residence, even though it was not yet daylight. The Jewish leaders were in a hurry because they wanted to complete the execution before the Sabbath and get on with the Passover celebration. The high priest's residence was a palace with outer walls enclosing a courtyard. That this trial should occur here was unprecedented. Normally the council would meet in a large hall in the Temple area. They could have met there because during the Passover, the Temple opened at midnight rather than at dawn. This meeting at Caiaphas's home may have been to aid in a hasty assembly; however, they still could just as easily have met in a normal location. Most likely, it was their desire to avoid a riot that led them to this more private setting. Peter followed the mob from far behind, along with John (John 18:15).

22:55 As mentioned above, this courtyard was probably in a central area of the buildings that made up the high priest's residence. In the courtyard, the guards lit a fire, around which the servants and soldiers were warming themselves against the early morning chill. Peter joined the others around the fire.

22:56-57 John wrote that this servant girl was acting as a guard at the gate to the inner courtyard (John 18:16). She apparently noticed Peter in the firelight, staring at him. Then the girl realized where she had seen Peter before—he was one of Jesus' followers. This put Peter in a difficult position. Standing among the soldiers and servants right there in enemy territory, Peter did not necessarily want to be identified with the man held in an upstairs room, on trial for his life. So Peter made a natural and impulsive response—he lied. “Woman . . . I don't even know the man!” Temptation came when Peter least expected it. This serves as a warning to all believers to be prepared. Peter had been ready to fight with a sword, but not to face the accusations of a servant girl.

22:58 Peter could run, but he couldn't hide. He got away from the questioning servant girl only to run into someone else who also recognized him as one of them (one of Jesus' followers). But Peter again denied it.

22:59-60 This time, another bystander heard Peter's Galilean accent which was closer to Syrian speech than to that of the Judean servants in the Jerusalem courtyard. Thus the group concluded that Peter must have been with the Galilean on trial inside the palace. Peter again replied in the negative, claiming to not even know what they were talking about. These three denials did not occur quickly, one immediately after another. Time elapsed in between, yet Peter could not control himself. As he spoke these words of his third denial, the rooster crowed, signaling the early morning hour.

22:61-62 Peter's denials fulfilled Jesus' words to him (22:34). When Peter heard the rooster crowing and then saw Jesus turn and look at him (either from the upper story where the trial was being held or as he passed through the courtyard between visits with Annas and Caiaphas), Peter remembered what Jesus had said to him earlier (12:9). Peter had indeed denied Jesus three times before the rooster crowed.

Peter left the courtyard, crying bitterly. His tears were not only because he realized that he had denied his Lord, the Messiah, but also because he had turned away from a very dear friend, a person who had loved and taught him for three years. Peter had said that he would go to prison or even death for Jesus (Mark 14:29-31; Luke 22:33-34). Fortunately, the story does not end there. Peter's tears were of true sorrow and repentance. Later, Peter would reaffirm his love for Jesus, and Jesus would forgive him (see Mark 16:7; John 21:15-19).

22:63-65 After the preliminary meeting in Caiaphas's house, the men adjourned to await daybreak and the arrival of the entire council for the more formal meeting in the Temple. Matters had really already been decided during the night, but the full trial would be held early in the morning to satisfy a law that allowed trials only during the daytime. This would be a formality to carry out the sentence that already had been decided.

Apparently Jesus was left in the care of guards who proceeded to mock and beat him. Evidently, the charge of Jesus being a prophet had come up, so the guards took advantage of their prisoner by playing on this claim. They blindfolded him, hit him, and asked that he say who had hit him. In addition, they threw all sorts of terrible insults at him. Matthew and Mark wrote that these guards were only following the example of the religious leaders themselves who had already beaten and insulted Jesus (Matthew 26:67-68; Mark 14:65). None of this surprised Jesus (see 18:32).

THE COUNCIL OF RELIGIOUS LEADERS CONDEMNS JESUS / 22:66-71 / 228

Luke's presentation of Jesus' trial before the council is much shorter than Matthew or Mark's (see Matthew 26:57-68; Mark 14:53-65). In retelling the story of the trial, Luke's clear purpose was to get at the heart of the matter: Who is Jesus?

22:66 As stated above, the leaders assembled during the day in order for the trial to be legal. So they met immediately at daybreak, keeping such trivialities of the law while holding a trial that was completely illegal.

22:67-69 They already knew what they planned to do with Jesus, so this meeting was merely a formality. They asked him to tell them if he was the Messiah. For Jesus to answer in the affirmative would incriminate himself. To answer in the negative would have been to lie. Jesus knew this was their plan, for he said, "If I tell you, you won't believe me." The council had already proven that they had no intention of believing Jesus to be their Messiah. Jesus also knew that if he questioned them, they would not answer (as already seen in 20:1-8). Jesus was in a no-win situation, but he told them the truth, "The time is soon coming when I, the Son of Man, will be sitting at God's right hand in the place of power." To say this was to say that yes, he was the Messiah and to boldly claim his own exaltation to the place of highest honor in heaven.

22:70-71 The religious leaders understood exactly what Jesus was saying. He was indeed claiming to be the Son of God—but they needed him to be a bit more clear. So they asked again. Jesus agreed, saying, "You are right in saying that I am." Jesus identified himself with God by using a familiar title for God found in the Old Testament: "I am" (Exodus 3:14). The council recognized Jesus' claim and realized that they needed no other witnesses. He had accused himself. Their accusation against him was blasphemy—claiming equality with God (Matthew 26:65; Mark 14:64). For any other human this claim would have been blasphemy, but in this case it was true. Blasphemy was punishable by death (Leviticus 24:16). The council could condemn Jesus to death, but they could not carry out the death penalty under Roman law. The Romans would have to condemn him. So Jesus was led to trial before the local Roman leader—Pontius Pilate.

JESUS STANDS TRIAL BEFORE PILATE / 23:1-5 / 230

Early that morning, Jesus' accusers rushed him to Pilate. To the high priests and the teachers of religious law, Jesus was very dangerous. He simply had to be eliminated. Therefore, they did not shrink from presenting completely false charges against Jesus. Pilate saw through their blatant lies. He knew Jesus was innocent.

23:1 The Jewish council had already decided that Jesus should die, but they could not, under Roman law, carry out the death penalty. Jesus would have to be tried and convicted in a Roman court. Thus, they took Jesus over to Pilate, the Roman governor. Pilate was the governor of Judea, where Jerusalem was located. Pilate's normal residence was in Caesarea on the Mediterranean Sea, but he happened to be in Jerusalem because of the Passover festival. With the large crowds who had flocked to the city for that celebration, Pilate and his soldiers came to help keep the peace. He stayed in his headquarters, called the Praetorium.

23:2 The Jewish leaders had arrested Jesus on theological grounds—blasphemy; but they had to come up with a political reason for executing Jesus. The charges against Jesus in the Roman court were rebellion and treason. The irony is that the first accusation—that Jesus was leading the people to ruin—was completely unfounded. The second accusation—that Jesus told the people not to pay their taxes—was an outright lie (see 20:20-26). The third charge, that he was claiming to be the Messiah, a king, was absolutely true.

23:3-4 Pilate focused on the accusation about Jesus claiming to be a king, for that could amount to treason and be grounds for a death sentence. So Pilate asked the prisoner, “Are you the King of the Jews?” This question is identical in all four Gospels, and in all four the word “you” is emphatic. Jesus answered the question, “Yes, it is as you say.” To have said otherwise would have been to lie. Jesus was a king, but his kingship was not a threat to Pilate or to Caesar. At some point, Pilate realized that the religious leaders simply wanted to get rid of this man, so he said “I find nothing wrong with this man!” Pilate's reluctance to prosecute Jesus was undoubtedly due more to his contempt for the Jews than for any particular consideration of Jesus.

23:5 The Jews' plan was unraveling. Pilate wasn't playing into their hands as they had hoped, and they became desperate. So they came up with more trumped-up charges. They claimed that Jesus was causing riots everywhere. Because Pilate was mainly charged with keeping peace, he would be interested in dealing with a man who was causing riots. If this charge were true, Pilate would have heard about Jesus long before this.

JESUS STANDS TRIAL BEFORE HEROD / 23:6-12 / 231

Herod was ecstatic that he would be able to see Jesus. He had heard so much about this mysterious, miracle-working man from Galilee. But Herod was severely disappointed. Jesus remained silent. He would not answer Herod's questions, much less perform any miracles.

23:6-7 When the religious leaders mentioned that Jesus had been in Galilee, Pilate wanted to know if Jesus was a Galilean. Jesus had grown up in Nazareth and later had made Capernaum his base; he was indeed under Herod's jurisdiction. This was the Herod who had killed John the Baptist. Herod, also called Herod Antipas, was himself in Jerusalem that weekend for the Passover celebration, mainly as a tactic to please his subjects. Pilate hoped to pass Jesus off on Herod.

23:8-9 Herod may have been delighted to finally see Jesus, but he had already closed his window of opportunity to hear the message. John had spoken to him; Herod had killed John. Herod's motivation here was only to see Jesus perform a miracle. He apparently saw Jesus as no more than an amazing traveling sideshow. When Jesus was brought before him, Herod asked him questions, but Jesus refused to answer. Herod is the only person to whom Jesus said nothing at all. Herod had not listened to John; Jesus had nothing to add to what John had said. Cold and cruel, Herod had a hard heart. Jesus knew this and remained silent.

23:10 The religious leaders had hoped for a quick sentence from Pilate so they could return to their religious duties during this important Passover celebration. But they had already had to trek with Jesus from Pilate's residence over to Herod's palace, and now Herod was wasting more time. So they shouted their accusations, probably with more of the same kinds of lies (23:2, 5). They hoped their accusations would sway Herod, so they would get a verdict from him that would be as good as one from Pilate.

23:11-12 With this prisoner refusing to answer, and looking very little like a great miracle worker, Herod and his soldiers began mocking and ridiculing Jesus. Angry at Jesus' refusal to even answer questions for him, Herod resorted to mocking Jesus. To make fun of Jesus' claim to be a king, Herod put a royal robe on him. Herod did not even take the charge seriously. So he neither released the prisoner nor made a judgment about his guilt. He simply sent him back to Pilate. Herod and Pilate had a rather tenuous relationship. But because neither man knew what to do in this predicament, their common problem made them friends that day.

PILATE HANDS JESUS OVER TO BE CRUCIFIED / 23:13-25 / 232

According to the Roman custom of releasing a criminal during the Passover season, Pilate presented Jesus to the people. Pilate did not want to bear the responsibility of putting an innocent man to death. But the crowd insisted on Barabbas's freedom. That Jesus literally died in Barabbas's place vividly illustrates the ultimate significance of Jesus' death. He took the place of not only Barabbas but all who stand condemned before God's perfect standard and trust in Christ for salvation.

23:13-14 Pilate thought he had gotten rid of his problem, only to have Jesus sent back. The decision still rested on his shoulders. So he attempted to let this innocent man go by telling Jesus' accusers that he found him innocent.

23:15 Pilate could back up his decision with Herod's conclusion about Jesus. Herod had mocked Jesus, but apparently had sent back word to Pilate that he could find nothing worthy of the death penalty. Jesus was tried a total of six times, by both Jewish and Roman authorities, but he was never convicted of a crime. Even when condemned to execution, he had been convicted of no felony.

23:16 The word flogged may not indicate the severe flogging that Jesus received after being sentenced, prior to the crucifixion (as noted in Matthew 27:26; Mark 15:15), although John 19:1 reports Jesus being flogged and then brought before the crowd. Pilate may have hoped that the flogging would appease the crowd, and they would pity the man and let him go. Pilate was planning to release Jesus, but first he would punish him—to pacify the Jews and teach the prisoner a lesson to stay out of trouble in the future. (Verse 17 does not exist in most modern English versions because it does not appear in any of the earliest Greek manuscripts.)

23:18-19 The suggestion that Pilate was going to release Jesus (23:16) sent the leaders into a frenzy. Pilate had wanted to release Jesus as the Passover gift (Mark 15:8-9). This had been a public announcement, so many people in the crowd cried out that Jesus must be put to death. The prisoner they wanted set free was a man named Barabbas, who may have been somewhat of a hero among the Jews for his acts of rebellion against Rome. He was a true rebel and revolutionary and had even committed murder. The religious leaders had tried to pin this accusation on Jesus in order to have him put to death, but they chose a man who had done such acts and wanted him set free. Clearly their actions had no logic. They merely wanted Jesus put to death and would go to any lengths to make sure it happened.

23:20-21 Pilate really wanted to release Jesus. Matthew recorded that even Pilate's wife had experienced a dream about Jesus and had urged Pilate to let Jesus go (Matthew 27:19). Pilate must have been in a tight spot, because for some reason he put himself in the position of bargaining with the crowd. He had the authority to let Jesus go and then get on with his day; instead, he argued with them, but to no avail. They wanted Jesus to be crucified.

23:22 Pilate tried for the third time. He could not fathom why the crowd so badly wanted this man's death. Jesus had not committed any crime, so there was no reason to sentence him to death. There are two reasons why Luke stressed these three attempts Pilate had made to release Jesus. First, Luke wanted to show through his Gospel the innocence of Jesus before Roman law. Luke was giving evidence to prove the acceptability of Christianity to his Gentile readers. Second, he was establishing the Jewish mob's guilt for Jesus' death.

23:23-24 Pilate wanted to release Jesus, but the crowd shouted louder and louder, so Pilate sentenced Jesus to die. No doubt Pilate did not want to risk losing his position, which may already have been shaky, by allowing a riot to occur in his province. As a career politician, he knew the importance of compromise, and he saw Jesus more as a political threat than as a human being with rights and dignity.

23:25 Pilate released Barabbas and delivered Jesus over to them to do as they wished. Matthew's Gospel explains that Pilate took water and washed his hands in front of the crowd to symbolize his innocence in condemning Jesus (Matthew 27:24), but this act was no more than self-deception. Jesus may have been surrendered to the will of the mob, but this was still a purely Roman execution. Pilate had to command it in order for it to happen.

JESUS IS LED AWAY TO BE CRUCIFIED / 23:26-31 / 234

Severely beaten and worn out from the previous night's ordeal, Jesus could not carry his cross to the crest of Golgotha. So Simon was drafted to carry Jesus' cross. The image of Simon shouldering the cross graphically pictures what every follower of Christ should be willing to do: to take up his or her own cross daily to serve Christ (see 14:27).

23:26 Jesus was led away from Pilate and out to the place where he would be executed. Condemned prisoners had to carry the crossbeam of their own cross on their shoulders through the streets of Jerusalem and to the execution site outside the city. Jesus started to carry his cross, but, weakened from the beatings he had received, he was physically unable to carry it all the way. A man named Simon from the country of Cyrene (in northern Africa, see Acts 2:10) was coming into the city. He may have been a Jew coming on a pilgrimage to the city for the Passover, or he may have been from Cyrene but resided in Palestine. Soldiers were free by law to coerce citizens at any time. So this stranger was forced to follow Jesus and carry his cross.

23:27-28 Luke alone wrote of the Jewish women shedding tears for Jesus while he was being led through the streets to his execution. Not everyone wanted Jesus to die. Seeing him on his way to be executed caused many, especially women along the way, to mourn and wail for him. Jesus told them not to weep for him but for themselves and for their children. He knew that in only about forty years they would face great suffering and would then mourn, weep, and wail, for at that time Jerusalem and the Temple would be destroyed by the Romans. This was Jesus' third lament for the city of Jerusalem (see also 13:34-35; 19:41-44).

23:29-31 The days are coming indicates a key time in God's judgment about to unfold (21:23). While being childless was normally a curse, the coming days in Jerusalem would be so difficult that it would be considered a blessing not to have had children. Punishment would be so great that people would want the mountains and hills to fall on them and kill them. Death would be preferred to the judgment that they would face and its accompanying misery.

This proverb about the green wood and dry wood is difficult to interpret. Some think it means that if the innocent Jesus (green wood) suffered at the hands of the Romans, what would happen to the guilty Jews (dry wood)? The "green wood" is hard to burn, so if fire burns it up, what chance has dry wood? God would not spare the rebellious hard-hearted Jewish nation from judgment. Thus, Jesus expressed his grief over the nation for the last time.

JESUS IS PLACED ON THE CROSS / 23:32-43 / 235

Even during the final hours of Jesus' life, when he struggled in agony for his last gasp of air, people reacted to him in a variety of ways. Even the two men who were being crucified with Jesus had starkly different reactions to Jesus.

23:32-33 Jesus was not the only "criminal" executed that morning. Two others were also led out to be crucified. In his death, Jesus truly was numbered among transgressors (22:37; Isaiah 53:12). The place called The Skull may have been a regular place of execution. It was prominent, public, and outside the city along a main road. Executions held there served as examples to the people and as deterrents to criminals.

The words are direct, but the full meaning was horrific: all three were crucified there. Instituted by the Romans, crucifixion was a feared and shameful form of execution. It was designed to prolong the gruesome pain. There were several shapes of crosses and several different methods of crucifixion. Death would come by suffocation as the person would lose strength and the weight of the body would make breathing more and more difficult. Crucifixion was the harshest form of capital punishment in the ancient world.

23:34 Jesus spoke only a few times from the cross, and his prayer of forgiveness were the first words he said. Jesus asked his Father to forgive his killers. Jesus lived and died by the words he preached: "Love your enemies" (6:27-28). They don't know what they are doing refers most likely to the Jews, not the Roman soldiers, although all who participated in Jesus' death were included in his prayer for forgiveness. The Jews made a serious mistake, for they failed to realize God's plan for their nation.

Roman soldiers customarily would divide up the clothing of executed criminals among themselves. When they gambled for Jesus' clothes, they fulfilled the prophecy in Psalm 22:18. Jesus was crucified naked. John recorded that four soldiers divided the garments (John 19:23).

23:35 These men, hanging in extreme pain and humiliation on their crosses, provided hours of grisly entertainment for spectators. Luke pointed specifically at the leaders who had followed Jesus to the execution site, watched him be crucified, and now laughed and scoffed at him. Jesus had gone about the countryside healing people, but he could not save himself. They assumed that if he truly had God's divine favor as he had claimed, then he would be able to get himself out of his present predicament. Jesus' position there on the cross proved to them that he was not any kind of Messiah. Unfortunately, they missed the fact that this entire episode had been prophesied (Psalm 22:6-8) and was all proceeding exactly as God had planned.

23:36-37 The soldiers (presumably the Roman soldiers who had carried out the execution) had the duty that day of sitting and waiting until the men on the crosses died. They had already divided up the clothing, and then began mocking the man on the cross who had claimed to be a king. Only Luke wrote of this offer of sour wine as part of the soldiers' mockery. They too called up to him to save himself, if he were indeed the King of the Jews.

23:38 This signboard stated the condemned person's crime and was placed on the cross as a warning. According to John, Pilate wrote this sign in three languages: Aramaic, Latin, and Greek. The three languages meant that people of any nationality passing that way would be able to read the sign. Because Jesus was never found guilty, the only accusation placed on his sign was the "crime" of calling himself King of the Jews. Perhaps this was another way for Pilate to show contempt for the Jews—here was their king, stripped and executed in public view.

23:39 One of the criminals scoffed at Jesus, even though the three of them were facing the same horrible deaths. One of them seems to have picked up on the taunts of the religious leaders: if Jesus were indeed the Messiah, then he should save himself and them. Obviously these words were no more than barbed sarcasm. All three were beyond hope, beyond the point of being saved—physically.

23:40-43 The other criminal, however, protested, pointing out that they deserved their sentence, but Jesus did not. There, on the cross, receiving punishment for what his deeds deserved, this criminal faced himself, feared God, and said: "Jesus, remember me when you come into your Kingdom." And Jesus replied, "I assure you, today you will be with me in paradise." The dying criminal had more faith than all the rest of Jesus' followers put together. By all appearances, the Kingdom was finished. How awe-inspiring is the faith of this man who alone saw beyond the present shame to the coming glory!

It seemed to most onlookers that day that a poor, deluded man had been executed without good reason. But on that Friday, a huge spiritual battle was being waged unseen. Satan rejoiced that Jesus was going to die. The angels in heaven looked on in sorrow, held back from intervening by the hand of God. God himself looked away from his Son as the sins of the world descended upon him. But Jesus was actually gaining a huge victory. His death and resurrection would strike the deathblow to Satan's rule and would establish Christ's eternal authority over the earth. Few people reading the sign that bleak afternoon understood its real meaning, but the sign was absolutely true. All was not lost. Jesus is King of the Jews—and the Gentiles, and the whole universe.

23:44 Jesus had been placed on the cross at nine o'clock in the morning. Three hours had passed, hours of excruciating pain and physical agony. Then, it was noon, and at the height of the day, an eerie darkness fell across the whole land for three hours. How this darkness occurred is unknown, but it is clear that God caused it to happen. All nature seemed to mourn over the stark tragedy of the death of God's Son. The darkness was both physical and spiritual—for while nature mourned, this was also the time when darkness reigned (22:53).

23:45 Obviously the darkness that covered the land meant that somehow the light from the sun was gone. Luke did not explain it, but clearly God controlled these events. Most significant and symbolic was an event that occurred in the city of Jerusalem, in the Temple, right in the inner area called the Holy Place.

The Temple had three parts: the courts for all the people; the Holy Place, where only priests could enter; and the Most Holy Place, where the high priest alone could enter once a year to atone for the sins of the people (Leviticus 16:1-34). In the Most Holy Place, the ark of the covenant and God's presence rested. As Jesus suffered on the cross and as darkness covered the land, the thick veil hanging in the Temple was torn apart. The veil (curtain) that was torn was the one that closed off the Most Holy Place from view. Symbolically, that curtain separated holy God from sinful people. The writer of Hebrews saw this tearing of the curtain as God's way of removing the barrier between himself and humanity. Now sinful people could approach the holy God directly through Christ (Hebrews 9:1-14; 10:19-22). From then on, God would not reside behind a curtain in the Temple, he would take up residence in his people.

23:46 In committing his spirit to the Father, Jesus died, fulfilling the words of Psalm 31:5. Jesus did not faint; he did not become unconscious only to be revived later—he breathed his last. Jesus died as a human being—voluntarily, sacrificially, in the place of sinners.

23:47 Matthew, Mark, and Luke all point to the head Roman soldier, the captain, who had apparently been in charge of carrying out this execution. Upon seeing what had happened, he realized that Jesus had been no ordinary person. Presumably this soldier had carried out other such executions, but never had he experienced what he did at this one. This Gentile soldier understood something that most of the Jewish nation had missed: Surely this man was innocent. The captain understood that Jesus had not deserved what he received, yet Jesus had borne it all with dignity, courage, and even words of forgiveness.

23:48 Miracles had occurred out there on the hill—darkness, an earthquake, dead people walking, and the torn veil in the Temple that no one had probably heard about yet. Perhaps the crowd expected, through all that, to see Jesus come down off the cross and be their Messiah. But he didn't. He died. The onlookers in the crowd, who had come to see the spectacle of this execution went home in deep sorrow.

23:49 The women who had followed Jesus from Galilee are named in 8:2-3. John wrote that besides himself, Jesus' mother was also there, as well as others (John 19:25-26). Perhaps Jesus' mother, watching at a distance, finally understood Simeon's words from years before (2:35). Among Jesus' disciples, only John was at the cross.

JESUS IS LAID IN THE TOMB / 23:50-56 / 237

Sometimes the worst circumstances bring out the best in people. In this case, two secret disciples—Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus (according to John 19:38-39)—openly expressed their allegiance to Jesus. Joseph was a member of the council, and Nicodemus was a Pharisee.

23:50-51 The scene shifts away from the cross to a man, a member of the Jewish high council who had not agreed with the decision and actions of the other religious leaders. Apparently the death sentence for Jesus had not been a unanimous vote. Joseph had been against it, as had another member of the council named Nicodemus (John 3:1; 19:38-42). Both of these men came to bury Jesus' body. Their commitment to Jesus forced them out of hiding.

Joseph was from the town of Arimathea, about twenty-two miles northwest of Jerusalem. Joseph was a secret disciple of Jesus (John 19:38) who was waiting for the Kingdom of God to come (suggesting that he was a Pharisee, not a Sadducee). The disciples who had publicly followed Jesus had fled, but Joseph boldly took a stand that could cost him dearly. He cared enough about Jesus to ask for his body so he could give it a proper burial.

23:52 Joseph had to go to Pilate to ask if he could have Jesus' body in order to give it a proper burial. Apparently Pilate alone could give this permission, and this may not have been an easy thing to do—going back to Pilate who was already furious at the Jewish leaders. Mark recorded that Pilate was surprised that Jesus was already dead and asked the Roman captain for verification (Mark 15:44-45).

23:53 Joseph had to hurry; Sabbath was fast approaching. Fortunately he had help. John wrote that Nicodemus, another member of the council, brought spices for the burial. Probably along with the help of several servants, Jesus' body was carefully taken down from the cross, washed, wrapped in layers of linen cloth with the spices in between, and laid in a tomb. Jesus was given a burial fit for a king.

The tomb was likely a man-made cave cut out of one of the many limestone hills in the area around Jerusalem. Such a tomb was large enough to walk into. Some caves were large enough to hold several bodies, but this tomb had never been used—in fact, it was owned by Joseph himself (Matthew 27:60). Such tombs were for wealthy people. So Jesus had a proper burial. After Jesus' burial, a large stone was rolled across the entrance to the tomb (John 20:1).

23:54 Friday of every week was the day of preparation for the Sabbath—all necessary work had to be completed before Sabbath began at sundown on Friday. Sabbath ended at sundown on Saturday. Jesus died just a few hours before sundown on Friday. Joseph had to hurry in order to complete this burial before the Sabbath began.

23:55-56 The women from Galilee who had been at the cross followed Joseph to the tomb. This way, they would know exactly where to find Jesus' body when they would return after the Sabbath with their spices and ointments. Anointing a body was a sign of love, devotion, and respect. Bringing spices to the tomb would be like bringing flowers to a grave today. Since bodies were not embalmed in Israel, perfumes were normally used. The women undoubtedly knew that Joseph and Nicodemus had already wrapped the body in linen and spices. They were probably going to do a simple external application of the fragrant spices. After seeing where the body was laid, they went home and rested as the law required, planning to return at first light on Sunday morning.

JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD / 24:1-12 / 239

Jesus' awful death on the cross was not the end of the story. Within three days, Jesus rose from the tomb. Even though Jesus had predicted his own resurrection (9:22; 18:32-33), no one believed it would happen.

Today Jesus still lives, at the right hand of God the Father (Acts 2:33). The Resurrection still stands as the foundation of the Christian faith. Christians can have complete confidence that Christ is alive, guiding the church and individual Christians through the Holy Spirit. His own resurrection is a guarantee of the future resurrection; death has already been conquered. Moreover, the same power that brought Christ's body back from the dead is available to every Christian today, bringing each spiritually dead person back to life (1 Corinthians 15:12-28).

24:1-2 In the Jewish reckoning of time, a “day” included any part of a day; thus, Friday was the first day, Saturday was the second day, and Sunday was the third day. When the women arrived at daybreak, Jesus had already risen. Jesus had died on Friday; Joseph had taken his body and had prepared it for burial just before the Sabbath began at sundown on Friday. The Sabbath had ended at sunset on Saturday; so the women ventured out very early on Sunday morning. They brought spices to the tomb, just as people today would bring flowers—as a sign of love and respect. When they arrived, they found that the stone covering the entrance had been rolled aside (see Matthew 28:2). The stone was not rolled away so that Jesus could get out, for he was already gone. It was rolled aside so others could get in and see for themselves that Jesus had indeed risen from the dead, just as he had said he would.

24:3 The stone had been rolled back, and the women went in expecting to accomplish their task with the spices. Many tombs were large enough to walk into, so these women went into the tomb, but they couldn't find the body of the Lord Jesus. Of course, the body was not there because Jesus had been raised, just as he said. But Jesus' followers did not expect this. They had been told at least three times, but they had not come to truly believe (9:21-27, 44-45; 18:31-34).

24:4-7 Matthew and John reveal that these two men in dazzling robes were angels. When angels appeared to people, they looked like humans. These men at the tomb surprised the women, and their dazzling appearance frightened them. The women reacted in humility, bowing before these men. The angel asked the obvious question, “Why are you looking in a tomb for someone who is alive?” Then one angel spoke the words that have thrilled every believer since that first resurrection morning, “He isn’t here! He has risen from the dead!” The angels then reminded the women that Jesus had accurately predicted all that had happened to him.

24:8-9 These women must have been among Jesus’ faithful followers and had heard Jesus’ predictions of his death, for Luke says they remembered that Jesus had said those things, and suddenly everything came together. Everything had occurred just as Jesus had said. So these women left the tomb and rushed back to tell his eleven disciples (disciples, minus Judas Iscariot) and everyone else among Jesus’ followers who may have been in hiding since the Crucifixion. Matthew and Mark say that the angel told them to go and tell the disciples what had happened. The women obeyed, running with the great news to the sorrowing and bewildered disciples.

24:10-11 The women are named here, probably because some of the later believers may have known them or about them. Mary Magdalene had been a loyal follower—Jesus had cast seven demons out of her (8:2). All the Gospels place her at the cross and at the tomb. Jesus’ first appearance to any human after his resurrection was to this woman (Mark 16:9; John 20:11-16). Joanna was previously mentioned among the women who followed Jesus (8:3). Mary the mother of James is also mentioned in Mark 15:40; 16:1 (she may be “the other Mary” of Matthew 28:1). The several others includes Salome (Mark 16:1) and other unnamed persons—all women.

They brought their story back to the apostles—giving them the message that the angel had told them. The fact that the message was carried by women gives credibility and persuasive force to Luke’s account. No ancient person making up such a story would have women as the official witnesses. By Jewish law, women could not do so.

Amazingly, the disciples did not believe it—the story sounded like nonsense. Apparently Jesus’ words about dying and rising again had gone past all of them. Many skeptics have tried to write off the Resurrection as a story made up by a group of overzealous disciples. But here the opposite occurred. The disciples were not anxiously looking for any reason to believe that Jesus had risen; in fact, they were not anticipating it. When told of the Resurrection, they refused to believe without concrete evidence. Even a missing body was not enough to convince them.

24:12 John 20:3-4 reveals that another disciple ran to the tomb with Peter. That other disciple was almost certainly John, the author of the fourth Gospel. When Peter arrived at the tomb, he bent over and peered in. He saw the empty linen wrappings. Peter went away, wondering what had happened.

JESUS APPEARS TO TWO BELIEVERS TRAVELING ON THE ROAD /
24:13-34 / 243

Luke was the only Gospel writer who described in detail Jesus' encounter with the two disciples on the road to Emmaus (Mark briefly mentioned this encounter in Mark 16:12-13).

24:13-14 This event occurred on Sunday, the same day as the Resurrection. Two followers of Jesus were leaving Jerusalem and walking the seven miles to the village of Emmaus. Little is known of these disciples; one was named Cleopas (24:18), and the other was not one of the eleven disciples, as noted by 24:33. During their walk, they were talking about everything that had happened.

24:15-16 The two men were deep in discussion as they walked along. Apparently a man walking in the same direction drew up beside them (they knew he had been in Jerusalem, 24:18). This man was Jesus himself, but they were kept from recognizing him. In other appearances after the Resurrection, Jesus was also not recognized at first (John 20:14; 21:4). Here, God prevented these men from seeing Jesus until Jesus was ready to reveal himself to them (24:30-31). God's divine sovereignty kept them from understanding until the full reality of the bodily resurrection of Jesus could be understood.

24:17 Jesus, who had walked up behind these men during their deep discussion, asked what they were so concerned about. At Jesus' question, they stopped short in their sadness. Apparently, in their discussion they had been unable to come to any understanding, so they were still sad and upset about what had occurred.

24:18 Jesus had apparently walked up behind these men, so they assumed that he too was a pilgrim traveling home from Jerusalem. If he had been in Jerusalem, how could he not have known what had happened there?

24:19 Jesus asked what things had occurred. They answered that much had happened to a man named Jesus. The two followers described him as a prophet who did wonderful miracles and a mighty teacher. They had heard Jesus teach and had seen him perform miracles of healing; but, as far as they knew, he had died like all the other prophets before him.

24:20 The telling item in this statement is that these two disciples knew who was responsible for Jesus' death. The Romans may have actually done the executing, but the Jews' (they said our) leading priests and other religious leaders arrested him and handed him over. If all of Jerusalem knew what had happened, then the religious leaders' plan to try to blame the execution on the Romans had failed. Everyone knew the leaders' role in Jesus' death.

24:21 The disciples from Emmaus had thought that Jesus could rescue Israel. Most Jews believed that the Old Testament prophecies pointed to a military and political Messiah who would free the nation from Roman tyranny. Jesus had come to redeem, however, and had indeed paid a huge price—his life. No one comprehended this yet. They didn't realize that the Messiah had come to redeem people from slavery to sin. When Jesus died, therefore, they lost all hope. Their report that that all happened three days ago reveals a bit of expectation at Jesus' promises regarding the "third day" after his death. As far as they knew, however, nothing had changed.

24:22-24 Another insight found in this statement is that these two men had left Jerusalem, hopeless and downcast, after having heard an amazing report. The women who had been to the tomb and heard the angels' words said that Jesus' body was missing and that angels had said Jesus is alive. Then some men (Peter and John, 24:12; John 20:3-4) verified what the women had said. Yet there was still gloom, as noted by these disciples who had all this information, but had left the city still believing that all their hopes in Jesus had been dashed.

24:25-27 Why did Jesus call these disciples foolish? Even though they well knew all that the prophets wrote in the Scriptures, they failed to understand that Christ's suffering was his path to glory. The prophets had said that Christ would have to suffer before entering his time of glory. Beginning with the writings of Moses and then moving through all the prophets, Jesus explained to these bewildered disciples what all the Scriptures said about himself. Jesus pointed out all the Scriptures and how what had happened to Jesus had fulfilled everything that had been prophesied regarding the Messiah.

24:28-29 They approached Emmaus and the journey's end for the two travelers. Jesus would not have stayed with them if he had not been invited. But they were impressed with all that Jesus had been telling them—probably answering many of the questions the two of them had been discussing before this man had joined them. They wanted to talk further, so they invited Jesus to stay.

24:30-31 At the meal, Jesus took bread, asked God's blessing, broke it, and gave it to them. When he did so, their eyes were opened, and they recognized him. These two disciples had not been at the Last Supper, so this was not what sparked recognition. This was the exact time God wanted them to recognize Jesus. God had kept them from understanding (24:16), and now he opened their eyes through the teaching of the word (24:27) and the breaking of the bread. His mission accomplished with these two disciples, Jesus disappeared.

24:32 Jesus had vanished as quickly as he had come, and the two disciples were left to discuss how their hearts were stirred as Jesus had talked with them and had opened the Scriptures to them. Jesus' presence had almost imperceptibly changed their mood from despair to hearts feeling strangely warm. Their hope had been confirmed; their doubts dispelled.

24:33-34 Evening may have been coming on (24:29), but their news was too exciting to wait until morning. Within the hour the two disciples were on their way back to Jerusalem. When they got there, they found that Jesus had already appeared to Peter. Paul also mentioned that Jesus appeared to Peter alone (1 Corinthians 15:5). This appearance is not further described in the Gospels. Jesus showed individual concern for Peter because Peter felt completely unworthy after denying his Lord. But Peter repented, and Jesus approached him and forgave him. Soon God would use Peter in building Christ's church (see the first half of the book of Acts).

JESUS APPEARS TO HIS DISCIPLES / 24:35-43 / 244

The disciples, who had gathered in Jerusalem, were already talking with excitement about what had occurred. The tomb was empty. Jesus had appeared to Peter and to two of them on the way to Emmaus (24:33-35). In the excitement and confusion of it all, Jesus appeared in the room, wishing them "peace."

24:35 The two disciples then told their story of how Jesus had appeared and talked to them and how they had recognized him. Why Jesus chose certain people to whom to appear at first and not others is unknown. Peter apparently needed an extra personal encounter; Mary Magdalene's love and devotion accorded her the opportunity to see Jesus first. Whatever the reason for Jesus to have spent a lengthy time with these two disappointed followers on the road to Emmaus, the story stands as a beautiful treasure of Jesus' compassion and love for those who, when discouraged and confused, needed his presence and wisdom to comfort them.

24:36 As Jesus' followers discussed his recent appearances, suddenly Jesus himself was standing there among them. He appeared among them behind locked doors (John 20:19). Jesus could do this because his resurrection and glorification had altered his bodily form. In this new body he was able to transcend all physical barriers.

Jesus' first words to the group of disbelieving and bewildered followers and disciples, all of whom had deserted him in his time of greatest need were: "Peace be with you." This was a standard Hebrew greeting, but here it was filled with greater meaning. Jesus brought a greeting of peace, and his presence brought peace.

24:37-39 These people in the locked room were still wrestling with the fact that Jesus' body was missing, and then they heard amazing stories of his appearances to several people of their group. Jesus appeared among them suddenly, and they were frightened, thinking they were seeing a ghost. But Jesus' body wasn't a figment of the imagination; they weren't seeing a ghost. Jesus encouraged them to look and touch. He had flesh and bones and could even eat food (24:43). On the other hand, his body wasn't a restored human body like Lazarus's (John 11)—he was able to appear and disappear. Jesus' resurrected body was glorified and immortal.

24:40-43 Jesus showed them his hands and his feet so as to reveal the wounds inflicted by the nails that had held him to the cross (see John 20:25). His resurrected body still bore these wounds as a testimony to his followers that this was the same man whom they had loved, followed, and seen die. This was too good to be true—and they experienced the conflicting emotions of disbelief, doubt, joy, and wonder that any person would have when a most desired, but seemingly most impossible, wish actually comes true. Jesus stood there among them, alive, even eating a piece of broiled fish to show that he was not a ghost. He was real; he came back to life just as he had told them he would.

JESUS APPEARS TO THE DISCIPLES IN JERUSALEM / 24:44-49 / 249

Jesus did not come back to Jerusalem after his resurrection to provide a spectacular show or to seek revenge on his enemies. Instead, he returned to teach his disciples. He had already instructed them while he was with them, but they had not completely understood him (see 9:45; 18:34). During his final days, he taught them again. This time, he opened their minds, so that they could understand the truth: his life, death, and resurrection all fulfilled Scripture. He taught them so they could teach others, telling what they had seen Jesus do and heard him say. They were to be Jesus' witnesses (a theme Luke continued in the book of Acts, see Acts 1:4-5, 7-8).

24:44-45 Many days may have elapsed between 24:43 and 24:44 because Jesus and his followers traveled to Galilee and back before he returned to heaven (Matthew 28:16; John 21). Acts, Luke's second book, reveals that Jesus spent forty days with his disciples between his resurrection and ascension.

As he had already done with the two men on the road to Emmaus, Jesus opened their minds to understand the Scriptures and explained how everything that had been written about the coming Messiah had been fulfilled in him. Writings of Moses, the prophets, and the Psalms encompass the entire Old Testament. In other words, the entire Old Testament points to the Messiah.

24:46-48 Not only had the Old Testament Scriptures been fulfilled in Jesus' life, death, and resurrection, but the Old Testament went much further—speaking of repentance and forgiveness of sins. Luke was writing to the Greek-speaking world. He wanted them to know that Christ's message of God's love and forgiveness should go to all the nations—and that this had been God's plan from the very beginning. Christ's gospel has a worldwide scope. God wants all the world to hear the Good News of salvation. They would begin right where they were—in Jerusalem and then be witnesses of all these things throughout the world (see Acts 1:8).

24:49 This task of being witnesses was not to be carried out in the disciples' own strength. Obviously these followers, hiding behind locked doors in fear of the Jews right there in Jerusalem, hardly seemed like the kind of people who could take the message across the world. But Jesus was not expecting them to do it on their own—he would send what his Father had promised—the Holy Spirit (John 14:15-27; 16:5-15). Jesus instructed them to stay in the city (that is, in Jerusalem) until they were filled with power from heaven. Jesus promised them the power (the Spirit in them) which would enable them to be witnesses (Acts 1:8). After his exaltation at his ascension, the power would be given to them

(Acts 2:1-4).

JESUS ASCENDS INTO HEAVEN / 24:50-53 / 250

Luke concluded his Gospel with a brief account of Jesus' ascension. In Acts, he provided a more complete description of it (see Acts 1:6-11). After watching Jesus ascend into heaven, the disciples returned to Jerusalem to praise God, the only appropriate response to Jesus' glorious life and his message of salvation.

24:50 Jesus took his followers out of Jerusalem to Bethany, the village only a couple of miles away on the slopes of the Mount of Olives. Jesus lifted his hands and blessed his followers. At this time, he would leave them, never to return until the time of the Second Coming. They would never be able to walk and talk with him physically as they had done during those three years of ministry. But they would soon receive the Holy Spirit who would fill them and be with them always.

24:51 In the act of blessing his followers, Jesus left them and was taken up to heaven. Jesus' physical presence left the disciples (Acts 1:9), but the Holy Spirit soon came to comfort them and empower them to spread the gospel of salvation (Acts 2:1-4). Today Jesus' work of salvation is completed, and he is sitting at God's right hand, where he has authority over heaven and earth.

24:52-53 The sight of Jesus returning to glory in heaven called for a response of worship from those who watched. Then they returned to Jerusalem filled with great joy. As yet, they did not separate themselves from their Jewish roots, but spent all of their time in the Temple, praising God. There were no more closed and locked doors for these followers. Jesus told them to stay in Jerusalem, so they did. Acts 1 gives some idea of their activity as they awaited the promised Holy Spirit. But they openly went to the Temple to praise God for all that he had done.

Luke's Gospel portrays Jesus as the perfect example of a life lived according to God's plan. The Greeks had a difficult time understanding the spiritual importance of the physical world. To them, the spiritual was always more important than the physical. To help them understand the God-man who united the spiritual and the physical, Luke emphasized that Jesus was not a phantom human but a real human being who healed people and fed them because he was concerned with their physical health as well as the state of their souls.

Believers today, living according to God's plan, should obey their Lord in every detail as they seek to restore people's bodies and souls to the health and salvation God has in store for them. To know how to live a perfect life, look to Jesus as the perfect example.

JOHN

INTRODUCTION

He spoke, and galaxies whirled into place, stars burned the heavens, and planets began orbiting their suns—the words of awesome, unlimited, unleashing power. He spoke again, and the waters and lands were filled with plants and creatures, running, swimming, growing, and multiplying—words of animating, breathing, pulsing life. Again he spoke, and man and woman were formed, thinking, speaking, and loving—words of personal and creative glory. Eternal, infinite, unlimited—he was, is, and always will be the Maker and Lord of all that exists.

And then he came in the flesh to a tiny spot in the universe called planet Earth—the mighty Creator becoming part of his creation, limited by time and space and susceptible to age, sickness, and death. Propelled by love, he came to rescue and save, offering forgiveness and life.

He is the Word: he is Jesus Christ.

It is this truth that the apostle John presents in this book. John's Gospel is not a life of Christ; it is a powerful argument for the incarnation, a conclusive demonstration that Jesus was, and is, the very heaven-sent Son of God and the only source of eternal life.

AUTHOR

John the Apostle, son of Zebedee and Salome, and younger brother of James.

Thunder evokes fear and images of a pending storm. We would expect someone nicknamed Son of Thunder to be powerful, loud, and unpredictable. That's what Jesus named two of his disciples—Zebedee's sons, James and John (Mark 3:17)—for he knew their tendency to explode. Sure enough, when Jesus and the Twelve were rebuffed by a Samaritan village, these rough fishermen suggested calling down fire from heaven to destroy the whole village (Luke 9:52-56). Just before that incident, John had told Jesus that he had tried to stop a man from driving out demons because he was not a disciple. Jesus had explained that he didn't have an exclusive club (Luke 9:49-50).

In addition to being forceful and angry, James and John also seem to have been quite self-centered. They requested seats of honor and power in the Kingdom. When the other disciples heard about what James and John had said, they became indignant (Mark 10:35-44). Yet Jesus also saw potential in these thundering brothers—he knew what they would become. So Jesus brought both, with Peter, into his inner circle, allowing them to see him transfigured on the mountain (Mark 9:2-13). And as Jesus was dying on the cross, he entrusted Mary, his mother, to John's care (John 19:26-27).

John was following in his father Zebedee's footsteps as a fisherman when Jesus called him (Matthew 4:21; Mark 1:19-20). His mother was Salome (Matthew 27:55-56; Mark 15:40). His brother, James, was also one of the Twelve and the first apostle to be martyred (Acts 12:2). They fished on the Sea of Galilee with Peter and Andrew.

One might predict that someone with a personality like John's would self-destruct. Certainly this person would die in a fight or in a clash with the Roman government. At the very least, he would be discarded by the church as self-seeking and power-hungry. But such was not the case. Instead, John was transformed into someone who was strong but gentle, straightforward but loving, courageous but humble. There is no dramatic event to account for John's transformation—it must have come from being with Jesus, being accepted, loved, and affirmed by the Lord, and then being filled with the Holy Spirit. So overwhelmed was John by Jesus that he did not mention himself by name in the Gospel that bears his name. Instead, he wrote of himself as “the disciple Jesus loved” (John 13:23; 19:26; 20:2; 21:20, 24). What a humble change for one who, at first, had wanted power and recognition.

John stands as a great example of Christ's power to transform lives. Christ can change anyone—no one is beyond hope. Jesus accepted John as he was, a Son of Thunder, and changed him into what he would become, the apostle of love.

JOHN'S MINISTRY

John was a Palestinian and a Galilean. Many believe that John was first a disciple of John the Baptist. His mentor pointed him to Jesus when Jesus passed by. Then Jesus and John spent the day together (1:35-39). At that time, John must have become a part-time disciple, for later we find him back fishing with his brother, James, and their father, Zebedee. But the next time Jesus called them, John and James left everything, father and boat included, and followed him.

As a member of the Twelve, John was an eyewitness to the miracles, an “ear-witness” to the parables and confrontations with the Pharisees and other leaders, and a student of Jesus' special words of instruction. John was at the Last Supper and in the Garden of Gethsemane. And he was the only one of the Twelve at the cross. John also saw the empty tomb and was in the upper room, on the beach, and at the Ascension.

Beyond being a leader in the Jerusalem church (as mentioned in Galatians 2:9), little is known of John's ministry. When John wrote his epistles (1, 2, and 3 John), he simply identified himself as “the Elder.” So it is thought that John must have been the only surviving apostle at that time. He wrote those letters from Ephesus about A.D. 85–90, just before writing his Gospel. In about A.D. 94, John was banished to the island of Patmos during the reign of Domitian. There, this wise and elder apostle received the dramatic vision of the future from Jesus, given to us as the book of Revelation. John probably returned to Ephesus during Nerva’s reign and then died there during the reign of Trajan, around A.D. 100.

John provides a powerful example of a lifetime of service to Christ. As a young man, John left his fishing nets to follow the Savior. For three intense years he watched Jesus live and love, and listened to him teach and preach. John saw Jesus crucified and then risen! John’s life was changed dramatically, from an impetuous, hot-tempered youth, to a loving and wise man of God. Through it all, John remained faithful, so that at the end of his life, he continued to bear strong witness to the truth and power of the gospel.

How strong is your commitment to Christ? Will it last through the years? The true test of an athlete is not in the start but the finish. So too with faithfulness to Christ—how will you finish that race?

DATE AND SETTING

Written between A.D. 85–90 from Ephesus, after the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70) and before John’s exile to the island of Patmos

The Gospel of John contains no references concerning where it was written. But according to the earliest traditions of the church, John wrote his Gospel from Ephesus. The church at Ephesus had been founded by Paul on his second missionary journey in A.D. 52 (Acts 18:19-21). The church grew under the ministry of Apollos, Priscilla, and Aquila (Acts 18:24-26). Paul returned to Ephesus on his third missionary journey and had an incredible ministry there (Acts 19:1–20:1). Later, during his first Roman imprisonment, Paul wrote the letter to the Ephesians (about A.D. 60). That church is described in Revelation 2:1-7.

We don’t know how old John was when Jesus called him. But assuming that John was a little younger than Jesus, John would have been in his eighties when writing this Gospel, which was quite old for a time when the life expectancy was much shorter. And considering the fact that all the other apostles had died as martyrs, John was indeed the church’s elder statesman. We can imagine him teaching and counseling the Christians in this well-established church, as well as doing some writing.

AUDIENCE

New Christians and searching non-Christians.

John does not reveal his audience directly, but several characteristics of the book provide insight into the people he was trying to reach.

1. The Gospel of John differs greatly from the other three Gospels in content and approach. Matthew, Mark, and Luke (the Synoptic Gospels) present much historical data with few explanations or interpretations. John, however, selected key events and took time to explain and apply them. In addition, John chose to write about a few important, miraculous signs (20:30-31) in order to give a clear picture of the person of Christ.
2. John illustrates the tension between faith and unbelief and emphasizes the importance of responding to Christ. He states this fact at the very beginning and carries it throughout the book (1:12).
3. John uses simple vocabulary but chooses special words and loads them with meaning—for example, word, truth, light, darkness, life, and love.
4. John repeats four main points: the true identity of Jesus, the necessity of responding to Christ in faith, the gift of eternal life, and the church's mission to the world.
5. John explains his purpose clearly (20:31).

John presents the evidence for Jesus as the God-man and the Savior of the world, and he challenges readers to follow his Lord. So we can conclude that John wrote to unbelieving Asian Jews and Gentiles.

But John also wrote to Christians, to help strengthen their faith. John was the last surviving apostle and one of the few still living who had seen Jesus in the flesh. It would be easy for young believers—removed from Christ's life, death, and resurrection by a generation and surrounded by a hostile government and unbelieving neighbors—to have doubts and second thoughts about their faith. Remember, this is the late eighties, after the terrible persecutions by Nero (A.D. 54–68) and the total destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70). The church had flourished under persecution, but believers needed reassurance of the truth of Christianity. John, the venerable eyewitness to all that Jesus had done and faithful follower of his Lord, would give that assurance through his personal account of the gospel story.

OCCASION AND PURPOSE

John gives a clear and straightforward statement of his purpose for writing this book: “But these are written so that you may believe that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God, and that by believing in him you will have life” (20:31). To achieve this purpose, John shows, throughout the Gospel, that Jesus was, in fact, the Christ, the Son of God, the prophesied one, and the only source of salvation. This is the dominant theme of the entire book.

The Gospel of John was written to convince those who had not seen Jesus to believe in him, to help believers deepen their faith, and to convince unbelievers to trust in Jesus Christ as their Savior. In addition, John had several other emphases worth noting. John showed that the Jewish leaders were completely wrong in rejecting Jesus as the Messiah. John continues this emphasis throughout the book. John also emphasized that Jesus is much greater than John the Baptist. It may be that some followers of John the Baptist were still claiming that he was more important than Jesus. Whatever the reason, John declared the preeminence of Christ and John the Baptist's special role in preparing the way for him (see 1:6-8, 15-18, 19-27, 35-38; 3:25-30).

John focused on the deity and humanity of Jesus. It is possible that he did this to confront a docetic heresy promoting the false notion that Jesus only seemed to be living a human life—that he was not fully human. John also mentioned Jesus' family ties (2:12; 7:3-5), stated that Jesus became tired (4:6), and showed that Jesus really died on the cross (19:33-34). John clearly presented Jesus as the God-man. John also described the work of the Holy Spirit, assuring believers of the presence of the risen Christ. Through the Holy Spirit, Christians have Christ with them; they don't have to face life alone. John spoke of the work of the Holy Spirit more than any other Gospel writer.

John reminded the believers that unbelief and opposition to God and his plans do not surprise God or thwart his purposes. This includes the betrayal by Judas (foretold by prophets and known by Jesus—6:64; 13:18; Psalm 41:9), the death of Jesus on the cross (a necessary part of God's salvation plan—3:14-18), and the rejection of Christ by unbelievers (1:10-11). Although conflicts are inevitable, God is sovereign and in control, and his goals will be accomplished.

Because of John's special purpose for writing this book, he described many incidents in the life of Christ that are not recorded in the other Gospels. These events include: John the Baptist declaring Jesus to be the Messiah, Jesus turning water into wine, Nicodemus visiting Jesus at night, Jesus talking to a Samaritan woman at the well, Jesus healing a government official's son, Jesus healing a lame man by the pool, Jesus' brothers ridiculing him, Jesus healing the man who was born blind, Jesus raising Lazarus from the dead, Jesus teaching about the Holy Spirit, Jesus teaching about the vine and the branches, and Jesus appearing to Thomas and reinstating Peter after his resurrection.

MESSAGE

John discloses Jesus' identity with his very first words, "In the beginning the Word already existed. He was with God, and he was God. He was in the beginning with God” (1:1-2); and the rest of the book continues the theme. John, the eyewitness, chose nine of Jesus’ miracles (or miraculous signs, as he calls them) to reveal his divine/human nature and his life-giving mission. These signs are (1) turning water to wine (2:1-11); (2) healing the official’s son (4:46-54); (3) healing the lame man at the pool of Bethesda (5:1-9); (4) feeding the 5,000 with just a few loaves and fish (6:1-14); (5) walking on the water (6:15-21); (6) restoring sight to the blind man (9:1-41); (7) raising Lazarus from the dead (11:1-44); (8) Jesus’ own resurrection (20:1-29), and, after the Resurrection; (9) giving the disciples an overwhelming catch of fish (21:1-14).

In every chapter Jesus’ deity is revealed. And Jesus’ true identity is underscored through the titles he is given—the Word, the only Son, Lamb of God, Son of God, true bread, life, resurrection, vine. And the formula is “I am.” When Jesus uses this phrase, he affirms his preexistence and eternal deity. Jesus says, I am the bread of life (6:35); I am the light of the world (8:12; 9:5); I am the gate (10:7); I am the good shepherd (10:11, 14); I am the resurrection and the life (11:25); I am the way, and the truth, and the life (14:6); and I am the true vine (15:1).

The main themes in the Gospel of John include: Jesus Christ, Son of God; eternal life; believing; Holy Spirit; and resurrection—because John’s purpose was to convince people to believe in Christ, it’s not surprising that his message follows the themes listed here. In order to trust Christ, a person must understand Jesus’ true identity, the promise of eternal life, the necessity of faith, and the resurrection of Christ. And to live for Christ, a person must understand the person and work of the Holy Spirit.

Jesus Christ, Son of God (1:1-18; 2:1-11; 4:46-54; 5:1-15; 6:5-14; 6:16-21; 9:1-12; 11:1-44; 19:1–20:30). Because this is a “Gospel,” the entire book tells about Jesus. But in relating the life of the Lord, John chose nine “signs” (miracles) that illustrate and prove Jesus’ true identity as God’s Son. These chosen signs (seven miracles plus the Resurrection) display Christ’s glory and reveal his true nature: (1) turning the water into wine (2:1-11); (2) healing the royal official’s son (4:46-54), (3) healing the invalid by the pool at Bethesda (5:1-15); (4) feeding the 5,000 (6:5-14); (5) walking on water (6:16-21); (6) healing a man blind from birth (9:1-41); (7) raising Lazarus from the dead (11:1-44); (8) rising from the dead (20:1-29); (9) giving the disciples an overwhelming catch of fish (21:1-14). John shows us that Jesus is unique as God’s special Son, yet he is fully God. Because he is fully God, Jesus is able to reveal God to us, clearly and accurately.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Because Jesus is God, he has the nature, ability, and right to offer eternal life. When he died on the cross, he was the perfect sacrifice and only mediator between God and people (14:6). Because Jesus became a man, he identified fully with us, enduring temptation, persecution, hardship, and suffering. Through the Incarnation, the infinite, holy, and all-powerful God demonstrated his love for us. As believers in Christ, we must affirm both sides of his nature and not exclude or diminish one side in favor of the other. Jesus is fully God and fully man.

Eternal Life (3:15-16, 36; 4:14, 36; 5:24, 39-40; 6:27, 40, 47, 54, 58; 8:51; 10:10, 27-30; 11:25-26; 12:25, 49-50; 20:30-31). Jesus came to bring us life, eternal life. This life begins now, on this earth, through faith in Christ. Jesus said, “My purpose is to give life in all its fullness” (10:10). The life that Christ offers also continues beyond death. Obtaining eternal life is not automatic or magic. People aren’t saved just because Jesus became a man and died and rose again. Individuals must believe in Jesus; they must trust in him. John presents Jesus as the Good Shepherd who lays down his life for the sheep (10:11, 15, 17). His death is said to be a saving death—he is the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world (1:29, 36). But his sacrifice is applied only to those who repent and believe (1:12; 2:11; 3:15-16, 18, 36; and many other passages).

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Life on earth is short, and filled with struggles, suffering, and hardships. Of course, there are moments of ecstasy and joy, but for many those moments are very few. And because all human beings are mortal, eventually everyone dies. That description is not mere pessimism, but truth. But God offers hope amidst the suffering—eternal life. Through faith in Christ, we have abundant life now and life unending after we die. The assurance of eternal life gives hope, meaning, and purpose as we live each day. Jesus offers eternal life to us. We are invited to begin living in a personal, eternal relationship with him that begins now. Although we must grow old and die, we can have a new life that lasts forever by trusting Jesus.

Believing (1:12, 50; 2:11, 23; 3:15-18; 4:39-42, 48-53; 5:24-47; 6:30, 47, 64; 8:24, 31; 9:38; 10:25-42; 11:25-27; 12:37-46; 14:11-14; 16:9; 17:8, 20; 20:25-30). Belief in Jesus as the Messiah and Son of God is the central theme of this book and the desired response from all who read it. Knowing that Jesus is the Son of God and that eternal life is available only through him, people must believe in Jesus as their Savior and Lord. The first step toward eternal life is to believe the facts about Jesus. But having saving faith (“believing”) involves much more than mental assent to the truth. John emphasizes Jesus’ strong teaching that those who truly believe in Christ turn from their sin, follow him closely, and obey his teachings. The person who puts his or her faith in Christ

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. Believing is active, living, and continuous trust in Jesus as God. When we believe in his life, his words, his death, and his resurrection, we are cleansed from sin and receive power to follow him. But we must respond to Christ by believing. This believing begins with the facts about Jesus, but it must go deeper, involving total commitment to him. Do you truly believe in Jesus? Remember, too, that we also live in a world of skeptics. Most people won't believe that something is true simply because we tell them, especially regarding religion. They need to see Jesus in action, to read about his claims and his miracles, and to understand his teachings. As we explain to relatives, friends, neighbors, and coworkers about how they can have eternal life, we need to present the evidence that Jesus is the Son of God and their only hope.

Holy Spirit (1:32-34; 3:5; 6:63; 7:39; 14:16-26; 15:26; 16:7-15). The first mention of the Holy Spirit in the Gospel of John is John the Baptist's statement at Jesus' baptism: "I saw the Holy Spirit descending" (1:32). He adds that Jesus will baptize "with the Holy Spirit" (1:33). We know, therefore, that Jesus possessed the Spirit. The main teaching about the Holy Spirit in the Gospel of John, however, describes him as the Counselor. This Holy Spirit would come and abide in the disciples after the departure of Jesus, to teach them, remind them of his words (14:26), and show them the truth (16:13). The Holy Spirit would bear witness to Jesus through the disciples before the world (15:26-27) and will do his convicting work in the hearts of men and women in the world (16:7-11).

All of these actions of the Holy Spirit are parallel to the work of Jesus on earth. Jesus claimed to be the way, the truth, and the life (14:6), and he preached about sin (8:24), righteousness (8:42-47), and judgment (9:39). Jesus taught his disciples that the Holy Spirit would come after he left the earth. The Holy Spirit would then indwell, guide, counsel, and comfort those who follow Jesus. Through the Holy Spirit, Christ's presence and power are multiplied in all who believe.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. God has sent the Holy Spirit into the world to draw people to himself and to work in the lives of believers. As we read and study God's word, the Holy Spirit will guide us into the truth (16:13), helping us understand about Christ and about God's principles for living. One of our responsibilities as believers is to testify about Christ in the world (15:27), passing on what the Holy Spirit tells us (15:26). As we do this, we can be confident that the Holy Spirit will be working in the lives of men and women, convicting them of their sin and their need to trust Christ as Savior (16:7-11). We must know the Holy Spirit to understand all Jesus taught. We can experience Jesus' love and guidance as we allow the Holy Spirit to work in us.

Resurrection (20:1–21:23). The greatest sign presented by John of the divinity of Jesus is his resurrection from the dead. Just as Jesus really lived as a man on the earth, he really died on the cross. The witnesses to Jesus' death were many: the Roman soldiers (19:23-24, 32-34), the chief priests and other Jewish religious leaders (19:21), the crowd (19:20), a small collection of his loyal followers (19:25-27), and those who buried him, Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus (19:38-42).

But Jesus' death was not the end of the story. He arose, triumphant over death. Mary Magdalene, John, and Peter found the tomb empty (20:1-9). Then Mary Magdalene met the risen Christ face to face (20:10-18). Later, the disciples saw Jesus alive (20:19-29; 21:1-23). The fact of the Resurrection changed the disciples' lives—from fearful men who fled danger to courageous witnesses who took the gospel to every corner of their world, from discouraged and disillusioned followers to hopeful and joyful “Christ-ones” (i.e., “Christians”—ones belonging to Christ). The fact that Jesus rose from the dead is the foundation of the Christian faith.

IMPORTANCE FOR TODAY. The resurrection of Christ from the dead is important for us for several reasons. Because Jesus rose from the dead, we know that he is, in fact, the Son of God and that all he taught is true. Jesus taught that whoever believes in him will have eternal life (3:16-18). Because Jesus is God and truthful, we know that his promise of eternal life is also true. Jesus is alive, therefore we worship and serve a living Savior. We can be changed as the disciples were and have the confidence that some day our bodies will be raised to live with Christ forever. The same power that raised Christ to life can give us the ability to follow him each day.

The broken lines (---) indicate modern boundaries.

John's story begins as John the Baptist ministers near Bethany east of the Jordan (1:28ff). Jesus also begins his ministry, talking to some of the men who would later become his twelve disciples. Jesus' ministry in Galilee began with a visit to a wedding in Cana (2:1ff). Then he went to Capernaum, which became his new home (2:12). He journeyed to Jerusalem for the special festivals (2:13) and there met with Nicodemus, a religious leader (3:1ff). When Jesus left Judea, he traveled through Samaria and ministered to the Samaritans (4:1ff). Jesus did miracles in Galilee (4:46ff) and in Judea and Jerusalem (5:1ff). We follow him as he fed 5,000 near Bethsaida beside the Sea of Galilee (6:1ff), walked on the water to his frightened disciples (6:16ff), preached through Galilee (7:1), returned to Jerusalem (7:2ff), preached beyond the Jordan in Perea (10:40), raised Lazarus from the dead in Bethany (11:1ff), and finally entered Jerusalem for the last time to celebrate the Passover with his disciples and give them key teachings about what was to come and how they should act. His last hours before his crucifixion were spent in the city (13:1ff), in a grove of olive trees (the Garden of Gethsemane) (18:1ff), and finally in various buildings in Jerusalem during his trial (18:12ff). He would be crucified, but he would rise again as he had promised.

GOD BECAME A HUMAN / 1:1-18 / 2

John starts at the “beginning,” with the first eighteen verses of John, called the prologue. Many commentators consider the prologue to be a poem or, at least, rhythmical prose. Some commentators suggest that verses 1-5, 10-12, and 14-18 may have been parts of one or several early Christian hymns. Others have thought that verses 14-18 were used as an early church confessional statement, to which John added his stamp of approval. John’s goal and guiding purpose in writing can be found in almost every phrase of his work. In the rest of the Gospel, John expanded and illustrated each of these from Jesus’ life and ministry.

1:1 When John wrote of the beginning, he was paralleling the words of the creation account. John called Jesus, “the Word.” John did not identify this person immediately, but described his nature and purpose before revealing his name (see 1:17). As the Word, the Son of God fully conveys and communicates God.

Theologians and philosophers, both Jews and Greeks, used the term “word” in a variety of ways. The Greek term is logos. It could mean a person’s thoughts or reason, or it might refer to a person’s speech, the expression of thoughts. As a philosophical term, logos conveyed the rational principle that governed the universe, even the creative energy that generated the universe. In the Hebrew language of the Old Testament, “the Word” is described as an agent of creation (Psalm 33:6), the source of God’s message to his people through the prophets (Hosea 1:2), and God’s law, his standard of holiness (Psalm 119:11).

John may have had these ideas in mind, but his description shows clearly that he spoke of Jesus as a human being he knew and loved (see especially 1:14), who was at the same time the Creator of the universe, the ultimate revelation of God, and also the living picture of God’s holiness. Jesus as the logos reveals God’s mind to us.

By using the expression, he was with God, John was explaining that the Word (the Son) and God (the Father) already enjoyed an intimate, personal relationship in the beginning. The last verse of the prologue (1:18) tells us that the Son was at the Father’s side; and in Jesus’ special prayer for his followers (chapter 17), he expressed that the Father loved him before the foundation of the world.

Not only was the Son with God, he was himself God. John’s Gospel, more than most books in the New Testament, asserts Jesus' divinity. One of the most compelling reasons to believe the doctrine of the Trinity comes from the fact that it was revealed through a people most likely to reject it outright. In a world populated by many gods, it took the tough-minded Hebrews to clarify the revelation of God's oneness expressed through "three-in-oneness."

1:2 The second verse of the prologue underscores the truth that the Word, the Son, was in the beginning with God. A wrong teaching called the "Arian heresy" developed in the fourth century of Christianity. Arius, the father of this heresy, was a priest of Alexandria (in Egypt) during the reign of Emperor Constantine. He taught that Jesus, the Son of God, was not eternal but was created by the Father. Therefore, Jesus was not God by nature. Arius's views gained some support. At the Church Council in Nicea in ^{A.D.} 325, Athanasius defeated Arius in debate and the Nicene Creed was adopted, which established the biblical teaching that Jesus was "one essence with the Father." Yet this controversy raged until it was defeated at the Council of Constantinople in ^{A.D.} 325. This heresy still exists, however, in several cults. Yet John's Gospel proclaims simply and clearly that the Son of God is coeternal with the Father.

1:3 The New Testament portrays the Son of God as the agent of creation, for all things were created through him (see 1 Corinthians 8:6; Colossians 1:16; Hebrews 1:2). Everything came into being through Christ and ultimately depends upon him.

1:4 Creation needs to receive life from the Word—for life itself was in him. Christ gives physical life to all. But he also gives eternal life to all those who believe in him. The Greek term used for "life" is zoe; it is always used to describe the divine, eternal life in the Gospel of John. Jesus used this specific term during the Last Supper when he told his disciples, "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (14:6).

The divine life embodied in Christ gives light to everyone—revealing divine truth and exposing their sin. Everywhere Christ went, he brought light (see 3:21; 8:12). Light means understanding and moral insight, spiritual vision. But more than just shining or reflecting, the light of Jesus penetrates and enlightens hearts and minds. Everyone who comes into contact with Christ can be enlightened. When Christ's light shines, we see our sin and his glory. We can refuse to see the light and remain in darkness. But whoever responds will be enlightened by Christ. He will fill our minds with God's thoughts. He will guide our path, give us God's perspective, and drive out the darkness of sin.

1:5 John used the past tense in the previous sentence, saying that Jesus was the light of all people by virtue of being their Creator; but John shifted to the present tense: the light shines through the darkness. The timeless light has invaded our time, and we can see it in our darkness. As the light shines, it drives away the darkness, for the unsaved world is blinded by the prince of this world (2 Corinthians 4:4; Ephesians 5:8). Christ's light shined to a hardened, darkened humanity—and he continues to shine. But the darkness can never extinguish it. This statement indicates the struggle between the darkness and the light. Unregenerate humanity under the influence of Satan, the prince of darkness, has not accepted the light and even resists the light. Thus, “darkness” indicates ignorance and sin, active rejection of God's will. Those in darkness reject Christ, his light, and his followers. But no matter how deep the darkness, even a small light can drive it back. The power of Christ's light overcomes any darkness in the world.

1:6-8 John abruptly introduces Jesus' forerunner and herald, John the Baptist. God sent John the Baptist to prepare the way for the Messiah. John the Baptist has a prominent position in the prologue because his ministry prepared the way for the Messiah—he pointed people to Jesus. John the Baptist's function was to tell everyone about the light so that everyone might believe because of his testimony. He was the first to point people to Christ, so in a very real sense, all who have come to believe have done so because of his witness. John himself was not the light, but he came as a witness to the light. He was first in a line of witnesses that stretches through the centuries to this day.

1:9 The word everyone here could be nationalistically inclusive, referring to both Jews and Gentiles, or it could refer to all individuals. Every person has life from God, thus they have some light; creation reveals God's power and divinity (1:3; Acts 14:17; Romans 1:19-20; 2:14-16); and our conscience also bears witness to God's existence. The Gospel writer's description captures the transition between the ministry of John the Baptist as herald and the ministry of Jesus, the true light. Jesus, as opposed to any other “luminaries,” is the true and exclusive revelation of God to man. Because of this, we can count on him.

1:10 John notes one of the greatest tragedies: the world—humankind—didn't recognize its own Creator. They were blinded and could not see his light. Although Christ created the world, the people he created didn't recognize him. He was denied the general acknowledgment that should have been his as Creator.

1:11 In Greek this reads, “He came to his own things”—that is, he came to that which belonged to him. The expression can even be used to describe a homecoming. This phrase intensifies the description of Christ’s rejection. Jesus was not welcome in the world, or even his home. His own land and his own people refer to God’s chosen nation, Israel, which was particularly Christ’s. He was not accepted by those who should have been most eager to welcome him. As a nation, they rejected their Messiah. This rejection is further described at the end of Jesus’ ministry (12:37-41). Isaiah had foreseen this unbelief (Isaiah 53:1-3). In spite of the rejection described here, John steers clear of passing sentence on the world. Instead, he turns our attention on those who did welcome Christ in sincere faith.

1:12-13 Though the rejection of Christ was universal, individuals did respond personally—some believed him and accepted him as the Son of God, the Savior. To them he gave the right to become children of God. In Greek right means “authority or permission.” In this context, it speaks of God granting the right or giving the privilege for the new birth. No one can attain this new birth by his or her own power, merit, or ability. Only God can grant it. One is not in God’s family because he or she is a Jew by physical birth (or even born into a Christian family). The new birth cannot be attained by an act of human passion, and it has absolutely nothing to do with any human plan. It is a gift of God.

Many believed superficially in Jesus when they saw his miracles, but they did not believe in Jesus as the Son of God. They “believed” in him while he fulfilled their expectations of what the Messiah should be, but they left him when he defied their preconceived notions. We must believe in Jesus as Jesus, the Son of God; we must wholeheartedly believe in Jesus, not limiting him to our ideas and misconceptions; we must regard Jesus as the Bible truly presents him.

1:14 Returning to the powerful term used at the beginning of the Gospel, John continues the theme of the prologue. The first thirteen verses summarize “the Word’s” relationship to the world as its rejected Creator, Visitor, Light, and Savior. Yet throughout the opening paragraph, John does not identify the Word as being human, except in the personal pronouns.

The phrase, became human, is striking and arresting, despite its familiarity. Understanding its meaning simply increases our wonder. When Jesus was born, he was not part man and part God; he was completely human and completely divine (Colossians 2:9). Before Christ came, people could know God partially. After Christ had come, people could know God fully because he became visible and tangible (Hebrews 1:1-3). Christ is the perfect expression of God in human form. The two most common errors that people make about Jesus are minimizing his humanity or minimizing his divinity. Jesus is both divine and human (see Philippians 2:5-9). God, in Jesus, lived on earth among people. The man living with the disciples was God incarnate! John was overwhelmed with that truth. He began his first letter by describing the experience of seeing, touching, and hearing this Word who became flesh and was with them (1 John 1:1-4). In Christ, God came to meet with people; through Christ we can come to meet with God. John described him as full of unfailing love and faithfulness.

Glory refers to Christ's divine greatness and shining moral splendor. (For a specific instance of "seeing his glory," see 2:11.) This is perhaps the clearest example of what John was thinking when he and two other disciples saw Jesus' Transfiguration (see Matthew 17:1-13. Peter spoke of it specifically in 2 Peter 1:16-18). This was the glory of the only Son of the Father. The Son was the Father's one and only, his unique Son. Although all believers are called "children" (1:12-13), Jesus is one of a kind and enjoys a special relationship with God. Eastern thought teaches a cycle of reincarnation. Many Hindus believe that Jesus was one in a series of reincarnations of Krishna. But John teaches that Jesus, as the unique Son of God, has a special glory and an unrivaled, unparalleled, and unrepeatable place of honor.

1:15 John the Baptist declared that Christ is far greater than I am, for he existed long before I did. Although Jesus was humanly born after John the Baptist, Jesus existed from eternity past. For this reason, Jesus outranked John the Baptist.

1:16 The rich blessings indicate superabundance and completeness. When John spoke of Jesus' benefiting his people with one gracious blessing after another, he was affirming that he had never found Jesus lacking in any way. John's description conveys a subtle invitation for us to trust Jesus' ability to meet our needs.

That we have all benefited includes all the believers, not just John and the apostles. All believers receive Christ's blessings, but nothing can deplete Christ—no matter how much the believers receive of him, he keeps on giving. His strength is not diminished by helping us. Believers do not need to seek any other source of spiritual power but Christ. Christ himself fulfills our Christian life; we do not need to seek anything beyond him. The blessings given by Christ can never be exhausted.

1:17 John introduced one of the central questions Jesus would answer: Because law and God's unfailing love seem to contradict, what action should people take? Both law and love express God's nature. Moses emphasized God's law and justice, while Jesus Christ came to highlight God's mercy, love, and forgiveness. Moses could only be the giver of the law, while Christ came to fulfill perfectly the law (Matthew 5:17). The law revealed the nature and will of God; now Jesus Christ reveals the nature and will of God. Rather than coming through cold stone tablets, God's revelation now comes through a person's life. As we get to know Christ better, our understanding of God will increase.

1:18 This statement, no one has ever seen God, seems to contradict passages like Exodus 24:9-11, which says that the elders of Israel "saw God." What then does John mean? Very likely, he is affirming the fact that no human being has seen the essential being of God. Some men experienced "theophanies" (special appearances of God in various forms), but no one saw the essential being of God. Only the Son, who is himself God, can communicate his glory to us. The Son is near to the Father's heart, picturing the Son as a child in close dependence on his Father—enjoying a close and warm relationship with him. It also reflects the image of two close companions enjoying a meal together. According to an ancient custom, the one who reclined next to the master at a meal was the one dearest to him. This is the Son who has told us about God. The Son is God's explainer; he came to earth and lived among people to explain God to us—with his words and by his person. No one can know God apart from Christ, God's explainer. Again, this mirrors verse 1, where the Son is called "the Word"—the expression of God, the communicator of God.

JOHN THE BAPTIST DECLARES HIS MISSION / 1:19-28 / 19

His stirring summary accomplished, John launched into telling the gospel. He had already introduced John the Baptist in the prologue. His overall description of the wilderness preacher leaves out the physical notes of the other Gospels (see Mark 1:1-11; Luke 1:5-25, 57-80; 3:1-20) but focuses instead on his unique role as herald of the Messiah. The messianic expectations of the time, combined with his initial success in attracting large crowds, made John the Baptist the subject of speculation: Could he be the Messiah?

1:19-21 John the Baptist's calling in life was described to his father even before John was conceived (Luke 1:13-17). John's mission was to give testimony to Jesus Christ (1:7). He was Christ's first and most important witness. John disavowed any personal status; he constantly pointed men to Christ. The Jewish leaders, priests, and Temple assistants were respected religious leaders in Jerusalem. The leaders who came to see John were Pharisees (1:24), a group that both John the Baptist and Jesus often denounced. Many Pharisees outwardly obeyed God's laws in order to look pious, while inwardly their hearts were filled with pride and greed.

These leaders came to see John the Baptist to ask him whether he claimed to be the Messiah. Their question indicates that the Jews were looking for the Messiah. John flatly denied that, making it perfectly clear that he was not the Christ; rather, he was one who prepared the way for the Christ.

John's role and actions reminded these religious leaders of what had been written of Elijah (see 2 Kings 2:11). The Old Testament predicted that Elijah would come to prepare the way for the Messiah (see Malachi 3:1; 4:5-6). John the Baptist, in the spirit of Elijah (Luke 1:17), had come to prepare the way for the Christ, but he did not claim to be Elijah. So then they asked him if he was the Prophet foretold by Moses (Deuteronomy 18:15). Again he said no.

1:22-23 His questioners wanted John to claim a special identity; he was perfectly content in his role. He simply called himself, in the words of the Old Testament prophet Isaiah, "I am a voice shouting in the wilderness, 'Prepare a straight pathway for the Lord's coming!'" (Isaiah 40:3). John quoted Isaiah 40, a portion that introduces the Messiah's forerunner and herald. In Isaiah 40:3-11, this herald announced the coming of the divine Shepherd. In ancient times, a herald (or forerunner) would go before a dignitary to announce his coming and to clear the way before him. John was the Messiah's herald and forerunner; he came on the scene to announce Jesus' coming and to exhort people to prepare the way to receive him.

The leaders kept pressing John to say who he was because people were expecting the Messiah to come (Luke 3:15). But John emphasized only why he had come—to prepare the way for the Messiah. Those sent by the religious leaders of Jerusalem confronted a man sent by God; they had run out of stereotypes and were ready to listen. Although their attentiveness was hostile, John gave them an answer.

1:24-25 John was being grilled by those who were sent by the Pharisees. They wanted to know what right he had to baptize if he wasn't the Messiah or Elijah or the Prophet. John had not invented baptism. Gentiles converting to Judaism were baptized as an initiation rite. But John was calling upon Jews to be baptized. Since this was new, the leaders demanded an explanation from John.

1:26-28 It was John's function to provide the means for God's cleansing through water baptism; it would be Jesus' function to provide the people with an infusion of the Spirit. John was merely helping the people perform a symbolic act of repentance. But the one who would be able to truly forgive sins was there in the crowd. The Son of God had taken up his abode among his own people, the Jews; but they did not realize it. John said that he was not even worthy to be that man's slave. John knew who he was in comparison to Jesus. This took place at Bethany to the east of the Jordan River, a site that has never been determined. This is different than the Bethany Jesus visited during his ministry.

JOHN THE BAPTIST PROCLAIMS JESUS AS THE MESSIAH / 1:29-34 / 20

The opening portion of John's narrative provides two witnesses to Jesus Christ's identity. The first witness is John the Baptist; this is covered in verses 19-36. John the Baptist's witness had been briefly mentioned in the prologue (1:7, 15) and is here expanded. The second witness comes from Jesus' first disciples—John (the Gospel writer), Andrew, Peter, Philip, and Nathanael. Both John the Baptist and the disciples declare and affirm that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.

1:29 The title Lamb of God would be associated in the minds of the Jews with the Passover lamb (Exodus 12) and the lambs used in the daily sacrifices for the sin offerings (see Leviticus 14:12, 21, 24; Numbers 6:12). Every morning and evening, a lamb was sacrificed in the Temple for the sins of the people (Exodus 29:38-42). Isaiah 53:7 prophesied that the Messiah, God's servant, would be led to the slaughter like a lamb. To pay the penalty for sin, a life had to be given—God chose to provide the sacrifice himself. When Jesus died as the perfect sacrifice, he removed the sin of the world and destroyed the power of sin itself. Thus God forgives our sin (1 Corinthians 5:7). In calling Jesus the Lamb of God, John pointed to Jesus as the substitutionary sacrifice provided by God.

Jesus takes away the sin of the world. The Greek word for "takes away" can also mean "take up." Jesus took away our sin by taking it upon himself. This is the image depicted in Isaiah 53:4-9 and 1 Peter 2:24. The "sin of the world" means the sin of each individual. Jesus paid the price of our sin by his death. We claim the forgiveness he provided by first taking ownership of our sin.

1:30 This verse, which reiterates 1:15, is here put in its chronological context. Although John the Baptist was a well-known preacher who attracted large crowds, he was content that Jesus take the higher place. John demonstrated true humility, the basis for greatness in preaching, teaching, or any other work we do for Christ. Accepting what God wants us to do and giving Jesus Christ the honor for it allows God to work freely through us.

1:31 Since John and Jesus were cousins, John must have known Jesus before this time. But this statement means that John had not realized that Jesus was God's Son, the Messiah, until God provided the sign of the Spirit descending upon Jesus. Though John had not yet clearly seen the Messiah, he knew that the Messiah was coming and that his mission was to point him out to Israel. But, as John would soon explain, he had been instructed to baptize, and as he was baptizing he saw a sign that indicated the arrival of the one he had come to announce.

1:32-34 Evidently, the action of the Holy Spirit descending like a dove from heaven was a sign for John. Only John and Jesus saw this (see Matthew 3:16). The other Gospel writers tell us that a voice accompanied this divine sign (Matthew 3:17). God had sent John to baptize and to prepare the way for the Messiah. This same God promised to reveal the Messiah to John by the Holy Spirit upon him.

In well-known prophetic passages, the Messiah was depicted as having the Spirit resting upon him (see Isaiah 11:1-2; 61:1ff.). The statement that he is the one who baptizes with the Holy Spirit foretells Jesus' divine mission. It does not just point to the day of Pentecost on which Jesus sent the Holy Spirit to baptize the disciples (see Luke 24:49; Acts 1:8; 2:4); it characterizes Jesus' entire ministry. Jesus came to give eternal life to those who believe in him. But no one could actually receive that life apart from receiving the life-giving Holy Spirit.

John the Baptist's baptism with water was preparatory because it was for repentance and symbolized the washing away of sins. Jesus, by contrast, would baptize with the Holy Spirit, imparting not only forgiveness but also eternal life. He would send the Holy Spirit upon all believers, empowering them to live and to teach the message of salvation. This outpouring of the Spirit came after Jesus had risen from the dead and ascended into heaven (see 20:22; Acts 2). All true believers have been baptized by Jesus in the Holy Spirit (see Romans 8:9). As such, we have been immersed in Jesus' Spirit. Now we can experience the life-giving Spirit and enjoy his presence day by day.

John was declaring Jesus' special position with God. God had told John that he would reveal his sent one to John—the Spirit would descend upon the Messiah and remain upon him. John saw this happen to Jesus and declared his belief in Jesus as God's identified Son.

THE FIRST DISCIPLES FOLLOW JESUS / 1:35-51 / 21

This last section of John 1 records how the earliest believers became disciples of Jesus; it is a drama of salvation revealing the formation of Jesus' first band of disciples. Andrew and John became Jesus' followers through the testimony of their teacher, John the Baptist. Peter, Andrew's brother, became a follower through the testimony of Andrew. Philip became a disciple by Jesus seeking him out and calling him to follow him. And Nathanael became a believer through the testimony of Philip and the revelation Jesus gave to him. This progression provides a model for evangelism.

1:35-36 These disciples of John the Baptist were Andrew (see 1:40) and John, the writer of this Gospel. Both these men had followed John the Baptist until he pointed them to the Lamb of God, Jesus Christ. Why did these disciples leave John the Baptist? Because that's what John wanted them to do—he was pointing the way to Jesus, the one John had prepared them to follow. This was the second time that John declared that Jesus was the Lamb of God (see comments on 1:29).

1:37 These disciples followed Jesus in two ways. They literally turned and walked after him, and they also became two of Jesus' close followers, or disciples. This was a great tribute to John the Baptist's preaching—they heard John and followed Jesus.

1:38-39 Those coming to Christ, whether for the first time or each day in worship, should ask themselves this question—"What do I want? What do I expect to receive from Jesus?" The question, "Where are you staying?" indicates that John and Andrew were serious followers. They wanted to know where to find Jesus. This indicates a commitment, not an experiment. John recalls the exact time he first stayed with Jesus. It must have been a special opportunity for John and Andrew—a time never to be forgotten. We can only imagine their wonder as they spent the rest of the day alone with Jesus. From this time forward, these two men became his disciples.

1:40-42 After spending a day with Jesus, Andrew immediately went to find his brother Simon (who would later be named Peter) and tell him that he had found the Messiah (the Hebrew term), or the Christ (the Greek translation of "Messiah," meaning "Anointed One"; see Isaiah 61:1).

Andrew brought Simon to meet Jesus. Andrew appears two more times in this Gospel; each time he is bringing people to Jesus (see 6:4-9; 12:20-22). Jesus changed Simon's name to Cephas, the Aramaic word for "stone," because Jesus foresaw that Peter would become a pillar and a foundation stone in the building of the first-century church (see Matthew 16:16-18; Galatians 2:9; Ephesians 2:20; 1 Peter 2:4-5).

1:43 Jesus' first two disciples (Andrew and John) sought out Jesus. Andrew brought the third disciple, Peter, to Jesus. Jesus sought out the fourth disciple, Philip. Jesus looked for him, found him, and called him to be his disciple.

1:44-46 Philip must have known Andrew and Peter before he began to follow Jesus for they all were from Bethsaida. Earlier, Andrew had found Simon (his brother) and had brought him to Jesus. Philip does the same with Nathanael.

In the list of disciples in the other Gospels, Philip and Bartholomew are listed together (Matthew 10:3; Mark 3:18); here, Philip and Nathanael are paired up. Thus, it stands to reason that, since Bartholomew is not mentioned in the fourth Gospel and Nathanael is not mentioned in the Synoptic Gospels, Nathanael is none other than Bartholomew.

In saying we have found the promised one, Philip was probably referring to himself, Andrew, and Peter. If this was the case, the first five disciples (John, Andrew, Peter, Philip, and Nathanael) may have been acquainted or even friends. What a delightful experience for a Christian to witness a circle of friends or to see a family be drawn to Jesus.

The language referring to Jesus as the very person Moses and the prophets wrote about indicates that Philip was also a thoughtful seeker—one who read the Old Testament Scriptures and was looking for the Messiah. Moses had written about the Messiah in the Law (see Deuteronomy 18:15-18), and the prophets had foretold his coming. That Jesus is called the son of Joseph refers to Jesus' family line; in other words, this was how Jesus was known among the people (see Luke 3:23—it was supposed that Jesus was Joseph's son). In reality, Jesus was not Joseph's son; he was (and is) God's Son.

Nathanael's statement about Nazareth does not necessarily mean that there was anything wrong with the town. Nazareth was possibly despised by the Jews because a Roman army garrison was located there. Some have speculated that an aloof attitude or a poor reputation in morals and religion on the part of the people of Nazareth led to Nathanael's harsh comment. Nathanael's hometown was Cana, about four miles from Nazareth. Nathanael's expression seems to indicate that he did not expect that anything related to God's purpose could come from that place because Nazareth is not mentioned in the Old Testament. The prophets, moreover, never said that the Messiah would come from Nazareth.

The Messiah was to be born in Bethlehem (Micah 5:2); and, in fact, Jesus was born in Bethlehem. But his parents' flight to Egypt and soon return to Galilee, where Jesus was raised, gave Jesus the reputation of being a Galilean, even a Nazarene. This was offensive to many Jews because they could not accept a Messiah who had not come from Bethlehem.

Philip did not argue with Nathanael about Jesus; he just said, “Come and see for yourself.” Fortunately for Nathanael, he went to meet Jesus and became a disciple. If he had stuck to his prejudice without investigating further, he would have missed the Messiah! We must not let people's stereotypes about Christ cause them to miss his power and love. We must invite them to come and meet Jesus themselves.

1:47 Jesus' statement about Nathanael reveals that Nathanael was an honest man. Jesus' direct, intimate knowledge of him must have taken Nathanael by surprise. He was not offended, just intensely curious. If we remember that God's grace and love come to us even though he knows all about us, we may find ourselves being even more grateful to him.

1:48-49 Here Jesus unveiled his omniscience to Nathanael. Jesus had been aware of Nathanael's exact location before Philip called him. According to Jewish tradition, the expression “to sit under the fig tree” was a euphemism for meditating on the Scriptures. Thus, Jesus had seen Nathanael studying the Scriptures before Philip had called him to come and see Jesus. Instantly, Nathanael realized that Jesus is the Son of God (see Psalm 2:7) and the King of Israel (see Psalm 2:6; Zephaniah 3:15).

The early disciples of Jesus were well versed in the Scriptures. Life in the small towns of Israel revolved around the synagogue, where the Old Testament was constantly read, taught, and argued. Unlike many of the studied religious leaders of the day, these simple men understood the Scriptures, and knew what to look for. So when the Messiah came, they recognized him!

1:50-51 Jesus now speaks to all the disciples there present. He says that they would thereafter see the angels of God going up and down upon the Son of Man. These words allude to Jacob's dream of the ladder connecting heaven and earth upon which the angels of God were ascending and descending (Genesis 28:12). As such, Jesus is the fulfillment of this dream: he is the vehicle of communication between heaven and earth.

JESUS TURNS WATER INTO WINE / 2:1-12 / 22

The miracle of turning water into wine was Jesus' "first display of his glory" (2:11). After his death and resurrection, Jesus would be fully glorified—and all people would (or should) know that he is the Son of God. But until that time, Jesus would reveal his identity by miracles—even though he would have preferred for people to believe in him because of his words. Transforming the water into wine revealed Jesus' glory by showing his tremendous power. This small display of his divine power was enough to convince the disciples of his identity and initiate their trust in him (2:11), though later events demonstrated that they only partially understood Jesus' purpose.

2:1-2 A wedding celebration could last as long as a week (see Genesis 29:27-28). Cana was a town about nine miles north of Nazareth. The only references to the town of Cana are found in John's Gospel. Two of Jesus' miracles are connected with that location: creating wine from water (2:1-11) and healing an official's son (4:46-54). Nathanael, one of the twelve disciples, is described as a native of Cana (21:2). The town has not survived into the present but is thought to have been between Nazareth and Capernaum, in the northwest region of the Sea of Galilee.

Jesus' mother, Mary, was a guest, and Jesus and his disciples were also invited. When a wedding was held, the entire town was invited, and most made the effort to come (it was considered an insult to refuse an invitation to a wedding). Cana was Jesus' home region, so he may have known the bride and groom. In any case, his presence was intentional.

Jesus' attendance and his actions at this wedding indicate his approval of the celebration. (See Jesus' comments about marriage in Matthew 5:31-32; 19:3-9.) Images of Jesus as a dour-faced Messiah, passing judgment on all in his path simply fail to account for the biblical evidence that he was completely at home in festive occasions. In fact, part of his rejection by religious leaders was based on their perception that he enjoyed being with sinners more than was appropriate (see Mark 2:15-16 and Luke 5:30). Jesus' life is the most profound statement ever made against joyless spirituality.

2:3-4 The week-long weddings in Jesus' time must have had about the same impact on family budgets as weddings do today. Banquets were prepared for many guests, and everyone spent several days celebrating the new life of the married couple. To accommodate the guests, careful planning was needed. Running out of wine meant more than embarrassment; it broke the strong unwritten laws of hospitality. Jesus was about to respond to a heartfelt need. Mary told Jesus of the predicament, perhaps expecting him to do something about it. Some believe Mary was not assuming that Jesus would perform a miracle; she was simply hoping that her son would help solve this major problem and find some wine. Tradition says that Joseph, Mary's husband, was dead, so she probably was used to depending on her son's help in certain situations. Although Mary did not know what Jesus was going to do, she trusted him to handle the problem. Others point out that Mary had known for a long time about her son's divine commission. Perhaps she wanted Jesus to do something in the presence of her relatives and/or friends (who may have heard some reports about Jesus) that would prove he was the Messiah. The tension between Jesus' verbal response, "How does that concern you and me?" and his later actions leaves the question of Mary's expectations undecided. But Mary's trust is unmistakable!

In any case, Jesus made it clear to his mother that his life was following a different timetable; he lived to carry out his Father's business, according to his Father's plans. Whatever Jesus' intended response to the problem at hand, he expressed to his mother a firm reminder that his priorities were different from hers—his time had not yet come. The "time" to which Jesus referred was the time of his glorification, when he would receive his true place and position, not as an earthly king, but as the Messiah, God's Son, Savior of mankind, seated at God's right hand (see 7:30, 39; 12:23-24; 17:1). This glorification would occur after his death and resurrection, for it would be only through death and resurrection that Jesus could accomplish what he came to earth to accomplish—to offer salvation to all people.

2:5-6 Mary was not promised any kind of action but realized that Jesus might do something about the situation, even though his remark in verse 4 must have limited her expectations. Nevertheless, Mary's words to the servants to do whatever they are told show her respect for Jesus' authority.

The six stone waterpots were normally used for the ceremonial washing of hands as part of the Jewish purification rites before and after meals (see Matthew 15:1-2). When full, each jar would hold twenty to thirty gallons.

2:7-8 This filling to the brim showed that nothing could be added to the water. When Jesus performed the miracle, all the water was changed to wine; wine was not added to the water. It portrays the abundance of Christ's gracious work; it also indicates the wholeheartedness of the servants' obedience. The servants dipped into the jars and drew out the water that had been miraculously changed to wine. Jesus instructed them to take it to the master of ceremonies.

2:9-10 It was customary to give the best wine first and the poorer wine last because people's taste buds grow less sensitive with more and more drinks. The water turned into wine was of such quality that the master of ceremonies made a point of mentioning this to the bridegroom, who also probably reacted in surprise. Neither of them knew where this wine came from, but Mary, the servants, and the disciples were aware of what had happened.

This miracle illustrated the emptiness of the Jewish rituals versus what Jesus came to bring (see 4:13; 7:38-39). The water of ceremonial cleansing has become the wine of the messianic age. Have we tasted the new wine?

2:11 The Gospels record thirty-five miraculous signs performed by Jesus. In the Gospel of John, each miracle was a sign intended to point people to the truth that Jesus is the divine Son of God come down from heaven. These signs were remarkable actions that displayed the presence and power of God. According to John's Gospel, this was Jesus' first sign—and it was performed in Cana in Galilee (his own region). His second was also performed in Galilee (see 4:46-54).

Many have wondered why Jesus would "waste" his powers on performing a miracle of providing wine for a wedding feast, a party. But all of Jesus' miracles had a purpose beyond alleviating suffering; they were a display of his glory. The miracles recorded in John's Gospel (and indeed all the miracles recorded by the other Gospel writers) demonstrated God's great love for people and his concern for their individual needs. But on a deeper level, Jesus' unique, divine nature was portrayed in such a way as to claim our loyalty and reverence. The sign of turning water into wine was a partial unveiling of Jesus' full identity. His power over nature, death, sin, and evil revealed him to be the promised Messiah.

Up to this point, the disciples (those who had been called thus far) were following Jesus for their own reasons. Others may have been questioning who Jesus was and were following him to find out. John says that when the disciples saw the miracle, they believed in him. The miracle demonstrated Jesus' power over nature and revealed the way he would go about his ministry—helping others, speaking with authority, and being in personal touch with people. God may confront us in any number of ways with our need to believe in his Son. We will be held accountable for whether or not we have believed.

2:12 Capernaum became Jesus' home base during his ministry in Galilee. Located on a major trade route, it was an important city in the region, with a Roman garrison and a customs station. At Capernaum, Matthew was called to be a disciple (Matthew 9:9). The city was also the home of several other disciples (Matthew 4:13-19) and a high-ranking government official (4:46). It had at least one major synagogue. Although Jesus made this city his base of operations in Galilee, he condemned it for the people's unbelief (Matthew 11:23; Luke 10:15).

JESUS CLEARS THE TEMPLE / 2:13-25 / 23

The magnificent Temple that Jesus entered with his disciples was the one rebuilt by the remnant of Israelites who had returned from Babylon under Ezra and Nehemiah; it was later enlarged by Herod. The Jews considered the Temple to be God's house. But the arrival of Jesus and the beginning of his ministry signaled a change. The glory of God, which had filled the holy shrine since the days of the Exodus and the Tabernacle, was no longer in the building; that glory was in Jesus, though veiled within his humanity.

2:13 The Passover celebration took place yearly at the Temple in Jerusalem. Every Jewish male was expected to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem during this time, so Jesus went (Deuteronomy 16:16). This was a week-long festival—the Passover was one day, and the Feast of Unleavened Bread lasted the rest of the week. The entire week commemorated the freeing of the Jews from slavery in Egypt (Exodus 12:1-14).

2:14 The Temple was on an imposing hill overlooking the city. Solomon had built the first Temple on this same site almost one thousand years earlier (949 B.C.), but his Temple had been destroyed by the Babylonians (2 Kings 25). The Temple was rebuilt in 515 B.C., and Herod the Great had recently remodeled it.

God had originally instructed the people of Israel to bring from their own flocks the best animals for sacrifice (Deuteronomy 12:5-7). This would make the sacrifice more personal. But the Temple priests instituted a market for buying sacrificial animals so the pilgrims would not have to bring their animals on the long journey. In addition, the merchants and money changers were dishonest. The businesspeople selling these animals expected to turn a profit. The price of sacrificial animals was much higher in the Temple area than elsewhere. In order to purchase the animals, travelers from other lands would need local currency, and the Temple tax had to be paid in local currency; so money changers exchanged foreign money, but made huge profits by charging exorbitant exchange rates. Jesus was angry at the dishonest, greedy practices of the money changers and merchants, and he particularly disliked their presence on the Temple grounds. They had set up shop in the Court of the Gentiles, making it so full of merchants that foreigners found it difficult to worship—and worship was the main purpose for visiting the Temple. With all the merchandising taking place in the area allotted for the Gentiles, how could they spend time with God in prayer? No wonder Jesus was angry!

2:15 Jesus' response to the desecration of the Temple was deliberate and forceful. He was intent on scouring the Temple. This cleansing was significantly appropriate during Passover because that was the time when all the Jews were supposed to cleanse their houses of all leaven (yeast). During the Feast of Unleavened Bread, no leaven was used in any baking and, in fact, was not even to be found in the Israelite homes (Exodus 12:17-20).

Jesus did not lose his temper; his action expressed anger, but he was clearly in control of himself. Jesus was zealous for the reverence due to God the Father, and he knew that the irreverent marketplace within the very courts of God's Temple would not be expelled without the use of force. He made a whip and chased them all out of the Temple.

2:16 Jesus saw the Temple as his Father's house. His own rightful claim to ownership was unmistakable. But the religious leaders of that day were trespassers—turning it into a place of business and money-making—no more than a marketplace. People had created an environment that, in essence, put a price on what God intended to be free. Access to God is not for sale. According to the other three Gospels, Jesus visited the Temple again and cleansed it during his final visit to Jerusalem during the Passover, just prior to his crucifixion (see Matthew 21:12-17; Mark 11:15-19; Luke 19:45-46).

2:17 This quote from Psalm 69:9 was thought to refer not only to the psalmist but also to the coming Messiah. His incredible zeal for God and for purity of worship would endanger his life. In fact, Jesus was perceived as a threat to the religious establishment, and this was a direct cause of his death. The disciples, probably as much as any of the people then present, must have been shocked at Jesus' display of anger. But John reported that they remembered God's word and saw the action as God-ordained, having been prophesied in the Scriptures.

2:18-19 The hardhearted people of Jesus' day continually required Jesus to give them some miraculous sign to prove his authority from God. However, Jesus would not give his generation the kind of sign they demanded; he himself was the sign, for he was the Son of God come from heaven to earth. This would be known to all after his resurrection. This would be the ultimate sign he would give Israel and all mankind. So Jesus answered the Jewish leaders' challenge with a counter-challenge that the disciples later understood to be a prediction of his own death and resurrection (2:22). Jesus' opponents saw only the absurdity of his claim. His sign to them was, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." Jesus' ambiguous statement is a good example of how he encouraged people to think and inquire more deeply. Along with his parables, these statements accomplished the dual task of frustrating the halfhearted and self-righteous while at the same time piquing the curiosity of those who were sincere seekers.

This would be the sign the Jews required, even if they did not recognize it. They would destroy his body, and he would raise it up in three days. At another time when the Jews asked Jesus for a sign, he told them that the only sign he would give them was that of Jonah the prophet, who spent three days and three nights in the belly of a great fish before God delivered him (see Matthew 12:39-40). In like manner, Jesus would be killed and after three days rise from the dead.

2:20-21 The Jews understood Jesus to mean the Temple where he had just driven out the merchants and money changers. This was the Temple Zerubbabel had built more than five hundred years earlier, but Herod the Great had begun remodeling it, making it much larger and far more beautiful. It had been forty-six years since this remodeling had started (20 B.C.), and it still wasn't completely finished. They understood Jesus' words to mean that this imposing building could be torn down and rebuilt in three days, and they were openly skeptical.

2:22 The Scriptures probably means the whole Old Testament as it testifies to Christ's death and resurrection (passages such as Psalm 22:7-17). After Christ's resurrection, the Spirit illuminated these Scriptures (14:26), so the disciples remembered and believed. As Jesus predicted, they did destroy his body (the Temple), and he did raise it up in three days.

2:23-25 This was during the same week that Jesus purged the Temple in Jerusalem (see 2:13ff.). It was the week-long Feast of Unleavened Bread that followed the day of Passover. John did not recount any of the miraculous signs Jesus performed in Jerusalem; he simply said that many people were convinced that he was indeed the Messiah. But, as the next verse indicates, this belief was not complete. The people believed in Jesus as a miracle worker or a political Messiah, but not necessarily as the true Messiah, the Son of God.

John used the Greek verb pisteuo to make a wordplay. In 2:23, John said that many believed (episteusan) in him; in 2:24, John said that Jesus did not entrust (episteusen) himself to them. The reason for Jesus' lack of trust then follows—he knew what people were really like. Jesus was realistic about the depth of trust in those who were now following him. Some would endure; others would fall away (6:66). Jesus was discerning, and he knew that the faith of some followers was superficial. Some of the same people who claimed to believe in Jesus at this time would later yell, "Crucify him!"

NICODEMUS VISITS JESUS AT NIGHT / 3:1-21 / 24

It would be difficult to find any other portion of Scripture as well known as John 3:16 or any other statement of Scripture more applied than “You must be born again” (3:7). When Jesus revealed the necessity of the new birth to Nicodemus, he exposed mankind’s ultimate hope. This evening interview is the first of a series of individual encounters between Jesus and persons who fit the description given at the end of chapter 2—those who approached Jesus with an inadequate faith. Nicodemus (3:1-15), the Samaritan woman (4:1-42), and the nobleman from Capernaum (4:43-54) illustrate a certain view of who Jesus was and what he could do. But meeting Jesus face to face changed their views. It also changed their lives.

3:1-2 Nicodemus was a Jewish religious leader, a Pharisee—the most strict Jewish sect of those times. The Jewish religious leaders were divided into several groups. Two of the most prominent groups were the Pharisees and the Sadducees. The Pharisees separated themselves from anything non-Jewish and carefully followed both the Old Testament laws and the oral traditions handed down through the centuries. As a “leader,” he was a member of the Jewish ruling council. Although the Romans controlled Israel politically, the Jews were given some authority over religious and minor civil disputes. The Jewish ruling body was the council made up of seventy-one of Israel’s religious leaders.

What motivated Nicodemus to come to Jesus? Very likely Nicodemus was both impressed and curious about Jesus and chose to form his opinions about him from firsthand conversation. It is possible that he did not want to be seen with Jesus in broad daylight because he feared reproach from his fellow Pharisees (who did not believe in Jesus as the Messiah). But it may not have been fear that brought Nicodemus after dark; it is also possible that he chose a time when he could talk alone and at length with the popular teacher who was often surrounded by people.

Nicodemus respectfully addressed Jesus as a teacher who had been sent by God. While true, the title reveals Nicodemus’s limited understanding of Jesus. He was far more than just another rabbi. At least Nicodemus identified Jesus’ miraculous signs as a revelation of God’s power.

3:3 Jesus’ words are unmistakable and to the point: “Unless you are born again, you can never see the Kingdom of God.” That a person must be born again speaks of spiritual birth, but Nicodemus understood Jesus as referring to a physical rebirth. What could Jesus expect Nicodemus to know about the Kingdom? From the Scriptures he would know that the Kingdom would be ruled by God, it would eventually be restored on earth, and it would incorporate God's people. Jesus revealed to this devout Pharisee that the Kingdom would come to the whole world (3:16), not just the Jews, and that Nicodemus wouldn't be a part of it unless he was personally born again (3:5). This was a revolutionary concept: the Kingdom is personal, not national or ethnic, and its entrance requirements are repentance and spiritual rebirth. Jesus later taught that God's Kingdom has already begun in the hearts of believers (Luke 17:21). It will be fully realized when Jesus returns again to judge the world and abolish evil forever (Revelation 21–22).

During Jesus' earthly ministry, the Kingdom of God was present with him (Luke 17:21). To "see" the Kingdom of God means, in part, to have a special perception or insight concerning God's absolute control. But a sense of belonging, or citizenship, is also included. The "seeing" is not simply for purposes of examination; it represents participation. To "see," then, is to be a citizen without yet being able to exercise all the rights and privileges of that citizenship. Nicodemus was being taught that Israel was a chosen people to be a vehicle of God's message to the world, not to be the only beneficiaries of that relationship.

3:4 Nicodemus either stopped listening after Jesus' opening phrase, or he chose to address the first curious statement he heard. These questions that focused solely on birth—whether spoken sincerely or sarcastically—show that Nicodemus did not perceive the spiritual intent of Jesus' words. He saw only the literal meaning and questioned its absurdity: "How can an old man go back into his mother's womb and be born again?" But with all his learning he should have understood that God can and will give spiritual rebirth. The prophets had spoken about this spiritual regeneration (see Ezekiel 36:25-27; see also Jeremiah 31:31-34; Joel 2:28-32).

3:5 This statement has perplexed and divided commentators for many centuries. Some traditions have taught that the water denotes physical birth (referring to the "water" of amniotic fluid or even semen) and Spirit to spiritual birth—in which case Jesus would be saying that a person has to have two births: one physical and the second, spiritual. This view builds upon the preceding context when Nicodemus referred to physical birth. It also points to the parallel Jesus makes in verse 6. According to this position, Jesus would have been granting the Pharisee's point in order to highlight the nature of the second birth as spiritual. Two strengths of this interpretation are that it avoids making the physical act of water baptism a necessity and that it avoids bringing almost a "third birth" idea into the discussion. If water doesn't refer to natural birth, say its defenders, then Jesus seems to be saying that a person must be born of their parents, born of water, and born of the Spirit.

Other traditions have taught that the water refers to baptism and the Spirit to spiritual regeneration—thus, Jesus would have been saying that a person must both be baptized and receive the Spirit in order to enter the Kingdom of God. This view is at times influenced by the belief that the sacrament of baptism is itself a requirement for salvation.

A parallel view makes water refer to baptism but places the emphasis on teaching two steps of baptism; one by water, the other by the Spirit. For support, these views point to the larger context in John where John the Baptist and water baptism are mentioned just preceding the events in Cana and following this encounter with Nicodemus. They also rely on the tendency of previous generations of Christians to equate the mention of water with baptism. But in the first seven chapters of John, water appears in some way (naturally or symbolically) in each chapter. To associate water and baptism too closely makes baptism a higher priority than the Scriptures give it. Here, for instance, if Jesus was speaking of two completely separate acts, two baptisms, it is odd that the rest of the discussion between Jesus and Nicodemus never again refers to the subject but revolves entirely around the work of God's Spirit.

Still other traditions have taught that Jesus' reference to water is not physical in either the sense of birth or baptism. The term water is simply another description of the Spirit—or the Spirit's activity of cleansing and giving life (see John 7:37-39).

3:6 Humans can produce only more human beings; this answers Nicodemus's question in verse 4. Only God the Holy Spirit gives new life from heaven. At the same time God puts his Spirit into us, we are given a new regenerated human spirit. It is God's Spirit, not our effort, that makes us children of God (1:12). Jesus' description corrects human hopes that we might somehow inherit goodness from parents, or earn it by good behavior, church background, or correct associations. At some point we must be able to answer the question: Have I been born of the Spirit?

3:7 Jesus' statement to Nicodemus that evening has been heralded to all the world ever since. Both Jew and Gentile have heard the divine mandate: You must be born again. Without the new birth, one cannot see or enter into the Kingdom of God. In those words, millions have heard Jesus speaking directly to their hearts. Behind Jesus' challenge is his invitation to each of us—"You must be born again; allow me to do that for you."

3:8 Perhaps at this moment in the evening a soft wind rustled the leaves outside the house or in the garden where they were talking. Jesus used the illustration of the wind to depict the effect of the Spirit in the person born of the Spirit. In Greek the same word (pneuma) can have several meanings: "Spirit," "wind," and "breath." God's Spirit, like the wind, has free movement and, like reviving breath, has power. Jesus used this illustration to show that the reality of the Spirit living in a person is evidenced by the effect of the Spirit on that person's life. People can control neither the wind nor the movement of God's Spirit. The image Jesus used describes the wonderful experience we can have of realizing that God actually moves in and through us by his Spirit. Just as we do not know the origin or the destination of the wind, we do not know or control the Spirit. What we do know are the effects of the wind and of the Spirit. Life in the Spirit is as radical and unexpected as being born of the Spirit.

3:9-10 In response to Nicodemus's continued question, Jesus called him a respected Jewish teacher and expressed amazement at his lack of understanding. Having such a position, Nicodemus should have known what Jesus was talking about, for the new birth is not a topic foreign to the Hebrew Scriptures (see, for example, 1 Samuel 10:6; Isaiah 32:15; Jeremiah 31:33; Ezekiel 36:25-27; 37; Joel 2:28-29). Jesus' question must have exposed Nicodemus, who perhaps thought that he and Jesus were teachers who would discuss spiritual matters from an equal level of learning and understanding (see 3:2). This Jewish teacher of the Bible knew the Old Testament thoroughly, but he didn't understand what it said about the Messiah.

3:11-12 Commentators do not agree as to whom the pronoun we refers to. Most likely, it refers to all those prophets who have spoken to Israel; it may also refer to Jesus and his Father. Things that happen here on earth such as the wind, can be "sensed"—that is, felt and heard. Jesus has spoken in an "earthly" analogy, and if Nicodemus could not believe that, how could he possible believe if Jesus were to tell him what is going on in heaven? These are the truths that pertain to the heavenly realm and heavenly Kingdom (for example, the more abstract theological topics such as the Trinity or Jesus' coming glory).

3:13-15 This statement, following the last part of verse 12, tells us why Jesus was uniquely qualified to speak about heavenly matters. His authoritative message about heaven was based on personal experience. He came to earth and will return to heaven. Heaven was the home he left on his mission to rescue us. No other man could claim the same. The Son of Man is the term Jesus always used as his self-designation (1:51; see also Daniel 7:13; Matthew 26:64).

The Son of Man came from heaven and became flesh in order to die—but his death would have special importance. That significance had been “taught” by God throughout the experiences of his chosen people. To illustrate this, Jesus compared his coming death to a story well known to Nicodemus, for it came from Jewish history. According to Numbers 21:6-9, while the Israelites were wandering in the wilderness, God sent a plague of snakes to punish the people for their rebellious attitudes. But God also gave the remedy for the poisonous snakebites—he told Moses to erect a pole upon which he was to attach a bronze snake. Those bitten by the poisonous snakes could be healed by obeying God’s command to look up at the elevated bronze snake and by believing that God would heal them. Their healing came when they looked upon this lifted-up, bronze snake.

Jesus used this incident to picture his coming salvation work on the cross. To be lifted up in Jesus’ time—according to the usage in John (see 8:28; 12:32-34)—was a euphemism for death on the cross (the victim was literally lifted up above the earth); it also spoke of his subsequent glorification. In Numbers 21:6-9, the perishing Israelites looked upon the lifted-up snake and lived. Similarly, salvation happens when we look up to Jesus, believing he will save us. God has provided this way for us to be healed of sin’s deadly bite. The Israelites were spared their lives; the believer in Jesus is spared eternal destruction and given eternal life.

3:16 The entire gospel comes to a focus in this verse. God’s love is not just to a certain group of individuals—it is offered to the world. God’s love is not static or self-centered; it reaches out and draws others in. Here God’s actions defined the pattern of true love, the basis for all love relationships—when you love someone, you are willing to sacrifice dearly for that person. Sacrificial love is also practical in seeking ways to meet the needs of those who are loved. In God’s case, that love was infinitely practical, since it set out to rescue those who had no hope of rescuing themselves. God paid dearly to save us; he gave his only Son, the highest price he could pay.

This offer is made to everyone who believes. To “believe” is more than intellectual agreement that Jesus is God. It means putting our trust and confidence in him that he alone can save us. It is to put Christ in charge of our present plans and eternal destiny. Believing is both trusting his words as reliable and relying on him for the power to change.

Jesus accepted our punishment and paid the price for our sins so that we would not perish. Perish does not mean physical death, for we all will eventually die. Here it refers to eternity apart from God. Those who believe will receive the alternative, the new life that Jesus bought for us—eternal life with God.

3:17 All people are already under God's judgment because of sin—specifically the sin of not believing in God's Son (16:9). The only way to escape the condemnation is to believe in Jesus, the Son of God, because God did not send his Son into the world to condemn it, but to save it. He who believes in him is saved from God's judgment. And God wants people to believe (2 Peter 3:9).

When we consider ways to communicate the gospel, we should follow Jesus' example. We do not need to condemn unbelievers; they are condemned already. We must tell them about this condemnation, and then offer them the way of salvation—faith in Jesus Christ. When we share the gospel with others, our love must be like Jesus'—willingly giving up our own comfort and security so that others might join us in receiving God's love.

3:18-20 What follows describes the grounds for judgment. Those who trust in Jesus have no judgment awaiting them. But those who don't believe have already been judged for not believing in the only Son of God. The arrival of the light from heaven signals that with the coming of Jesus we have: (1) an absolute source of truth; (2) condemnation of sin; (3) guidance for our daily decisions; and (4) illumination to learn about God more clearly.

What a tragedy that people have turned away from God's offer, embracing instead the darkness in hopes of covering up evil actions. There is probably no more painful moment than when we honestly confront our tendency to love darkness, to twist or withhold the truth. The Son did not come to judge, but in the light of his character the sharp shadows of our sinfulness stand out. The people who hate the light are those who want to sin in the darkness. Evil deeds are revealed by the light, so people who want to do evil must do it in the dark so they cannot be exposed and caught in the act.

3:21 According to the context, to do what is right is to come to Christ, the light; the result of coming to the light and living in the light will be clearly seen in believers' lives. Christ's life in us will make our lives able to stand exposure to bright light, for our deeds will be honest, pure, and truthful. John wrote about this at length in 1 John 1:5-7.

JOHN THE BAPTIST TELLS MORE ABOUT JESUS / 3:22-36 / 25

This section begins with an abrupt change of scene to Aenon, near Salim, in the land of Judea. Both Jesus and John—the two prominent figures in the new movement of God—were gathering disciples; but more were coming to Jesus than to John. This seems to have troubled John’s disciples. As for John, he was perfectly aware of what his position was in God’s plan. He was the herald of the Messiah-King—to put it in his own words, the friend of the bridegroom (3:29). John was content to prepare for the bridegroom and then fade quietly into the background while the bridegroom received all the attention. John knew that he would become less important and less noticed and that Jesus would receive increased recognition and importance. John rejoiced to see this happen.

3:22-23 These verses tell us that two groups were baptizing at the same time: one in Judea, the other at Aenon, near Salim, which may have been in northern Samaria. Aenon, which means “a place of many springs,” helps explain the statement, there was plenty of water.

While John was baptizing in northern Samaria, the disciples of Jesus under his direction (for Jesus himself did not baptize, according to 4:2) were also baptizing. Since John’s baptism prepared the way for people to come to the Messiah, we can postulate that Jesus’ disciples carried out the same kind of baptism as did John—one that prepared people to receive Christ and enter into his Kingdom.

3:24 This was occurring before John was put into prison, clarifying the chronology of events. At the time John wrote this Gospel (A.D. 90s), his readers may not have known when John the Baptist’s ministry ended—especially in relationship to Jesus’ ministry.

3:25 Given the immediate context, the argument over ceremonial cleansing probably involved some debate about the authority of John’s baptism and how it related to the baptisms connected with Jesus. This topic was still controversial years later during one of the final confrontations between Jesus and the teachers of religious law (Luke 20:1-8). The Jews sought cleansing through various sacrifices and washings prescribed by God through Moses. But centuries of human “adjustments” had transformed the way of humility before God into a hopeless maze of human effort. The huge system was bent on self-preservation rather than in truly serving God. Thus, for many religious leaders, John's effrontery in preaching simple repentance and requiring public baptism was unacceptable as a form of cleansing.

3:26 John's disciples exposed their competitive spirit—this is certain because of the way John responded to them in the following verses. These disciples of John must have lost sight of their mission—which was to join John in preparing people for Christ. They should not have been surprised (much less, dismayed) that people were going to Christ—they were supposed to!

Why did John the Baptist continue to baptize after Jesus came onto the scene? Why didn't he become a disciple too? John explained that because God had given him his work, he had to continue it until God called him to do something else. John's main purpose was to point people to Christ. Even with Jesus beginning his own ministry, John could still point people to Jesus.

3:27 John's reply to his disciples was the response of a man who knew his place in God's plan. He knew that a person is not able to do anything unless it has been given to him or her from God: "God in heaven appoints each person's work." If all the people were going to Christ, if Christ's ministry was expanding, then it must be God's plan. John exemplifies the kind of exuberant endorsement that ought to come from us when we hear that someone is being effective as a servant of Christ.

3:28 Here John reiterated what he had told the disciples earlier: "I am not the Messiah" (1:20). John had always been forthright in declaring his position; he did this so that the distinction between himself and the Messiah would be unmistakably clear. His job had always been to prepare the way for him—that is all.

3:29 John employed a beautiful metaphor to depict the way he saw his relationship with Jesus the Christ. He described himself as being the bridegroom's friend—or, as we would say today, "the best man." As the best man, John enjoyed seeing his friend, the bridegroom, honored. He insisted that all the attention should go to the bridegroom and his bride.

3:30 What a realization John had! He knew that his work was destined to become less and less—he himself would have to decrease. John's willingness to decrease so that Jesus would increase reveals unusual humility. It also reveals how much he was like Jesus in character.

3:31 John's statement revealed his attitude about Christ's superiority and preeminence over him. The same word (anōthen) that appears here was used in 3:3. Jesus is the one who has come from above, while we are people who must be "born from above" if we hope to see the Kingdom of God. John, whom Jesus himself called the greatest man born among men (Matthew 11:11), was still a man of the earth (see 1 Corinthians 15:47). Christ's heavenly origin gives him superiority over every person.

3:32 Throughout his Gospel, John emphasized the fact that Jesus spoke what he had seen and heard from the Father (8:14-30). He was the Father's representative in word and action. But few would believe what he tells them. This is a great condemnation upon mankind—especially upon the people who lived when Jesus did, for they were the ones who heard his testimony and rejected it (see 1:10-11; 3:11; 12:37ff.).

3:33 By way of contrast with verse 32, this verse indicates that some did receive Jesus' testimony. Those who believe him discover that God is true. They believed that he was the Son of God come from heaven, the Messiah. Their belief in his testimony was their "stamp of approval" on the truthfulness of God's action (sending his Son). In other words, they tested the testimony and found it to be true. It was true whether or not anyone else ever witnessed to its truth. The gospel is the invitation from God to add ourselves to those who have staked their lives on Christ, the Truth.

3:34 This statement authenticates what was said in verse 32. God's Son, Jesus Christ, is sent by God and speaks God's words because God's Spirit is upon him without measure or limit. God gave the immeasurable Spirit to his Son. As such, the Son was the recipient of the immeasurable Spirit for his prophetic ministry (see Isaiah 11:1ff.). But unlike the Old Testament prophets who were anointed with the Holy Spirit only when they were speaking for God, Jesus always had the Spirit and therefore always spoke the words of God. We can trust the words of Jesus.

3:35 The Father committed all of his divine plan to the care of his beloved Son: The Father loves his Son, and he has given him authority over everything. What a glorious privilege and awesome responsibility! By the end of his ministry, Jesus told the Father that he had accomplished everything the Father had wanted him to do (17:1-4).

3:36 Believers need not wonder whether or not they have eternal life (or wait for the future judgment to see if eternal life will be granted or not). All who believe in God's Son have eternal life. Thus, eternal life begins at the moment of spiritual rebirth. The question for individual believers, then, is: How does our way of living demonstrate the fact that we expect to live eternally?

In contrast, those who don't obey the Son will never experience eternal life. There are only two groups in the end—those who have eternal life, and those who do not. To disobey the Son is to reject him. To reject the Son's testimony and the gospel is to cut ourselves off from the benefits available only through him. Those people will experience the wrath of God.

John, the author of this Gospel, has been demonstrating that Jesus is the true Son of God. Jesus sets before us the greatest choice in life. We are responsible to decide today whom we will obey (Joshua 24:15). God wants us to choose him and life (Deuteronomy 30:15-20). God's wrath is his final judgment and rejection of the sinner. To put off the choice is to choose not to follow Christ. Indecision is a fatal decision.

JESUS TALKS TO A WOMAN AT THE WELL / 4:1-26 / 27

Jesus had to pass through Samaria on his way to Galilee. In Jesus' encounter with the Samaritan woman and with the Samaritans in Sychar, he revealed that he is the expected Messiah (4:25-26). Furthermore, Jesus pointed the Samaritans to the truth about salvation, God's nature, and the worship of God: Salvation comes from among the Jews (the Messiah is a Jew), God is spirit, and God must be worshiped in spirit and in truth.

4:1-2 Jesus realized that his popularity had come to the attention of the Pharisees. They had scrutinized the activities of John the Baptist and sent emissaries to question him about his identity (1:19-28). John always pointed his followers to a greater one, the coming Messiah. Because the greater one had come and was in fact drawing the crowds away from John, the Pharisees began to watch Jesus closely.

Jesus had gained many more disciples than just the Twelve. We know that he had at least seventy-two committed disciples (Luke 10:1-17). We are also told that various disciples came and went, especially when times were difficult or when Jesus predicted troubles ahead (Luke 9:57-62; John 6:66).

Part of the information received by the Pharisees was incorrect because Jesus didn't baptize anyone—his disciples did. This parenthetical remark helps to explain John the Baptist's statement in 1:33 that the Messiah would baptize in the Holy Spirit—in contrast to John who baptized in water. Thus, Jesus never personally performed water baptism; his disciples continued to perform that task during the early years of the church. These baptisms, still following the pattern set by John the Baptist, indicated repentance and confession of sin (see Matthew 3:6).

4:3 Knowing that the Pharisees (in Jerusalem) had heard about his popularity and that they would begin watching him closely, and at the same time knowing that his "hour" had not yet come (see also 2:4), Jesus wisely decided to withdraw from possible conflict by leaving Judea and returning to Galilee. Thus, Jesus' first Judean visit had come to an end—a visit begun by his coming to Jerusalem for the Passover (see 2:13). The other Gospels do not record this visit.

4:4 The territory of Samaria lay between Judea and Galilee—thus Jesus' itinerary meant that he had to go through Samaria on the way. Since the Samaritans were hated by the Jews, many of the strict Jews traveling from Judea to Galilee took a route around Samaria (through Perea, east of the Jordan River), even though that route took more time. But for those who were trying to make the best time, it was faster to go through Samaria to Galilee. The context does not indicate that Jesus was in a hurry to get to Galilee (see 4:40, 43). Thus, the necessity must be understood in a different way: Jesus went to Samaria to give the Samaritans what he had given to Nicodemus—the offer of eternal life by being born again. And, furthermore, by going to Samaria and bringing the gospel to the despised Samaritans, he showed that he was above the Jewish prejudices.

Where did these prejudices come from? Samaria was a region between Judea and Galilee where Jews of “mixed blood” lived. In Old Testament days, when the northern kingdom of Israel, with its capital at Samaria, fell to the Assyrians, many Jews were deported to Assyria. King Sargon of Assyria repopulated the northern kingdom with captives from other lands to settle the territory and keep the peace (2 Kings 17:24). These captives eventually intermarried with the few Jews who remained in the land to form a mixed race of people who became known as Samaritans. The Jews hated the Samaritans because they were no longer “pure” Jews. The Jews who lived in the southern Kingdom felt these Jews had betrayed their people and nation through intermarriage with foreigners. And the hatred continued down through the years. The Samaritans had adopted the Pentateuch as their Scriptures and set up a place for worship on Mount Gerizim using for their guidelines Deuteronomy 11:26-29; 27:1-8. Although they knew about a coming Messiah, they were far from having an accurate knowledge of the truth.

4:5-6 According to Genesis 33:19, Jacob purchased a piece of land in this vicinity and then later gave Joseph some land in Shechem (Genesis 48:22). Joshua 24:32 says that Joseph was buried on that land (the Jews had brought Joseph’s bones with them when they made their Exodus from Egypt). Jacob’s well was there indicates that the land must have included the parcel on which Jacob’s well was dug. Thus, this well was highly valued by the Samaritans who claimed Jacob (also called Israel) as their father (4:12), just as the Jews do. The trip made Jesus tired. He had walked from Judea to Sychar—a trip that probably took two days. Jesus’ weariness shows his true humanity. He waited while his disciples, more rested, or hungrier, than he, went to find food. He never seemed to worry that the limitations he took in becoming human might somehow undermine his claims to be the Son of God. Such expressions about Jesus’ humanity help us identify with him. So he sat wearily beside the well at about noontime, the hottest part of the day.

4:7 Two facts are unusual about the woman's actions: (1) she could have gone to a closer well (scholars have identified wells that were closer to Sychar); (2) women generally drew water later in the day, when the temperature was cooler. This woman, whose reputation seems to have been well known in the small town (4:18), probably chose the well farther away from home and came to that well at an unusual hour in order to avoid contact with other women. It was also highly unusual for a man to address a woman, but Jesus said, "Please give me a drink." Again, this statement reveals Jesus' true humanity; he was really thirsty. Even though such a request startled her (4:9), it drew her into a conversation with Jesus.

4:8 This statement serves to inform the reader that Jesus was alone with this woman. Jesus could not ask his disciples to help him get water, for they had gone into Sychar to buy food. Thus, we see Jesus, weary from his journey, depending on others for food and drink.

4:9 The Samaritan woman was very surprised—first, that a Jew would even speak to a Samaritan; second, that a Jewish male would speak to a Samaritan woman (she also had a bad reputation and this was a public place); third, that a Jew would drink from a Samaritan's cup. The Jewish ceremonial laws described not only certain people as ceremonially unclean, but also anything they touched. In strict religious terms, many Jews of Jesus' time considered the Samaritans to be permanently unclean.

4:10 The woman was ignorant of the gift God had for her—the gift of life, represented by living water—and she did not know the giver, Jesus the Messiah. Jesus makes an extraordinary offer to this woman—living water that would quench her thirst forever.

4:11-12 Jesus' remark concerning "living water" produced several practical questions in the mind of the Samaritan woman. Like Nicodemus, she did not immediately sense the depth of Jesus' words. Obviously, if this living water was at the bottom of the well, Jesus was in no position to offer it because he had no rope or bucket for drawing it. She began to wonder if Jesus had access to some source of water other than Jacob's well. She asked if he thought he was greater than their ancestor Jacob and could somehow offer better water. Perhaps the woman sensed in Jesus' words a possible dishonoring of the well provided by their great ancestor. Or perhaps the woman was beginning to have some inkling of who Jesus was claiming to be. He certainly accepted her in a way that must have challenged her thinking.

4:13-14 People need water daily because they soon become thirsty again. The water from Jacob's well would indeed satisfy the woman's thirst, but only temporarily. So also are all the other "drinks" of life—they never satisfy. Some of them even create more thirst. The human needs for love, food, sex, security, and approval, even when met, do not give complete satisfaction. Attempts to find full satisfaction will lead only to disappointment and despair. But the water Jesus offers takes away thirst altogether. Jesus' "water" continually satisfies the desire for God's presence because it becomes a perpetual spring within them, giving them eternal life. The gift that Jesus gives—this perpetual spring—suggests the availability, accessibility, and abundance of the divine life for believers.

4:15 The woman's response reveals that she took Jesus' words literally. The woman must have been thrilled to think that this man could give her water that really quenches thirst and would not have to be drawn from a well. Obtaining water was hard work—requiring trips to the well twice a day and carrying heavy jars full of water home. If she had some of that water, she would never be thirsty again and wouldn't have to haul water every day.

4:16-18 Jesus abruptly shifted the subject from his living water to her style of living. The woman perceived her need for living water at one level; Jesus knew that her need was far deeper, so he turned the conversation to reveal his knowledge of her personal life—and her sin of adultery. By asking her to go and get her husband, Jesus wanted to make this woman see her sin and her need for forgiveness and then offer her the living water—salvation. She must have realized that this was not a man who could be fooled, for she answered transparently, "I don't have a husband." The woman spoke the truth without any explanation.

Although he confronted the woman's sinful life, Jesus managed to affirm her truthfulness. He did not accuse or excuse; he simply described her life so that she could draw some clear conclusions about the mess in which she was living. The conclusions we reach without knowing the facts will usually err in one of two directions: We will accuse others and raise their defenses, or we will excuse others and enable their denial. We see in Jesus' communication with this woman that when faced with an accepting confrontation, people will often respond positively. When we speak to others about themselves, we must limit our words to what we know.

4:19 The woman acknowledged the truthfulness of Jesus' remarks about her life. At the same time, she recognized that he must be a prophet who had the power to "see" the hidden past as well as the future. The theme of people "seeing" Jesus appears several times in John (especially in chapter 9). The persons Jesus encountered saw him many different ways, but he consistently directed their attention to recognize him for who he really was—their Savior.

Many commentators have pointed out that the woman may have been purposely attempting to avert any further disclosure of her personal, sinful life by shifting the conversation to religion. Notice how Jesus responded to her change of direction. He was not presenting a system or a gospel outline; he was having a conversation with someone who needed the living water. Jesus made no attempt to turn the discussion back to her lifestyle; rather, he entered into a dialogue about the true place of worship. Jesus kept the woman's interest by demonstrating his willingness to let her direct the discussion.

4:20 The unspoken question is, If you are a prophet, who's right? The Samaritans had set up a place for worship on Mount Gerizim, basing their authority to do so on Deuteronomy 11:26-29; 27:1-8; the Jews had followed David in making Jerusalem the center of Jewish worship. The split had come in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah (Ezra 4:1-2; Nehemiah 4:1-2) when the Samaritans had offered to help rebuild the Temple in Jerusalem but had been rebuffed. So there was an ongoing debate between the two groups as to who was correct. The Scriptures authenticated Jerusalem as the place of worship (Deuteronomy 12:5; 2 Chronicles 6:6; 7:12; Psalm 78:67-68); thus, the Jews were correct and the Samaritans in error. The Samaritan woman wanted to hear what a Jewish prophet had to say about this.

4:21 Both the Jews and the Samaritans were convinced the correct way to worship God depended on a particular geographical location. But Jesus pointed to a new realm—not at Mount Gerizim or in Jerusalem, but in the Spirit of God. He also knew that the Temple in Jerusalem soon would be destroyed. The first readers of John would have known this as a historical fact because it would have already happened!

4:22 The Samaritans worshiped, but their system of worship was incomplete and flawed because it had no clear object. Because the Samaritans only used the Pentateuch (Genesis through Deuteronomy) as their Scriptures, they did not know what the rest of the Old Testament taught about worship. The Jews, with whom Jesus explicitly identified himself here, did know whom they worshiped, for they had the full revelation in the Old Testament Scriptures. These Scriptures revealed that salvation comes through the Jews, for the Messiah would come from the Jewish race (Genesis 12:3). The message is: “You are demonstrating a good quality in desiring to worship, but your worship is misdirected; the perfect object to be worshiped, the Messiah, has come.” The living water that comes from Christ and is ever present in the believer makes the idea of continual worship a possibility. Worship becomes, at least in part, the enjoyment of our relationship with Christ wherever we are at any moment.

4:23-24 The new worship is already here among Jesus’ followers (including both Jews and Samaritans who are united in Christ), although the end of worship in the Temple or on Mount Gerizim is still future—is coming. Jesus announced that a new time had come, a time in which true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and in truth. True worshipers are to be recognized by the way they worship. After making the place of worship and order of worship secondary to our spiritual relationship with God, Jesus defined real worship. According to him, worship would take on two new aspects: It would be in spirit and in truth (see also 4:24).

The expression “in spirit” refers to the human spirit—the immaterial, inner being in each person, the God-breathed entity that corresponds to the nature of God himself, who is Spirit. Using the terms of Jesus’ conversation, worship involves the person’s awareness of that personal “spring of living water” that God has planted in him or her. God indwells believers—that is where true worship takes place. Our body can be anywhere, yet worship occurs as our attention and praise are turned toward God. We need to consciously focus on God when we are in a house of worship because we easily assume that our presence in church is all that we need in order to worship. We can usually remember how long the worship service lasted, but can we remember exactly when we actually worshiped the Lord?

The phrase in truth means “in a true way” or “with genuineness.” This would speak to all people—Jews, Samaritans, and even Gentiles; all need to worship God by recognizing God’s character and nature as well as our common need for him. We worship in truth because we worship what is true.

In the Greek text, the word Spirit comes first for emphasis: “Spirit is what God is.” Here is a simple yet sublime definition of the nature of God. He is Spirit. God is not a physical being limited to place and time as we are. He is present everywhere, and he can be worshiped anywhere, anytime.

4:25 Talk of a new kind of worship must have reminded the Samaritan woman about the coming of the Messiah. Her comment was only loosely related to what Jesus had just said. She probably uttered it with a sigh, revealing her uncertainty about an unknown future. The Samaritans believed in the coming of “the Prophet” predicted by Moses (Deuteronomy 18:15-18), whom they called “the Restorer.” The Samaritans may have also heard of the coming Messiah from John the Baptist who had been baptizing in northern Samaria (3:23). They, as with the Jews, probably did not consider “the Prophet” and “the Messiah” to be the same person. Either way, both groups were expecting someone who would be a political liberator. They could not accept the idea that the long-awaited one would be a suffering servant before he would become the conquering king.

The woman had already perceived that Jesus was a prophet (4:19); his comments made her wish for the coming Prophet who would explain everything.

4:26 Although Jesus avoided telling the Jews directly that he was the Christ, he told this Samaritan woman that he, the one who sat there with her on the well, was the promised Messiah.

JESUS TELLS ABOUT THE SPIRITUAL HARVEST / 4:27-38 / 28

The sudden arrival of the disciples interrupted the conversation. Jesus seems to have made no effort to continue the exchange. He had placed himself before the woman as the one she was expecting. What the woman would have said in response to Jesus’ revelation is unknown. But what she did is clear. She immediately went and told her neighbors that she had just encountered a unique and wonderful person whom they should also meet.

4:27 The disciples returned from getting food (4:8) and were astonished to find Jesus talking to a woman. Jesus had broken two cultural taboos: (1) Jews did not speak with Samaritans, and (2) a male did not normally speak with a female stranger. Yet the disciples did not query him concerning his motives, for they must have come to realize that all of his motives were good. Anyone else would have been called to account.

4:28 Beyond displaying the woman’s excited state of mind, her action of leaving her water jar beside the well as she went back to the village has several significant explanations: On the one hand, it speaks of the woman leaving behind her water jar representing her thirst for true life and satisfaction; on the other hand, it also reveals her intention to return. The water jar was a valuable and practical household object. But as useful as it was to get water from the well, it was useless for obtaining the water of life. However, she had just met someone who promised living water and who had displayed intimate knowledge of her life and profound understanding of spiritual truths. We can't be sure how much she understood of what Jesus had told her, but she was convinced that everyone in town ought to hear what he had to say.

4:29-30 In essence, the Samaritan woman was saying that Jesus could have told her everything about her life, for in telling her about her relationships with various men, he revealed his knowledge about her history. She made no promises about what Jesus might know about everyone else, but she appealed to their curiosity. What was it about this stranger that could make a woman who had every reason to be ashamed of her life now speak publicly about her experience of transparency before him? Yet she said to the townspeople, “Can this be the Messiah?” Her invitation proved irresistible. She probably knew that her reputation preceded her, and any assertion on her part regarding her belief in this man would go unheeded. But her question did serve to stir up curiosity and had the desired effect—the people came streaming from the village to see him.

4:31-33 After the woman left for the town, the disciples urged their master to eat. His response was baffling: “I have food you don't know about.” The disciples thought he was talking about physical food; instead, Jesus was saying that he was spiritually satisfied by having shared the Good News with the Samaritan woman.

4:34 This statement shows that Jesus lived to please his Father and in so doing found spiritual nourishment (17:4). Doing the will of God meant that Jesus submitted himself to the Father's plan and enjoyed carrying out his Father's desires. Satisfying the Father gave Jesus true satisfaction. Finishing God's work speaks of completing the task—all the way from sowing the seed to reaping the harvest (see following verses). According to 17:4, Jesus accomplished all that the Father wanted him to do before leaving this earth. Preeminently, Jesus had revealed the Father to the world.

4:35 For farmers, approximately four months elapsed between the end of sowing and the beginning of reaping. From Jesus' spiritual perspective, the time for harvesting had already arrived. The Samaritans, who were coming from town, were ready to be harvested. In telling the disciples to look around and see the vast fields, Jesus may well have been directing them to look at the approaching Samaritans.

4:36-38 The harvester of this spiritual harvest derives satisfaction from bringing others to experience eternal life. This parallels Jesus' experience with the Samaritan woman; he was satisfied by offering her the gift of life. Jesus also here mentions the planter in addition to the harvester. Jesus, as both, sowed the seed through a single Samaritan woman and reaped a harvest from many in a Samaritan city. This sowing and reaping transpired so quickly that the planter and harvester could rejoice together.

The planter and the harvester do not have the same role—the point of the next verse: “One person plants and someone else harvests.” This saying may have come from verses like Deuteronomy 20:6; 28:30; Micah 6:15; Job 31:8, but it is not a direct quotation of any known biblical passage. That the disciples would harvest where they didn't plant probably refers to the coming harvest of Samaritan believers reaped by Jesus and his disciples, as well as to the harvest that would come after Pentecost (see Acts 1:8; 2:41; 9:31; 15:3). The others who labored may have been some of the Old Testament prophets or, more likely, John the Baptist and his followers (see 3:23).

MANY SAMARITANS BELIEVE IN JESUS / 4:39-42 / 29

As a result of Jesus' conversation with the Samaritan woman, her bold witness in town, and the people's curiosity, many became believers. Jesus' proof was compelling. John was convinced and believed; the Samaritans were convinced and believed; so have millions of others. The unavoidable question each person must ask is, “Have I believed in Jesus?”

4:39-42 Many of the Samaritans who believed in Jesus were first drawn by the testimony of the woman about the mysterious man who told her everything she had ever done. They begged Jesus to stay at their village, and because of that, others believed when they heard Jesus for themselves. Many Samaritans had come to know absolutely and positively that Jesus was the Savior of the world. This last statement is the climax of this passage (4:1-42), for it speaks of how Jesus had come to be, not just the Jews' Messiah, but the world's Savior as well.

JESUS PREACHES IN GALILEE / 4:43-45 / 30

After his wonderful experience in Samaria, Jesus went to Cana in Galilee, where he healed a government official's son. But along with the healing came Jesus' rebuke that the people's belief was based on seeing signs and wonders, not on trusting in Jesus himself. These events stand in contrast to Jesus' experience in Sychar (4:1-42), where without miracles and through an unexpected witness, many placed their trust in him.

4:43-44 According to verse 3, Jesus left Judea and headed for Galilee. He passed through Samaria on the way and stayed there for two days (4:40). So after those two days, Jesus went on into Galilee, called his own country, as he had been raised in Nazareth, a town in Galilee. Jesus went to the Galileans, knowing that they would welcome him as miracle-worker but not as a prophet, much less as the Messiah.

4:45 This statement that the Galileans had seen all his miraculous signs refers to 2:23, which says that the people assembling in Jerusalem (among whom were these Galileans) during the Passover believed in Jesus because of the signs they saw him perform.

JESUS HEALS A GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL'S SON / 4:46-54 / 31

The story of Jesus turning water into wine was still news in Cana when he returned. The local welcome was tinged with interest over what new wonders he might perform. The opportunity would soon come. A child in nearby Capernaum lay sick, and an anxious father came to Jesus, begging for help.

4:46-50 Jesus arrived in Cana where he had done a miracle (see 2:1-11). Jesus' name was known there, and so this government official went to find him. This man was very likely an official in Herod's court, serving in some capacity in Capernaum, about twenty miles from Cana. Although this miracle bears similarities with the one recorded in Matthew 8:5-13 and Luke 7:2-10 (both deal with the healing of a soldier's servant), they seem to be different incidents. All the Gospel writers imply that the miracles they recorded were nothing more than samples of Jesus' work.

When the government official requested that Jesus heal his son, who was about to die, Jesus responded, "Must I do miraculous signs and wonders before you people will believe in me?" Jesus took the opportunity to address all the Galileans (2:23; 4:45) and reprimand them for being sign-seekers. But this Galilean was not merely a sign-seeker. He had a need, and he truly believed Jesus could meet that need. As a result, his need was met. The man believed the word that Jesus spoke, "Go back home. Your son will live!" and started on his way. The official believed Jesus' word, and the healing was performed. He was the type of man whom Jesus would later call "blessed," for he had not seen and yet he believed (see 20:29). Jesus' word is a life-giving word (see 5:24-25;

4:51-53 The details given in these verses tell the reader that the healing occurred at exactly the time Jesus spoke the words, “Your son will live!” Although the official’s son was twenty miles away, he was healed when Jesus spoke the word. Distance was no problem because Christ has mastery over space. This miracle produced faith in the officer and his entire household (including family members or servants). There are cultures where the word or belief of the head of the household represents what each member of the house believes. New Testament evidence points to these kinds of responses in more than one case (Acts 10:2; 16:15, 33).

4:54 The first sign was changing the water into wine at the wedding in Cana (2:1-11). The second miraculous sign was healing a dying child. According to the Gospel of John, Jesus’ miracles were “signs”—pointing the people who witnessed them to the one who performed the signs, Jesus, the Messiah, the Son of God. If the miracle produced faith in Jesus only as a miracle worker and not as the Son of God, then the people missed the miracle as the sign it was intended to be.

JESUS HEALS A LAME MAN BY A POOL / 5:1-15 / 42

God gives salvation freely through Jesus Christ. But to receive salvation, a person must believe. The lame man by the pool at Bethesda had to want to be healed. Then Jesus approached him later to explain to him that he needed to believe and receive spiritual healing as well. God makes the offer and God performs the miracle, but we must respond to his offer and accept it.

5:1 All Jewish males were required to come to Jerusalem to attend three feasts: (1) the Festival of Passover and Unleavened Bread, (2) the Festival of Weeks (also called Pentecost), and (3) the Festival of Shelters. Though this particular holy day is not specified, the phrase explains why Jesus was in Jerusalem.

5:2-4 Readers familiar with Jerusalem would have known about the Sheep Gate (it is mentioned in Nehemiah 3:1, 32; 12:39). Recent excavations show that this site had two pools with five covered porches. These were open structures with roofs that allowed some protection from the weather. A multitude of sick people lay on the porches. People made pilgrimages to the pool of Bethesda to receive the healing benefit of the waters.

Verse 4 is not included in the best manuscripts. Where it does occur in later manuscripts, it is often marked in such a way as to show that it is an addition. The passage was probably inserted later by scribes who felt it necessary to provide an explanation for the gathering of disabled people and the stirring of the water mentioned in verse 7. The water would stir and it was believed that an angel disturbed it. The superstition was that the first person into the pool after the water stirred would be healed.

5:5-8 A man lay there who had been sick for thirty-eight years. Jesus knew how long he had been ill and asked him, “Would you like to get well?” Jesus’ question shows us that he will not force himself upon anyone. He seeks permission before intervening in that person’s life. The man indirectly answered Jesus by telling how he had not been able to be healed because others would get into the water before he did. But in making this statement, the man admitted that he needed help. His hope for healing was stuck behind his hopelessness of ever having help to get to the water in time.

Jesus offered help, but not the kind of help the man expected. Jesus simply said, “Stand up, pick up your sleeping mat, and walk.” And the man responded immediately.

5:9 This miracle should have revealed to the Jews in Jerusalem that the Messiah was finally present, for Isaiah had prophesied this (Isaiah 35:5-6). Instead, they chose to focus on another issue: This miracle happened on the Sabbath day. Presumably, if the waters had been stirred on the Sabbath and he had been healed by getting in, the Jews would not have argued against his healing. But these religious leaders would not allow God in the flesh to break their rules by healing this man directly.

5:10 There is nothing in God's law making it illegal to carry a sleeping mat on the Sabbath. But the man broke the Pharisees' legalistic application of God's command to honor the Sabbath. The regulation against carrying something on the Sabbath was the last of thirty-nine rules in the "tradition of the elders" that stipulated the kinds of work prohibited on the Sabbath. This was just one of hundreds of rules the Jewish leaders had added to the Old Testament law.

5:11-13 In this exchange between the man who was healed and the Jewish leaders in Jerusalem, the man said he didn't know who had healed him. The man's ignorance is quite possible, for Jesus had not identified himself and had immediately disappeared into the crowd. At the same time, however, the healed man seemed to be more eager to blame the healer for having him walk around with his mat than to shout about his healing.

5:14-15 Perhaps the man had gone to the Temple to give thanks to God for his healing. When Jesus found him, he told him, "Stop sinning, or something even worse may happen to you." This statement leads to the conclusion that the man's sickness was in some way caused by sin. This does not contradict what Jesus said in 9:3 about the man born blind because Jesus did not say the blind man never sinned; rather, he was pointing out that sin had not caused his blindness. One of the results of sin is suffering, but not all suffering is the result of personal sin.

In this case, Jesus sought out the healed man to warn him that though he was healed physically, his thirty-eight years as an invalid would be nothing compared to something worse—that is, eternity in hell. The man needed to stop sinning and come to salvation in Christ. He had been lame, but now he could walk. This was a great miracle. But he needed an even greater miracle—to have his sins forgiven. The man was delighted to be physically healed, but he had to turn from his sins and seek God's forgiveness to be spiritually healed.

After this encounter, the man told the Jewish leaders what he could not tell them before: It was Jesus who had healed him. This report triggered the Jews' persecution of Jesus—a persecution that continued from that day onward.

JESUS CLAIMS TO BE THE SON OF GOD / 5:16-30 / 43

The Jewish leaders were faced with a mighty miracle of healing and a broken rule. They threw the miracle aside as they focused their attention on the broken rule. As is common with those who assume authority that is not rightfully theirs, these leaders instinctively felt their power threatened by Jesus' actions, thus they resented him.

5:16-17 Jesus was being harassed for breaking Sabbath rules. But Jesus told these leaders, “My Father never stops working, so why should I?” With this statement Jesus challenged the notion that God himself was somehow literally subject to the Sabbath rules. If God stopped every kind of work on the Sabbath, nature would fall into chaos and sin would overrun the world. Genesis 2:2 says that God rested on the seventh day; he rested from the work of creation but began the work of sustaining the creation. God has been at work and continues to work; so does his Son, Jesus. With this claim, Jesus affirmed his equality with God. Furthermore, Jesus was teaching that when the opportunity to do good presents itself, it should not be ignored, even on the Sabbath.

5:18 The Jews realized that Jesus' words revealed his very personal relationship with God. In saying, “my Father,” he was clearly claiming to be God's Son, thus equal with God. For a human to claim equality with God was blasphemy; and blasphemy was a sin carrying the death penalty (Leviticus 24:15-16). People regularly misunderstood Jesus, and he was constantly correcting them. Jesus never attempted to correct the understanding that he was claiming to be God, for that was exactly what he meant. Thus the Jewish leaders tried all the more to kill him.

5:19-20 Jesus did not say that he would not do anything independent from the Father, but that he cannot: “The Son can do nothing by himself. He does only what he sees the Father doing.” The Son performs the tasks the Father wants done because they are of one spirit. The Father and the Son know and love each other completely. Because of their transparent relationship, the Son always knows what the Father is doing and works in harmony with him to see it accomplished. Because of his unity with God, Jesus lived as God wanted him to live. Jesus promised to do far greater things. According to the following verses, this refers to the Son's ability to give life to the dead and to execute judgment.

5:21 This statement would have shocked Jesus' audience because it ascribes to the Son—Jesus himself—what was seen as exclusively the activity of God the Father. God alone can raise from the dead anyone he wants to. That God gave that power to the Son is demonstrated in Jesus' raising of Lazarus from the dead (see 11:41-44).

5:22-23 The certainty of our salvation is in the hands of the Son because God entrusted him with judicial and executive authority to judge. Thus, he has equal dignity and honor with the Father—“everyone will honor the Son, just as they honor the Father.” The flip side is that those who refuse to honor the Son are not honoring the Father who sent him. Here Jesus was referring to that time when everyone will recognize his lordship. The tragedy will be that many will then recognize Jesus' true nature but will have lost the opportunity to receive his saving help. Those unwilling to honor Christ now will discover that they have not been honoring the Father either. People should not say they believe in God while ignoring the power and authority of his Son.

5:24 True hearing results in believing. The gospel usually stresses believing in Jesus himself; but Jesus points to believing in God who sent him. The statement affirms the unity of the Father and the Son. To believe in the Father is to believe in the Son he sent to earth. This belief gives eternal life. Believers have eternal life as a present possession. Because of that, they will never be condemned for their sins, but they have already passed from death into life. The judgment has passed. Belief in Jesus provides the only escape from this judgment.

5:25 When Jesus spoke of a time that is coming, and is here, he saw God's wonderful future plan as happening in the present. Christ makes the same power that will resurrect the dead at his return available to all who are spiritually dead—the woman at the well, the paralyzed man, and each one of us.

In the future, the physically dead will hear the voice of the Son of God. Jesus was speaking about two kinds of life-giving power. On one level, he was speaking of the power to give life as we know it; on the other, he was speaking of the power to give life as he knows it. In saying that the dead could hear his voice, he was referring to the power to return physical life to those who had died. In fact, Jesus raised several persons who had died while he was on earth (11:38-44), though at some point they would die again. But he was also referring to the spiritually dead who hear, understand, and accept him. Those who accept God's Word will live, even though they may still experience physical death (11:25-26).

5:26 Human beings do not have life in themselves; they receive it from God. God does not receive his life from any exterior source; he is the source and Creator of life. In eternity past, the Father gave his Son the same capacity—to have life in himself (see 1:4). God does not share this uniquely divine characteristic with any created being. Because Jesus exists eternally with God the Father, he too is “the life” (14:6) through whom we may live eternally (1 John 5:11). God's gift of life comes through Christ alone (Deuteronomy 30:20; Psalm 36:9).

5:27 This statement seems to contradict 3:17, where Jesus is said not to have come into the world to judge it, but 8:15-16 offers an explanation. Jesus did not come to judge, but his coming led to judgment because his coming forced decision—and decision results in judgment for those who reject Jesus. Because he is the Son of Man, Jesus, as man, will judge all mankind (see Daniel 7:13-14). In this way, the Father has given all authority to the Son, for everyone must answer to him (see Philippians 2:5-11). Jesus always kept before his audience, in word and deed, his unique dual nature as God-man.

5:28-29 Verse 28 speaks only about a future event—the time is coming when all the dead in their graves will hear the voice of God's Son, and they will rise again. Every person will be resurrected when the Lord returns, with one of two results: one will be life, the other will be judgment. God grants eternal life to those who have come to the Light and have believed in Jesus Christ. But God will judge and condemn those who rebelled against Christ by refusing to come to the Light. God's judgment has already come upon them and will be completely executed by the Son of Man after the resurrection (see 3:18-21).

5:30 Even though the Father committed to the Son the task of executing judgment, the Son cannot and will not perform on his own authority and by his own initiative. The distinctions within the persons of the Trinity allow each to perform certain specific functions, but the divine unity of God means that Father, Son, and Holy Spirit each do what the others would do if the roles were changed.

JESUS SUPPORTS HIS CLAIM / 5:31-47 / 44

Jesus claimed to be equal with God (5:18), to give eternal life (5:24), to be the source of life (5:26), and to judge sin (5:27). These statements make it clear that Jesus claimed to be divine—an almost unbelievable claim. So he called upon several witnesses to his divine being: (1) John the Baptist (5:33-35), (2) Jesus' works (5:36), (3) the Father himself (5:37), (4) the Scriptures (5:39-40), and (5) Moses (5:45-47). Any of these witnesses should have been enough, but together they supplied a compelling testimony to Jesus' claims. But many of the ones listening to Jesus were examples of how a hard heart can nullify even the most powerful argument.

5:31-32 According to the Jewish law, truth or validity had to be established by two or three witnesses (Deuteronomy 17:6; 19:15). Therefore, Jesus' testimony would not be valid by itself. For these Jewish leaders, he needed the witness of another. So Jesus said that someone else was testifying about him, referring to his Father (see 5:36).

5:33-35 Further witness came from John the Baptist (see 1:6-8). His testimony that Jesus was the Christ was necessary for the Jews, not Jesus. They all knew he preached the truth. He shone brightly for a while, and some of the Jews enjoyed the light he brought them. But they did not really understand his message or receive the illuminating revelation concerning the one to whom John gave witness—Jesus, the Son of God.

5:36-38 The teachings and miracles testified that the Father had sent Jesus. The Father testified about his Son at Jesus' baptism (Matthew 3:16-17), on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matthew 17:5), before his crucifixion (12:28), and in his resurrection (Romans 1:3-4). The Jews to whom Jesus was speaking had never heard God's voice or seen him face to face. Yet, here they had the greatest of all God's manifestations standing right before their eyes—Jesus, the Word, the visible expression of God to people. But they did not have his message in their hearts because they were refusing to believe in Jesus. Even though the Jews to whom Jesus was speaking had not received the kinds of revelations some of their ancestors had, they still possessed the Word of God. If that Word had been abiding in their hearts (see 8:31; 15:7), they would have recognized the one to whom the Scriptures give testimony.

5:39 The Jewish teachers devoted their lives to studying the Scriptures—not so much to search for the truth but to analyze the minutia of the law. And the “scholars” studied, Jesus said, because they thought that by doing so they would possess eternal life. But by studying the Scriptures they should have seen the source of life: “The Scriptures point to me!” If we fail to see this testimony, we miss the very purpose for which the Scriptures exist. If there were no such person as Jesus Christ, the Scriptures would have little value. The Bible’s chief value lies in its testimony to him.

5:40 To refuse to come to Jesus is to reject life because Christ is the giver of eternal life (1:4; 5:25; 14:6). Religious zeal—even involvement with the Scriptures—does not bring a person eternal life. The religious leaders knew what the Bible said but failed to apply its words to their lives. They knew the teachings of the Scriptures but failed to see the Messiah to whom the Scriptures pointed. They knew the rules but missed the Savior. Entrenched in their own religious system, they refused to let the Son of God change their lives.

5:41-43 Just as Jesus did not receive (or need) the testimony from people (5:34), he does not need to receive approval from them. Jesus knew the condition of the people; they did not really have God’s love within them—they loved their religion. Therefore, they could not receive the Son of God. Jesus came as the Father’s personal representative (see 14:7-11), but many of the Jews could not accept his claims of being the one sent by the Father. The others that were accepted may have been other persons who claimed to be the Messiah. Because they fit the mistaken image of what the Messiah was supposed to accomplish (political liberation), people eagerly received them. Many men made such a claim. For example, in A.D. 132 Simeon ben Kosebah claimed to be the Messiah, and his claim was upheld by Akibah, the most eminent rabbi of the day.

5:44 This condemning word exposes why the Jewish religious leaders could not believe: They were so dependent on group acceptance that an individual could hardly make a stand that differed from the rest. Instead of seeking what would honor God and bring glory to him—which, in this case, would be to believe in his Son—they continued to seek acceptance from their peers.

5:45 The verb tenses here reveal that Jesus wouldn’t have to go to the Father and accuse these religious leaders because they were already being accused by Moses. This could mean that Moses was in the presence of God in heaven accusing them (Matthew 17:3), or it could mean what Moses wrote, as is indicated in the next two verses. To be told that Moses was accusing them was a great blow. The Pharisees prided themselves on being the true followers of their ancestor Moses. They followed every one of his laws to the letter and even added some of their own. Jesus’ warning that Moses was accusing them stung them to fury.

5:46-47 Moses had written about Christ (see Genesis 3:15; Numbers 21:9; 24:17; Deuteronomy 18:15-18; see also Luke 24:44), but since they did not believe in Christ when he came, they did not really believe in the writings of Moses. This was Jesus' final condemnation in this section.

JOHN 6

JESUS FEEDS 5,000 / 6:1-15 / 96

Once again in this Gospel, John selects a particular place for presenting a spiritual truth about Christ. Earlier, the well in Samaria was an excellent setting for Christ to teach about the fountain of living water. Here, in chapter 6, the multiplication of the loaves provides a way for Christ to present himself as the Bread of Life.

6:1 Jesus crossed over the Sea of Galilee, a great body of water (which is actually a lake, thirteen miles by seven miles) given the name the Sea of Tiberias by Herod Antipas in honor of the Roman emperor Tiberias in A.D. 20.

6:2-4 Jesus was popular, and a huge crowd kept following him, mainly because of his miracles as he healed the sick. Presumably to continue teaching, Jesus went up into the hills (the Sea of Galilee is surrounded by hills) and sat down with his disciples. John mentions three Passover celebrations in this Gospel: the first in 2:13 (when Jesus was in Jerusalem), the second here (when Jesus remained in Galilee), and the third in 12:12 (when Jesus went to Jerusalem and was crucified shortly thereafter).

6:5-6 The crowds followed Jesus right up into the hills. As Jesus saw them, he asked Philip where they should buy bread to feed all these people. If anyone knew where to get food, Philip would because he was from Bethsaida, a town about nine miles away (1:44). Jesus was testing Philip to strengthen his faith. By asking for a human solution (knowing that there was none), Jesus highlighted the powerful and miraculous act that he was about to perform.

John clues us in: Jesus was testing Philip, for he already knew what he was going to do. In usual use, the word “test” (peirazo) has a neutral meaning. It refers to a proving experience like Jesus’ testing in the wilderness or Abraham’s test over the sacrifice of Isaac. In all these cases, God allowed the test to occur, not expecting failure, but placing the person in a situation where his or her faith might grow stronger. Jesus did not want Philip to miss what he was about to do.

6:7-9 Philip realized that with the number of people climbing in their direction, it would take a small fortune to feed them. But, in fact, Philip did not really answer Jesus’ question. The Lord had asked him to consider where they could get food; Philip responded with what he perceived as the larger problem—the money it would take to supply the food.

At this point, Andrew (who is usually presented in the Gospels as Simon Peter's brother and takes a subordinate position to him) took advantage of an opportunity to join the discussion. Apparently a young boy who had overheard the conversation pulled out his lunch and made it available. It was Andrew who inadvertently answered Jesus' original question. He pointed out that the only available food was the boy's lunch: five barley loaves and two fish. (Barley loaves and fish were food for the poor.) Then Andrew added the disclaimer: "But what good is that with this huge crowd?" Whether Andrew was speaking in humor or hyperbole we can't be sure, but we can be fairly certain that he did not expect what followed.

6:10-13 What was offered was enough for Jesus. He told the disciples to have everyone sit down. The men (the Greek word means "male individuals") numbered five thousand. So with women and children, there were many more. Then Jesus took the loaves, gave thanks, and passed them out to the people. The fish were also distributed in like manner. After all had eaten and were full, they still had leftovers; the disciples filled twelve baskets with the pieces of the five barley loaves left over. This miracle and these leftovers reveal Jesus once again as the all-sufficient Lord. Our needs and problems are not obstacles to him, for his abundant power transcends any need or problem we place before him.

6:14 The people saw and filled their stomachs as a result of this sign—who could have missed it?—and this led them to believe that Jesus was the Prophet whom Moses had predicted (Deuteronomy 18:15-18). John does not say the people were wrong to think of Jesus as "the Prophet," but the next verse shows that they thought this Prophet should be a political leader. In this they were wrong.

Elisha foreshadowed this Prophet (who was one in the same as the Messiah) to come. According to 2 Kings 4:42-44, Elisha fed one hundred men with twenty loaves (a 5:1 ratio). But Jesus fed five thousand with five loaves (a 1000:1 ratio)! In Isaiah 25:6-9, the prophet said that the Messiah would prepare a great feast for all people, Jews and Gentiles. This miracle shows Jesus to be the Messiah.

6:15 During Jesus' ministry, nationalistic fervor was high; the people wanted a king, a leader who would free Israel from Rome. The people expected this of the coming Messiah-King. When Jesus realized their intentions, he left. Jesus' Kingdom would not be an earthly one; his Kingdom would not be established by a groundswell of popularity. This same opportunity for political power had already been offered to Jesus by Satan in the wilderness (Matthew 4:1-11). Jesus knew that the immediate opportunity was nothing compared to what God had planned (see Daniel 7:13-14).

JESUS WALKS ON WATER / 6:16-21 / 97

Of the three Gospel accounts of this miracle, John's includes the fewest details. He understates the action, and apart from a brief mention of the disciples' fright, he makes little emphasis on this event. Matthew described Peter's walk on (then in) the water. Mark mentioned the difficulties being created by the wind and waves as well as the fact that when the disciples saw Jesus, he was passing by them. The focus of Matthew and Mark highlighted the miracle and its effects on those who participated in it; John included the miracle as yet another indication of the true identity of Jesus.

6:16-18 Jesus had gone up to a mountainside to be alone (6:15). The disciples went down to the shore to wait for him. Though it was late in the day, many of the disciples were experienced boatmen who would have felt comfortable sailing at night as well as in daylight. Jesus had called Peter to follow him after Peter and his partners had been out all night fishing (Luke 5:1-11). As it got dark and Jesus still hadn't come back, the disciples decided to head out across the lake toward Capernaum. This lake, the Sea of Galilee (or Sea of Tiberias, see 6:1), is very large. It is 650 feet below sea level, 150 feet deep, and surrounded by hills. These physical features make it subject to sudden windstorms that cause extremely high waves. Sailors expected such storms on this lake, but the storms could still be very frightening. Such a sudden storm arose as a gale swept down upon them.

The Sea of Galilee is about seven miles across at its widest point, and the disciples were rowing the boat through rough waters that the wind had stirred up at the north end. They had recently encountered a bad storm in similar circumstances, except that at that time Jesus was in the boat with them (Mark 4:35-41). This time they noticed his absence.

6:19-21 They had gone three or four miles. According to Mark 6:45, it had taken the disciples all evening to row this short distance—evidently because the headwind was so strong. Suddenly, they saw Jesus walking on the water toward the boat. Not only was Jesus walking on the water, he had walked a great distance over raging seas! Understandably, the disciples were terrified, but Jesus called over the wailing wind, "I am here! Don't be afraid." The disciples thought they were seeing a ghost (Mark 6:49).

JESUS IS THE TRUE BREAD FROM HEAVEN / 6:22-40 / 99

To understand the action in these verses, we must back up and trace the movements of all the characters. Jesus performed the miracle of feeding the five thousand somewhere on the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee (6:1). That evening, his disciples boarded a boat headed west toward Capernaum (6:17) without Jesus, who had gone up into a mountain to be alone (6:15). Then Jesus came to the disciples during the storm (6:21). So Jesus and the disciples arrived together at Capernaum (presumably before dawn). On the opposite shore, the crowd that had seen the disciples leave knew that Jesus hadn't gone with them and that the disciples had taken the only boat. The next morning they discovered that Jesus was gone, but they knew that he had not gone with the disciples. They assumed that he must have left to join his disciples.

6:22-25 At some point during the day, several boats arrived from Tiberias. Though it is not stated, the implication is that the crowds may have heard of Jesus' whereabouts from someone on the boats. So people from the crowd used those boats, which were probably going to head back across the sea toward Tiberias anyway, to cross to Capernaum to search for Jesus.

6:26-27 The crowd, being satisfied once by what Jesus had done for them, wanted to see what else Jesus could do for them (maybe he'd provide more free meals?). But they did not realize what the miracle actually revealed to them. Jesus refused to encourage them in their desire for the material satisfaction he could provide. His beginning response in effect was, "You were so intent on being fed that you haven't yet seen who provided the food." The people may not have known it, but their needs went much deeper. Jesus' signs were given to reveal that he could meet those deeper needs.

Thus, Jesus told them: "Spend your energy seeking the eternal life that I, the Son of Man, can give you." The bread that fills the stomach, whether produced by a miraculous sign or made at the bakery, is not spiritual or eternal. Jesus was saying that the people should not be following him because he provided free bread, but because he provides spiritual "bread"—bread that can give them eternal life. He wanted the people to look to him as the one who could provide the food that endures to eternal life. He himself is that food. By coming to him and receiving him by faith they would partake of the Bread of Life. That is why God the Father sent him.

6:28-29 The crowd missed Jesus' words about how he would give the food that lasts for eternal life. So they asked, "What does God want us to do?" Jesus gave a straightforward answer: "This is what God wants you to do: Believe in the one he has sent." The only "work" God requires from us is to believe in his Son. But for some reason, we feel better somehow "earning" God's favor rather than accepting it as a gift. Eternal life is a gift; it cannot be earned; the only work to be done is to believe in Jesus.

6:30-31 Amazingly, the crowd then asked Jesus to do a miraculous sign if he wanted them to believe in him. The crowd had just seen the miracle of the multiplication of the loaves, but they wanted more—not just one day's supply of bread, but a guarantee of continuous supply. Their argument was that their ancestors ate manna in the wilderness—which, of course, was available every day for nearly forty years. And they cited their Scriptures, quoting from such verses as Exodus 16:4 and Psalm 78:24-25. A Midrash (Jewish commentary) on Exodus 16:4 says that just as the former redeemer (Moses) caused manna to descend from heaven, so also the latter Redeemer will cause manna to descend. They expected this from Jesus if he was the Messiah.

6:32-33 Moses hadn't performed the miracle, the Father had. And the God who gave the manna to the Israelites for forty years now gives the true bread from heaven—Jesus. Just as the Israelites ate manna every day, so God provides the true bread of God for daily sustenance. God had given them his Son—the one who comes down from heaven and gives life to the world—as the true heavenly bread to meet their daily spiritual needs. The present tense indicates the continual supply.

6:34-35 The Jews did not grasp that Jesus spoke about himself as the Bread of Life; they wanted a daily supply of physical bread, saying, "Give us that bread every day of our lives." Like the woman at the well who asked Jesus to give her the living water so she wouldn't be thirsty again, this crowd wanted what Jesus could give so their lives could be made easier. They missed the point. So Jesus told them directly, "I am the bread of life." If people wanted this bread, they must come to Jesus and believe in him. When Jesus used the words "I am," he was pointing to his unique, divine identity. In essence this statement says, "I the Lord God am here to provide you with everything you need for your spiritual life." For Jesus to say he is the Bread of Life is for him to say, "I am the sustenance of your life." Just as bread supplies our bodies with strength and nourishment, Jesus, the true Bread from Heaven, had come to strengthen and nourish his people, so that they would never be hungry again and never thirst.

6:36 According to some manuscripts, the reading is: “You have seen me.” This emphasizes that the crowds had seen Jesus, the very Bread of Life, standing before them, and yet they had not believed in him. Other manuscripts read, “You have seen and still you do not believe.” This emphasizes that the crowds had seen the miracles Jesus did and still they did not believe. They had not only seen but eaten the multiplied bread and fish, but they resisted the necessary conclusion that he was divine.

6:37 In the Greek, the word those is neuter singular, indicating the total body of believers for all time. The Father gives this collective group to the Son (see also 17:2, 24). Only those selected by God can come to the Son and believe in him. God’s Spirit enables them to come. All those who have been invited to come to Jesus and have done so can rest assured that God was at work in their lives.

While the first part of this verse speaks of the collective group of believers, this second part speaks about the individual: “I will never reject them.” God’s word assures us that Jesus will always welcome the sincere seeker, and the seeker who comes to believe will never be rejected (10:28-29).

6:38 Jesus did not work independently of God the Father, but in union with him: he came to do the will of God. This should give us even more assurance of being welcomed into God’s presence and being protected by him. All who respond positively to God’s call can be assured of his protection (see 17:11). The protection covers them in this life and for eternity. Our spiritual hunger and thirst are satisfied in this life, and we know in the future that we will be raised from the dead to live with Jesus forever. Yet the guarantee does not apply to superficial attachment. We must follow him wholeheartedly and commit our lives to him.

6:39-40 As in verse 37, the Greek word for all those is neuter singular; they indicate the total collective entity of all believers. All those who are among this group of believers can be assured of God’s promise of eternal life. Christ will not let his people be overcome by Satan. They will not be lost, and he will raise them to eternal life at the last day. However, this commitment must not be superficial, as was the “commitment” of those disciples who turned away (see 6:66). But those who believe will have eternal life. God values each person. Jesus demonstrated how valuable we are by his teaching: God sent the Son to earth; the Son came to earth; the Son promised to both preserve and to resurrect the ones he received from the Father.

THE PEOPLE DISAGREE THAT JESUS IS FROM HEAVEN / 6:41-59 / 100

Many of the crowd in Capernaum that day could not believe their ears. They knew this man's family, yet he claimed to be the Son of God. To them, Jesus' delusion seemed obvious. In their minds, Jesus was a local product with interesting powers and unusual authority, but was audacious when it came to speaking about himself. Jesus responded with uncompromising directness. He required then, as he requires now, an unconditional acceptance of his lordship. Any attempt to soften his claim amounts to rejection of his central message.

6:41-43 The people had some disagreement with Jesus. They knew his father and mother, so how could he say he came down from heaven? What they concluded was logical, but they really didn't know Jesus' parentage. Jesus had moved from Nazareth to Capernaum at the beginning of his ministry (see Matthew 4:13; Mark 1:21; John 2:12). Most likely, his parents and siblings had gone with him. The Jews in Capernaum knew Jesus' parents, and therefore they thought they knew who Jesus was—the son of Joseph. But Jesus told the people to stop grumbling and complaining about what he had said. Not one of them could know his true identity if the Father had not revealed it to him. Jesus relied on this revelation.

6:44-46 A person cannot come to Jesus if he has not been drawn by the Father, taught by the Father, heard from the Father, and learned from the Father. God, not the person, plays the most active role in salvation. When someone chooses to believe in Jesus Christ as Savior, he or she does so only in response to the urging of God's Holy Spirit. Thus no one can believe in Jesus without God's help.

When Jesus quoted from the prophets saying, “They will all be taught by God,” he was alluding to an Old Testament view of the messianic Kingdom where all people would be taught directly by God (Isaiah 54:13; Jeremiah 31:31-34). He was stressing the importance of not merely hearing, but learning. We are taught by God through the Bible, our experiences, the thoughts the Holy Spirit brings, and relationships with other Christians. Are you open to God's teaching?

Jesus' previous statement about people being taught by God (and listening to and learning from the Father) does not mean that any person could actually see God the Father. Only Jesus has come from God's presence, and only he has seen the Father. This last statement in itself implies divine privileges—for no man has ever seen God (see 1:18; 1 Timothy 6:15-16).

6:47 Jesus makes it plain that the believer has eternal life, starting now. The verb “believes” in these verses means “continues to believe.” We do not believe merely once; we keep on believing in and trusting Jesus.

6:48-50 Jesus then declared again (6:35), “Yes, I am the bread of life!” This is one of Jesus’ remarkable “I am” declarations recorded in John’s Gospel. No one but Jesus is the Bread that gives eternal life. The people earlier had spoken of the manna their ancestors ate in the wilderness (6:31), using that event as a standard for measuring Jesus. Jesus refused their challenge. Manna was a physical and temporal bread. The people ate it and were sustained for a day. But they had to get more bread every day, and this bread could not keep them from dying.

Without demeaning Moses’ role, Jesus was presenting himself as the spiritual Bread from Heaven that satisfies completely and leads to eternal life. Again, the personal effectiveness of this Bread comes not from seeing it or from recognizing its heavenly origin, but from taking it in—eating it.

6:51 To offer his flesh meant Jesus gave over his body to death on the cross, so that by his death people could live forever. To eat the living bread means to accept Christ into our lives and become united with him. We are united with Christ in two ways: (1) by believing in his death (the sacrifice of his flesh) and resurrection and (2) by devoting ourselves each day to living as he requires, depending on his teaching for guidance, and trusting in the Holy Spirit for power. Just as the Jews depended on bread for daily strength and relished it as a main part of their diet, so we should depend on and desire the living Christ in our daily lives.

6:52-53 Instead of directly answering their question about how he could give them his flesh to eat, Jesus reemphasized the necessity of eating his flesh and also drinking his blood. No one could receive his life until the giver died by shedding his own life’s blood. Thus, Jesus wants us to accept, receive, even assimilate the significance of his death in order to receive eternal life. Christians do this frequently when they commemorate the Lord’s Supper. But Christians should not limit this to only the celebration of the Lord’s Supper (or Eucharist); Christians can partake of Jesus anytime.

6:54-55 Those who eat Jesus’ flesh and drink his blood have eternal life. Those who accept by faith Jesus’ sacrificial death receive eternal life.

6:56 This is the first mention in this Gospel of “mutual indwelling” (that is, a simultaneous indwelling of two persons in each other, also known as “coinherence”). When we receive Jesus, we remain in him and he remains in us.

6:57 Here Jesus pointed to his relationship with the Father as a model of the vital union he would share with each believer. Jesus said that he lives by the power of the living Father who sent him, so those who partake of Jesus will live because of Jesus.

6:58-59 This verse summarizes the discourse and repeats the major points of Jesus’ message. He again contrasted himself as the true bread from heaven that gives life with the manna that could not give eternal life to those Israelites who ate it. Jesus gave this teaching in the synagogue in Capernaum to the Jews gathered there for worship.

MANY DISCIPLES DESERT JESUS / 6:60-71 / 101

Those listening to Jesus were experiencing a crisis in their determination to follow him. Many of his actions thus far had been attractive, though sometimes curious. But all this talk of consuming his body and blood was difficult to stomach. Jesus’ claims forced his followers to examine their real motives and the depth of their commitment.

6:60 At this time in Jesus’ ministry, he had several followers who could loosely be called his disciples (see 4:1). These “disciples” were not the Twelve, and many of them would not receive his message. They pointed out that it was hard to understand. The motive behind Jesus’ harsh words is not difficult to see—he wanted people to count the cost of following him (Luke 14:25-33). His words shocked and challenged. They were not comfortable half-truths, but hard-edged truth. Those who follow Jesus in hopes of feeling good will always be disappointed sooner or later. Only those who find in Jesus the rock-solid truth will be able to weather the difficulties of living in this fallen world

6:61 Jesus, knowing that his listeners were complaining, asked, “Does this offend you?” or more literally, “Does this cause you to stumble?” (The Greek word skandalizo means “to ensnare, to trap, to cause to stumble”; it is often used to indicate a falling away into unbelief. See, for example, Matthew 13:21; 24:10; Mark 6:3; Romans 14:20-21.) Jesus was keenly aware that those not ready to respond fully to him would stumble over him or be offended by him. Remember that it is possible to be offensive in the way we communicate the gospel, for which we would be at fault. But if we present Jesus lovingly and honestly, we must neither be shocked nor feel guilty if the Good News offends someone.

6:62 They didn't believe that Jesus came down from heaven. If they saw him return to heaven, would they then believe? According to verse 65, they would not, for they were not true believers. Jesus had been purposely harsh so as to separate the true believers from those who were accompanying him for the wrong reasons. Some sought a new political party; others thought Jesus might lead a revolt against Rome; still others were simply fascinated with theological discussions. All of these thoughts were potential starting points of interest in Jesus, but they were not enough to make people real disciples.

6:63 This statement gives us the key to interpreting Jesus' discourse. His hearers had not understood the spiritual intent of his message. A fleshly interpretation of his words would yield nothing; one must apply a spiritual interpretation to Spirit-inspired words. Human effort that begins with the desires and objectives of human wisdom accomplishes nothing. Instead, it is the Spirit who gives eternal life. Jesus' very words are spirit and life; therefore, we must depend on the life-giving Spirit to appropriate Jesus' words. Peter was one such believer who came to realize that Jesus had the words of eternal life (see 6:68).

6:64 From the beginning of his ministry Jesus knew that some of the ones following him were not believers in his true identity as the Son of God come from heaven.

Jesus also knew from the first who would betray him. This was Judas, the son of Simon Iscariot (6:70). For a moment, John interrupts with a brief word of explanation for his original readers and us. Jesus included Judas in every facet of his ministry, knowing all the time that he would not respond to the living truth. Jesus' treatment of Judas was consistent with his own character, despite that which Judas deserved for his unwillingness to believe.

6:65 This repeats what Jesus had declared before (see 6:44-45). The signs in themselves, no matter how remarkable, are not completely convincing. Some believe through seeing and others believe though not seeing, but all require God's assistance (20:29).

6:66 Jesus was saying tough things, and this caused many of his disciples to not follow anymore. Within sight of the Kingdom of Heaven, privileged with a taste of the bread of life, and watching the living water flow, they nevertheless walked away. In a short sentence, John captured one of the saddest moments in the ministry of Jesus.

6:67-68 According to the Greek, this question expects a negative answer. Jesus knew their weaknesses and how little they really understood. He knew that one of them would not only go away, but betray him also. Yet he also knew that God had chosen eleven to believe in him.

We can't stay on middle ground about Jesus. When he asked the disciples, "Are you going to leave, too?" he was showing them that he was not taking their faith for granted. Jesus never tried to repel people with his teachings. He simply told the truth. The more the people heard Jesus' real message, the more they divided into two camps—the honest seekers wanting to understand more, and those rejecting Jesus because they didn't like what they heard.

Peter replied, "To whom would we go?" In his straightforward way, Peter answered for all of us—there is no other way. Though there are many philosophies and self-styled authorities, Jesus alone has the words that give eternal life. People look everywhere for eternal life and miss Christ, the only source. There is nowhere else to go.

6:69 Peter's declaration parallels the one he made at Caesarea Philippi, but each of the synoptic Gospels gives a slightly different version of Peter's words (see Matthew 16:16; Mark 8:29; Luke 9:20). Peter was actually saying more than he knew. The descriptive words he blurted out to tell Jesus how he and the other disciples felt about him conveys both Peter's impulsive nature and his genuine impression of Christ. First, he called Jesus "Lord" (6:68). To this he added: (1) there's no one else like you; (2) you have the truth about eternal life; (3) we have believed; (4) we know that you are the Holy One of God. Peter was doing the best he could to describe Jesus in a category separate from anyone else who ever lived.

Like Peter's, our own understanding of Jesus must expand as we live for him. When we first believe in Jesus as Savior and Lord, our understanding will be real but limited. But as time passes, our awareness of the breadth and depth of Jesus' saving work and his lordship ought to grow.

6:70-71 Peter may have thought he was speaking for the Twelve, but not so. One among them—Judas Iscariot—was a devil, the traitor who would betray Jesus. According to 13:2 and 27, Satan put the idea into Judas's heart to betray Jesus and then entered Judas to instigate the actual betrayal. Diabolos (6:70) means "slandorous, devilish," and having Satan's nature and qualities. Judas gave into evil thinking and came under the control of the devil.

John reminded his first readers about what was at stake. Almost every word of teaching uttered by Jesus was given in the context of intense spiritual drama. Heaven must have held its breath as humans tried to figure out Jesus' true identity.

JESUS' BROTHERS RIDICULE HIM / 7:1-9 / 121

From this chapter forward, John shows Jesus as the suffering Messiah—suffering the unbelief of his own family, the divided opinions of the crowd, and the persecution of the Jewish religious leaders in Jerusalem. By portraying Jesus' rejection, John provided his first readers and us with a realistic picture of the costs of being a disciple. Those who followed did so knowingly and willingly. John encourages us to believe, to stand firm, and to resist being like those who opposed and doubted Jesus while he lived on earth.

7:1 Because the Jewish religious leaders in Jerusalem were plotting his death (see 5:18), Jesus stayed in Galilee for the next twelve months. He was not afraid of the Jewish leaders; rather, he knew that his time to die had not yet come (see 7:8). When God's intended time came, he would willingly give his life. According to the synoptic Gospels, during this time Jesus ministered actively throughout Galilee (with Capernaum as his home base).

7:2 The Festival of Shelters occurred about six months after the Passover celebration mentioned in 6:4. This festival commemorated the days when the Israelites wandered in the wilderness and lived in tents (Leviticus 23:43). Celebrated in the month of Tishri (September/October in our calendar), it marked the gathering of the autumn harvest including the grapes (see Exodus 23:16). During this time many Jews went to Jerusalem and built shelters in which they would live for a full week while enjoying the festivities in the city (see Leviticus 23:33ff.). These simple dwellings helped the people remember their days of misery in the wilderness.

7:3-5 Jesus' brothers, the sons of Joseph and Mary, did not believe that their brother was the Messiah (see Mark 3:21, 31-35). Apparently, they did not become believers until after Jesus' resurrection. After his resurrection, Jesus appeared to his brother James (1 Corinthians 15:7), who believed and eventually became the leader of the church in Jerusalem (Acts 15:13) and the author of the book of James. The prayer meeting that followed Jesus' ascension included his family (Acts 1:14). The brothers were James, Joseph, Simon, and Judas (Matthew 13:55). Judas (Jude) later wrote the book of Jude. Matthew writes that Jesus also had half sisters (Matthew 13:56).

Jesus' brothers scoffed at him. The followers refers to the crowds, not the Twelve. Jesus' brothers asked why he would remain in relative obscurity (in Galilee, at home with them) when he was trying to show the world he was the Messiah. They urged him to prove his identity by showing his wonderful miracles in Jerusalem, so that the world could see that Jesus was who he claimed to be. But because of their unbelief, they missed the point. The miracles had pictured Jesus' power and glory. He would reveal his true glory and power through his death and resurrection, and the time for that revelation was coming.

7:6 Jesus explained that now was not the right time for him to go. Jesus was simply indicating that the freedom to go up to Jerusalem had not yet come for him. As events unfolded, he did eventually go to the festival, but according to God's timetable. Jesus added that his brothers could use time as if it was theirs to squander, basing their decisions about time only on immediate opportunities, and showing no apparent desire to fit into God's plan. But Jesus' time belonged to the Father; he lived according to a different and predetermined schedule. His every step on this earth had a purpose; he would only act according to God's timetable. Whether he would go to this festival, and when he would go, would be determined by God alone, not by harassing relatives or waiting crowds.

7:7 The world at large hates Jesus because his testimony (as the Light of the World) exposes the world's evil (see 3:19-21). By the world John means this nonbelieving world's system of values and all those in it who have no love for or devotion to God. The world hated Jesus for accusing it of sin and evil. At this time Jesus' brothers were one with the world in not believing in Jesus; therefore, the world could not hate them. Rebellion loves company. People do not realize that indifference to Christ makes them partners with those who hate Christianity.

7:8-9 Jesus would do nothing by coercion or persuasion of others. Whatever he did would be done for his Father's glory and on his Father's timetable. In this incident, Jesus' brothers seem to be trying to taunt him into proving he is the Messiah. But Jesus knew his mission. No one, not even his taunting brothers, would turn him away from what he had come to do and from the way he had chosen to do it. True to his word, Jesus did not go up to Jerusalem when his brothers wanted him to. He remained in Galilee until after they left.

JESUS TEACHES OPENLY AT THE TEMPLE / 7:10-31 / 123

Throughout this chapter John highlights the various opinions the Jews had about Jesus. Before Jesus appeared at the festival, opinions about him were swirling through the visiting crowd. Some of these Jews may have seen Jesus' miracles or heard him teach; others may have only heard of what he had done both in Jerusalem and in Galilee. That particular year, Jesus was the hot topic of conversation during the Festival of Shelters.

Meanwhile, Jesus was leaving Galilee for the last time. Events were moving rapidly toward “his time,” and he would have no further opportunities to travel back to the area where he had spent his childhood. This visit marked the third appearance of Jesus in Jerusalem during his ministry (2:13; 5:1).

7:10-12 After Jesus’ mocking brothers left for the festival in Jerusalem, Jesus also went, though secretly. Jesus would not go up to Jerusalem for the purpose of showing himself to be the Christ (which was what his brothers had told him to do, see 7:3-4). In fact, Jesus could not be found during the first few days of the festival (see 7:11, 14).

In the events that follow, a lot happened behind the scenes. Not only did Jesus travel to Jerusalem in secret, but intrigue and subterfuge were at work everywhere. The crowds were buzzing with opinions about Jesus, yet there was no clear consensus. The Jewish leaders were busily conferring and watching for the right time to legitimately arrest him. The tension-laden atmosphere fostered both excitement and treachery.

7:13 The Jewish leaders had a great deal of power over the common people. Apparently these leaders couldn’t do much to Jesus at this time, but they threatened anyone who might publicly support him. They could use excommunication from the synagogue as a reprisal for believing in Jesus (9:22). Jews considered this a severe punishment. Jesus’ listeners had their opinions but were afraid to express them. This created a power stalemate between the religious leaders and the crowds.

7:14-15 Midway through the festival, Jesus came out from secrecy and began to teach in public, in the extremely visible outer court of the Temple. Jesus’ delay in arriving and the crowd’s divided opinion created an anticipation for his appearance and teaching. The atmosphere was tense and excitable.

When the Jewish leaders heard Jesus, they were surprised at his knowledge, having never been trained as a rabbi in their schools. In other words, Jesus had no official human certification. He spoke with authority without relying on license or degree to legitimize his teaching. From what follows this statement about the amazement of the crowd, we understand that the unrest among the people about Jesus’ identity continued to develop. After the crowd’s initial amazement, they grew restless over the issues of Jesus’ identity and began to take sides.

7:16-18 Jesus' teaching was authoritative because it originated from God, not from himself. Those who knew God and sought to do the will of God would know whether his teaching was from God or was his own. Unlike those who present their own ideas and are looking for praise for themselves, Jesus sought to honor the one who sent him. Jesus determined to bring God's message of salvation to humanity and thereby to bring him glory. Therefore, Jesus could rightfully claim about himself that he is good and genuine. And only those who want to do God's will can recognize Jesus for who he is—God's Son. Jesus was saying that those who examine his teaching or the signs that accompanied his ministry must be open-minded and desire to respond to God's will once it is known. Some people who demand more evidence may be covering up their refusal to submit to God. Every believer who desires to know God's will must seek it with the intention of obeying it once it has been found.

7:19 Beginning with verse 19, Jesus alluded to the debate he had with the Jews during his last visit to Jerusalem (see 5:18ff.). Because Jesus had healed a man on the Sabbath and then directly implied his own equality with God, his Father, the Jewish religious leaders wanted to kill him for Sabbath-breaking and blasphemy. The Pharisees tried to achieve holiness by meticulously keeping the rules that they had added to God's laws. Jesus' accusation that they didn't obey the law of Moses stung them deeply. In spite of their pompous pride in their accomplishments and their rules, they did not measure up, for they were living far below what the law of Moses required. By enforcing their own laws regarding Sabbath-breaking and blasphemy, they were about to break one of the Ten Commandments: "Do not murder" (Exodus 20:13). But they didn't see this error; they so hated Jesus that they were blind to their own sin.

7:20 In response to Jesus' charge that they were trying to kill him, the people responded with an accusation of their own and a question. We cannot know how widely spread the plot against Jesus was. But verse 25 records the fact that a certain "they" were trying to kill him, and their intentions were widely known. At this point, the crowd wanted to know whether Jesus could identify the people behind the plot. But this crowd also blasphemed against Jesus by charging him with being demon possessed. Mark records an earlier incident (Mark 3:22-30) when a similar charge was leveled against Jesus. It was a particularly effective tactic on the part of the religious leaders to admit the spirituality of Jesus, but then define it as evil. This time Jesus did not even bother refuting the obvious dishonesty of the allegations.

7:21-24 Because Jesus was in Jerusalem, he most likely was referring back to the miracle in 5:1-15—the healing of the paralyzed man. Jesus mentioned that he had healed on the Sabbath, the point of contention surrounding the miracle. Jesus reminded the people again that their spiritual priorities were wrong. He noted that, according to Moses’ law, circumcision was to be performed eight days after a baby’s birth (Genesis 17:9-14; Leviticus 12:3). This rite demonstrated the Jews’ identity as part of God’s covenant people. If the eighth day after birth fell on a Sabbath, they still performed the circumcision (even though it was considered work). By referring to Abraham performing circumcision, Jesus was pointing to an authority and principle prior to Moses. By healing the whole person, Jesus demonstrated that his creative power was equal to God’s and superior to Moses’.

The point was that while the religious leaders allowed certain exceptions to Sabbath laws, they allowed none to Jesus, who simply showed mercy to those who needed healing. He demonstrated from their own practices that they would overrule a law when two ceremonial laws came into conflict. But the Jewish leaders were so engrossed with their regulations about Sabbath-keeping that they failed to see the true intent of Jesus’ actions. Their superficial but tenacious adherence to their own traditions would cause them to miss the Messiah, to whom their Scriptures pointed.

7:25-27 Some of the people of Jerusalem had heard that the religious rulers were trying to kill Jesus. But since he was speaking in public and none of the rulers attempted to stop him, they wondered if the rulers had reconsidered and had recognized that Jesus really was the Messiah. But this seemed improbable to the crowds because even they could think of some objections.

Their reasoning? “We know where this man comes from. When the Messiah comes, he will simply appear; no one will know where he comes from.” The people thought they knew where Jesus came from—Nazareth of Galilee. They saw him as a man, a neighbor, a carpenter, but they did not have a close relationship with him. They did not know that he had come from God and had been born of a virgin, heralded by angels, recognized as divine by shepherds and then by wise men from the East, and greeted joyfully as the Messiah by two aged prophets (Luke 2). Instead, the people were convinced that no one was supposed to know where the Messiah came from. There was a popular tradition that the Messiah would simply appear. It was just as mistaken as the belief that the Christ would be a military/political leader who would restore Israel’s greatness. Those who believed this tradition were ignoring the Scriptures that clearly predicted the Messiah's birthplace (Micah 5:2). The popular tradition about the origin and appearance of the Messiah probably came from what is recorded in 1 Enoch 48:6; 4 Ezra 13:1ff., books that were not included in our Bibles because they were not considered authoritative. (They were, however, valued for personal study.)

7:28-31 Knowing that the people did not believe in him, Jesus said: “Yes, you know me, and you know where I come from.” Some versions render this sentence as a question rather than a statement. The people did indeed know where he was from geographically (he grew up in Galilee), but they really did not know because, as Jesus went on to say: “I represent one you don't know, and he is true. I know him because I have come from him, and he sent me to you.” Jesus was declaring his divine origin and divine commission. From Jesus' proclamation we can gather that it is important to know, not from where Jesus came, but from whom he came. To recognize this origin requires revelation. But the people did not know Jesus because they did not know the one who sent him.

This was too much for the leaders who tried to arrest him. This was the first spontaneous attempt to restrain Jesus. A little later there was an official attempt described in verse 32. But Jesus could not be detained, for his time had not yet come. The verse between the two attempted arrests says that many believed. There was turmoil in the crowd about Jesus' true identity. People were taking sides. Some people believed and others did not. For a while there had been general confusion. But the confusion was resolving into belief and unbelief. Those who believed Jesus concluded that he had presented the true credentials of the Messiah.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS ATTEMPT TO ARREST JESUS / 7:32-52 / 124

Nicodemus tactfully confronted the Pharisees with their failure to keep their own laws. The Pharisees were losing ground—the Temple guards came back impressed by Jesus (7:46), and one of the Pharisees' own, Nicodemus, was defending him. With their hypocritical motives being exposed and their prestige slowly eroding, the Pharisees renewed their efforts to protect themselves. Pride would interfere with their ability to reason, and soon they would become obsessed with getting rid of Jesus just to save face. What was good and right no longer mattered.

7:32-34 Aware that the Jewish religious leaders had sent Temple guards to arrest him, Jesus alluded to his coming death: “I will be here a little longer.

Then I will return to the one who sent me.” No one would be taking Jesus’ life from him; rather, he would depart this life according to the preordained time and then return to his Father. Jesus’ statement also served as a calm warning to those who were plotting against him that their efforts would only succeed subject to God’s plan. At that time, says Jesus, “You will search for me but not find me. And you won’t be able to come where I am.” Another way to say this is, “You will seek me and not find me because your unbelief has rendered you unable to understand where I am.” Even after Jesus (the true Messiah) left, the Jews would continue to seek for the coming of the Messiah but would never find him—because he had already come!

7:35-36 The Jewish leaders, not understanding that Jesus’ statement referred to his death, wondered if he was speaking about going to the Jews in other lands or even to the Gentiles. The Dispersion or Diaspora is a technical term referring to the large number of Jews who were “dispersed” (or scattered) throughout the Roman Empire and beyond. Some of the Jews were dispersed among the Gentiles. The Jews listening to Jesus wondered if he was about to depart Judea and go to these Jews.

7:37-39 The last day, the climax of the festival, was the eighth day. During the Festival of Shelters, the Jews celebrated the memory of how God protected their ancestors in their travels across the wilderness to the Promised Land, guiding them on their way and providing them with manna and, on one occasion, water from a rock (see Exodus 17:1-7). Every day during this festival, except for the last day, a priest stood in front of the Temple with a golden pitcher of water and poured the water on a rock. This commemorated the water flowing out of the rock that gave the Israelites water to drink. They performed this ceremony each day of the festival except the eighth, when they offered public prayers for continued rain.

Thus, on the last day when the water was not poured out, Jesus stood and said in a loud voice, “If you are thirsty, come to me! If you believe in me, come and drink! For the Scriptures declare that rivers of living water will flow out from within.” Jesus’ words, “Come and drink,” allude to the theme of many Bible passages that talk about the Messiah’s life-giving blessings (Isaiah 12:2-3; 44:3-4; 58:11). By promising to give the Holy Spirit to all who believed, Jesus was claiming to be the Messiah, for that was something only the Messiah could do. There is no particular verse in the Old Testament that exactly says “rivers of living water will flow out from within.” Jesus was either paraphrasing a verse like Psalm 78:16 or Isaiah 58:11.

John provided an explanatory note: He was speaking of the Spirit, who would be given to everyone believing in him. At that time, the Holy Spirit had not yet been given to all believers. That happened after Jesus entered into his glory through the resurrection and ascension (see 16:7-16). The availability of the Spirit is linked with the glorification of Jesus, for it was after Jesus' glorification through death and resurrection that the Spirit became available to believers (see 20:22).

7:40-44 Jesus' exclamatory invitation generated faith in some of the hearers. Some said, "This man surely is the Prophet" (meaning the Prophet predicted by Moses in Deuteronomy 18:15-18); others said, "He is the Messiah." But others could not believe. They were convinced that the Messiah would not come from Galilee. They argued correctly from the Scriptures that he was to be born of the royal line of David, in Bethlehem (see Psalm 89:3-4; 132:11; Isaiah 9:6-7; 11:1; Micah 5:2). And, in fact, Jesus was David's son (see Matthew 1:1-18; Romans 1:3-4) born in Bethlehem (see Matthew 2:1-6; Luke 2:1-11). But soon after his birth, Jesus' parents took him to Egypt to protect his life. Later, they brought him to Nazareth of Galilee (the hometown of Joseph and Mary), where he grew up (see Matthew 2:13-23). Thereafter he was identified as a Galilean and a Nazarene, not a Judean or a Bethlehemite. However, Jesus never once tried to explain that his birthplace was Bethlehem. Instead, he always pointed to his divine, heavenly origin. If a person knew God, he would know that Jesus was the Christ.

As the crowd argued about Jesus' identity, they were divided and some wanted him arrested. But his time had not yet come, so no one touched him.

7:45-49 The Temple guards were very likely police under the jurisdiction of the Jewish religious rulers, not the Romans. Some of the Levites were probably assigned this duty. Although the Romans ruled Palestine, they gave the Jewish religious leaders authority over minor civil and religious affairs. The religious leaders supervised their own Temple guards and gave the officers power to arrest anyone causing a disturbance or breaking any of their ceremonial laws. But these Temple guards couldn't find one reason to arrest Jesus. And as they listened to Jesus to try to find evidence, they couldn't help but hear his wonderful words.

Although sent by leading priests and Pharisees with specific orders to arrest Jesus, the guards returned empty-handed. When asked why they did not bring Jesus, they said, "We have never heard anyone talk like this!" When the guards heard Jesus, they recognized that they were listening to a man like no other, for, in fact, they were listening to the Son of God (see Matthew 7:29; Luke 4:22).

But the Pharisees rejected this simple testimony. They asked these guards if they, like the crowd, were also led astray. If Jesus really were the Messiah, they argued, at least some of the religious rulers would believe in him. And since not a single one of them did, then this man could not be the Messiah. Maybe the crowds believed in him, but the crowds were ignorant. But in judging the people for their supposed ignorance, the Pharisees were judging themselves, for they were ignorant of God and did not know the one he sent.

7:50-52 Nicodemus, who had gone to Jesus earlier and who was one of their own number (see 3:1-21), asked, “Is it legal to convict a man before he is given a hearing?” Nicodemus attempted to make his fellow Pharisees adhere to the law they claimed to know and to act fairly and justly. An accused person, according to Deuteronomy 1:16, must first be heard before being judged.

This passage offers additional insight into Nicodemus, the Pharisee who visited Jesus at night (chapter 3). Apparently Nicodemus had become a secret believer (see 12:42). Since most of the Pharisees hated Jesus and wanted to kill him, Nicodemus risked his reputation and high position when he spoke up for Jesus. His statement was bold, and the Pharisees immediately became suspicious. After Jesus’ death, Nicodemus brought spices for his body (19:39). That is the last time Nicodemus is mentioned in Scripture.

But these Pharisees would not listen even to one of their own. The depth of their real allegiance to the law became clear when their position was threatened by the truth. They retorted sarcastically, “Are you from Galilee, too? Search the Scriptures and see for yourself—no prophet ever comes from Galilee!” The Pharisees and religious leaders were confident that they could reject Jesus as having any claim as the Messiah because of his Galilean origin. But they were wrong on three counts: (1) Jesus was born in Bethlehem, the city of David (Luke 2:4-11; also Micah 5:2); (2) The Scriptures do speak of the Messiah as a “great light” for Galilee (Isaiah 9:1-2); (3) Jonah (2 Kings 14:25) and Elijah (1 Kings 17:1) came from this region. The leaders may have been referring to the Prophet of Deuteronomy 18:15. They were proud and certain that he would come from their territory, Judea.

JESUS FORGIVES AN ADULTEROUS WOMAN / 7:53–8:11 / 125

The earliest manuscripts of John's gospel do not include the story of the adulterous woman. It does not appear in any Greek manuscript until the fifth century, and no Greek church father comments on the passage prior to the twelfth century. Even then, the comments state that the accurate manuscripts do not contain this story. When it was inserted in later manuscripts, the story of the adulterous woman appeared in different places: after John 7:52, after Luke 21:38, at the end of John; and when it does appear it is often marked off by asterisks to signal doubt about where it belongs. The story is part of an oral tradition that was circulated in the Western church, eventually finding its way into the Latin Vulgate, and from there into later Greek manuscripts.

The evidence against John having included this particular story in his Gospel is conclusive. First, many scholars point out that the vocabulary used in this passage does not match the rest of John. Second, although the setting is plausible (other similar confrontations between Jewish leaders and Jesus occurred in Jerusalem), the insertion of the story at this point in John (after 7:52 and before 8:12) disrupts the narrative flow. Third, since the account does not appear in writing until later manuscripts, its "orphan" status is evidenced by it being in several locations, as mentioned above.

However, even though the passage was not written by John, it still may be regarded as a true story. The actions and words of Jesus are consistent with what we know of him from the rest of the Gospels. There is no new or unusual information in the passage that adds evidence against its inclusion. The encounter appears as an added snapshot of Jesus in John's collection, though we can tell that someone else probably took the picture. The event deserves at least consideration in teaching and preaching as an act that Jesus did at some point in his ministry, for it illustrates Jesus' compassion for sinful people (which includes us all) and his willingness to forgive any sinner; but the story should not be given the same authority as Scripture.

7:53–8:3 The teachers of religious law and Pharisees brought a woman they had caught in the act of adultery. The religious leaders did not bring this woman to Jesus to promote justice; they used her to try to trap Jesus. Though indignant toward this woman's sin, the religious leaders brought her to Jesus with political, not spiritual, motives in mind. They forgot the obvious fact that catching someone in the very act of adultery involves catching two people. Their devaluation of the woman (while ignoring the man's sin) made her no more than a pawn in their efforts to trap Jesus.

8:4-6 The Jewish leaders had already disregarded the law by arresting the woman without the man (Leviticus 20:10; Deuteronomy 22:22). Both were to be stoned. But the proceedings before Jesus had little to do with justice. The leaders were using the woman's sin as an opportunity to trick Jesus and destroy his credibility with the people. If Jesus were to say that the woman should not be stoned, they could accuse him of violating Moses' law. If he were to urge them to execute her, they would report him to the Romans, who did not permit the Jews to carry out their own executions (18:31). But Jesus was aware of their intentions and did not give either of the expected responses to the dilemma they placed before him. He simply stooped down and wrote in the dust with his finger. Many have speculated what he wrote: maybe he was listing the names of those present who had committed adultery (and scaring them to death that he knew it); he might have been listing names and various sins that each person had committed; maybe he was writing out the Ten Commandments to point out that no one could claim to be without sin. In any case, Jesus made the accusers uncomfortable.

8:7-8 The religious leaders could have handled this case without Jesus' opinion. Jesus was fully aware that the woman was only brought to him so the Pharisees could test him. Jesus' statement of permission, "All right, stone her," balanced several crucial points of truth. He upheld the legal penalty for adultery (stoning), so he could not be accused of being against the law. But by requiring that only those who have never sinned throw the first stones, Jesus exposed what was in the accusers' hearts. Without condoning the woman's actions, he highlighted the importance of compassion and forgiveness and broadened the spotlight of judgment until every accuser felt himself included. Jesus knew the execution could not be carried out.

How are we to apply Jesus' statement about only sinless persons rendering judgment? Jesus was not saying that only perfect, sinless people can make accurate accusations, pass judgment, or exact a death penalty. Nor was he excusing adultery or any other sin by saying that everyone sins. This event illustrates that wise judgment flows out of honest motives. Jesus resolved an injustice about to be committed by exposing the hypocrisy of the witnesses against the woman. By making the accusers examine themselves, he exposed their real motives.

Jesus did confront the woman's sin, but he exercised compassion alongside confrontation. As with the woman at the well (chapter 4), Jesus demonstrated to this woman that she was of greater importance than what she had done wrong.

8:9-11 When Jesus invited someone who had not sinned to throw the first stone, the leaders slipped away one by one, from oldest to youngest. Evidently the older men were more aware of their sins than the younger. Age and experience often temper youthful self-righteousness. We all have a sinful nature and are desperately in need of forgiveness and transformation. None of us would have been able to throw the first stone; none of us can claim sinlessness. We, too, would have had to walk away.

Jesus was left in the middle of the crowd with the woman. Apparently no one could claim sinlessness so as to stone this woman. Jesus had exposed their hypocrisy and embarrassed them, and there was nothing for them to do but go back and try to think of some other way to trap Jesus.

No one had accused the woman, and Jesus kindly said that he would not condemn her either. But there was more—she was not simply free to go her way. Jesus didn't just free her from the Pharisees, he wanted to free her from her sin, so he added, “Go and sin no more.” Jesus didn't condemn her, but neither did he ignore or condone her behavior. Jesus told the woman to leave her life of sin.

JESUS IS THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD / 8:12-20 / 126

This section ties in closely with the previous section (7:45-52) where Nicodemus had recommended that the religious leaders first hear Jesus before passing judgment on him. In this section Jesus is heard, and he affirms the validity of his testimony based on his divine identity. In no other chapter of the Bible does Jesus make so many declarations about himself.

8:12 In the earliest manuscripts of John, this verse immediately follows 7:52. Chapters 7 and 8 record the dialogues that Jesus had with the Jewish leaders in Jerusalem during the Festival of Shelters. In addition to the ceremony with water, huge lamps in the Court of Women in the Temple were lit in commemoration of the pillar of fire that led the Israelites in their wilderness journey (Numbers 9:15-23). The light from those lamps lit up much of Jerusalem. In declaring himself to be the light, Jesus was claiming divinity. In the Bible, “light” symbolizes the holiness of God (see also Psalm 27:1; 36:9; Acts 9:3; 1 John 1:5). As the light, Jesus illumines the truth, gives people spiritual understanding, and reveals to us God himself and what he has done for us.

In claiming to be the light of the world, Jesus defined his unique position as the one true light for all people, not just the Jews (Isaiah 49:6). Death brings eternal darkness; but to follow Jesus means not stumbling through the darkness, but having the light that leads to life. Believers no longer walk blindly in sin, rather his light shows sin and the need of forgiveness, gives guidance, and leads into eternal life with him.

8:13-14 After Jesus said this, the Pharisees replied, “You are making false claims about yourself!” But they did not know anything about Jesus. They assumed he was talking with no valid testimony from anyone else. Jewish law says that two witnesses are needed for a valid testimony in a capital offense, as their charge of blasphemy was (5:31; also Deuteronomy 19:15). Jesus claimed that his testimony was true because Jesus knows God the Father, and the words that Jesus spoke were from the Father himself. Therefore when Jesus spoke, not only was he testifying for himself, but because he spoke the words of God, God was testifying for him as well.

8:15-16 The religious leaders did not know Jesus’ divine origin and considered him to be no more than a fake Messiah; that is, they were judging him with all their human limitations. While they did that, Jesus was not judging anyone. Jesus meant that while his accusers judged by human standards, he did not. Jesus reserved for himself the right to judge, though that was not the primary reason for his presence. Jesus did not come to judge, but to save. He had already told a noted Pharisee (Nicodemus), “God did not send his Son into the world to condemn it, but to save it” (3:17). But as the Son of man, he has been given the authority to judge; and when the future day of judgment comes, Jesus’ judgment will be correct in every respect because he will judge according to the Father’s will (see 5:27, 45). Therefore, it could be said that while Jesus did not come to judge, his coming led to judgment because it forced a decision—and a rejection of Jesus led to judgment.

8:17-18 The religious leaders did not understand that the Father and Son lived in each other and were with each other (see 10:38; 14:9-11; 17:21). Therefore, even though the Son came from the Father (8:14) and was sent by the Father (8:16, 18), he was not separate from the Father—for the Father who sent the Son came with him and provided testimony for him. His confirming witness was God himself. Jesus and the Father made two witnesses, the number required by the law.

8:19-20 In asking to see his father, the leaders might as well have been saying,

“Bring on the other witness; we wish to question him.” If his father was the other witness, then where was he? In their very presence, Jesus affirmed that they knew neither him nor his Father. Their unwillingness to “know” him when he was among them also kept them from knowing the Father, who was just as truly among them.

Jesus had already told them that his Father was with him, but their question showed that they did not know the Son or the Father—for “if you knew me, then you would know my Father, too.” When Jesus speaks, the Father speaks. But this was completely lost on these religious leaders.

JESUS WARNS OF COMING JUDGMENT / 8:21-30 / 127

With chilling brevity, Jesus predicted the fate of those who fail to find him. The Pharisees continued to respond to Jesus out of rigid human standards. Because of this, they continued to be denounced by Jesus. But in this case, Jesus’ hardness proved to be compassion. Only the bluntness of Jesus’ vision of their condition finally broke through to some.

8:21-22 Speaking again to the Jewish religious leaders, Jesus declared, “You will search for me and die in your sin.” If the Jewish religious leaders would not believe in Jesus while he was with them, they would run the risk of not having any further opportunity to receive eternal life. Jesus predicted that they would continue to look for a messiah, though the real one had already been among them. The leaders’ fatal sin would be in rejecting the only one who could save them.

His statement, “You cannot come where I am going,” refers to his death and return to his Father—the religious leaders could not follow him there. The opportunity to speak with Jesus was limited; soon he would leave them having been rejected by them. Those who rejected Jesus would die without having their sins forgiven and would therefore literally not be able to go where Jesus would be.

As in 7:34-36, the Jews could not comprehend Jesus’ words. They surmised that he must be speaking about committing suicide. In Greek, the question expects a negative answer. Instead of responding to their tentative interpretation, Jesus explained why they were unable to comprehend his statements.

8:23-24 Those from below and of this world are earthly, born of the flesh, incapable of understanding heavenly and spiritual realities (see 3:6; 1 Corinthians 2:14-15). The Pharisees were set in their faulty perspective and were unwilling to consider that they might be wrong. They were looking very hard—in the wrong place. Therefore, Jesus told them, “Unless you believe that I am who I say I am, you will die in your sins.” By refusing to acknowledge Jesus as the divine Son of God, these people were committing spiritual suicide. To die in our sins is the worst that can happen, for it is to die without ever repenting of our sinful life-style or having our guilt and sin covered by the blood of Christ. Jesus confronted the leaders with their crucial need to recognize or reject his divinity. People today face that same need.

8:25 The Pharisees decided to try the direct approach; they asked Jesus, “Tell us who you are.” When the Pharisees pressed Jesus to declare his identity, he answered, “I am the one I have always claimed to be.” Jesus simply refused to answer their question, for to do so would have created an endless argument. Jesus had already revealed his identity to them through his speeches, his miracles, and the Father’s testimony about him. But the Pharisees were unable to understand because they were deaf to his word (8:43).

8:26 Jesus could have said more to them in way of judgment, but he would speak only what his Father commanded. The Pharisees claimed they wanted him to explain his identity, but Jesus knew they were simply heaping judgment on themselves. Instead of continuing an argument with these religious leaders who had already made up their minds not to believe, Jesus would say nothing more to condemn them. Rather, he would speak only what he heard from the one who sent him—and he would speak, not just to the Jews, but to the world. And whatever he says is the Father’s word; thus it is true, reliable, and valid (see also 8:16).

8:27 The Pharisees still didn’t understand that he was talking to them about his Father. They mentally blocked out the possibility that Jesus had come from God the Father and was still accompanied by God the Father, even though Jesus mentioned this twice. Jesus was not alone; the Father who had sent him had come with him (see 8:16, 29). Jesus had not come on his own, and he did not do anything of his own initiative (see 8:28, 42). He lived to please his Father.

8:28-30 The Jews in Jesus’ day understood the expression lifted up to signify crucifixion. That the religious leaders would realize who Jesus was does not mean that they would believe in him. Rather, it means that Jesus’ claims would be proven through the Crucifixion and Resurrection. “I am he” refers immediately to the title “Son of Man.” Jesus was pushing his hearers to recognize his full identity. Jesus was not on his own mission to gain glory for himself; he had come to fulfill the Father's will by dying on the cross. Jesus' death on the cross exhibited his absolute submission to the Father's will. He summed it up thus: "I always do those things that are pleasing to him."

The passage concludes with a crack in the wall of resistance to Jesus. Many who heard, believed. Even among those most unyielding to Jesus were some who surrendered to his character and words. Groups may be labeled as being solidly against Christ, but God specializes in plucking out believers from the most unexpected sources.

JESUS SPEAKS ABOUT GOD'S TRUE CHILDREN / 8:31-47 / 128

Next Jesus singled out the group of people who recently had believed in him. They formed part of the scattered response from among the crowd listening to Jesus in 8:30. Difficulties with this passage arise from the fact that John called them believers in verses 30 and 31, but they proved to be faithless. Their belief in Jesus turned out to be merely superficial. Jesus tested their commitment with his first instructions; their response demonstrates their unwillingness to actually follow the one in whom they had recently declared their faith.

8:31-32 To those who believed in him, Jesus said, "You are truly my disciples if you keep obeying my teachings." As the following verses demonstrate, some of these new believers did not remain his followers for long. But Jesus urged those who really wanted to remain his disciples to hold to, or continue in, his teachings. John's report of the failure of one group of followers is a strong lesson. We need to count the cost of following Jesus (see Luke 14:25-35). A true and obedient disciple will know the truth by knowing the one who is the truth, Jesus himself (1:17; 14:6). This knowledge frees people from their bondage to sin (see 8:34). When Jesus spoke of "knowing the truth," he was speaking of knowing God's revelation to people. This revelation is embodied in Jesus himself, the Word; therefore, to know the truth is to know Jesus. The truth is not political freedom or intellectual knowledge. Knowing the truth means accepting it, obeying it, and regarding it above all earthly opinion. Doing so offers true spiritual freedom from sin and death. Believers become truly free because they are free to do God's will, and thus fulfill God's ultimate purpose in their lives. As believers, we have the Holy Spirit living within us and guiding us on our journey through life.

8:33 The Jews thought that Jesus' words about their needing freedom devalued their ancestry and unique position with God, so they gave Jesus a little history lesson: "We have never been slaves to anyone on earth." Yet the crowd's denial of the obvious seems apparent even to us. The Jewish ancestors of these people had been enslaved by the Egyptians, the Assyrians, and the Babylonians. And they were ruled by the Romans at the moment Jesus spoke. Though not actually in slavery, they were under foreign domination, and were looking for the Messiah to free them from Roman rule. But they insisted that as Abraham's descendants they were free people who did not need to be "set free." They also claimed that Abraham's righteousness guaranteed their righteousness. Their spiritual superiority made them blind to their real slavery to sin. Jesus bluntly challenged their claims.

8:34-38 Not only was the crowd wrong about their national history, they were also wrong about the meaning of Jesus' earlier statement. Jesus spoke of a different liberation—that of the soul set free from sin. He pointed out that they did indeed need to be set free, because, "Everyone who sins is a slave of sin." Jesus went on to explain the difference between a slave and a son. A slave has no permanent standing in the master's household because he or she can be sold to a different master (in the Roman Empire slaves had no legal status). But a son always has a place in the family. The Jews had a false sense of security because they claimed to be descendants of Abraham—and thus thought this guaranteed them a permanent place in God's family and household (heaven). But Jesus explained that they, along with all people, were slaves to sin. As such, they had no permanent standing in the Father's house. The Son of God alone has the power and authority to free people from their bondage to sin. Jesus can free people from the slavery that keeps them from becoming the people God created them to be. Jesus is the source of truth, the perfect standard of what is right. Jesus does not give people freedom to do what they want, but freedom to follow God.

The Jews were Abraham's descendants only in the physical sense, not spiritually or morally, because they were trying to kill Jesus. In doing so, these leaders revealed that they were not Abraham's spiritual children. If they had been, they would have recognized their Messiah. Instead, they were following the advice of their father, namely the devil (8:44). Jesus made a distinction between hereditary children and true children. The religious leaders were hereditary children of Abraham (founder of the Jewish nation) and therefore claimed to be children of God. But their actions showed them to be true children of Satan, for they lived under Satan's guidance.

8:39 The Jews said that their father was Abraham, but Jesus said that if they really were children of Abraham, they would follow his good example. Sons copy their fathers, but the Jewish leaders did not behave like the one whom they claimed as their father. Jesus specifically pointed to their sin of wanting to kill him because this proved that they were not Abraham's true children. Abraham believed in and obeyed God (see Genesis 12:1-4; 15:6; 22:1-14) and welcomed God's messengers (Genesis 18:1-8).

8:40-41 They could not claim to have Abraham as their father when they were seeking to kill the one who brought them truth from God, for “Abraham wouldn't do a thing like that.” Instead, they were obeying their real father. Jesus was speaking of Satan as being their father, but they did not understand this. Instead, they said, “We were not born out of wedlock.” Some commentators have said that this retort was a slur on Jesus' own birth, but they would not have known about his unusual origins. They all assumed Jesus was Joseph's son. Rather, they could have been claiming to be unlike the Samaritans, who were not purebred Jews or claiming to be devout monotheists untainted by spiritual fornication with other gods. Since their appeal to Abrahamic privilege was either deflected or challenged by Jesus (see explanation of translation above), they appealed to their position with God: “Our true Father is God himself.” Their retort shows that they took offense at being told that their ancestry did not automatically place them in a privileged moral standing before God. But they did not truly know the one God they claimed as their Father because they did not recognize his Son who had come to give them the truth and to set them free from sin.

8:42 Jesus forcefully challenged the leaders' claim that they were God's children. “If God were your Father, you would love me.” If those people truly loved God as their Father, then they would recognize and love the Son. And he repeated for them his origin and mission: “I have come to you from God. I am not here on my own, but he sent me.” Jesus came as the one sent by the Father to bring God's word to his people.

8:43 Jesus knew that they could not understand because they were unable to do so. They had already made up their minds about him, and thus could not hear and accept what Jesus had to say. Understanding was not the problem; being willing to hear and accept it as the truth was their barrier.

8:44 Jesus told these self-righteous people, “You are the children of your father the Devil, and you love to do the evil things he does.” A person's actions reveal what is in his or her heart (see 1 John 3:8). The Devil was a murderer from the beginning and has always hated the truth. In short, the Devil is the father of lies. The intent to murder comes from the Devil. The Devil was the instigator of Jesus' murder (6:70-71; 13:27) and the perpetrator of the lies that the Jews believed about Jesus. The attitudes and actions of the Jewish leaders clearly identified them as followers of the Devil, though they may not have been conscious of this. But their hatred of truth, their lies, and their murderous intentions indicate how much control the Devil had over them. They were Satan's tools in carrying out his plans; they spoke the very same language of lies. Satan still uses people to obstruct God's work (Genesis 4:8; Romans 5:12; 1 John 3:12).

8:45-46 In contrast to the Devil, who habitually lies, Jesus speaks only the truth—and for that reason was not believed. In the end, Jesus was rejected not only because the Jews judged him to be a Sabbath breaker and blasphemer (5:18), but also because his words to them were very harsh and exposing. In light of his character and words, they could not stand to see and hear the truth about themselves.

If there was a chink in Jesus' armor, his next question would have been their golden opportunity to destroy him. Jesus left himself completely open for a direct attack, “Which of you can truthfully accuse me of sin?” Of course, no one could. People who hated him and wanted him dead scrutinized his behavior but could find nothing wrong. And they were grasping at straws trying to make him anything but what he claimed to be. Jesus proved he was God in the flesh by his sinless life. He was speaking the truth, but they refused to believe.

8:47 Although some in his audience had heard and become believers (8:30), most remained deaf because their hearts were hardened (see 12:39-40). They refused to listen to (or obey) the words of God because they were not God's children.

JESUS STATES HE IS ETERNAL / 8:48-59 / 129

At this point, the dialogue between Jesus and his Jewish audience took a decidedly angry turn. Since they had no answer for his clear diagnosis of their spiritual sickness, Jesus' audience reacted with a verbal attack against him. Up until this point, Jesus' opponents reserved one final accusation against him: blasphemy. But as Jesus responded to their angry tirade he finally led them to realize the full extent of his claims. He used the “I am” phrase in 8:58 to state his unequivocal claim to divinity. He left no more room for debate. The crowd took up the stones to carry out judgment for blasphemy, but Jesus removed himself from that place. He would choose the time and place for final confrontation.

8:48-50 This is the only instance in the Gospels where Jesus is charged with being a Samaritan. These expressions were filled with great anger. The Samaritans were considered beneath the Jews because of their intermarriage with heathens and their religious impurity. The Jews leveled this charge at Jesus because he, a fellow Jew, had accused them of not being true descendants of Abraham (see 8:37-44). Elsewhere in John, Jesus was accused of being possessed by a demon (see 7:20; 8:52; 10:20).

Jesus did not respond to the charge of being “a Samaritan devil”; he did refute the charge of being demon-possessed. Jesus told the leaders that they were dishonoring him by such a charge because Jesus always sought to honor and glorify his Father. Jesus was not seeking any glory for himself. The Father would seek glory for his Son and judge those who dishonor him.

8:51 Obeying Jesus’ teaching includes relying on the character, ability, strength, and truth of what he promised. When Jesus said that those who obeyed would never die, he was talking about spiritual death, not physical death. Even physical death, however, will eventually be overcome. Those who follow Christ will be raised to live eternally with him.

8:52-53 For Jesus to claim that he could prevent death was for him a claim to be greater than the prophets—indeed, it meant he was claiming to be divine. These Jews were convinced that only a madman (someone who was possessed by a demon) would make such a claim.

8:54-55 Again, Jesus deferred the matter of his divine identity to his relationship with his Father. He could never make the kind of claims he made apart from his union with the Father. If he had come of his own accord, his glory would be worthless. But the Father had sent him, and the Father would glorify him—even if the Jews didn’t. The crux of the matter was that the Jews did not know the Father from whom Jesus came, even though they claimed to know him. The one who really knew the Father and kept his word knew that these Jews were lying.

8:56 Jesus referred to Abraham as their ancestor, but he meant it only in the physical sense. Abraham, by some revelation not directly recorded in Genesis, looked forward to the Messiah’s coming (Hebrews 11:8-13). Several possibilities have been proposed: (1) According to rabbinic tradition, Abraham was given foresight about the future of his descendants. Jesus, perhaps knowing this tradition, pinpointed the one event that would have made Abraham rejoice—the day when the Messiah, his descendant, would come to deliver the world; (2) Genesis 17:7 mentions God’s establishment of an everlasting covenant with Abraham’s offspring, which some take to be a messianic promise; (3) Genesis 22:8 records Abraham’s prophetic words that “God will provide a lamb,” which received their complete fulfillment in Jesus. Of the three interpretations, the first makes the most sense because the text speaks of “my coming”—that is, the time of Christ’s presence on earth.

8:57 Jesus had not claimed to be a contemporary with Abraham or that he had seen Abraham; instead, he said that Abraham had foreseen Jesus’ coming. The comment about Jesus being not yet fifty years old is a roundabout way of saying that he was not yet an old man.

8:58-59 Jesus astounded them with his answer: “The truth is, I existed before Abraham was even born!” Abraham, as with all human beings, had come into existence at one point in time. But Jesus never had a beginning—he was eternal and therefore God. He was undeniably proclaiming his divinity. No other religious figure in all of history has made such claims. Either Jesus was God or he was a madman. His claim to deity demands a response. It cannot be ignored.

This was too much for the Jews; these words so incensed them that they picked up stones to kill him for blasphemy in accordance with the law (Leviticus 24:16). The leaders well understood what Jesus was claiming; and because they didn’t believe him, they charged him with blasphemy. In reality, they were really the blasphemers, cursing and attacking the God whom they claimed to serve!

But Jesus hid himself or “was hidden” (perhaps meaning he was hidden by God). John doesn’t say it, but by now we know it—Jesus escaped their attempted stoning because his “time had not yet come.”

JESUS HEALS THE MAN WHO WAS BORN BLIND / 9:1-12 / 148

All of Jesus' miracles also pointed to who he was. John follows Jesus' discourse about being "the light of the world" (8:12; 9:5) with the account of Jesus restoring sight to a man born blind. This story illustrates the spiritual truth of Christ being the Light of the World. As the blind beggar comes to "see" that Jesus is the Messiah, so Jesus offers us spiritual sight to enable us to see him as our Savior and Lord. We too are born spiritually blind and need the gift of sight that only the Light of the World can provide. The Light of the World becomes our light when we put our faith in Jesus Christ.

9:1-3 In ancient cultures, blind people had no choice but to be beggars. This man probably was very poor and was begging along the roadside, thus Jesus saw him as he passed by. The disciples believed, based at least partly on Old Testament texts like Exodus 34:7, that a disability such as blindness was a punishment for sin. Many people around the world believe that suffering results from sin. People tend to believe that displeasing God leads to punishment; therefore, they assume that whenever a person seems to be undergoing punishment, there is reason to suspect wrongdoing. This assumption, for example, drove Job's friends to treat him with heavy-handed judgment.

But if suffering always indicates sin, what do we say about babies born with deformities or handicaps? This man was born blind, so they asked, "Was it a result of his own sins or those of his parents?" The disciples were thinking about what caused the blindness. Jesus shifted their attention away from the cause to the purpose. Jesus demonstrated the power of God by healing the man. Instead of worrying about the cause of our problems, we should instead find out how God could use our problem to demonstrate his power. Jesus explained that the man's blindness had nothing to do with his sin or his parents' sin. God allowed nature to run its course so that the victim would ultimately bring glory to God through the reception of both physical and spiritual sight (see 9:30-38).

9:4-5 Jesus was speaking of himself and his disciples as coworkers. He wanted them to learn from him because they would continue his work as his sent ones (see 20:21). Jesus included the disciples in this work (although they actually did nothing for this blind man) because they would be the ones doing the work of God on earth after his resurrection and ascension. What a privilege to be called Christ's coworkers (see 1 Corinthians 3:9; 2 Corinthians 5:21; 6:1).

While Christ was in the world, light was in the world. However, there was little time left before the night would fall and all work would come to an end. The night would come, that is, Jesus would soon die, and would no longer be in the world in physical form. The coming of the night speaks of the shortness of time Jesus had left to fulfill his purpose on earth. But while he was still in the world, Jesus would be the light of the world. The healing of the blind man affirmed Jesus' identity as the Messiah, for the Old Testament predicted that the Messiah would come to heal the blind (Isaiah 29:18; 35:5; 42:7).

9:6-7 This is not typical of the way Jesus performed miracles, according to John. But Mark records two incidents of miraculous healing where Jesus used his saliva—to cure a deaf and dumb man and to heal a blind man (Mark 7:33; 8:23). John's account, however, provides the only record of Jesus spitting on the ground and forming mud from it.

From antiquity, spit or saliva was thought to have medicinal power. But the Jews were suspicious of anyone who used saliva in healing because it was associated with magical arts. It is worth noting, however, that the role of Jesus' saliva in the healing was primarily in making the mud. As has been pointed out before (see section on 2:6-8), Jesus did not use random objects without a specific purpose.

First, Jesus used the mud to help develop the man's faith (he had to do as Jesus said, which was to go and wash in a certain pool). Second, Jesus kneaded the mud with his hands in order to put it on the man's eyes. This constituted "work" on a Sabbath day and would upset the Pharisees. Jesus had much to teach them about God and his Sabbath.

Siloam is a Greek translation of the Hebrew name, Shiloah, meaning "sent." The pool of Siloam had been built by King Hezekiah. His workers had built an underground tunnel from the Spring of Gihon in the Kidron Valley outside of Jerusalem. This tunnel channeled the water into the pool of Siloam inside the city walls. Located in the southeast corner of the city, the tunnel and pool were originally built to help Jerusalem's inhabitants survive in times of siege. The man went and washed, and came back seeing! He did as he was told, and his faith healed him.

9:8-12 These verses record the various reactions of the blind man's neighbors to his healing. Some thought he looked like the one who used to sit and beg. Others positively identified him as the same man. Still others objected that this only looked like that blind man. In response, the healed man insisted, "I am the same man." Finally realizing that the person who once was blind had received his sight, they asked, “Who healed you?” The formerly blind man testified to the healing power of Jesus by recounting the story of how he had been healed.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS QUESTION THE BLIND MAN / 9:13-34 / 149

Because the people discovered both a miracle and a mystery surrounding the healing of the blind man, they took him to what they considered the most dependable place for exploring such matters. The Pharisees quickly concluded that whatever else the healer might be, he certainly wasn't from God, for otherwise he would not work on the Sabbath. In their quest for “truth,” these Pharisees tried a number of explanations to invalidate the miracle: (1) perhaps the blind man had not been blind from birth or had not been totally blind; (2) perhaps God did this miracle directly (but they would recognize no human agent). When the formerly blind man pointed out the obvious answers that they had been so studiously avoiding, they responded by viciously berating him and expelling him from their presence. The astonishing fact of the man's newly given vision eluded this group as if they were blind. Later Jesus pointed this out as their problem, over their strenuous objections.

9:13-15 Why did the people bring him to the Pharisees? The possible answer: Jesus had healed the man on a Sabbath. The people had realized that Jesus had performed another miracle on the Sabbath and that the Pharisees would want to know about this event. This miracle was news because it was very unusual (9:32). Healing, along with many other actions defined as work, was strictly controlled on the Sabbath. Healing was only to occur in cases of life and death, for which the blind man did not qualify because he had been living with his blindness since birth.

The Pharisees wanted to know how this man had received his sight, and the man explained it in the simplest of terms. Because the man was still blind during the interview with Jesus, he really didn't know who Jesus was. He could only exclaim that he could see.

9:16-17 Jesus' actions of kneading the mud, anointing the man's eyes, and healing the man (whose life was not in danger) were all considered work and therefore were forbidden. Jesus may have purposely made the mud in order to emphasize his teaching about the Sabbath—that it is right to care for others' needs even if it involves working on a day of rest. But because Jesus broke their petty rules, they immediately decided he was not from God.

But some other Pharisees questioned this condemnation: “How could an ordinary sinner do such miraculous signs?” There is no indication that these men were inclined to believe in Jesus; more likely, they were protecting themselves from the charge of obvious bias. Thus, there was a deep division among them. While the Pharisees conducted investigations and debated about Jesus, people were being healed and lives were being changed. The Pharisees' skepticism was not based on insufficient evidence, but on jealousy of Jesus' popularity and his influence on the people.

The staunchest Pharisees attacked the healed man with a renewed attempt to break down his testimony. But this newly sighted beggar responded with even more praise for his healer than he had offered previously—he called Jesus a prophet.

9:18-21 The Jewish leaders wouldn't believe that the man had been blind, so they called in the man's parents in the hope that they would refute their own son's testimony. Failure to reach quick agreement on the case meant they needed to review the "facts." They asked the parents if this man was really their son, and if he was really born blind. The Pharisees were exasperated: "How can he see?" they asked, although we may wonder what they expected the parents to answer.

They knew their son, and they knew his previous condition, but how he could see they didn't know. They responded, "Ask him." The parents did not deny their son's story, but neither did they support his claim.

9:22-23 The reason for the parents' fear was that to say Jesus was the Messiah would cause them to be expelled from the synagogue. Jewish regulations stipulated two kinds of excommunication: one that would last for thirty days until the offender could be reconciled, and one that was a permanent "ban" accompanied by a curse. Because the synagogue controlled every aspect of life (civic, recreational, legal, and religious), an individual cut off from the synagogue would suffer severe isolation.

But why would such a harsh punishment be given people who followed this Jesus, whom the Pharisees had proclaimed as a fake Messiah? The Pharisees were facing a politically dangerous situation. If the crowds were to take Jesus by force and make him king, Rome would respond quickly and forcefully to suppress such a revolt. Roman intervention would cause incredible troubles for the Jews. So the religious leaders decided on the harsh punishment of being put out of the synagogue for anyone who dared believe in Jesus.

9:24-25 Not content with their cross-examination of the healed man, the Pharisees called him in a second time with a command, "Give glory to God by telling the truth." The Pharisees tried to make the man confess his wrong in proclaiming Jesus as a prophet and to make him agree with them that Jesus was a sinner.

But the healed man would not give in; he would not say whether or not Jesus was a sinner. What he would say was what he had experienced: “I know this: I was blind, and now I can see.”

9:26-27 The Pharisees relentlessly asked who did the healing and how it happened. Perhaps they hoped the man would contradict his earlier story so they could accuse him. The religious leaders were making such extensive inquiry about Jesus’ identity that it would appear they wanted to follow him—when actually they had no intention of becoming his disciples.

The religious leaders were unable to throttle the healed beggar’s willingness to testify for Jesus. In fact, the more the Pharisees questioned this man who had received his sight, the stronger and clearer he became about Jesus. At first, the man recognized his healer as “the man they call Jesus” (9:11); then he knew Jesus was “a prophet” (9:17); then he saw Jesus as one who was “from God” and had performed a miracle never done before (9:32-33). Finally, when confronted by Jesus, he believed that Jesus is the “Son of Man” (the Messiah), worthy of worship (9:35-38).

9:28-29 While the Pharisees questioned and cursed the man, they persistently defended their adherence to Moses (they were confident that God had spoken to Moses). But Jesus had already told them that if they really knew Moses and understood his writings, they would know the Messiah, for Moses wrote of him (5:45-47). But as for Jesus, they said they didn’t know anything about him. It is ironic that the Pharisees claimed not to know where Jesus was from, for that was one item they believed would be true about the Messiah: “No one will know where he comes from” (7:27). They refused to accept Jesus’ words or believe that the signs he did validated his claims. They chose to reject him.

9:30-31 This reasoning (and probably their insults too) astonished the healed man, so he tried to explain to them that the act of giving him sight proved that Jesus was a man whom God listened to: “God doesn’t listen to sinners, but he is ready to hear those who worship him and do his will.” There are many Scriptures that support this man’s statement (see, for example, Job 27:8-9; 35:12-13; Proverbs 15:29; Isaiah 1:15). As a boy, this healed man certainly had been taught the Scriptures, and he pointed out this fact to these supposedly “learned” Pharisees. God does not listen to the requests of sinners, only to the requests of those devoted to him.

9:32-34 Jesus had done the unprecedented, but not the unpredicted. In their fury, the Pharisees were blind to the Old Testament descriptions that specifically speak of the Messiah as being able to open the eyes of someone born blind (see Isaiah 29:18; 35:5; 42:7). Indeed, many thought the healing of the blind would be the messianic miracle par excellence because there was never any record of such a healing in the Old Testament. Obviously, Jesus had healed him, so Jesus must be from God.

The healed man's condemnation of the Pharisees' irrational rejection of Jesus proved too much for them to take, so they threw him out of the synagogue.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT SPIRITUAL BLINDNESS / 9:35-41 / 150

Unless we have suffered rejection for our faith, we may not be able to identify with the state of this blind man whom Jesus healed. In a single day he went from being a disabled outcast to a celebrity who had miraculously received his sight, then to being a witness in court where he was treated like a criminal, and finally to being outcast again (literally) for simply telling the truth as he clearly saw it. At this point, Jesus intervened again. The man's understanding of the one who had healed him had already expanded considerably. Here was his chance to really see Jesus.

9:35-38 Since Son of Man is a title of the Christ, Jesus was asking the man if he believed him to be the Messiah. Perhaps the man instantly recognized Jesus by his voice. He expressed immediate desire to believe, which here means not intellectual recognition, but wholehearted trust.

When the man asked who the Son of Man was, Jesus responded, "You have seen him." The man could physically see Jesus with his healed eyes, and he could spiritually see because he understood that Jesus was the Messiah. The man acted on his newfound belief—he worshiped. He may have just been excommunicated from the synagogue, but he had found true worship. His personal belief is the culmination of the narrative. His belief sharply contrasts with the blindness of the religious leaders (9:40-41).

9:39-41 Do Jesus' words here contradict his statement in 3:17: "God did not send his Son into the world to condemn it." Jesus did not execute judgment during his years on earth, although he would do that in the future. However, his words here reveal that, as the light of the World, he sees and reveals people's innermost thoughts and deepest motives. In so doing, he "judges" or separates those who claim to have great spiritual knowledge when in fact they are blind, from those who humbly seek to follow God and who thus find the Savior.

Christ spoke these words to the healed man in the presence of the Pharisees who were standing there. The blind are those who realize their need for the Savior and humbly come to him for salvation. They will receive sight. But those who think they see are the self-righteous who think they have all the answers and have no need of the Savior. They are blind because they have rejected the “light of the world” (8:12).

The Pharisees quickly understood that Jesus had directed this statement toward them, but they were not fully sure of the meaning of his words. They assumed that with their learning, reputation, and high standing, they certainly would not be counted among the “blind.”

Jesus expanded his statement with the rather cryptic condemnation: “If you were blind, you wouldn’t be guilty, but you remain guilty because you claim you can see.” In contrast to the man who had received his sight, the Pharisees had sight but no light. They were spiritually blind, though they claimed to see. Those who admitted blindness could receive the light and see, but those who thought they saw would remain in their darkness. And their guilt remained, whether they felt guilty or not.

JESUS IS THE GOOD SHEPHERD / 10:1-21 / 151

This chapter begins with an extended figure of speech or illustration (10:6), similar to a parable, about shepherds and sheep. John provides two aspects of the illustration: the “gate” (10:1-3) and the “shepherd” (10:3-5), each with its own interpretations—the “gate” is interpreted in 10:7-10, and the “shepherd” in 10:11-18.

The entire passage calls to mind the imagery of Ezekiel 34, where the prophet castigated the false shepherds (Israel’s evil leaders) and predicted that the true Shepherd (the Messiah) would come and provide God’s people (the sheep) with genuine care and leadership. In comparison to the Pharisees, who were bad leaders of God’s people, Jesus was the true Shepherd of all God’s people. The healed man who believed in Jesus (in the previous chapter) represented all believers who would come out of Judaism to follow Jesus, as sheep follow their shepherd.

10:1-2 At night, the shepherd often would gather the sheep into a fold to protect them from thieves, bad weather, or wild animals. A sheepfold could be a cave, shed, or open area surrounded by walls made of stones or branches, eight to ten feet high. Sometimes the top of the wall was lined with thorns to further discourage predators and thieves. The fold’s single entrance made it easier for a shepherd to guard his flock. Often several shepherds used a single fold and took turns guarding the entrance. In towns where many people each owned a few sheep, the combined herd was watched over by a shepherd. Mingling the animals was no problem since each flock responded readily to its own shepherd’s voice.

The gate is the main entrance. Jesus explained that anyone who tried to get in any other way besides going through the gate would be a thief—that person would be up to no good. Most likely this “gate” represents the position of Messiah because Jesus went on to say, “A shepherd enters through the gate.” Only the shepherd has the right to enter the sheepfold and call his own sheep out to follow him.

Jesus rebuked those who would claim to lead God’s people without regarding the Messiah (who is in their midst, but unrecognized by them). Such leaders have false ambitions, selfish desires, and evil intentions.

10:3-5 When the shepherd arrived, he would call his own sheep by name.

Because sheep recognize the voice of their shepherd, they come and follow him out to pasture.

The “sheepfold” of Judaism held some of God’s people who had awaited the coming of their Shepherd-Messiah (see Isaiah 40:1-11). When the Shepherd came, believing Jews recognized his voice and followed him. It is said that shepherds in the East could name each sheep and that each sheep would respond to the shepherd calling its name. True believers, as sheep belonging to the true Shepherd, would never follow a stranger pretending to be their shepherd (5:43).

10:6-7 This illustration was meant to communicate spiritual truths, but many didn’t understand. So Jesus explained the symbolic meaning of “the gate” (10:7-10) before identifying the “shepherd” (10:11-18). The shepherd has called together his flock and taken them to the pasture. Near the pasture is another enclosed place for the sheep. Here the shepherd sits in the doorway, acting as the “gate.” The sheep can go out to the pasture or stay inside the walls of the enclosure. To go out or in is to pass by the shepherd’s watchful eye.

Having realized they had not grasped what he is teaching them, Jesus said to his listeners, “I am the gate for the sheep.” As the gate, Jesus is the only way to salvation and eternal life (10:9; 14:6), and his sheep are under his watchful care.

10:8-9 The reference to all others who came before was not directed at Old Testament saints and prophets, but at those who had come on the scene pretending to be the Christ (see 5:43), or who had led the people away from God. By immediate context, we see that Jesus was also referring to those evil Jewish religious leaders who cared nothing about the spiritual welfare of the people, but only about their petty rules and their reputation (see Matthew 23:13; 24:5). Their treatment of Jesus had made it clear that they were far more committed to their system than to God’s word. They had invented their own gateway and had appointed themselves gatekeepers. Jesus reminded them that any other supposed “gate” to salvation is false.

Though false teachers, leaders, and messiahs do have their followings, the true sheep of God do not listen to any of them because none of them possess the authentic voice of the Shepherd. Because Jesus was the genuine Messiah, the sheep could enter through him to be saved, pointing to spiritual salvation and spiritual security. The sheep find green pastures not as a result of their diligent searching, but through the gracious provision of the Shepherd.

10:10 The thief (like false messiahs) has evil intentions. Jesus pictured a heartless individual who began by taking all he could and then killing what he couldn't have. Anything else he destroyed. God's people, Israel, had suffered through more than their share of evil leaders, false prophets, and false messiahs (see, for example, Jeremiah 10:21-22; 12:10; Zechariah 11:4-17). By contrast, Jesus gives life in all its fullness to his sheep. This speaks of the gift of divine, eternal life, a life which becomes the possession of every believer for now and for eternity. Jesus would provide his sheep with this eternal life, and it would cost him his own life.

10:11 Jesus is the devoted and dedicated Shepherd—the good shepherd. As described in the verses that follow, there are four characteristics that set this Good Shepherd apart from the false or evil shepherds:

1. He approaches directly—he enters at the gate.
2. He has God's authority—the gatekeeper allows him to enter.
3. He meets real needs—the sheep recognize his voice and follow him.
4. He has sacrificial love—he is willing to lay down his life for the sheep.

By repeating it four times, Jesus pointed out that the most important trait of the good shepherd is that he lays down his life for the sheep (10:11; see also 15, 17, 18). According to the imagery in this chapter, a shepherd's life could at times be dangerous. Wild animals were common in the countryside of Judea. A good shepherd may indeed risk his life to save his sheep.

10:12-13 The hired hand does not have a particular parallel, but is in the story as a contrast with the good shepherd. Because he is doing the job only to be paid, he does not have an investment in the sheep. When the wolf attacks, he's not about to risk his life—he runs away! Very likely, "the wolf" refers to false prophets or others who take advantage of God's people, the sheep (see Acts 20:29).

What a difference between the good shepherd and the thief and the hired hand! The thief steals, kills, and destroys; the hired hand does the job only for money, but readily flees when danger comes. The good shepherd is committed to the sheep. Jesus is not merely doing a job; he is committed to loving us and even laying down his life for us.

10:14-15 Just as the shepherd calls his sheep and they follow only him, so Jesus knows his people. And his followers, in return, know him to be their Messiah, and they love and trust him. Such knowing and trusting between Jesus and his followers is compared to the relationship between Jesus and the Father: "just as my Father knows me and I know the Father.” And Jesus repeated his point—that he is the Good Shepherd and that he will lay down his life for the sheep.

10:16 Jesus had already spoken of leading out his sheep from the fold of Judaism. All of his disciples came out of this fold, as did all those Jews who came to believe in him as their Messiah. Jesus knew, however, that he had other sheep that were not from Judaism. These are Gentile believers. Jesus came to save Gentiles as well as Jews. This is an insight into his worldwide mission—to die for sinful people all over the world. The Good Shepherd came to gather together God’s people into one flock (Ezekiel 34:11-14, 23). The new Gentile believers and the Jewish believers who left Judaism would form one flock that would be altogether outside of Judaism. The flock would have one shepherd. Furthermore, Jesus’ words here foreshadow those he uttered in his prayer for the oneness of all those who would believe in him through the disciples’ message (17:20ff.)

10:17-18 The Father loved the Son for his willingness to die in order to secure the salvation of the believers. Jesus laid down his life of his own accord; and yet of his own accord he would also take up his life again in resurrection. When Jesus said, “I lay down my life voluntarily” and that he had “the power to take it again,” he was claiming authority to control his death and beyond. John’s original readers needed to remember that Jesus specifically foretold his death and resurrection. We need the same reminder. Jesus gave up his life; it was not taken from him. The Son’s authority to lay down his life and take it up again did not originate with himself; it came from the Father.

10:19-21 Some of the unbelieving Jews who heard Jesus pronounced a twofold judgment against him: “He has a demon, or he’s crazy.” Jesus had already been accused of being demon-possessed (7:20; 8:48), but this is the first and only time in John’s Gospel that Jesus is accused of being crazy. It was commonly believed that insanity went hand-in-hand with demon-possession.

Some other Jews in Jesus’ audience were impressed with both Jesus’ words and miraculous deeds. They had not yet forgotten the healing of the blind man (chapter 9). Thus, they disagreed with those who charged him with demon-possession.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS SURROUND JESUS AT THE TEMPLE / 10:22-42 / 152

As this section begins, there has been a temporary stalemate between Jesus and his opponents. They have become divided, so they are unable for a time to mount an effective attack against him. It must have been a period of intense frustration for the Jewish religious leaders. Finally, an opportunity for confrontation developed one day while Jesus was visiting the Temple.

10:22-23 A couple of months had passed since Jesus' last teaching to the people in 7:1–10:21. That teaching had occurred during the Festival of Shelters in September/October; the coming words occurred at the celebration of Hanukkah in December, in winter. This celebration was not one of the official festivals in the Old Testament. It was instituted by Judas Maccabeus in 165 B.C. to commemorate the cleansing of the Temple after Antiochus Epiphanes had defiled it by sacrificing a pig on the altar of burnt offering (see 1 Maccabees 4:36-59; 2 Maccabees 1:9; 10:1-8). This is also the present-day Feast of Lights called Hanukkah.

Jesus was in Jerusalem walking through Solomon's Colonnade, a roofed porch with tall stone columns located on the east side of the Temple. It was named for Solomon because it was believed to rest on portions of the original Temple built by Solomon. These were common places for teaching, so it would have been an appropriate place for Jesus to be walking and probably teaching as he walked.

10:24 Many people who ask for proof do so for wrong reasons. Jesus had never plainly told the Jews in Jerusalem that he was the Messiah because it connoted a military leader or political liberator for them. Therefore, Jesus wisely avoided using that term. Most of these questioners didn't want to follow Jesus in the way that he wanted to lead them. They hoped that Jesus would declare himself the Messiah, but only if he intended to get on with their political agenda and drive out the Romans. So they wanted to hear an open declaration from Jesus' lips: "If you are the Messiah, tell us plainly."

It is doubtful, however, that a plain declaration would have convinced them, for they had already made up their minds on the issue. Some of them hoped he would identify himself so they could accuse him of telling lies or catch him in the act of blasphemy (see 10:31, 33, 39).

10:25-26 Although Jesus had never told them "I am the Messiah," he had clearly indicated his unity with God the Father (5:17ff) and his heavenly origin (6:32ff). Besides, the proof was in what he was doing in the name of his Father. Jesus' miracles should have convinced them he was the Messiah (see Isaiah 35:3-6).

John refers to the illustration Jesus used months earlier regarding Jesus as the “good shepherd” (10:3-9, 16). Here, Jesus told the Jewish leaders surrounding him, “You don’t believe me because you are not part of my flock.” Only those who were given to Jesus by the Father (10:29) were his sheep.

10:27-29 Of those who do believe Jesus and do belong to his sheep, Jesus says, “My sheep recognize my voice; I know them, and they follow me. I give them eternal life, and they will never perish. No one will snatch them away from me.” In this grand statement, Jesus summarized the blessings of those who truly listen to and believe the gospel. The believer in Jesus knows him personally, has eternal life, will not perish, and is secure in his care. But many of those who heard had no intention of truly listening. It is also true that those refusing to listen to Jesus’ voice are not his sheep. We recognize Christ’s voice when he speaks to us through the Bible. Are we truly listening for it? They cannot be snatched away because the Father has given them to Jesus, and the Father is more powerful than anyone else. God’s power guards and preserves the flock for salvation.

10:30 There is no mistaking Jesus’ meaning: “The Father and I are one.” Jesus did not mean that he and the Father are the same person, because the word for “one” in Greek is neuter. The Father and the Son are two persons in the Trinity, but they are one in essence. Given this essential oneness, the Father and Son act as one—what the Father does, the Son does, and vice versa. This is one of the clearest affirmations of Jesus’ divinity in the whole Bible. Jesus is not merely a good teacher—he is God. His claim to be God was unmistakable. The religious leaders wanted to kill him because their laws said that anyone claiming to be God should die for blasphemy. Nothing could persuade them that Jesus’ claim was true.

10:31-33 For the third time (see 5:17-18; 8:58-59), these Jews wanted to kill this “blasphemer” (Leviticus 24:11-16). But Jesus withheld their violent act by asking them, “For which one of these good deeds are you killing me?” The Jews answered that they were not stoning him for any good work, but because he, a mere man, had made himself God. Though they didn’t believe him, they understood that he was claiming equality with God.

10:34-36 The term “law” is often used in the New Testament to encompass the entire Old Testament. By saying “your own law,” Jesus was claiming common ground with his accusers, for they all agreed that the Scriptures cannot be altered. Jesus used Psalm 82:6, where the Israelite judges are called gods (see also Exodus 4:16; 7:1) to counter the Jews' charge of blasphemy. In Psalm 82, the supreme God is said to rise in judgment against those whom he calls "gods," because they had failed to be just to the helpless and oppressed. These "gods" were those who were the official representatives and commissioned agents of God; they were the judges executing judgment for God. If they were called "gods," how was it blasphemous when the Holy One who was sent into the world by the Father calls himself the Son of God. This is especially important when, in fact, he was the one the Father sanctified and sent into the world.

10:37-39 This statement underscores Jesus' claim to oneness with the Father: "The Father is in me, and I am in the Father" (see 14:10-11; 17:21). Jesus told them to not believe unless he was doing the Father's work. But if they saw him doing his work, then they should believe in what he was doing, even if they didn't believe his words. Jesus' explanations did not change the Jews' minds; they had been intent on stoning him for blasphemy (10:31). But when they attempted to arrest him, he got away. Once again Jesus demonstrated that his fate would not be determined by the will of crowds or human priorities. Even when "his time" would come, God would still be ultimately in control. John's readers, who may have faced persecution, would have been encouraged by this report. And we need the same encouragement to know that God cares for us.

10:40-42 Jesus went to the east side of the Jordan (see 1:28). It was his final preaching mission out in the countryside and the final opportunity for many people to respond. Jesus did not return to Jerusalem again until the day he made his Triumphal Entry.

The ministry of John the Baptist had left a permanent impression on those who had heard him speak of the coming Messiah. What they heard here and saw in Jesus confirmed in their minds the genuineness of his forerunner's proclamations. As a result of hearing John's prophetic ministry and then seeing the Messiah himself, many believed in him.

LAZARUS BECOMES ILL AND DIES / 11:1-16 / 165

The Gospels tell us that Jesus raised others from the dead, including Jairus's daughter (Matthew 9:18-26; Mark 5:41-42; Luke 8:40-56) and a widow's son (Luke 7:11-17). These people represent a cross section of ages and social backgrounds to whom Jesus gave back human life. All of them, including Lazarus, were raised but eventually died again. Lazarus's story stands out because John used it as a sign of Jesus' ultimate life-giving power and a picture of his own coming resurrection. And, as with all the miracles recorded in this gospel, it glorifies God. From John's perspective, this miracle was the turning point; it caused the Jewish leaders to take decisive action against Jesus.

11:1-3 Though John only introduces us to the family of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus at the end of Jesus' ministry, Jesus and the disciples often visited their home. Jesus enjoyed their close friendship and hospitality on his visits to Jerusalem, for Bethany was a village just outside of the city. At this time, Jesus was on the other side of the Jordan River, also in a town called Bethany. The events described in Luke 13:22–17:10 occurred between chapters 10 and 11 of John.

John identified Mary with an event described in the next chapter (12:1-7) because Mary's display of love for Christ was well known to the first-century Christians (Matthew 26:6-13; Mark 14:3-9). Lazarus was sick, so the sisters contacted Jesus, their friend who had healed so many.

11:4 When Jesus heard of Lazarus's sickness, he said it will not end in death. He knew Lazarus would die, but the end of the story would not be death. His disciples understood him to mean that the illness was not serious. Again, we see the parallel between Jesus' response here and in 9:3. In the former passage, Jesus spoke of the man's blindness as an opportunity for God's works to be seen. Lazarus's death was an opportunity for the Son of God to receive glory. God strategically placed some miracles in human history to demonstrate his wise providence and his sovereignty.

11:5-7 This statement of Jesus' love for the family explains that it was not lack of love that kept Jesus from going to them. Humanly speaking, Jesus would have wanted to go to them immediately. But he was constrained by the Father's timing. When God's time came, Jesus headed back into Judea to be with his dear friends in their sorrow. God's timing is always perfect, whether in guiding his Son through his ministry on earth, or in guiding us today and answering our prayers.

11:8-10 The disciples couldn't understand why Jesus would want to go into Judea, when the Jewish leaders there just recently had been seeking to kill him (see 10:31ff.). Why leave a place where people believe in you and welcome you (10:42) to go back to certain death? But Jesus was not afraid, for he knew that he had to die and that his death would only occur in the Father's timing.

The disciples worried about what the Jewish leaders might do. Jesus pointed to an unlimited sphere—the sovereignty of God, who transcends the limits of time and over whom people have no control. As Jesus obeyed his Father, he was as confident about the victorious outcome as he was that every day contained twelve hours of daylight. We should remember that God's sovereignty extends to each moment of our life; otherwise, our trust in him will be limited to only those times when he meets our expectations. We will repeat the disciples' mistake—attempting to limit God to the sphere of human effort.

Jesus' answer mentioned an expected number of "hours" during which people can walk safely. It also clearly implied that time would run out. After twelve hours of daylight the night comes. Our Lord's "day" (his time on earth) was approaching its final hour. But Jesus still had tasks to accomplish, and he would not be sidetracked from his mission. The simple lesson of using daylight to walk safely illustrates our deeper need to trust in the "light" of Jesus' presence and God's guidance. Jesus had already used the phrase "the light of the world" to refer to his own presence among people. While he was among them, he was their light (see 1:4; 8:12; 9:5). As long as they did their work in the light of Christ's presence they would not stumble. Sadly, those who live in the dark, without the presence of Jesus' light in them, will stumble.

11:11-15 The disciples missed Jesus' meaning when he said, "Lazarus has fallen asleep." They assumed he was getting better. Jesus explained: "Lazarus is dead." Lazarus died so that Jesus could show his power over death to his disciples and others. He would go and wake him up, thus giving the disciples another opportunity to believe. The raising of Lazarus displayed Christ's power—the resurrection from the dead is a crucial belief of Christian faith. Jesus not only raised himself from the dead (10:18), but he also has the power to raise others.

11:16 We often remember Thomas as "the doubter" because he doubted Jesus' resurrection (20:24-25). But he also loved the Lord and was a man of great courage. The disciples knew the dangers of going with Jesus to Jerusalem, so they tried to talk him out of it. Thomas merely expressed what all of them were feeling. When their objections failed, they were willing to go and even die with Jesus. They may not have understood why Jesus would be killed, but they were loyal. We may face unknown dangers in doing God's work. It is wise to consider the high cost of being Jesus' disciple.

JESUS COMFORTS MARY AND MARTHA / 11:17-37 / 166

Although we get many glimpses of Jesus' compassion throughout the Gospels, his tender conversations with Mary and Martha are the most moving. His words reveal patient pastoral concerns. Elsewhere we see him confront people with the truth; here we see him console as the gentle Master. Jesus did not ridicule or belittle grief. He affirmed our need for comfort by providing it to the sisters without hesitation. It is a tribute to the family that many from Jerusalem came to Bethany to pay their respects and offer their support to the sisters.

11:17-19 Lazarus had already been in his grave for four days by the time Jesus arrived. In the warm climate of Palestine, a dead body would decompose quickly, so a person's body was often buried the same day of death. When Jesus and the disciples arrived in Bethany, many Jews from Jerusalem had gathered to console Lazarus's family, and some of those who had arrived were religious leaders. In Jewish society, prolonged mourning for the dead was considered an essential part of every funeral.

11:20-24 Upon seeing Jesus, Martha said to him, "Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died." Martha probably realized that Jesus could not have arrived much earlier, but she was confident that Jesus' presence would have prevented Lazarus's death. Mary makes the same comment later (11:32). Despite their pain and sorrow, their faith in Jesus did not waver. The implication for us is that we should not quickly assume that God has let us down when we are in the midst of difficulties. Then she added, "But even now I know that God will give you whatever you ask." Perhaps Martha thought Jesus would bring her brother back to life. But her reply in verse 24 and subsequent protests at the tomb (11:39) suggest otherwise. She did not realize, understand, or dare to hope that Jesus would ask God to give Lazarus back his physical life and be returned to his family. Instead, she reaffirmed her trust in his power even though she thought Jesus had missed an opportunity to display it by healing her brother.

When Jesus said, "Your brother will rise again," she attributed it to the future resurrection—“When everyone else rises, on resurrection day.” But Jesus did not mean an eventual, distant resurrection, he meant that Lazarus would rise again that very day!

11:25-26 To the woman at the well (4:25-26), Jesus identified himself as the Messiah; to the blind man (9:35-37), he disclosed himself as the Son of Man; but here he enlarged the picture by revealing himself as the source of resurrection life.

To understand Jesus’ statement, we need to see it in two parts. First, Jesus explained the resurrection: “I am the resurrection . . . Those who believe in me, even though they die . . . will live again.” Then he explained the life: “I am . . . the life . . . They are given eternal life for believing in me and will never perish.”

The believer will not experience eternal death. Lazarus had been a believer in Jesus; therefore, even though he died, he would live. Every believer who has died will yet live, and everyone who is still living and believing will die, but not eternally. Christ did not promise the prevention of physical death; he guaranteed in himself to give abundant life, including resurrection and eternity with him. Christ did not prevent Lazarus’s physical death (after being raised, Lazarus would eventually die again), but Lazarus had the guarantee of eternal life.

11:27 Martha is best known for being too busy to sit down and talk with Jesus (Luke 10:38-42), but here we see her as a woman of deep faith. When asked if she believed his words about resurrection, she replied, “I have always believed you are the Messiah, the Son of God, the one who has come into the world from God.” Her statement of faith is exactly the response that Jesus wants from us. This confession presents a high point in John’s Gospel, for here we see a believer acknowledging that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God. In recognizing Jesus as the Messiah, she saw him to be God’s envoy appointed to deliver God’s people; in recognizing Jesus as the Son of God, she saw his divinity.

11:28-32 Martha spoke to Mary secretly so that the visiting Jews would not follow her to where Jesus was—somewhere outside the village. However, when Mary arose quickly to go to Jesus, she was followed by the mourners. Mary met Jesus and repeated Martha’s statement (11:21). They were both convinced that Jesus would have been able to do something had Lazarus still been living. But they had no idea that death might be reversible.

11:33-37 The Greek word for deeply troubled can mean “intensely agitated.” Jesus may have been troubled by the excessive sorrow of the mourners, by Martha and Mary’s limited faith, or by the general unbelief. Even more so, Jesus was angry at the power of death, man’s ultimate enemy (1 Corinthians 15:26). Among the commotion and the loud wailing of the mourners, Jesus wept. What made Jesus cry? Was it his love for Lazarus? Was it the presence of sadness and death? Or was it the faithless grief that surrounded him? For whatever the reason, the situation caused Jesus to shed some tears. The Jews’ interpreted Jesus’ tears as a sign of Jesus’ great love for Lazarus. They assumed that Jesus wept in frustration and sorrow that he had not arrived earlier in order to heal Lazarus. Following Martha and Mary, others also asked, “This man healed a blind man. Why couldn’t he keep Lazarus from dying?” (referring to Jesus’ previous miracle—see 9:1-7).

JESUS RAISES LAZARUS FROM THE DEAD / 11:38-44 / 167

As this chapter opens, we see Mary, Martha, and the crowd expressing conditional belief in the power of Jesus. They believed that Jesus could have worked a miracle if Lazarus had still been alive. But death intervened, and they thought it was irreversible. Little did they know that what they considered impossible would soon be overcome by God’s power.

11:38-39 John once again tells us that Jesus was deeply troubled (see 11:33). Lazarus was buried in a cave with a stone rolled across its entrance. Tombs at this time were usually caves carved in the limestone rock of a hillside. A tomb was often large enough for people to walk inside. Several bodies would be placed in one tomb. After burial, a large stone would be rolled across the entrance to the tomb. This burial spot was much like the one in which Jesus would be buried. Jesus said to the crowd, “Roll the stone aside.” When Jesus asked that the stone be removed, Martha protested.

11:40 The purpose of the whole event was for Jesus to exhibit God’s glory. Jesus had proclaimed this from the moment he heard about Lazarus’s sickness (11:4). In order for the miracle to occur and for God to be glorified through it, the sisters would have to believe enough to order the stone to be removed from the tomb’s entrance.

11:41-44 While the crowd waited beside the tomb—with the stone now rolled aside from its entrance—Jesus praised his Father aloud, publicly, so that, upon witnessing the miracle of resurrection, the people might believe in Jesus. His prayer was not a petition, but a prayer of thanks to the Father. Jesus knew that his request would be answered.

Then Jesus shouted, “Lazarus, come out!” The voice of Jesus is potent and life-giving. Lazarus provided proof of Jesus’ earlier words: “The dead will hear my voice . . . and those who listen will live” (5:25). At Jesus’ words, Lazarus came out. He was completely bound in graveclothes. There was no question that a dead man had come back to life. The miracle was not only Lazarus’ resuscitation. After four days, the body would have seriously decayed. Lazarus’ body was raised and restored. Jesus told them, “Unwrap him and let him go!”

RELIGIOUS LEADERS PLOT TO KILL JESUS / 11:45-57 / 168

Some eyewitnesses to the raising of Lazarus reported to the Pharisees in Jerusalem, only a couple of miles away. This fresh evidence of Jesus’ power threw the Pharisees into a panic. What followed is a priceless opportunity for us who know the full story to see how badly mistaken people can be in their assessment of events.

11:45-46 Jesus’ words and works, even today, divide people into two camps—believers and unbelievers. Many people can see the same miraculous event, yet walk away being affected differently. The raising of Lazarus was stunning to many, so that many of the witnesses believed in Jesus as the Messiah. Yet other Jewish onlookers did not believe; they brought word of what had happened to the Pharisees, who were looking for a reason to kill Jesus (7:1, 19, 25; 8:37, 40).

11:47 The high council was the highest ruling authority among the Jews in Judea. It was composed of seventy-one members: The high priest presiding over seventy religious leaders, the majority of whom were Sadducees and the minority, Pharisees. “What are we going to do?” they asked. The dialogue that follows points clearly to the Jewish leaders’ single-minded opposition to Jesus. John captured the irony of their conversation as they used every true statement to lead to wrong conclusions.

11:48 It was Rome’s custom to allow conquered people to carry on their religious practices as long as they did not lead to rebellion against Rome. Jesus’ miracles, however, often would cause a disturbance. If all the Jewish populace would follow Jesus as their Messiah-King, the leaders feared that the Roman army would take away their limited privileges of self-rule, as well as destroy the Temple and the nation (see Acts 6:13; 21:28).

11:49-52 Caiaphas led the Sadducees, the elite, educated, and wealthy Jews, who stood on fairly good terms with Rome. Jesus was a special threat to their quiet and secure positions in leadership over Judea's religious life. Caiaphas was proud and ruthless. His usual policy was to remove any threats to his power by whatever means necessary. For him, Jesus' death was not an "if" but a "when, where, and how."

Since Caiaphas served as a high priest for eighteen years (A.D. 18 to 36), the expression that year refers to that one year in which Jesus was crucified. The office of high priest was originally instituted by God to be a lifetime position (Numbers 35:25); but the Romans did not want any one person to become too powerful, so they appointed high priests and placed a new one in position whenever they wanted. Caiaphas was convinced that nothing short of destroying Jesus would save Israel from being destroyed by Rome. The life of one person was considered cheap and expendable as an alternative to endangering the nation. God used his words to express an unwitting prophecy of universal proportions: "Let this one man die for the people." One man did have to die in order that the world might be saved.

The words of Caiaphas were really a prophecy. Though his intent was sinful, God used him to indicate that Jesus should die for the entire nation. In addition, Caiaphas didn't think of it himself; he was inspired to say it. The irony of Caiaphas's statement that John didn't want his readers to miss was that Jesus' death, intended to spare the nation of Israel from physical destruction, was actually to spare Israel from spiritual destruction. In the end, Jesus' death was for the gathering together of all the children of God scattered around the world.

11:53 The Jewish leaders missed the prophetic implications of Caiaphas's statement, and began to plot Jesus' death. But evil leaders, no matter how long they have power or how evil their actions, are always under God's control.

11:54 Aware of the plot against his life, Jesus went to a place near the wilderness. Ephraim may have been the same place as Ophrah, near Bethel (see 2 Chronicles 13:19). Jesus and his disciples stayed there until the time of the Passover.

11:55-57 This Passover probably occurred in A.D. 30, the year of Jesus' death. Everyone in Jerusalem during the Passover celebration knew that the chief priests and Pharisees wanted to arrest Jesus. Furthermore, they were under strict orders to report Jesus' whereabouts. Into this tense scene Jesus would make his triumphal entry (12:12ff.).

A WOMAN ANOINTS JESUS WITH PERFUME / 12:1-11 / 182

The chapter opens with a portrayal of Mary anointing Jesus, accompanied by a wide range of reactions. This anointing concurs with the one described in Matthew 26:6-13 and Mark 14:3-9; but it is different from the one depicted in Luke 7:36-50, which occurred much earlier in Jesus' ministry. The tender attention given to Jesus by his three friends in Bethany contrasts with the treachery Judas planned to commit by the week's end.

12:1-2 Another Passover was coming, and Jesus arrived in Bethany six days beforehand. John last placed him in Ephraim, where he had gone to be alone with his disciples (11:54). From there, they returned to Galilee for a while. This was Jesus' final visit with his friends at Bethany because he was on his way to Jerusalem where, as he had already told his disciples he would die. Only a few weeks had gone by since Jesus had raised Lazarus from the dead. He was back in the home of Lazarus. According to parallel accounts of this story (see Matthew 26:6-13; Mark 14:3-9), this meal was held at the home of Simon the leper, who also lived in Bethany and was very likely healed of his leprosy by Jesus. A dinner had been prepared in Jesus' honor.

12:3 This perfume was made from an aromatic herb (nard) from the mountains of India, and it was imported in alabaster bottles. This expensive imported item carried such value that people used it for investment purposes, as gold is often used today. When supper was finished, Mary took this pure, expensive perfume and anointed Jesus' feet. Nard was used to anoint kings; Mary may have been anointing Jesus as her kingly Messiah. Many centuries later we are still humbled by the extravagance and the appropriateness of Mary's gift. She poured out the very best she could find. Price is not the central issue, but the sincere expression of faith and love.

12:4-6 According to Matthew and Mark, all the disciples were offended that Mary had "wasted" this expensive ointment (Matthew 26:8; Mark 14:4). But in John's Gospel, Judas Iscariot verbalized the offense. "The perfume was worth a small fortune. It should have been sold and the money given to the poor." Judas's motive was not to care for the poor. Judas was a thief who had been entrusted with the disciples' funds (see 13:29). Judas often dipped into the money for his own use. Undoubtedly, Jesus knew what Judas was doing (2:24-25; 6:64), but he never did or said anything about it.

12:7-8 Jesus pointed out that Mary was not wasting this perfume on him. Certainly, the money could have been given to the poor; there would always be opportunities to care for the poor. But they would not always have Jesus. Mary understood how special Jesus was. Her anointing was like an ointment put on his body in preparation for burial (Matthew 26:12; Mark 14:8). (Later Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea would actually wrap Jesus' body with linen and spices, 19:39.)

This act and Jesus' response to it do not give us permission to ignore the poor. Rather, Jesus explained that his followers would have many opportunities to help the poor, but only a short time to love and honor the Messiah. Mary's loving act was for a specific occasion—an anointing that anticipated Jesus' burial and a public declaration of her faith in him as the Messiah. Jesus' words should have taught Judas a valuable lesson about the worth of money. Unfortunately, Judas did not learn it. In contrast to Mary's sacrificial gift to Jesus, Judas sold his master's life for thirty pieces of silver (Matthew 26:14-16), the price one paid a slave owner if one's ox killed one of his slaves (see Exodus 21:32).

12:9-11 Jews were arriving from all over the world for the Passover celebration. Many had heard of the miracle of Lazarus's resurrection. When they discovered that Jesus had returned to Bethany to be with Lazarus, they came to see both of them.

However, the leading priests decided to kill Lazarus too, for it was because of him that many of the people had deserted them and believed in Jesus. The chief priests' blindness and hardness of heart caused them to sink ever deeper into sin. One sin led them to another. From the Jewish leaders' point of view, they could accuse Jesus of blasphemy because he claimed equality with God. But Lazarus had done nothing of the kind. They wanted Lazarus dead simply because he was a living witness to Jesus' power.

JESUS RIDES INTO JERUSALEM ON A YOUNG DONKEY / 12:12-19 / 183

John's description of the Triumphal Entry, mentioned in all four Gospels, is the most brief of the accounts. John's objective seemed to be to sketch the events, relating them to Old Testament prophecies and explaining that those present did not fully understand all that was going on. He pointed out that these events intensified the animosity of the leaders toward Jesus. In the other Gospels, we are left with the impression that the crowd's reaction to Jesus was largely spontaneous. John, however, helpfully explained that those who had witnessed the raising of Lazarus had been busily telling others. The news created great anticipation in Jerusalem of Jesus' arrival.

12:12-13 The day after the feast in Bethany, Jesus made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. Given the importance of the approaching Passover, the road into the holy city would have been clogged with pilgrims. Among them would have been many people from Galilee, familiar with Jesus from his years of ministry there.

Not only was Jesus part of the large crowd moving toward Jerusalem, others came out to meet him from the city itself. Expectations that something marvelous was soon to happen must have been at fever pitch! The crowd began to shout. As they shouted "Praise God," they thought that their conquering King had finally come to liberate them from Roman rule. They believed that the one who comes in the name of the Lord was the King of Israel (see Psalm 118:25-26; Zephaniah 3:15; John 1:49). Therefore, the Jews thought they were hailing the arrival of their King! But these people who were praising God for giving them a king had the wrong idea about Jesus. They were sure he would be a national leader who would restore their nation to its former glory; thus they were deaf to the words of their prophets and blind to Jesus' real mission. When it became apparent that Jesus was not going to fulfill their hopes, many people turned against him.

12:14-15 Indeed, their King came to them—but not the kind of king they had expected. He did not arrive as a political ruler might, on a mighty horse or in a chariot. Rather, Jesus came to them in the way prophesied by Zechariah: "Don't be afraid, people of Israel. Look, your King is coming, sitting on a donkey's colt." The Old Testament prophet Zechariah had prophesied the arrival of a great king, possibly Alexander the Great, in Zechariah 9:1-8. Then contrasting that, he had prophesied the arrival to Jerusalem's people of their King (see Zechariah 9:9). In this coming, Israel's King would be a humble servant, not a conqueror. He would not be exalted to a throne, but lifted up on a cross.

12:16 The same kind of statement was made in 2:22. After Christ's resurrection and subsequent glorification, the disciples remembered these events and understood what they signified. Prior to Jesus' resurrection, his followers did not understand the significance of his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. The Holy Spirit would open their eyes to the meaning of the Old Testament Scriptures, Jesus' fulfillment of prophecy, and remind them of this and other messianic predictions (14:26; see also Luke 24:25-35, 44-48).

12:17-19 The crowd that was with him when he called Lazarus back to life continued to spread the word. That was the main reason so many went out to meet him. This statement emphasizes the superficial enthusiasm that possessed most of the cheering throng. They flocked to Jesus because they had heard about his great miracle in raising Lazarus from the dead. Their adoration was short-lived and their commitment shallow, for in a few days they would do nothing to stop his crucifixion.

The Pharisees were exasperated by such exultation. They were hoping to find some sly way to get hold of Jesus and get rid of him while they knew his whereabouts, but it was impossible with the huge adoring crowds surrounding him. Their statement, “the whole world has gone after him!” is ironic—for most of those people did not really believe in Jesus.

JESUS EXPLAINS WHY HE MUST DIE / 12:20-36 / 185

As if to confirm the fears expressed in verse 19, this section begins with a group of Gentiles trying to approach Jesus. We are not told if their request for an audience with Christ was ever granted, but Jesus replied to their interest with some instruction on the necessity of his own death.

This passage also includes the third instance of God speaking audibly during the ministry of Jesus. The first was at the baptism of Jesus (Matthew 3:13-17; Mark 1:9-11; Luke 3:21-22); the second at the Transfiguration (Matthew 17:1-13; Mark 9:2-13; Luke 9:28-36). God the Father broke the silence of heaven to encourage his Son in the final days of his mission on earth. Jesus himself emphasized again the brief time that remained during which the light would still be present.

12:20-22 Indeed, it seemed as if the “whole world” had gone after Jesus, as illustrated by these Greeks who came to the Passover and sought a meeting with him. These people were either visitors from Greece or Greek-speaking Jews. They may have been Jewish proselytes or simply God-fearing Gentiles. These Greeks probably selected Philip as their emissary to Jesus because, though Philip was a Jew, he had a Greek name. And Philip was from Bethsaida, a town in Galilee near the Greek territory on the eastern side of the Sea of Galilee called Decapolis. The city of Bethsaida itself had a large Greek population, and Philip may have been able to speak Greek.

For a moment, Philip hesitated to approach Jesus with the Greeks’ request. So first, Philip told Andrew (with whom Philip is often associated—1:40-44; 6:7-8; Mark 3:18). Then, they went together to ask Jesus. The very inclusion of Greeks in the events of the final week has great significance. John continued his pattern of including Gentiles (the world) all along the way (1:12; 3:16). His readers, who may have been Gentiles struggling with their acceptability to God, would have gained encouragement from this incident and Jesus' response. We Gentiles also ought to be grateful that Christ includes us in his offer of salvation.

12:23-24 Jesus' words to Philip and Andrew and perhaps to the other disciples as well were not addressed to the crowd. The crowd (probably including the Greeks) is not mentioned again until verse 29. Jesus explained, "The time has come for the Son of Man to enter into his glory" through death and resurrection. The "whole world" had gone after Jesus (12:19); even the Greeks wanted to see him (12:20ff). Yet it is exactly at this point, when by human standards Jesus was in a perfect position to consolidate his forces and overwhelm the opposition, that he faced the heart-troubling time that was upon him. Until this moment, the "time" had always been a future event. But here Jesus declared that it had arrived.

The picture of a kernel of wheat reveals the necessary sacrifice of Jesus. When a grain of wheat is buried in the ground, it actually dies before becoming a mature blade producing many new kernels. In the same way, Jesus, by his death, produced more fruit than could have been gained had he become the king of Israel on an earthly throne. Indeed, by being lifted up on the cross, Jesus would draw all people to himself. In his picture of the dying grain, Jesus spoke directly about his own life. He does not necessarily require us to literally give up our lives in sacrificial death as the only way to be fruitful. God does call some believers to die for him. But he calls many more to stay alive for fruitful service (see Romans 12:1-2).

12:25-27 True followers of Jesus must have their priorities in order; if they choose to love their life more than their Master, they will lose the very life they seek to maintain. True disciples must be willing to suffer and experience rejection, even unto death if need be. To serve and follow Jesus means making radical lifestyle changes. To follow Jesus means going the way he went—not the way of earthly power and honor—but the way of humility and death. Everything Jesus did was for God's glory. When we choose to follow him, we must live for God's glory alone. This does not mean we have no fun, no joy, no security. Rather, it simply means we live to honor God and then the Father will honor us.

The honor from God that Jesus promises may, in fact, be partly experienced in this life, but never entirely. And for many believers, what God has planned by way of honor we can only guess. Meanwhile we can derive real comfort and security from knowing that God observes and remembers each and every act of service we do in his name. None will be forgotten.

Unlike the synoptic Gospels, John does not record Jesus' agony in the Garden of Gethsemane prior to his crucifixion (Matthew 26:36-46; Mark 14:32-42; Luke 22:39-46). The record of Jesus being deeply troubled is the only indication in John that Jesus was troubled by that approaching hour. His agony proves the genuineness of his humanity. Jesus refused to ask the Father to save him from the cross (see Romans 8:32) because he knew he had been sent for the very purpose of dying on the cross. Jesus knew his crucifixion lay ahead, and because he was human, he dreaded it.

12:28-30 Jesus now turns his thoughts back to the Father and back to the purpose for which he had come to earth: to bring glory to him. Thus, the Father responded in a voice from heaven, “I have already brought it glory, and I will do it again.” God would glorify his name through the obedience of his Son (13:31-32) and then would glorify his name again when he would be reunited (17:5) with his Son after his resurrection.

The Father's voice was audible but not correctly perceived by the multitude standing around. Some in the crowd said that it was thunder. Others thought it was an angel. Whatever their interpretation of the sound, it could not be denied that the phenomenon was supernatural. Jesus made it clear that he did not need this “voice” (he knew that the Father would glorify him); the voice had come for the benefit of the people. However, only a few (such as John who recorded this event) understood what was said and who said it. To the others it was merely thunderous noise.

12:31-33 Anticipating his glorification through death and resurrection, Jesus proclaimed: “The time of judgment for the world has come, when the prince of this world will be cast out.” From our perspective we see how Christ's death brought judgment on those who had the upper hand in the world's system: Judas, Caiaphas, Pilate, and the Jewish religious leaders. But the Son had ultimately come to destroy the works of Satan, who controlled the minds of people, producing unbelief. Therefore, the world would be judged in the sense that Satan, the ruler of the world (see 14:30; 16:11; 2 Corinthians 4:4; Ephesians 2:2; 6:12; Revelation 12:9), would be cast out—his final and ultimate weapon, death, was about to be overcome (see 1 Corinthians 15:26; Hebrews 2:14).

As he did earlier, Jesus spoke about his death in terms of being lifted up (see 3:14; 8:28). John's explanation makes it clear that this expression signified how he was going to die—the cross onto which Jesus would be nailed. Jesus knew that he would not die by stoning, something the Jews had already tried to do (8:59), but by crucifixion.

That Jesus will draw everyone to himself does not mean that everyone will ultimately be saved. Jesus has already made it clear that some will not be saved (5:28-29). Rather Jesus was saying that his offer of salvation extends to all people, not just to the Jews. Jesus' incredible love, expressed in his death for all people, will draw and unify those who believe, so that sin, evil, and death (the weapons of the prince of this world) will be powerless.

12:34 The people had understood from Scripture that the Messiah would live forever (see Psalm 72:17; Isaiah 9:6-7; Ezekiel 37:26-28). They had believed that Jesus had been making a claim to be the Messiah, and here they were waving palm branches for a victorious Messiah who they thought would set up a political, earthly kingdom that would never end. So it was difficult for them to believe that Jesus was the Messiah when he spoke of his imminent death—and that on a cross. Therefore, they wanted clarification about what Jesus meant when he used the term the Son of Man. Was this Son of Man someone different than the Messiah?

12:35-36 Jesus did not attempt to clear up the people's confusion about the Messiah. Rather, he admonished them to walk in the light while he was still with them (see also 1:5-9; 3:18-21; 8:12; 9:4-5). The ones enlightened by God would recognize their Messiah. The light of Jesus' physical presence on earth was about to be extinguished, and the darkness of Satan's evil influence and sin would overtake those who would refuse to accept Jesus' light. To walk in Satan's darkness is to stumble through life with no guidance, no help, no protection, no understanding, no ultimate goal or meaning. So Jesus urged the people to believe in him, who is the light, and become his children. The opportunity was available to all, but Jesus was about to depart this world.

MOST OF THE PEOPLE DO NOT BELIEVE IN JESUS / 12:37-43 / 186

As he does persistently, John never allows his readers to avoid the decision about what to do with Jesus Christ. For those ready to respond, no obstacle will keep them from belief. For those whose hearts are hardened, even the most compelling reasons for faith become obstacles. John soberly reminds us that many of those who believe in Jesus still allow the pressures and fears of people to hinder their faith. Hidden faith may avoid a confrontation with others, but it seldom pleases God.

12:37-41 Jesus had performed enough miraculous signs to cause people to believe in him. The greatest of all signs—raising Lazarus from the dead—should have been enough to elicit faith from all those who saw it and even heard about it. Yet most of the people still did not believe that Jesus was the Messiah.

This unbelief had been predicted by Isaiah. In the opening of his chapter on the suffering Savior, Isaiah asked, “Who has believed our message? To whom will the Lord reveal his saving power?” (Isaiah 53:1). It took revelation from God to know that Jesus was the one through whom God demonstrated his saving power. Isaiah was referring to Jesus when he made this prediction, because he was given a vision of the Messiah’s glory. But the Jews lacked this understanding. Why? Because it was prophesied. Isaiah wrote: “The Lord has blinded their eyes and hardened their hearts.” The entire quotation (taken from Isaiah 6:9-10) appears quite often in the New Testament because it provides a prophetic explanation for why the Jews did not perceive Jesus’ message nor receive him as their Messiah (see also Matthew 13:14; Mark 4:12; Luke 8:10; Acts 28:26). And because they would not believe, they eventually could not believe. As a result, the Jews remained unenlightened and hardened.

12:42-43 At these words, some of the Jewish leaders believed in Jesus, but they wouldn’t admit it, afraid the Pharisees would expel them from the synagogue. John made the point that their faith was weak, and he described the reason: They were still subject to the lure of human praise (see 5:44). But John primarily warned his readers that secret faith does not ultimately please God. Secrecy may be prudent at times (witness the presence of secret believers and churches in repressive societies like China and the former Romanian state), but that usually comes from a courageous strategy. All too often we remain silent at the very times we ought to be confessing our faith in Christ.

JESUS SUMMARIZES HIS MESSAGE / 12:44-50 / 187

John closes this section in his Gospel about Jesus’ public ministry with a summary of Jesus’ entire testimony. The shared Passover meal will take up the next several chapters. But John leaves his readers with the cry of Jesus’ final public speech ringing in their ears. It is an ultimatum set before the crowds: Believe in Jesus, the Light of the World, or live in darkness under God’s judgment.

12:44-45 Jesus left the crowds temporarily (12:36-37), but in one final public appearance he appealed to his hearers to believe in him (see also 5:17-44; 6:27-65; 7:16-18; 8:14-58; 10:14-18) and thereby walk in his light. In this appeal, he affirmed his union with the Father: “If you trust me, you are really trusting God who sent me. For when you see me, you are seeing the one who sent me.” Because the Son sent by the Father is the visible expression of the Father to all people (see 14:9-11), those who believe in the Son also believe in the Father. Jesus is God. If you want to know what God is like, study the person and words of Jesus Christ.

12:46 Those who believe in Jesus have left Satan’s dark kingdom and influence in the world, and they have entered the light of God’s Kingdom. Some people in the church act as though they still remain in the darkness. Jesus died so that we might be transformed. If our life is not changing, we may not have begun to really follow the light.

12:47-48 Jesus repeated the important truth that he came not to judge the world but to save it (see also 3:17; 8:15-16); but his rejected words would condemn all unbelievers in the judgment at the last day (see 3:31-36; 5:22-23, 26-30; 9:39).

The purpose of Jesus’ first mission on earth was not to judge people, but to show them the way to find salvation and eternal life. On the day of judgment, those who have accepted Jesus and lived his way will be raised to eternal life (1 Corinthians 15:51-57; 1 Thessalonians 4:15-18; Revelation 21:1-8), but all who reject Jesus and his message will be judged at the day of judgment by the truth Jesus had spoken (Revelation 20:11-15). Decide now your future fate, for the consequences of your decision will last forever.

12:49 Jesus’ mission was to faithfully convey the words of God to all who would truly listen. He knew that those who rejected those words would be rejecting life. God himself gave Jesus instructions as to what he should say. Jesus did not change that message. Some, like the Jehovah’s Witnesses, have used verses like this to say that Jesus was not God because he was subordinate to the Father. But Jesus’ essential, divine being was not subordinate to the Father—in all things he was equal with God (Philippians 2:5-6); rather, Jesus coordinated his will to fully comply with the Father’s will. Thus, to respond to Jesus is to respond to God. To believe in Jesus is to believe in God. To reject Jesus is to reject God. To hear Jesus’ words makes each person responsible before God for what he or she does with them.

12:50 Jesus closed his message with one final appeal to accept the words he had spoken as having come from the Father. To accept those words is to receive eternal life (3:16-17, 35-36; 5:24-29, 39-40).

JESUS WASHES THE DISCIPLES' FEET / 13:1-20 / 210

The pace of John's writing slowed remarkably beginning with chapter 13. The first twelve chapters cover three years; the next six chapters cover one night.

13:1-2 Because Jesus was fully aware that his hour had come to leave this world and return to his Father, he devoted his last hours to instructing and encouraging his disciples. Jesus continued his devotion to his disciples until the very end of his life, showing them in this last night the full extent of his love. Before he left them, he wanted to express his love to them, one by one—and this he would do in a way that would surprise them.

The supper was probably the official Passover meal, indicated by verse 1. And this was a special Passover, for it was the last meal Jesus would eat with his disciples. During this meal he would institute the “Lord's Supper” (see Matthew 26:17-30; Mark 14:12-26; Luke 22:7-39). The context indicates that the food was being placed before them, but the meal itself had not been eaten (see 13:26, 30).

Jesus had already called Judas “a devil” in 6:70 because Jesus knew that Judas would cooperate with the Devil in perpetrating Jesus' death. Thus, the Devil and Judas corroborated in Jesus' betrayal. Indeed, Satan entered Judas to carry out the actual betrayal (see 13:27).

13:3-5 Jesus, the Son of God, knew his origin and his destiny. He knew that he would soon be returning to his Father. Being assured of his own destiny, he focused his attention on the disciples and showed them what it meant for him to become their Servant and for them to serve one another. At the time so near to the revelation of Jesus' true identity and glory, he set aside what was rightfully his and expressed his character through an act of humility. He got up, took off his robe, and wrapped a towel around his waist like an apron. He then poured water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet.

Jesus was the model servant, and he showed his servant attitude to his disciples. Foot washing was a common act in Bible times. People traveled mostly on foot in sandals across the dusty roads of Judea. When entering a home, it was customary to wash one's feet. To not offer to wash a guest's feet was considered a breach of hospitality (see Luke 7:44). Washing guests' feet was a job for a household servant to carry out when guests arrived (1 Samuel 25:41). It was a subservient task. What was unusual about this act was that Jesus, the Master and Teacher, was doing it for his disciples, as the lowliest slave would do.

13:6-9 All the disciples accepted the washing until Jesus came to Peter, who questioned Jesus: “Lord, why are you going to wash my feet?” Jesus did not provide Peter with an explanation, other than that Peter would understand the significance of the washing some time in the future. Later in the New Testament, Peter explains his understanding of what Jesus had done (1 Peter 5:5-6). Peter came to realize that humble service meant obedience to Christ. When Jesus washed the disciples’ feet, he was demonstrating his ultimate sacrificial act—giving his life for them on the cross.

But at this moment, Peter didn’t understand: “You will never wash my feet!” he protested. Seeing the Master behave like a slave confused Peter. And Peter did not feel worthy that his Master should be acting like a slave toward him! This was not an expression of arrogance but of confusion. Peter felt he should be washing the Master’s feet—not the other way around.

Jesus responded: “But if I don’t wash you, you won’t belong to me.” There are two possible meanings for this sentence: (1) Jesus meant that unless he washed away Peter’s sins by his death on the cross, then Peter could have no relationship with him. (2) Jesus meant that unless Peter submitted to him and allowed Jesus to minister in this way, Peter would never learn the lesson of humility. Either way, Peter seemed to grasp the significance of Jesus’ words, for he then wanted to be bathed completely.

13:10-11 After one has bathed, another bath is not necessary at the end of the day. The person is still clean—except for the feet, which are constantly soiled by the dust of the ground. A clean and bathed person just needs to have his or her feet rinsed. According to the customs of those times, once a person had bathed, he or she needed only to wash his or her feet upon entering a person’s home.

To be bathed by Jesus meant to be washed by his living word. To receive Jesus, nothing is required of the believer except humble acceptance of what Jesus has done. Peter had to sit and humbly allow Jesus to wash his dirty feet in order to understand that to accept the salvation Jesus offers means to humbly accept his death on the cross for all sins.

When Jesus said, “You are clean, but that isn’t true of everyone,” he was referring to Judas Iscariot (see 13:18) and suggesting that Judas was not a true believer. Though Jesus had washed Judas’s feet, Judas was not clean, for he had not come to believe in Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God. Jesus already knew that this man would be used by Satan to bring about the events that unfold in the final chapters of this Gospel.

13:12-16 Jesus' act of washing the disciples' feet demonstrated love in action. Jesus was their Teacher and Lord, meaning he was on a higher level than they; yet he assumed a position of humility and service because he loved those he served. Jesus commanded his disciples to wash each other's feet—to serve one another in love according to the example he set. To refuse to serve others, to refuse to humble yourself, no matter how high your position, is to place yourself above Jesus. Such arrogant pride is not what Jesus taught.

These disciples would soon be sent out as the messengers for the Christian church. They would be leaders in many places—indeed, James, John, and Peter became the leaders of the Christian church in Jerusalem. Jesus taught these soon-to-be leaders that as they labored to spread the gospel, they first and foremost had to be servants to those whom they taught. The disciples must have remembered this lesson often as they labored with the problems, struggles, and joys of the early believers. How many times they must have remembered that they were called to serve. And what a difference it made! Imagine how difficult the growth (even existence) of the early church would have been if these disciples had continued vying for spots of greatness and importance! Fortunately for us, they took Jesus' lesson to heart.

13:17 We are blessed (happy, joyful, fulfilled), not because of what we know, but because of what we do with what we know. God's grace to us finds its completion in the service we, as recipients of his grace, perform for others. We will find our greatest blessing in obeying Christ by serving others.

13:18-19 Jesus' previous statements about serving and loving one another did not apply to all of his disciples because, in fact, one of his disciples (Judas) was about to betray him. However, this betrayal was not an unexpected event, for Jesus had known from the beginning that one of the men he chose would betray him (6:70-71). Jesus' betrayal was necessary to fulfill Scripture—specifically, Psalm 41:9. Jesus drew from Psalm 41 because it describes how one of David's friends turned against him. This may have referred to the story of David's trusted companion, Ahithophel, who betrayed David and then went and hanged himself (see 2 Samuel 16:20–17:3, 23). Judas, who had been with Jesus and was a trusted companion (Judas was keeper of the money), would betray Jesus and then hang himself.

Jesus had known all along that Judas would betray him (see 6:64, 70-71; Matthew 17:22-23; 20:17-19), but he predicted the betrayal in the presence of his disciples so that they would realize, when the betrayal actually occurred, that it had been prophesied in Scripture (see Acts 1:16). This would strengthen their faith.

13:20 This verse follows the thought of verse 16, where Jesus spoke of being a servant to the one who sent him. He would send forth his disciples so that whoever would welcome them would welcome Jesus and, in turn, welcome the one who sent Jesus—God the Father.

JESUS AND THE DISCIPLES SHARE THE LAST SUPPER / 13:21-30 / 211

At this point in the dinner, the mood shifted, partly as a reflection of the ominous tone Jesus used in verse 18. Apparently the food was on the table, and they may have already been eating. Moments later, in answer to John's direct question, Jesus indicated his knowledge of Judas's betrayal by handing him the bread that he had dipped in the bowl. The rest of the disciples could not understand the meaning of Judas's abrupt departure.

13:21-26 Jesus was in great anguish of spirit over the coming betrayal, even though he knew that the betrayal had been foreordained. His inner turmoil was expressed when he said, "The truth is, one of you will betray me!" Jesus' pronouncement caused great consternation among the disciples. It was not obvious who the betrayer was. Judas, as keeper of the money, may have been the one they would least suspect.

Peter motioned to the one who was sitting beside Jesus to ask who the betrayer was. So that disciple, the one Jesus loved (identified as John, the author), asked Jesus, "Lord, who is it?" Jesus identified the betrayer as "the one to whom I give the bread dipped in the sauce." Jesus dipped the piece of bread into a dish filled with a sauce probably made of dates, raisins, and sour wine. Having said this, Jesus dipped the piece of bread and gave it to Judas. Ironically, a host offering a piece of bread to a guest was a sign of friendship. Jesus' act of friendship was his identification of the betrayer. Later, in the Garden, Judas would identify Jesus to the guards with another sign of friendship—a kiss (Luke 22:47-48).

13:27-30 After Judas ate the bread, Satan entered into him. Thus the betrayal was set in motion. Satan would use Judas as his tool to accomplish his evil plan. But Satan's part in the betrayal of Jesus does not remove any of the responsibility from Judas. Judas may have been disillusioned because Jesus was talking about dying rather than setting up his Kingdom. Or perhaps Judas didn't understand Jesus' mission and no longer believed that Jesus was God's chosen one. Whatever Judas thought, Satan assumed that Jesus' death would end his mission and thwart God's plan. Like Judas, Satan did not know that Jesus' death was the most important part of God's plan all along.

Jesus said to Judas, "Hurry. Do it now." No one else at the table understood, but Judas did. Jesus identified Judas so tactfully that all the disciples missed the significance of the act: they did not connect Jesus' earlier statement ("One of you will betray me") with his present exchange with Judas. Despite the disciples' misunderstanding, the stage was quickly being set: Judas left at once, going out into the night. The last statement recounts the actual time yet also symbolizes the spiritual condition of Judas. He was in darkness, under the control of the prince of darkness, Satan.

JESUS PREDICTS PETER'S DENIAL / 13:31-38 / 212

After Judas's departure, Jesus spoke of his own glorification and referred to the brief time they would still have together. With a sense of urgency, he commanded them to love each other. He indicated that this single characteristic would set them apart from the world as his disciples. Peter wanted to know where Jesus was planning to go that they could not go with him. Jesus simply restated that his destination would not be theirs until later.

Ironically, Peter came close to the truth when he suggested that he would not even allow death to keep him from following Jesus. With profound compassion, which Peter could not possibly fathom until later, Jesus pointed out that Peter was not ready to lay down his life. That disqualified Peter from going with Jesus at this time. Peter would, in fact, shortly deny that he even knew Jesus.

13:31-32 When Judas was gone, Jesus said, "The time has come for me, the Son of Man, to enter into my glory." As Judas was on his way to betray Jesus into the hands of those who would crucify him, Jesus looked past the cross to his glorification at the resurrection. Jesus had allowed Judas to leave and carry out his murderous plans. By this act, Jesus committed himself to following through on what he had come to do. Thus he could say, "God will bring me into my glory very soon." Jesus framed his words based on his knowledge that his glorification through death and resurrection already had been accomplished. He anticipated how his resurrection would bring about his spiritual union with the disciples. This is the key to interpreting the following discourse (13:31–17:26). Now that Judas had left to complete his treachery, nothing would stop the events leading to the final hour. God's magnificent moral splendor is displayed by Jesus' act of obedience, so God will receive glory in Jesus. At the same moment, Jesus is glorified as he resumes the glory he had with the Father before the foundation of the world.

13:33-35 Jesus told his dear children that the time of his departure was nearing. Jesus would be going to the Father (14:6, 28) to rejoin him in the glorious fellowship that the Father and Son enjoyed from all eternity (see 17:5, 24). The disciples would not be able to participate in that fellowship just yet.

Jesus would be gone, and they would not be able to come to him for a while. In the meantime, they were to follow this commandment: Love each other. A command to love one another is not a new commandment; it had been mandated in the Old Testament (Exodus 20:12-17; Leviticus 19:18, 33-34; Deuteronomy 5:16-21; 22:1-4; see also Matthew 5:38-48; 7:12; 23:36-40; Luke 10:25-37). The newness of Jesus' command pertains to the new kind of love that Christians have for one another because they have each experienced the love of Christ.

Jesus commanded his followers to love one another “just as I have loved you.” This was revolutionary, for believers are called to love others based on Jesus' sacrificial love for them. Jesus was a living example of God's love, as we are to be living examples of Jesus' love. This love would be the mark of distinction: “Your love for one another will prove to the world that you are my disciples.” One of the major themes in John's first letter is brotherly love (see 1 John 3-4).

13:36 Simon Peter, ever the one to voice his thoughts and questions, asked, “Lord, where are you going?” Again, Jesus answered that where he was going they could not go until later. Peter would later follow Jesus in the way of death (see 21:15-19) and would also follow Jesus into glory.

13:37 Peter loved Jesus intensely, and he wanted to be with Jesus always. He did not understand any need for Jesus to die; in fact, he planned to protect Jesus with his life if necessary. As with the foot-washing incident, Peter would much rather die for Jesus than think that Jesus would die for him. Peter's brave and proud response resounds across the centuries like many who proudly refuse to accept Jesus' act on their behalf, preferring instead to do something in order to obtain salvation. However, obeying Jesus means more than the intention or the promise to obey. No one can do anything to obtain salvation.

13:38 When the time of trial came, three times Peter would say that he didn't even know Jesus (see also Matthew 26:69-75; Mark 14:66-72; Luke 22:54-62). The disciples may have started to wonder if Peter (instead of Judas) was the betrayed.

JESUS IS THE WAY TO THE FATHER / 14:1-14 / 213

After predicting Peter's denial (13:38), Jesus spoke to the deep concerns of the disciples. They were confused; he encouraged them to trust. They needed to anchor that trust in Jesus. He indicated that he and the Father would prepare a place for them while he was gone, but that he would return to gather them.

After this intimate opening dialogue, the Last Supper discourse began. The next several chapters have been among the most treasured of those who follow Jesus. They not only draw us close to him; they also give us compelling reasons to invite others into that fellowship with our Savior.

14:1 Jesus spoke to Peter (whose denial of Jesus had just been predicted—see 13:38) and to all the other disciples, telling them, “Don’t be troubled. You trust God, now trust in me.” All of the disciples must have been troubled about Jesus’ predictions of betrayal, denial, and departure. After all, if Peter’s commitment was shaky, then every disciple should be aware of his own weaknesses. Jesus urged his disciples to maintain their trust in the Father and in the Son, to continue trusting through the next few very difficult days

14:2 The traditional interpretation of this phrase teaches that Jesus is going to heaven to prepare rooms or “mansions” for his followers. Based on that imagery, entire heavenly subdivisions and elaborate “mansion blueprints” have been described. Many commentators think that Jesus was speaking about his Father’s house in heaven, where he would go after his resurrection in order to prepare rooms for his followers. Then he would return one day to take his believers to be with him in heaven. The day of that return usually has been regarded as the Second Coming.

The other view is that the passage primarily speaks of the believers’ immediate access to God the Father through the Son. The place Jesus was preparing has less to do with a location (heaven) than it does with an intimate relationship with a person (God the Father). This interpretation does not deny the comfort of heaven’s hope in this passage, but it does remove the temptation to view heaven purely in terms of glorious mansions. Heaven is not about splendid accommodations; it is about being with God. The point of the passage is that Jesus is providing the way for the believers to live in God the Father. As such, the way he prepared the place was through his own death and resurrection and thereby opened the way for the believers to live in Christ and approach God.

According to this view, the Father's house is not a heavenly mansion, but Christ himself in whom all the believers reside. By expansion, the Father's house is Christ and the church (see 1 Corinthians 3:16-17; Ephesians 2:20-22; Hebrews 3:2). The believers don't have to wait until the Second Coming to live in this house; once Christ rose from the dead he brought them into a new, living relationship with God (see 20:19-23). He would be the means whereby the believers could come to dwell in the Father and the Father in them. As such, the promise in 14:2-3 relates to the corporate fellowship that would be possible through Christ's departure and return in the Spirit. In this view, the many rooms would be the many members of God's household. Christ went to prepare a place for each member in God's household (1 Chronicles 17:9)—the preparation was accomplished by his death and resurrection.

14:3 There are three ways to understand the words, "I will come and get you": (1) Jesus' coming again to the disciples would be realized in a short while. When Jesus said, "I will come," that coming again occurred on the day of his resurrection. (2) Jesus' coming is the Second Coming. (3) This "coming" refers to both the Resurrection and the Second Coming—the former foreshadowing the latter. Those who hold this view, therefore, extract a double meaning from Jesus' words in verses 2 and 3; they say the passage speaks both of the believers being brought into the risen Christ as the many "rooms" in the Father's house and of the believers being brought by the returned Christ into the Father's house in heaven. It does seem that both meanings merge. Christ has us completely in his care.

14:4 Jesus said, "You know where I am going and how to get there." This statement anticipated Thomas's question (in the next verse) and prepared the groundwork for what Jesus was about to teach regarding himself. Jesus was not naively hoping his disciples understood; he was inviting them to declare their ignorance so they might receive the truth.

14:5-6 Clearly, the disciples didn't know what Jesus meant. Thomas expressed the obvious by asking, "We haven't any idea where you are going, so how can we know the way?" Like us, the disciples thought in terms of this world—time and space. So going must mean physically moving from one place to another. Jesus replied: "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No one can come to the Father except through me." Jesus' response shows that the destination is not a physical place but a person (the Father), and that the way to that destination is another person (the Son). Jesus is the Way to the Father; Jesus is the Truth

(or reality) of all God's promises; and Jesus is the Life as he joins his divine life to ours, both now and eternally. Jesus is the way that leads to the truth and life.

Jesus' exclusive claim is unmistakable. It forces an unconditional response. Jesus invites people to accept or reject him, making it clear that partial acceptance is rejection. His self-description invalidates alternative plans of salvation. Some would say that a single way is entirely too restrictive. But that attitude fails to see the desperate state of the human condition. That there is a way at all is evidence of God's grace and love. The state of human rebellion can be seen in this: We are like people drowning at sea who are graciously thrown a life-saving rope but who respond by insisting that we deserve a choice of several ropes along with the option of swimming to safety if we so choose.

14:7 In verses 2-6, Jesus told the disciples that he provides the one and only way to the Father. In verses 7 and following, he tries to explain that he is the visible manifestation of the Father. To know Jesus is to know the Father (see 1:18; Colossians 1:15; Hebrews 1:3). Jesus shifted the questioning from the future to the present. Instead of being preoccupied with Jesus' going and how they could get there, they were to realize that Jesus opened the way to the Father right now. The disciples needed to discern the meaning of Jesus' time on earth and then respond to him as their Savior. Jesus holds the way open for us today—from now on, we can begin a relationship with the Father by accepting Jesus Christ as our Savior and Lord. The disciples had not yet thoroughly understood this incredible truth, for the death and resurrection of Jesus had not yet occurred (although Jesus had spoken about them), and the Holy Spirit had not yet arrived to help them understand.

14:8-9 Philip was not satisfied—he wanted to see the Father. But Jesus explained that to see him is to see the Father, for Jesus is God in human form (see 1:14, 18). Philip and the disciples, after their years with Jesus, should have come to know and recognize that the one among them was God in human, physical form. He is the visible, tangible image of the invisible God. He is the complete revelation of what God is like. Jesus' answer contains no rebuke; he explained to Philip, who wanted to see the Father, that to know Jesus is to know God. The search for God, for truth and reality, ends in Christ. (See also Colossians 1:15; Hebrews 1:1-4.)

14:10-11 This statement conveys the complete unity between Jesus and the Father (see 10:30, 38; 17:21-24). This unity ensures that Jesus truly and completely revealed God to us. This unity goes far deeper than Jesus being of one mind with the Father—merely reflecting the intentions of the Father. Jesus and God were one in essence and purpose. Because of this oneness, Jesus said, “The words I say are not my own, but my Father who lives in me does his work through me.” If believing in this oneness is too difficult for you just now, Jesus told the disciples, “at least believe because of what you have seen me do.” God’s power was revealed through Jesus’ works.

14:12 Very likely Jesus gave this promise specifically to his disciples concerning evangelism—“bearing much fruit” (see 15:7-8). There are two parts to the greater works: There would be a greater number of converts, and there would be a greater scope to the converts. Jesus performed some truly impressive miracles during his earthly ministry; his disciples would perform even greater ones after his resurrection. Furthermore, the disciples, working in the power of the Holy Spirit that would be sent to them after Jesus went to the Father, would carry the gospel of God’s Kingdom out of Palestine and into the whole world and thus to the Gentiles.

14:13-14 To pray “in Jesus’ name” is to pray in union with Jesus’ person and purpose because the “name” of a person symbolized his essence and destiny. We have the promise of answered prayer described in these verses if we properly understand the context of Jesus’ last discourse. Jesus promised the disciples that their requests concerning fruit bearing would be answered because it would bring glory to God (see 4:41; 7:18; 8:50, 54). The next chapters clarify this (15:7-8, 16; 16:23-24).

When Jesus says we can ask for anything, we must remember that our asking must be in his name—that is, according to God’s character and will. God will not grant requests contrary to his nature or his will, and we cannot use his name as a magic formula to fulfill our selfish desires. If we are sincerely following God and seeking to do his will, then our requests will be in line with what he wants, and he will grant them. (See also 15:16; 16:23.)

JESUS PROMISES THE HOLY SPIRIT / 14:15-31 / 214

The second half of chapter 14 includes Jesus’ teaching on the resources of discipleship. Jesus prepared his followers for his physical absence by telling them that they would experience his presence more fully and intimately because the Counselor, the Holy Spirit, would take up residence in them.

14:15-17 Prior to this, Jesus had urged the disciples to love one another. Then he spoke of their love for him. Truly loving Jesus requires that we do what he commands. Eternal life is a gift that we cannot work for or earn. Once we begin that life in Christ, loving and obeying Christ's commands become the evidence that he is in us. This is John's emphasis in his first epistle (see 1 John 5:2-3).

Various translations use different words for the Holy Spirit here: Advocate, Helper, Comforter. The Greek word parakletos denotes the Helper or Counselor who is always there to give special care in times of need. But the Holy Spirit is more than a Comforter, Helper, and Counselor; he is also an Advocate and an Encourager. In this context, it is also clear that the Holy Spirit is the Son's "Representative," even as the Son was the Father's "Representative."

The expression another Counselor means "another counselor of the same kind as the first." This implies that Jesus was the first Counselor (see 1 John 2:1), and that the Spirit would be the same kind of Counselor. When Jesus would no longer be with the disciples physically, the Holy Spirit would be their constant companion to guide, help, and empower them for the tasks ahead. Jesus identified the Counselor as the one who leads into all truth because he is the Spirit who reveals the truth about God.

It may seem, at first, that the world at large cannot receive the Spirit because of its sin and disobedience. But if that were the case, no one could accept the Spirit, for all of us sin and are disobedient. Instead, the world cannot receive this Spirit of truth because the world isn't looking for him and doesn't recognize him. In the same way that Jesus was not accepted by the world (see 1:11-12), the Spirit would also not be received. But the disciples (and all believers) can receive the Spirit, for Jesus said, "But you do, because he lives with you now and later will be in you." The disciples, sinful men, not clear in their understanding at this point, even somewhat greedy in their quest for positions in God's Kingdom, would be able to know the Spirit, for the Spirit would come to live in them, helping them understand and empowering them to do great works for God. The world has refused to know Jesus; but any sincere seeker, no matter how sinful or how ignorant, who humbly comes to Jesus, can receive this gift of the Spirit.

14:18-19 This statement showed Jesus' fatherly care for his own, those whom he loved (see 13:1); it also affirmed Jesus' presence with the disciples through the Spirit of truth, for he said, "I will come to you." After Jesus' resurrection, he appeared to the disciples in his glorious resurrection body and spoke to them prior to returning to the Father (20:19–21:25). At that time, he breathed into his disciples the Holy Spirit (20:22). This assured the disciples that Jesus would come to them when the Spirit was given to them. This coming would be in just a little while, during which time Jesus would experience crucifixion, burial, and resurrection (see 16:16-23). The disciples and many of Jesus' followers saw him in his resurrection appearances (see 20:20, 26; 21:1, 14). Through the Resurrection, the living Jesus became the disciples' life because they became united to him like branches in a vine. This is the intent behind the words: "For I will live again, and you will, too." As the Son's life is dependent upon the Father's life (5:26; 6:57), so the believer's life is dependent on the Son's life. The reality of the Resurrection becomes the basis for our hope of eternal life.

14:20 After Jesus was raised to life again, the disciples would realize by their own experience that Jesus lived in his Father, they lived in Jesus, and Jesus lived in them. In other words, they would begin to know what it meant to live in God and have God live in them.

14:21 We who love Jesus demonstrate our love by keeping Jesus' commands. Love means more than words; it requires commitment and action. If we love Christ, then we must prove it by obeying what he says in his word. In return, the Father and Jesus himself love us. Furthermore, Jesus reveals himself to those who love him. Since the Greek word translated reveal means "to appear," it is likely that Jesus was speaking of his appearances to the disciples after his resurrection. But the statement extends beyond that special time to include believers of all time. To all those who love and obey him, he reveals himself as an invisible, spiritual presence (see 20:29; 2 Corinthians 4:6).

14:22 John clarified for us that this is not Judas Iscariot, but Judas the son of James (see Luke 6:16). This disciple asked Jesus how he would reveal himself only to the disciples and not to the world. The disciples may still have been expecting Jesus to establish an earthly kingdom and overthrow Rome; they found it hard to understand why he did not tell the world at large that he was the Messiah. Or at least they felt that if he was going to rise from the dead, everyone should see it and know about it, for surely then they would believe. But Jesus explained that such a revelation to the world was not in the plans—at least not then. Not everyone would understand Jesus' message, and a hardened and unbelieving world would not believe even someone who had come back from the dead (Luke 16:31). Ever since Pentecost, the gospel of the Kingdom has been proclaimed in the whole world, and yet not everyone is receptive to it. Jesus reveals himself most deeply to those who love and obey him.

14:23 In effect, Jesus' response reassured Judas and the disciples that neither he nor the Father would be abandoning them. At first, it must have seemed to the disciples that they had no advantage over everyone else—Jesus would die and leave them. In answering Peter’s question in the previous chapter, Jesus had explained that, as opposed to the Jewish leaders who had been told they could not go where Jesus was going, the disciples eventually would be able to be with Jesus, but it would be later (see 7:32-34; 13:36). Here Jesus offered the best comfort of all—there wouldn’t really be any separation from him for these disciples. Because Jesus would return to the Father, the Holy Spirit would be made available, allowing every believer constant access to the Father and the Son. To those who love Jesus, the Son and the Father would come to them and live with them.

14:24 Obedience comes from love and trust. Thus a person who doesn’t love Jesus will not obey him. A sobering way of stating Jesus’ point is to say, “The quality of our obedience is a direct reflection of our love for Jesus.” Jesus repeated that all he said was from God himself (see also 12:49; 14:10).

14:25 Jesus gave his last words to his disciples. The coming days would bring horrifying, then glorious, events, but Jesus would not be able to talk to his disciples during those events. Before the disciples could understand any more, Jesus’ death and resurrection would have to take place. Then, the disciples’ understanding would be heightened by the coming of the Holy Spirit.

14:26 The Counselor, the Holy Spirit, would be sent as Jesus’ representative. The Spirit would continue Jesus’ ministry of teaching. The Spirit would also remind the disciples of what Jesus had told them. The apostles remembered and wrote with the help of the Spirit. John’s Gospel, even the entire New Testament, would not exist if not for this reminding work of the Holy Spirit.

In the case of the disciples, the reminding role of the Holy Spirit uniquely guided the recording of the New Testament. However, the process is still in place. The disciples first heard Jesus speak; we discover Jesus’ words in Scripture. Reading, studying, memorizing, meditating, and obeying place Christ’s words firmly inside us, and the Holy Spirit reminds us of their further application as we move through life.

14:27 This verse echoes the first verse of the chapter. Jesus’ peace would not guarantee the absence of trouble—for Jesus himself faced excruciating spiritual, physical, and emotional struggles in the coming hours. Instead, Jesus’ peace supplies strength and comfort for the burdens we are called to carry. Jesus gave the disciples peace that would help them through their own time of trial ahead.

After three days, the risen Jesus would come to them and again bestow his peace upon them (20:19).

The peace Jesus offers his disciples isn't like the peace the world gives. It is his peace, the peace he modeled every day of his life. Jesus' peace did not flee conflict, pain, or death. In fact, the more intense the difficulties, the more apparent Jesus' peace became. Jesus derived his peace from his relationship with the Father.

Sin, fear, uncertainty, and doubt work to make us troubled and afraid. The peace of God moves into our hearts and lives to restrain these hostile forces and offers comfort in place of conflict. Jesus says he will give us that peace if we are willing to accept it from him. The Holy Spirit's work in our lives brings deep and lasting peace. We have confident assurance in any circumstance; with Christ's peace, we have no need to fear the present or the future.

14:28 Jesus repeated what he had said in 14:3. Although Jesus was sad to leave his disciples, he was glad to return to his Father. If the disciples truly loved Jesus, they would understand this and be very happy for him—instead of feeling sorry for themselves. In saying that the Father is greater than he, Jesus was asserting his role as the Father's servant, for the Son was the one sent to do the Father's will. This does not deny his equality with God (see 10:30); rather, it affirms Jesus' humble attitude about his relationship with the Father.

14:29 Jesus told the disciples about his imminent departure and return so that they would recognize these events, realize that he knew about them, and believe that Jesus upholds his claims. Jesus gave them the tools and resources to understand later events even though at the time he gave them, they did not appreciate their value.

14:30-31 The hour was at hand; Jesus was about to leave his disciples and go to the cross. In so doing he would face the prince of this world (12:31) who has the power of death (Hebrews 2:14). Although Satan was unable to overpower Jesus (Matthew 4), he still had the arrogance to try. Satan's power exists only because God allows him to act. But because Jesus is sinless, Satan has no power over him. Satan would not be able to exert this power over Jesus because Jesus would conquer death. Jesus faced death as one who did so out of love for his Father, for his Father had sent him to die for the sins of the world. Ironically, when Jesus died, Satan thought he had won the battle. He did not realize that Jesus' death had been part of the plan all along. In dying, Jesus defeated Satan's power over death, for Jesus would rise again (16:11; Colossians 2:15).

The words, “Come, let’s be going,” suggest that chapters 15–17 may have been spoken en route to the Garden of Gethsemane. Another view holds that Jesus was asking the disciples to get ready to leave the upper room, but they did not actually do so until 18:1. However, it is also likely that these words are spoken, not as a separate sentence, but as an ending to the discourse above. He has just said that the prince of this world is coming, and perhaps by this sentence he is saying, “Let us rise and be ready to meet him.” This conveys more of a spiritual movement and preparation than a physical one.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE VINE AND THE BRANCHES / 15:1-17 / 215

Jesus knew that his physical presence with his precious disciples would soon end. He also knew that these men would need a clear understanding of their position with God, as well as what was expected of them. So he consciously filled their minds with pictures and ideas to help them survive the days to come. But these same lessons also provide vital resources for preparing future generations of disciples to grow in their faith.

15:1-2 The grapevine is a prolific plant; a single vine bears many grapes. In the Old Testament, grapes symbolized Israel's fruitfulness in doing God's work on earth. The prophets had written of Israel as God's vine, carefully planted and cared for. But the vine was a disappointment because it yielded only rotten fruit; that is, they refused to give him love and obedience. This is very graphic and poignant in Isaiah 5:1-7, a passage Jesus seems to have drawn upon here (see also Jeremiah 2:2, 21; 6:9; Ezekiel 15; 17:5-10; 19:10-14; Hosea 10:1; 14:7). Jesus, with all believers "abiding" in him, is the true vine—the true fulfillment of God's plan for his people (see Psalm 80:8-17). The new society of God's people—Christians—originates from Christ and is united to him as branches to a vine. God is the gardener, the cultivator of the vine and the branches. Believers, both sincere and false, are pictured here as the branches.

The fruitful branches are true believers who, by their living union with Christ, produce much fruit. But this union can be broken. The Father cuts off every branch that doesn't produce fruit. Those who become unproductive—those who turn back from following Christ after making a superficial commitment—will be separated from the vine (see 15:6 for more discussion on the specific identity of the unproductive branches). Unproductive followers are as good as dead and will be cut off and tossed aside. Fruit is not limited to soul winning. In this chapter, answered prayer, joy, and love are mentioned as fruit (15:7, 11-12). Galatians 5:22-24 and 2 Peter 1:5-8 describe additional fruit, explained as qualities of Christian character.

In contrast, he prunes the branches that do bear fruit so they will produce even more. Successful gardeners know that pruning, cutting back the branches, increases fruit bearing. Each spring vinedressers cut back each vine to its root stock to enhance its fruitfulness. Sincere believers, the fruitful branches, will be "pruned," meaning that God must sometimes discipline us to strengthen our character and faith. But branches that don't bear fruit are "cut off" at the trunk and are completely discarded because they are worthless and often infect the rest of the plant. People who won't bear fruit for God or who try to block the efforts of God's followers will be cut off from his life-giving power.

15:3-4 Jesus' illustration here shifts to a different level. This pruning is spiritual, taking away the contamination of sin. This verse indicates that the disciples have already been pruned because they had accepted the Lord's message; they were ready for greater fruitfulness. But not so with Judas, the betrayer; he was not clean—therefore, he was one of those branches that had been cut off.

Believers are to remain in Jesus, the vine, and he will remain in us. A vine branch can survive and produce foliage for a while after it has been severed, but it cannot produce fruit unless it is connected to a root stock. As Jesus had a living dependence on the Father (see 6:57), so believers in Jesus need to have a living dependence on him. “Remaining,” for the disciples and for all believers today, means to make a constant, moment-by-moment decision to follow Christ. And we must not be passive—believers don't just sit and “remain” until they die. Instead, we must be active—we have a lot to do.

15:5-6 Each branch that continues to remain in the vine will produce much fruit. This “fruit” could be new converts (15:5), or “the fruit of the Spirit” (see Galatians 5:22), or both. The fruit of the Spirit displayed in our lives should attract people to Jesus and thereby make them new members of God's vine. Jesus' emphasis here was not to dwell on our glaring inadequacies, but to remind us of the incomparable adequacy that comes from our relationship with him. Apart from him, we can do nothing.

Each branch that does not continue to remain in the vine is removed from the vine. The branch seems physically attached, but it is not organically part of the plant because it does not participate in the life-giving flow of the vine. Sooner or later, that branch will drop off and have to be thrown away. Three traditional interpretations have tried to identify who these useless branches might represent:

1. For some, these branches are true believers who have lost their salvation because they were cut off from Christ.
2. For others, these burned branches are Christians who will lose rewards but not salvation on the day of judgment (1 Corinthians 3:15). But this is probably not true because Jesus was speaking of dead branches.
3. For still others, these burned branches refer to those professing to be Christians who, like Judas Iscariot, are not genuinely saved and therefore are judged. Judas, a disciple of Jesus, seemed like a branch, but he did not truly believe. Therefore, he was cut off; his fate was like that of a dead branch. Given John's concern to make committed disciples of his readers and Jesus' goal to bring people into a continuing relationship with himself, this view provides a healthy balance. It keeps the decision of destiny as God's responsibility while preserving an emphasis on our responsibility to "remain" in the relationship. In any case, the verse is not so much aimed at creating discomfort and doubt as it is in teaching the importance of daily connectedness with Christ.

15:7-8 True disciples do more than just believe what Jesus says; they let Jesus' words remain in them. Then they can ask any request of him and it will be granted. In this passage and in 14:13-14, "asking God" is connected with fruit bearing and doing greater things for God. When a believer remains in Christ and Christ's words remain in him, that person's prayers will be answered. This does not mean that all requests are granted—for the context suggests that the prayers should pertain to fruit bearing (either helping others believe, or showing more of the fruit of the Spirit in one's life) and glorifying the Father. An essential part of being a disciple requires bearing fruit for the Lord. And in order to pray for results, a person must remain in Christ. For when we remain in him, our thoughts and desires conform to his, and we can pray "in his name" (14:13), knowing that our requests please God. We can be assured then that whatever we ask will be done.

A vine that produces much fruit glorifies God, for daily he sends the sunshine and rain to make the crops grow, and he constantly nurtures each plant and prepares it to blossom. What a moment of glory for the Lord of the harvest when the harvest is brought into the barns, mature and ready for use! He made it all happen! This farming analogy shows how God is glorified when we come into a right relationship with him and begin to "bear much fruit" in our lives.

15:9 Believers must remain in Jesus (15:4), remain in his words (15:7), and remain in his love. For the Son to love us in the same way that his Father loves him means we receive the greatest love possible. We should respond with total dedication, commitment, and obedience.

15:10 We can remain in Jesus' love by obeying his commands—just as he obeyed his Father's commands. If we do so, we will experience the daily joy of obedience to our Lord. Jesus himself modeled two important behaviors for true disciples: (1) since he obeyed his Father's commands, we can obey his; (2) and he loved them, so they should love one another. Jesus not only tells us what to do; he shows it through his life.

15:11 Jesus does not call Christians to a dull existence of being hated by the world, obeying commands, and waiting to get to heaven. Instead, he offers us fullness of joy! Nothing else in all the world can bring the joy that we find in serving, abiding in, and obeying Christ.

15:12-13 Jesus commanded his followers to love each other as he loved them. The highest expression of love people could have for others is to lay down their lives for them—just as Jesus did for those he loved. We must love each other sacrificially, as Jesus loved us. He loved us enough to give his life for us (see Romans 5:7-8). We may not have to die for someone, but we can practice sacrificial love in many other ways: listening, helping, encouraging, giving. We do not need to feel love for everyone. Some people will be difficult to love, but still we are commanded to act lovingly toward our fellow believers.

15:14-15 In those days, the disciples of a rabbi were considered his servants. Jesus changed that relationship; the disciples were not his servants but his friends. Jesus considered them his friends because he had told them everything he had heard from the Father. This showed that Jesus trusted them to receive these communications and then pass them on to others as the gospel. In fact, he had chosen and appointed them for this task.

15:16 Jesus chose these disciples and appointed them to spread the gospel and produce fruit for God's Kingdom. The Lord chooses each believer to be a branch in the vine—a branch that bears fruit that will last. The remaining, or lasting, fruit means either new believers whose faith perseveres, or the enduring quality of the fruit of the Spirit—especially brotherly love.

Then, Jesus speaks of making requests to the Father: “That the Father will give you whatever you ask for, using my name.” As in verses 7-8, Jesus linked the request making with the fruit bearing. The Father would answer their requests in order to help them accomplish the mission he gave them—to produce “fruit that will last.”

15:17 This verse capsulizes the theme that Jesus introduced in verse 12 and yet also serves as a contrast for what follows. The disciples must love each other because they would take Jesus' message to a world that despised them. Christians get plenty of hatred from the world; from each other we need love and support.

Jesus legislated love. He required his disciples to make peace with one another, to place the interests of others above their own, and to solve differences quickly. He knew they were diverse in background, but he ordered them to love each other. Jesus knew that setting this high standard was essential to preserving the unity of the church. If he required it, the believers would accept and live out this standard. Backbiting, disrespect, and bitterness toward fellow believers strips the church of its power.

JESUS WARNS ABOUT THE WORLD'S HATRED / 15:18—16:4 / 216

Jesus called the disciples to abide in him and to love one another. But their relationship with the world would be entirely different. Because they loved Christ and were so like him, the world would transfer its hatred of Christ to the disciples. Yet they must take the Good News to the world. This section explains how the disciples, with the help of the Counselor, would continue Jesus' work of glorifying the Father in a hostile world.

15:18-19 Jesus was hated from the very beginning (when Jesus was a young child, King Herod sought him out to kill him—Matthew 2:13-16). He was hated at the end when the people rejected him as the Savior and called for his crucifixion. The same world would surely hate those who proclaim allegiance to the crucified Lord. Jesus wants believers to be distinctive; he sets us apart from the world. His choosing and setting us apart makes us holy and helps us grow. Our very separation from the world arouses the world's animosity. The world would prefer that we were like them; since we are not, they hate us (see 1 Peter 4:3-4).

15:20-21 Jesus had told the disciples this earlier that evening (13:16; also Matthew 10:24). He had been speaking of their need to imitate his acts of humble service. They also needed to understand that, if their Lord was not respected or honored by the world, they should expect even harsher treatment. To persecute believers is to persecute Christ because believers are an extension of Christ, as branches are an extension of the vine. Yet despite certain persecution, believers are called to share the gospel—this includes not just telling the story, but giving the invitation to accept Jesus as Savior and Lord. While they will face those who hate them because they belong to Christ, it would also be true that those who would have listened to Jesus will listen to the disciples.

15:22-25 Jesus said that the Jews would not have been guilty of rejecting God if they had not rejected Jesus Christ—who was God in the flesh. But since they did reject Jesus, who came to reveal God the Father to all humanity, they had no excuse for their sin. Their rejection of Jesus caused their sin to be fully exposed because, as Jesus said, “Anyone who hates me hates my Father, too.” They actually hated the Son and the Father—even after seeing the marvelous works Jesus performed.

The entire nation should have recognized and responded to the Messiah. Ironically, their own Scriptures predicted this rejection and hatred. Jesus knew the hatred fulfilled what the Scriptures said (see Psalm 69:4). The Jews had no reason to hate Jesus—he came as their Savior, fulfilling their Scriptures, doing miraculous signs, and promising eternal life to those who believed in him. Yet the people thought they were serving God by rejecting Jesus, when in reality, they were serving Satan (8:44).

15:26-27 In 14:26 Jesus had said that the Father would send the Counselor, the Spirit of truth. The word Counselor conveys the helping, encouraging, and strengthening work of the Spirit as he represents Christ. The Spirit of truth points to the teaching, illuminating, and reminding work of the Spirit. The Holy Spirit ministers to both the head and the heart, and both dimensions are important. The Spirit would come to the disciples and tell them all about him. These disciples were the vital link between Jesus Christ and all subsequent believers. They would need the Holy Spirit to remind them so that as they preached, taught, and wrote, they would spread the truth of the gospel. The Holy Spirit would see to it that their witness would not be impaired by persecution. Jesus has already forewarned these men about the persecution to come so that they would not be surprised.

The disciples would tell others that Jesus is the Messiah. The Holy Spirit would testify by preparing people’s hearts and minds, persuading them of the truth of the gospel, and enabling them to receive the message. By application, this verse extends to all Christians. All Christians are called to testify of Jesus, allowing the Holy Spirit to help them through times of persecution and to remind them of the truth of God’s word and work in the hearts and minds of their listeners.

16:1-2 Jesus warned and safeguarded the disciples against the trials that awaited them. He did not want them to be caught off guard, to stumble, or to fall when trials came. Jesus wanted them to remember that he had predicted his own persecution and theirs in order to fortify them for the difficult times to come. He also wanted them to remember the rest of his teaching (these things). His accurate predictions would increase their trust in his instructions.

In 9:22 and 12:42 we are told that the religious leaders had decided that anyone who confessed Jesus as the Messiah would be expelled from the synagogues. Jesus predicted that this would happen to the disciples. By the time John's Gospel was recorded, Christians were already frequently barred from the synagogues. The prophecy that some would be killed would come true very soon. An early deacon in the church, Stephen, would become the first martyr for the faith (Acts 7:54-60). James, one of the disciples present with Jesus during this teaching, would be put to death by King Herod (Acts 12:1-2). Saul of Tarsus—before his conversion—went through the land hunting down and persecuting Christians, convinced that he was serving God by killing those who proclaimed Jesus as their Messiah (Acts 9:1-2; 26:9-11; Galatians 1:13-14; Philippians 3:6).

16:3-4 Those who would persecute believers would do so out of ignorance. They had never known the Father or Jesus. They did not understand that God was at work through Jesus; so, when they rejected Jesus, they also rejected God. When the persecutions would actually occur, they would be prepared because they would remember what Jesus had said. Jesus' predictions hold today. The world is still hostile toward Jesus and his disciples. When a tree in the forest stands taller than the rest it must endure the full force of the wind. When Christians take a stand for Christ in their cultures, they will experience the full force of the opposition. Jesus waited until the very last evening to warn his disciples because he himself had been their protection from the beginning. Jesus had deflected any criticism and opposition away from the disciples. But after Jesus was crucified, the persecution would shift to his followers and would focus on these men, his inner circle.

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT THE HOLY SPIRIT / 16:5-15 / 217

Not all the news for the disciples was grim. There would be persecution, but Jesus comforted his followers with the promise that they would not be alone; he would send them the Counselor, the Spirit of truth. John highlighted five important tasks of the Holy Spirit: (1) to convict the world of its sin and call it to repentance, (2) to reveal the standard of God's righteousness to anyone who believes because Christ would no longer be physically present on earth, (3) to demonstrate Christ's judgment over Satan, (4) to direct believers into all truth, and (5) to reveal even more about Jesus Christ.

16:5-6 The verb tense for has asked is present; otherwise, this statement would contradict 13:36 and 14:5. The disciples had asked (past tense) where Jesus was going. In this verse, Jesus was looking for an immediate reaction to his words about his departure. But instead of asking, "Where are you going?" at that time when Jesus was ready to answer, they were very sad. Although the disciples had previously talked with Jesus about his death (see 7:33-34), they had never truly understood its meaning because they had been mostly concerned about themselves. If Jesus went away, what would become of them? If they had asked where Jesus was going, and then had understood that he was going to the Father, they would not have been filled with such sorrow—they would have realized that Jesus' departure was for their good.

16:7 Without Jesus' death and resurrection we could not be saved. His death made it possible for him to remove our sins. Before Jesus could defeat death by his resurrection, he had to submit to death. And if he would not go back to the Father, the Counselor, the Holy Spirit, would not come in the way God had planned (7:39). After his glorification—through the process of crucifixion, resurrection, and ascension—Jesus could send the Spirit to the believers. Christ's presence on earth was limited to one place at a time. His leaving meant he could live, through the Holy Spirit, in every believer in the whole world. Thus, it was for their good that he had to go away. The Spirit would carry Jesus' work to a more intense level during the history of the church. By the Spirit the gospel would go out to all the world.

16:8-11 To convince means "to expose the facts, to convince someone of the truth, to accuse, refute, or to cross-examine a witness." The world's sin is unbelief in Jesus. The greatest sin is the refusal to believe in Jesus (3:18). Those who reject Jesus are in danger of eternal separation from God.

Righteousness is available to people because Jesus goes to the Father. The Spirit's function will be to show all people that Christ alone provides the standard of God's righteousness. The Holy Spirit must make unbelievers recognize God's perfect standard before they will admit their own deficiency. This can also mean that the Spirit will show the world the futility of religious self-righteousness. The Holy Spirit will show the inadequacy of ceremony and ritual in making one right with God (see Matthew 5:20; Romans 10:3; Philippians 3:6-9).

The Spirit will show that, through Jesus' death and resurrection, the prince of this world has already been judged and condemned. Though Satan still actively attempts to harden, intimidate, and delude those in this world (1 Peter 5:8), we are to treat him like a condemned criminal, for God has determined the time of his execution (see Revelation 20:2, 7-10).

Convincing us of our sin, convincing us of God's righteousness, and convincing us of Satan's (and our) impending judgment describes three approaches that the Holy Spirit uses. We do not all require all three in order to be convinced that we need God's grace. The Holy Spirit does not crush those who only require prodding. Some are simply more stubborn and resistant than others. God demonstrates his grace by approaching each of us with that level of conviction necessary for our response.

16:12 Having indicated what the Spirit would be doing in the world (16:7-11), Jesus then related to the disciples what the Spirit would be doing in believers. But most of what Jesus told the disciples would be unclear to them until after the events of the Crucifixion and Resurrection. Thus Jesus wanted to tell them more, but they couldn't bear it then.

16:13 The prominent role of the Spirit of truth is to guide the believers into all truth. By truth Jesus meant the truth about his identity, the truth of his words and actions, and the truth about all that was to happen to him. In time they would fully understand that he was the Son, come from the Father, sent to save people from their sin. But only after these events occurred, and only through the Holy Spirit's guidance, would the disciples be able to understand. The Holy Spirit is the true guide for all believers; his primary task is to instruct us about the truth (1 John 2:20).

The disciples were not given power to predict the future, but the Spirit would give them insight into the future—that is, the events of the Crucifixion, Resurrection, Ascension, and perhaps the Second Coming. The disciples would not fully understand until the Holy Spirit had come after Jesus' death and resurrection. Then the Holy Spirit would reveal truths to the disciples that they would write down in the books that now form the New Testament.

16:14 The Spirit does not glorify himself; rather, he brings glory to the Son. The Spirit takes what the Son is and reveals it to believers. In so doing, he individualizes the teaching of Christ and calls people to obey. The Holy Spirit makes us want to apply, teaches us to apply, and then helps us apply Christ's words!

16:15 Jesus explained that the Holy Spirit works in complete submission to, and in harmony with, the Son and the Father. The Spirit reveals the Son to the believers. Yet as he reveals the Son, the Spirit is also revealing the Father because all the attributes of the Son are the attributes of the Father: "All that the Father has is mine." Thus the Spirit reveals to believers whatever he receives from the Son, who, in turn, expresses the Father. This verbal picture of what cannot be fully seen by finite humans helps us understand the profound unity of God.

What we call the doctrine of the Trinity is a summary of what Jesus taught about his relationship to the Father and the Spirit. Without in any way diminishing the awesome revelation of God as one, Jesus demonstrated that God's oneness is at the same time a threeness: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. God exists in perfect, unbroken harmony while at the same time functioning in the person of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. They are one; yet they relate to one another. They are beyond our complete grasp; yet they have graciously revealed themselves to us so that we may trust and be saved!

JESUS TEACHES ABOUT USING HIS NAME IN PRAYER / 16:16-33 / 218

Jesus explained to the disciples that his departure would only last "a little while" (actually only three days), for he would see them again on the day of his resurrection. Then a new relationship between the disciples and Jesus' Father would begin. They would then be able to approach God the Father as his children and bring to him their requests through prayer. Jesus concluded this section with yet another prediction and teaching to prepare them. He informed the disciples that, while they thought they believed, within hours they all would abandon him. Jesus did not berate them for their weakness but prepared them to endure in spite of it.

16:16-19 Jesus was referring to his death (“I will be gone”), only a few hours away, and his resurrection (“You will see me again”) three days later. But the disciples didn’t understand this, so they were grieved and perplexed. They kept asking each other what he could possibly mean. Jesus had already told the disciples that he would go to the Father and return to them after his resurrection (chapter 14), but they didn’t understand.

16:20-22 Following his explanation of the time between his departure and return, Jesus used a figure of speech to depict how quickly the disciples’ grief will suddenly turn to wonderful joy: “It will be like a woman experiencing the pains of labor. When her child is born, her anguish gives place to joy.” The disciples would grieve for their crucified Master, and the world (the mass of people opposed to Jesus) will rejoice that this “madman” had finally been silenced. But the disciples’ grief would turn to joy when they would see their resurrected Lord. In addition, the Holy Spirit would help them understand the true purpose of Jesus’ crucifixion and resurrection—that it meant salvation from sin and eternal life for everyone who believes! Indeed, they would rejoice, and no one would be able to rob them of that joy.

16:23-24 At that time refers to the time subsequent to Jesus’ resurrection. From that day forward, when they had a request, the disciples could go directly to the Father and ask him (see 14:13-14; 15:7). This was another reminder that Jesus would not remain on earth indefinitely after he rose from the dead. Requests asked in Jesus’ name are requests that the believer knows Jesus would be pleased to answer, requests that are in accordance with the Father’s will. Any such request will be given. Answered prayer brings abundant joy—just ask any believer! Jesus encouraged the disciples to ask, so that they might receive and have full and complete joy (see also 1 John 5:13-15).

16:25-27 Specific predictions about future events would have been too much for the disciples at this point (16:12-13), so Jesus spoke to them in parables. After Jesus arose, however, the disciples were given a new, living relationship with the Father (see 20:19). Through the Holy Spirit, Jesus would tell them plainly all about the Father (16:13-15). The disciples would have direct, personal access to the Father. Jesus would not have to make their requests for them; instead, they would go straight to God, asking in Jesus’ name. Jesus was not withdrawing from representing us before the Father. He still makes intercession for us (Romans 8:34; Hebrews 7:25). Jesus was preparing the disciples for the reality that his death would allow them direct access to the Father in prayer and that they ought to make use of it (Hebrews 10:19-25)! The Father would respond to the disciples because, as Jesus said, “The Father himself loves you dearly because you love me and believe that I came from God.” All who love Jesus and believe in him as God’s Son are loved by the Father. Why? Because they have loved him whom the Father dearly loves. God remembers our faithfulness to his Son, Jesus Christ. Jesus not only encouraged the disciples to love him and remain faithful, but he also reminds us how essential our faithfulness really is.

16:28-30 In this sentence, Jesus plainly described his entire mission—he was incarnated (came from the Father), he was made a human being in order to secure the salvation of human beings (into the world), and he would be resurrected from death and ascend back to the glory from which he came (return to the Father).

The disciples finally realized that Jesus had been speaking of his departure to the Father. Then they said, “We believe that you came from God.” Jesus’ repeated predictions of his imminent death, resurrection, and ascension (7:33; 10:11-18; 12:23-24, 30-36; 13:18-38; 14:1-5, 15-31; 16:5-7) finally left their mark on the disciples. Now they were convinced that Jesus’ knowledge about future events marked him unquestionably as the Son of God come from God. The disciples believed Jesus’ words because they were convinced that he knew everything. He even knew the questions on their minds before they asked them (16:19). They were making a claim, not about their own knowledge, but about his. Jesus’ omniscience was another proof of his divinity. But their belief was only a first step toward the enduring faith they would receive when the Holy Spirit came to live in them.

16:31-32 The implied exasperation in the statement is conveyed better by “You believe at last!” The disciples had taken a small but real step forward in understanding. Jesus continued to tell them what was going to happen so that their faith would be strengthened in the end: “But the time is coming—in fact, it is already here—when you will be scattered, each one going his own way, leaving me alone.” Scattered alludes to the prophecy in Zechariah 13:7. As predicted, the disciples abandoned Jesus when he was arrested (Matthew 26:56; Mark 14:50). Even though Jesus was abandoned by his disciples, he was not completely alone. As Jesus said previously (8:29), here he says, “Yet I am not alone because the Father is with me.”

16:33 In a final note of encouragement, Jesus promised the disciples peace through their union with him—for he would overcome the world by rising from the grave. The world, Satan's system that is opposed to God, will give the believers many trials and sorrows. But Jesus has beaten Satan's system, won the victory, and overcome the world. Before his own trial, Jesus could already speak of an accomplished task. This adds impact to his victory over Satan since he not only accomplished it, he predicted it! The disciples could constantly rejoice in the victory because they were on the winning team.

Jesus summed up all he had told them this night, tying together themes from 14:27-29, 16:1-4, and 16:9-11. With these words he told his disciples to take courage. Despite the inevitable struggles they would face, they would not be alone. Just as Jesus' Father did not leave him alone, Jesus does not abandon us to our struggles either. If we remember that the ultimate victory has already been won, we can claim the peace of Christ in the most troublesome times. Jesus wants us to have peace.

JESUS PRAYS FOR HIMSELF / 17:1-5 / 219

John 17 contains Jesus' great intercessory prayer. It is not the prayer of agony in the Garden of Gethsemane but an open conversation with the Father about his followers. This prayer brings to a close Jesus' discourse in 13:31–16:33. It expresses the deepest desires of Jesus' heart for his return to the Father and for the destiny of his chosen ones. Jesus asked the Father to grant the believers the same kind of unity that he and the Father enjoyed from eternity—a unity of love.

17:1 Jesus began his petition by praying for himself: “Father, the time has come. Glorify your Son so he can give glory back to you.” Jesus knew that his “hour” of suffering had come—several times previously in the Gospel, John had pointed out that Jesus' time had not come (2:4; 7:6, 8, 30; 8:20). But the time for Jesus' glorification had arrived. If the Father would glorify the Son in the Crucifixion and Resurrection, the Son could, in turn, give eternal life to the believers and so glorify the Father. Jesus asked the Father to restore to him the full rights and power as Son of God (as described in Philippians 2:5-11).

17:2 Jesus made his requests to the Father, knowing that from eternity past the Father had given him authority over everyone in all the earth so that he could give eternal life to each one the Father had given him.

17:3 Jesus defines eternal life as to know experientially the only true God, and Jesus Christ, the one he sent to earth. We find eternal life only by knowing the one true God. This knowledge is ongoing and personal (see also Matthew 11:27).

17:4 In this statement, Jesus affirmed that he had brought glory to the Father on earth by doing everything God wanted him to do. The last phase of Jesus' revealing work was about to be accomplished through his death on the cross. Jesus spoke of his work as though it had already happened—his obedience to death on the cross was a certainty. Jesus requested again to be returned to glory based on the certainty of his completing the work of the cross.

17:5 Looking beyond the Cross to his resurrection and ascension, Jesus asked the Father to restore the glory he had shared with the Father before the world began. In saying this, Jesus gives us a glimpse of his relationship with the Father before the beginning of time. Jesus wanted to return to the glory he had with the Father before the world was created (see 1:1, 18). Jesus would enter into that glory as the crucified and risen Lord Jesus Christ. Thus, Jesus' return to God was not simply a return to his preincarnate state, since Jesus would have his resurrected body. Jesus' resurrection and ascension—and Stephen's dying exclamation (Acts 7:56)—attest that Jesus' prayer was answered. He returned to his exalted position at the right hand of God.

JESUS PRAYS FOR HIS DISCIPLES / 17:6-19 / 220

This prayer is one of several mentioned in the Bible that focused on the disciples. Before choosing the Twelve, Jesus spent the night in prayer (Luke 6:12). During their ministry together (John 6:15; Luke 10:18-22), we assume Jesus' prayers included his disciples. We know that before the final days, Jesus had been praying specifically for Peter (Luke 22:32). The Scriptures also tell us that part of Jesus' present activity is to pray for us (Romans 8:34; Hebrews 7:25). Jesus made it clear that although we have direct access to the Father (16:26-27), we are still the objects of his loving concern.

17:6 After praying for his own glorification, Jesus turned the direction of his petition to his disciples. These were the men God had selected to give to his Son as his disciples (see 15:19). To these men, given to him by the Father out of the world, Jesus had expressed the reality of the Father's person to them (see 1:18). And they had kept his word. Their faith wasn't perfect, and they would fail their Savior in the coming hours; but their commitment was in the right place, and they would return to this faith and to obedience to God.

17:7-8 The disciples had received Jesus' words as coming from God; as a result, they had come to believe that Jesus had been sent from the Father (see 16:28-30). Before Jesus instituted God's plan of salvation by dying on the cross, he introduced it to his disciples. They had to believe the words of Christ to benefit from the work of Christ. Jesus effectively demonstrated that what he said came from God. The disciples were not in a position to accept the saving purpose of Jesus' death until they had accepted the fact that God had sent him. Once they knew God had sent Jesus, they were ready to learn that God had sent him to die! Jesus was declaring that the disciples were ready for the next lesson, as difficult as it might be.

17:9 We know that God loves the world (3:16), but at this time Jesus was focusing on the disciples, not the world. These disciples were the object of Jesus' affection and Jesus' prayer. He was not praying for the world, because the world was hostile and unbelieving. Instead, he was praying for those the Father had given him.

17:10 Jesus' words reveal his oneness, closeness, and equality with God the Father. These disciples belonged to both him and the Father, and they were the ones in whom Jesus would be glorified on earth after he had returned to the Father. The disciples' lives would reveal Jesus' essential character to those who had not yet believed, so Jesus was present in the world through them.

17:11 Jesus would be departing the world to rejoin the Father; the disciples would stay behind to carry out God's plan by spreading the good news of salvation. Such a mission would arouse great hostility from the evil one, so the disciples needed special protection. Jesus asked that the Holy Father would keep them and care for them. The prayer itself indicates confidence in God's ability to "keep" his children, while at the same time allowing the disciples to hear Jesus' desire for how they are to be kept. Jesus prayed that they would be united just as he and the Father are united. They should have a unified desire and purpose to serve and glorify God. Then they would have the strongest of all possible unions.

17:12 Jesus' physical presence had provided the obvious point of unity for the disciples. The more they were "in Christ," the more they were united and protected. Jesus had kept them safe as a precious gift given to him from the Father; here he gave an account of the job he had done. All of the disciples had been guarded—not one was lost, except the one headed for destruction, as the Scriptures foretold. The one was Judas Iscariot who, by his own volition, betrayed Jesus. Thus, Jesus sadly identified Judas as one who had rejected the protection offered.

The place of Judas among the disciples and his choice to betray Jesus highlight the balance that we find throughout the Bible between the awesome sovereignty of God and the freedom he allows people to exercise. We would tip the balance toward error if we would say that Jesus intentionally withheld his protection of Judas to expose him to the temptation of Satan so that the betrayal could happen. We would also be in error if we would say that the temptation of Satan was stronger than Jesus' ability to protect Judas. Judas was not a puppet on a string. Judas shared the protection offered by the presence of Jesus all during their time together. Judas made his decision to betray Jesus, and by so doing he removed himself from Christ's protection. He passed the point of no return and thereby fulfilled the scriptural prediction.

The extent of God's protection over us every single day is beyond our comprehension. His sovereignty is complete, including his choice to allow us to actually be able to effectively reject him. God could have created persons whose choices didn't really matter. Instead, because of his love for us, he created us with enough freedom to live in relationship with him.

17:13 Jesus had told his disciples many things about his coming death—hardly a joyful topic. But after these events would take place—especially after the Resurrection—the disciples would be filled with joy, for they would then understand that Jesus had conquered death and Satan and had brought eternal life to all who believe in him.

17:14 The world hates Christians because Christians' values differ from the world's, and because Christians expose the world's values for what they are—absolutely worthless. Because Christ's followers don't cooperate with the world by joining in their sin, they are living accusations against the world's immorality. The world follows Satan's agenda, and Satan is the avowed enemy of Jesus and his people (see 15:18; 16:2).

17:15-16 Jesus did not pray that God would take them out of the world to protect them from the hatred and persecution to come, rather that they would be kept safe from the evil one—that through difficult circumstances they would not fall prey to the devil. The only way believers can be witnesses to the world is to be witnessing for Christ in the world. We must carry our message, trusting God for his protection. Jesus was not a part of the world's system, headed by Satan (indeed, he had been tempted to that end and had refused—see Matthew 4:1-11). Neither are believers a part of the world because they have been born again (3:3).

17:17 Three distinct views have emerged to explain what Jesus meant by “make them pure and holy by teaching them your words of truth.” (1) The truth found in God's word will make us pure and holy. (2) The central truth of God's saving love sets into motion God's work in us. (3) The process of passing on (preaching, teaching) God's truth would have a purifying effect in the disciples' lives. These views are actually complementary, describing different aspects of becoming pure and holy (called sanctification): the second view highlights the initial pouring of God's grace into our lives through the truth of the gospel; the first view summarizes the ongoing effects of the applied truths from God's word; and the third view emphasizes that progress in sanctification will be seen in our desire and practice of communicating the gospel. God's word, then, works as a divine cleansing agent that God uses to bring about our sanctification.

17:18 Jesus came into the world on a mission for the Father; so he sent these disciples into the world on a mission by the Son. That mission was to make God known. This is an important and exciting theme in John's Gospel. The Father sent the Son into the world, the Father and the Son sent the Spirit to the disciples, and the disciples are sent by the Father and Son into the world.
